The Ravens drowned the York Yeomen 16-2 and humbled the McMaster Marauders 9-8, while losing 10-5 to the University of Toronto Varsity Blues and 13-8 to the University of Western Ontario Mustangs. The Ravens also trounced the University of Ottawa Gee-Gees 17-5 in Ottawa on Nov. 3.

"We played two very good games (in the tournament) and we're in a good playoff position," said Carleton coach John Pankiw.

The Ravens started their home tournament against the undefeated 8-0 Toronto Blues. After countless turnovers, the Ravens were lucky to find themselves down only 3-1 after the first quarter and 5-2 at the half.

But the Blues pulled away in the second half, doubling their score en route to a 10-5 win.

The Ravens' next game was an easier contest as they faced the winless 0-9 York Yeomen. Driver Dave Bason and holeman Brian Young scored four goals apiece and led the Ravens to a 16-2 victory over the last-place Yeomen.

Next, the Ravens staged an exciting 9-8 victory over the 5-3-1 McMaster Marauders. With Carleton leading 6-3 at the half, the Marauders plugged away, closing the gap to 7-6 by the end of the third quarter.

"It was awesome. The fans and everybody were off their seats," said fourth-year veteran Jeff McGrath.

The Ravens will be looking to improve on last year's bronze medal performance.

The final quarter was a see-saw match as the two teams struggled back and forth looking for an advantage. With less than three minutes remaining, the Marauders tied the game at eight. Then, with 2:25 left, driver Steve Bell scored his second goal of the game to give Carleton the lead.

Carleton finished their weekend with a 13-8 loss against the 5-3-1 Western Mustangs. With a playoff spot assured, the Ravens gave their bench players some action.

"The playoff spot had been assured so it gave us the chance to play our bench guys," said Pankiw.

The Ravens trailed 5-3 at the half when back-up goaltender Andy Pohl was brought into the game. Pohl kept the Ravens close at 7-5 before Western scored five straight times in the final quarter on their way to a 13-8 victory.

"I made some good saves, but we had a lot of turnovers in the last quarter and a lot of shots coming at me," said Pohl.

With the regular season over, the Ravens will now prepare for the playoffs on Nov. 20 at McMaster along with Toronto, Western and McMaster.

Carleton will open its final four series match against the second-place Western Mustangs. The winner advances to the championship game against the winner of the Toronto/McMaster game while the loser plays in the consolation finals for the bronze medal.

"I don't think it's unrealistic that we win (the gold medal)," said Pankiw. "But our first concern is to beat Western."

Although Carleton lost this past weekend 13-8 to Western, the Ravens beat them earlier this season 5-4 on Oct. 17 and are confident they can repeat that feat. □

RANT 'N' RAVEN

Season over but Ravens did good

by Steven Vesely
Charlatan Staff

They have nothing to be ashamed of.

So what if the men's and women's soccer teams both lost their first-round playoff matches.

Losing doesn't erase their seasons of excitement and success.

The men's team dominated their opposition en route to an 8-1-3 record and their second straight first-place finish in the Ontario Universities Athletic Association east division soccer league.

Along the way, the Raven men were ranked nationally the entire season, peaking as the second best team in the country earlier in the year before closing out at the number five spot prior to the playoffs.

Nothing shabby about that.

The Raven women also impressed with their best season in five years. A 5-3-2 record was good enough for fourth place in the Ontario Women's Interuniversity Athletic Association east division soccer league.

At season's end, the Ravens placed three members on the OWIAA all-star team.

Nothing shabby about that either.

Following those respective season finishes, the men's team kicked off against the Queen's Golden Gaels in semi-final action at home on Oct. 30, while the women's team travelled to Windsor that same weekend to take on the Laurier Golden Hawks.

With the men's game tied 0-0 at the end of regulation and overtime, despite Carleton's dominance throughout the match, a penalty kick-off ensued. With their fifth and final shot, Gael Rich Price drifted a low shot to the left of Raven goalkeeper Steve Ball to end any Carleton hopes of a trip to the national finals.

You win some. You lose some. It happens.

On the women's side, the Ravens were blessed with the opportunity to square off against Laurier, last year's OWIAA champion.

Lucky them.

After holding the Hawks to just one first-half goal, the Ravens faltered, giving up two more in the second half on their way to a 3-0 exit from the playoffs. Still, losing to the top team in the league isn't something to cry over. You may not like it, but you can understand why it happened.

So now the season's over and the reviews start coming in. Were their seasons a success or a failure?

That's hard to say. There were highs and lows on both sides: strong defence, beautiful goals and good goaltending; as well as the opposite with missed opportunities, errors and just plain bad luck.

And the same is true of every other year. This season was no different from any other.

And the Raven men's and women's soccer teams have nothing to be ashamed of. □ Raven fencers duel well in Kingston

by Steven Vesely
Charlatan Staff

The Carleton men's and women's fencing teams placed all five of their squads among the top eight team finishes at the Royal Military College Invitational tournament Nov. 6-7.

In total points overall, the Carleton squad placed fourth among the over 60 universities participating from Ontario, Quebec and the United States, after having been seeded 19th heading into the tournament.

Only poor officiating kept them from posting better championship results, said Carleton fencing coach James Ireland.

"It was home town officiating at its best," said Ireland, referring to the Kingston referees. "We could have been ranked higher and had an easier route to the final if they had ranked us fairly."

The men's foil team finished eighth overall among 29 teams after trouncing the United States Military Academy club from Westpoint, Va., with a score of 5-2. It then lost 5-3 to McGill in the semi-final match-up.

"The whole team is pretty young," said foil captain Neil Seto. "We lost a lot of starters from last year and this is the first tournament we've been to together.

Raven fencers were a blur of action as they notched an eighth-place result.

From that perspective I think we did pretty well."

Of this year's starting squad of 20 fencers, half are rookies.

The men's épée team had better results, finishing fifth among 27 entries. After advancing from pool play, Carleton defeated the USMA squad 5-4 and then lost 5-3 to Queen's in the semi-finals.

"What can you expect," said Ireland. "The official they gave us was a Queen's alumnus."

In the men's sabre class, Carleton placed fifth among 38 entries. After escaping their pool with a 5-4 win against York University and a 5-2 win against a club from Toronto, the Ravens dropped their quarter-final match 5-4 to RMC.

The women's foil team also placed well with a fifth place result among 24 entries. After advancing from their pool and beating USMA 5-4 in quarter-final action, Carleton lost 5-2 to the Queen's entry.

"We made mistakes," said foil captain Liliana Piazze. "We just didn't concentrate enough. There were things we should have done differently."

Finally, in the women's épée class, Carleton posted a sixth place result among 20 entries. □

Records & Results

OCAA WATERPOLO East Division

	W	L	T	F	A	PTS
Toronto	12	0	0	158	64	24
Western	8	4	0	148	102	16
Carleton	7	4	1	105	84	15
McMaster	7	4	1	133	88	15
Queen's	5	7	0	83	121	10
Ottawa	2	10	0	91	155	4
York	0	12	0	70	174	0

OWIAA VOLLEYBALL East Division

	W	L	T	F	A	PTS
Ottawa	2	0	0	6	1	4
York	1	0	0	3	0	2
Queen's	1	1	0	4	4	2
Ryerson	0	1	0	0	3	0
Carleton	0	2	0	1	6	0
Toronto	0	0	0	0	0	0

CIAU FIELD HOCKEY

Gold Medal Game

Toronto 2 New Brunswick 0

Wendy Johnstone's two second-half goals were the difference on Nov. 6 as the U of T Blues won the CIAU field hockey title with a 2-0 win over the U of B Red Sticks.

Bronze Medal Game

Alberta 1 UBC 1

Alberta wins 4-3 on penalty strokes.

CIAU FOOTBALL Divisional Finals Nov. 6.

O-QIFC Dunsmore Cup

Concordia 10 Bishop's 7

The Concordia Stingers won their first Dunsmore Cup since 1982 with an upset victory over the Gaeters. The Stingers led 10-0 at half-time as kicker Dimitrios Manolopoulos hit three of four field goal attempts.

OCAA Yates Cup

Toronto 24 Western 16

CWUAA Hardy Cup

Calgary 32 Alberta 12

AUAA Jewett Cup

St. Mary's 48 Acadia 28 (OT)

Bowl Finals Nov. 13.

Atlantic Bowl

Calgary at St. Mary's

Churchill Bowl

Concordia at Toronto

CIAU SOCCER League Finals Nov. 6.

OCAA Soccer Championship

Queen's 2 Western 1

The Queen's Golden Gaels won their first OCAA title since 1975 with a 2-1 victory over the Mustangs. The game was tied 1-1 after regulation and overtime, then tied 3-3 after a first round of penalty kicks. Queen's scored on their first sudden death penalty kick while Western did not.

Both Western and Queen's will compete in the CIAU championships at Acadia Nov. 11-14.

Volleyball rookies show promise

by Steven Vesely
Charlatan Staff

One thing's certain — this year's Carleton women's volleyball team may lose a lot of games, but they'll likely play with effort and drive.

With six rookies on a roster of eight, the Ravens opened their 1993 volleyball season with weekend losses against the universities of Ottawa and Queen's.

Ottawa 3 Carleton 0
Queen's 3 Carleton 1

In their league opener on Nov. 5 at the University of Ottawa, Carleton lost 3-0 to the Ottawa Gee-Gees by scores of 15-4, 15-9, and 15-8.

Two days later, the Ravens lost their home opener 3-1 to the Queen's Golden Gaels by scores of 15-6, 15-17, 15-12 and 15-0.

"It's a whole new team," said assistant coach Marilyn Johnson. "But we're really getting a lot of effort out of them. Given the last two months, they've improved by leaps and bounds."

After dropping the first set 15-6 to the Golden Gaels, the Ravens rebounded with their only win of the match — an exciting 17-15 win in the second set.

Carleton jumped out to an early 7-1 lead before Queen's closed the gap to 7-6. After a Ravens' time out, the lead switched back and forth, never growing by more than two points. With the Gaels leading 14-13, Ravens' middle Carolyn Haddock came up big with two scores to give Carleton the lead. The Gaels tied the game at 15 but the Raven defence regained possession and Carleton went on to score the two points they needed for the win.

After that roller-coaster ride, the Ravens began to falter, losing the next two sets and the match.

"It's just one of those things where there's six first-year players on the floor and they don't know what they're supposed to be thinking in that sort of situation," said Biansone.

The Ravens were led by Haddock, one of two returning players, who notched 14 kills and 16 digs. First-year leftside Marsha Creary was also impressive with 11 kills and 11 digs. □

Fatigue a factor in basketball men losses

by Kevin Restivo
Charlatan Staff

The effort was there, but the breaks just weren't.

The Carleton men's basketball team lost 76-63 to the St. Francis Xavier X-Men in round-robin action at the fourth annual House-Laughton Hoops Classic hosted by Carleton Nov. 4-5. The Ravens then dropped the consolation final 79-70 to the University of Ottawa Gee-Gees.

St. FX 76 Carleton 63
Ottawa 79 Carleton 70

In their first game against St. Francis, try as they might, the Ravens couldn't make like the little engine that could.

Carleton guard Andrew Smith personified the Ravens' effort all weekend. He opened the game with a three-pointer, but despite numerous floor burns caused by his effort to get the ball, he couldn't score down the stretch along with the rest of the Ravens.

Despite the outcome, Carleton threw a huge scare into the defending national champion X-Men, looking poised the entire first half as they headed into

CHRIS NUTTAL/SMITH

The Ravens hung tough against St. FX. half-time with a 45-44 lead.

"I think we gave a pretty good effort in the first half," said Smith. "I think all of our new guys handled their press really well."

But the basketball gods were not so kind to the Ravens in the second half.

Ultimately, fatigue did the Ravens in as the X-Men finished off Carleton with a 9-2 run in the last six minutes.

"We shortened our bench somewhat from the previous weekend," said head coach Paul Armstrong. "A lot of the guys had tired legs from working so hard on defence. As a result, our shots ended up being front-rim short."

Taffe Charles was Carleton's top scorer with 15 points.

The following night against the Gee-Gees, the Ravens, to their credit, came out with the same intensity they had shown the night before.

Looking to avenge last week's 100-82 loss against Ottawa, the Ravens held off furious Gee-Gee pressure in the first half en route to a 33-31 halftime lead.

But despite Charles's 22 points, the Ravens' inability to score down the stretch cost them dearly once again.

Afterwards, the team remained upbeat nonetheless.

"We've got a competitive team and we showed it this weekend against some really tough teams," said second-year point guard Curtis Houlden.

Carleton will play with St. Francis, Brock and McMaster at the Pinky Lewis tournament in Hamilton this weekend. □

WILD
SIDER

AVAILABLE AT MARK'S WORK WAREHOUSE

Raven Rumblings

QUOTE OF THE WEEK

"It was home town officating at its best."

Fencing coach James Ireland wasn't pleased with the favoritism the referees showed the hometown Queen's and Royal Military College squads at the RMC Invitational fencing tournament this past weekend.

BRIEFS

In exhibition basketball, the Carleton women's basketball team dropped three games to Memorial University in Newfoundland Nov. 5-7. The Ravens lost by scores of 63-45, 62-51 and 89-45. Carleton is now 1-8 in exhibition play with their lone win coming two weeks ago against Dawson College.

The Carleton Ravens' second rugby team ended their season with a 25-0 loss to the Queen's Golden Gaels in the seconds' championship game.

Three members of the Carleton men's soccer team were named to OUA eastern all-star team: Defender Earl Cochrane, midfielder Andrew Woodbridge and forward Basil Philipps were honored with the selections.

CALENDAR

Friday, Nov. 12.

BASKETBALL—The men's basketball team travels to McMaster University in Hamilton all weekend to participate in the Pinky Lewis Basketball Tournament. The tournament, named for a former Hamilton-area basketball manager, hosts McMaster, Carleton, Brock and St. Francis Xavier.

SWIMMING—The men's and women's swimming teams host a dual meet against Brock University at Carleton's pool.

VOLLEYBALL—The women's volleyball team travels to Winnipeg to participate in the Wesmen Invitational tournament against some of the top teams in the country.

Saturday, Nov. 13.

BASKETBALL—The women's team hosts the Carleton University Invitational this weekend. The Ravens host the Laurier Golden Hawks in a 6 p.m. match at the Ravens' Nest.

FENCING—The men's and women's fencing teams will participate all weekend in the Brock Open in St. Catharines, Ont.

SWIMMING—The men's and women's swimming teams travel to Sherbrooke, Que., for another national qualifying swim meet.

WATERPOLO—The women's waterpolo team is in Kingston to begin their first sectional tournament looking to improve on last year's bronze medal finish. The Ravens will take on McMaster, Queen's, Toronto and Brock.

Sunday, Nov. 14.

BASKETBALL—The women's basketball team hosts the Bishop's Gaeters in a 2 p.m. match at the Ravens' Nest.

RELAX—It's a slow week for home games so stay at home and study. Better yet, get some sleep. □

Carleton's defender of the realm

All-star captain will be missed

by Natasha Rapchuk
Charlatan Staff

The first game Earl Cochrane ever played for the Carleton Ravens men's soccer team, he played as captain.

The game wasn't important. It was just an exhibition match against Concordia and the regular captain couldn't make it.

So then-coach Ian Martin asked Cochrane to step in.

"I guess he must have noticed something in practice, a quiet leadership," says Cochrane, remembering.

That was five years ago. Cochrane, who plays stopper for the Ravens, has gone on to star for the Ravens ever since and has captained the team for the past two years. Twice, he has been Carleton's Athlete of the Year. Twice, he has been an all-Canadian.

Leader is the word Cochrane's teammates use to describe him. Aggressive. Tough. Skilful.

"He's basically the anchor of our team," says veteran Marty Lauter, who plays left back for Carleton and has known Cochrane for five years. "He's just so passionate about the game. He missed one game—a third yellow card forced him to sit out a game against Queen's—and you felt it."

With his close-cropped dark hair and stocky five-foot-11-inch frame, the 24-year-old Cochrane looks mighty intimidating on the field.

And where he's most intimidating is in the air heading a ball.

"For the first five minutes of a game, the opposition will contest him in the air," says former player Greg Gallo. "But after that, after they know that he's going to dominate, people don't even go up in the air any more. They know he'll always win it."

Cochrane is unbeatable in the air.

It's exactly that sort of domination which led to his captaincy two years ago—a captaincy by example rather than outspoken intimidation.

"I'd much rather go through a tackle or run for that ball than no one else will get," he says. "And hopefully that will rub off. It sounds kind of corny, but I'd like my actions to speak for me."

And they do. Sandy Mackie, who started coaching the Carleton squad last year, says Cochrane is completely dedicated.

"His discipline and training habits are what any coach would want," says

Mackie. "He never misses a training session."

It's exactly this quiet, unassuming attitude which earned Cochrane the nickname Squirrel from past-coach Martin.

"He just thought I was so soft-spoken when I first came," says Cochrane. "I really didn't speak up."

Now when he speaks, teammates listen.

Cochrane has now played through his fifth and final year of eligibility for Carleton soccer. What's next?

"I'll watch a lot of games I guess," he jokes.

Actually, Cochrane has a degree from Carleton in urban studies and is looking into completing a master's in either geography or urban planning. He's also toying with the idea of playing professional soccer in Europe.

He's been dreading the day he would play his last game for Carleton. But now that it's over, he's looking forward to something new.

"I'll miss Carleton soccer obviously," says the Scarborough native. "I'll miss the September coming back and meeting everyone again. But I'm just going to have to see it through a different window now, through being an alumnus."

Mostly, he says he'll miss the friends he's made on the team.

"This year and last year were two of the greatest years I've ever had, in anything, regardless of sport," he says. "It was just two friendship-making years that I'll probably never experience again." The Ravens in turn will miss him and his leadership on the field—and they'll have a tough time finding someone to fill the shoes of a guy they used to call Squirrel. □

Charlatan Hockey Pool

Here are the point leaders in the Charlatan Hockey Pool. Points were tabulated as of Tue. Nov. 9, 1993.

1344 Bank Street
(at Riverside)
738-3323

Joseph Kurikose can pick up his $25 dinner certificate for Baxter's restaurant at The Charlatan, Room 531 Unicentre. So can Daragh Slowey who won last week.

Charlatan Sports Trivia

Answer the following question correctly and become eligible to win a $25 dinner for two at Schadillac's Saloon.

Which goaltender invented the goalie mask?

1. Place your answer, name and phone number on a piece of paper and submit it to The Charlatan sports editor, room 531 Unicentre. The recipient of the prize will be determined by a supervised draw of all correct answers.

2. All answers must be received by Tuesday, Nov. 16, 1993. The winner will be contacted by phone, by the sports editor of the Charlatan.

3. Contestants may submit only one entry per week.

4. Charlatan staff members and their families are not eligible to participate. Congratulations to no one because nobody knew that Dexter Manley played for the Washington Redskins prior to gracing Ottawa with his presence.

WHERE WILD THINGS RAN ANGELS CALL HOME
-UNIQUE gifts, crystals healing stones, Mojo
-AMAZING jewellery
-HANDMADE CERAMIC
BEADS & BUTTONS
-ANGELS with GLOW IN the DARK wings
-TEENY WEEINY BIRTHDAY
CAKES, FRUIT BOWLS, PLANTS
-AWESOME FABRICS
BY THE YARD
-CARDS, WRAP, RIBBONS
Treats, Chi Mes
AND TONS MORE STUFF!
pop by • say hi • fly
PENNIES from HEAVEN
1154 BANK • 730-0589
A REAL SHOPPING TRIP!

PLACEMENT & Career Services

Check the posting boards at
the Placement Centre for
more job listings.

Programs and services of interest to undergraduates, graduating students, as well as alumni.

508 Unicentre - 788-6611
November 11, 1993

ON-CAMPUS RECRUITING

Permanent full-time positions are directed towards graduating students (available May '94). Dates, unless specified, refer to deadlines.

To find out the types of positions, how to apply and where to find more information on the companies, please contact the office.

IBM Canada
Nov. 12, 12 noon
Computer Science, Engineering
Positions: Software Development, Information Development, Market Development Support

Public Service Commission
Nov. 12, Mail Direct
All Disciplines-Masters or PhD Positions: Management Trainee Program

Public Service Commission
Nov. 12, Mail Direct
Commerce, Public Admin., Computer Science Positions: Financial Officer/ Internal Auditor

Public Service Commission
Nov. 12, Mail Direct
Economics, Public Admin.- Masters Positions: Accelerated Economist Training Program

Bank of Canada
Nov. 19, 12 noon
Economics
Positions: Various

Carp Systems International
Nov. 26, 12 noon
Computer Science, System Engineering, Electrical Engineering, Math/Statistics Positions: Software Developers

Embassy of Japan
Dec. 3, Mail Direct
All Disciplines
Positions: Assistant English Teacher

Canadian Political Science Assoc.
Jan. 28, Mail Direct
Political Science, Other Disciplines
Positions: Ontario Legislature Internship Programme

EMPLOYER INFORMATION SESSION

Lakehead University Education Information Session
Nov. 15, 9:30am - 11:30am, 290 TB
Disciplines: All Disciplines
Topic: Teachers College

Newbridge
Engineering & Computer Science
Open House
Nov. 15, 5:00pm - 7:00pm
600 March Rd., RSVP 599-3616 Disciplines: Engineering, Computer Science

Alphen
Nov. 23, 7:00pm - 9:00pm, 305 DT
Disciplines: All Disciplines

FULL TIME EMPLOYMENT

National Research Council
Nov. 15, Mail Direct
Engineering, Computer Science Position: Programmer
Request Job Order # N-6

Mitel Corporation
ASAP, Mail Direct
Electrical Engineering, Computer Systems Engineering
Position: New Grad - Engineering
Request Job Order # O-9

ADGA Group
ASAP, Mail Direct
Computer Science, Computer Systems Engineering
Position: UNIX Specialist
Request Job Order # D.O. 1367

SUMMER EMPLOYMENT

National Research Council
Nov. 15, Mail Direct
Sciences, Engineering
Positions: 1994 Summer Employment Program

Canada Employment Centre for Students - New Brunswick
Nov. 19, Mail Direct
All Disciplines
Positions: Summer Employment Officers

National Defence
Nov. 30, Mail Direct
Biochem., Biology, Chemistry, Comp. Sci., Economics, Engineering, Int'l Relations, Math/Stats, Microbiology, Ops. Research, Physics, Psychology Positions: Defence Research Asst.

Transport Canada
Canadian Coast Guard
Nov. 30, 5 PM
All Disciplines
Positions: Inshore Rescue Program

Siemens Electric Ltd.
Dec. 1, Mail Direct
Commerce, Economics, Computer Science, Electrical Engineering
Positions: Summer Jobs In Canada, Germany, US & Latin America

I.A.E.S.T.E
Dec. 2, Mail Direct
Engineering, Science
Positions: Summer & Fall Exchange

Ontario/Quebec Summer Student Job Exchange Program
Jan. 14, 12 noon
All Disciplines
Positions: Various

Pulp & Paper Research Institute
Jan. 20, Mail Direct
Biochemistry, Chemistry, Physics, Mechanical Engineering
Positions: NSERC related

AECL - Chalk River
Jan. 28, Mail Direct
Computer Science, Engineering, Science, Physics, Chemistry
Position: Summer Student Program

PAINTERS/HOME CARE

Metropro
ASAP, Mail Direct
Positions: Franchise Owner

Student Sprinkler Services
ASAP, Mail Direct
Positions: Branch Manager

Student Works Painting
ASAP, Placement Centre
Positions: Managers

SUMMER CAMPS

Camp MaroMac
ASAP, Mail Direct
Positions: Various

Camp Tamakwa
ASAP, Mail Direct
Positions: Various

GROUP SESSIONS

The Resume/Covering Letter
This session discusses self assessment, the purpose of a resume, how to prepare a resume, skill identification, components of a resume, resume styles, as well as the covering letter. Samples are reviewed to determine how to maximize effectiveness.

Networking/Job Search
This session focuses on networking, researching the labour market, the visible and hidden job market, various job hunting approaches, developing a job search system and common pit falls.

Interview Techniques
This session reviews the purpose of the interview, the employer's and the candidate's goal, the stages of an interview, commonly asked questions and preparation tips.

Interested in working abroad?

Students interested in working internationally should make reference to the Work Abroad binders in our library. These binders include information on volunteer opportunities, education and internship exchange programs, teaching opportunities in Japan and other countries, as well as opportunities in various other areas such as technical, business and medical fields. These binders include information on organizations such as CUSO, CIDA, CARE Canada, and JET.

SUMMER JOB & CAREER EXPLORATION FAIR

Mark Tuesday, February 1, 1994 on your calendar - the date for the first ever joint Summer Job & Career Exploration Fair, organized by Carleton University, Algonquin College, La Cite Collegiale, and the University of Ottawa.

This is your chance to participate in an unprecedented opportunity to meet various employers in the private and public sectors. With all the changes in the labour market the Summer Job & Career Exploration Fair can offer you:

- * the chance to meet employers offering summer employment opportunities
- * an opportunity to explore careers by talking to professionals from various fields

This unique opportunity will be taking place in the Civic Centre at Lansdowne Park from 1:00pm - 8:00pm. Students will be required to pay $1.00 in advance or $2.00 at the door. Keep your eyes open for additional information and ticket sales.

BROKEN PLATES AND NAKED DEVILS

by Suzanne Andrew
Charlatan Staff

Da un'altra faccia del tempo
National Arts Centre Theatre
Nov. 4 — Nov. 5

In defiance of ballet's rigid traditionalism, Jan Fabre, a contemporary dance choreographer from Belgium, has created an allegory of the perverse expressed through his interpretation of the netherworlds.

Da un'altra faccia del tempo, co-produced by the National Arts Centre, is the third part of an operatic series which Fabre hopes to complete by 1995.

In this instalment, the choreography brought the audience through a journey from a confused, non-sensical dream world to the chaos of hell and beyond.

In the shadows behind a glittering black scrim (an opaque curtain across the stage) a line of dancers held packages in front of their bellies while executing flat, technical footwork. As the scrim was lifted, the solemn, expressionless faces of the dancers were exposed. The packages they held were as yet indiscernible.

The effect was a subtle creation of a dream world on stage. The audience was drawn into the illusion of a dream by constant, inexplicable visual images and elements of surprise.

As men whirled across the stage in full, ruffled dresses, the dancers began to move stacks of plates on stage. The packages they had been clutching so mysteriously in their skirts were dropped to reveal more plates, fruit and odd bundles of stuff. Then, as the dancers seated themselves on rows of stacked plates, the mood of the choreography was altered.

Order was broken with the smashing of a plate. The guilty plate smasher was swarmed by the other dancers as he attempted to clean up the mess. The sound of broken glass was amplified over the unobtrusive background of classical music.

The disturbing appearance of the devil, who proceeded to involve himself in various acts of debauchery, began the transition from the dream phase to the choreographer's picture of hell.

Naked, the devil character writhed on the floor with another male dancer while other dancers continued to twist and turn across the stage.

The scenes of hell grew in intensity. A line of flyswatter-brandishing dancers moved slowly forward in smooth, symmetrical movements. This symmetry was occasionally broken by dancers who went into convulsions brought on from the onslaught of perceived insects. Later, demons, writhing in convulsions, twisted wildly, juxtaposed against sharp, almost militaristic movements of dancers in red dresses.

The devil character remained distinct, making odd movements sometimes complimentary to the other dancers, sometimes wildly different.

A tall, gangly man dressed in white underwear occasionally walked through the hell scenes on china plates that were bound to his feet by chains. The stacks of plates gradually grew higher as everything got more hellish.

Then music, having swelled to a fury, began to fade out. Gaps in the music created eerie silences. And then, the dancers disappeared.

In a startling climax, plates and dishes fell from above and landed on stage in a jarring, thunderous crash. White lights cutting through the dust created a dramatic difference from the previous murkiness.

Three dancers in white crept on stage, making crunching noises as they stepped on the broken dishes. They stood and danced with slow, measured movements to the silence.

Da un'altra faccia del tempo offered incredible visual images, drama, a deep intensity with touches of humor and lots of surprises.

The 15 dancers kept up the momentum of the difficult and fast-changing choreography for over two hours. There was no intermission.

The character of the devil was particularly well-executed by dancer Antony Rizzi. Rizzi accepted Fabre's challenge of altered gender roles by dancing en pointe, a technically difficult feat traditionally reserved for ballerinas. His talent was further showcased by the freedom of his role, a utility he used for complete expression of his body. (His facial grimaces were particularly convincing.)

Da un'altra faccia del tempo was a lucid glimpse into Fabre's imagination. His creativity, complimentary to his revolutionary approach to ballet, defies conventions. This production was odd, but arresting in its intensity. □

Satan is a naked man!

When you've tired of cow tipping

by Rori Caffrey
Charlatan Staff

Shotmaker — opening for Problem Children, Electric Embryo and Nevergreen
SAW Gallery
Saturday, Nov. 13

Small-town teenagers have few options when it comes to recreational activities. They can play hockey, drink illegally, tip cows or form a band that releases a record and then tours North America.

Shotmaker, a band from the town of Belleville between Ottawa and Kingston, opted for the latter.

Matt Deline (vocals/drums), Tim

McKeough (guitar/vocals) and Nick Pye (bass/vocals) are the Belleville boys who spent their summer vacation delivering powerful and poignant music to audiences continent-wide.

Their independently arranged tour began only months after their inception, but McKeough explains the choice was not a hasty one.

"Me and Matt were in another band, Herbal Scream, with another bass player, my friend Colin. We had been planning on (touring) for about a year, but then Colin quit," he says. "We still wanted to tour, so we just practised a lot and got some songs."

Colin Purnach's departure last spring put an end to Herbal Scream, whose two cassettes (self-titled and Nutmeg) and umpteen live shows had established a fan base for them. Instead of finding another bassist to fill in for Purnach, they recruited Pye, scrapped all the Herbal Scream songs and started fresh.

"What we're doing now is so different," says Deline, explaining Shotmaker's new direction. "It's much noisier and less funky, which is more along the lines of what Tim and I wanted to do in the first place. Since Nick is such a good friend and we like having him around, we invited him to join the band."

"I don't think I really took over any position," says Pye, on the subject of joining McKeough and Deline. "We just jammed, made up some songs, and that was that."

Shotmaker's debut 7" single, recently released on the Toronto indie label Maticore/Kung Fu Enterprises, demonstrates their member-to-member unity. Music, lyrics and vocals are handled by all three, creating the thick and full vibe which Herbal Scream lacked.

Their new sound has gained approval

Tim McKeough and his mighty nice choppers.

abroad. The California punk rock journal Maximum RocknRoll featured a two-page spread on the boys, a campus radio deejay in British Columbia wrote to them saying he plays one of their songs every second episode of his show, and their record recently charted at number three on CKCU's Top 50 — with Nirvana at number four.

Such achievements only make Shotmaker work harder. They are currently writing more material and slugging it out on the live all-ages circuit. Future plans include another record, another tour and possible relocation to Ottawa come September. □

SHAWN SCALLEN

Meanboy Matt Deline pounds those skins like a wild cheetah.

This week:

*Words We'd Use To Abuse Our Elders
(If We Weren't So Politically Correct)*

1. windbag
2. talentless hack
3. self-serving snake
4. weasel
5. condescending wonk
6. radical hippie girl
7. ethically challenged
8. pernicious
9. short
10. pseudo-feminist-quasi-progressive-cheese-eatin'-chicken lovin'-news harpie

Spirit of the West, and the road to maturity

by Blayne Haggart
Charlatan Staff

Spirit of the West
Congress Centre
Thursday, Nov. 11

So much for the high concept. Coming from a band as fraught with meaning as Spirit of the West, you would expect an album title like Faithlift to mean something.

The truth, according to Geoff Kelly, the multi-talented co-founder of the group, is a lot more banal.

"We were doing a television show called Ear to the Ground — a national TV show designed to highlight up and coming bands — and the producer's name was Faith Finegold. We were on our way out to the Stein Valley festival in British Columbia to play the concert and shoot some footage. We were just driving out there and I was just mindlessly mulling her name over in my head and we somehow got Faithlift. It's as simple as that."

Not that it doesn't have any reflection on their latest album, which was released last month. Kelly notes, it "almost seems prophetic," coming from a band that hadn't released an album in over two years and was struggling somewhat with a changeover to a more rockish sound that came as a surprise for some of their listeners.

In addition to the core players of Kelly, vocalist and guitarist John Mann (who co-writes the songs with Kelly), bassist Linda McRae and multi-instrumentalist Hugh Macmillan, this is the second album to feature drummer Vince Dietrich.

According to Kelly, Dietrich joining the band was one of the catalysts for their new, almost rockish sound. Over the past 30 months, they've been adapting this sound, which was not all that easy — something that was obvious on Go Figure.

"When we made Go Figure, Vince had only been on board for about six months. I think we sounded a bit stiff back then and he was struggling to find his place in the band.

"We felt in our hearts it was the right move but it definitely took a good year of working together and making that record. Actually, we're a better band now. We're a band that's been together for three years and I think it sounds that way; it's more comfortable now."

The result is an album that mixes their traditional Celtic folk sound with that rock edge they've been driving for in just the right amounts. And while many songs on Go Figure were a bit simplistic (witness the keyboards on "Big Head"), the songs on Faithlift generally sound better.

Their lyrics have also undergone great changes, resulting from the band's changing perspective on life. Continuing the trend they started on Go Figure, Faithlift features songs that are less overtly political. According to Kelly, this transition from "angry young men" to responsible parents was very natural.

Songs like "Death on the Beach," which, had they been written a few years ago, might have been about the Gulf War. It's actually about the beauty of the Gulf Islands in British Columbia.

Of the change, Kelly says, "It's been pretty natural for us. I think that's one thing — that becoming fathers and parents, your focus turns a lot more inward. Your biggest concern is looking after your family."

"A song like "Dirty Pool" from Save This House, for example; I don't think we'd write that the same way in 1993. We've gone through the stage of the angry young men and now we're writing with a little more room for the listener. We just don't want the meaning of the songs to be unearthed on the first listen. We'd rather people had to listen more, delve into it, use their own imagination."

Faithlift does this and more; it renews the band's soul and has put them back on the right track. □

Spirit of the West: no longer the angry young men.

An exceptional evening

by Joanne Ciszewski
Charlatan Staff

Soul Asylum and Cracker
Congress Centre
Saturday, Nov. 6

The Congress Centre rocked as it welcomed two exceptional bands.

The all-ages event was well-attended by people in every age bracket, from the ages of 10 to 40 (I wonder if their mothers knew where they were). It also attracted all kinds of social groups — grungers, jocks, rockers — they were all there.

Cracker set the stage with clean, powerful guitar melodies that amplified their highly intense tunes. This four-piece band, whose core is Johnny Hickman and ex-Camper van Beethoven member David Lowery, also features ex-Pixie David Lovering on drums.

Lovering's drumming talents contributed to their solid mix of harmonious rock-country-angst. Lowery strummed away until he broke one of his strings during the third song. He picked up his acoustic guitar and broke into "Sweethearts," an old Camper tune which complemented his strong, clean voice. Even though the music was not that rockish, the kids moshed, danced and crowd surfed.

Someone roaming around backstage would have spotted Miss Winona Ryder (yes, that Winona Ryder). She was here to watch her beau David Pirner (lead singer/guitarist for Soul Asylum) in action.

Back to the concert. Anticipation was in the air. An absolute explosion roared through the Congress Centre as Soul Asylum hit the stage. With the speakers a little louder and the hair a little longer than Cracker's, it was like a bolt of energy entering your body.

The first six songs were classic examples of pure alterna-rock. It was beautiful. The crowd, predominantly attracted to the trendy tunes which have brought Soul Asylum to the forefront, might not have appreciated their polished veteran stage performance.

Pirner, sporting a "Spaghetti O's" T-shirt, looked great. Not being the best-looking guy around, he had a certain charisma about him which flew through the venue as he jammed on his guitar and moved about the stage. Mostly playing tunes from their Grave Dancers Union album, he muttered, "Thanks a lot," after just about every song.

When the oh-so-popular "Runaway Train" came blaring out of the speakers, about 50 people came running from the lobby towards the stage. Lighters were lit; it was all a little cheezy.

Overall the show was fantastic. Each song came flowed smoothly from Pirner's raspy vocal box. On this evening, the Congress Centre was an excellent venue; the lighting was vivid and the sound system was explosive and loud without sacrificing any sound quality.

This was, by far, one of the best live performances Ottawa has offered in a long time. □

Dear Editor,
Why do you keep sending my stories back?

Don't be afraid of rejection. Take a risk. Submit.
Drop off articles, poems, opinion pieces to 531 Unicentre.

HONORARY DEGREES

The Senate Honorary Degrees Committee is inviting nominations from members of the Carleton University community for the awarding of honorary degrees at the 1994 and subsequent Convocations.

In preparing its recommendations to Senate, the Committee will consider merit based on the following criteria:

- (i) a distinguished contribution to the Ottawa community, Canada or the world in the arts, the professions, the private sector, public service or humanitarian endeavours, or
- (ii) a notable association with, or benefit to, Carleton University.

The following information about each nominee should be provided: a) name in full; b) permanent address; c) a brief biographical outline on the nominee, including education, employment, and accomplishments of note. Each nomination should be accompanied by a statement (200 words maximum) stating the reasons why the nominee should be honoured by Carleton University, and why at this time or in the near future.

Nominations are submitted to the Committee in strict confidence and should therefore not be discussed with the intended nominee. Serving employees of the University and sitting members of the Board of Governors are not eligible for nomination.

Nominations must reach the Committee by Friday, 7 January 1994, and should be forwarded to: The Clerk of Senate, Secretary, Honorary Degrees Committee, Room 607, Administration Building, Carleton University, 1125 Colonel By Drive, Ottawa, Ontario K1S 5B6

"I never noticed that sparkle in your eye before."

Ice beer more marketing than substance

by Doug Pengelly
Charlatan Staff

If you've watched any TV in the last few months you've probably seen him. A long-haired European fellow who looks like the bad guy from Die Hard on a night out at Le Bistro. He's in some dark, futuristic factory extolling the virtues of some "Labatt Eis Beer."

Who is this man? What is he doing to our beer? Is he going to blow up our breweries if we don't buy his beer?

DIS EIS BEER
EES MAKING MY HAND FAR TOO COLD.

Molson hasn't been too helpful either. Its ice beer commercials try to explain how their scientists learned to join the BE₂ molecules to make this ice beer. (Wasn't it Young Einstein who split the beer atoms to put the bubbles in the beer?)

Well, if that's not ice beer, then what is it?

Ice brewing is by no means a new revelation. It was developed by the Germans hundreds of years ago to make their eisbock beer. The beer is brewed to a strong alcohol level, around seven or eight per cent. To make it even stronger, they chill the beer to just below freezing in big open-topped tanks. The water in the beer freezes and floats to the surface as ice.

The ice that forms is skimmed off the top of the beer, reducing the amount of water in the beer, but not alcohol. The result is an even stronger beer. Some traditional German eisbocks go up as high as 12 per cent alcohol content.

These beers are made only certain times of the year for special festivals, when a whole town will take a week off, all the factories shut down, and people dress in costumes and drink the festival beer. Somewhere behind it all there is some religious significance to the festivals, but over the years, the religious part has somehow been lost and now it's mostly about getting hammered.

If you're interested in tasting a beer brewed in this traditional way, there's a small Canadian microbrewery called the Niagara Falls Brewing Company. Their eisbock is eight per cent alcohol and comes in special 750-millilitre bottles available at most beer stores. It's a very interesting beer, very smooth with a maltiness balanced by a slight alcohol flavor. Share it with a friend, or at least don't plan on driving or operating any heavy machinery for a while afterwards.

At the big breweries like Labatt and Molson, normally beer is fermented to a high alcohol level between seven and eight per cent, and then it's watered down to five per cent just before bottling. By adding the water back later, this allows them to make more beer in fewer and smaller tanks, thus saving them money.

When big breweries make ice beer, it is fermented to a high alcohol content and then some ice is filtered out to raise it further. Once the beer is ready to be bottled, water is added to bring it back to 5.6 per cent, which is the norm for North American ice beer.

If removing the ice to bring up the alcohol and then to put water back in seems like a huge waste of time, then you're absolutely right. The process of ice brewing does nothing at all to improve the beer's flavor that couldn't be done with regular brewing and brewing a beer to 5.6 per cent is not that big a deal.

So why would they take ice out only to add water and bring it back down to 5.6

per cent? In a word — marketing. Judging by the response, it seems to be working quite well. It seems that everyone is coming out with some kind of ice beer this year.

The Niagara Falls' eisbock was the first to come out in Canada, almost two years ago. Labatt engineers had supposedly been working on the problem for the last 10 years, before someone at Molson caught wind of it and beat them to the punch.

Since then, Black Label's "Black Ice" and Carling's "Carling Ice" have appeared on the market. There's nothing special about these ice beers, except they have a little more alcohol than their non-ice counterparts.

Recently there is a new Labatt "Maximum Ice" at 7.1 per cent. I suppose if you're just out to get drunk fast this will do you good, but other than that it's not a big deal. The taste is pretty much the same.

Give the other breweries a month and they'll come out with their own strong ice beer, with .1 per cent more alcohol just so they can own the bragging rights to the strongest ice beer.

I give the whole thing about three or four years before it fizzles out the way dry beers did, and they find something new to go on about.

Until then, welcome to the ice age, for whatever that's worth. □

Remembering River

by Susie Haley
Charlatan Staff

On Oct. 31, at 1:51 a.m., the world lost a great actor and one hot babe.

River Phoenix, 23, collapsed outside Johnny Depp's trendy L.A. club, the Viper Room. An hour later, he was pronounced dead at Cedar-Sinai Hospital. The cause of his death is still under investigation.

He was one of the few young stars thought to have staying power in the movie industry. Most recently, he starred in Sneakers, with such greats as Robert Redford and our own Dan Aykroyd, and My Own Private Idaho, for which he received critical acclaim.

His big screen career began in 1985, with The Explorers, and he went on to star in Stand By Me, Little Nikita, The Mosquito Coast, Indiana Jones and the Last Crusade, I Love You To Death and Running on Empty, for which he was nominated for an Academy Award.

While some of you may be saying "So what?!", it is for his contributions to our generation that River deserves to be remembered. Unlike James Dean, whose untimely death made him into a cult hero, River already deserved hero status, as he stood up and voiced concerns for animal rights, environmentalism and vegetarianism.

How he died is not as important as what he did before that — he was a stellar actor who had beliefs that transcended the Hollywood scene. He was also an incredible babe — nice to look at for two, three, maybe even four hours, if partaking in a River movie marathon.

If you haven't seen any of the aforementioned flicks, do yourself a favor — check them out. □

HOW DOES YOUR UNIVERSITY RATE?

Find out in Maclean's
November 15 issue.

Maclean's

On Sale
Now!

DENTAL OFFICE

DR. PAUL GREENACRE
& ASSOCIATES

Convenient Location
Emergency Care
Flexible Hours
Gum Problems
Wisdom Teeth
Fillings
Braces

WE CATER TO COWARDS!

Fisher Heights Plaza 225-3564
780 Baseline Road at Fisher Ave
(Beside The Lone Star Cafe)

Bud City

THANK BUD, IT'S FRIDAY

T.B.I.F.

Bud City

Smokehouse & Bar-B-Q

A great party every Friday night at Bud's Rooftop with Energy 1200's Robert W. Knight.
Let's get together with great drinks & appetizers happy hour!
1440 Merivale Road at Baseline, 224-3938

Smokehouse & Bar-B-Q

MEMBERSHIP SALE

Until November 19, Memberships only $45.00!

DON'T BE AFRAID OF THE DARK...

JOIN THE

PHOTO CLUB

512 UNICENTRE

Black & White and Colour darkroom facilities. Basic chemicals supplied.

Memberships available at the CUSA Office, 401 Unicentre (788-6688) for details.

Meadowlands Family Health Centre

Hog's Back Plaza
888 Meadowlands Drive East
corner of Prince of Wales Dr. and Meadowlands Dr.
(behind McDonald's)
Ottawa, Ontario K2C3R2
228-2882

Family Medicine Pediatrics
Adolescent Medicine Minor Surgery
Obstetrics and Maternity Care Counselling Services

Open 7 days a week

With or without appointment

Weekdays 8AM to 8PM
Weekends / Holidays 10AM to 6PM

The UnClassifieds

Could boxes PICH, SSS & LGB ENG come pick up your responses @ 531 Unicentre.

FOR SALE / FOR RENT

2 rooms for rent, 1 upstairs, 1 downstairs, located on Bank & Heron. 30 min. walk to Carleton or 1 bus. Also 1 bus to Billings or Rideau. Use of washer/dryer, dish washer, microwave, fridge, etc. included. $350. #521-9134. Ask for Jose or Sean.

For sale: 1982 Volvo DL certified, good condition, low mileage $2500. Stove, continuous-cleaning with rotisserie $150. Refrigerator 17 cu. ft., frost free $150. Call 738-0186.

LOST & FOUND

Found. A walkman in Rec Bldg. Call Brian @ 739-1986. Lost! Last week my clipboard went missing, today I'm lost without it...with exams around the corner I'm desperate - can you help? Call Jen at 234-2890 if you know of its whereabouts.

Lost gold necklace in the gym. Desperately looking for return. Necklace has swastika symbol (actually it's the symbol of Buddha). Willing to pay ANY price for return (731-7468).

WANTED / JOBS

Breakaway Tours is looking for motivated students, organizations & clubs to promote Spring Break & New Years trips! Leader in student tours for the past 11 years, we are looking for the best reps to promote our company. Best commission structure available, so call today to apply! CALL 564-0564. CALL AND COMPARE US TO ANYONE!

Motivated drummer needed for rock band. Covers (SRV, Aerosmith etc.) and originals, our rifts waiting... Rob 722-5650, Greg 565-4876

Are you feeling unhappy or down? A study investigating these feelings in the context of family relationships is being conducted at the U of O. If you are a married woman between the ages of 26 and 45, and have a child aged 8 to 12 living at home with you, we would appreciate talking to you. Participation will be compensated.

For more info call Dr. Whiffen or Ms. Kallos, School of Psychology at 564-9461.

Disabled student urgently needs assistance for research & preparation for history/business essay. Person will be well paid. Please call 521-0930 and leave a message.

PLANT A TREE IN AFRICA: Volunteers needed for Ottawa-based fund-raising team. Contact Joyce Lundberg 788-2600 ext. 2571

Awesome Spring Break Trips! Campus reps needed. Cuba, Cancun, Daytona, Montreal & Quebec City. Call now! 1-800-363-0634.

WANTED: reporter seeks students who had bad experiences tree planting this summer. Contact Franco at the Charlatan anytime Thursday.

FREE TRIPS AND MONEY!! Individuals and Student Organizations wanted to promote the Hottest Spring Break Destinations, call the nation's leader. Inter-Campus Programs 1-800-327-6013.

FREE Spring Break trips and cash bonuses. We need only the best Carleton reps to promote Cancun, Cuba, Daytona, Montreal, and Quebec sunski party trips. Incredible giveaways from Kodak and Koala Springs and a Jeep YJ draw. Call 1-800-263-5604 NOW!

SERVICES / AVAILABLE

Have essays, term papers and thesis typed on IBM Selectric by a secretary with 15 years of university typing experience. Dedicated to excellence. Spelling corrected. $1.50/page. Call Brenda: 234-7565.

Attention students! Need a professional resume to get your career started? Call the PaperWait for reasonable rates. Located near campus. Call 739-7773 and leave a message.

FREE GUITAR LESSONS. Experienced teacher. All levels. Can teach other instruments as well. Call 526-2903 at reasonable hour. Leave message.

Typing: $1.50 per page. Quality. Fast, accurate. Christine: 235-TYPE.

Word Processing, Accuracy and Deadlines Guaranteed. Central Location. 233-8874.

Word Processing: Quality work in Term Papers, Theses, Essays, Resumes, Cover Letters, and Class Overheads Free Pickup/Delivery to Carleton U campus. Competitive Rates. For more information phone Deepak @ 736-9652 (After 5pm please).

Bilingual Typing Services, Resumes, Theses, Reports, Manuals, Correspondence etc. Done on Word Perfect

5.2. Printed on LaserPrinter. Sylvie 830-5753.

SPRINGBREAK '94. 1000's of students will flock south for the biggest party ever!!! $399+bs. Receive flight Varadero-Cuba + 7nights hotel + meals + chance winning "Jeep YJ" + "Kodak" camera + "Koala Springs" party + Spaces limited!!! Info. 724-9974.

SEMANTIX EDITING SERVICE will help express your ideas more clearly and accurately. Includes punctuation, grammar, spelling. $2/page; returned within two days. Pick-up and drop off, Room 308 Unicentre, 788-2712.

Wordprocessing: Give your term papers, essays, theses and reports a professional look. Spelling, grammar checked. Data manipulation, tables, graphing also done. Deadlines guaranteed. Reasonable rates. 824-2211.

Tutoring: Don't fall behind. Stay on top. Physics and math tutoring. Reasonable rates. Call Albert: 824-2211.

WORD PROCESSING: Fast, accurate, professional word processing. Essays, Reports, Theses, Resumes, Flyers, Laser Printer, Pick-Up and Delivery is available. Call Lena: 837-0183

SEMANTIX EDITING SERVICE will help express your ideas more clearly and accurately. Includes punctuation, grammar, spelling. $2/page; returned within two days. Pick-up and drop off, Room 308 Unicentre, 788-2712.

Native French speaker offers private lessons through the use of the press & literature. Don't let the opportunity pass you by! 730-6085.

Discover Tai Chi for Health. Stressed out from work or study? Afraid of violence and sexual harassment? Looking for good health and sense of well-being? In person. Call 745-8665.

Word Processing. Accurate, professional, prompt, economical. Reports, essays, term papers, transcripts, theses. Reasonable editing provided and grammar corrected free. 731-9534

Need a German Tutor for the German Christmas exams? Ich bin Deutscherin. Call Annette at 723-2116.

Companion Travel Consulting. Discover a travel club that offers travel packages, travel companions, honeymoon vacations and wedding photography, all in one call 820-6800.

MESSAGES

Dear Poopie: Thank you for being beside me, through the good times and the bad. I had an amazing time last weekend. Love 18.2 P.S. You better be ready for a smokin' weekend.

Dear Kristen, HAPPY 19th BIRTHDAY! (You are finally legal). Love your "sweet" mates.
Dear Danielle, HAPPY 20th BIRTHDAY! (Welcome to the suite). Love your "sweet" mates.

EVENTS

Free Preview: Thursday, November 11th, 7:30pm, 85 Albert St. for the evening course beginning January 4th on The Knees of Listening (new, unabridged edition) by Da Avabhava - described as "the most thorough, profound, & daring spiritual autobiography of all time." 671-4398, 1-800-563-4398

MAN TO WOMAN

Athletic, sensitive, outgoing 20 yr old is in search of a female who possesses a great personality, enjoys life, good fun, is very sweet and loves to cuddle up with that special someone. Send photo. Box HJ.

Vertically-challenged, ridiculous romantic fool, seeks someone who believes music and mountain biking are as close to divinity as you need be. Box MTB

Take a breath, don't give up! But may we ask why all females are so frigid? 2 spontaneous & intellectual males can fit the mould XOTICUS desire. Box Pas Fromage.

Dear CHANCE, wow! I've never been described so accurately in one paragraph. I'm extremely flattered but also extremely taken... That's where my transfer was going. I'll be wondering though. BUS GUY.

Mon. Oct 25 you were wearing a light grey body suit, faded jeans, brown boots and a wool cardigan sweater. You have short brown hair and a beautiful smile. We spoke in the 4th fl. comp. rm., library. You were sending an assignment. You left towards Dunton. I ran after you, but you weren't there. I NEED TO KNOW YOUR NAME! Please reply box Helpless.

Girl Snoopy: You Sure Are Neat... I.L.Y. Lots!

WOMAN TO MAN

Colin: please call 565-9405. I have an interesting proposition for you. Rebecca.

WHO WAS THAT CAPED CRUSADER? We met in the line outside Oliver's around midnight at Superpub; you were Balman and I was the Lady in Red. I'm aware that your name is Scott and you're in Architecture, but I'd love to know more. If you're looking for someone to be your Catwoman, please reply ASAP to: BOX Lady.

The UnClassifieds

Message (30 or words or less)

Name

Student No.

Box No.

Looking to buy or sell something? Need to make an announcement? Or maybe you're intrigued at the thought of having your own personal ad. The Charlatan Unclassifieds are a great way to reach over 20,000 people every week. Just fill out the form and bring in into the Charlatan office, 531 Unicentre.

Unclassified Rates

Student Rates $3.21
Non Student $6.42
Personal Ads Free

These are per issue prices and GST has been included.

To get the student rate you must have your student card.

Kingston's Inbreds make much more with less

by Sean Silcott
Charlatan Staff

The Inbreds — opening for the Rheostatics
The Nox, University of Ottawa
Friday, Nov. 12

With the Inbreds, what you see is a lot less than what you get.

That's because the duo of Queen's University students Mike O'Neill and Dave Ullrich, who advertise themselves as "Kingston's smallest band," create the illusion of sounding like a rock and roll band while using only two instruments — a bass and drums.

But what the band lacks in manpower and resources, it makes up for in creativity. O'Neill plays his bass like a guitar, feeding chords through a distortion pedal. The result is what sounds like a phantom guitarist.

What was to become the Inbreds' sound developed almost accidentally during a jam session one night when the two were in their third year at Queen's.

"We were just screwing around with the bass and drums and it just came together," says O'Neill.

The revamped sound of the distorted bass-chord experience probably has to be seen and heard to be believed. Even during a performance, it's easy to forget there are only two people on stage.

In fact, the Inbreds come close to capturing the sound of two slightly more famous four-man bands. In terms of structure and style, O'Neill's hook-laden songs owe a debt to the work of the Beatles and R.E.M.

Other influences include Fugazi, Neil Young and the Breeders. The result is a collection of tightly written, rough-edged pop songs with a certain timelessness ingrained in them.

The band shows impressive diversity throughout its 21-song repertoire. "T.S. Eliot" combines a harsh, anathematic distortion riff with a sweet, harmonic vocal line, while the gurgling, driving bass sound of "Landlord" brings to mind Revolver-era Beatles. "Bub," meanwhile, is a sad, beautiful ballad that shows how appropriate the bass sound can be.

The Inbreds are about to release 1,000 copies of their first compact disc, Hilario, which will be distributed throughout Canada by Cargo Records. This follows four previous independent releases: two cassettes titled Damn Foul Dog and Egrag, an EP (Let's Get Together) and the single "Tell the Truth," which was printed on clear green vinyl.

Their first four efforts were released through Proboscis Funkstone, a label that Ullrich runs out of his apartment in Kingston. The label features such acts as the Stonecutters, the Shermans and Los Seamonsters, local acts that regularly pack the clubs in Kingston.

Damn Foul Dog, the band's first cassette, has sold 500 copies since it was released in early 1992. "Prince," the album's lead track, attracted attention among college radio stations as much for the music as for the song's odd tale.

It tells the story of Prince, a "toy dog on wheels," and is loosely based on one of those real-life-is-stranger-than-fiction incidents from O'Neill's childhood.

When O'Neill was six, his grandfather made a plywood dog mounted on wheels attached to a string, which he gave to O'Neill's brother. Later, his grandparents bought a real dog and named it Prince after the toy dog.

One day while hunting groundhogs, O'Neill's brother took a bad shot that went straight up the dog's rectum, damaging Prince's spine. The vet told them the only way to compensate for the injury would be to put support wheels on the dog's waist and back legs.

O'Neill told the Kingston Whig-Standard last year the family decided to put Prince to sleep "because we thought it would be a miserable life for a dog."

"Prince" made an impressive mark for a debut by an independent, appearing on Top 20 lists at college radio stations in Kingston, Toronto and Montreal, and reaching number two on the alternative chart at CFRC, Queen's community radio station. A video for the song appeared on Much Music.

The single "Tell the Truth" has been their most popular release yet, hitting number one on CFRC's alternative chart last summer and staying in the Top 10 for more than two months.

With Hilario, the band hopes to get their name out across the country so they can start touring. They're now performing about once a week in Kingston and Toronto, with occasional shows in Ottawa. They hope to make it as far as Vancouver, where a network of friends can help get the word out.

So far the band has received a lot of support from friends and fans in Kingston, something which O'Neill says keeps the band going.

"If we weren't encouraged by (friends and fans), I probably wouldn't be hanging around doing this... (but) we're doing our own thing and people seem to like it."

The Inbreds play with a camera.

Fashion: more complex than you ever feared

by Stephanie Garrison
Charlatan Staff

Fashion, as a philosophy, is slightly more complex than magazine photos of stick figures schlepping around in tacky clothing.

On Nov. 3, a discussion hosted by the Carleton Research Centre for Cultural Studies gave some credibility to the concept by holding a talk on fashion and its relation to exoticism.

Speaker Jennifer Craik, associate director at the Institute for Cultural Policy Studies at Griffiths University in Australia, gave a highly intelligent talk on the similarities of fashion and costume and the politics of style between cultures.

Craik discussed the distinction between what is considered fashion and what is not. She described fashion as an ideal of modern Western cultures, ironically referring to them as "modern wisdom cultures."

Costume, conversely, is regarded by these "wisdom cultures" as past forms of dress, or clothing worn in other Third World cultures.

Fashion, according to Craik, is viewed by many Westerners as a commodity with a largely decorative function, while costume is a phenomenon of foreign countries that holds deeper, non-commercial meaning.

Much of Western fashion appropriates exotic elements from other cultures and uses them as a kind of style technique, devoid of that deeper meaning.

Craik, in her impressive and, at times, difficult to understand lingo, characterized fashion and costume as "variations of codes of body systems" or body techniques.

This means both clothes and accessories have specific uses, primarily that of a visible barometer relating to people's environment and purpose. Body techniques are a process of self-articulation, varying at individual and cultural levels and reflecting such things as status or gender.

Craik suggested that foreign dress has been imbued by the West with a mystical depth that western culture is missing. In the West, therefore, other cultures' fashions are viewed as exotic and different. The style of Western dress is established in contrast to these exotic costumes, keeping foreign dress in its inferior place.

In most Western dress systems "exoticism" is present, and Craik characterized this as meaning one of three things. First, that a "fetishized" quality is attached to an object (clothes, for example); second, that foreign or rare motifs will decorate these objects; third, that these motifs establish differences of exoticness from standard Western fashion.

According to Craik, tattooing is a good example of the exotic now entrenched in Western culture. In earlier Japanese tradition, tattoos were seen as erotic and prohibited by missionaries. This merely forced the practice underground, thereby fetishizing tattooing and making it exotic. Now, in part because of this fetishizing, much of Western culture has embraced it, regarding it as a "subversive" form of adornment.

But as Western fashion appropriates exotic dress, Craik notes that the Western influence seeps into other cultures. Costumes in these cultures are now worn in different ways, at different times, by different people, with changes over time. In this way costumes take on the characteristics of Western fashion, such as change in styles and competition between which is the most aesthetically attractive.

It's debatable how voluntary the adoption of Western dress was in other cultures. One viewpoint is that Western dress techniques were taken on in other cultures largely due to the West's increased presence and power in other countries.

Craik concluded by stating that the breaking down and redrawing of fashion is a convergence of style systems of many cultures. Exoticism is a constantly evolving, intrinsic part of fashion. However, Craik acknowledged that the overall importance of fashion is open to debate.

•SINCE 1947•
the
INTERNATIONAL SUMMER SCHOOL
University of Oslo
Oslo, NORWAY

JUNE 25 - AUG. 5, 1994

Course Offerings:
Norwegian Language
Art History • Folklore
Political Science
Culture & Society
Economics • International Relations
Special Education
Peace Research
International Development Studies • Energy and the Environment

Fees: about $2850 (CAD)

Write to:
Oslo Summer School
1520 Saint Olaf Avenue
NORTHFIELD MN 55057-1098
(507) 646-3269 (phone)

Est. 1977

DARLENE SCOLARIDES

Hair Shops...

SHAMPOO CUT & STYLE
$12
SPECIAL Requests pay extra

PERMS
$45
SPECIAL Requests pay extra

...For men and women

• 232-1763 •

248 Bank Street
BETWEEN LISGAR & COOPER - PARKING ON COOPER

Ancient Future
Custom Tattoo

567-5082

Full spectrum of colours Health Conscious
Private personal service Autoclave Sterilized

Wrong for Each Other an enjoyable production

by Neil Herland
Charlatan Staff

Wrong For Each Other
National Arts Centre Theatre
English Theatre Spotlight Series
Nov. 2 — Nov 20

Have you ever bumped into your ex and tried to have a conversation?

Norm Foster's play Wrong For Each Other begins with such a conversation.

This play follows the life of a relationship between Rudy (played by Robert Bockstael) and Norah (Diana Fajrajsl). The play opens in a restaurant, where a chance encounter between Rudy and Norah takes place several years after their break-up.

Their memory-filled conversation transforms into a series of flashbacks which chronicle the landmarks of their past love and marriage.

Reflective piano music (composed by Marc Desormeaux) fills the theatre, bridging the flashbacks and the present. As the vignettes progress, we begin to realize that the pair are complete opposites. Rudy is daring. Norah is cautious. Norah is a professional and Rudy is a manual labourer.

Their love is like something out of a bad Paula Abdul song, but eventually the attraction ends. Between the flashbacks, we see an attempt to reconcile past mistakes, as the couple tries to rekindle a love that has long burnt out.

Director Gil Osborne has created an enjoyable production that will leave many audience members with thoughts of past loves. The script contains a fair amount of humor, at the same time upholding a maturity that permits a serious love story. The humor is often observational, perhaps even Seinfeld-esque at times.

One of the greatest challenges that an

My pillow! My pillow!

actor faces in a two-person play is maintaining a constant rhythm with the other player. In a play with more than two actors, the "heat" of the performance is frequently taken off one of the players.

Fajrajsl and Bockstael both deliver solid performances, creating a living relationship that manages to include all the subtle body language that true lovers can't manage to hide.

The set, designed by Karin Jones, consists of several performance areas that take on the numerous locations of the story. A series of richly finished wood steps rest in the centre of the stage and are used to create a number of the locations. Enveloping the set from behind is a wood cut-out that looks like Ottawa's skyline.

While the performance is enjoyable, it is aimed at an adult audience. The idea of rekindling an old marriage isn't an experience that most of us can relate to. Young people might have difficulty in relating to the experience of a divorced couple in their late-thirties.

While the mature story certainly isn't enough of a deterrent to suggest that young people should not attend, with a price tag of $23.54 a seat, Wrong For Each Other might not be right for your pocket-book.

Hey Kids! It's The Charlatan's first ever entertainment poll.

It's simple and fun to do. Just fill out the survey, along with your name and phone number and drop it off in the special polling box at The Charlatan, Room 531 Unicentre. The final deadline is 3 p.m. Friday, Nov. 26.

The Charlatan will publish the results in our last issue of the term on Dec. 2.

Plus, as an added incentive to enter, each week we'll be having a random draw for neat stuff. This week's prize is a double pass to any movie at the Mayfair before December 11! So have some fun and get your entry up to our office as soon as possible. The deadline for this first fine giveaway is 3:30 p.m. on Tuesday, Nov. 16. Charlatan staff are eligible for the poll but not the contest.

Good luck!

- | | |
|----------------------------------|---|
| 1. Favorite music group | 10. Most notorious meat market |
| 2. Best local band | 11. Favorite campus hangout |
| 3. Dumbest band name | 12. Favorite alcoholic beverage |
| 4. The best concert of the year | 13. Body part that looks best pierced |
| 5. The worst concert of the year | 14. Cheeziest pick-up line |
| 6. Best album of the year | |
| 7. Worst album of the year | |
| 8. Best live Ottawa club | 15. Favorite place you've had sex on campus (left over from last year's sex supplement) |
| 9. Best bar in town | |

NAME: _____

PHONE: _____

Congratulations to Jack Armatys who wins the Corky and the Juice Pigs CD! Come on up to The Charlatan and pick up your prize!

110 YORK ST., BYWARD 234-0950

HOULIHAN'S

"LADIES' NIGHT"

NO COVER CHARGE FOR WOMEN

Every Tuesday Night

15¢ WINGS TUES. & WED.
4:00 - 11:00

GOOD FOOD CHEAP! * POOL TABLES * VIDEO GAMES
AIR HOCKEY * HUGE DANCE FLOOR

TWO FLOORS OF FUN * PARTY NIGHTS

Sun, Mon, Tues, & Thurs

FREE POOL

12pm to 5pm DAILY

FULL Lunch Menu

D.J. Every Night

4 T.V.'S & 3 Big Screens

STUDENT NIGHTS

BEVERAGE

99¢

DRAUGHT

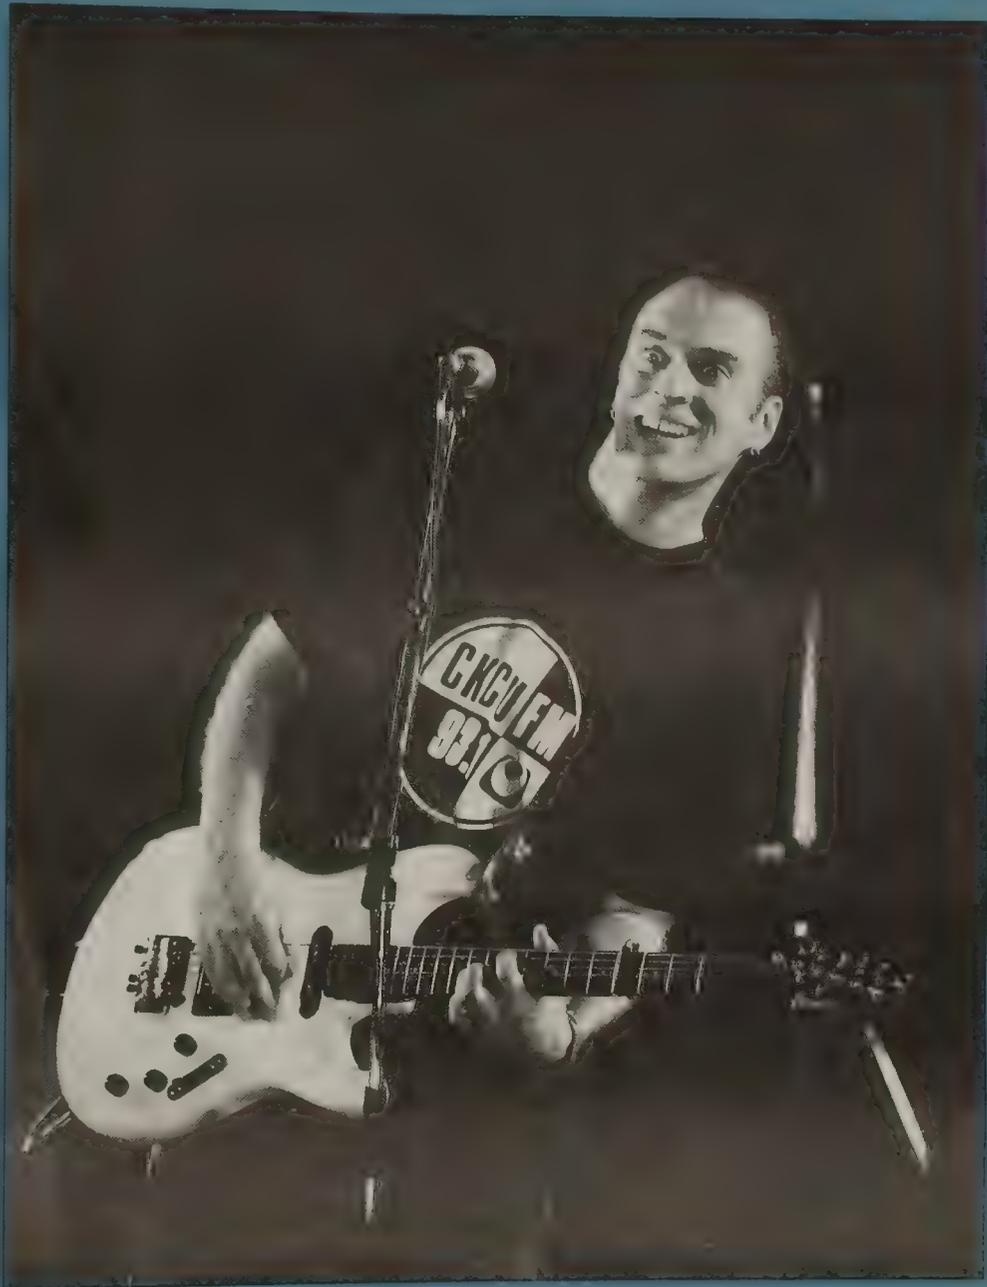

Specials

96 George Street in the Byward Market

562-0433

the CHARLATAN

CARLETON'S INDEPENDENT STUDENT NEWSPAPER

VOLUME 23

ISSUE 14

NOVEMBER 18

1993

On Tap

160 Rideau

classic rock & roll

1.75

..at classic prices

SUNDAYS

CRACKERS TWO

Sundays & Mondays
Sports on the
Big Screen
15¢ Wings

Tuesdays
Karaoke
Nite

Thursday, Nov. 18
Alley Rat

Friday, Nov. 19,
Saturday, Nov. 20
Boys Night Out

Wednesday, Nov. 24
REGGAE NIGHT
Roots Movement

175 Richmond Road Tel. 722-3201

STUDENT NIGHTS

Tuesdays & Wednesdays

FREE POOL

12pm to 5pm
DAILY

FULL Lunch
Menu

D.J. Every Night

4 T.V.'S & 3 Big Screens

BEVERAGE

99¢

DRAUGHT

Specials

96 George Street
in the Byward Market

562-0433

ZAPHOD

BEEBLEBROX

OPENING BAND 8 pm
HEADLINE BAND 9 pm

THUR. NOV. 18 $5
CD RELEASE
THE MORGANFIELDS

+ DINNER IS RUINED

FRI. NOV. 19 $7
Happy Pink Fingers

SAT. NOV. 20 $7
JR. GONE WILD

+ PARDON BEGGARS

WED. NOV. 24 $7
JUNKHOUSE

+ THE GRAVELBERRYS

NEXT WEEK
NOV. 25 ANDY IRVINE
NOV. 26 FLYING BULGAR KLEZMER BAND

27 YORK ST.
562-1010

Sundays - Wednesdays

BEVERAGE

$1.50 Draught

SPECIALS

NFL on the Large Screen Win tickets to The Superbowl FREE Burgers at halftime

Classic Rock n' Roll to Dance to

Thurs. thru Sat.
Come see us down
in the Byward Market

105 Murray St.
233-5716

Ranch

3rd Anniversary Blow-Out Sale

We've Blown out the walls for expansion.
Now we BLOW OUT the SAVINGS to you

Up to 50% OFF
select boots,
belts, and everything else

Guaranteed
Best Selection

Convenient Location
in the Byward Market

99 Clarence St.

562-1320

Zoning may affect campus

by Caron Watt
Charlatan Staff

Zoning changes proposed by the City of Ottawa could increase campus traffic and create a housing shortage in Ottawa South, says the vice-president external of the Carleton University Students' Association.

Kristine Haselsteiner attended a meeting conducted by the City of Ottawa on Nov. 9, to find out about the possible effects of a planning initiative put forth by the city.

The city is proposing changes in zoning that would allow more office buildings and more densely populated residential and business areas around the Canada Post headquarters on Riverside Drive. The area is called Confederation Heights, which is bordered by Brookfield and Heron roads, Riverside Drive and the Rideau River.

Haselsteiner says the initiative could increase the flow of traffic to Ottawa South and the Carleton campus.

The meeting allowed community groups to discuss a proposal that would alter the city's and the Regional Municipality of Ottawa-Carleton's plans for the area, says John Smith, a planner with the city's department of planning and development.

Haselsteiner says studies on the area show Ottawa South cannot handle more traffic. Any increase in traffic caused by the zoning change would make it more difficult for students to get to campus via OC Transpo or along routes such as Bronson Avenue and the Queensway, she says.

The proposal could also increase demand for parking in Ottawa South and the number of people moving into the area, says Haselsteiner, which would deplete the availability of housing and parking for Carleton students in Ottawa South.

But Smith says the zoning changes won't have any impact on the university community.

"I don't see that it (the plan) should affect Carleton", he says.

Councillor George Brown (Riverside Ward) says there will be minimal, if any, impact on Carleton. He says he thinks the proposal may benefit Carleton.

If the proposal goes through, a commuter rail through Confederation Heights will probably be built, passing through Carleton's campus, says Brown. He says this will benefit the school by making the campus more accessible to students.

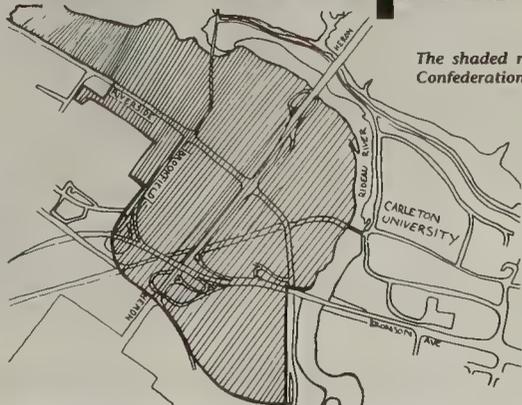

Other community groups also have concerns with the proposal. The president of the Ottawa South Community Association says he's worried about the effect of the zoning changes on the environment and housing in Ottawa South.

Michael Lynch says the proposed changes in zoning would allow for an increase in traffic, more retail space and an increase of people living in the specified area.

Some residents say they fear the environmental impacts on Vincent Massey Park, which is across from the Canada Post headquarters.

"If students like the trees in the park, now is the time to say 'Don't touch them,'" says Karen Howard, director of the Riverside Park Community and Recreation Association.

Students could have a say in the situation by giving Haselsteiner support and feedback, she says.

The shaded region is Confederation Heights.

The possibility of further contamination of the Rideau River is another concern, says Haselsteiner. The river runs along the south side of Carleton's campus.

"Storm water drainage is going into the Rideau River with various levels of contamination . . . It's a problem for the Rideau River and Mooney's Bay," says Smith.

Anne Coffey, a member of the city's environmental advisory committee, says she is worried because the city's proposal includes plans for up to 80 buildings in the proposed area.

Coffey says paving and buildings cause water to run off into the rivers. This water includes such contaminants as oil and anti-freeze from cars, says Coffey.

Philip Gore, assistant director of administrative services at Carleton, says he cannot see any "short-range effects on Carleton, except maybe that students will see a different skyline when they look across the Rideau River." Gore says the zoning change may contribute to a shortage of parking on campus, but he says Carleton is facing that problem anyway.

Gore says he doesn't know about the possible environmental impacts of the proposal and has forwarded a report to Carleton's environmental commissioner.

Community and city representatives at the meeting agreed to set up an advisory committee. Haselsteiner says it will "function with developers to evaluate concerns of communities and to find solutions." □

Campus station tallies funding drive results

by Josée Bellemare
Charlatan Staff

CKCU, Carleton's community radio station, received pledges of more than $105,000 from more than 2,000 donors in its 16th annual funding drive, says station manager Max Wallace. The amount surpassed the station's goal of $100,000.

Kevin Gibbs, CKCU's funding drive coordinator, says the money will cover a third of the station's annual $300,000 budget. The drive started Oct. 26 and ended Nov. 16.

The station's budget covers staffing and production costs, broadcast tower rental and supplies.

The station spent about $160,000 in salaries last year and $56,000 in rent for office and studio space.

CKCU gets a grant of about $100,000 from the Carleton University Students' Association and makes about another $140,000 through advertising, bingos and lottery ticket sales.

Gibbs says the station uses alternative ways of raising money, such as holding benefits and concerts, he says.

The station currently owes the Carleton University Students' Association $188,000 for covering some costs and financial losses in previous years, says René Faucher, CUSA's finance commissioner.

Faucher says CUSA has agreed to write off $1 of CKCU's debt for every $1 they pay off this year. "This gives them an incentive to make money," he says.

Faucher says CKCU made a profit of $4,400 last year, a turnaround from a loss of $48,000 the year before.

Gibbs says he is pleased with the amount raised.

"I think we are in a time when the economy is bad," he says. "It's encouraging to see the kind of response we had and the kind of feedback we got from people."

Wallace says the station expects to collect 70 per cent of the pledges this year.

Last year, the station had $100,299 in pledges and collected about $70,000.

CKCU's highest pledge this year was $5,000 from an anonymous caller, says Wallace.

Gibbs says the lowest pledge was $2.

"Two bucks is great," he says. "If that's what they want to give, that's great, we appreciate that."

The station sent letters asking for donations to all faculty and staff members at Carleton, says Wallace, and received more than $4,500 in pledges from faculty and staff.

To encourage pledges, CKCU gave away T-shirts, CDs, records, and tapes, says Gibbs.

The prizes varied, depending on the amount of money pledged. Gibbs says the products were donated from record companies and other businesses in the community.

Wallace says he was happy with the results.

"I'm glad (the funding drive) is over, but I'm very happy. It's a record by far," he says. □

127 guitarists jammed at CKCU Nov. 5 to promote the funding drive.

on the cover

John Mann, the front man for Canada's coolest band, Spirit of the West.

PHOTO BY ANDRE BELLEFEUILLE

arts	19
classifieds	10
features	12
national	7
news	3
opinion	11
sports	15

index

Architecture school changing, says director

by Prema Oza
Charlatan Staff

Carleton's school of architecture is beginning to address concerns raised in a report about allegations of sexual and racial harassment in the school, says the director.

The architecture review committee's report was released last December as part of an investigation into allegations made by current and former architecture students in the summer of 1992.

The committee heard complaints about some instructors giving out inconsistent grades and discriminating against students.

The report made 30 recommendations including the development of a more objective grading system, workshops on sexual harassment and active recruitment of women and visible minorities as students and faculty.

The school has begun a series of changes since the allegations first surfaced, says Ben Gianni, the school's director.

"I'm not in the trenches all the time and I don't really know what's going on, but my sense is that things are going well," he says.

In an effort to address some of the problems, the school has created a handbook for first-year students, says Gianni. The book deals with guidelines surrounding studio course outlines, evaluation and grading, critiques of student work and grade distribution.

The handbook also mentions that the school is working on a preliminary draft of a code of conduct for faculty, which was one of the report's recommendations. The code defines what is appropriate and inappropriate behavior at the school, dealing with areas such as sexual harassment and racial slurs.

"It's really a standard which we all agree on," says Gianni.

"I think (the handbook) is great," says Milena Vujanovic, a first-year architecture student. "The handbook is really helpful. It explains everything and that's great because (first year) is really tough. There are a lot of hours."

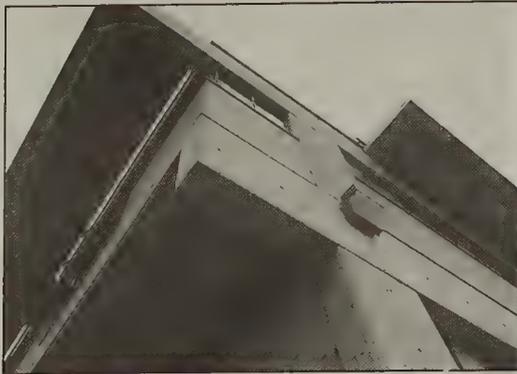

Tim Dallett, a third-year architecture student and former New University Government representative, was chosen by Gianni to write the handbook.

"(Dallett) had an interesting perspective because he was a student and had a lot of time on his hands so he was an ideal person to take this project up," says Gianni.

"I think that when it came to issues of race and gender he went to the individuals on campus and drew direction from them."

Dallett says he wants to make sure the handbook addresses questions of racism and harassment, now and in the future.

"I think I worked hard on those issues," says Dallett.

New University Government, and the Total Equality in Architecture Committee.

Sheldon Baker, a CUSA architecture representative, organized a forum for first-year students in October. He says its purpose was to make the students more aware of services on campus so they know where to go if they have a problem with other students or faculty.

Speakers at the forum included representatives from the Gay, Lesbian and Bisexual Centre, the International Students' Centre, the Peer Counselling Centre and various CUSA representatives.

Turnout for the forum was "fair" despite the fact many first-year students had assignments due that afternoon and were unable to attend, says Baker.

"We all had assignments due that day," says first-year student Dino DiSano. "But as far as the handbook is concerned it achieved its goal (in informing students). I figured what happened last year is in the past. Why dredge it up?"

Edgerton, says the school has changed since his first year. "The school has more enthusiasm and there is more communication between (years)," he says.

Malcolm Wildeboer, a fourth-year architecture student, says he has also noticed a change in the school. "There is more respect for students," says Wildeboer.

A school-wide meeting is in the works for all students, co-sponsored by all of Carleton's student governments, to address the further recommendations from the committee once they are made public, says Gianni.

"I'm looking forward to revising it and including other voices. If anyone wants to put things in, we're willing to accommodate them."

Dallett says he drew upon different resources to write the handbook, such as Carleton's status of women office, the school's director, the Ontario Human Rights Code and his own personal experience.

The school is also trying to improve its relationship with other student groups within the university, says Dave Edgerton, president of the School of Architecture Association of Students.

There are four student groups working with the school: the Carleton University Students' Association, the School of Architecture Association of Students, the

by Jodi Batori
Charlatan Staff

Why don't the windows in Glengarry House open?

This question crossed my mind when I went to Glengarry to visit some friends. All I could do was laugh at the fact that these windows aren't your normal idea of what a window is supposed to be.

I found my friends trapped like jam, sealed into an airtight room. This means that if one person gets sick, it's very possible the whole floor will get sick, and that's why Glengarry residents are commonly known as the sickest on campus.

So, to those who reside in Glengarry, I recommend that you stock up on your Neo Citran or hope that you have an awesome immune system. For those of you with allergies, you have another thing coming.

In past years, several types of fungus have been found in the carpet and an air quality test done in 1991 showed that the air in Glengarry had traces of bacteria, says John Woods, president of the Rideau River Residence Association.

This is not to say the building's air filtering system doesn't work — because it does. But most growths in res rooms have a lot to do with leftover food and empty beer bottles, says Woods.

In fact, he says the air filtering system in Glengarry is so exemplary that Duntun Tower has recently had a similar system installed.

But enough banter, the question still remains, "Why don't the windows in Glengarry residence open?"

OLIVER'S

Calendar

November 18 through November 27 1993 THURSDAY PUB NITE Scratch & Win Doorprizes	18 Friday Pubs Oliver's: HIP HOP PUB! Friday Freebies Carl Strong	20 LIVE BANDS ON SATURDAY ILLEGAL JAZZ POETS with special guest's PIG OUT	22 MONDAY NIGHT FOOTBALL! Weekly Pool League 20¢ Wings! Closed Sunday!
23 TUESDAY WEEKLY PUB Check out our new food menu — meatball sandwiches	24 WORLD FAMOUS WEDNESDAYS	25 THURSDAY Oliver's: HIP HOP PUB! Friday Freebies Bowser & Blue	27 LIVE BANDS ON SATURDAY ANDREW CASH

Clowns, censures and costumes

by Tanya Workman
Charlatan Staff

"Let's get with it people. The year is almost over."

We couldn't have said it better. That plea was courtesy of arts and social sciences representative Rob Bennett at a Carleton University Students' Association council meeting on Tuesday, Nov. 16. It was a circus.

Right off the bat, Derek Zeisman, general manager of the Rideau River Residence Association, announced he will put forward a motion at the next meeting to get council to censure CUSA President Lucy Watson, which means he wants Watson to be given a reprimand.

Council would not allow Zeisman to elaborate on his reasons for the censure until the motion is brought up.

After the meeting, CUSA vice-president internal Rob Jamieson said he doesn't even know what a censure involves, because the CUSA constitution has no provisions for motions of censure.

He said council will not know the implications of the censure, or what steps to take on it, until Zeisman has presented his motion.

After the meeting, Zeisman said a motion of censure means council is not happy with the activities of the president.

According to Zeisman, if council votes 50 per cent plus one in favor of the motion, it will mean council wants Watson to reflect on her behavior as president and to improve it in the future.

Zeisman said he doesn't think Watson has been doing a good job.

"We have a president here who has made more than her share of mistakes and is, in many cases, not willing to recognize that these are mistakes."

Zeisman said he feels Watson's biggest mistake was interfering in the running of CUSA services during the summer, but he refused to give specific examples of interference.

He said he also thinks Watson spends too much time in her office and not enough time representing students.

At the meeting, some didn't appreciate Zeisman's announcement.

"This is bordering on personal attack," Theresa Cowan, CUSA's director of services, told Zeisman.

Finance Commissioner René Faucher was quick to add his two cents worth and told Zeisman if he was going to censure anyone it should be the entire executive.

"It's not just Lucy Watson who makes decisions," Faucher told Zeisman. The executive as a group is accountable for any decisions CUSA makes, Faucher said.

But Zeisman persisted. "I can see the point you're trying to make, but I see certain problems with the president."

Watson addressed Zeisman's complaints in her report to council.

"If anybody has felt that they can't approach me . . . it's more than likely that I've been bogged down with work, I hope you'd persevere."

Watson also said she respected Zeisman's opinion. After her report, she appeared upset and left the room.

After this act was finished in the ring, there was more hoopla about a recent Ontario Labor Relations Board ruling which automatically unionizes 340 CUSA employees.

Arts and social science representative John Edwards tried to read out loud all 28 pages of the Ontario Labour Relations Board decision, even though Watson told Edwards she would be addressing union issues later in the meeting.

Councillors, including Watson and Cowan, left the room in protest. Edwards continued for almost 15 minutes.

With only a scattering of councillors left in the room, journalism councillor James Heath called quorum.

Faucher asked Edwards if it was necessary to read the entire document. Edwards continued to read. The circus almost packed up its tent to leave at this point.

The councillors eventually came back in and things got sorted out.

When it was her turn to speak, Watson advised councillors to address their union concerns to the CUSA employees' union, Canadian Union of Public Employees Local 1281.

Next up in the circus ring were the guests. One of them was third-year geography student Brad Ellis, also known as "Stats," or better yet, as Rodney the Raven, Carleton mascot. Ellis wants a new costume.

He says his Raven costume, which was supposed to last 10 years, hasn't. He says the costume is now a health hazard because it's dirty and hard to move around in.

He wants $500 from CUSA to help pay for a new costume, which would cost between $3,800 and $5,000, he says.

"I want to leave behind something that is more than a pile of rags," he said.

Council agreed to give Ellis the $500 he had requested, but only when he had a firm commitment from the department of athletics.

After Ellis passed around pieces of his costume, arts and social sciences representative Todd McAllister stepped into the ring to wear the Raven mask for about half an hour. "This is cool," McAllister commented.

Go to the CUSA circus and see it to believe it. It's the cheapest form of entertainment in town. □

Bank's cheque cashing policy angers some

by Clayton Wood
Charlatan Staff

Some students say they are being discriminated against by the Carleton Scotiabank's cheque-cashing policy.

While most people with full-time jobs can cash cheques promptly, students usually have to wait up to five business days for a cheque to clear, says Don Bailey, manager of the Scotiabank branch on campus.

"I just feel that's discrimination against a whole class of people, namely students," says Dean Novak, a graduate student who is a teaching assistant.

Bailey denies there is discrimination, but admits some students have been upset about the policy.

Novak says he agrees the bank should protect itself from bad cheques, but adds, "I have enough credit rating to get a Mastercard and VISA and I find it personally insulting that when I cash a cheque for $75, they place a five-day hold on it."

Bailey says in some cases, the branch will make exceptions to the rule, such as during the beginning of the school year when many students use personal cheques to open accounts.

"During the registration period, we got authorization from the head office, telling us to use common sense. We stuck our neck out, and we bit the bullet in some cases," says Bailey.

He says the bank may have lost around $1,000 during that time.

He says the branch might process anywhere from two to 10 non-sufficient funds cheques a day.

Most of these are caught before money is handed out due to the hold, he says. In the past, the bank has lost money when customers cashed cheques on the spot that eventually bounced, says Bailey.

Novak says the bank should eliminate the wait for teaching assistants and students with good credit ratings. □

"It would be difficult," says Bailey. "We don't keep track of who is still a student or not."

Rick Do Couto, a student customer at the branch for four years, says he still has problems cashing personal cheques.

"It's the only bank I've been to where they've placed a five-day hold. There is one lady who works at the end of the counter who is pretty nice."

"With the others, I have to haggle over it."

Another student customer, Mike Lewis, says he has never had any problems cashing cheques at a different Scotiabank branch in Ottawa, where he has been a customer since 1987.

"They place too much of an emphasis on the five-day hold here. There should be more co-ordination between the branch managers," Lewis says.

Clients who don't have to wait the five days are normally those who have a full-time job, a satisfactory credit rating and a good income, says Bailey.

There is no set criteria on who qualifies for this treatment.

The decision to cash a cheque is up to the branch and is based on its past relationship with the customer, says Bailey. He says other banks have similar policies.

The Bank of Montreal branch in Centretown, which also has Carleton students as clients, also bases its cheque-cashing policy on the past relationship with the customer, says manager Art Soper.

"Everything is placed on hold for the first 30 days after the account is opened. After that, it's subjective," says Soper.

He says factors which determine whether or not a client can cash cheques immediately include the person's length of residency and if there have been problems with the account in the past. He says students are not treated differently from other customers. □

"NOBODY PARTIES LIKE THE IRISH!"

IRISH PUB & RESTAURANT

NO COVER 10¢ WINGS 15¢ SHRIMP
IMPORTED DRAFTS
LARGE PATIO DAILY SPECIALS
DART BOARDS SATELLITE TV

LIVE "IRISH" ENTERTAINMENT
EVERY WED., THURS., FRI. AND SAT. 9 P.M.

GOOD FUN GOOD FOOD GREAT BEER
67 CLARENCE STREET, BYWARD, MARKET, 562-0674

Meadowlands Family Health Centre

Hog's Back Plaza
888 Meadowlands Drive East
corner of Prince of Wales Dr. and Meadowlands Dr.
(behind McDonald's)
Ottawa, Ontario K2C3R2
228-2882

Family Medicine Adolescent Medicine Obstetrics and Maternity Care
Pediatrics Minor Surgery Counselling Services
Meadowlands Family Health Centre

Open 7 days a week With or without appointment

Weekdays 8AM to 8PM
Weekends / Holidays 10AM to 6PM

No ordinary Request

REQUEST

'Story' jeans

1. Relaxed fit, cotton stonewash denim with button-fly. Sizes 28 to 34, 36 and 38. (168)

$64⁹⁹

2. 'Sub-culture' cotton Henley T-shirt. Heather grey, black, white, denim, wine or forest green in S., M., L. XL. (175)

$19⁹⁹

EATON'S

Goods Satisfactory or Money Refunded

UNB students angry over prof's article

by Sara-Lynne Levine
Charlatan Staff

The opinions of a University of New Brunswick professor have angered the school's students, sparking a huge controversy and igniting a debate about freedom of speech and the issue of date rape.

On Nov. 5, Matin Yaqzan, an assistant professor of mathematics and statistics at UNB, wrote an opinion piece entitled "Rape: past and present" in The Brunswickan, the university's student newspaper.

In the article, Yaqzan said young men need sexual intercourse regularly. He wrote that a woman who willingly goes into a man's room "could consider it an invitation to sexual intercourse."

He also wrote that a woman who is the victim of unwanted sexual advances should "demand some monetary compensation" rather than get sympathy from others.

The professor's article has been the focus of intense national media attention.

Yaqzan has been suspended with pay while the incident is under investigation. University officials suggested that he not return to campus for his own safety, but there is no legal injunction banning him from campus.

James van Raalte, president of the UNB Student Union, says some students might not feel safe with Yaqzan as a professor because of the views he expressed.

Van Raalte says while Yaqzan is suspended, a review is taking place examining his entire employment record. "Some people say this (suspension) is unfair," says van Raalte.

He also says the issue has caused a "media circus" on the campus.

He says the student council is trying to counteract the article's statements.

"We are running a 'No Means No' campaign all this week with the Canadian Federation of Students and we are having a date rape forum, with a panel of speakers and an open mike," says van Raalte.

Van Raalte says the council is trying to focus on the issue of date rape and violence against women, not freedom of speech. He says the one good thing about the article is students are now talking about the issue.

Karen Burgess, editor-in-chief of The Brunswickan, says the decision to run the article "was an editorial board decision that we fully stand behind."

Below the article, the paper ran a disclaimer stating "the opinions expressed above are not those of The Brunswickan, its editorial staff, or its publishers. This column is a forum for the opinions of members of The Brunswickan's readership."

Burgess says the paper had a lot of response to the article and suspension. She says she was sure the issue would generate some interest, but "didn't expect it to run on CNN. I didn't expect the national or international attention."

Since the publication of the article, Yaqzan has said he will not grant interviews unless he is paid for them. Burgess is critical of this, saying "people who are willing to make public statements should also be willing to publicly defend themselves."

However, Yaqzan agreed to answer questions in writing from The Brunswickan, in the Nov. 12 edition of the paper.

In his answer, he says he "feels he has been misquoted" and the issue is like a "tempest in a teapot."

Jonathan Scott is a third-year business student at UNB's Saint John campus. He says a lot of students and staff have been talking about the issue. "One professor brought it up in class," says Scott.

He says the reaction among students to Yaqzan's comments has been mixed.

"Though his opinion are outlandish and ridiculous, he might have a right to say it," says Scott of Yaqzan's comments.

But Scott also says Yaqzan should have been more responsible with his comments for the sake of the university's reputation.

"By associating himself with the university, he is sort of speaking for them. That is embarrassing for the university."

Scott says he "doesn't agree with his (Yaqzan's) opinions, but it is good the issue of date rape is in the limelight." □

Black attacks hacks and taxes at local visit

by Jill Mahoney
Charlatan Staff

Conrad Black is an establishment kind of guy, but a controversial one, too.

The Carleton graduate was in town to promote his memoirs, A Life in Progress at the National Library on Nov. 10.

Last week, Black, who now lives in Britain, gave a crowd of blue-suited professionals his contentious views on a range on Canadian issues, from transfer payments to political correctness and discrimination.

The multi-millionaire media mogul has stakes in many newspapers including the Ottawa Citizen and Le Droit, as well as others in Australia and England. Hollinger, his company, controls a total daily circulation of about 4.5 million through the papers he owns.

In his lengthy speech, Black told the crowd Canada's commitment to social issues and regional parity has led us into "very deep water."

"We've followed a course that's been very counter-productive. On the economic nomie equality in the Constitution."

Black said the country has been led astray by the federal government's attempt to make prosperous provinces equal with less prosperous ones through transfer payments.

"The process is out of control," he said.

Black said the effect is that Canada is a country with high taxes and high unemployment.

Black, who has donated money to both the NDP and the Reform party, said Canadians are too politically correct.

"We've suddenly become the most politically correct society in the world. I don't know how this happened."

Black said he acknowledged there's "room for debate" on most issues. But he said one example of political correctness getting out of hand was when the Ontario NDP government recently ran a job ad which excluded white males from applying as part of its affirmative action policy on employment.

"I'm well aware of the good intentions. I must proclaim my view that I don't like discrimination. But Bob Rae might be the only person in Ontario that I'd like to discriminate against."

— Conrad Black

I must proclaim my view that I don't like discrimination. But Bob Rae might be the only person in Ontario that I'd like to discriminate against.

side, we've devalued our currency." Black said Canada is over-taxed because of questionable government efforts to provide Canadians from coast to coast with the same quality of life.

"We're the only country . . . to entrench the instability of regional eco-side, we've devalued our currency." Black said Canada is over-taxed because of questionable government efforts to provide Canadians from coast to coast with the same quality of life.

"We're the only country . . . to entrench the instability of regional economie equality in the Constitution."

Black said the country has been led astray by the federal government's attempt to make prosperous provinces equal with less prosperous ones through transfer payments.

"The process is out of control," he said.

Black said the effect is that Canada is a country with high taxes and high unemployment.

Black, who has donated money to both the NDP and the Reform party, said Canadians are too politically correct.

"We've suddenly become the most politically correct society in the world. I don't know how this happened."

Black said he acknowledged there's "room for debate" on most issues. But he said one example of political correctness getting out of hand was when the Ontario NDP government recently ran a job ad which excluded white males from applying as part of its affirmative action policy on employment.

"I'm well aware of the good intentions. I must proclaim my view that I don't like discrimination. But Bob Rae might be the only person in Ontario that I'd like to discriminate against."

side, we've devalued our currency." Black said Canada is over-taxed because of questionable government efforts to provide Canadians from coast to coast with the same quality of life.

"We're the only country . . . to entrench the instability of regional economie equality in the Constitution."

Black said the country has been led astray by the federal government's attempt to make prosperous provinces equal with less prosperous ones through transfer payments.

"The process is out of control," he said.

Black said the effect is that Canada is a country with high taxes and high unemployment.

Black, who has donated money to both the NDP and the Reform party, said Canadians are too politically correct.

"We've suddenly become the most politically correct society in the world. I don't know how this happened."

Black said he acknowledged there's "room for debate" on most issues. But he said one example of political correctness getting out of hand was when the Ontario NDP government recently ran a job ad which excluded white males from applying as part of its affirmative action policy on employment.

"I'm well aware of the good intentions. I must proclaim my view that I don't like discrimination. But Bob Rae might be the only person in Ontario that I'd like to discriminate against."

side, we've devalued our currency." Black said Canada is over-taxed because of questionable government efforts to provide Canadians from coast to coast with the same quality of life.

"We're the only country . . . to entrench the instability of regional eco-

Returning in next week's
Charlatan . . .
INTERNATIONAL AFFAIRS

Fee increase will help lobbying efforts and research, says CFS

by Anthony Pangalos
Charlatan Staff

"Money isn't everything," says Carl Gillis, chair of the Canadian Federation of Students. "But it makes the message easier to get out."

On Nov. 9 and 10, Carleton students voted in a referendum to pay $4 more per student in membership fees to the national student lobby group and its provincial wing, the CFS-Ontario, beginning next September.

This year, Carleton students paid $4 per student to the CFS and $3 per student to the CFS-O as part of their student fees.

The final results in the referendum were 669 votes for the increase and 645 against, with 58 spoiled ballots.

The increase will go to continuing lobbying governments on student issues and research conducted by the federation, says Gillis. The federation lobbies the government on issues such as student poverty, employment and tuition.

"It's over and now we can deal with what we set out to do — helping out students and representing their needs," says Emechete Onuoha, chair of the CFS-O.

Both Gillis and Onuoha say the money will not go to any specific programs, but to general lobbying efforts.

"It's main purpose is to continue our work. Since there has been no increase since 1981, added to the rise of inflation, our job becomes very difficult," Gillis says. "The money will go to restore the balance in terms of resources of what we have to do."

Onuoha says the increasing numbers of students at universities require more resources and employees at CFS-O.

"We need the money to send more people out to the schools like Carleton, to do more research and to accommodate the growing demands made by a growing population of students," he says.

All Ontario CFS-member schools must decide on fee increases this year, either through their student councils or through referendums. The increase will take effect if 80 per cent of the member universities approve it.

Students at Trent voted in a referendum in October to approve a membership fee increase.

As well, students at McMaster University in Hamilton will vote on Nov. 30 and Dec. 1 on a $4 fee increase for CFS. But if the increase is denied, the student association will hold another referendum on whether to withdraw from CFS. □

Provincial legislation may recognize gay rights

by Karolina Srutek
Charlatan Staff

Some members of the gay and lesbian community in Ontario are critical of a proposed provincial bill which would extend employee benefits to gays' and lesbians' partners and change the definition of "marital status" in the Ontario Human Rights Code.

They say they are in favor of a different proposal which would amend all laws in Ontario instead of just one.

A private member's bill introduced by Liberal MPP Tim Murphy in June would change the definition of marital status in the Ontario Human Rights Code to include same-sex couples.

Murphy says his bill would also protect people from harassment in the workplace based on sexual orientation. It also ensures employment benefits to such as bereavement leave, dental and drug plans to gays' and lesbians' partners. It would also prevent landlords from denying a same-sex couple available rental units, says Murphy. But a different bill promised by Attorney General Marion Boyd would amend all laws in Ontario which refer to a spouse as being someone from the opposite sex.

Murphy's bill passed first reading on June 8 and is awaiting the approval of the provincial justice committee to continue on to the third reading and eventually be voted on in the legislature. Boyd's bill has not been introduced yet.

Murphy's bill would only change the definition "marital status" in the code, but it wouldn't change the definition of "spouse," says Peter Nogalo, co-ordinator of the Gay, Lesbian and Bisexual Centre at Carleton.

As well, Nogalo says Murphy's bill fails to mention the 79 other Ontario laws outside the human rights code which have discriminatory definitions of "spouse" and "marital status."

Alex Munter, Ottawa-Carleton's first openly gay elected official and city councillor in Kanata,

When a state doesn't recognize a relationship, that says as a society we are saying that it's okay to discriminate.

— Alex Munter says laws concerning the division of property in divorce cases and next of kin rights are examples of legal discrimination outside the human rights code.

"Like this guy dying of AIDS, he has a partner who he has lived with him for years. But the law doesn't recognize his partner as his next of kin. The law only recognizes his parents as next of kin," says Munter.

Because Murphy's bill would only amend Ontario's code, definitions outside of it would have to be challenged in court or in human rights complaints, says the Coalition for Gays and Lesbian Rights in Ontario.

In the coalition's lobbying kit, it says Murphy's bill doesn't represent a major move forward for lesbians and gay rights, because gays and lesbians have already achieved the amendments.

In September 1992 the definition of marital status was changed in the Charter of Rights and Freedoms by omitting "of the opposite sex" in a case brought to the federal courts by the federal human rights commission. The coalition says harassment on the grounds of sexual orientation was covered by the human rights code already, since it is a form of discrimination.

But Murphy says progress is sometimes evolutionary, not revolutionary.

"While I believe that these changes are necessary in helping end discrimination based on sexual orientation, I acknowledge they are only a start," says Murphy in a press release.

Although the provincial NDP government supported Murphy's bill initially, the bill didn't address all of the issues of same-sex spousal rights, says Susan Bernier, Boyd's special assistant.

The government's own proposed bill would include unemployment benefits, adoption, inheritance rights and would amend any law which refers to a spouse as being someone from the opposite sex, says Bernier.

"Marion Boyd has promised a broader bill than Murphy last July and that she will do something about it in the fall. But there is no indication on the government timetable of such an action," says Markus Wilson, Murphy's special assistant.

Munter says he is disappointed the government hasn't moved forward on this issue, saying it's time to prepare society to accept distinct gay and lesbian rights.

"When a state doesn't recognize a relationship, that says as a society we are saying that it's okay to discriminate." □

With files from The Ontario, University of Guelph

UBC proposes Canada's first lesbian and gay curriculum

by Brandie Weikle
Charlatan Staff

The success of a gay and lesbian lecture series at the University of British Columbia this fall has prompted a proposal to launch a program for gay and lesbian studies at that university.

But despite the presence of such courses at other Canadian universities, Carleton has little to offer students interested in these programs.

At UBC, the University of Toronto, Ryerson Polytechnical University, and the University of Western Ontario, some lesbian and gay courses are offered. But UBC's faculty association committee on gay and lesbian issues wants more.

"We're not considering the lecture series to be the end of the game — that now that we've had a lesbian, gay, bisexual lectures series we're all happy — that's not our vision," says Douglas Sanders, the committee's chairperson and a law professor at UBC.

The committee's negotiations with UBC's administration will decide whether there should be more courses on homosexuality and whether a degree-granting faculty should be created. If the degree program is developed, it would be the first of its kind in Canada.

Dan Birch, UBC's vice-president academic, is supportive of developing a gay and lesbian studies program.

"UBC is trying to recognize the value of gay and lesbian studies in all areas of our curriculum," says Birch.

At Carleton there are no courses that are exclusively dedicated to studying gay and lesbian culture. But Carleton's department of social work has two courses that partially address lesbian and gay issues.

Gloria Norgang teaches a second-year course called "Human Sexuality" and a graduate course called "Challenging Heterosexuality." □

According to the course calendar, "Human Sexuality" discusses "the range of individual differences in sexual and reproductive attitudes, values and behavior and . . . the particular concerns of various sexually oppressed groups."

But the graduate course examines what Norgang calls "a society of compulsory heterosexuality."

Norgang says it is enormously important that gay and lesbian courses be offered.

"It has been traditional at universities to address minorities that affect far fewer people than those that are gay and lesbian," says Norgang. "There is definitely room for courses specifically addressing gay and lesbian issues."

Studies on homosexuality should not just address the problems in the lesbian and gay community, says Peter Nogalo, co-ordinator of Carleton's Gay, Lesbian and Bisexual Centre.

"I think there's a history, culture and art of the various gay, lesbian and bisexual communities that hasn't been explored at this university the way it should be," says Nogalo.

Carleton's department of social work has an equity statement which includes sexuality and which ensures that issues of heterosexuality and homophobia are integrated into classes wherever possible, says Gerald de Mantigny, supervisor of undergraduate studies for social work.

He says lesbian and gay studies are "without a doubt" worthy of being in a class of their own. He says the creation of a separate department would have political advantages for members of the gay, lesbian and bisexual communities, but he is concerned about their "ghettoization." He says these studies could be included as part of an interdisciplinary program. □

With files from Rick Hiebert, The Odyssey, University of British Columbia

If you'd like a booklet about Jack Daniel's Whiskey, write us here in Lynchburg, Tennessee 37352, U.S.A.

NO ONE IN LYNCHBURG knew why Jack Daniel missed work that spring day in 1904.

No one except his nephew Lem Motlow, who was sworn to silence. You see, Mr. Jack was bound for St. Louis and the World's Fair, where his whiskey could be judged against the world's finest. As it happened, Jack Daniel returned to Lynchburg with a lot less secrecy — and a gold medal in his hand. A sip, we believe, will confirm the Fair's judges knew their whiskey.

JACK DANIEL'S TENNESSEE WHISKEY

Oh Come, All Ye Wealthy!

A satirical look at the Iron Lady's visit to Canada

by Michael Kearns
Charlatan Staff

TORONTO — David Koresh was a cult leader who erred by living in a heavily armed compound. But economic fundamentalist Margaret Thatcher is wiser, preferring posh hotels and lavish lunches to isolation.

Thatcher, the former prime minister of Britain, is in the midst of her magical mystery tour to promote her recently published volume of self-beatification, The Downing Street Years. She stopped in at the Royal York Hotel to give an address on Nov. 8 for the 20th-anniversary luncheon of the Fraser Institute, a conservative think-tank based in Vancouver.

Billed "A New World Order," the speech seemed like a religious sanctification of Canada's self-proclaimed "think-tankers," which started with the 11:45 a.m. opening of the cash bar. (No nasty, socialist open bar here.)

"Moral courage is a strange thing," said Thatcher's former chief economic apostle, Sir Alan Campbell, in his introduction of the Tory prophet. "I don't think you can acquire it. I think you have to be born with it."

He went on to illustrate Thatcher's "moral courage" with her economic austerity, her decision to invade the Falkland Islands in 1982 and her "wonderful job" squashing the British coal strikes in 1984.

Thatcher, as humble as anyone aspiring to godhead, quickly amended Campbell's description of her character to "conviction."

"Politics," she said, "is the art of making the impossible happen." What's that? The politician as miracle worker? This is what we've all been waiting for.

"And that's precisely what we did," she continued.

Well, it seems I've misjudged the impossible. Apparently the impossible, as Thatcher saw it, was closer to, ahem, enforcing her economic austerity, the invasion of the Falkland Islands and her "wonderful job" squashing the coal strikes.

The white-hair-blue-suit-white-skin congregation at the speech ate it up faster than their $75-per-plate sacrament.

Drooling for every chance to burst into delirious wine-and-wallet-fuelled applause, they saved their best effort for Thatcher's declaration that her first step in organizing England's economy was to lower income taxes.

But a moment of greater revelation came seconds later, when Thatcher claimed that under her taxation changes, the top five per cent of income earners actually paid more tax.

At that point, the only sound in the Canadian Room, the Royal York's ornate beef barn, was that of a couple hundred suits checking their billfolds to make sure they kept their ticket stubs for tax purposes. It has been said that doubt is the first step towards true faith, so do not despair.

Thatcher, although a Tory by denomination, knows that in the heart of every Aging has-been or sultry siren of the right?

so-called neo-conservative lies a so-called classical liberal, and she drew heartily upon the empty rhetoric of both camps to spur the body of holy troops forward.

Some of her more memorable pronouncements indeed appeared as if the invisible hand of proto-economic liberal and Wealth of Nations author Adam Smith was burping the grand old lady after her sumptuous meal.

"It is in fact capitalism which has the moral quality in society," Thatcher mused. Ahh... the bean-counting technocrat as spiritual leader.

"You can only in fact satisfy people in a capitalist society if you produce what they want to buy, or a service which they also want to buy." In the beginning, there was money...

Finally, Reverend Thatcher spoke eloquently of a new holy land.

"We should always be extremely grateful that the most powerful nation in the world, the greatest democracy, the greatest believer in freedom and justice from its very Declaration of Independence... has in fact come to keep freedom alive in the world. At the moment, there is no substitute for American leadership."

It was with these words that one could almost feel the icy satin of the stars-and-stripes knickers that are inevitable beneath Thatcher's standard-issue, Tory-blue habit. Had she performed a striptease to "The Star-Spangled Banner" on the podium, she couldn't have been more obvious. (If one may speak of a holy one in such a... worldly manner.)

Of course, to entirely discredit a woman who ruled England for 11 and a half years would be rather short-sighted. Thatcher did provide — albeit inadvertently — a profound piece of divine wisdom that solves the mystery of much that has happened in Ontario recently.

"It is surprising," said Thatcher, in the middle of a long string of truisms, "how socialism penetrates even good conservatives sometimes."

Has there ever been a more lucid description of Bob Rae? Ontario's exorcism has been arranged for the next pilgrimage to the polls.

Hallelujah. □

BOWSER AND BLUE

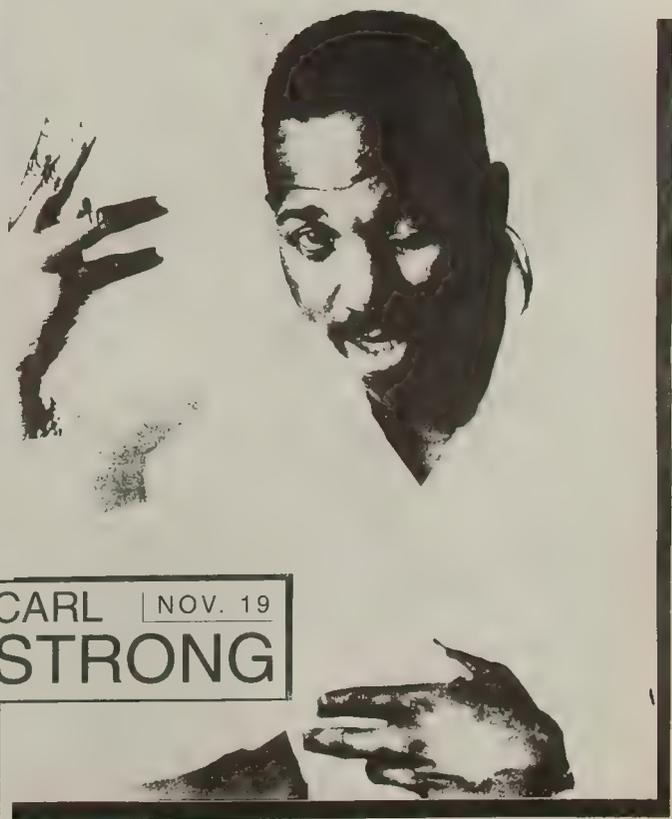

NOVEMBER 26

ROOSTER'S
Friday
Freebies
COFFEEHOUSE

CARL NOV. 19
STRONG

ALSO...
DECEMBER 3
COOPER,
EMMERSON,
AND KING

SALE!

25% off ALL CLOTHING NOVEMBER 22-26

Bookstore Raven Corner
SOUTHAM HALL ATHLETICS BUILDING

ACADEMIC EXCHANGES 1994-95 FOR STUDENTS

Students should be graduated students or senior undergraduates.
Deadline for applications: November 30th, 1993 unless otherwise indicated:

- | | |
|---|---|
| United States:
-State University of New York (SUNY) system
-University of Massachusetts
University of Copenhagen (DIS) | Italy
Japan
Cuba
China
Mexico
Argentina
Egypt
Sweden |
| Poland
Hungary
Russia
France
Middle East
Tanzania
Germany
Spain | Commonwealth Universities Study
Abroad Consortium (CUSAC):
Ghana, Singapore, West Indies, Tanzania, Australia |
| The Netherlands
University of Edinburgh
University of Leeds (Pol. Sc. students only)
University of Bradford (Business students only) Strathclyde University (Business students only)
East Anglia (Computer Science students only)
Université des Antilles et Guyane | Commonwealth Scholarships (October 31, 1993 - Australia and New Zealand December 31, 1993)
CIDA Awards for Canadians (Int'l Development)
(February 1994)
Foreign Government Awards Program (October 31, 1993) |

Further information and application forms now available from Carleton International, Room 1506 Dunton Tower - 788-2519

Ontario/Baden-Württemberg/Rhône-Alpes Student Exchange Programs 1993/94

The above programs are open to all students in all fields who are registered in an undergraduate (2nd yr. or higher) or graduate degree program at Carleton. Successful applicants will be required to attend full-time at an institution either in France or Germany for a full academic year. During the year the student remains registered at Carleton. Competence in the language of instruction i.e. French or German which is appropriate to the level of study is essential. A $1,500 bursary is awarded to defray costs.
Deadline: November 30, 1993.
Further information from Carleton International, Dunton Tower 1506.

The Un Classifieds

LOST & FOUND

Lost gold necklace in the gym. Desperately looking for return. Necklace has swastika symbol (actually it's the symbol of Buddha). Willing to pay ANY price for return (731-7468).
Lost: One small silver key with small silver key ring on it. It's one of a kind and I'm @#%!' without it. Please call 237-7781

WANTED / JOBS

Breakaway Tours is looking for motivated students, organizations & clubs to promote Spring Break & New Years trips! Leader in student tours for the past 11 years, we are looking for the best reps to promote our company. Best commission structure available, so call today to apply! CALL 564-0564. CALL AND COMPARE US TO ANYONE!!
PLANT A TREE IN AFRICA: Volunteers needed for Ottawa-based fund-raising team. Contact Joyce Lundberg 788-2600 ext. 2571
Awesome Spring Break Trips! Campus reps needed. Cuba, Cancun, Daytona, Montreal & Quebec City. Call now! 1-800-363-0634.
FREE TRIPS AND MONEY!! Individuals and Student Organizations wanted to promote the Hottest Spring Break Destinations, call the nation's leader. Inter-Campus Programs 1-800-327-6013
FREE Spring Break trips and cash bonuses. We need only the best Carleton reps to promote Cancun, Cuba, Daytona, Montreal, and Quebec sunski party trips. Incredible giveaways from Kodak and Koala Springs and a Jeep YJ draw. Call 1-800-263-5604 NOW!

SERVICES AVAILABLE

Applications are now being accepted for summer jobs on cruiseships, airlines and resorts. No experience necessary. For more information send $2 and a self-addressed stamped envelope to: World Wide Travel Club, 5334 Yonge Street, Suite 1407, Toronto, Ontario, M2N 6M2
JITSU. Enjoyable training which provides effective defence for men and women. Techniques suitable for law enforcement. Sun 5pm-7pm, Wed. 4pm-6pm. Combatives Room. New members always welcome. Contact: Derry 523-1507
Free haircuts done by apprentices in the professional atmosphere of the PARLOUR HAIR SALON, 232 St. Patrick. For appl. call 238-6929. Please mention this ad when you call.
Have essays, term papers and thesis typed on IBM Selectric by a secretary with 15 years of university typing experience. Dedicated to excellence. Spelling corrected. $1.50/page. Call Brenda: 234-7565
Attention students! Need a professional resume to get your career started? Call the PaperWait for reasonable rates. Localized near campus. Call 739-7773 and leave a message.
FREE GUITAR LESSONS. Experienced teacher. All levels. Can teach other instruments as well. Call 526-2903 at reasonable hour. Leave message.
Word Processing - Accuracy and Deadlines Guaranteed. Central Location. 233-8874.
CARLETON U. SPRINGBREAK '94. Students from Toronto, Montreal, Ottawa, Halifax, Moncton & others will flock to CUBA for the biggest party ever!!! $399+bxs. Receive flight + 7nights hotel + meals + chance winning "Jeep YJ" + free "Kodak" camera + free "Koala Springs" party + Spaces limited!!! Pay only $75 to reserve. Info. 724-9974 or 239-9651
Tutoring: Don't fall behind. Stay on top. Physics and math tutoring. Reasonable rates. Call Albert: 824-2211.

Wordprocessing: Give your term papers, essays, theses and reports a professional look. Spelling, grammar checked. Data manipulation, tables, graphing also done. Deadlines guaranteed. Reasonable rates. 824-2211.
WORD PROCESSING: Fast, accurate, professional word processing. Essays, Reports, Theses, Resumes, Flyers, Laser Printer. Pick-Up and Delivery is available. Call Lena: 837-0183
Word Processing on laser printer - Essays, Reports & Theses - $1.60 and less per page. Please Call 721-8770
GMAT - GRE - LSAT - Since 1979, thousands of students have benefited from the expert instruction in John Richardson's preparation courses. - 1-800-567-PREP(7737) Wordprocessing services available. $2 per page. Call 231-2057 and leave a message.
Native French speaker offers private lessons through the use of the press & literature. Don't let the opportunity pass you by! 730-6085.
Word Processing. Accurate, professional, prompt, economical. Reports, essays, term papers, transcripts, theses. Reasonable editing provided and grammar corrected free. 731-9534
Companion Travel Consulting. Discover a travel club that offers travel packages, travel companions, honeymoon vacations and wedding photography, all in one call 820-6800.

Tricia - even though you're miles away, you're close to my heart, and you'll see this one day. Love has surely found us, and it has to stay, maybe not today or tomorrow but some day. It will seem like forever, till we feel the same, we had it once, and we'll have it again. Follow your heart. Taylor.

MAN TO WOMAN

21 year old Indian male looking for an older, experienced woman. If you don't mind a few grey hairs, enjoy playing pool and are 25+, you're the woman for me! Box FOOT LONG.
23yr old part-timer, really digs "alternative" yet unpretentious music. I get really into groups like BETTIE SERVEET, UNDERBELLY, DIED PRETTY AND BUFFALO TOM. I'm searching for an interesting and intelligent woman with a weird sense of humour (bad puns welcome) to share cool times, coffee house chats, the Mayfair and shows (Zaphod's, The Penguin) around town. If you've got an eclectic taste in tunage and don't mind a fella whose a bit shy, let's get in touch. Box Lane

WOMAN TO MAN

SWEET LOVE AFFAIR Body of Substance, Butt of Steel, Fly by Chance, Meet me at Peel, Damsel can Dance, Until you Keele, Sweet Romance, After our Meal, Please write Vance, Cause I'm quite a Steal.
Well hello, I'm Mrs. Robinson looking for "the graduate" who hangs out at Mike's Place who missed a great concert last weekend. S&G will never happen again. But there's still time for us! Box GRAD
Sexy 19 yr old woman looking for tall, hunk of a man to bear my children. Excessive body hair considered a plus. Call me big boy, if you're man enough! Box LGBNAF
Colin: please call 565-8405. I have an interesting proposition for you. Rebecca.

MESSAGES

Tea for three! Is ok with me, but where are you? The tea is still hot and so am I! So write to me if you're up for tea! Box MLG
Andrea, I lost your number, and would love to see you again. Martin L. Gore misses you a lot! Please answer, it's pool time again! Box DM.
Jason Green. Are you back on Campus? I owe you a coffee. It's criminal for someone far from home to drink alone. Box KAFKA

The Un Classifieds

Message (30 or words or less)

Name _____ Student No. _____ Box No. _____

Looking to buy or sell something? Need to make an announcement? Or maybe you're intrigued at the thought of having your own personal ad. The Charlatan Unclassifieds are a great way to reach over 20,000 people every week. Just fill out the form and bring in into the Charlatan office, 531 University.

Unclassified Rates

Student Rates $3.21

Non Student $6.42

Personal Ads Free

These are per issue prices and GST has been included.

To get the student rate you must have your student card.

CUSA didn't play fair in referendum

Many people believe the democratic process is a worthy institution. But the Carleton University Students' Association compromised democracy to suit their own political ends in the referendum held last week.

Students voted on a $4-per-student increase in membership fees to the Canadian Federation of Students, a national student lobby group. Students approved the fee increase, but CUSA didn't let them hear both sides of the issue.

The Yes side, which was supported by — if not run from — the CUSA office, vaulted to victory whereas the No side was not allowed to campaign. Because there was no official committee, they were also not allowed to scrutineer the counting of the ballots. According to CUSA's constitution, each committee is allowed to have one scrutineer "at each table where counting is taking place."

While the absence of a No campaign was partly the No committee's own fault, they still should have been allowed to campaign. On Nov. 2, both the Yes and No committees were supposed to meet to be allowed to campaign. The No committee, for whatever reason, missed the deadline and were excluded from the campaign.

Everybody was playing by the rules, according to Rob Jamieson, CUSA vice-president internal. "It has been a completely legal and fair referendum. The opportunities were there if somebody showed up for the No committee meeting which was all publicized and done legally as per the bylaw," said Jamieson last week.

However, in CUSA's constitution, it doesn't say anywhere that if a committee misses the deadline it can't campaign, only that it cannot receive funding. Therefore, the No side should have been allowed to campaign, just without funding from CUSA.

The referendum question itself, worked out by CUSA council, is biased towards the CFS. It said, "Do you support an increase to $6 from $4 (1981 level) for the Canadian Federation of Students and an increased fee of the Canadian Federation of Students-Ontario to $5 from $3 (1979 level). Those fees will go towards programmes and lobbying efforts."

Firstly, this question is confusing. There's too many numbers and the question doesn't come to the point — that fees will increase by $4. Secondly, the question was biased. It could make the reader sympathetic towards the CFS cause.

A question should be neutral and fair to the reader as well as straightforward. For example, the question could have simply read, "Do you support an increase in fees of $2 for the CFS and $2 for CFS-O, ($4 total)?"

Although the No committee didn't get the $150 allotted to registered groups to campaign, they tried campaigning unofficially. They posted over 2,000 posters at their own cost, handed out flyers and lobbied classrooms.

Even without an official No side campaign, the close result obviously shows dissatisfaction with CFS. The Yes side only won by 24 votes. The final count was 669 to 645, with 58 spoiled ballots. If there was a full-fledged No committee campaigning and students were adequately informed, perhaps the result may have been different.

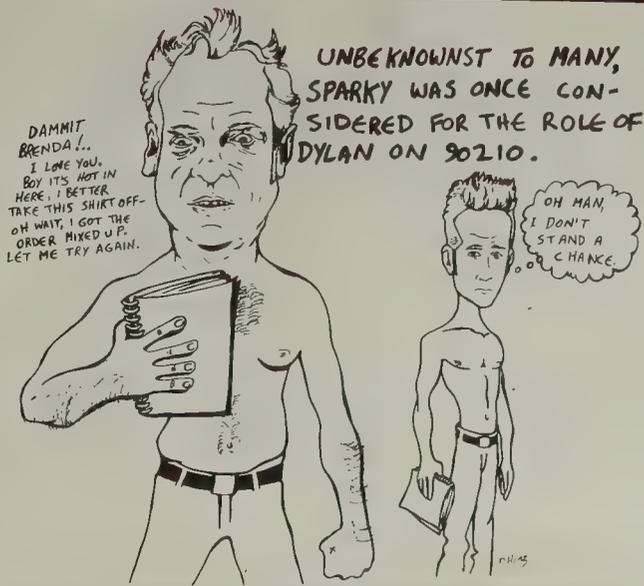

Here's how CUSA legitimizes not allowing a No committee: "The student's association is a member of the CFS," CUSA president Lucy Watson said last week. "We have an obligation to make sure the information gets out to the students. We don't have an obligation to run a No committee or encourage people to come out to a No committee."

Obviously, "information" for Watson means students may hear only one side of the referendum issue.

If CUSA believes the CFS is a worthy organization which students support, they should have allowed a No committee to campaign. If the CFS is so wonderful, then surely it could have stood up to a No campaign on its own merits.

CUSA's unprofessional tactics show students that it can't be trusted. If the fight couldn't have been won fairly, with both sides of the issue debated, then the results of the referendum should be scrapped and a new one held.

AP

OPINION

Maclean's rankings of no value

by Michael Dufresne

Michael Dufresne is a fourth-year political science and history student at Carleton.

Providing prospective university students with more information on the schools to which they might apply is a noble pursuit.

But while the idea behind the supposed service provided by the Maclean's annual ranking of universities is valid, the result is questionable.

If my memory serves correct, information provided by the universities themselves to prospective students is superficial and doesn't go much beyond the style of a travel brochure: "Spend four wonderful years on our beautiful campus."

However, in the preface to this year's Maclean's universities edition, editor Robert Lewis is a little too sanctimonious, given the service that the survey truly provides.

Oh, the tale that Lewis weaves! He writes of a "small idea" that became big, of "brave" university presidents who dared to break the ranks of resistance, of U.S. universities that supported their great endeavour, and of the forthright institutions of learning who, opposing their lesser contemporaries, dared to be accountable.

But, wait! Lewis's story doesn't have an entirely happy ending. The forces of darkness still lurk in the halls of higher education. "Alas, the battle for openness," he writes, "is not over."

Universities are far more complex than Maclean's would admit, but admitting the very real and large problems with the survey would not make for good sales.

It has been said before, but given the obstinacy of Maclean's, it must be repeated: the ranking of universities is of very little value to anyone. It sells magazines — there is no question of this. But, if readership was a valid indication of the quality of journalism, The National Enquirer would be counted among the world's best.

Some may say the survey is not meant to be a definitive source for the student's decision about which university to attend. Okay. Well, then the question becomes — what does it provide the student?

In terms of its "reputation category," the survey offers rankings according to the perceptions of businessmen and university presidents — hardly the stuff that rational people ought to base their decisions upon. There may be some validity to the premise that a better perception of a university gives graduates a better chance with employers in a competitive job market, but this has never been demonstrated.

What are we left with? From the point of view of the prospective university student, there is nothing of merit in the rankings. There is only a meaningless aggregation of statistics compressed into a meaningless number. Compared to the travel brochures published by the universities, the Maclean's survey has only a marginally greater value. Choosing a university is an individual affair and is certainly not reducible to the limited information that Maclean's provides.

Why should the prospective student care if, on average, Simon Fraser University scored higher than Memorial University in the category "scholarships and bursaries," or whether one university ranks well in comparative class size?

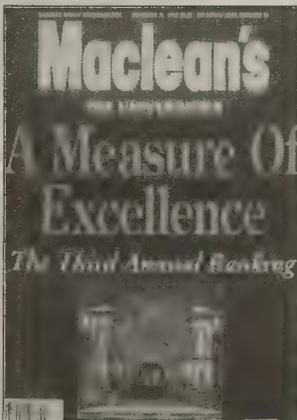

The more important question is what this means for the prospective student of a university. What scholarships and bursaries would be available to them at a particular university? What are the typical class sizes in that school's first year? The better approach is to decide what subject you are interested in and find out what its class sizes are like because different programs have differing degrees of popularity.

Another problem with the survey is each university is treated as a monolithic institution. What about the strengths and weaknesses of particular programs? It is, after all, specific programs students must take. It is this far more complex treatment that might benefit a potential student.

Examining the university is necessary, although in a way that is different, more demanding and specific than the survey. However, the quality of an education goes beyond the institution.

Education, like almost everything else, is what you make of it. Students with a passion for learning will do well regardless of the university they attend. A bad student and a supposedly great institution will still make for a bad student.

Maclean's criticizes some institutions for not being completely open. If Maclean's was being entirely open, it would tell a story about a magazine in need of readers. It would tell the story of how a magazine sells by creating a controversial survey and marketing it as a true "Measure of Excellence."

BUNCHA STORIES

by Rob McLennan
Charlatan Staff

Gregg Kerr is the author and publisher of Buncha Stories, a strange little independent comic book that sells for $1.25 in some local record shops.

Since he began his comic last June, his story topics have included "Barry the Real Life Lunatic," teenage zombie babysitters, masturbation, complacency and trendy folk in Ottawa, a sex change, and hanging out at his place.

Kerr, a 24-year-old Ottawa native, is currently squirrelled away at an unknown location, working on Buncha Stories number six, and a magazine of other people's stories and comics called Your Shit.

For Your Shit, Kerr challenges people who keep saying they are going to contribute material to: "Get off their ass and do it." Kerr once attended Sheridan College near Toronto, which he describes as a "workhorse college," but says he dreams of attending the Ontario College of Art in Toronto someday, for its more "open" policies regarding the arts. I spoke to Greg at a downtown pub two weeks ago. He looks exactly the way he draws himself.

McLennan: So why do you do what you do?

Kerr: It's a learning process of me, I figure. I'm kind of in the minor leagues and I want to be a cartoonist, a cartoon artist, and I figure this is the best way to learn the medium. To find out if there's any, you know, market for my work. To find out if people like it and to help bolster things around here. Ottawa is a dull town and things need to be shoved in people's faces. That's why I do it.

McLennan: How has your response been so far?

Kerr: Fairly good—yeah, it's got pockets. I pick up here for a month and there for another month. I sell in Toronto and I get a good response from there; people seem to know what's going on. In Ottawa, no one else is doing this. No one's used to it. . . .

McLennan: So far you've had five issues right?

Kerr: Yeah.

McLennan: How long have you been putting these things out?

Kerr: The first one came out in time for June, last June or May. Yeah, so the beginning of June '93 was the first one I did. And those were cartoons that I spent a while drawing. Then in the spring I put out 10 copies of the first, sort of like pilot issue Number 1. Then I put it out again. That was the big response, when I did the photocopying—did a big circulation. So, since June McLennan: Where did you get the idea to put out your comic book?

Kerr: Oh, I wanted to do comics, and the way the comic industry is run, it feeds itself, and it's very closed in. What it takes is, you have to work and only be able to do comics, and that's all you can do, and no one can afford to do that, you know? So I decided I'd do 12 pages a month, and see how well I could get them done, get myself into a routine. I'll do this for a year, and then at the end of the year, I'll reflect. See what I've got, and then start approaching some comic companies with my portfolio. I wanted to see if I could draw 12 pages that were a story. I wanted to see how my stories could develop so I took it upon myself. The first issue, I didn't know what I was going to do. I thought I'd sell (it) in comic stores, and then I found out that there's no way. I'd need a distributor to sell in comic stores and they're really uptight about that. So I decided I may as well treat it as a fanzine, and sell it at record shops, and the response from the record shops has been fantastic. I couldn't ask for anything more from them.

Lennan: How long have you been drawing and writing comics?

Kerr: I've always drawn and I've always drawn comics. I've always told stories. I'd never written stories, and it took five years of drawing comics to put the two ideas together and make my stories into comics. I was just a storyteller before I'd drink beer and tell people things and make up jokes, and then I decided to put the two together.

We always told stories.

Kerr: Yeah, they're weird, but this kind of stuff, everybody understands what it is. It exists in everybody's frame of mind, so it's not that weird.

McLennan: So are most of your stories from your own experience, or completely made up?

There's two kinds of stories that I do. One where I write with things and make it up completely. Then there's another, where I tell an autobiographical story.

I tell the story, from my own experience, I change it around. I add parts. But I manipulate the parts so they fit together. So like, with Number 4, I did a 12-page story and I wanted it to drag on, so I'd add little jokes, I'd introduce new characters, I tried to make it concise. So it didn't read chronologically the same way, but it's in a nutshell. That happened, you know?

What happened.

McLennan: To use a word you used, "crude," you use a lot of crude images in your comics. Obviously you have no problem writing or drawing these things.

McLennan: One of the things that initially impressed me about Buncha Stories is that the stories are well-told and they are neat little drawings. They're fuckin' weird, but they are good stories.

Kerr: No, like when I do an autobiographical story. . . . You take on a martyr-light. You don't want to portray yourself in a bad light when you're telling an autobiographical story. So in a lot of other stories I put myself in a bad light. I draw myself with my penis, just to show people that I'm not afraid of that sort of thing. Just to show people that I'm not perfect.

Like, you know, a lot of comics in the underground world, in the alternative comics, the artist is telling a story and they're boring and nothing is happening to the guy, and you're saying "What is he bothering to do all this stuff for? It's boring." And he's portraying himself as a martyr. Y'know, I don't believe that. So I draw crude comics and crude things happen to me and I'm not afraid to show any liabilities that people have.

crude things happen to me.

McLennan: So what have you been influenced by in your drawing, writing and comic taste?

Kerr: All the upper end of the alternative comics. Things out of Fanographic Books, and Drawn and Quarterly especially is a company out of Montreal that does lots of autobiographical comics. Robert Crumb is fabulous. He's the one that the storytelling comes from. You read his stuff and it's literature. He's illustrated some Charles Bukowski things.

It's just, you know, one day I realized what I was reading in comics. I've always been an artist. I've always been a cartoon artist, so it was just a matter of looking at what people have done and knowing that I could do it myself. So a lot of Crumb, a lot of Peter Beck, a guy called Seth from Toronto, Chester Brown who's a bit stark, and then of course there's the whole line world. There are a lot of zines out of Toronto, and out of Vancouver that I get my hands on, and I found one called HAOS Comics out of Victoria. It's the same thing, eight-and-a-half-by-11 color cover, photocopied, 12 pages. It was really crude, terrible drawings, terrible jokes but they were fun. I just caught on, so I based what I'm doing, my format, from what I saw in this guy's comic. That's where I came from.

Robert Crumb is fabulous. Of course the whole zine world.

McLennan: Do you worry about people looking at Buncha Stories, especially in Ottawa and saying: "Oh, this is crude. Oh, this is sick — he shouldn't be doing this?"

The only people who have problems seeing penises in comic books are 17-year-old kids. It's their fault. It's up to them to grow up.

Kerr: Oh, absolutely. This town is pretty conservative, pretty uptight. "Anal" is the best word. A couple of my comics are illegal by most standards. When I put it out, I worry about it a bit. There are a few things that I've done that are really risqué, but at the same time, I've seen worse. I put it out, someone's got to put it out. Censorship exists on all levels and it's just a way to fight it. It's an analogy, but the people who know about (Buncha Stories) are the sort of people who aren't uptight about it. The only people who have problems seeing penises in comic books are 17-year-old kids, and they're just showing their own insecurities about things, y'know — it's their fault. It's up to them to grow. It's not up to me.

If you look at my comic book, it's got wit to it. It's sarcastic, it's got intelligence behind it. There's nothing that puts it in a pornographic state of mind. There's nothing about it that would entice anyone, that would warp anyone's state of mind. It's not propaganda of any kind. It's just satire. It's nice to be enigmatic, not famous, but still known, you know? Still touted in circles. If this gets out in the limelight, I might be out for some real big battles, I don't know, but I'm not worried about it.

LETTERS

the CHARLATAN
CARLETON'S INDEPENDENT STUDENT NEWSPAPER

November 11, 1993
VOLUME 23 NUMBER 13

Editor-in-Chief Mo Gannon
Production Manager Kevin McKay
Business Manager Jill Perry

NEWS
Editors Mario Carlucci
Karin Jordan
Contributors Jodi Batori
Prema Oza
Clayton Wood
Volunteer Co-ordinator Joanne Ciszewski

NATIONAL AFFAIRS
Editor Arn Keeling
Contributors Michael Kearns
Sara-Lynne Levine
Anthony Pangalos
Brandie Welkie
Jill Mahoney
Karolina Strutek

FEATURES
Editor Andrea Smith
Contributor Rob McLennan

SPORTS
Editor Steven Vesely
Contributors Elizabeth Clark
Suzanne Izzard
Muriel Perry
Jay Tharayil
Bill Labonte
Richard Scott

ARTS
Editor Blayne Haggart
Contributors Joanne Ciszewski
M.G. Comino
Sussana Forieri
Ali Jafri
Greg Owens
Andrea Smith
Vanessa Crosbie
Susie Haley
Dave Manor
Andrew Smales

OP/ED
Editor Sheila Keenan
Contributors Michael Dufresne
Anthony Pangalos

VISUALS
Photo Editor Tim O'Connor
Photo Assistant Andre Bellefeuille
Contributors Joanne Capuani
Bill Cooper
Amanda Follett
Max Fishman
Dean Tomlinson

Graphics Co-ordinators David Hodges
Mike Rappaport
Graphics Assistant Joel Kenneth Grant
Contributors Sarah Abernethy
Greg Kerr

Cover Andre Bellefeuille

The Charlantan's photos are produced using the Carleton University Students' Association Photo Service

PRODUCTION
Production Assistant Kim Alf

Contributors Peter Nogalo
Audrey Simtob
Caron Watt
John Steinbachs
Tanya Workman

CIRCULATION 14,000
Circulation Dave Carpenter
Joellen Walshe

ADVERTISING 788-3580
Ad Manager Karen Richardson

The Charlantan, Carleton University's weekly newsmagazine, is an editorially and financially autonomous journal, published weekly during the fall and winter term and monthly during the summer.

Charlantan Publications Incorporated, Ottawa, Ontario, a non-profit corporation registered under the Canadian Corporations Act, is the publisher of The Charlantan. Editorial content is the sole responsibility of editorial staff members, but may not reflect the beliefs of its members.

Contents are copyright © 1991. Nothing may be duplicated in any way without the prior written permission of the Editor-in-Chief. All Rights Reserved. ISSN 0315-1859

Subscriptions are available at a cost of $40 for individuals and $52 for institutions including GST

National advertising for The Charlantan is handled through Canadian University Press Media Services (Campus Plus), 73 Richmond St. W., 4th Floor, Toronto, Ontario, M5H 1Z4; phone: (416) 481-7282

Members of the board: Ken Drever, Mo Gannon, Ann Gibbons, David Hodges, Fouad Kanaan, Warren Kinsella, Mark Lafreniere, Yvonne Potter

The Charlantan Room 531 Unkentre Carleton University
Ottawa, Ontario. R1S 5B6 Telephone: (613) 788-6680

Course content must change now

Editor: Re: "Courses have non-Western content," The Charlantan, Nov. 4, 1993.

Professor Pammatt disagrees with my comments regarding curriculum perpetuating racism and wants systematic evidence of this.

The courses listed in his letter do not include any required courses for the pass program in political science.

In the two required courses for the political science pass degree, not one of them is of a "non-European, non-North American category."

47.100 is an introductory course which introduces the discipline of political science through the study of Western philosophers such as Plato, Aristotle, etc. . . .

47.230 is a study of Western political thought.

A student in the political science pass program can graduate without studying any of the courses that were listed by Professor Pammatt. This is systemic evidence of how the curriculum in political science does not reflect the people it serves and thus perpetuates racism.

There are more examples of this in political science:

47.260 is International Politics. When I took this course, the international component was limited to Europe and Latin America.

47.365 is a course in Comparative Foreign Policy. However, the course only allows for comparison between European and North American foreign policies.

Unfortunately, political science is only one example of systemic problems. It is a university-wide problem that needs to be dealt with in order to be responsive to the needs of students. The need for curriculum transformation is necessary now more than ever.

S. Gary Anandasangaree
Political Science III

Just sit in your CUSA tower

Editor: I hate to say I told you so, but . . . Last winter, I ran a campaign for a position on the board of governors in which I attempted to, without success, convince the voter that anyone who runs for and obtains a paid CUSA position should be held responsible for that position and that position alone.

In other words, if my CUSA dollars are paying you to sit in your CUSA ivory tower you should sit there and there alone. This is not to say that Lucy Watson is not doing an exemplary job as CUSA president because she probably is, but the fact that she is missing board of governors meetings says a lot.

In my opinion, Lucy merely took advantage of a loophole in our electoral code which should not exist, by running for more than one position for a) more poster space and b) to pad her resumé at the expense of Carleton students.

How many more years can we expect to suffer the injustice of misrepresentation at the hands of those who manipulate an electoral code in dire need of amendments? In the meantime, I call for Lucy to free herself of the embarrassment and controversy of the board of governors with an official resignation of her post as student governor, followed by a sincere apology to the students so that she may finish her term as CUSA president, without any further stress or burden.

Trevor Lewis
Law IV

Everyone's a critic (even engineers)

Editor: Re: "Carleton's corporate campus," The Charlantan, Nov. 11, 1993.

I want to address Song Cho's statement that "Our world doesn't need more engineers and scientists. We need more critical and creative thinkers."

Cho implies, perhaps inadvertently, that engineers and scientists are neither critical nor creative in their thinking. I believe this to be untrue.

History is filled with engineers and scientists who have come up with creative ideas and novel solutions to difficult problems. Furthermore, engineers and scientists are encouraged to be critical in their thinking and design processes, so as to avoid mistakes and oversights as much as possible.

We DO need more critical and creative thinkers in this world, including engineers, scientists and people from other disciplines. It is disheartening to see such a misleading statement, especially from a future journalist or communicator.

Kevin Black
Master of Engineering I

Doing our bestest

Editor: I must take issue with the following ill-worded headlines which appeared in the Nov. 11 sports section:

"Fatigue a factor in basketball men losses," and "Season over, but Ravens did good," fall well below the standard one might expect to emanate from a communication-based institution. I think you can do "gooder."

Stephen Schroeder
English I

Not die-hard fans

Editor: Re: "Discography, Pet Shop Boys, Very," The Charlantan, Nov. 4, 1993.

Brenda Kennedy
Anthropology IV

Blayne Haggart is one ignorant fool who doesn't know what he is talking about. If the Pet Shop Boys are an eighties' thing, then explain the fact that in 1990 and 1991 they had two hits that reached Number 4, "So Hard" and "Where the Streets Have No Name" and two others in the Top 25 of the U.K. charts.

The Pet Shop Boys' success in the early nineties should show any half-decent record critic that their new sound will become popular in Canada and the U.S. within a short period of time.

We cannot say that we are die-hard Pet Shop Boys' fans. We like their music and own some of their albums and found that Very is one of their best so far.

It seems like the critic is living in the past. Wake up and smell the nineties. You must remember that most groups never change sounds or style. In the Pet Shop Boys' new music you can feel and hear the effect of eight years of playing. The Pet Shop Boys made an impression in the eighties and are new and improved for the nineties. Live with it.

Bill Pinchak
Science I
A.T. McJannett
Business I

Wall of whiteness needs diversity

Editor:

After passing the Alumni Wall of Fame in Baker Lounge countless times and noticing little else besides it being a sea of whiteness, I have had enough. At first, when there were a meagre five photographs, it was annoying that all of them were white — at least two were women, I told myself. However, when a couple of weeks ago seven more made their way up, I was honestly surprised — all white men!

This is insulting and offensive. I hardly think that of the thousands of people who have graduated from Carleton over the last 50 years there are no people of color and hardly any women who have made meaningful contributions to society.

Further, some of the people are questionable choices. Does Conrad Black represent an ideal for Carleton students to aspire to? I hope not!

Representations being limited to business people, academics, a doctor, a politician, a journalist and a member of the armed forces is also disturbing. Where are the non-professionals, the activists and the artists? These would be more realistic and I dare say better role models.

I think it is high time for all thinking students to sit down and write a letter to alumni relations telling them what we think of this Alumni Wall of Fame — it is racist, sexist, elitist and unrealistic.

WHERE CAN YOU AND YOUR DATE EAT A GREAT DINNER... FOR LESS THAN $20!!!

NOV. - DEC. COUPON
Full Course Dinner only .99¢ (max. value $13.50)
order any full course dinner at reg. price & receive a second dinner of equal or lesser value for 99¢
Not valid with any other offer. P.S.T. & G.S.T. extra (coupon expires Dec. 15, 1993)

2446 Bank at Hunt club (Towngate Plaza) 736-6677
Reservations & Banquet Facilities Available

THE NOODLE WORKS
Ottawa South's Finest Sunday Brunch 10:30-2:30
FULL COURSE DINNER - Soup or Salad, Fresh Baked San Francisco Sourdough Bread, Entree Selection, Spumoni Ice Cream, Coffee or Tea

HOMEMADE PASTA DISHES • VEAL • CHICKEN & MORE

JANUARY COUPON
Full Course Dinner only .99¢ (max. value $13.50)
order any full course dinner at reg. price & receive a second dinner of equal or lesser value for 99¢
Not valid with any other offer. P.S.T. & G.S.T. extra (coupon valid from Jan. 1 - 30, 1994)

SPORTS

Polo women power to second Ravens' season begins on a winning note

Long and hard Raven practices through out the fall were rewarded.

by Suzanne Izzard
Charlatan Staff

The Ravens women's water polo team finished second on Nov. 13-14 in their season-opening league crossover tournament at McMaster University.

The Ravens trounced the McMaster Marauders 15-3, beat the Queen's Golden Gaels 7-6, defeated the Brock Badgers 13-1 and only lost a close 4-3 match to the University of Toronto Blues with seconds remaining.

Carleton 15 McMaster 3
Carleton 7 Queen's 6
Toronto 4 Carleton 3
Carleton 13 Brock 1

After a rather easy win over McMaster, Carleton had to play hard to defeat Queen's. The Gaels are last year's Ontario Women's Interuniversity Athletic Association champs.

"I think the whole team took Queen's a little lightly because we beat them at our invitational," said Ravens coach Steve Baird, "but we played back."

Ravens' goaltender Tanya Pierunek agreed there was a danger in not taking the other teams seriously, especially Queen's.

"You can't ever shrug off a team, even when you think you've got them beat," said Pierunek.

Carleton persevered despite losing top rookie Marianne Illing in the second quarter, when she was called out on a disrespectful conduct for retaliating against an aggressive Queen's player.

"We did well after that because we were able to stay together," said team veteran Anne Stacey. "If we had fallen apart after Marianne was thrown out it would have been bad, but after losing our best player we still won. It was encouraging."

Illing returned for the next match against Toronto but she broke a finger trying to catch a pass late in the game.

The Toronto match was the toughest of the week largely because the Blues have a strong cast of returning players. Few of the team's members graduated last year, said Raven coach Steve Baird.

"They're even better this year because now they've got one of McMaster's former veteran players," said Baird.

The Toronto goalkeeper was another obstacle.

"We still have to learn to score on her. We need to shoot on her with more confidence," said Baird.

There was less than a minute remaining when they scored the winner.

Despite the loss, the Ravens are optimistic. The club is a force this year, even though almost half of the 23-member team are rookies.

"We've got two teams this year to choose from," says Pam Stewart, a fourth-year veteran, "and some of the rookies are amazing. They work really hard."

Leading the Ravens' attack were: Illing with eight goals in three games, Stacey with 10 goals and six steals in four games, Jennifer Hampton with four goals and 14 steals and rookie Natalie Deveaux with five goals in three games.

The next league tournament will be in mid-January at McMaster University, followed by the championships in February. The Carleton Ravens have finished among the top three in the league for the past four years. □

RANT 'N' RAVEN

Gold possible for Polo men

by Richard G.D. Scott
Charlatan Staff

And now for the real stuff.

The regular season for the men's water polo team is over and this weekend, the Carleton Ravens will be one of four teams playing in the Ontario Universities Athletic Association water polo playoffs.

The Ravens are coming off one of their best seasons in years and are a serious contender for the gold medal.

Carleton is last year's defending bronze-medal champion and the team has been one of the league's most pleasant surprises. After losing their season-opener in an 11-5 upset loss to Queen's, the Ravens rebounded and posted a 7-4-1 record. That was good enough for third place in the OUAA behind the universities of Toronto and Western Ontario.

More impressive has been their defensive teamwork.

In the high-scoring game of water polo, the Ravens have allowed an average of only seven goals per game, which is second lowest in the league behind Toronto.

As one of the strongest teams defensively, the Ravens are a hard team to beat.

The Ravens will face the Western Mustangs in the semi-finals. Although the Ravens lost their last regular-season game 13-8 to Western, Carleton did beat the Mustangs 5-4 earlier in the season. The Ravens also beat Western 9-8 in last season's consolation finals to win the bronze medal.

The Ravens finished one point behind the Mustangs in 1993, but they're statistically a better team this year and they've set their sights beyond a bronze-medal finish. Last year, the team finished 6-5-1 and in fourth place.

The Ravens say they are confident they can win. They are one of the best teams at checking the opposition and they also have one of the best benches in the league.

The Mustangs, however, are probably a little cocky after their 13-8 victory. They won't be expecting a tough battle. But let's not forget the Ravens played their second-line bench for most of that last game.

And if the Ravens beat Western, their next match-up will be against the 12-0 Toronto Blues, provided the fourth-place McMaster Marauders don't upset the favored Blues. Toronto has finished first in the OUAA for two consecutive seasons.

If the Ravens advance this far, they will truly be underdogs geared for an upset victory over the Blues. Win or lose, the championship game will guarantee them at least a silver medal. Toronto, on the other hand, could have its perfect season go down the drain with an upset loss.

Toronto's a good team, but it can be forced into making mistakes. Although the Ravens lost both games to Toronto 8-4 and 10-5 earlier in the season, they have been the Blues' toughest competition.

But that was the regular season. This is the playoffs.

Now it's time for the real stuff. □

Raven swimmers progress at Sherbrooke Kotler qualifies for nationals in 200-metre breast-stroke

by Steven Vesely
Charlatan Staff

The Carleton women's and men's swim teams placed eighth and ninth respectively in the nine-team Sherbrooke swim meet on Nov. 13.

Raven swimmer Erica Kotler posted Carleton's best result with a second-place finish in the 200-metre breast-stroke.

Kotler's time of 2:45:59 also qualified her for the Canadian Interuniversity Athletic Union national finals to be held in Victoria, B.C., in March.

Also posting good results was women's swimmer Sarah Dobbin, who placed seventh in both the 50- and 100-metre breast-stroke with personal-best times of 37:28 and 1:29:79.

"I felt so great that I placed because I worked so hard for it," said Dobbin.

The rest of the 10-woman team finished with middle-of-the-road results. "I was quite pleased with them," said women's coach Jitka Kotler. "We had almost the whole team together and about 75 per cent of them swam their personal-best times. I could see that the

Swim Meet Primer

Individual events are awarded points by order of finish and these points are crucial for a team's overall chance of winning the meet.

At invitational swim events, such as the Sherbrooke meet, points are awarded from first to eighth in descending order of 20, 17, 16, 15, 14, 13, 12 and 11.

Finishes from ninth to 16th also receive points.

Men and women compete and score individually in a host of events. Swimmers are normally limited to competing in four or five individual events and two relays.

These include: 50-, 100-, 200-, 400-, 500- and 1,500-metre freestyle, 50, 100 and 200 breast-stroke, back-stroke and butterfly, as well as the 100- and 200-metre individual medley. □ workouts are actually good for something. They are progressing nicely."

On the men's side, Peter Andersen notched the best result with a 13th-place finish in the 100-metre back-stroke in a time of 1:03:34.

"As a group there were no major mistakes, but we'll be better prepared in January," said men's coach Brian Johnson.

Overall, the low-place finishes were not a major concern.

"We were just working towards a higher fitness level," said Andersen. "There were so many events where we were swimming really hard from one race to another and going 100 to 110 per cent in every race."

Besides being a training event for the Raven team, the Sherbrooke meet in particular was a good contest with many top swimmers competing, like Olympians Guillaume Cloutier from the University of Montreal and Patricia Noel from McGill.

"It's helpful for our swimmers," said Kotler. "For slower swimmers, they can see how they should be racing, and for faster swimmers, they have people to compete against."

The swim team travels to Potsdam, N.Y., for another meet Nov. 19-20. □

Raven Records

OCAA WATERPOLO East Division

	W	L	T	F	A	PTS
Toronto	12	0	0	158	64	24
Western	8	4	0	148	102	16
Carleton	7	4	1	105	84	15
McMaster	7	4	1	133	88	15
Queen's	5	7	0	83	121	10
Ottawa	2	10	0	91	155	4
York	0	12	0	70	174	0

OWIAA WATERPOLO East Division

	W	L	T	F	A	PTS
Toronto	4	0	0	40	13	8
Carleton	3	1	0	38	14	6
Queen's	2	2	0	32	21	4
McMaster	1	3	0	24	43	2
Brock	0	4	0	13	56	0

OWIAA VOLLEYBALL East Division

	W	L	T	F	A	PTS
Ottawa	2	0	0	6	1	4
Toronto	1	0	0	3	0	2
York	1	0	0	3	0	2
Queen's	1	1	0	4	4	2
Carleton	0	2	0	1	0	0
Ryerson	0	1	0	0	3	0

CIAU FOOTBALL Bowl Finals Nov. 14.

Atlantic Bowl
Calgary 37 St. Mary's 23

Receiver James Buchanan broke open a close 23-22 game with a 75-yard TD run on a punt return to power the Calgary Dinosaurs past the Huskies to their fifth Vanier Cup.

Churchill Bowl
Toronto 26 Concordia 16

The U of T Blues led by game MVP quarterback Mario Sturino racked up 590 yards net offence en route to a 26-16 victory over the Stingers.

CIAU SOCCER Men's Finals Nov. 13-14.

Gold Medal Game
Sherbrooke 2 UBC 1

The Sherbrooke Vert et Or ended the UBC Thunderbirds four-year reign as the men's soccer champions with a 2-1 win in the final. Andre Sylvain scored on the fourth penalty kick for the win.

The Western Mustangs defeated the Queen's Golden Gaels 2-0 in the Bronze medal game.

Women's Finals Nov. 13-14.

Gold Medal Game
UBC 2 Dalhousie 1

Goalkeeper Kathy Sutton scored the winner in a shootout to lead the UBC Thunderbirds to victory over the Dalhousie Tigers in the finals.

Regulation time and two 15-minute overtime periods ended in a 1-1 tie.

The teams scored six goals each from their first 10 shots in the shootout, forcing the goalkeepers to shoot.

The Sir Wilfrid Laurier Golden Hawks defeated the McGill Redmen 2-1 in the bronze medal match.

Tournament a learning experience

by Steven Vesely
Charlatan Staff

The Carleton women's volleyball team finished last among eight teams at the Winnipeg Invitational Nov. 12-14.

Playing against some of the top-ranked teams in the country, the Raven squad, composed of 6 rookies and 2 veterans, failed to win a set.

In pool action, Carleton lost 3-0 (15-1,

Winnipeg 3 Carleton 0
Concordia 3 Carleton 0
Sask. 3 Carleton 0
Toronto 3 Carleton 0
Regina 3 Carleton 0

15-8, 15-5) to the Winnipeg Wesmen, 3-0 (15-5, 15-5, 15-5) to the Concordia Stingers and 3-0 (15-11, 15-12, 15-5) to the Saskatchewan Huskies.

In consolation finals, the University of Toronto defeated Carleton 3-0 (15-3, 15-0, 15-9) and the University of Regina beat the Ravens 3-0 (15-8, 15-10, 15-8).

Despite the losses, the tournament was a learning experience.

"It was definitely good to go. Even though we didn't win a set or a match, it was still a good experience because a lot of the girls are in their first year and they need to see what's out there. Hopefully, it gave them a good impression. If they want to play university volleyball at this level, it gives them something to look at."

The Ravens were outclassed by the competition, said Biasone, but they did show improvement.

"It was really nice to see the girls not giving up. They showed character," said Biasone. "It would have been easy to give up after playing all those good teams. But they didn't do that. I was impressed they didn't quit, but got better as they went along."

A lack of confidence was another worry.

"With first-year players, your confidence can really take a beating at a tournament like this when you keep getting shelled," said Biasone.

The Ravens remained upbeat, particularly against the Huskies, who had to work hard for two set victories.

"The bottom line is our skills are not up to the level of the skill of other teams out there," said Biasone. □

Basketball women net pair of wins

by Jay Tharayil
Charlatan Staff

The Carleton Ravens women's basketball team played the role of inhospitable host at its annual Carleton Invitational Basketball Tournament.

At the Raven's Nest, Carleton defeated the Bishop's Gaiters 47-46 in an overtime thriller Nov. 14, as well as humbling the Sir Wilfrid Laurier Golden Hawks 58-31 on Nov. 13.

Carleton 47 Bishop's 46
Carleton 58 Laurier 31

Against Bishop's, the game was forced into overtime when Raven forward Sara Smith tied it at 43, calmly sinking two free throws with two seconds left in regulation.

Overtime was a defensive battle. With Carleton leading 47-45, Bishop's missed an opportunity to send the game into double overtime, when centre Jackie Frost converted only one of two free throws after being fouled with no time left.

O'Grady was the top scorer for Carle-

BILL COOPER

Ravens' defence prevailed in overtime.

ton with 10 points while Janet Bernard led Bishop's with 11.

Momentum shifted throughout the game. The Ravens controlled play early, leading 17-5 at one point in the first half. But Bishop's fought back and midway through the second half, the Ravens trailed by eight points.

Raven coach Marg Jones said her team was able to battle back in the second half on the strength of their defence.

"If you play tough defence it will get you back into any game, and we had turned to our defence in order to (come back)," said Jones.

Defence also shined as the Ravens pummeled the Golden Hawks 58-31 earlier in the weekend. The Ravens dominated throughout, forcing turnovers, blocking shots and out-rebounding Wilfrid Laurier 40-22. The Ravens surrendered only 13 first-half points and no Laurier player had more than one field goal in the first half.

The top scorer for Carleton was Helen Collins, who scored 14 points and grabbed 7 rebounds.

For her play, Collins and Raven forward Heather McAlpine were selected to the tournament all-star team.

Although pleased with the team's play, Jones said her team still has much to work on before the season starts.

"We still have a long way to go in terms of the execution of our systems," said Jones. "Our defence is getting better, but our offence has a long way to go. So we have a lot of work to do in terms of executing on the floor." □

AVAILABLE AT: NEON, BYWARD MARKET

Raven Rumblings

QUOTE OF THE WEEK

"It's helpful for our swimmers. For slower swimmers, they can see how they should be racing and for faster swimmers, they have people to compete against."

Women's swim coach Jitka Kotler on the high-calibre, Olympian competition at the Sherbrooke swim meet.

BRIEFS

In exhibition basketball, the Carleton men's basketball team dropped a pair of games at the recent Pinky Lewis Tournament at McMaster University in Hamilton. The Ravens lost 77-48 to the McMaster Marauders on Nov. 12. Taffe Charles led the Ravens with 15 points. Then on Nov. 13, the Ravens lost 73-55 to the St. Francis Xavier X-Men, with Charles netting 25 points.

Friday, Nov. 19.

BASKETBALL — Carleton hosts the Norm Fenn High School Invitational Basketball Tournament. High-school teams from across Ottawa will play Friday and Saturday evening in the Ravens' Nest gym.

SWIMMING — The men's and women's swim teams travel to Postdam, N.Y., to participate in another swim meet.

VOLLEYBALL — The women's volleyball team travels to Toronto this weekend for three road games against the universities of Ryerson, York and Toronto. The Ravens take on Ryerson tonight at 8 p.m.

FENCING — The men's and women's fencing teams will participate in the Brock Open in St. Catherines, Ont.

Saturday, Nov. 20.

BASKETBALL — The men's team takes on Laval University in action at the Ravens' Nest at 3:30 p.m.

VOLLEYBALL — The women's team takes on York University in Toronto at noon.

WATERPOLO — The men's waterpolo team is in Hamilton looking to improve on last year's bronze-medal performance at the OUA waterpolo championships. The Ravens take on the Western Mustangs in semi-final action at McMaster.

Sunday, Nov. 21.

BASKETBALL — The men's basketball team plays Humber College at 2 p.m. in the Ravens' Nest gym.

VOLLEYBALL — The women's volleyball team finishes its road trip in Toronto with a 1 p.m. match against the University of Toronto Blues. □

Hockey blues hit Carleton club

by Bill Labonte
Charlatan Staff

After five years of relatively quiet success, Carleton hockey is in trouble.

A lack of funding and student interest, as well as a weaker team, have caused Carleton's hockey club to question students' commitment to hockey.

Revived in 1988 as a club team by the a group of the team's alumni called the Bald Raven Society, the Carleton hockey club now plays in the senior R.A. League throughout the winter and also hosts several exhibition matches against other universities and colleges.

The Bald Raven Society's goal is to bring back varsity hockey to Carleton. Men's hockey was dumped as a varsity sport in 1975 in order to save money.

While the University of Ottawa Gee-Gees hockey club is well-funded by its athletic department and manages to draw over 200 paid fans to most of its home games, Carleton games are fortunate to drag out 20 people, and that's including a Charlatan reporter.

This lack of support is caused, in part, by hockey players at the university level who don't take advantage of the opportunity to play for a university team, says Paul Correy, general manager of Carleton's hockey club and a Bald Raven.

"The Bald Ravens challenge all hockey players who believe they have what it takes to play competitive hockey, to try out for the team," says Correy.

Many talented players decline that offer because of the financial involvement as well as the time commitment.

"After finding out there were no freebies, like free sticks and equipment, and that a small fee ($150 a season) had to be paid for ice time, games and practices, some guys were just never heard from again," says Correy.

"It's expensive to play hockey," says assistant captain Jeff McKenna. "Sticks and tape are the biggest thing, but on top of that we have to provide all our own equipment, transportation and gas money when we carpool."

Dany Vajcovec is one such hockey player who didn't commit to the program

"I would have loved to play but the schedule and limited ice time was the biggest factor. The team only plays for an hour and they have three full lines and eight defencemen. It's not worth playing for just three or four shifts a game," says the 22-year-old special student at Carleton. "The level of hockey just isn't there. The team lacks experience and it doesn't have varsity status."

Playing in the six-team Senior R.A. League, Carleton posted its best-ever finish last year with a 10-7-3 record before bowing out in the playoffs.

Who:
Hockey Club

What:
Actively Recruiting

Games:
Every Wednesday night at the R.A.
Centre

Practices:
Monday from 1-3:30
at the R.A. Centre

Coach:
George Brown
Tel - 564-1297

Only a handful of players remain from that year's club. And it shows in the standings. This year's 0-4-2 team is mostly made up of rookie die-hards who play for love of the game. But that doesn't help increase awareness and support.

"There's an obvious lack of talent," says the veteran McKenna. "Last year's team was very good and losing the grads really hurt us. This season's team definitely has more heart though. And the experience will come."

Although the club is winless in league play, the team has played better in exhibition matches, defeating New York's Canton College 7-6 and Brockville's St. Lawrence College 6-4. □

Charlatan Hockey Pool

Here are the point leaders in the Charlatan Hockey Pool.
Points were tabulated as of Tue. Nov. 16, 1993.

BAXTER'S

1344 Bank Street
(at Riverside)
738-3323

R. De Vecchi can pick up his $25 dinner certificate for Baxter's restaurant at The Charlatan... So can Daragh Slowey who won two weeks ago.

1	R. De Vecchi	208
2	Patrick Soden	207
3	P. Vanderwuyt	207
4	Ron Wells	207
5	Edwin Chock	207
6	Jayson Luiz	206
7	Tom Jencz	206
8	P. Blair Ellis	206
9	Joseph Kurikose	202
10	Alex Varki	202

Charlatan Sports Trivia

Answer the following question correctly and become eligible to win a $25 dinner for two at Schadillac's Saloon.

Name the last member of the Montreal Canadiens to lead the NHL in penalty minutes.

Answer:

Name:

Phone:

1. Place your answer, name and phone number on a piece of paper and submit it to The Charlatan sports editor, room 531 Unicentre. The recipient of the prize will be determined by a supervised draw of all correct answers.

2. All answers must be received by Tuesday, Nov. 23, 1993. The winner will be contacted by phone, by the sports editor of the Charlatan.

3. Contestants may submit only one entry per week.

4. Charlatan staff members and their families are not eligible to participate.

Congratulations to Jeff Coates who knew that Clint Benedict invented the goalie mask and Jacques Plante was the first to wear it in a game.

We goofed last week. Dexter Manley played for the Tampa Bay Buccaneers before coming to Ottawa. Sorry.

COMING SOON!

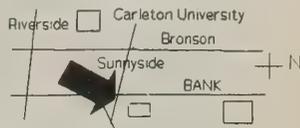

UNDER NEW MANAGEMENT
(NOV. 27)

GET OFF THE BENCH
AND INTO THE BARI

Take time out from the books & make the move to the SUNNYSIDE SPORTS BARI! Great hang out for any university club, team or society! We will have daily bar specials and our kitchen will be open for munchies!

We are easy to find!

1077 BANK
(corner of Sunnyside & Bank)

telephone # 730-5748

Hurley's
SPORTS
COLOSSEUM
- Saturday Nov 20 -
First Year Anniversary Party
- Saturday Nov 27 -
La Senza Lingerie Fashion Show
Don't forget! FREE shuttle bus for all
Senators' home games
1500 Bank St., Blue Heron Mall, 526-2685

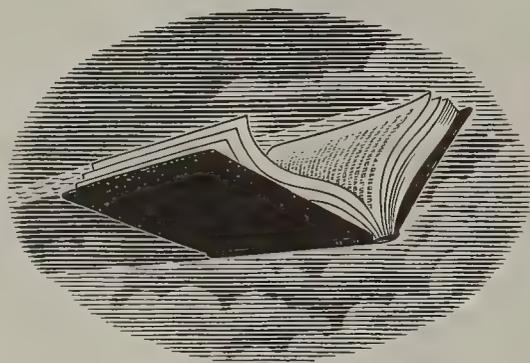

Hurley's
"Friendly & Affordable"
73 York Street on the Market
15 Robertson Road in Bell's Corners
2655 Queensview Drive off Pinecrest
THE ROOFTOP
Fridays & Saturdays
$2.50 Subsidized BEVERAGES $2.50
73 York Street, Byward Market, 230-9347

DENIM & DIAMONDS
SALOON
FALL JAM '93
THURS 16, SAT, NOV 18-20
Mc'd by CKBY's Brent Corbeil with LIVE performances
Ambush & Gail Gavan
Dennis Whitty & Blackwell
Denim & Diamonds Dancers
Queensway at St-Laurent exit, 748-7454

THANK BUD, IT'S FRIDAY
Bud City
T.B.I.F
Join the Party Every Friday with Energy 1200's Robert W. Knight
Meet your friends at Bud's Rooftop
Great Drinks & Appetizers Happy Hour!
THANK BUD, IT'S FRIDAY
1440 Mervale Road at Baseline, 224-3938

RESTAURANT BAR & HOTEL
STAFF
Are YOU working New Year's Eve?
Our 2nd Annual anticipated PRE New Year's Eve Party is coming up in December. Watch your student newspaper for our contest.
UNBELIEVABLE BASH !!!
PRE
NEW YEAR'S EVE

STAND-BY FOR TAKE-OFF.

At Canadian Airlines, we understand how difficult it is for students nowadays to make ends meet.

That's why we're offering a year-round student stand-by fare at 65% off the regular economy fare anywhere that Canadian flies.

So, if you thought a flight home or a chance to get away was beyond your budget, then think again.

For more information, call your travel agent or Canadian Airlines and simply stand-by.

Canadian

Canadian is a registered trademark of Canadian Airlines International Ltd. Fares available on a one-way or return basis. Fares applicable for students between the ages of 12 and 24. Proof of age is required. Travel is on a stand-by basis only.

DENTAL OFFICE DR. PAUL GREENACRE & ASSOCIATES

Convenient Location
Emergency Care
Flexible Hours
Gum Problems
Wisdom Teeth
Fillings
Braces

WE CATER TO COWARDS!

Fisher Heights Plaza 225-3564
780 Baseline Road at Fisher Ave
(Beside The Lone Star Cafe)

CLIP THIS FREE TICKET

TOPAZ
ENTERTAINMENT
PALACE

Wednesday November
24th

54Rock presents
Straight & Wicked

Rockwear
a fashion show featuring:

54Rockwear, Flash Cadillac,
Marks Work Warehouse

Thursday

Ottawa's own Piano Man

Dave Kalil
entertains

Friday & Saturday night
Sound Storm

Topaz Entertainment Palace

Ottawa's Awesome Night Spot

Tues. - 2 first run movies FREE

Wed. - 54 ROCK(S)

Fabulous sound & light shows

Hot Dance Floor

Mon. - pool tournaments

TOPAZ ENTERTAINMENT PALACE,
2335 ST. LAURENT BLVD. 793-7100

Kickin' Celtic and no crowd surfing

by Blayne Haggart
Charlatan Staff

Spirit of the West with Andrew Cash and the little ones
Congress Centre
Thursday, Nov. 11

Governments may fall, tuition may go up, but the one thing you can always count on is Spirit of the West putting on a fantastic live show — and this time through Ottawa was sonation, moving disjointedly around the stage and just generally acting bizarre. His audience banter about the deficit, how Ottawa seemed fresher now that the Tories are toast, and the traditional rawk greeting (paraphrasing Mr. Cash: "This is where I'm supposed to say, 'How the fug are you Ottawa?'"), were a welcome change from the usual pretentious audience salutes most bands give. If it was an act, it was a good one.

Plus, I don't think I've ever seen one singer spit while singing quite as much as this guy. I hope they changed micro-with a rock sensibility and the new stuff has been properly tempered with their folk influence.

While their set was mostly made up of new material, they were not oblivious to their fans. Thus we were treated to an opening set of "Dirty Pool," off Save This House, "Five Free Minutes," the lead-off track for their latest album, Faithlift, and "Doin' Quite Alright," from way, way back. These songs, like all the others, were not just played — they were belted out with feeling.

As at any Spirit gig, both the crowd and the band were very much into the show. Guitarist/vocalist John Mann was suitably intense, while drummer Vince Ditrich merrily galloped around the stage, tambourine in hand, during a frenetic version of "The Old Sod."

It was also great to be at a show where people just danced and crowd surfing was the exception rather than the rule. It's not like Spirit of the West's music is conducive to crowd surfing, but some people unclear about the concept would crowd surf to Barry Manilow.

To that end, Mann deserves credit for saying, as one idiot got up on the crowd and then flipped backwards onto the ground, "We don't want anyone to get hurt tonight. So we don't want to see any stage diving or body surfing." The band stayed true to this statement when they stopped "Home For a Rest" until security removed a bonehead from the stage.

Sounded like Fugazi was in the building.

While their set was predictably entertaining, they've also thrown in a few new twists. Ditrich proved once again he has an incredible voice when he serenaded the crowd with a pleasing love ballad accompanied by the mostly silent Hugh McMillan on guitar. And Mann, accompanied only by piano and Geoff Kelly on flute, sang a moving song about race riots the band witnessed in England while they were touring with British pals the Wonder Stuff.

ANDRÉ BELLEFÈVRE

Our hero, John Mann.

As with any Spirit show, the most disappointing part, aside from its eventual conclusion, was what was not played. Although they hit upon such gems as "Save This House," "Political" and "Sadness Grows," they missed out on "Wrecking Ball," "Water in the Well" and "Keeping Up With the Joneses." But hey, they can't play everything. Maybe one day they'll play a six-hour marathon...

Regardless, throughout their entire 90-minute set, the crowd at the front was kept dancing, while those seated at tables, well, I can't see how they could have had anything less than a great time.

Spirit of the West: purely Canadian, purely entertaining. They're the Mr. Dependables (apologies to Linda McRae) of Canadian music. □

ANDRÉ BELLEFÈVRE

Andrew Cash grunts out another superfabulous hit song.

no different.

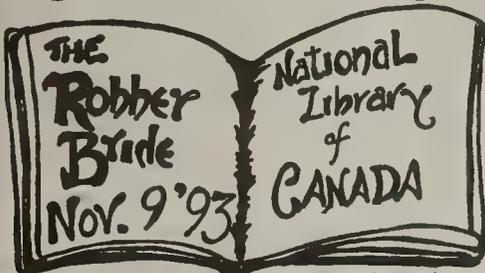

Starting off the evening was Toronto's Andrew Cash and the little ones. Their set was marked primarily by their rawkish sound which, while adding nothing new to the Canadian rock tradition, kept most people involved.

Cash did his best Peter Garrett imperphones for Spirit of the West.

The beauty of Spirit of the West this time 'round was how comfortable most songs sounded, compared to, say, the Go Figure tour. This tour, if you didn't know the songs off by heart, it was close to impossible to place each song to a particular era. The old stuff has been infused current day plot. While Cat's Eye remains my favorite Atwood book, The Robber Bride is certainly worth reading. In typical Atwood style, her characters are recognizable. She has the uncanny ability to catch thought processes and transcribe them into words. And, as always, there is a certain feminist undertone.

Margaret Atwood pleases yet again

The good thing is that Atwood has provided us with a new story and her character development seems quite different, more detailed and less distanced than in previous novels.

I was fortunate enough to be granted a short interview with her at the end of the book signing and reception. In response to a question about the basis for her characters, she said "No, I'm not the characters in my books, thank God." This is, I might add, a question which she has often been asked.

Atwood said she is currently on a "very long tour," which includes such places as Arizona, Colorado and San Francisco.

While there is interest in a movie deal for The Robber Bride, most of the offers have been from American companies. As to how she feels about that, she said she can't make Canadian film companies call her.

When I asked her if there were a particular character in The Robber Bride to whom she felt closer, her answer was, "I feel closer to all of them." This, I think sums up Atwood's continuing popularity; she describes characters and situations that we can feel close to as well.

So, read The Robber Bride, if you get the chance; look out for the group Imaginary Heaven; watch for continuing readings and events at the National Library, many of which are free; and, above all else, remember this — "An army marches on its stomach, but also on its fly-front fasteners." (The Robber Bride, p. 28.) □

by Susie Haley
Charlatan Staff

Nov. 9 was a very exciting day for the National Library.

In the afternoon, Pierre Elliott Trudeau donated his personal documents to the collection, and in the evening, a really cool Celtic folk band called Imaginary Heaven, from Vankleek Hill east of Orleans, played for a sold-out house. Oh, and Margaret Atwood was there to read from her latest best-seller, The Robber Bride.

In the lengthy introduction by national librarian Dr. Marianne Scott, Atwood was told "On behalf of librarians everywhere, thanks for keeping us in business."

Atwood has had 25 books published, received two Governor General Awards, been translated into several different languages and her books currently take up six metres of shelving at the National Library.

Atwood is not a tall woman, but her presence compensates for her lack of height. She has what some might call a monotone voice, but she is far from monotonous. Her reading was intense, but filled with dry humor. It was an interesting evening, to say the least; well worth the price of the $15 ticket.

Atwood, who was born in Ottawa in 1939 and lived somewhere on Third Avenue for awhile, began her portion of the evening by saying, "I'm always glad to be back in the city of my birth." Then she launched into the reading.

The Robber Bride is ostensibly about the relationship between four separate women. Tony is a short, ambidextrous military historian, who often translates things into a backwards language, dnik fo ekil siht.

Charis is a spiritual woman with a painful past and a knack for reading the signs and portents of the world around her. Roz is the sharp-tongued, no-bullshit type, whom Atwood describes as "a venture capitalist entrepreneur. She only invests in things she can control." Finally, there is Zenia, the robber bride of the title.

Tony, Charis and Roz have all been wronged by her and have banded together, perhaps in the belief that there is strength in numbers. Zenia, whom they believe was killed in a bombing incident in Lebanon, returns from the dead one afternoon, as the three are enjoying a lunch date at the Toxique, a Toronto restaurant which Atwood says "... doesn't exist... yet."

The novel is told in a series of flashbacks, with intermittent progress in the

This week:

1. London, England
2. Zagreb, Yugoslavia
3. A mall in Maryland
4. McDonald's, Helsinki, Finland
5. Caribe, Venezuela
6. Sooke, B.C.
7. Pub Rob Roy, Athens, Greece
8. Qutar Minar, New Delhi, India
9. Edinburgh, Scotland
10. Tianamen Square, Beijing, China

DISCOGRAPHY

Lemonheads

Come On Feel The Lemonheads
Atlantic

Using the same formula as their last album, It's a Shame About Ray, Come On Feel The Lemonheads is a folk-pop disc that will make any human smile.

Edging away from their punk, college-radio sound of the '80s, the Lemonheads exude musical integrity in every chord of this 15-track recording.

Frontman Evan Dando offers slightly rasping vocals on "Down About It" and "Favorite T."

Guest vocalists include Belinda Carlisle on "I'll Do It Anyway" and funkster Rick James. The girlish sweet vocals of long-time pal Julianna Hatfield also pop up on a number of songs.

And check out the precious lyrics on "Being Around:"

"If I was in the fridge, would you open the door... If I was a haircut would you wear a hat... I'm just really trying to make you notice me being around."

Even though Dando's lyrics aren't the deepest, his original style will make you want to press repeat on your CD player. The Lemonheads will never sour your taste buds.

Joanne Ciszewski

Cocteau Twins

Four-Calendar Cafe
Fontana

After listening to Four-Calendar Cafe numerous times, the only problem I have is finding enough good adjectives to do it justice.

To fully experience this CD you must let Liz Fraser's beautiful, ethereal vocals and the sultry, hypnotic instrumentation of Robin Guthrie and Simon Raymonde flow over you while you listen to the 10 magical tracks.

Like their brilliant 1990 release Heaven or Las Vegas, this album was also recorded at the Cocteau Twins' London studio, September Sound. This time, however, the overall feeling is much more personal. The songs seem to come from deep within their collective soul.

This is obvious from the lead-off track, "Know Who You Are at Every Age" and in the haunting first single, "Evangeline." The latter is a reflection of the childhood experiences of Fraser's and Guthrie's new daughter.

Four-Calendar Cafe is a wonderful effort that must be encountered to be fully appreciated.

Vanessa Crosbie

Rick Colbourne and Hard Poetry

Hard Poetry
Frantic Muse Productions

Lead singer Rick Colbourne may not be a Mariah Carey, but his decent singing range, emotional voice and compassionate "street life" lyrics could very well take him and Hard Poetry far.

He sings like the guy from Toad the Wet Sprocket or the lead singer from the Thompson Twins.

The instrumental background from "In Your Blood" sounds a lot like "Brian Wilson" by the Barenaked Ladies.

The music fits the lyrics well: lively, yet serious. It pleasantly and passionately caresses your ears. Listen to it while you're driving home after midnight.

M.G. Comino

Buffalo Tom

Big Red Letter Day
Megadisc

This Boston-based, three-piece band has been building a strong following outside the spotlight, developing its own unique and distinctive form of soulful music.

Unlike most bands that rely on a single creative voice, Buffalo Tom is a true creative union. Each member does his part to make a complete Buffalo Tom album.

With this album they went a step further and co-produced it with the help of the Robb Brothers, who were at the helm of the Lemonheads' successful It's A Shame About Ray.

With Buffalo Tom's fourth album, the band finally comes into its own, pushing the music slightly to the background and bringing the lyrics and vocals forward. This gives lead vocalist Bill Janowitz's grating and raspy vocal styling a little more prominence, but does not sacrifice the band's musical integrity.

Songs like "Suppose" and "I'm Allowed" still retain a guitar-driven edge while songs like "Tree House" and "Would Not Be Denied" contain the trademark Buffalo Tom emotionalism.

If Buffalo Tom's Big Red Letter Day is any indication of what we should expect from future albums, fans should have a long, fun ride with Buffalo Tom.

Dave Manor

The Cure

Show
Elektra

Once again, Robert Smith and the Cure have released their second powerful live compilation, this time recorded in Detroit and New York.

Although the Cure is my favorite group, I can bash the big-haired weirdos with the best of them.

For instance, Smith can't sing some tracks live as well as he can in studio and vice versa. Sometimes he messes up his lyrics. Other times, the songs come across as poorly performed, like "From the Edge of the Deep Green Sea" and "Open."

On the higher note, their dream music, "wah wah" guitars and Smith's voice are spellbinding. Beautifully depressing songs like "Trust," "Pictures of You" and "A Night Like This" occupy the first half of the CD, and just when you are ready to slash your wrists you're saved by upbeat giddy tunes like "Doing the Unstuck," "In Between Days" and the hideous "Friday I'm in Love."

This is a brilliant live album which everybody should give a chance, though long-time fans will agree that the album would be much improved if it contained classic Cure like "Boys Don't Cry," "Faith" or "Killing An Arab."

Ali Jafri

Big Star

Columbia: Live at Missouri University 4/25/93
BMG

As a new initiate of Big Star, I wasn't sure what to expect from a seventies' rock band, especially since I have never liked reunion albums.

After listening to this album, I was surprised at just how current their music sounded. There are some bands whose music is timeless, bands that do not need a revival movement to draw attention to their music, and Big Star is one of those bands.

The band has done plenty for contemporary pop music, influencing groups like the Replacements and R.E.M.

This incarnation of Big Star features original members Alex Chilton and Jody Stephens. For this show, they also acquired the services of Ken Stringfellow and John Auer of the Posies to fill in for Andy Hummel, who left music after Big Star, and Chris Bell, who died in a car accident in 1978.

This is a strong effort for a band that has not played together for almost 20 years. Their sound is eternal and their songs are genuine rock 'n' roll with a bit of an edge. With the help of Stringfellow and Auer's lead vocals on songs like "Feel" and "I am the Cosmos," the songs are given new life, bringing the music to a new generation of fans.

This album, even though it only features half of the original Big Star, is a commendable effort. It does nothing to harm the Big Star legacy and may even add to it.

Dave Manor

Unrèst

Perfect Teeth
4 A.D.

I was quite sceptical when handed Unrèst's first full-length CD to review. After all, even though they come from the same Washington, D.C. scene that has spawned the likes of Fugazi and Bad Brains, the album was produced by Duran Duran's Simon LeBon.

However, my expectations of an uninspired, mid-eighties' synthesized sound were dashed by the band's progressive pop.

That said, their first album for 4 A.D. is pretty mediocre. Even though they have some poppy tunes, most songs are marred by slow, dragging melodies. On songs like "Cath Carroll" and "Make Out Club" Mark Robinson (lead vocals, guitarist) plays some catchy guitar riffs, but these songs are marred by his tuneless voice. Bassist Bridget Cross, singing lead on two tracks, easily outshines Robinson.

Unrèst needs a little spice to get rid of the mono-sounding tracks. If they focused on a single style, the album might sound more complete and not so experimental.

I'm looking forward to Unrèst's second release. Hopefully they can tighten up their out-of-tune strings.

Sussana Forieri

OTTAWA'S 9th

Vintage Clothing Sale

SUNDAY, NOVEMBER 28, 1993
[10:00 a.m. to 5:00 p.m.]

Chateau Laurier Ballroom
Ottawa, Ontario

Men's and women's clothing (from 1880's to 1980's) • Antique jewellery • Linen and lace • Accessories • Collectibles

Admission
$ 5.00

CANADIAN ROCK PRESENTS

SARAH MCLACHLAN &

FORMER MEMBERS OF THE GRAPES OF WRATH

Wednesday December 8 • Congress Centre

Tickets available at TicketMaster outlets or call 755-11-11 to charge

NETTWERK

You should see where they put cucumbers in here

by Andrea Smith
Charlatan Staff

The Girl Wants To
Edited by Lynn Crosbie
Coach House Press
$19.95
209 pages

"I couldn't see that I was doing anything wrong. I still can't. . . . Carol said that I should've been put away, but I'm not bad looking—so offering my body to dead men is a crime I'd like to see who the victim is."
— Barbara Gowdy, "We So Seldom Look On Love," from The Girl Wants To

There can be no broad generalizations about the artists or their works in this compendium, except to say that they are all women.

The Girl Wants To is an anthology of 39 female writers and artists dedicated to the articulation of modern sexuality from

Ah, those cheesy '70s memories

by Greg Owens
Charlatan Staff

Dazed and Confused
Directed by Richard Linklater

Ah, the wonderful seventies. The decade that gave us such treasures as bell bottoms, the Partridge family and disco. The seventies may not be cool, but a movie about everyday life in the seventies is.

Dazed and Confused is great. It actually made me nostalgic for the seventies. No, really, I'm serious. I had to seriously reconsider my stance on the decade of cheese.

This movie is about the last day of school in 1976. It's a typical last day in high school. Classes are still being held, even though no lessons are being taught. Word is spreading throughout the school about the big party that night.

The coach is handing out an agreement that none of the football players will indulge in drinking or drugs over the summer vacation, an agreement the star quarterback Randy "Pink" Floyd will not sign.

The soon-to-be Grade Nines are hazed by the seniors. The rest of the movie is spent with the characters driving around looking for something to do.

Stop me if this is starting to sound like your last day in high school. It sure reminded me of mine, even if I graduated from high school in 1989. The beauty of this film is that it's so darn realistic, from the situations right on down to the characters, avoiding all the standard Hollywood clichés.

Something else the movie avoids is

Remember these guys from high school?

women's perspectives. It includes poetry, short stories, comic strips, photo essays, xerox art, illustrated panels, lyrics and that weepy "good old days when life was better" schtick. The seventies sucked. I know it. You know it. The characters in the film know it.

Be warned there is under-age drinking and most of the teenage characters smoke pot. I don't think that's giving anything away. The film shows normal teenagers doing normal things. The characters drink, smoke and get stoned. There is none of that annoying "Oh gross, Bobby's smoking up" rhetoric that permeates popular entertainment.

The cast is excellent. Four of the most memorable characters are Rory Cochrane as Slater the stoner, Sasha Jenson as Don, Jason London as Floyd and Adam Goldberg as Mike.

The only downside to Dazed is that it's primarily a guy's movie. There are some good female parts in the film, but the movie mainly stays with the men.

Visually, the movie is really nice to look at — the cars, the clothes and the props are great. There is an incredible attention given to detail in Dazed; I haven't seen a black light poster in ages.

Dazed is carefully crafted. It was made with love and care. The film is a slice of life. A realistic portrayal of teenagers and the times in which they lived.

A lot of the credit for the making of the film should go to its director, Richard Linklater, who was responsible for the underground cult film, Slacker. Basically, Dazed and Confused is a Slacker with money, and Linklater used it well.

Go see Dazed and Confused. It is a funny, well-made film. There are no deep hidden meanings. You won't come out of the theatre singing "We are the World." It's not like freeing Willy from Sea World, but you just might have a fun time at a fun movie.

profiles of contemporary female performers.

Skirting, or rather ignoring, the debate in feminism over pornography and the depiction of a newer and more powerful female sexuality, The Girl Wants To simply claims to gather together the individual experiences of modern women writers.

As a result, it is not so much a generalized or feminist redefinition of women's sexuality, as it is a shattering of the idealization and stereotypes of it.

These women describe in their own voices real sexualities, where storybook conventions of passive women who seek pleasure in the company and pleasure of men have gone the way of the dinosaurs.

The result is an exploration of everything from Xaviera Hollander's control of a ménage à trois, to Gowdy's metaphor (I think) of love/obsession as necrophilia, to a comic strip by Roberta Gregory called "Bitchy Bitch Gets Laid."

The closed-minded might find some of the material "offensive," as it strikes at the foundations of mainstream ideas and mores of sexuality. All shades of lesbianism, sado-masochism, and other sexualities often labelled as "deviant" by a patriarchal mainstream are treated with equal deference.

Edited by Lynn Crosbie, a 30-year-old PhD student of English literature at the University of Toronto, there are a number of Canadian artists featured: Makeda Silvera, Evelyn Lau, Sarah Spracklinn, Meryn Cadell, Fiona Smyth and members of Toronto's Chicken Milk to name but a few.

But the most impressive feature of the anthology is the broad cultural spectrum the contributors themselves represent:

Silvera is an African-American lesbian of Caribbean descent living and writing in Toronto.

Beth Brant is a Mohawk from Tyendinaga Mowhawk Territory and a grandmother.

Sylvie Rancourt worked as a stripper in Montreal for 10 years and then became the first woman in Canada to self-publish her own comic magazine.

Cassie Jameson is a 16-year-old Riot Grrrl from North Carolina.

And the list goes on to read like a who's who of the latest, most progressive, and most eloquent voices of the redefinition of female experience in/on their own terms. From Toronto to Vancouver, from New York to Seattle, across ages, ethnicities and persuasions, Crosbie has compiled an impressive sampling of the cultural diversity within the categories of "women" and "sexuality." □

Tex Apparel

Ranchwear Outfitters

Australian Outback Oilskins

Koolah Oilskins

Driza Bone Oil

UPTOWN, DOWNTOWN & OUT OF TOWN RANCHWEAR

Western boots including custom built

150 Robertson Road, Bell's Corners

829-3030

Apples, beer, the Waltons and success

by Andrew Smales
Charlatan Staff

It might be a cliché, but hard work does have its rewards. Just ask the Waltons, who brought their folk-flavored rock to Zaphod Beeblebrox for two shows Saturday, Nov. 13 — an afternoon all-ages show and an evening bar gig.

Although it may seem like this Saskatchewan quartet has come out of nowhere and suddenly become successful, they are quick to point out that isn't so.

"I can see how it might seem like we've just become successful overnight," says bass player Keith Nakonechy, "but that's not quite how it happened."

Adds drummer Dave Cooney, "Yes,

DEAN TOMLINSON

An appleless Jason Plumb entertains the masses.

really we've been together as the Waltons for six years. We've been working constantly."

In fact, the band has been touring almost non-stop for the past three years. During that time, the most time they've had off in a row has been three weeks. In addition, they found time to write and record their first album, Lik My Trakter. The album was originally released independently late in 1992. Nine months later it was picked up for distribution by the behemoth record company Warner.

The album will be released worldwide in January, at which point the band will begin to tour England, Australia and the United States.

Judging from their performance on Saturday, these countries are in for a good time.

Playing for a medium-sized crowd at the afternoon show, the band performed an energetic set filled with all their hits, like "Living Room," "In the Meantime" and of course, the closing number, "Colder Than You," which seems to be on Toronto radio stations all the time.

The band was in fine form despite singer/guitarist Jason Plumb being "in pain" from the previous night, when an admittedly inebriated Plumb spent an evening on the town, culminating with him performing a spirited version of "Rock Death America" with the Rheostatics at their University of Ottawa show.

The Waltons' show was filled with much of the same energy, although probably not for the same reason — the only thing Plumb consumed on stage was an apple while Nakonechy explained to the crowd, "We're not just wasting your time. It's good for his voice."

A lot of the energy came from the extremely enthusiastic crowd. The band seemed to feed off this, especially keyboardist/accordion player Todd Lumley, who jumped around the stage every time he played the squeeze box.

By the end of the show, everyone in the crowd seemed to be singing along, dancing or at least tapping their feet. But although the bar wasn't packed and the show had an intimate atmosphere, there were signs of the band's growing success. Like when Plumb told the crowd the band wouldn't have a new album out until next fall, since they have to "go away" and tour abroad, although he did invite the audience to come. "That way we'll have an audience everywhere and we can split drinks," he said.

Another sure sign of a band's success is legal problems. Nakonechy explains: "We knew for a while that we'd get in trouble with the name. Now, in the States, Warner has to rent the name from Lorimar." (Lorimar is the film company that owns the rights to that old TV show, The Waltons.)

Still, the band manages to keep a cheery attitude about everything. When asked about Zaphod's notorious early-show policy, Cooney replied: "It's not bad. At least it gets the show done early so you can play and then do something. Maybe slip over to Hull for cocktails."

"Yeah," Nakonechy laughed. "You can get liquored up, go to Hull and maybe get in some scraps."

RUSSIAN PRINCE^{REG} VODKA

PRESENTS

NEW STUFF

Russian Prince Vodka and Impact Magazine would like to expose you to some great new music. Be one of the first 125 people to respond to this offer and receive a NEW STUFF CD—FREE! There's a new CD every other month, available only through your subscription to Impact, Canada's new music magazine. Here's an act that previously appeared on a NEW STUFF CD and is now touring Canadian campuses.

- EDMONTON (U. OF ALBERTA) — November 12
- CALGARY (U. OF CALGARY) — November 13
- VANCOUVER — November 15
- SASKATOON — November 17
- REGINA — November 18
- WINNIPEG — November 19, 20
- OTTAWA — November 24
- TORONTO — November 26
- ST. CATHARINES — November 27
- NORTH BAY — November 28
- MISSISSAUGA (Q-107 ROCK AWARDS) — December 1
- KINGSTON — December 3
- HAMILTON — December 8
- KITCHENER — December 17
- LONDON — December 18

JUNKHOUSE

Hailing from Hamilton, Junkhouse have forged a sound as solid as the heavy cauldrons that hold their hometown's economic lifeblood. Their debut album, Strays, is a gnarly brew of streetwise swamp boogie. Singer, lyricist and acoustic strummer Tom Wilson is backed by the psycho-rockabilly trio of guitarist Dan Achen, bassist Russ Wilson and drummer Ray Farrugia.

Long a staple of the independent music scene, Junkhouse have shared the stage with such musical luminaries as Bob Dylan, Midnight Oil and Daniel Lanois. Their live shows have become the stuff of legend along Toronto Queen Street strip.

Even if you are not one of the first 125, everyone who responds will be eligible to win:

- One of the following: a NIKKO Remote Mini-Stereo System, a NIKKO 5 Disk Drawer Stereo Remote Multi-CD Player, a NIKKO Portable Compact Disk Player, or a NIKKO Deluxe Integrated Telephone Answering System or
- One of fifty packs of TDK tapes

NIKKO

TDK

Mail completed coupon to IMPACT Campus Offer, Roll Magazines Inc., 219 Dufferin St., Suite 100, Toronto, Ontario, M6K 3J1

NAME _____
UNIVERSITY _____
ADDRESS _____

PHONE NUMBER: _____

POSTAL CODE: _____

No purchase is necessary. To enter and be eligible to win, a person must be a resident of Canada who has reached the age to purchase beverage alcohol and who is not an employee of, or a member of the immediate family of, or domiciled with, an employee of FBM Distillery Co. Ltd., its affiliated companies, the Provincial Liquor Boards, their licensees, agencies, Roll Magazine Inc., advertising and promotional agencies, prize suppliers or the independent judging organization. Chances of winning depend on the number of correct entries received. For complete contest rules write to: Impact Campus Offer, Roll Magazine Inc., 219 Dufferin St., Suite 100, Toronto, Ontario M6K 3J1. Contest closes December 17, 1993. Winners will be drawn on January 10, 1993.

If you've got a listing you want to appear in the handy Long Day in the Universe calendar, drop us a line at Room 531 Unicentre during regular office hours or fax us at 788-4051. Listings must be in by the Friday before publication.

LONG DAY IN THE UNNERSE

THURSDAY, NOVEMBER 18 TO THURSDAY, NOVEMBER 25

Thursday, November 18

More Toronto bands at Zaphod's tonight: the Morganfields and Dinner Is Ruined do the loud guitar thing for $5 at the door.

Magic/Magic/Miracles opens a month-long run at Gallery 101 tonight. It's an "installation/performance" piece that examines systems of belief as they relate to magic and stuff like that.

Black Francis, or Frank Black, or whatever name he's going by these days, bombed outside the Pixies. Not so Kim Deal, whose excellent band the Breeders plays the Penguin at 8 p.m. tonight. Tickets are $15.50 at the usual independent outlets and through Ticketmaster.

As a special added bonus, opening for the Breeders are Beastie Boys' pals Luscious Jackson.

Premiering tonight in Carleton's Alumni Theatre is Hecuba, a play by Euripides, a dead Greek guy. Tickets are $5 for students and seniors or in advance and $10 for adults. It runs Thursday through Saturday at 8 p.m. this week and next.

Friday, November 19

Heaven Dog, Mushroom Explosion and Trip Hammer blow your eardrums to, Helsinki tonight at the SAW Gallery. Tickets are $5 at the door.

Iain Rohahae, advertised as an early-instrument expert, plays Carleton's Alumni Theatre at noon today. As is the custom with all Friday lunch-time concerts, it's free.

Le sexe des étoiles, a film about a 12-year-old who wants to be reunited with her father, who left seven years earlier to have a sex change operation, opens tonight at the Bytowne at 9:20 p.m. It runs through Nov. 24.

It's a pretty solid lineup at Creeque Alley this weekend. Kicking it off tonight is Toronto's Change of Heart, a band that's been doing the up-and-coming thing forever.

Saturday, November 20

Tonight at Creeque Alley it's those fez-wearin', horn-blowin' jazz (kinda) types the Angstones.

It's Rock Against Racism tonight in Carleton's Fenn Lounge, featuring the best in rock, punk, funk and rap, including Lockjaw, Wooden Stars, Outcry, Kill the Ego, 70 Parts and thousands more. Advance tickets are available for $5 at Shake Records, Birdman Sound and Songbird Music or you can pay $6 at the door. Show starts at 4 p.m.

It's reggae night at the Penguin! Jamaica band Culture livens up this dank, dark hole of a city.

Sunday, November 21

Don't you wish you lived in Toronto? Probably not, but if you did, you'd be seeing the Lemonheads, Redd Kross and Magnapop at the Concert Hall this evening at 7 p.m. You'd also be picking up your $15 tickets at the Record Peddler or Vortex Records.

At the Pit tonight at 9 p.m., $3 will get you in to see local punk goth types (that's how they describe themselves-ed.) Dyssia.

Sunday Rushes is a regular series of presentations of works in progress performed at the SAW Gallery. There's loads of stuff happening, starting at 7:30 p.m. Tickets are $4 at the door.

Creeque Alley hosts an AIDS benefit (presumably benefitting a cure and not the disease) today. Check out this lineup: the Age of Faith (who have just released their debut CD), Barstool Prophets, Dog Day Afternoon, Sam I Am and Joe Gatineau.

Monday, November 22

Those wacky, wacky cult movie Mondays continue tonight at the Mayfair. Tonight, for your viewing pleasure, it's the Godfather of Grunge, once-and-future guitar hero Neil Young in the concert film Rust Never Sleeps at 7 p.m. It's followed at 9:10 by The Last Waltz, a film of the Band's "final" performance, directed by Martin Scorsese.

Tuesday, November 23

If you've got a car, here's a show that you won't want to miss: the Afghan Whigs with special guest Love Jones play Lee's Palace in Toronto tonight. Tickets are $11.50 through Ticketmaster.

As Charlatan production manager Kevin McKay is suffering from a severe bout of depression resulting from his having missed the Gordon Lightfoot show last Saturday, there will be no book tip this week.

Wednesday, November 24

You've seen the exhibit, now listen to the lecture. Doug Schoenherr, the curator of the National Gallery of Canada, gives a talk entitled William Morris: The Draughtsman at the Pit in the Carleton's school of architecture tonight at 6 p.m.

Thursday, November 25

Shouldn't you be studying?

Hey Kids! It's The Charlatan's first ever entertainment poll.

This week, for filling out and dropping off this survey into the special poll box at the Charlatan, Room 531 Unicentre by Tuesday, Nov. 25 at 3 p.m. you can win a Nirvana biography! Charlatan staff are eligible for the poll but not the contest.

Good Luck

- | | |
|----------------------------------|---|
| 1. Favorite music group | 10. Most notorious meat market |
| 2. Best local band | 11. Favorite campus hangout |
| 3. Dumbest band name | 12. Favorite alcoholic beverage |
| 4. The best concert of the year | 13. Body part that looks best pierced |
| 5. The worst concert of the year | 14. Cheeziest pick-up line |
| 6. Best album of the year | |
| 7. Worst album of the year | |
| 8. Best live Ottawa club | 15. Favorite place you've had sex on campus (left over from last year's sex supplement) |
| 9. Best bar in town | |

NAME: _____

PHONE: _____

Congratulations to K. Copp who wins the Mayfair double pass! Come on up to The Charlatan and pick up your prize!

THE 10TH ANNIVERSARY

BLACK & WHITE BASH

OTTAWA CONGRESS CENTRE

DECEMBER 31, 1993

10 YEARS - 10 BANDS

10 THEME ROOMS

THE ULTIMATE HOUSE PARTY

(STAY TUNED FOR UPCOMING DETAILS)

TICKETS $25.00*
ADVANCE
755-1111
11 LOCATIONS

SAVE $3.00
Early Bird Tickets Available
(Before Dec. 15th)
Students Only

NO LINE UPS GUARANTEED!

OTTAWA CONGRESS CENTRE 563-1984 FOR MORE INFORMATION GROUP RATES AVAILABLE
* Plus GST / Surcharge only at Ticketmaster

AND 5000 OF YOUR CLOSEST FRIENDS!

Grand Central

141 George St.
233-1216

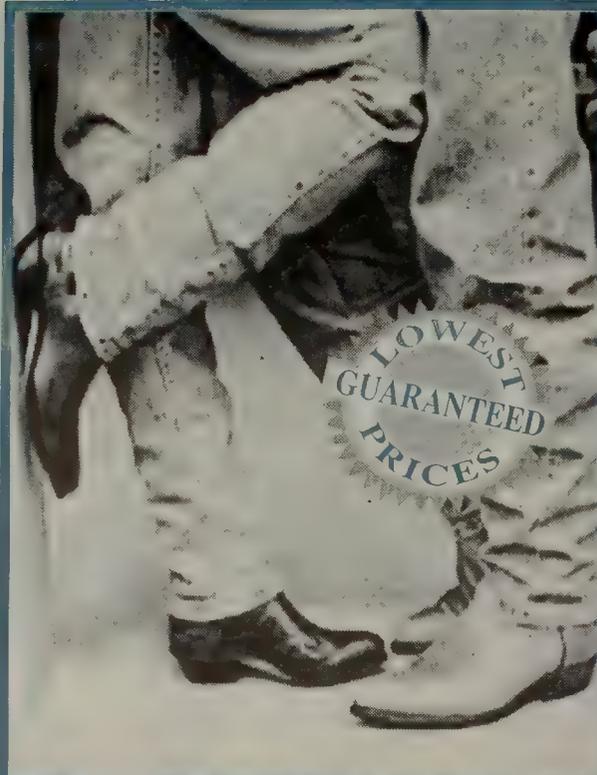

"The Mother of All Pizza"

Introducing.

= Super Value!

only $8.95 plus taxes

APPLE SADDLERY

The Largest Western Boot Store in Canada.
INNES ROAD JUST EAST OF THE 417 (NEAR THE PRICE CLUB)

110 YORK ST., BYWARD 234-0950

HOULIHAN'S

"LADIES' NIGHT"

NO COVER CHARGE FOR WOMEN

Every Tuesday Night

15¢ WINGS TUES. & WED.
4:00 - 11:00

GOOD FOOD CHEAP! * POOL TABLES * VIDEO GAMES
AIR HOCKEY * HUGE DANCE FLOOR

TWO FLOORS OF FUN * PARTY NIGHTS

Sun, Mon, Tues, & Thurs

the CHARLATAN

CARLETON'S INDEPENDENT STUDENT NEWSPAPER

Myth - Jesus spoke out against gays and lesbians.
Truth - He said absolutely nothing.

Myth AIDS is a "gay problem."

Truth - AIDS affects all people, straight and gay alike.

PUBLIC MEETING

Employment equity!
 and
University quotas!

Hear the Truth about these, and other subjects at a meeting the forces of Political Correctness will no doubt try to stop. Followed by live musical entertainment by the band:

Excalibur

Sat. November 27th
 7:00 pm

For more information call: [redacted]

The HERITAGE FRONT

Earth's Most Endangered Species:

THE WHITE RACE

Help preserve it. Write or call

National Alliance

POB [redacted], Hillsboro, WV [redacted]

(304) [redacted]

Send $6 for 100 stickers postpaid.

Myth - Men can't stop themselves when they are sexually aroused.

Truth - Men are capable of and responsible for controlling their minds as well as bodies.

myth - disabled people can't have children.
truth - disabled people are just as much sexual beings, with the same needs and desires as happy, able-bodied people.

VOLUME 23

ISSUE 15

NOVEMBER 25

1993

OnTap

160 Rideau

classic rock & roll

1.75

..at classic prices

SUNDAYS

SALOON
Ottawa's Only
Authentic
Western Saloon

Sundays - Wednesdays

BEVERAGE

$1.50 Draught

SPECIALS

NFL on the Large Screen
Win tickets to The Superbowl

FREE Burgers at halftime

Classic Rock n' Roll to Dance to
Thurs. thru Sat.

Come see us down in the Byward Market
105 Murray St.
233-5716

CRACKERS TWO

Sundays & Mondays

Sports on the Big Screen
15¢ Wings

Tuesdays

Karaoke Nite

Thursday, Nov. 25

Reggae Nites
Roots Movement

Friday, Nov. 26,
Saturday, Nov. 27

BamBam Ritual

Sunday, Nov. 28

Grey Cup Party

175 Richmond Road Tel. 722-3201

GOOD TIMES

GOOD VALUE

The LOCKMASTER LOUNGE

Join us for Great Food (new expanded menu),
Refreshment and Entertainment
4 Large Screen TV's

TSN and Satellite Dish for the best in sports
Breakfast Menu served Saturday and Sunday til 4 pm
Saturday and Tuesday - Wing Nights
and now with SUPER PIZZA!

Live Entertainment Friday, Saturday, Sundays
No Cover

Tony and the True Tones Nov. 26, 27

Sweet Taboo Dec. 3, 4

Vic Nesorallah Band Dec. 10, 11

Wednesdays - Karaoke with "Wacky Wally"

Sundays - The Rambler Brothers - Nov

- Vic Nesorallah - Dec

SOMERSET HOUSE HOTEL

In the heart of the city for 95 years
A great, inexpensive spot for visiting friends
352 Somerset St. W., at Bank
Telephone 233-7762

ZAPHOD
BEEBLEBROX

OPENING BAND 8 pm
HEADLINE BAND 9 pm

THU. NOV. 25 $8
IRELAND'S WOODY GUTHRIE

ANDY IRVINE

+ NATHAN CURRY
& DUNCAN GILLIS

FRI. NOV. 26 $7

FLYING BULGAR KLEZMER BAND

+EUGENE RIPPER

SAT. NOV. 27

NOON TO 6PM

CARGO RECORDS SALE

THU. DEC. 2

$8

FROM ENGLAND

RORY

McLEOD

COMING SOON

DEC. 3 - THE HEADSTONES

DEC. 9 - LES HARDIS MOUSAILLONS

27 YORK ST. 562-1010

Ranch

3rd

Anniversary Blow-Out Sale

We've Blown out the walls for expansion.
Now we BLOW OUT the SAVINGS to you

Up to 50% OFF
select boots,
belts, and everything else

Guaranteed
Best Selection

Convenient Location
in the Byward Market
99 Clarence St.

562-1320

Farquhar put on BOG hot seat

by Andrea Wiebe
Charlatan Staff

Students grilled members of Carleton's board of governors at a forum on Nov. 17.

The forum in Baker Lounge gave students a chance to address their concerns to board members. About 10 students asked the six board members on the panel questions.

Students on the panel were Elaine Silver and Lucy Watson, the two undergraduate representatives on the board, and Vladimir Zhivov, the graduate student representative.

The three administration representatives were Les Copley, vice-president academic, Spruce Riordon, vice-president of finance and Carleton President Robin Farquhar.

Silver said she arranged the forum to increase students' awareness about what the board's responsibilities are and how the board's decisions affect Carleton students.

"I wanted to create an opportunity for students to come out and find out a little bit about what the board of governors does," said Silver.

Students posed questions about the board's responsibilities and powers. Most of the students addressed their questions to Farquhar.

One student asked Farquhar whether students have a democratic voice within the educational system, since they do not make up a large portion of the board. Farquhar responded that students do play an active role.

"The students do have a good deal of power in the academic domain. Students are well represented on the senate and the New University Government system is heavily influenced by student places," he said.

Students elected as NUG representatives sit as voting members of department and faculty boards and are supposed to represent student concerns to those bodies.

Some students raised concerns about the influences that corporations which invest money in the university might have.

Watson and Silver also acknowledged the potential dangers of corporate investment.

Watson, also the president of the Carleton University Students' Association, said schools must "control what's going on with corporate sponsorship in the universities." Silver said there is a need for "checks and balances" on investors. Farquhar said the board looks at potential investors carefully before accepting donations, although the board doesn't screen every donor.

Farquhar was questioned about his membership in the Corporate Higher Education Forum, a group of Canadian corporations and university administrators. He said the forum looks at ways to make sure "students who come out have better employment prospects than they otherwise might have."

Farquhar said while the social sciences and the humanities receive less money for research from corporations and the government, typically the research conducted in these fields costs less.

"It doesn't require all the big gadgets and equipment that you need in engineering and science labs to do the sort of research they do there."

The co-ordinator of the Gay, Lesbian and Bisexual Centre asked Farquhar why there is no representative of that community on Carleton's presidential advisory committee on personal safety.

Peter Nogoalo told Farquhar studies show that gays, lesbians and bisexuals are probably the most frequent victims of violence.

Farquhar said the interests of gay, lesbian and bisexual people are represented through CUSA.

Nogoalo replied that Watson, who has a seat on the committee, said "we aren't able to represent the concerns of gays, lesbians and bisexuals because she is straight. Renée Twaddle, co-ordinator of the Carleton Women's Centre, said "it's like having a man represent the women's centre."

Riordon, who co-chairs the committee, said "we aren't able to represent every single society, group, club, etc. Already, the size of the personal safety committee is considerable and there's no group that isn't represented, at least through their society, such as CUSA."

Another issue raised at the forum by a student was the replacement of Carleton's mascot uniform. The student said the cost of an adequate replacement costume for Rodney Raven would be about $5,000. Farquhar said the costume is the responsibility of the department of athletics. Farquhar agreed the costume should be replaced, but said "for about that same price we could put a teacher in front of a classroom and open up a new section in the interest of accessibility, or we could provide $5,000 in student aid."

Tuition was another concern raised by a teaching assistant, who said every time tuition increases, TAs have less money left over to support themselves since their wages don't increase with tuition hikes.

Farquhar said since the government has no more money to put into educa-

FORUM cont'd on page 5

CUSA hires new safety commissioner

by Tanya Workman
Charlatan Staff

The new safety commissioner for the Carleton University Students' Association says she would like to reduce racist and homophobic views on campus.

Donna Gilbert, 22, a second-year law student, was hired as the new commissioner by CUSA on Nov. 16. She says she would like to address racism and homophobia on campus by holding workshops to discuss student attitudes about these issues.

She says negative attitudes which exist towards people of color, women, and gay, lesbian and bisexual people on campus help create unsafe situations for them.

Gilbert says she also she wants to improve the lighting in the tunnels and try to improve ramps for students with disabilities.

"I want to make suggestions, lobby administration so that we can get the changes we need at Carleton and to bring awareness to a whole bunch of issues that threaten safety that nobody knows about," Gilbert says.

The safety commissioner's responsibilities include raising student awareness of safety issues, conducting safety and tunnel audits, and lobbying administration to improve safety conditions on campus.

CUSA President Lucy Watson says the hiring board unanimously agreed Gilbert was the best choice because she understood what the job entailed.

"We were looking for someone who was really interested in safety, had a real concern, had an understanding of the issues and was approachable," says Watson.

Gilbert was one of seven applicants interviewed by the hiring board made up of Watson, Foot Patrol co-ordinator Brenda Kennedy, International Students' Centre co-ordinator Ehab Shanti and Carleton Women's Centre volunteer Michelle Walker.

Co-ordinators from the Carleton Disability Awareness Centre and the Gay, Lesbian and Bisexual Centre were invited to sit on the committee but were unable to.

Kennedy had assumed some of the safety commissioner's responsibilities, including putting up safety posters, since May when the last commissioner's term ran out. She says she thinks Gilbert will be a good safety commissioner because she is outspoken. "She'll be a thorn in (administration's) side."

Kennedy says she will work with Gilbert to lobby administration to improve campus safety and ask for Gilbert's opinion on Foot Patrol matters.

Watson says Gilbert will also talk to CUSA service co-ordinators "to make sure she knows the concerns of international students, women students, of gay, lesbian and bisexual students, (and) students with disabilities."

Gilbert will work part-time, 15 hours a week, until the end of April. Watson says the hours have been cut from what last year's commissioner Samantha Sheen worked last year because Sheen found it difficult to balance the full-time job and her course load.

Watson says Gilbert's pay has not been finalized yet with finance commissioner René Faucher, but earlier in the year Faucher estimated $3,800 for the job, if the commissioner started in November. The only other funds he has budgeted for the commissioner are about $1,000 for administrative costs.

Gilbert has not set her office hours yet, but says she is considering working week-nights from 5 p.m. to 8 p.m.

Gilbert volunteers at the Carleton Women's Centre and is involved with the centre's outreach program, which goes into Ottawa high schools to talk to young women about issues that may concern them, like sexual harassment and abuse.

Gilbert, Watson and Kennedy are members of the presidential advisory committee on personal safety, which makes recommendations to Carleton President Robin Farquhar on how to spend the university's safety budget.

COMMISSIONER cont'd on page 5

on the cover

Myth meets reality in The Charlatan's hate supplement. See page 11.

arts	23
classifieds	24
internat'l	8
national	7
news	3
opinion	9
sports	19
supplement	11

index

COVER BY KARIN LORIDAN & ANDREW SMITH

Co-ordinators shed light on services

by Matt Skinner
Charlatan Staff

Carleton's student service co-ordinators are funded out of the $80-$95 annual fee each undergraduate student pays to the Carleton University Students' Association.

With the academic year almost half over, The Charlatan decided to find out what the co-ordinators have done this year and whether they have any new plans.

This week, we profile the International Students' Centre and the Mature and Part-Time Students' Centre.

EHAB SHANTI — INTERNATIONAL STUDENTS' CENTRE CO-ORDINATOR

Ehab Shanti, co-ordinator of the International Students' Centre, says the centre is the only representation on campus for Carleton's 2,500 international students.

He says the centre helps students with legal matters, referring them to the appropriate aids, and provides an emergency fund for students.

"(The emergency fund) is basically a $200 or $100 loan that will be given to international students in case of need, because international students don't get any financial aid," says Shanti.

Shanti says a similar fund was discontinued several years ago, but was put back into use this year.

He says a couple of students have already made use of the fund, which is now about $300. Shanti says the fund's amount depends on how much money the centre raises.

Shanti says earnings collected from a fashion show scheduled for the next term will go toward the emergency fund.

A pool tournament recently held in Oliver's was successful, says Shanti. He says many students turned out and the centre earned around $90. The centre is planning another pool tournament for the near future.

In March, the centre will hold International Students' Week in Baker Lounge. During that week, booths will be set up for various ethnic clubs, but Shanti says this is not aimed solely at international students.

"The International Students' Centre is not only for international students; it's also for Canadian students who are interested in international affairs," he says.

Shanti says the goal of the centre has changed this year, to reach out to all international students, including students from Europe. Shanti says in previous years the centre has been mainly used by specific ethnic groups, such as Japanese or Mexican students.

He says he wants the centre to get away from working with the various ethnic clubs on campus because he wants to appeal to all international students as well as Canadian students.

AL CRIPPEN — MATURE AND PART-TIME STUDENTS' CENTRE

Al Crippen, co-ordinator for the Mature and Part-Time Students' Centre, says most of the people visiting the centre are middle-age students with families who use it to get away from the tension of student life.

"(The centre) provides a lounge area, a quiet area for people to relax and chat. The coffee pot is always on," says Crippen.

He says the centre is usually full during lunch and dinner hours, and between 100 and 130 people use the centre on a weekly basis.

Crippen says more students seem to be using the centre this year, because it seems to have a warmer atmosphere.

"The service does take on some personality (depending on) who happens to be here that year," he says.

Crippen says the day-to-day operations of the centre remain the same as in previous years. For a number of years the centre has provided a hotline service for parents so that school teachers or day-care workers can call if they need to contact them. Crippen says the centre has a copy of the parent's schedule, as well as a photo so they can be found in their class if there is an emergency.

The centre also runs a March-break day care for about 65 children, so while the parents are in classes over the break their children are looked after. There will also be a Christmas party on Dec. 4 for children of parents who use the centre. □

PROFESSIONAL WORD PROCESSING

Theses, reports, manuscripts, etc.

English or Bilingual, graphics

ANWOOD BUSINESS SERVICES
(613) 591-8805

OTTAWA'S 9th

Vintage Clothing Sale

SUNDAY, NOVEMBER 28, 1993
[10:00 a.m. to 5:00 p.m.]

Chateau Laurier Ballroom
Ottawa, Ontario

Men's and women's clothing (from 1890's to 1960's) • Antique jewellery • Linen and lace • Accessories • Collectibles

Admission
$ 5.00

TRAVEL CUTS SPRING BREAK '94

SANTIAGO DE CUBA - CUBA
BUCANERO BEACH RESORT ALL INCLUSIVE
$799.00 Per Person
All taxes included

ORLANDO AND DAYTONA BEACH
7 Nights
$139. (without transportation)
$289. (with Motor Coach)
(Based on quad occupancy)

BEST DEAL CARIBBEAN CRUISE
6 PORTS OF CALL TO VISIT
$1,179.00
(ALL TAXES AND FLIGHT FROM TORONTO INCLUDED)

BON VOYAGE INSURANCE FROM $25.00
- Including Trip cancellation and $1,000,000 Medical

FOR ALL YOUR TRAVEL NEEDS CALL OR DROP BY

Carleton University First Level Unicentre
238-5493

MOXY FRIVOUS

★ BARGAINVILLE TOUR '93 ★ with special guest jann arden sunday nov 28 • congress centre

Reserved seat tickets available at TicketMaster outlets or call 755-11-13 to charge

CUSA legal bill around $13,000

by Brent Dowdall
Charlatan Staff

The total legal bill for the labor dispute between the Carleton University Students' Association and some of its employees will be about $13,000, says René Faucher, CUSA's finance commissioner.

The dispute began in the summer when a few CUSA employees tried to unionize and ended in November when the Ontario Labor Relations Board ordered the automatic unionization of 340 CUSA employees.

Faucher says CUSA will be billed about $3,500 to $5,000 for the week of board hearings held in late August in Toronto.

CUSA President Lucy Watson told The Charlatan in August that the total cost of the dispute would be about $2,500. In

CAMPUS BRIEFS

November, she added that figure to $5,000.

"I'm assuming she (Watson) meant the (labor board) hearings itself, and on that she would be correct," Faucher says.

CUSA's legal bill for all staff-related matters from May to August was $17,793.81, Faucher says. He estimates half of that figure, about $8,000, is a result of the labor dispute excluding the hearings. The rest of the figure came from other staff-related costs.

Faucher says CUSA had no choice but to pay to have legal representation.

"Our alternative was no legal representation. When the legal issue came up, we tried to be frugal. (The cost) was close to the minimum amount we could spend on legal fees. There was nothing we could do about the legal costs." □

Unknown male attacks woman near residence

by Angie Gallop
Charlatan Staff

A woman was physically assaulted while walking in the parking lot near residence at 3 a.m. on Saturday, Nov. 13.

Len Boudreault, assistant director of Carleton's department of university safety, says the woman was not able to give a description of her attacker because she was assaulted from behind.

A safety poster about the incident circulated on Nov. 16 says the attacker "is believed to be an older man, based on the tone of his voice." Boudreault says he is unable to say what the man said to the woman.

The woman was grabbed and when she resisted her attacker struck her in the face.

Boudreault says she was bruised and knocked to the ground. She wasn't hospitalized.

He says patrols have been increased in the area for as long as security has the resources and until problems arise elsewhere.

Boudreault says he has no reason to believe the incident is linked to any other previous assaults on campus.

The Foot Patrol provides escorts to people until 1 a.m. seven days a week and the security van operates until 2 a.m. Monday to Friday.

Boudreault says anyone worried about their safety can call security at 788-3612 for an escort on campus outside of these hours. □

FORUM cont'd from page 3

tion, tuition will increase, but the Ontario minister of colleges and universities won't decide exactly what the increase will be until April.

Farquhar said as Carleton has more students and fewer staff members every year, it will become inaccessible because it will have to start turning students away. One student replied that university will become inaccessible because students will not be able to afford it.

Farquhar said expanding student aid programs might help cash-strapped students, but stressed that if tuition doesn't increase, staff will not be able to meet students' needs. □

COMMISSIONER cont'd from page 3

Watson says lobbying administrators will be tough because it is hard to make administration understand the concerns students have.

"A lot of people just don't understand what you mean when you say 'I don't feel comfortable standing at the bus stop or getting into my car at night,'" she says.

Gilbert says she wants to get students to lobby with her. "I can't do this on my own," Gilbert says. "They (students) need to know that this is not just me (who should be doing this)."

Watson says she hopes Gilbert will "orient herself" to what the job entails before the end of December and get ready for the safety audits she has to do in January.

Gilbert will be working out of the safety commissioner's office on the first floor of the Unicentre, which she will share with CUSA's chief electoral officer.

But until she sets up office hours and moves in, students can get a hold of her through the safety hotline (788-2600, ext. 1777) or the Carleton Women's Centre. □

Ottawa's Meanest wings

only 25¢ each.
at

McGinnis
LANDING
Restaurant

every night after 9:00pm.

Monday: 2 for 1 beef fajitas
Tuesday: 20¢ wings
1896 Prince of Wales Dr.
723-2096
bus route 175

In Concert

andrew cash

and the little ones

presented by

CICU FM 93.1

CHUO FM 89

with special guests

Black Boot Trio

Saturday, November 27
Oliver's Pub, Carleton U.

Harley's

SPORTS COLOSSEUM

- Saturday Nov 27 -
La Senza Lingerie Fashion Show

Don't forget! FREE shuttle bus for all

Senators' home games

1500 Bank St., Blue Heron Mall, 526-2685

Harley's

"Friendly & Affordable"

73 York Street on the Market
15 Robertson Road in Bells Corners
2655 Queensview Drive off Pinecrest

THE ROOFTOP

Fridays & Saturdays

$2.50 Subsidized BEV Rages $2.50

73 York Street, Byward Market, 230-9347

DENIM & DIAMONDS

SALOON

Mosey on over!

Entertainment Line-Up
Nov 25 - 27
Lone Star Oasis
Dec 2 - 3
Steve Agnew & Heart of Country

Queensway at St-Laurent exit, 748-7454

THANK, BUD, IT'S FRIDAY

Bud City

T.B.I.F.

Join the Party Every Friday with Energy 1200's Robert W. Knight
Meet your friends at Bud's Rooftop
Great Drinks & Appetizers Happy Hour!

THANK, BUD, IT'S FRIDAY

1440 Mervale Road at Baseline, 224-3308

RESTAURANT BAR & HOTEL STAFF

Are YOU working New Year's Eve? Our 2nd Annual anticipated PRE New Year's Eve Party is coming up on Wednesday, December 29. Ottawa's BEST New Year's Eve Simulation!

PRE NEW YEAR'S EVE

50% IS TOO MUCH!

RALLY!

Friday, November 26, 12:30 on MacKenzie Field

Send a clear message to Dr. Farquhar.
TOGETHER WE CAN STOP THE WAR ON STUDENTS!

PROTEST UNDERFUNDING!

As the single most pressing issue threatening accessibility to Ontario's post-secondary institutions today, this increase must be stopped.

MAKE YOUR VOICE HEARD...

Send letters, sign petitions (available in the CUSA office, room 401 Unicentre), or phone your MPP:

Evelyn Gigantes... (416) 585-7111
Floyd Laughren..... (416) 325-0400
Bob Rae..... (416) 325-1941
Dave Cooke..... (416) 325-2600

Help bring this issue out into the open in Provincial Parliament – call the opposition to inform them of your concerns.

Dalton McGuinty (Liberal) (416) 325-7263
Dianne Cunningham (P.C.) (416) 325-7744

Ontario Public Interest Research Group

Canadian Federation of Students
Fédération canadienne des étudiantes et étudiants

NATIONAL AFFAIRS

Aboriginal commission hears students

by Doug Johnson
Charlatan Staff

There is increased need for cross-cultural understanding between Canada's Native and non-Native populations, a panel of Carleton students told members of the Royal Commission on Aboriginal Peoples Nov. 16.

"We have to help the non-aboriginal, to teach them about our rights, to teach them about our culture," said Carleton student Simeonie Kunnuk, an Inuk person from Igloolik, N.W.T.

"There is a tremendous ignorance about aboriginal people by non-aboriginal people. Many of my friends have never met an aboriginal person," said commissioner and former Supreme Court justice Bertha Wilson.

The five-member panel of students consisted of three aboriginal and two non-aboriginal students, who presented to three commissioners. The commission called the students together as part of its mandate to examine the situation of aboriginal youth. About 50 per cent of the aboriginal population is under the age of 25.

According to the federal Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development, there were 21,523 status Indians attending post-secondary institutions in the 1991-92 fiscal year. The 1991 census recorded there are close to 250,000 status Indians in Canada.

These figures do not represent a clear picture of the aboriginal student population, as there are over 1 million people of aboriginal descent in Canada, but most are not recognized by the federal government as status Indians because their peoples never completed treaties with the Canadian government.

The royal commission was formed early in 1992 to examine the situation of Canada's aboriginal peoples. The commission is in its fourth and final round of hearings and will report to Parliament next fall on what should be done to alleviate the situation of Canadian abo-consultations with university students. On Nov. 18, representatives of the commission met with students at Concordia University in Montreal and York University in Toronto. As well, the Canadian Federation of Students made a presentation about funding for aboriginal colleges and universities to the commission in Ottawa on the same date.

At the Carleton hearing, Kunnuk used the example of a two-row wampum to rate significant events in a nation's history, such as treaties.

Without the two-row wampum, Kunnuk said, there will be no way to achieve an understanding.

Another student, Tim O'Loan, a Dogrib from Somba Ké (Yellowknife), N.W.T., agreed there is more of a need to understand the aboriginal situation in Canada, especially many communities' living conditions.

"There are a lot of Davis Inlets across Canada," he said. The Innu community of Davis Inlet came to national attention last year after videotapes of children sniffing gasoline in an unheated shack and wishing to die to escape the conditions they lived in was broadcast on CNN.

The Labrador community, a collection of plywood shacks without running water, has suffered years of government neglect because neither the Newfoundland or federal governments say they are responsible for helping the people.

However, O'Loan said he feels there must be an examination of the problems facing aboriginal communities before they are solved.

"This, what we are doing (with the commission), is white society and it is important for non-aboriginals to see our society," said aboriginal student Cynthia Asp.

Some ways of increasing understanding between the two peoples would be bringing elders into schools and forcing the federal government to recognize traditional aboriginal forms of government, she told the commission. □ original peoples.

The panel (L to R): Marquise Dupré, Tim O'Loan, Christopher Paci, Cynthia Asp, Simeonie Kunnuk, and Simon Brascoupe.

The student panel fulfils the need to have the voices of aboriginal youth heard in the commission's work, said Patricia Sauls, the commission's special team assistant for youth, in a press release before the hearing.

The Carleton panel was one of three illustrate the idea of parallel understanding between the aboriginals and non-aboriginals. A wampum is a belt of colored shell beads with the rows of beads forming patterns. In two-row wampum, the lines of beads run parallel but never cross, symbolizing equality yet difference. The belts were constructed to commemo-

Student leaders fear fee hikes, start protests

by Sara-Lynne Levine
Charlatan Staff

Students and university officials are still in the dark about when details of possible tuition hikes will be released by the provincial NDP government.

On Nov. 17, Liberal MPP Dalton McGuinty (Ottawa South) questioned education and training minister David Cooke in the Ontario legislature, pressuring him to release information about the proposed hikes.

He asked Cooke "what assurance can you give Ontario university students that their fees will not increase by anything more than a moderate increase?"

Cooke responded with only a vague answer, saying there were a lot of rumors about the government's plans and he "wouldn't jump to any conclusions about a tuition increase."

Cooke did not indicate when he will release his decision about raising the ceiling on universities' tuition fee increases. Last year, the government announced in November that universities would be allowed to raise tuition by a maximum of seven per cent.

Many people are expecting a large increase in the ceiling for tuition fee increases, which is set by the government each year. This speculation has followed a proposal submitted to the government by the Council of Ontario Universities this summer, which called for tuition increases of 30 to 50 per cent over the next two years.

The proposal also said these tuition hikes must be accompanied by reform of the student loan system. The council suggested implementing an income-contingent loan repayment system, whereby students would pay back their loans as a percentage of their income after graduation.

Following the report's release, Cooke said there would be a "substantial" increase in the ceiling for tuition hikes and that he did not consider seven per cent—the maximum allowed in the last three years—substantial.

Carleton President Robin Farquhar said the council's report, which was put together at the request of Cooke, has been misconstrued by many groups.

"The council proposed a package," said Farquhar, the university's representative on the council. "While it was suggested that tuition be increased, it was proposed that tuition not go up without a more adequate form of student aid programs and students having a say in how that money be spent."

Farquhar said the increase in revenue is needed to ensure that access to university is maintained. He said he expects the announcement of an increase either before Christmas, early in 1994, or at the end of the fiscal year in March. In any case, said Farquhar, Cooke will make the announcement when it is "politically advantageous."

Cooke has "failed to understand the concerns of students and is proceeding with his own agenda," said Kristine Haselsteiner, vice-president external of Carleton University Students' Association.

She also said Carleton administrators have "missed the boat" in supporting a substantial tuition fee hike. "Suggesting increasing tuition goes with the increase in accessibility is a misnomer," she says.

Haselsteiner said she is also unsure of when the announcement of the tuition fee ceiling will be made. □

by Karolina Srutek
Charlatan Staff

Many university students in Ottawa are voicing their anger over the proposed tuition hikes of up to 50 per cent they say the provincial government is considering.

On Nov. 17, the student federation at the University of Ottawa organized a large rally to protest rising tuition. The Carleton University Students' Association is planning a similar rally for Nov. 26.

Student concern about substantial tuition hikes began this summer, when the Council of Ontario Universities released a report which called for increases in tuition fees between 30 and 50 per cent for some programs over the next two years.

The University of Ottawa used many strategies to send their message to MPP David Cooke, the minister of education and training, says Carole Sauvé, vice-president external at U of O.

She says the student federation organized a three-week letter-writing campaign and a petition that was signed by 21 per cent of the student body.

"We had a two-and-a-half-week mobilization campaign with posters in residence, faculty clubs and societies. . . . The rally became a buzz word around campus and that's what made it a success," says Sauvé.

The rally began at Tabaret Hall and proceeded to Parliament Hill. Once on the Hill, the students waved home-made placards and chanted Jean Chrétien's name, hoping the new prime minister would come out and address the crowd.

"We yelled close to an hour for Chrétien, but he never came," says Guy Caron, the president of the student federation. "The students were getting pissed off and just wanted to speak to Chrétien's representatives about the underfunding and tuition increases."

While Sauvé estimates the number of students at the rally was about 1,000,

Jessica Gould, a third-year Carleton journalism student at the rally, says the students numbered closer to 500. But she says the rally was still successful because the students made an effort to voice their concerns.

"It was interesting to see there was so much spirit," says Gould. "I don't know if it made much of a difference, but if someone saw it, it did."

Theresa Cowan, CUSA's director of services, and Kristine Haselsteiner, CUSA's vice-president external, are planning a similar rally at Carleton.

"It's just a matter of getting the students out," says Cowan. "This rally gives the students a forum to get together (and) say, 'We are all in the same boat' and make an impact."

The rally is scheduled to begin at 12:30 p.m. at Mackenzie Field, the grass area near the Unicentre. Haselsteiner says protesters will march around campus and end up in front of the administration building, where speeches will be given by student representatives.

"The rally is on campus, so it's more accessible to students, and makes it easier for them to attend and to show their support."

Haselsteiner says the rally may also continue over to the office of Evelyn Gigante, the NDP Ottawa Centre MPP.

Although speakers haven't yet been confirmed, Haselsteiner says they will include different members of Carleton's student community.

Posters are being put up and table-topper pamphlets have been placed in Rooster's and Oliver's publicizing the rally, says Haselsteiner. CUSA has also attended club meetings and sent out letters to societies asking for support.

As well, she says petitions have been circulated and sent to Carleton President Robin Farquhar and Les Copley, vice-president of academics, telling administration of students' discontent with the threatened hikes. □

Guatemalan activists call for results

by Kathleen Jacobs
Charlatan Staff

Helen Mack and Fernando Lopez want the world to know about the human rights violations in Guatemala.

In the past 35 years, 100,000 people have been murdered and another 40,000 have simply vanished. One-third of all reported disappearances in Latin America have occurred there.

Mack and Lopez told about the violations they have seen in their country at their talk in Ottawa on Nov. 13.

Lopez is a lawyer in the human rights office in the Roman Catholic Archdiocese of Guatemala, while Mack is a civil rights activist. She won the 1992 Swedish Right Livelihood Award, also called the Alternative Nobel Prize. It is awarded to people who work to end problems such as social injustice and human repression.

Guatemala had a democratic government from 1944 until 1954. However, a coup against the government in 1954 began a period of instability and military rule that has continued until the present. Since early 1993, Ramiro de Leon Carpio has been the Guatemalan president.

"By definition, respect for human rights is a matter of state policy, but just as the state can be the principal interpreter of this policy, it can also be its principal violator," Mack said of the country's military dictatorship. "The most basic right — the right to life — has been constantly violated in Guatemala."

Mack's involvement with civil rights began after her sister, Myrna, was fatally stabbed 27 times outside her office building in 1990. As an anthropologist, her sister was working on a research project funded by Georgetown University, examining the potential resettlement of Guatemalan refugees.

In the early 1980s, the Guatemalan military carried out a counter-insurgency program, killing between 50,000 and 75,000 people.

"The army's logic was that anyone who was not on their side was an insurgent," Lopez said, speaking through an interpreter from Ottawa's St. Paul University.

A similar policy gave the military licence to assassinate whole villages. In fear, some Guatemalans fled to the cities, some fled into the jungle, and still others fled to Mexico.

The United Nations High Commission on Refugees recognizes there are 43,000 documented Guatemalans in Mexico today.

Mack said the government was concerned about her sister's research in this area and sent a special commando of the Security Forces to assassinate her.

Mack became a national figure in her quest to bring her sister's killer to justice. Though she was successful, she said she must move beyond her personal goals now and concentrate on the needs of the Guatemalan community.

Mack is designing a legal education program so lawyers and citizens of Guatemala will have the knowledge and ability to fight for their basic human rights.

Lopez said the system makes sure it does not provide any civil rights education to young lawyers.

"The fight against repression in Guatemala begins with education," he said.

Mack and Lopez said they want to bring the situation in Guatemala to the world's attention, since their government responds only when the international community is watching.

Lopez said the government has been known to stop harassing Guatemalan citizens after receiving letters of protest from foreign countries.

"It is very sad to see that just a card from a foreigner to the department is more important than a law passed by the National Assembly," said Lopez.

Human rights activist Helen Mack gets the word out on Guatemala.

He said the Guatemalan government has been condemned by the United Nations as a human rights violator for the past four years.

Lopez said although the number of people being kidnapped or killed has decreased since 1992, the repression has not stopped.

He said there is a feeling of terror left over from the 1980s, when the majority of killings happened. The government avoids mass killings which receive outside attention and concentrates instead on selective murdering of important political opponents. "The state knows this is sufficient enough to convince any Guatemalan not sympathetic to the government not to speak out," said Lopez.

Sanctions in Serbia are affecting students

by Aleksandar Mitic

Aleksandar Mitic is a second-year journalism student at Carleton. This is his first year studying in Canada. His father is a diplomat in the Yugoslav Embassy in Ottawa.

When I transferred to Carleton last July from the University of Belgrade in Serbia, I was happy and satisfied.

To be accepted into second-year journalism at Carleton University is not an easy task.

But as much as I celebrated this great opportunity, I could not forget my colleagues from Belgrade. Not only because I have a lot of friends there or because my girlfriend still goes to University of Belgrade, but also because of the incredible conditions that students in Serbia have to face.

These conditions are largely provoked by the United Nations' sanctions imposed on Yugoslavia (or Serbia and Montenegro) a year and a half ago.

The sanctions were imposed because of the speculation that Serbia is acting as an aggressor in Bosnia. Western governments and war leaders have since admitted that the war in Bosnia is a civil war.

No fuel is allowed to get in, there is no foreign trade and Yugoslav assets around the world have been frozen.

The economic situation in Serbia causes big problems for the University of Belgrade — one of the most respected universities in Eastern Europe — and for its students.

There is very little food. Flour, vegetable oil, sugar and milk are rationed. Generally, meat is too expensive for most families to eat more than once a month.

Transportation in Belgrade is awful. Gas is too expensive and hard to find. Most of the Belgrade's 2 million inhabitants have to take the bus. I remember waiting hours for a bus that would come packed. It was impossible to get in.

Recently, Belgrade newspapers reported that when a bus broke down while passing over a bridge, its driver counted the number of passengers: 462 people were riding the bus made for 160.

It would be funny if it wasn't sad.

I could never imagine that the pictures of the overcrowded buses in Third World countries I used to watch on television would happen in Belgrade.

There is a popular joke about buses in Belgrade: Two friends are riding an overcrowded bus. One says: "Gee, we are packed like sardines in a can." The other responds: "Well, no, the sardines have at least oil to breathe."

As winter approaches, memories come to my mind. Memories of cold. Since Serbia is not allowed to import fuel or gas, heating is poor. Last year, I was freezing in my house, freezing on the streets, freezing at school.

In fact, schools had heat from 8 a.m. to 10 a.m. When I had lectures or discussion groups in the evening, I had to dress up really warm.

Resources are also scarce. There is a lack of such basic materials as test tubes, not to mention other, more sophisticated, but indispensable tools.

Faculties like science, engineering and medicine cannot afford to import the new technologies needed to advance their learning. Even if they had the money, they cannot import them because of the sanctions.

Professors cannot afford to travel abroad and participate in international conferences to present papers or gain connections and knowledge.

It is very hard to print new books because there is a shortage of paper and it is expensive. Students can barely afford to buy them.

And what about the other needs of an average student?

Serbia cannot import foreign movies or other cultural products. The sanctions forbid foreign artists to perform in Serbia. No Serbian sports team is allowed to play outside the country, nor is there a possibility for a foreign team to visit Serbia officially.

Just imagine that, for example, the Blue Jays were not allowed to play in the World Series again. That is exactly what happened to Red Star, the Serbian soccer team from Belgrade. A few months after winning the World Club Championship in soccer in December 1991, the sanctions stopped the team from playing. Red Star from Belgrade did not even have a chance to defend its title in the next World Cup.

That is how life goes on these days in Belgrade.

Serbians are the prisoners of the war in neighboring Bosnia with which they, as people, don't have anything to do with.

But they suffer from the most outrageous sanctions ever imposed on a nation.

They are prisoners of the image of "Serbian barbarisms" that the media has created.

They are prisoners of the future, not so bright, for them and their children.

But the students of the University of Belgrade are prisoners with hope. With hope for change, they have the enthusiasm to go on despite the abnormal conditions. They continue to work at their studies with a will for change, with certainty that they will change the fate of the Serbian nation.

No matter how hard the times are, students work even harder. There is no doubt that they will make it. And I must say that I am very proud, as much as I am proud of being a student of Carleton University, of being a student of the University of Belgrade. I am proud of having friends and colleagues who are persistent and courageous people.

Simon says "This is a stick-up."

Simon says jump up and down. Simon says touch your nose. Do you remember playing Simon Says? If you don't, the principle behind it is simple. Simon gives more and more demands to the group faster and faster until the players get confused and don't do what Simon says.

Little did we know back then that we were training ourselves for the "real world."

Although we don't know when the official announcement will be, it is expected that students will be paying higher tuition fees again next year.

Just like players in Simon Says, students must simply fill the demands. They have not been involved in the decision-making process.

The Council of Ontario Universities submitted a report to the provincial government in August, suggesting tuition increases of 30 to 50 per cent over the next two years. The council is made up mostly of university presidents, not students or professors.

Universities need students as much as students need universities. Therefore, students should be involved in proposals to deal with cuts to education.

A major factor in tuition increases is that government funding to universities has not kept up with enrolment. The generation before us has become accustomed to living beyond their means. Now they are making cuts to education that are affecting us. The Council of Ontario Universities is trying to find a solution to these cuts with their proposals to the Ontario government.

The council is telling students not to worry because they are planning a more extensive and accessible loan system. According to the proposal, this system will be partially funded by the increase in tuition revenues.

But more loans means more debt and dependency for students. They will be expected to pay back the loan after they have graduated. According to the proposal, the amount and how soon students must pay back loans would be dependent upon how much they will be earning after graduation.

With the present economy and the low value of an arts or science degree in the job market, I have trouble believing this program will not create a massive debt by students who are unable to pay. Then what will "Simon" say?

Whether or not the council's proposals are approved, tuition has been increasing every year and there's no reason for it to stop now. Statistics Canada recently released a report saying in the past five years tuition has increased by an average 58 per cent across Canada.

The demands "Simon" is making are becoming increasingly difficult to bear.

Within the bad economic climate, most students are starting off from a position of disadvantage, before even facing unreasonable tuition. We are also entering a job market which is increasingly demanding higher education.

The federal Department of Human Resources Development says 49 per cent of the jobs in the '90s will require the equivalent of a college or university education. This is an increase from 23 per cent in 1986. So we can't afford to educate ourselves and we can't afford not to.

Once we put the possible tuition hike in context, more and more is being asked of students.

We need to start making acts of protest a priority in our lives. If "Simon" tells us he does not want to hear our voices, we must show him we will not follow his lead in numb silence.

As a student you can call or write your member of provincial parliament and demand a solution which includes your viewpoint.

Keep your eyes open for protests and attend. You can start at the student rally at Mackenzie Field on Nov. 26.

I never liked the hierarchical structure of Simon Says. I didn't like it then and I don't like it now. "Simon" shouldn't just be telling students what to do—he should be listening to what we have to say.

Students, as the potential decision-makers of tomorrow, don't have to follow "Simon's" lead without question. It is much to early to simply give in to tuition hikes without a fight.

AG

OPINION

Newsflash -- JFK died 30 years ago

by Sara-Lynne Levine
Charlatan Staff

For those of you who live under a rock, this year is the 30th anniversary of John F. Kennedy's assassination on Nov. 22, 1963.

For weeks, I have been barraged with magazine articles, television reports and those annoying movies-of-the-week.

"The Truth About JFK" screamed one magazine headline. JFK: Reckless Youth and Marina Oswald: Her Story were shown on television. The Ottawa Citizen ran a Touchline number where people could call in to answer the question "Where were you on Nov. 22, 1963?"

The media has gone crazy over JFK. Without fail, magazine, newspapers and television networks have been competing with each other to woo readers and viewers with "new information" or "the truth" behind his death.

It is true that Kennedy died under somewhat questionable circumstances. For years, people have speculated and theorized about what really happened. But lately, the speculation has gone too far.

The Kennedy story has been done to death (excuse the pun). The media has taken an event worthy of mention and blown it widely out of proportion.

A huge mystique has been built up around Kennedy. People are fascinated with this man, who had more charisma than political accomplishments.

Kennedy did represent a number of firsts. He was the first Irish Catholic president. He was also the first television-friendly president. Perhaps his biggest accomplishment was that he knew how to use the media to portray himself in a positive light.

There is no denying that Kennedy meant a lot of things to a lot of people. His death had a great effect on everyone, but this does not mean that it should be used as a money-maker for the media.

The other problem with the focus on Kennedy is that he continues to be portrayed unrealistically. Despite the almost saint-like aura surrounding him, Kennedy was not an exceptional president. He was in office for less than three years and in that time, he accomplished no memorable feat.

People also tend to overlook or excuse his sordid love affairs with numerous women. They don't seem to let evidence that he had an affair with Marilyn Monroe and Angie Dickinson affect their high opinion of him.

Still, Canadians remember Kennedy as lovingly as Americans. My mom has told me where she was and how she felt when Kennedy died. When I was younger, even I was in awe of Kennedy. I saw pictures of this handsome man, his pretty wife and young family.

When I was in high school, I read a book called Four Days. It was a pictorial of the four days immediately following the assassination. The one photo that stayed in my mind was the picture of Jackie Kennedy getting off Air Force One in Washington, her dress splattered with blood.

Kennedy's assassination does set him apart from most American presidents. However, Abraham Lincoln was also assassinated and we do not have to endure the "untold truth" or the "conspiracy theory" behind Lincoln's assassination.

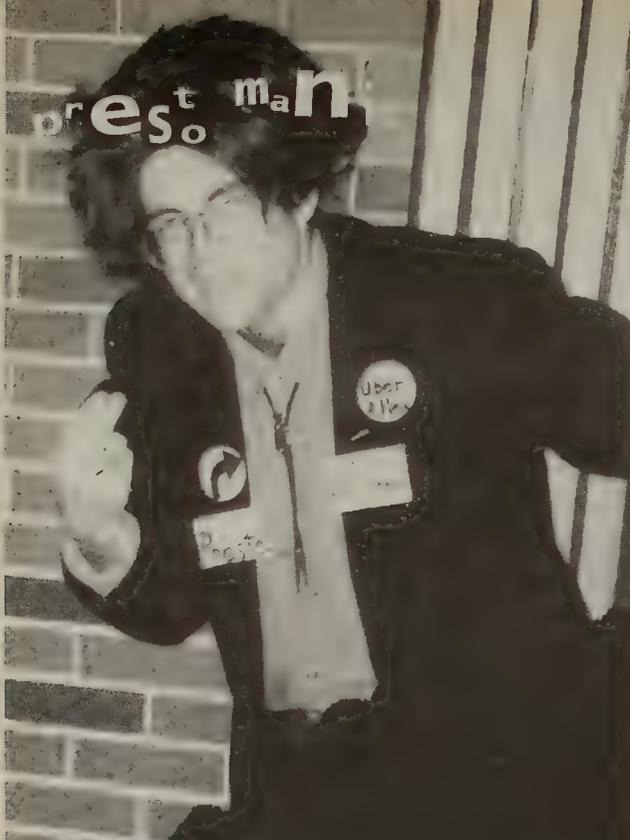

I'm sick of the hype. At one point, I was interested in the anniversary and I actually thought "Boy, I hope someone does something." Well, I learned my lesson—be careful for what you wish for because you just might get it.

The anniversary of his death deserves some recognition, but not the media circus that has ensued.

JFK is dead. Let him rest in peace.

The Charlatan welcomes all letters and opinion pieces. Letters should not be more than 250 words and opinion pieces not more than 700 words. Pieces may be edited for length or clarity. The deadline is Tuesday at noon. Include your name, signature, faculty, year and PHONE NUMBER or your letter won't be published. Phone numbers are for verification only and won't be published. Send to: The Charlatan, Room 531 Unkentre, Carleton University, 1125 Colonel By Drive, Ottawa, Ont. K1S 5B6.

presto man

What is racism?

Racism doesn't exist is RACISM
 You people are taking over, is RACISM
 You people are so exotic is RACISM
 Where are you from is RACISM
 I don't think of you as of color is RACISM
 You people are dirty is RACISM
 You're such quaint little people is RACISM
 You're taking our jobs away is RACISM
 You people are good at math is RACISM
 I am a victim of reverse racism, is RACISM
 There is a "black cloud" over us is RACISM
 If I get a tan I'll be of color is RACISM

These statements are examples of stereotypical characterizations of specific races or ethnicities. Negative personal behavior that discriminates against individuals of a racial, religious or national group dehumanizes and ridicules. Individual acts of prejudice become especially potent when they both support and perpetuate wider societal racism.

- from Cultural Etiquette by Amoja Three Rivers

by Heather Farrow

Heather Farrow is a co-ordinator at OPIRG-Carleton. She has researched and had practical experience with popular theatre.

Popular theatre can be both useful as a form of entertainment and as an educational tool for challenging racist, sexist and otherwise phobic stereotypes.

Popular theatre is any kind of skit, song, puppet show, rap, dance or combination thereof, which is created or partially written by the performers. The popular theatre participants can be anyone, but they usually have some relation to the issues addressed in the play or skit.

At Carleton, popular theatre has been used previously in conjunction with Eating Disorders Awareness Week and date rape prevention campaigns.

Popular theatre can include audience participation in the form of discussions or "stop theatre." It can also be used within activist groups as a way of learning about an issue.

Popular theatre is most effective if the actors/activists are personally involved with the play's subject matter. For instance, the OPIRG-initiated play Dirty Talk about date rape was partially created by women who had experienced this form of violence.

The following lists a variety of kinds of popular theatre and how they can be used to amuse and amaze.

Role play: By assuming another role, a person can explore what it would be like to be in situations outside their own experience. Very basic role play can be used within group meetings or during training sessions.

For instance, I once initiated a role play during a volunteer training session, when we wanted to explore racism within the office. I played a volunteer who tells another volunteer who comes in late that "she is always late and just because that's the way her people operate, it isn't the way it should be done." The improvised skit developed in some very interesting directions, where many racist stereotypes were explored through a discussion which occurred during and after the role play.

Short sketches: Short sketches or skits can be used as educational "attention getters" within a university centre or at the beginning of a meeting.

For example, during Hate Hurts Week this year, people in the Carleton Unicentre met "Presto Manic," through a short sketch which provided a satirical look at the "Uninformed Party." "Presto" and his companion (me) roamed around the Unicentre talking to various folks about the party's ludicrous policies. At times we engaged in lively discussions with possible supporters of that other party, whose name rhymes with "deform."

The variety of responses taught us versatility and strategy as actors, while perhaps exposing some scary hate-mongering by the "Uninformed Party" by expanding on real quotations from Presto's real-life political party.

Stop theatre: During this kind of sketch, the audience is asked to shout "stop" when they don't like what is going on in the skit and then come into the skit and replace the actor.

I was involved with this kind of theatre during a short play about "ending the silence about violence" called Collateral Damages. As an audience member, I yelled "stop" when I thought one of the actors was being silenced by being told that the loud shouting going on at the neighbors "always happened" and was to be ignored. I replaced the actor and continued the scene, where I attempted to end the woman's silence.

Street Theatre: Street theatre or guerrilla theatre are plays and sketches that can take place anywhere. At a rally or march, or on its own, street theatre is an excellent way to attract attention and foster support. Making large costumes, masks or disguises can also add to this kind of popular theatre.

For instance, the Raging Grannies are a dynamic singing, costume-wearing, fun group of older women who help all kinds of rallies come to life.

Puppets: Think you're too shy? Using puppets is a great way to get around this because you get to hide and only your hands show. A great example is the tour Puppets Against AIDS, which came to Canada from South Africa in 1992. By teaching people to make and use puppets, all kinds of people created their own skits about AIDS and educated themselves and others about a very important, yet sometimes hard-to-talk-about topic.

Well, if you think I've been trying to sell you popular theatre you're probably right. It adds something quite unique and memorable to a rally or information table, unlike what a speaker or visual display alone can do.

When you go to a rally which includes a skit or costumed rally rousers, it can become more interesting and appealing to the press. As an example of a good attention-getter, I'm in the process of trying to create a huge Chrétien head which can be signed out from the OPIRG office for various rallies and events.

Popular theatre is a great way to subvert conventional stereotypes and showcase progressive opinions that often get overlooked or suppressed by the mainstream media. So get out there and remember: BE BRAVE, BE LOUD and have fun!

CHARLATAN
 UNDERSTANDING COMMUNITY DEVELOPMENT

WORLD INTER-ACTION MONDIALE presents

OPIRG-Carleton
 325 Unicentre
 Carleton University

THIRD WORLD BAZAAR

from all over the world, colourful and unusual gifts, hand-crafted by third world artisans

Carleton University
 Porter Hall, 2nd Floor, Unicentre
 Monday, November 29 to Thursday, December 2
 Open 10 am - 8 pm daily
 (except Monday 11 am - 8 pm)

The third world bazaar is operated on behalf of WIAM by the East Asia Company Ltd.

H A T E

by Matthew Bruce

Matthew Bruce is a fourth-year psychology student at Carleton and a member of Anti-Racist Action.

Anti-Racist Action is a group of individuals who want to help stop racism, sexism, homophobia and ableism on all levels.

Our members come from many walks of life and range from high-school students to adults with careers.

Many of us have experienced some form of discrimination first-hand, be it institutional or social. We try to remain as non-partisan as possible, but we will take a stance on specific issues like the pro-choice movement.

There are many chapters of Anti-Racist Action in cities all over North America, but as far as we are concerned, the actions of one chapter are not necessarily representative of the other groups.

Anti-Racist Action Ottawa, which had its first meeting in March, was formed for two reasons. At the time there was an absence of any non-partisan anti-racist groups in the city. We were also motivated by the fact that the Heritage Front was mobilizing in Ottawa and then set up a hate line in May.

Similar to the hate line in Toronto, it was used to spread slanderous and racist messages. However, a recent court decision has forced the Heritage Front to remove all such messages in Ottawa.

We have also participated in and helped organize several marches in Ottawa and Montreal, including the Gay Pride march, the rally against Jean-Marie LePen of the Front National (France's version of the highly fascist National Front) in Montreal, and yes, the notorious protest against the Heritage Front's "Rock for Racism" on May 29.

It was at that fateful rally that we were singled out by the media and blamed for the crowd's rowdy behavior towards police and Front members alike. We were also blamed for the ensuing night of violence on Bank Street and Parliament Hill, courtesy of the Heritage Front. Although the media portrays us as a bunch of thugs, we are actually a swell bunch of non-violent folks.

Anti-Racist Action is not just interested in waving placards at the drop of a hat - we are also interested in education. Aside from the fact that education is a valuable tool, we have taken our fight to the schools because the Heritage Front has been distributing hate literature and recruiting new members there.

Accordingly, we have tried to set up chapters in local high schools. Since that doesn't always work (the high schools won't officially let us in because of our "violent" reputation), we also help form affiliate groups like the Association to Promote Equality, whose goals are the same, but whose name isn't attached with the same stigma as Anti-Racist Action's. We don't have any university chapters at the moment, but plans are in the works.

On Nov. 20, we held a Rock Against Racism concert at Carleton. Rap, funk and punk bands were featured, as well as an information area where local interest groups were able to enlighten concert-goers and talk about their causes. The show made about $1,400 before costs and all proceeds from this show will go towards Anti-Racist Action's past and future projects.

Now more than ever, discrimination - at all levels - is on the rise in Ottawa. The scapegoating of immigrants for the economic downturn is just one example. We need to work together and show groups like the Heritage Front that they're not welcome - now or ever.

Anyone who is interested in joining Anti-Racist Action or just taking part in one of our meetings can find us in Room 140 of the Simard Building at the University of Ottawa every Tuesday at 7 p.m. Heritage Front members need not apply.

Asians are not "mysterious," "fatalistic," or "inscrutable."

Native peoples are not stoic, mystical or vanishing.

Latin American people are no more hot-tempered, hot-blooded, or emotional than anyone else.

We do not have flashing eyes, teeth or daggers. We are lovers pretty much like other people. Very few of us deal with any kind of drugs.

Middle Easterners are not fanatics, terrorists, or all oil-rich.

Jewish people are not necessarily rich, clannish or expert in money matters.

Not all African Americans are poor, athletic, or ghetto-dwellers.

Most Asians in the U.S. are not scientists, mathematicians, geniuses, or wealthy.

Southerners are no less intelligent than anyone else.

- taken from Cultural Etiquette by Amoja Three Rivers.

PHOTO BY SHAWN SCALLEN

by Andrea Smith and Karin Jordan
Charlatanradicalweaselkickin/politichycky

You may not think you identify with feminism, but pretend for a minute. Pretend you support equal pay for work of equal value, an end to sexual harassment, reproductive rights and choices, universal daycare, the right to be accurately represented in courses, texts and language, to go on a date without being raped and to walk alone at night without feeling threatened, to mention but a few of the more liberal tenets of the feminisms that exist.

Most of us agree that these are good things, while recognizing that a woman's ideology will be affected by her race, class and sexual orientation.

But another group of women who say they have women's best interests in mind have been receiving a good deal of press. They say that by pursuing these goals under the banner of feminism, you may be building your identity around "victimhood." These women are just the tip of the iceberg, but they're representative of the anti-feminist sentiment that's out there. In two articles and two books these authors construct a monolithic, homogeneous "feminism." In all four cases, their constructions are poorly researched, if at all beyond talking to a few friends. Based on this caricature of a social movement, they then go about criticizing feminism. None of the authors pay attention to the tenet of feminism, which discourages the use of sweeping generalizations, because as a movement it represents a cross-section of women from many different backgrounds.

For instance, in the September/October issue of Mother Jones, Karen Lehrman criticizes women's studies and feminism in general as being "too political." She claims that all of the classes she attended at four American universities had "strong political undercurrents," and that politics has "infected women's studies scholarship." As if any university-produced knowledge is apolitical.

In the October 1993 issue of the Atlantic Monthly, Wendy Kaminer attempts to argue that feminism is fraught with contradictions, and again, that feminists construct their identities around "victimology." She complains that "political correctness" dominates the discourse of feminism and women's studies.

Kaminer also claims that this censorship from within the feminist movement has silenced such critics as Camille Paglia. Says Kaminer: "She is generally considered by most feminists to be pro-rape, because she has offered this advice to young women: don't get drunk at fraternity parties, don't accompany boys to their rooms, realize that sexual freedom entails sexual risks, and take some responsibility for your choices."

Kaminer's argument is echoed in The Morning After: Sex, Fear and Feminism on Campus, by Katie Roiphe, a 24-year-old Harvard grad and Princeton student. Roiphe tries to argue that feminism is built around a culture of victimhood which strips women of their power. Based on her experiences in the privileged halls of the Ivy League, she argues we have become "hypersensitive" about date rape and sexual harassment on campus.

She argues that North American women today are "a generation yearning for regulation, fearful of its sexuality and animated by a nostalgia for days of greater social control."

Naomi Wolf, in her new-and-not-all-together-coherent book Fire With Fire, argues that the "bulk of political will now resides with women" after what she calls the "genderquake." This, uh, event, took place during and after the Anita Hill hearings when, Wolf claims, women gained many "concessions" in their favor.

Wolf's list of "concessions" includes such lofty gains as: Deborah Tannen's leadership of a discussion with U.S. Senate members and their wives about gender dynamics and a $264,242 sex discrimination award to New York City policewoman Karen Sorluco, who charged another officer with raping her at gun point.

Wolf goes on to say that despite the "genderquake," feminists have alienated themselves from the majority of women by conflating their collective identity with lesbianism, Marxism, "anti-sexual," "anti-family," and "anti-money" politics. She says this has created a "Club Feminism," inaccessible to the average Jane.

Wolf says the confusion of feminism with lesbianism is why some women to refuse to label themselves as "feminists" despite supporting feminist goals. She argues the distinction should be made more clearly to draw women who might have "difficulties" with lesbianism (read: are homophobic) into the feminist fold.

Wolf buys into the new chorus of dissent about feminism, arguing it endorses an identity of weakness and helplessness. She claims feminism as it stands is a cult of "victimhood," dwelling on women as "powerless" by focusing on issues such as date rape and sexual harassment. Wolf claims that women build their identities around their status as the prey of men in what she calls "victim feminism," which discredits women as powerful-thinking individuals who can make decisions for themselves.

Obviously, she forgot what she wrote in her last book, The Beauty Myth, in which she enumerated the ways Western women have been coerced and "victimized" by the cosmetic and cosmetic surgery mega-industries.

The theme of feminism's fostering of a cult of self-pity prevails in all four works.

Roiphe says women who speak out against date rape and sexual harassment deny their power by automatically assuming that men are stronger and more powerful than them. Not to be outdone, Lehrman makes a similar argument about victimhood, punctuated with photographs of women's studies students made to look sullen and sorrow.

She says the "therapeutic pedagogy" of women's studies reinforces stereotypes of women as irrational and passive, who can only find truth and identity in their victimization.

She even quotes a disgruntled women's studies student who says she "quickly discovered that the way to get A's was to write papers full of guilt and angst about how I'd bought into society's definition of womanhood."

Lehrman says this has developed to the point where, according to one professor she interviews, "most teachers of women's studies presume that if you don't see yourself as a victim, you're in a state of false consciousness, you're 'male-identified.'"

Roiphe also complains about the "rigid orthodoxy" of the feminism she encountered at Harvard, where "you couldn't question the existence of a rape crisis, you couldn't suggest that the fascination with sexual harassment had to do with more than sexual harassment, you couldn't say that Alice Walker was just a bad writer."

These writers and other anti-feminist advocates out there just don't seem to get that women's studies is a tool to challenge the rigid orthodoxy - to use their term - of white, male-centred thoughts and institutions.

Or rather, because of their positions as white, upper-class women, they choose to adopt only those parts of feminism that don't threaten the privilege they enjoy within those institutions.

As Ann Powers writes in a response to Roiphe and Lehrman in the October Village Voice Literary Supplement, "in its basic methodologies, women's studies still intends to disrupt the university and throw into question conventional notions not only of learning, but of the self."

"Conservatives and anyone else who buys the familiar view of 'what a liberal education has to offer' should view women's studies as dangerous, because it threatens to disrupt those conventions once and for all," Powers points out.

Another point which keeps coming up is the idea that women are frightened of power.

Wolf writes, "the realization that women are not at the mercy of historical events but can determine them, strips women of many of the identities of femininity that feel right and comfortable. The female psyche still harbors great ambivalence about claiming power."

Wolf asserts that the greatest obstacle to women is their own fear of responsibility and control, that all they have to do is get over it, and equality will follow. Those who control the bulk of power as things stand, according to Wolf's view, are apparently all too willing to hand it over.

On the topic of sexual harassment, Roiphe claims that unwanted sexual attention by men towards women is "part of nature." So just shut up and accept it, girls, is the underlying message.

On the topic of date rape, Roiphe argues (among other things) that the fear of miscommunication she sees as being at the heart of date rape is due to a "radical shift in college environment" which has meant the "introduction of black kids, Asian kids, Jewish kids (and) kids from the wrong side of the tracks of nearly every railroad in the country."

She attributes the rise in concern about date rape to "the juxtaposition of different cultures."

Roiphe denies the existence of power imbalances between men and women in North American society, saying that it is "insulting" to women to suggest that a male student can sexually harass his female teaching assistant.

Roiphe warns, quoting playwright David Mamet, that feminists "will conjure up the sexist beast if they push far enough." Roiphe's logic follows: if feminists push too hard for equality, men will retaliate brutally. Be nice or else. What all of these people seem to be missing is something feminist theorist bell hooks states clearly and concisely in the September/October 1993 issue of Ms. magazine:

"The essence of feminism is the opposition to patriarchy and to sexist oppression."

"A lot of women who go for the notion of equal rights cannot go for the notion of opposing patriarchy, because that means a fundamental opposition to the culture as a whole. That's more scary to people."

by Janice Giavedoni

Janice Giavedoni is a master's student in the school of social work and is a "bad crip."

Most people in Canada agree it is unacceptable to deny someone access to a job, an apartment, or transportation because of their sex, sexual orientation or the color of their skin.

However, disabled people everywhere cannot live where they want, are likely to be poor and/or unemployed, have restricted freedom with transportation and get little public recognition of their oppression.

Yes, oppression.

We are routinely subjected to systemic discrimination just because we are disabled. This is known as ableism. Prejudices about people with disabilities throughout history are at the foundation of institutional ableism.

There is a need for a distinct term to describe these attitudes. In recognition of this need, I've coined the term cripophobia.

By choosing this word, I intend to reclaim what has been a negative term, transforming it into a term of solidarity and pride. Just as some Black activists have reclaimed the term nigger, and gay and lesbian activists use terms such as fag, queer and dyke, so have disabled people begun to use terms such as crip, cripple, gimp and spaz to demonstrate their solidarity and pride.

There are important parallels to be drawn between homophobia and cripophobia. Homophobia refers to systemic prejudice encountered by gays and lesbians.

The term homophobia - literally meaning fear of homosexuals - highlights the fact that homosexuality is not the problem. The problem is irrational prejudice and fear, which translates into hatred of gays and lesbians.

It is important to realize homophobia is more than individual attitudes. It exemplifies a systemic, historic and well-ingrained attitude in our society and in our actions.

Most importantly, the oppression of gays and lesbians is in the mind of the homophobe, not in the behavior or inherent makeup of the gay or lesbian person.

Cripophobia also recognizes that an individual's physical disability or impairment is not their fault. Cripophobia exists in the minds of those individuals who cannot or will not look beyond a person's impairment.

It is common for both gays and lesbians or disabled persons to be viewed as diseased or sick. The term "passing" suggests that if an individual hides who he or she is, they can pass for "normal." There is the threat that if gays and lesbians or disabled people don't make an effort to hide or rid themselves of what makes them different, they will be subject to blame, ridicule or prejudice.

There is also the fear which people who perceive themselves as normal have of becoming like us - like disabled people, or like gays and lesbians. Our acknowledgement of gay people might force us to recognize our own gay tendencies, something a homophobe is afraid to do. Likewise, acknowledging and respecting disabled people is something a cripophobe might not do because it's a reminder of their vulnerability and perhaps inevitability of becoming disabled.

Cripophobia is based on the notion that some people are inherently inferior and others are "normal" or inherently superior. It is also influenced by the assumption that human difference is equated with

Like homophobia, cripphobia originates in the oppressor's psyche.

moral inferiority. Like homophobia, cripophobia originates in the oppressor's psyche.

There is fear of several things: fear of one's own vulnerability to becoming disabled, fear of relating to someone who seems so different, fear of acknowledging similar human qualities and fear of discomfort. It is socially and systemically accepted fear and hate.

Overt instances of violence towards gays and lesbians are instances of homophobia known as gay-bashing. Although overt hatred of disabled people is not a widely recognized notion, violence specifically targeted at disabled people does exist.

Instances of what I call crip-bashing are likely to be dismissed as extreme or exaggerated, if they are believed at all. However, they must be seen for what they are - part of a continuum which connects them to other more covert but equally injurious cripophobic behavior. There are crimes, such as sexual abuse, directed against disabled peoples because of the perception of us as weak or vulnerable. More significant are the crimes directed against us because of lack of respect by those who believe we are inferior and not worth respecting. Cripophobia is evident in the case worker's penchant for efficiency and cost-control, no matter what the human costs. It is evident in the willingness of some courts when they permit disabled people to commit suicide, or otherwise sanction their death. Some courts in the United States have sanctioned the deaths of disabled people in this way.

We see cripophobia when we see the quickness with which doctors offer abortion as the certain "solution" to a possibly disabled - they say "defective" - fetus.

And we can see cripophobia in the enthusiasm with which disabled people have been sterilized in the past. Eugenics, the forced or coerced sterilization of defective or "deviant" individuals, lost its credibility during World War Two when the Nazis used it.

We see cripophobia when we see the quickness with which doctors offer abortion

as the certain "solution" to a possibly disabled
- they say "defective" - fetus.

Now, neo-eugenic genetic research is trying to identify chromosomal differences ("abnormalities") which may cause particular physical impairments, with the intention of eliminating them.

Not only does this ignore that many disabling conditions result from injuries or aging, but it also calls into question who is deciding what the quality of life for disabled people will be.

In Jerome Bickenbach's book Physical Disability and Social Policy, Pat Israel from the Disabled Women's Network writes that "doctors constantly use very negative terminology to describe a fetus with a disability . . . words such as defective, abnormal and anomaly. I've heard of one doctor telling a pregnant woman 'you have a monster inside of you.'" She writes that this language distorts the decision to terminate a pregnancy.

Before we can begin to understand cripophobia, it is fundamental to understand that a medical condition does not necessarily imply a disabling condition. A person, for example, might be paraplegic and use a wheelchair, but is not sick.

Cripophobic attitudes have been projected on to us throughout our lives and inevitably lead to internalized cripophobia. Analogous to internalized homophobia, it projects the negative attitudes back to the oppressed person, creating self-doubt, lowered self-esteem and self-hate.

For instance, when a disabled person and a non-disabled person are in a relationship, it is almost inevitable that people will assume inadequacies on the part of the disabled partner.

I've heard of one non-disabled person being told, "You shouldn't really go out with him because he'll just bring you down. You've got so much going for you."

And then I've heard one disabled woman being told, when she had a non-disabled boyfriend, "Oh, you're setting your sights too high. Why don't you find a nice disabled man and why don't you know your own limits."

Given that there are shared aspects of gay and lesbian and disabled people's histories, it makes one wonder about the future for gays and disabled people alike. If, for instance, it became possible to determine sexual orientation through prenatal screening (assuming that gay- and lesbian-ness is genetic), would it become sanctioned to terminate such a pregnancy?

What if all genetically transmitted "impairments" could be eliminated? What happens when a pregnant woman finds out her fetus is genetically "defective" but wants to bring her child into the world anyway? Will she be allowed to do so or will she be forced by new legislation to abort it?

Despite the obvious parallels between cripophobia and other, more widely recognized forms of oppression, it remains typical that the oppression of disabled people has been ignored, even by those who easily recognize the discrimination imposed on other groups.

For example, gay rights activist Lawrence Mass proclaimed that "everyone who is not grossly homophobic now agrees that like blacks, whites, Jews, Christians, women, men and heterosexuals, homosexuals are individuals first and finally."

He's forgetting somebody. I would add to that quotation: likewise, everyone who is not grossly cripophobic must acknowledge that disabled people are individuals first and finally.

by Sheila Keenan
Charlatan Staff

A survey of violence against women released by Statistics Canada on Nov. 18 found that 51 per cent of women said they have experienced at least one incident of physical or sexual violence by men. Women were asked about a broad range of acts of violence they have experienced since the age of 16, encompassing unwanted touching, sexual assault, being hit, kicked, knifed or shot. This should dispel any nagging doubts about the extent to which Canadian women are abused by men. But as shocking as these statistics are, they do not fully reveal the scope of the misogynist atmosphere in which women live. A survey may be able to measure the number of beatings or rapes, but it can't measure the societal values that sanction and perpetuate these acts. Violence against women is not just about physical violence. Abuse and rape are the most extreme symptoms of a society-wide attitude that says women just aren't worth much. Because it is the most violent acts that get most of the attention in the media, some men think they can let themselves off the hook. They think that because they have not raped or beaten up a woman, they are not a part of the problem. They're wrong. They're wrong because hatred towards women manifests itself in thousands of ways. It is the thousands of "little things" - being groped, pinched, grabbed, verbally harassed, followed - that show women their male-appraised value in society. It is scary that a lot of men still think we are their property, that we have no autonomy or power over our own bodies. By grabbing us and harassing us, this is what they show us. Perhaps it is the term "violence" that is misleading. After all, if there's no bruise, there's no harm done, right? Wrong. It shows there are still some awfully frightening attitudes about women floating around. So, no, most men do not rape or hit women. But too many men still must accept the outmoded attitudes behind these acts. Do a quick poll of the women you know, in fact, of ANY women. Chances are they could list off any number of times men have mentally or physically harassed them. Without even trying, I can name countless numbers of incidents - being leered at, followed, yelled at or groped by men - and so can every woman I know. I don't think the same man is following me and all my friends around bothering us. That makes for a lot of men who don't have an awful lot of respect for women. I'm strong enough to ignore these little things, to brush them off. I can force myself to pretend they don't bother me. But they do bother me. I may be able to ignore the individual acts themselves, but I can't ignore the prevalence of the attitudes behind them. Men need to recognize these attitudes as a part of violence against women. Ignoring them prevents the full scope of the problem from being solved. Recognizing the highly visible acts of violence will go a long way to eventually solving the problem. But even if all the men who commit violent acts against women were put in prison tomorrow, the misogynist attitudes which fuel and affirm the abuse of women as a group would still exist. It is the attitudes behind their violent acts which need to be attacked. Women deserve to live in a world where the concept of misogyny doesn't even exist.

by Rori Caffrey
Gearbox

biphobia

Being the middle-child in my family prepared me to be a bisexual. I grew up accepting the fact that I was neither X nor Y, but rather was X.5, falling somewhere between the two. I wasn't offered the possibilities or responsibilities that went to the eldest or youngest, but always seemed to wind up with the brunt and burden of both. My older brother didn't want a flaky "wannabe" tagging along, much like the reaction of some gays to the inclusion of bi's in the queer community. I could stay with my little brother as long as I played his games, much like straight culture's tolerance of bi's, but to do so was, and is, restrictive and boring. Biphobia, like any other phobia or -ism, is a hatred based on ignorance. In an attempt to combat this ignorance, I've compiled a list of some anti-bi sentiments I've come across and a response to each.

Bisexuals are people who can't make up their minds.

Wrong.

We have made up our minds. We've decided that we are attracted to people of both sexes, plain and simple. How is that possible? Imagine meeting a person who is honest, caring, kind, responsible, has a good sense of humor, listens to cool music, likes everything you do and sucks 'n' fucks like an animal out of control. With those qualities, does it matter what sex the person is? Maybe to you it does - fine. To me it doesn't, which sounds more like open-mindedness rather than the indecisiveness bi's are accused of having.

Bisexuals are straights acting fashionably gay.

If you, straight or gay, believe this, you are upholding the stereotype

that queers are naturally stylish.

This stereotype of the Perrier-drinking, runway-strutting flamer is constantly used by cinema and television to demean gays. Also, if a die-hard heterosexual really wanted to be chic, there are many less painful, traumatic and dangerous ways of doing so. Queers open themselves up to discrimination and physical assault; wearing all black is a safer way of being stylish.

Bisexuals are gays acting pity acceptably straight.

My goes out to any die-hard queer who is participating in het sex just to gain acceptance.

If this is the case, critics should direct their hatred at the people whose morals force an individual to engage in sex which disgusts them, rather than at the victim.

Bisexuals spread AIDS.

unsafe

Only people spread AIDS.

Bisexuals can't commit themselves to one person.

Although bi's are attracted to people of both sexes, they can be perfectly satisfied with one partner.

To think otherwise would be like saying a woman who likes both tall and short men could not be faithful to her husband if he was tall because she would constantly crave a short man.

Personal qualities, and not genitalia, are what relationships are built upon.

In addition, how many straights do you know that have cheated on their boyfriend or girlfriend? Seems that "commitment" problems don't just affect us bi's.

Although the gay community has accepted bisexuality as a legitimate orientation, many members still resent our ability to "assimilate" into mainstream culture.

True, our sexuality can give us more privilege within straight society, but fag-bashers don't seem to give us any special treatment. We, like every other minority, have been depicted by Hollywood movies in less than flattering manners. My Own Private Idaho had Keanu Reeves as a back-stabbing bi who abandoned his friends and lovers for a comfortable straight life. Basic Instinct depicted bisexuals as psychotic.

With any luck, people will begin to recognize these stereotypes and myths for what they are.

PLACEMENT & Career Services

Check the posting boards at
the Placement Centre for
more job listings.

Programs and services of interest to undergraduates, graduating students, as well as alumni.

508 Unicentre • 788-6611
November 25, 1993

ON-CAMPUS RECRUITING

Permanent full-time positions are directed towards graduating students (available May '94). Dates, unless specified, refer to deadlines.

To find out the types of positions, how to apply and where to find more information on the companies, please contact the office.

Carp Systems International

Nov. 26, 12 noon
Computer Science, System Engineering, Electrical Engineering, Math/Statistics Positions: Software Developers

Embassy of Japan

Dec. 3, Mail Direct
All Disciplines
Positions: Assistant English Teacher

Canadian Political Science Assoc.

Jan. 28, Mail Direct
Political Science, Other Disciplines
Positions: Ontario Legislature Internship Programme

Ginsberg Gluzman Fage & Levitz

ASAP, Mail Direct
Commerce - Accounting
Positions: Students -in -Accounts

FULL & PART TIME EMPLOYMENT

Please visit Placement & Career Services for more full and part time employment opportunities.

Sales & Merchandising Group

Nov. 30, 5pm
All Disciplines
Positions: Merchandising, Sales and Promotional Representatives (Part Time)
Request Job Order N-13

Metropolitan Life

ASAP, Mail Direct
All Disciplines
Position: Marketer (Full Time)
Request Job Order D.O. 2063

SUMMER EMPLOYMENT

For more information on the types of positions and application procedures consult the summer job board.

National Defence

Nov. 30, Mail Direct
Biochemistry, Biology, Chemistry, Computer Science, Economics, Engineering, Int'l Relations, Math/Statistics, Microbiology, Operations Research, Physics, Psychology, Sociology Positions: Defence Research Assistants

Transport Canada Canadian Coast Guard

Nov. 30, 5 PM
All Disciplines
Positions: Inshore Rescue Program

Siemens Electric Ltd.

Dec. 1, Mail Direct
Commerce, Economics, Computer Science, Electrical Engineering
Positions: Summer Jobs In Canada, Germany, US & Latin America

I.A.E.S.T.E

Dec. 2, Mail Direct
Engineering, Science
Positions: Summer & Fall Exchange

Canada Employment Centres

For Students - Nova Scotia
Dec. 10, Mail Direct
All Disciplines
Positions: Summer Employment Officers

Ontario/Quebec Summer Student Job Exchange Program

Jan. 14, 12 noon
All Disciplines
Positions: Various

Pulp & Paper Research Institute

Jan. 20, Mail Direct
Biochemistry, Chemistry, Physics, Mechanical Engineering
Positions: NSERC related

Gov't of Northwest Territories

Jan. 24, Mail Direct
All Disciplines
Positions: Various Summer Aquatic Positions

AECL - Chalk River

Jan. 28, Mail Direct
Computer Science, Engineering, Science, Physics, Chemistry
Position: Summer Student Program

PAINTERS/HOME CARE

Action Window Cleaning

ASAP, Mail Direct
Positions: Area Managers

Metropro

ASAP, Mail Direct
Positions: Franchise Owner

Student Sprinkler Services

ASAP, Mail Direct
Positions: Branch Manager

Student Works Painting

ASAP, Placement Centre
Positions: Managers

White Shark Window Cleaning

ASAP, Mail Direct
Positions: Area Managers

SUMMER CAMPS

Camp Brebeuf

ASAP, Mail Direct

Camp MaroMac

ASAP, Mail Direct

Camp Tamakwa

ASAP, Mail Direct

Camp Trillium

Jan 31, Mail Direct

GROUP SESSIONS

The Resume/Covering Letter

This session discusses self assessment, the purpose of a resume, how to prepare a resume, skill identification, components of a resume, resume styles, as well as the covering letter. Samples are reviewed to determine how to maximize effectiveness.

Networking/Job Search

This session focuses on networking, researching the labour market, the visible and hidden job market, various job hunting approaches, developing a job search system and common pit falls.

Interview Techniques

This session reviews the purpose of the interview, the employer's and the candidate's goal, the stages of an interview, commonly asked questions and preparation tips.

Helpful Hints

Interview Tips

- take some time and think through and organize your answers before responding
- answer logically and be prepared to explain the rationale behind your responses to technical, problem solving and role-play questions
- eye contact demonstrates attention, interest and self-confidence
- make an effort to use good grammar, try to avoid using fillers such as "alright", "you know", "umm", "uh"
- keep your answers concise and to the point; where appropriate, support your responses with validating experiences, avoid one word answers
- remember - employers hire people with enthusiasm and positive attitude, act and speak as though you want the job

Resume Tips

- be brief and explicit to make your career objective meaningful to the employer
- document your education in reverse chronological order beginning with your most recent achievement
- document your work experience in reverse chronological order starting with your most recent job
- present your job duties most pertinent to the job for which you are applying, this will grab the employer's attention
- describe skills by using action verbs such as planned, organized, analyzed etc..
- your resume is your personal advertisement - the principle tool through which you can convincingly demonstrate to potential employers your suitability for their job vacancies

Job Search Tips

- treat job searching like a job - structure a regular starting time and finishing time
- have at least one supportive person with whom you can discuss your job search
- increase your confidence by reading books, attending workshops or asking for advice from qualified people
- keep your resume handy and be prepared for an immediate interview
- enlarge your network contacts by joining professional associations relevant to your field

These tips have been taken from the ACCIS "Looking for Work" series, comprised of four booklets Self-Assessment, The Resume, The Interview, The Job Search. These booklets are available for purchase at Placement & Career Services.

Raven men bask in victories

Charles paces team with 54 points

by Kevin Restivo
Charlatan Staff

Christmas came early for the Carleton men's basketball team and Taffe Charles decided to play Santa Claus.

The Ravens won their first two games of their exhibition season last weekend, defeating the Laval University Rouge et Or 79-59 on Nov. 20 and the Humber College Hawks 81-77 Nov. 21 at the Ravens' Nest.

Carleton 79 Laval 59 Carleton 81 Humber 77

Fourth-year forward Charles netted 25 points against Laval and added another 29 against Humber.

Carleton outplayed Laval early on, but strong three-point shooting by the Rouge et Or kept Laval close. The Ravens led 33-32 at halftime, but they weren't happy with their effort.

"Our intensity wasn't high to start the game. We just weren't playing like we could play," said first-year point guard Brian Smith after the game.

Carleton came out intense in the second half, at one point leading by 10, but they couldn't seem to shake off the pesky Rouge et Or.

Until, with five minutes left, Charles aroused the crowd with an awe-inspiring, follow-up dunk off a missed lay-up by swingman James Marquardt.

"Jamie (Marquardt) had been missing some lay-ups, and anything can happen, so I crashed the boards, grabbed the rebound and stuffed it home," said Charles.

It was just the spark the Ravens needed.

Carleton limited Laval to just eight points the rest of the way en route to the first victory of the season.

"It's great to get the win, but I don't know if we could've slacked like that (in the first half) against a better team," said Smith.

That statement almost came back to haunt the Ravens when they faced off against the Humber Hawks, last year's Canadian Colleges Athletic Association national champions.

Carleton controlled the game defensively, forcing the Hawks to commit 23 turnovers. Offensively, the Ravens executed their half-court offence much more effectively than in their previous games this year.

Raven guard Andrew Smith drives with the ball against Humber on Sunday.

"Our offence isn't as stagnant anymore," said second-year guard Curtis Houlden. "We're much more comfortable in our positions now on offence."

Though the Ravens appeared poised for much of the contest, the Hawks made a late comeback when guard Henry O'Neill canned two three-pointers to pull Humber within one point of Carleton with 22 seconds to play.

But the Hawks turned the ball over shortly thereafter and the Ravens' defence hung on for the win.

Some players were happy with the team's play over the weekend, even though the victories came against lightweight competition.

"It was a good team effort and a good confidence builder, even if it did come against some weaker teams," said Charles.

Houlden agreed.

"I hate to say it, but the teams we beat weren't that great, but we'll take the wins anyways." □

Fencers seasoned at tough tournament

Pianarosa ranked 15th in country

by Steven Vesely
Charlatan Staff

Raven fencers posted middle-of-the-road results against top competition at the Penn State Open in Pennsylvania Nov. 20-21.

No Raven fencers advanced beyond the second round of competition, but fencing coach James Ireland said that wasn't the point of the tournament.

"Now they've been seasoned with some international competition," said Ireland of his four-man squad. "These are experiences they can draw from later on in our year. I didn't expect anyone to win or even move beyond the third round. I just wanted them to get a feel for some top-level competition."

Over 300 fencers from about 150 schools across the United States participated. Carleton and a team from the University of Western Ontario were the only Canadian entries.

From the Carleton squad, foil fencer Neil Seto exited the second round with a 5-5 record. Epee fencers Brett Goodwin and Derek De Leon both finished with 4-6 records, while Simon Pianarosa ended his afternoon with an 0-5 exit in the second round after fencing with two of the top fencers in the country.

Pianarosa was blessed with the opportunity to fence against Russian Alexei Nazimilov, who was the top fencer in National Collegiate Athletic Association fencing last year, as well U.S. national team member Doug Borleau.

"It was a deadly pool with top calibre fencers," said Ireland.

Pianarosa is no slouch himself either. He was recently promoted to 15th in the national elite fencing rankings in Canada.

Overall, Raven fencers were pleased with the experience they gained from their performances.

"You go to these events knowing there are some big-name fencers there," said epee captain De Leon. "You just go out there, do the best you can and hope you win." □

Who is that masked man in white?

Free Trade Athletics

by Kevin Restivo
Charlatan Staff

Simply put, you can't compare American and Canadian athletics.

Having recently visited Notre Dame University in Indiana for the national showdown between the top two football teams in the country — the Notre Dame Fighting Irish and the Florida State Seminoles — I can only shake my head in wonder at the difference between the two countries' approaches to sport.

While Canadian universities emphasize sport as a complement to a sound mind, American athletics just emphasize sport. Period.

Mention the name Notre Dame anywhere in the world and chances are, people will know what university you're talking about.

The fact that Notre Dame has a special contract with NBC to have its sports events televised internationally nearly every weekend doesn't hurt. Four years ago, NBC paid the university $650 million for a five-year exclusive contract to televise Notre Dame sports.

By comparison, when you have as little interest in athletics as many Carleton students do, it's no coincidence there's relatively little outside exposure.

Catching on to the difference? Read on, it gets better.

The atmosphere at Notre Dame's stadium was supercharged. Well, that's how the students at Notre Dame would've put it anyways. The point is, when you have 80,000 fans converge on a campus which normally holds 10,000 — there's bound to be just a little excitement.

This was the game of the year, if not the decade, and everyone there knew it. For three days before the game, all you could see was an endless line of parked RVs and drunken visitors working themselves into a frenzy for the big game.

Aha, another difference.

Carleton unfortunately, personifies a Pinto when it comes to school spirit. At this year's Panda Game, only a mere 3,500 students bothered to show up. At Notre Dame, supporters rooted themselves into the ground cheering themselves hoarse.

And then there's the sale thing.

Fighting Irish paraphernalia sales are expected to have exceeded over $100,000 on that weekend alone.

You couldn't walk anywhere without being bombarded with Notre Dame apparel. It was practically thrown at you.

At Carleton, this would have no point, since there's nobody to sell clothing to anyways.

At least there was some common ground with prices.

It's good to know that Notre Dame's campus prices on everything from hotdogs to sweatshirts are as ridiculous as Carleton's.

Really, $60 for your average sweatshirt? Get real. Nobody either side of the border's got that kind of money anywhere these days.

Nonetheless, it was an experience I'd recommend to anyone, and who knows, maybe one day we'll capture a fragment of that American spirit here in Canada at Carleton. □

Raven Records

OCAA WATERPOLO East Division

	W	L	T	F	A	PTS
Toronto	12	0	0	158	64	24
Western	8	4	0	148	102	16
Carleton	7	4	1	105	84	15
McMaster	7	4	1	133	88	15
Queen's	5	7	0	83	121	10
Ottawa	2	10	0	91	155	4
York	0	12	0	70	174	0

OWIAA WATERPOLO East Division

	W	L	T	F	A	PTS
Toronto	4	0	0	40	13	8
Carleton	3	1	0	38	14	6
Queen's	2	2	0	32	21	4
McMaster	1	3	0	24	43	2
Brock	0	4	0	13	56	0

OWIAA VOLLEYBALL East Division

	W	L	T	F	A	PTS
York	4	0	0	12	0	8
Ottawa	4	1	0	12	6	8
Toronto	2	1	0	8	3	4
Queen's	2	2	0	7	7	4
Ryerson	1	4	0	3	12	2
Carleton	0	5	0	1	15	0

CIAU FOOTBALL National Final Nov. 20.

Vanier Cup
Toronto 37 Calgary 34

The University of Toronto Varsity Blues capped off their fairy tale season with a thrilling victory over the Calgary Dinosaurs to win their first Vanier Cup since 1965.

With Calgary kicker Bruce Parson attempting a game-tying 22-yard field goal in the last minute — Blues' defensive linesman John Raposo broke through Calgary's offensive line to block the kick and seal the Varsity win in front of 20,211 fans at Toronto's Skydome.

OCAA WATERPOLO Men's Finals Nov. 20.

Gold Medal Game
McMaster 12 Western 6

It was unusual for the Marauders, who have won 21 of the past 24 OCAA waterpolo championships to finish fourth in the regular season. But they amends by capturing the title once again in their home pool against the Western Mustangs.

Bronze Medal Game
Toronto 14 Carleton 9

The University of Toronto Varsity Blues rebounded from their upset loss to the McMaster Marauders in semi-final action to beat the Carleton Ravens 14-9 in the consolation final.

Semi-final Game
McMaster 12 Carleton 11 OT

Semi-final Game
Toronto 14 Carleton 9

Polo men fall short of golden dream

Dramatic OT loss left Ravens in bronze battle with Toronto

by Richard G.D. Scott
Charlatan Staff

Anything can happen in the playoffs. Such was the case for the Carleton Ravens and the University of Toronto Varsity Blues this past weekend.

Both were victims of semi-final upsets in the Ontario Universities Athletic Association waterpolo championships on Nov. 22 at McMaster University.

Western 12 Carleton 11
Toronto 14 Carleton 9

The third-place Ravens came out on the wrong end of a 12-11 score in a sea-saw double overtime finish with the University of Western Mustangs. The undefeated Blues were surprised 9-5 by the fourth-place McMaster Marauders.

McMaster then defeated Western 12-6 for their 22nd championship in 25 years. Carleton lost the consolation final 14-9 to Toronto.

"There was nothing to be ashamed about," said second team all-star driver Dave Bason.

Against the Mustangs, the Ravens quickly jumped to a four-goal lead, all compliments of Bason. Western then stormed back and took an 8-5 lead into the fourth quarter. Then, the Ravens made an incredible comeback, tying the game 8-8.

Goaltender Allemander Pereira.

Shortly after, Western went ahead 9-8, but Carleton fought back again with a goal by holeman Brian Young in the dying minutes of the game, forcing it into overtime.

"It was a heck of an effort for us to come back like we did," said Young.

In overtime, the score went 10-9, 10-10, 11-10 and 11-11, the lead always in Western's favor. With only 17 seconds left in the game, the Mustangs went ahead 12-11, ending the Ravens' gold medal hopes.

"It was our best chance in about 10 years to make the finals," said captain Allemander Pereira.

Tired and disappointed, the Ravens were scheduled to play the top-seeded Blues less than an hour later. Looking for revenge, the Blues jumped out to an early 7-1 lead after the first quarter. Carleton kept pace with the Blues in the last three quarters, but couldn't overcome that lead, losing 14-9.

McMaster's win over Toronto was the highlight of the tournament. The Marauders rattled the Blues with a deafening home crowd and forced the undefeated Blues to make mistakes.

"McMaster played extremely well and we unfortunately played our worst game of the year," said Blues coach Peter Lohasz. "There's something about this place. I'd also attribute some of their win to the fans."

McMaster concluded its playoff success with an easier 12-6 gold medal win over Western.

"Our players performed fantastic," said Marauders assistant coach Michael Carnegie. "They wanted it and did it." □

Volleyball team has weekend to forget

by Steven Vesely
Charlatan Staff

The Carleton women's volleyball team suffered three losses in Toronto Nov. 19-21, dropping its record to 0-5 in the Ontario Women's Interuniversity Athletic Association east division league.

Ryerson 3 Carleton 0
York 3 Carleton 0
Toronto 3 Carleton 0

The Ravens lost 3-0 (16-14, 15-12, 15-10) to the Ryerson Lady Rams, 3-0 (15-4, 15-0, 15-5) to the York Yeowomen and 3-0 (15-8, 15-4, 15-7) to the University of Toronto Varsity Blues.

The loss against Ryerson was the first time the Ravens had ever lost to the 1-4 Lady Rams in league play.

"It was a pretty bad weekend," said volleyball coach Peter Biasone. "I thought we could do much better and we were horrible in that match (against Ryerson). It sort of shook their confidence for the rest of the week starting like that."

Against Ryerson, the Ravens seemed high-strung, nervous and unable to nail down a match victory, despite leading 11-3 at one point in the first match, said

Biasone.

"It was the only game we had a chance to win," said first-year middle Darlene Gallant. "I don't know what went wrong. It's not that we were all playing bad. We just weren't playing as a team." After a team meeting and a restless night in their hotel rooms, the women's team did improve against the tougher Yeowomen and Blues teams.

"There was a difference," said Gallant. "We were talking more on the court and more encouraging with each other."

Over the weekend, the Ravens were led by Gallant and Sylvie Coutru with 13 kills apiece. □

AVAILABLE AT: MARK'S WORK WAREHOUSE

Raven Rumblings

QUOTE OF THE WEEK

"I feel very honored. I hope this will help turn around the Carleton football club and encourage student athletes to consider the Carleton football program."

Defensive tackle Harry Van Hofwegen was a humble ambassador of the Carleton football program when asked about his selection to the all-Canadian football team at last week's annual Canadian Interuniversity Athletic Union awards.

WATERPOLO ALL-STARS

Two Ravens were named to the 1993 Ontario Universities Athletic Association's all-star water polo team. Drivers Dave Bason and Corry Burke, who were instrumental in the Ravens' success this season, were named to the second all-star team.

Also honored was coach John Pankiw, who was named the 1993 Coach of the Year after leading the Ravens to a best-ever 7-4-1 regular-season record.

RUGBY ALL-STARS

Carleton's successful rugby season was rewarded with eight members of the club being named to the division II all-star team. They are: hooker Mike White, lock Jason Hann, wing forwards Mike Rys and Mike Roe, wing Jim MacKay, centre Dave Howard and full back Bruce Maxwell.

FOOTBALL ALL-CANADIAN

Carleton Raven defensive tackle Harry Van Hofwegen was named to the university football all-Canadian team in CIAU award ceremonies on Nov. 18.

Van Hofwegen, also named to the Ontario-Quebec Interuniversity Football Conference all-star team, anchored the Ravens' defence and was second in the league with seven quarterback sacks.

CORRECTION

We blew it. Last week's hockey feature incorrectly listed coach George Brown's office number as 564-1297. We were close, but off by one. The real number for any of you hockey wannabees is 564-1296.

Thursday, Nov. 25.

SWIMMING — The swim team will be holding a bake sale in Baker's Lounge from 10-2 p.m.

Friday, Nov. 26.

BASKETBALL — Carleton travels to Windsor to take on the Windsor Lancers in exhibition action at the St. Denis Hall Gymnasium. Game time is 8 p.m.

Saturday, Nov. 27.

BASKETBALL — The men's team takes on the University of Western Mustangs in Windsor at 6 p.m.

Sunday, Nov. 28.

RELAX — Not much happening so sleep in and rest those aching bones.

Bench players: They're people too

by James Lewis
Charlatan Staff

Sitting on the bench isn't the career varsity athletes dream about. But it's a sports truism that you pay your dues and wait your turn.

So bench players sit and wait. "They don't play regularly," says men's water polo coach John Pankiw. "They're someone you might count on only once or twice a game or not at all."

It can be a long, tough and tense experience. But it's not always in vain. Carleton coaches agree that rookies and bench players are important components of their teams as replacements, as cheerleaders and as future starters.

"Bench players and rookies have to be at the same preparation level as the starters and they have to provide a lot of support," says football coach Donn Smith. "Each one of the back-ups has to be as proficient as a starter."

That's important because in a game situation, back-ups have to be ready to go at any time.

"Ideally, you don't want to lose anything in a game," says Pankiw. "And bench players are important because they give my starters a break."

Field hockey coach Suzanne Nicholson stresses another important bench aspect.

"Those kids will be the mainstay of the team in the future," she says. As a result, Nicholson says she tries to make the rookies feel significant. She asks the first-year players to always be ready to get in a game, to be supportive of teammates and to work hard in practice.

That's how some of the Carleton coaches feel. Some Raven bench players and rookies are comfortable with that role and agree with their coaches' assessments.

"It would be great to be playing," says football rookie John Thorne, "but in first year you don't expect to play."

Instead, Thorne says bench players have a responsibility to cheer their teammates on and always be prepared to replace a starter.

On the field hockey pitch, Laurie Saunders and Jennie Childs both try to fulfil their coach's expectations. What's most important, they say, is to keep a positive outlook on their roles as rookies.

That positive outlook is necessary.

Sometimes an athlete can remain a bench player for an entire varsity career. But that's the exception, not the rule. More often than not, being a bench player is just a seasoning experience that leads to that varsity starter's dream.

Ravens welcome Ottawa team's varsity status

by Ryan Ward
Charlatan Staff

The University of Ottawa granted varsity status to its women's soccer team in a surprise decision Nov. 19, allowing it to compete with other universities.

The team has been seeking varsity status for the last four years, but budget restraints kept Ottawa's athletic department from funding the Ottawa club as a varsity team.

Members of the Carleton soccer team say the Ottawa addition is welcomed as a competitive entry to the league.

"Many of the players have the capacity to play competitive against the other players in the league," said Raven half-back Mary McCormick. "They will be a force to be reckoned with."

Many of the Carleton women have played against players from the Ottawa club in summer leagues and are impressed with their calibre of play.

In Toronto earlier this week, representatives from the Ontario Women's Interuniversity Athletic Association met to decide on adding the Ottawa team to the league's schedule for the 1994/95 season.

Ottawa assistant coach Morgan Quarry said he believed the team will be allowed into the league because of its ability to play at the university level, although the decision wasn't known at press time.

Charlatan Hockey Pool

Here are the point leaders in the Charlatan Hockey Pool.
Points were tabulated as of Tue. Nov. 23, 1993.

BAXTER'S

1344 Bank Street
(at Riverside)
738-3323

1	S. Bhattacharyya	240
2	Patrick Soden	240
3	Whitney Reynolds	239
4	R. De Vecchi	238
5	Ron Wells	236
6	Blair Sanderson	236
7	Anjali Varma	233
8	Sean Wright	233
9	Joseph Kurikose	232
10	Alex Varki	232

S. Bhattacharyya can pick up the $25 dinner certificate for Baxter's restaurant at The Charlatan. Sorry Patrick, you had less goals than Sujoy.

Charlatan Sports Trivia

1. Place your answer, name and phone number on a piece of paper and submit it to The Charlatan sports editor, room 531 Uniceentre. The recipient of the prize will be determined by a supervised draw of all correct answers.

2. All answers must be received by Tuesday, Nov. 30, 1993. The winner will be contacted by phone, by the sports editor of the Charlatan.

3. Contestants may submit only one entry per week.

4. Charlatan staff members and their families are not eligible to participate.

Answer the following question correctly and become eligible to win a $25 dinner for two at Schadillac's Saloon.

Who is the only player to win an NBA finals MVP in a losing cause?

Congratulations to Susan Avery who knew that Chris Nilan was the last Montreal Canadian to lead the NHL in penalty minutes. (358 min in 1984-85)

Answer:

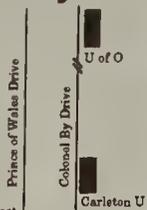

Name:

Phone:

THE NATIONAL THEATRE SCHOOL OF CANADA
Acting Directing Playwriting Scenography Technical Production
Call or write: National Theatre School of Canada 5030 Saint-Denis St. Montreal, Quebec H3W 4A6
A U D I T I O N S
DEADLINE FOR APPLICATION: FEBRUARY 15 TEL: (514) 842-7954 FAX: (514) 842-5661

Meadowlands Family Health Centre

Hog's Back Plaza
888 Meadowlands Drive East
corner of Prince of Wales Dr. and Meadowlands Dr.
(behind McDonald's)
Ottawa, Ontario K2C3R2
228-2882

Family Medicine Pediatrics
Adolescent Medicine Minor Surgery
Obstetrics and Maternity Care Counselling Services

Meadowlands Family Health Centre

Open 7 days a week With or without appointment

Weekdays 8AM to 8PM
Weekends / Holidays 10AM to 6PM

Jobs in Asia Pacific

Teach conversational English full time, short term, or for the summer in Japan, Hong Kong, Korea, Taiwan, Singapore. No certificates or experience necessary. Earn up to $3,500/month.

For more information, pick up our pamphlet at The Charlatan Office, Rm. 531 Ucnitcentre.

•Asia Facts Unlimited•

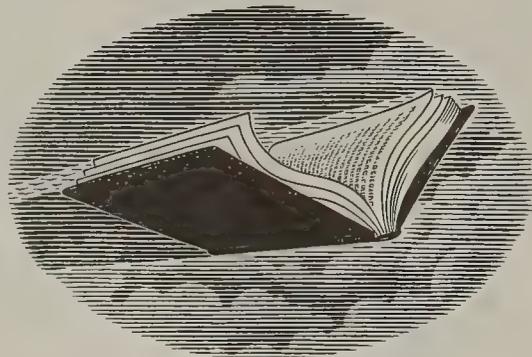

DENTAL OFFICE DR. PAUL GREENACRE & ASSOCIATES

Convenient Location
Emergency Care
Flexible Hours
Gum Problems
Wisdom Teeth
Fillings
Braces

WE CATER TO COWARDS!

Fisher Heights Plaza 225-3564
780 Baseline Road at Fisher Ave
(Beside The Lone Star Cafe)

STAND-BY FOR TAKE-OFF.

At Canadian Airlines, we understand how difficult it is for students nowadays to make ends meet.

That's why we're offering a year-round student stand-by fare at 65% off the regular economy fare anywhere that Canadian flies.

So, if you thought a flight home or a chance to get away was beyond your budget, then think again.

For more information, call your travel agent or Canadian Airlines and simply stand-by.

Canadian

Canadian is a registered trademark of Canadian Airlines International Ltd. Fares available on a one-way or return basis. Fares applicable for students between the ages of 12 and 24. Proof of age is required. Travel is on a stand-by basis only.

Est. 1977

DARLENE SCOUTARIDES

Hair Shops...

SHAMPOO CUT & STYLE
$12
SPECIAL Requests pay extra

PERMS $45
SPECIAL Requests pay extra

...For men and women

• 232-1763 •

248 Bank Street

BETWEEN LISGAR & COOPER • PARKING ON COOPER

BAXTER'S

SECOND FLOOR
BAR & GRILL
MONDAYS & SATURDAYS
PARTY NITES
$250

• WINGS • ZUCCHINI
• NACHOS • CAESAR SALAD
• ESCARGOT • ONION RINGS
5 PM - CLOSE

TUESDAY NIGHTS

SENATORS

Hockey Ticket GIVE AWAY
Chicken Wing .19' ea.

WEDNESDAYS

1/2 PRICE FOOD

5 P.M. - 11 P.M.

THURSDAY NIGHT

"A Carleton Tradition"

Chicken Wings 19' ea.

UPCOMING PROMOTIONS

Thursday, Nov. 25

Jack Daniels
Great Prizes

Thursday, Dec. 2

Labatt Blue
Prizes, Prizes, Prizes

1344 Bank Street

(at Riverside)

738-3323

Deep dark secrets of the Age of Faith

by Johanna Ciszewski
Charlatan Staff

The Age of Faith has secured a place in the hearts of enthusiastic Ottawa mosh-pit and music addicts.

Since the release of their first cassette, Watersongs, the Age of Faith has secured an avid following.

Now the band, which had its beginnings at Gloucester High School in 1988, has just released its first CD, Pinned to the Willow, on the local label One Handed Records.

Vocalist Glen Johnson, bassist Scott Walfords, guitarist Jeremy Daul and brother Jason on drums, blend their musical influences together to create power rock with a bit of angst thrown in. What they really sound like is an authentic Pearl Jam.

This CD is saturated with excellent vocals, lyrics and instrumentation, showing through in songs like "Scarecrow" with its ear-piercing guitars. The song climaxes with a whining guitar and Johnson (seemingly) drunkenly shouting, "Wheel, Delilah."

With their new CD backing them, they plan to start a mini-tour playing gigs in Windsor, Toronto and Montreal and hope to be touring cross-Canada this spring. The Charlatan had a chance to catch up with Johnson as he talked about the evolution of the band and his imaginary friend.

Charlatan: Can you give me some details about the processes which led up to the new release?

Glen Johnson: We recorded an album in '91 called Watersongs. That was our first record; we've been meaning to put that out on CD for a long time. We got some money together and did all the artwork, sent it off to get it pressed, and somewhere down the line we came to the realization that we had enough material for a second album. We lost a lot of money just doing all that art. We scraped together some money and decided to go ahead and record the new album.

Charlatan: How does Pinned to the Willow differ from your previous release?

GJ: It goes from really, really mellow to really, really heavy more than the first one did. The structure of the songs are quite a bit different, in the sense that on the first album it was more excessive. Now the songs are put together with more different elements to each song.

Charlatan: Have you taken certain steps to help you and the group mature musically?

GJ: I don't think you actually have to take steps to mature musically. It is something that just kind of happens. I've been playing with these guys for so long, you can really notice the difference in chemistry between the two albums. It just happens naturally; the more you play you get to know their styles. I appreciate their styles and complement them. It's just the kind of a thing that develops and you can really hear it in the new album.

The Age of Faith: budding superstars, all.

Charlatan: Do you write the lyrics?

GJ: Yes, I write all the lyrics.

Charlatan: Do most of your lyrics come from personal experiences?

GJ: I'm a big fan of concept albums. An album that is good to listen to from the beginning to the end, opposed to an album full of singles. I took the idea of writing conceptual lyrics a step further and decided to write all the lyrics from one concept. I designed a fictional character around which the lyrics would be written from his point of view. It's almost like an alter ego.

Charlatan: Does he have a name?

GJ: His name is Faith. Arthur O. Faith. He's about 104 years old, rotting away somewhere in a retirement home for old men. It's all about his life and his family, and everything that goes around him.

Charlatan: What do you think about the revolution of Ottawa's music scene?

GJ: It's getting exciting. There are a handful of bands that are really close to breaking it. I can't even remember the last time a band from Ottawa has done anything significant on a national or international scale. It's nice, because I think most of the people involved in the scene are really supportive of each other. I think anyone of us would love to see any local band break out.

Charlatan: How would you describe your music?

GJ: I gave that up long ago. It's really difficult. I've heard every track about 200 to 300 times and after a while you can't hear it any more. You don't know what it sounds like. You'd just kill to be able to hear it for the first time, so you can pass that kind of judgment.

Charlatan: When you're playing live, how do you know that you've captured the audience's attention? How could you describe what you do on stage?

GJ: It's just in the feeling in the air. It's electricity off everyone. I've had some of my best shows where the audiences have just sat down and enjoyed themselves, and I've also had the best shows of my life where they, the audience, is up and freaking out.

Glen Johnson roars.

A tale of falling mountains and falling hope

by Neil Herland
Charlatan Staff

The Hope Slide
Great Canadian Theatre Company
Nov. 17 — Dec. 4

The Hope Slide is an inspiringly hilarious one-woman show performed by Vancouverite Leslie Jones.

The main character that Jones plays is Irene, a performer who spends many nights on the road. Tonight's audience, it seems, has arrived on one of these nights. It just happens that she can't fall asleep, so she starts to reminisce about old times and some of her friends that have passed away.

Jones assumes the roles of four of her acquaintances and Irene as a teenager, piecing together the story of Irene's life growing up in the Kootenay region of British Columbia.

The teenage Irene is a kvetching girl in Grade 9, infatuated with the idealistic lifestyle of the Doukhobors who reside in B.C. She tells the audience of her surreal adventures with them, ultimately revealing that they lost sight of their ideals in the end, when they no longer believed their ideals were feasible.

The title of the play is derived from the message in a story that Irene tells: "A mountain has fallen, hope is lost." A landslide had occurred on a nearby mountain in a town called Hope, devastating the terrain, and killing Mary, one of the play's characters.

This experience is used as metaphor in the script, to show how devastation eradicates hope and then rebuilds it again. Each one of four deaths she recalls during the play is a tale of lost hope.

Most compelling is the character Walter, a friend who dies of AIDS. Irene tells us that one day there will be a cure and hope will be restored, but the loss suffered will never go away.

Under the direction of Patrick McDonald, Jones's performance is generally strong. As an actress, she has an impressive range. Her characterizations are often hilarious, but sometimes very touching. Overall, the show is thoughtful and entertaining.

Designer Sean Breaugh's set is a fine work of art itself. The main set features a tattered room that rests entirely on a slanted rake floor. A mountain-shaped frame, holding a mesh screen, encroaches on the centre of the set. Lighting designer Adam Wilkinson effectively uses the mesh screen in combination with various lighting techniques to achieve unique silhouettes. Lights are also placed underneath the set, allowing rays to pierce through some of the holes in the set floor during the climax of the show.

The show ends on a melancholy note. The set is marked by four memorial candles, each commemorating one of the four deaths, as Jones brings the story to a conclusion.

Much of the script is filled with embellishment, but underlying this surrealness is a very serious statement: while hope can be restored, pain can never be erased.

This week:

Top 10

Revolutionaries
(and their region of zeal)

1. Che Guevara (Cuba)
2. Robin Farquhar (Maclean's)
3. Frantz Fanon (Algeria)
4. Tupac Amaru (Peru)
5. Louis Riel (Manitoba)
6. Rosa Luxemburg (Europe)
7. The Lenins, Vlad and John (Russia; who cares)
8. Mao Zedong (China)
9. Louis-Joseph Papineau (Quebec)
10. John Edwards (CUSA)

Leslie Jones in The Hope Slide, trying to remember what the next line is.

PRESENTS:

"POOL & WING NIGHT"

- *EVERY THURSDAY
- *20¢ wings
- *Doubles Pool Tournament
- *Win Lots of Cash
- *Tournament starts at 9:30 pm

"LADIES' NIGHT OUT"

- *EVERY FRIDAY
- *Ladies receive a complimentary drink

It's the night Ladies get pampered

OPEN
THURSDAY, FRIDAY, SATURDAY
366 LISGAR
(Between Kent & Lisgar)

CLIP THIS FREE TICKET

TOPAZ ENTERTAINMENT PALACE

Wednesday December 1st
54Rock presents The White an incredible tribute to Led Zeppelin

Thursday December 2nd
Glamour & Glitz
A fabulous Holiday Wear Fashion Show to benefit the Ottawa Firefighters 'TOYS FOR TOTS'
No admission charge, bring a toy for donation-
Following up - Dave Kalil

Friday & Saturday night
Weekend Pass

Topaz Entertainment Palace
Ottawa's Awesome Night Spot
Tues. - 2 first run movies FREE
Wed. - 54 ROCK(S)
Fabulous sound & light shows
Hot Dance Floor
Mon. - pool tournaments

TOPAZ ENTERTAINMENT PALACE
2335 ST. LAURENT BLVD. 733-7100

GRAND OPENING!
(UNDER NEW MANAGEMENT)

The SUNNYSIDE SPORTS BAR invites you to the grand opening on the weekend of NOVEMBER 27-28!

GET OFF THE BENCH AND INTO THE BAR...

SUNNYSIDE SPORTS BAR

Make the move and take advantage of our daily bar specials and our delicious munchies!
Great opening night specials on Saturday and GREY CUP PARTY on Sunday!
We also provide the perfect atmosphere for parties and social gatherings!

We are easy to find!

Riverside Carleton University
Eronson
Sunnyside BALK

1077 BANK
(corner of Sunnyside & Bank)
telephone #: 730-5748

The Un Classifieds

RIDES
Needed: Return lift to London, Ont over X-mas, for me and my dog Contact Gary at 722-1686

FOR SALE/RENT
1, 2 or 3 bedrooms available in a 3 bedroom apartment (Glebe). $309 for each room inclusive. Please call Lori at 567-3805.
Stereo- PIONEER incl. cabinet & 3-way speakers (150 w), CD (2 year warr.), turntable, radio, dbl. cass. digital, remote. Used very moderately. Mint condition. Value $2000, asking $1200 OBO. Christine 235-8973
CAR FOR SALE: 1981 VW Rabbit diesel, 5 speed, 4 door 178,000km, running condition, economic, $500.00 as is. 523-1884

LOST & FOUND
Lost: One small silver key with small silver key ring on it. It's one of a kind and I'm @$$%!! without it. Please call 237-7781

WANTED / JOBS
Need a few bucks? Urgently required. Students in 53 203 F, 53 210, 53 315 with excellent class notes From Sept. to present. Must have before Dec. 1st! Michele 237-4394.
Breakaway Tours is looking for motivated students, organizations & clubs to promote Spring Break & New Years trips! Leader in student tours for the past 11 years, we are looking for the best reps to promote our company. Best commission structure available, so call today to apply! CALL 564-0564. CALL AND COMPARE US TO ANYONE!!

PLANT A TREE IN AFRICA: Volunteers needed for Ottawa-based fund-raising team. Contact Joyce Lundberg 788-2600 ext. 2571

Awesome Spring Break Trips! Campus reps needed. Cuba, Cancun, Daytona, Montreal & Quebec City. Call now!! 1-800-363-0634.

FREE TRIPS AND MONEY!! Individuals and Student Organizations wanted to promote the Hottest Spring Break Destinations, call the nation's leader. Inter-Campus Programs 1-800-327-6013.

FREE Spring Break trips and cash bonuses. We need only the best Carleton reps to promote Cancun, Cuba, Daytona, Montreal, and Quebec sun/ski party trips. Incredible giveaways from Kodak and Koala Springs and a Jeep YJ draw. Call 1-800-263-5504 NOW!

SERVICES / AVAILABLE
SEMANTIX EDITING SERVICE will help express your ideas more clearly and accurately. Includes punctuation, grammar, spelling. $2/page; returned within two days.. Pick-up and drop off, Room 308 Unicentre, 788-2712.
Dream Catcher Workshops. $26 (includes materials, refreshments) A dream catcher is a Native Indian craft (gift certificates available). Dec 1 (Wed.) at 7pm, Dec 2 (Thurs.) at 7pm, Dec 4 (Sat.) at 7:30pm and Dec 5 (Sun.) at 1:30pm To register by Nov. 30 call Eroca: 233-5155 or 235-9973.
Spring Break '94 - Daytona or Bus!! Party with Breakaway Tours (Reg 2422707) in Daytona for only $209 + 60 bus. U drive for only $109 + 40 bus. Book now. Space is limited. Call Chris 564-0564
SUMMER JOBS: Applications are now being accepted for summer jobs on cruiseships, airlines and resorts. No experience necessary. For more information send $2 and a self-addressed stamped envelope to: World Wide Travel Club, 5334 Yonge Street, Suite 1407, Toronto, Ontario, M2N 6M2
JTSU. Enjoyable training which provides effective defence for men and women. Techniques suitable for law enforcement. Sun 5pm-7pm, Wed. 4pm-6pm. Combatives Room. New members always welcome. Contact: Dery 523-1507

Free haircuts done by apprentices in the professional atmosphere of the PARLOUR HAIR SALON, 232 St. Patrick. For appt. call 239-6929. Please mention this ad when you call.

Have essays, term papers and thesis typed on IBM Selectric by a secretary with 15 years of university typing experience. Dedicated to excellence. Spelling corrected. $1.50/page. Call Brenda: 234-7565

Attention students! Need a professional resume to get your career started? Call the PaperWait for reasonable rates. Located near campus. Call 739-7773 and leave a message.

Word Processing. Accuracy and Deadlines Guaranteed. Central Location. 233-8874.

CARLETON U. SPRINGBREAK '94. Students from Toronto, Montreal, Ottawa, Halifax, Moncton & others will flock to CUBA for the biggest party ever!! $399-495. Receive flight + 7nls hotel + meals + chance winning "Jeep YJ" + free "Kodak" camera + free "Koala Springs" party + Spaces limited!!! Pay only $75 to reserve. Info. 724-9974 or 239-9651.

University-experienced secretary will type essays, reports, etc., on IBM Selectric. Fast, accurate and professional. Different type styles available, deadlines met. $1.50/page. Call Brenda 234-7565.

Tutoring: Don't fall behind. Stay on top. Physics and math tutoring. Reasonable rates. Call Albert: 824-2211.

Wordprocessing: Give your term papers, essays, theses and reports a professional look. Spelling, grammar checked. Data manipulation, tables, graphing also done. Deadlines guaranteed. Reasonable rates. 824-2211.

Word Processing on laser printer - Essays, Reports & Theses - $1.60 and less per page. Please Call 721-8770

Law School Application Seminar Different law schools have different admission requirements. Learn how to develop your personal statements and other components of your file differently for different school! Turn every component of your application file into a winner! - 1-800-567-PREP(7737)

Word Processing. Accurate, professional, prompt, economical. Reports, essays, term papers, transcripts, theses. Reasonable editing provided and grammar

corrected free. 731-9534

Companion Travel Consulting. Discover a travel club that offers travel packages, travel companions, honeymoon vacations and wedding photography, all in one call 820-6800.

MESSAGES
Sorry, Charlie, it was Margo. Signed: Margo fans.
Sally - the cake, wine, and card were very sweet Thanks for spooning BUCKNAKED with me all night. The shower was great too. Needs more soap! Thanks for being you. Yeah, yeah, whaaa, whaaa.
Dear Indiana Jones: Hoping to meet you in Heaven, so you can reintroduce yourself to Freddie & Eddie. The Boddling session is approaching! Ginger.
Alan, I'd like to talk to you again, but I've lost your number. Please answer if you are still interested. Box Christina.
Jason Green. Are you back on campus? I owe you a coffee. It's criminal for someone far from home to drink alone. Box KAFKA
Tea for three! Is ok with me, but where are you? The tea is still hot and so am I! So write to me if you're up for tea! Box MLG

MAN TO WOMAN
23yr old part-timer, really digs "alternative" yet unpretentious music. I get really into groups like BETTIE SERVEERT, UNDERBELLY, DIED PRETTY AND BUFFALO TOM. I'm searching for an interesting and intelligent woman with a weird sense of humour (bad puns welcome) to share cool times, coffee house chats, the Mayfair and shows (Zaphod's, The Penguin) around town. If you've got an eclectic taste in tunage and don't mind a fella whose a bit shy, let's get in touch. Box Lane

WOMAN TO MAN
BUS GUY: Now that I have your attention, how taken are you? (Double meaning). Surely we can meet and chat without worrying about the destination of our bus? Box: WONDER NO MORE.

The Un Classifieds

Looking to buy or sell something? Need to make an announcement? Or maybe you're intrigued at the thought of having your own personal ad. The Charlatan Unclassifieds are a great way to reach over 20,000 people every week. Just fill out the form and bring in into the Charlatan office, 531 Unicentre.

Message (30 or words or less)

Name _____ Student No. _____ Box No. _____

Unclassified Rates

Student Rates $3.21
Non Student $6.42
Personal Ads Free

These are per issue prices and GST has been included.
To get the student rate you must have your student card.

The Fat Lady Sounds of the Emerald Isle

by Vanessa Crosbie
Charlatan Staff

With a conscious effort to avoid making the inevitable U2 comparisons that any good Irish band must face, I caught up with the Fat Lady Sings at their free Zaphod's show Nov. 17.

Ever since the Dublin band was formed in 1986, it has been building a reputation not only in the United Kingdom, but in North America as well.

Trying to get these guys to describe themselves was quite a chore. They use rock, pop and folk together in a workable mix. To say the least, their music has an interesting Irish rock flavor.

"We just want our music to connect with people. The entertainment value of our music is incidental," says Tim Bradshaw, the band's multi-instrumentalist (guitar, piano, accordion, etc.).

Anyone interested in finding out more about this up and coming band can get in touch with them through their fanzine CONTACT at:

The Fat Lady Sings
c/o 80 Orange St
Brooklyn, New York
New York, USA 11201

Unlike some other bands, they'll actually write back.

A great amount of thought goes into their music, songs generally taking nine months to write. Nick Kelly (vocals and guitar), who does all their writing, explains the process.

"Usually, a tune or phrase is there, and instinctively more comes, line by line. We don't know what our songs are about before they're written. The songs basically write themselves... They just fall together."

Although the Fat Lady Sings is now based in England, the members still consider Ireland home.

"Canada is not unlike Ireland in that the people here are very much into their own music. Canada is very humanized; the people are sincere; the audiences are genuine and listening," says Bradshaw.

"There is an honesty in the Canadian character that gives it the same lyrical tradition found in Ireland," adds Kelly. "In England and America, music is much more of a spectacle, but in Canada, it is the quality acts that get exported."

Both men were impressed that Canadians have their own musical tastes without waiting for Americans to tell them who should be successful.

The band's goals are short, sweet and reasonable. In two words, "survival and success."

"We are no longer interested in the coolness and youth aspects of rock bands. We want to do good work and make records that stand the test of time," Kelly says.

The Fat Lady Sings are a pretty happy bunch of guys. One sore spot with them however, is the lack of permanence and integrity in the music industry.

"We consider rock and roll to be an art form... too many people in this business spend their time just trying to be cool," laments Kelly who, trying hard not to sound pretentious, adds, "Rock and roll suffers from being so subsidized. As an art form, it is very corruptible because of all the perks. Writers or painters at our level would have to have day jobs to support themselves."

"You have to ask yourself," Kelly says, "Do I really need to be doing this? Do I have to be creative? Without all the perks — such as being on radio or TV — would I still be in this business?"

The Fat Lady Sings put on a good gig for the large crowd, complete with a waltz competition and songs from both their CDs, Twist and the most recent John Son.

Moody-looking Irish rock band (no, it's not U2).

Although U2 may still be Ireland's finest export, it is good to see that other bands hailing from the Emerald Isle are receiving the recognition they deserve. □

Fake people inhabit the National Gallery

by Mike Peters
Charlatan Staff

Luc Courchesne: Interactive Portraits
Nov. 13 — Jan. 9
National Gallery of Canada

Virtual reality has moved beyond Hollywood effects and video games with helmets.

Montreal artist Luc Courchesne has brought virtual reality out of the arcade and into the art gallery with his "interactive portraits." The exhibit is making its first Canadian appearance after receiving excellent reviews in Los Angeles and Marseilles, France.

Courchesne creates virtual people. Each has a virtual personality complete with loves, hates and desires. But these are far more than thumbnail sketches or simple descriptions. They are fully interactive, not only drawing the observer into a conversation, but into a world all their own.

The exhibit is set up in a darkened room. There are four glass screens upon which the virtual people appear. Using the terminals next to these screens, you can select questions using a trackball.

Courchesne explains: "You pick a question from a pre-established set on the screen. The portrait gives you an answer. A new set of questions, or comments appears. You get further questions. This process continues and develops according to your curiosity and the subjects' mood."

Asking the wrong question offends the subjects and causes them to become more reserved. If they are pleased with the conversation, they will become more trusting and allow you to probe deeper into the more personal aspects of their personalities, until finally they may reveal their most intimate secrets.

The main piece in the display, "Family Portrait," is not just one of these personalities, but eight. Not only do these "people" have personalities of their own, but they also have complex relationships with one another. Conversation with one can lead to information about the others.

Some are lovers, some are friends, some are enemies. Only investigation by the observer can reveal the nature of these relationships. Even more incredibly, not only will they converse with the participant, but often they will break away to talk or bicker among themselves.

An imaginary friend.

While "Family Portrait" recreates real people with videotape of interviews with some of the artist's friends, "Portrait One," one of Courchesne's older works, is quite different.

Presented as part of Interactive Portraits to compliment the newer "Family Portrait," it is unique from its successor in that Marie, the subject of the portrait, is played by an actress and follows a script that was written by Courchesne. As such it is much more manipulative in nature and allows Courchesne to draw the observer in much deeper than is possible with "Family Portrait."

Marie can be seduced. She can fall in love. But being very fickle, she can be turned off at the slightest offence. She can be intrigued by your intellect or offended by your ignorance. Friends, lovers, enemies; your relationship with her depends on the questions you ask and answers you give her.

The technology Courchesne uses is almost archaic by today's standards. The clips of video he uses are sometimes choppy and delayed. The trackball interface can be slow and awkward. But these problems are all eclipsed by his delicate manipulation of conversation.

Make no mistake about it—you will be drawn into his trap. The dialogue will leave you begging to know more about the images you see before you. You will forget that they are simply reflections of television screens and reach out to them with curiosity and compassion. You will leave reluctantly and immediately miss those you have met.

Visit Interactive Portraits and plan to spend some time — best friends are not made simply in passing. □

Australian
Outback,
Koolah,
and Driza Bone
Oilskins

WESTERN BOOTS
INCLUDING
CUSTOM BUILT

Uptown, Downtown
& Out of Town
Ranchwear

150 Robertson Road,
Bells Corners
829-3030

WHERE CAN YOU AND YOUR DATE EAT A GREAT DINNER...FOR LESS THAN $20!!!

NOV. - DEC. COUPON

Full Course Dinner
only

99¢

(max. value $13.50)

order any full course dinner at reg. price & receive a second dinner of equal or lesser value for 99¢

Not valid with any other offer. PST & GST extra. Coupon expires Dec. 15, 1993!

Ontario South's

Finest Sunday

Brunch 10:30-2:30

FULL 3 COURSE DINNER - Soup or Salad, Fresh Baked San Francisco Sourdough Bread, Entree Selection, Spumoni Ice Cream, Coffee or Tea

2446 Bank at Hunt club
(Towngate Plaza)
736-6677
Reservations & Banquet
Facilities Available

THE POOPLE
/ 1500KS

JANUARY COUPON

Full Course Dinner
only

99¢

(max. value $13.50)

order any full course dinner at reg. price & receive a second dinner of equal or lesser value for 99¢

Not valid with any other offer. PST & GST extra. Coupon valid from Jan. 1 - 30 1994!

HOMEMADE PASTA DISHES • VEAL • CHICKEN & MORE

Inexperience shows in classic Greek production

by Stephanie Garrison
Charlatan Staff

Hecuba
Theatre Carleton
Nov. 18-20 and 25-27

Hecuba, Euripides' relentlessly dark tale of revenge sought by the matriarch of a family destroyed by war, is an ambitious attempt at Greek tragedy.

In the program, director Douglas Campbell explains his reason for mounting Hecuba: "only the Greeks, and only their tragic vision, seemed to provide a response that was in any way adequate to the horrible conflicts that have broken out in recent years."

Although this admirably relates to contemporary student concerns about world violence, Hecuba is a work perhaps best staged by older actors since it is a difficult work.

The drama in this anti-war work rests in the characters, not in the storyline. Because the emphasis is specifically on the acting, this makes Hecuba a greater challenge than most plays. There is no intricate plot to protect the actors; the audience's undivided attention is on their ability to accurately portray their characters. Many main characters in the play are older than 25, which is considerably older than most of the actors.

Professional veterans of the stage have a hard enough time rising above this; the actors involved in this play, all with varying degrees of experience, struggled even further. Some of the directions are awkward, and youthful voices and movements occasionally slide through the crafted personas of the aged characters. However, solid performances are given most notably by David Smillie as Agamemnon and Adrian Loewen, who plays Polymestor. Hecuba is a story fragment inspired by Euripides' more familiar play The Trojan Women. As such, Hecuba's plot appears to be a simplistic tale of vengeance. Hecuba's husband and most of her children have been systematically murdered during the fall of Troy, all before the play's opening line. Much of the savage action transpires offstage.

The stage design is professional and historically accurate. Shreds of fabric, draped almost ominously over poles, compose the large tent that is the focal point of the minimalist set. Sand covers the perimeter of the stage and a large rock is the only other element used. This artistic design helps to give context to the ancient narrative.

The costumes are also historically accurate, although the robes worn by Hecuba and Polyxena are luxuriously well-kept and clean despite their status as slaves.

Hecuba's first three nights were very successful in terms of audience turnout: 150 people on opening night and about 90 the following two evenings. Impressive, since there has always been some struggle at Carleton to fill the house during productions. This might partially be due to the price of tickets—at $5 each, Hecuba is an inexpensive introduction to Greek tragedy.

Altogether now: emote!

ANNA BRZCZOWSKI

Hey Kids! It's The Charlatan's first ever entertainment poll.

This week, for filling out and dropping off this survey into the special poll box at the Charlatan, Room 531 Unicentre by Tuesday, Nov. 30 at 3 p.m. you can win a Chapterhouse limited edition CD! Poll results will be published in next week's Charlatan, so get those forms in! Charlatan staff are eligible for the poll but not the contest.

- | | |
|----------------------------------|---|
| 1. Favorite music group | 10. Most notorious meat market |
| 2. Best local band | 11. Favorite campus hangout |
| 3. Dumbest band name | 12. Favorite alcoholic beverage |
| 4. The best concert of the year | 13. Body part that looks best pierced |
| 5. The worst concert of the year | 14. Cheeziest pick-up line |
| 6. Best album of the year | |
| 7. Worst album of the year | |
| 8. Best live Ottawa club | 15. Favorite place you've had sex on campus (left over from last year's sex supplement) |
| 9. Best bar in town | |

NAME: _____
PHONE: _____

Congratulations to John Clark who wins the Nirvana book! Come on up to The Charlatan and pick up your prize!

OLIVER'S

Calendar
November 25 through December 4 1993

Open this Sunday!

25 THURSDAY RAVENS BLOWOUT Scratch & Win Doorprizes	26 Friday Pubs Oliver's: HIP HOP PUB! HOOSTERS Friday Freakies Bowler & Blue	27 LIVE BANDS ON SATURDAY ANDREW CASH	28 GREY CUP Georgian Hockey Pool, Billiards, Darts Tournaments	29 MONDAY NIGHT FOOTBALL! Weekly Pool League 20¢ Wings!
30 TUESDAY WEEKLY PUB FROSH REUNION '93	1 WORLD FAMOUS WEDNESDAYS	2 THURSDAY BON JOVI PROMO with Jimmy George Sony Discman PRIZE	3 Friday Pubs RICKY'S Friday Freakies CITTEHOUNS Cooper, Emmerson, & King!	4 LIVE BANDS ON SATURDAY CFMY (Toronto) presents the band HEAD

TWO GREAT CAREERS TO CHOOSE FROM!

- the Graduate Diploma in Taxation
- the Chartered Accountancy Program

These will lead you to a career as either a Tax Practitioner or as a Chartered Accountant in either a law firm, a C.A. firm or in Government.

FOR DETAILS ON ADMISSION:

Mailing Address:
McGill University
Department of Chartered Accountancy
and Graduate Administrative Studies
Redpath Library Building, Room 211
3461 McTavish Street
Montréal, Québec
H3A 1Y1
Tel.: (514) 398-2327
Fax: (514) 398-2832

LONG DAY IN THE UNIVERSE

THURSDAY, NOVEMBER 25 TO THURSDAY, DECEMBER 2

Thursday, November 25

Hey kids! Grab the folks and head on down to Zaphod's at 8 p.m. for an evening of Irish tunes, courtesy of Andy Irvine. Cover for the evening is $8.

Tonight at the Bytowne at 7 p.m., don't miss Sex Is..., a candid documentary about gay sex. Tickets are $6.

If Sex Is... doesn't whet your appetite for controversial sexual stuff, A Live Bird in Its Jaws will do you just fine. It's a play type thing at the Arts Court starting today and running until Nov. 27. Show starts at 8 p.m. Tickets are a mere $8 for students.

Friday, November 26

Say it isn't so! It's the final noon-time concert of 1993. Today's free concert, held, as always, in Carleton's Alumni Theatre, features Thomas Anand on piano and soprano Judith Vachon.

Chelsea Bridge and the Bel Canto Wind Quintet play the University of Ottawa's Alumni Theatre. It's Celtic folk fun for the entire family. Show starts at 8 p.m. Tickets are $15 at the door and proceeds go to Interval House, a home for abused women and children.

The Carleton Arts Review launches another season at the Stone Angel Institute tonight at 8 p.m. with a poetry reading, courtesy of Toronto writer Stan Roger.

At the Thunderdome in Hull, you can catch Shades of Culture and the Hard Corps. Cover is $6 and doors open at 8 p.m. Finally! An excuse to go to Hull!

You haven't heard Hungarian organ music until you've heard István Ella play Hungarian organ music. And you'll have the chance to, tonight at the Dominion-Chalmers United Church at the corner of Cooper and O'Connor. Tickets for students are $8 at the door. Show starts at 8 p.m.

Saturday, November 27

Life is grand! Andrew Cash plays Oliver's tonight!

At the SAW Gallery at 8 p.m., you can catch OPIRG-Carleton's Awareness Fair. Confused? Well, all you need to know is there will be information tables set up by various community and public interest groups, a film and some kind of band called Jaws of the Flying Carpet. Anxious about a cover charge? It's only $3, so don't sweat it.

"The N400 wave is the brain wave that appears when the mind confronts nonsense." Or so says the press release announcing the N400 Poetry Series (geddit?) at the Manx Pub at 3 p.m. today. Oh yeah, it's being presented by hole magazine.

If you've got a listing you want to appear in this handy calendar, drop us a line at Room 531 Unicentre during regular office hours or fax us at 788-4051. Listings must be in by the Friday before publication.

Sunday, November 28

Today might be a good day to head over to the Carleton Art Gallery in the St. Patrick's Building to see some Mexican sculpture. The show, Terra Incognita, will be there until Dec. 11. Admission is free.

Monday, November 29

This week's reading tip, courtesy of Charlatan production manager Kevin McKay, is Salman Rushdie's epic Midnight's Children. Says McKay, "It's a rather dense book that requires persistence but is well worth the effort upon completion." Or so I hear.

Tuesday, November 30

The Mayfair presents a nifty, absolutely non-violent double bill tonight, suitable for family viewing. At 7 p.m. it's Menace II Society. At 9, it's The Bad Lieutenant, a film that will renew your faith in law enforcement officers.

Wednesday, December 1

On In A Mellow Tone (CKCU 93.1FM at 9 p.m.) your host Ron Sweetman makes some jazz suggestions for your Christmas shopping.

Jeepers! It's Japanese dance at the NAC Opera this evening at 8 p.m. Sankai Juku will be performing the Japanese Butoh dance. It's supposed to be something else, and it's a cultural event, so you may want to consider going (tickets range from $20 to $30). That way, when you go home after exams you'll be able to tell your parents about all the culture you experienced in Ottawa.

OPIRG-Carleton and CKCU are putting on an anti-mega-dam benefit at the Glue Pot Pub at 8 p.m. tonight. Entertainment is courtesy of Tongues and Bones, Select Few and Remedy. You will be allowed in for only $6 at the door or $5 paid at OPIRG-Carleton, among other stops.

Thursday, December 2

Cowboy Junkies. Creeque Alley. $15 in advance (and worth every penny).

Better than Spinal Tap!

Red Dawn
Chicken Bitch
Pavement Records

Hot. Yea, you heard me. Hot. Damn hot! Burning... with desire.

Oh man, it's like a sauna inside this album. After years of toiling in ambiguity, playing throughout southern Ontario, upper state New York, and France (Yes, they are quite big in Europe. Huge, in fact), Red Dawn is about to explode into the mainstream with their first full-length release. Searing with passion, and foaming with raw innocence, Chicken Bitch doesn't fail to deliver.

Often, when new bands enter the scene they are often compared to more established bands, but with Red Dawn, this is not the case. The soulful, yet anguished, voice of lead singer Fuirguardi, when combined with the acoustic stylings and rhythmic perfection of guitarist Granola Boy, define a sound which cannot be classified.

From the opening track "Eat My Lunch You Bastard," the biting story of a young boy brought over the edge by a school bully, it is obvious that this album is an intense criticism about the ill-fated constructs upon which this wretched society is built on.

Fortunately, when the intensity builds up to a climax where you begin to feel your brain melt, as though the stale, evil breath of 10 billion tortured souls in the bowels of hell was being thrust up your nostrils, Red Dawn diffuses this intensity with fables of whimsy and fancy.

The song "Darth Vader is a Son of a Bitch", a brilliant satire of how people become twisted and evil, in essence, more machine than man, will have you punching holes in the wall with your head out of crazed laughter.

The title track portrays the strongest message of all. By using the example of a troubled, young man who has to choose between the chicken he loves and an unaccepting society which deems what is right and wrong, "Chicken Bitch" conveys a powerful message about the rigid, confining limits society places upon us.

Buyer beware, Red Dawn's Chicken Bitch will take you on a roller coaster ride of emotions, leaving you disgusted, but wanting more.

David Hodges

THE 10th ANNIVERSARY

POP PROMOTIONS PRESENTS

BLACK & WHITE BASH

DECEMBER 31 • CONGRESS CENTRE

10 years
10 THEMES ROOMS
-the ultimate house party!
KITCHEN...bedroom...basement etc

10 BANDS for $25

SAVE $3.00
Early Bird Tickets
(Before Dec. 15)
Students Only

TICKETS $25.00
ADVANCE

755-1111

11 LOCATIONS

Rideau Centre 232-1810
St. Laurent Shopping Centre 741-8536
Bayshore Shopping Centre 596-1288

OTAWA CENTRE DES CONGRES
CONGRES CENTRE HOTELIA 563-1984
Plus GST Surcharge en y at Ticketmaster

AND 5000 OF YOUR CLOSEST FRIENDS!

LAWRENCE GOWAN

??? Mystery Band t.b.a.

ANDREW CASH

AND

• THE BIRD • IN CITY DREAMS
• BLACK BOOT TRIO • JIMMY GEORGE
• BLEEDING HEARTS • SOUL TRAIN
• BYWARD MAYHEM

PLUS

NON-STOP DANCE MUSIC

with 4 D.J.'s

various rooms

NO LINE-UPS
GUARANTEED

Grand Central

141 George St.
233-1216

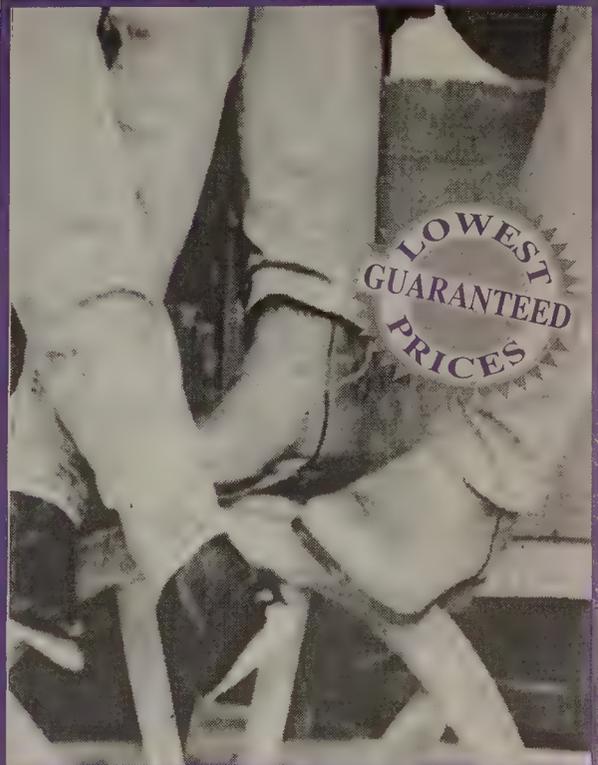

"The Mother of All Pizza"

Introducing...

= Super Value!

only $8.95 plus taxes

LOWEST
GUARANTEED
PRICES

APPLE SADDLERY

The Largest Western Boot Store in Canada.
INNES ROAD JUST EAST OF THE 417 (NEAR THE PRICE CLUB)

FREE POOL

12pm to 5pm DAILY

FULL Lunch Menu

D.J. Every Night

4 T.V.'S & 3 Big Screens

96 George Street in the Byward Market
562-0433

STUDENT NIGHTS

Tuesdays & Wednesdays

BEVERAGE

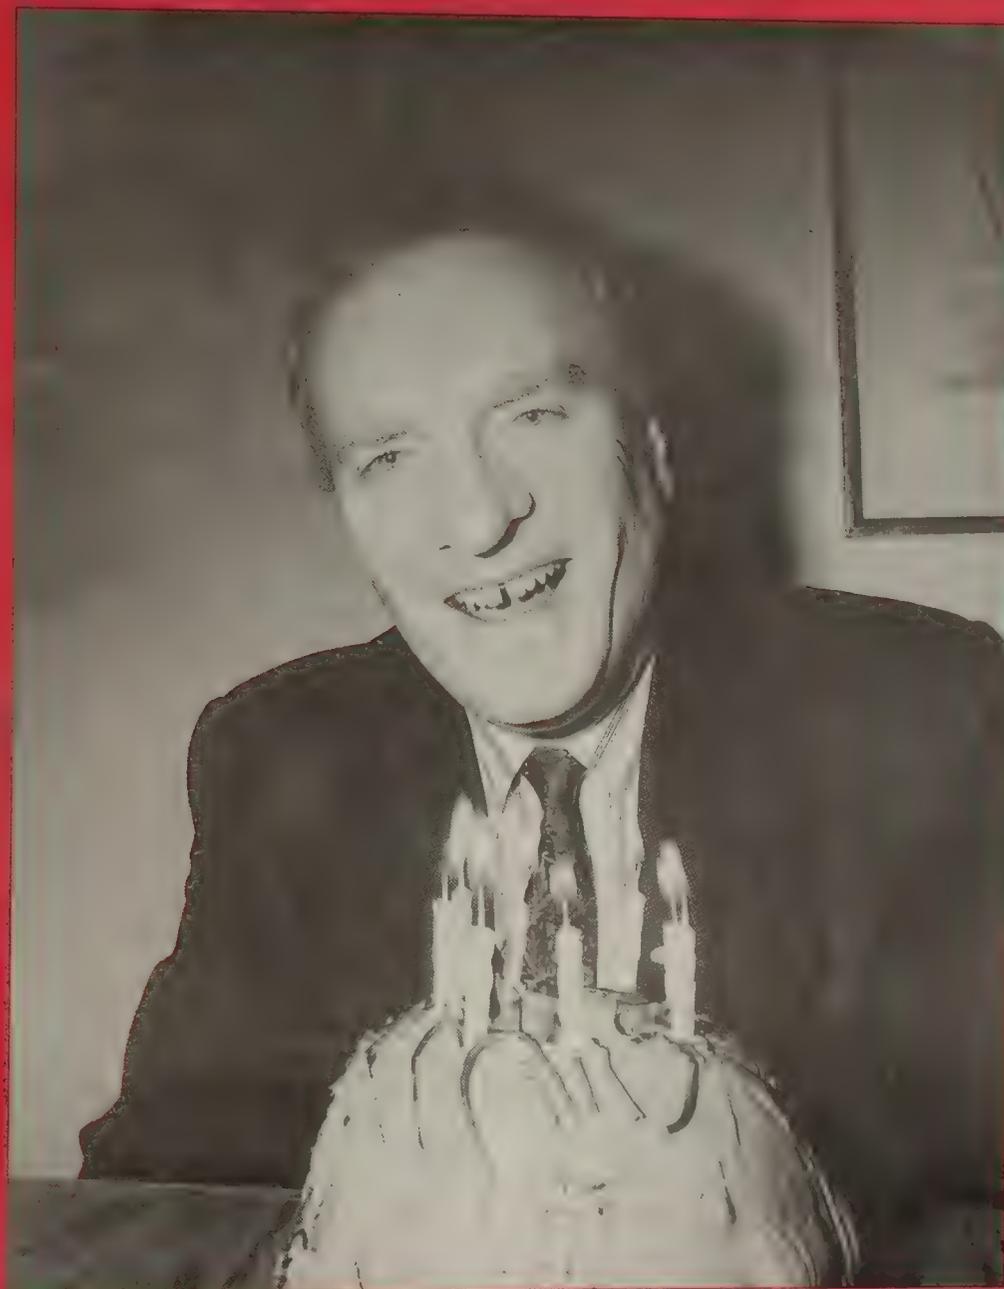

99¢

DRAUGHT

Specials

t h e
CHARLATAN

CARLETON'S INDEPENDENT STUDENT NEWSPAPER

VOLUME 23

ISSUE 16

DECEMBER 2

1993

On Tap

160 Rideau

classic rock & roll

1.75

..at classic prices

SUNDAYS

CRACKERS TWO

Sundays & Mondays
Sports on the
Big Screen
15¢ Wings

Tuesdays
Karaoke
Nite

$2.50 Wednesdays
Ladies' Night
FREE POOL for Ladies

December 2, 3, 4
Vision in the Sky

December 9, 10, 11
Sweet Taboo
Band

175 Richmond Road Tel. 722-3201

Schwartz's
SALOON
Ottawa's Only
Authentic
Western Saloon

Sundays - Wednesdays

BEVERAGE
$1.50 Draught
SPECIALS

Book Your Christmas Party Now

Monday and Tuesday
Nights

All you can eat ribs
$9.95

$2.50 tequila Tuesdays

Wednesday
Nights

1/2 Price Wings

A Buck-A-Billy
Shooter

ALL YOU CAN EAT SUNDAY
BRUNCH

$9.95

Caesar Sunday

$2.50

Come see us down
in the Byward Market
105 Murray St.
233-5716

CLIP THIS FREE TICKET

Tonight
December 2nd
Glamour & Glitz
A fabulous Holiday Wear
Fashion Show to benefit the Ottawa Firefighters
'TOYS FOR TOTS'
No admission charge, bring a toy for donation.
Following up - Dave Kalil

Friday & Saturday night
Weekend Pass

Topaz Entertainment Palace
DECEMBER CALENDAR
Mondays -
N.F.L. Night with $9.95 Pitchers
Tues. - Customer Appreciation
Nights
Wed. - 54 ROCK(S) at Topaz with Wicked Wendy Daniels
Thurs. - Free pool for ladies;
Dave Kalil performs Live!
Call us for our live
entertainment Line-up
HAPPY HOLIDAYS

TOPAZ ENTERTAINMENT PALACE
2335 ST. LAURENT BLVD. 793-7100

"The Mother of All Pizza"

Grand Central
141 George St.
233-1216

Introducing....

Pizza & Pitcher

+

+

= Super Value!
only $8.95
plus taxes

ZAPHOD
BEEBLEBROX
THE ELECTRIC BALLROOM
TUES. to SUN. - NO COVER

THU. DEC. 2
$6
FROM ENGLAND
RORY McLEOD

FRI. DEC 3
NO COVER
BLIND
+
COOKIE blind

BINGO JET
INTERNATIONAL

WILL BE BOARDING EVERY TUESDAY NIGHT AT 8 P.M.

COMING SOON
DEC. 9 - LES HARDIS MOUSAILLONS
DEC. 10 - THE HEADSTONES
DEC. 11 - DENISE'S STEEL BALL
27 YORK ST. 562-1010

Angry students protest hike

by Matt Skinner
Charlatan Staff

Over 100 students stormed Carleton's administration building on Friday, Nov. 26, as part of a rally to protest a potential tuition hike of up to 50 per cent.

Kristine Haselsteiner, vice-president external of the Carleton University Students' Association, said the rally was meant to show Carleton's administration, the provincial government and the community that students can't afford to pay more for tuition.

"Accessibility has gone down tremendously (in the past five years) and we're reverting back to a system of the sixties where education was for the elite and for the rich. That's what we're trying to stop," said Haselsteiner.

This summer, the Council of Ontario Universities released a report calling for increases in tuition fees between 30 and 50 per cent over the next two years, depending on the program.

University President Robin Farquhar, one of two Carleton representatives on the council, was not present when council members voted to suggest a 50-per cent tuition increase to David Cooke, Ontario's minister of education and training.

Michel Gaubin, clerk of Carleton's senate, was at the July 27 council meeting and voted against the discussion paper because he says there wasn't enough consultation with students.

The province has yet to act on the council's suggestion.

The rally began at 12:30 p.m. on Mackenzie Field, beside the Unicentre. Theresa Cowan, director of services for CUSA, led the crowd in various protest chants. Toting signs and chanting, the students marched to the administration building.

Once inside the administration lobby, representatives of the Canadian Union of Public Employees Local 2323, the Carleton University Students Association, and the International Students' Centre spoke. Students were chanting, hammering the floor with their signs, clapping and pounding the walls.

Students desperately seeking Sparky.

The students then proceeded to Carleton President Robin Farquhar's sixth-floor office to voice their disapproval of the proposed tuition increase, only to find he wasn't in.

On Monday, Nov. 29, Farquhar told The Charlatan he did not know students were planning on visiting his office on Friday and suggested that in the future they try making appointments.

Farquhar said any decision regarding Carleton's tuition fees will be made at a board of governors meeting in March. He said so far, no proposal has been made to the board to raise tuition.

A busload of students, undeterred by Farquhar's absence, headed for Evelyn Gigantes's office. Gigantes, the New Democratic Party MPP for Ottawa Centre, was also out for the day.

Students entered the building and voiced their objections concerning the proposed tuition increases, stamping their feet and chanting, "They say cutbacks, we say fight back."

Despite the absence of Farquhar and Gigantes, most rally participants interviewed said they felt the rally was a success.

"We're looking at a provincial election in less than 18 months. We have to realize that we have a tremendous amount of force, and when we mobilize, we certainly do scare them," said Haselsteiner.

Pam Pitcher, a Carleton student who attended the rally, said tuition increases will block access to education.

"It worries me that the people who will continue to get an education are the people that can pay for it. That's pretty scary," she said.

Carleton student Garret Woy says he feels students should start worrying about the future.

"The majority of students are concerned about the here and now, not the future," said Woy.

Pitcher said she thinks students don't think they can make a difference.

"People think that on their own they can't do anything, but being there today I realized that collectively we can do something," she said.

Ehab Shanti, the co-ordinator of the International Students' Centre, said he thinks every Carleton student should have gone to the rally. He said while some students were probably busy and couldn't attend, he thinks some just couldn't have been bothered.

He said a 50-per cent tuition increase means some international students would have to pay an average of $5,000 more each year.

"We're sending a message that Ontario is no longer a place for international students," he said.

Farquhar said he thinks a 50-per cent tuition increase is unrealistic, but acknowledges universities do need the money.

"Any tuition increase must be balanced with student aids," he said.

Haselsteiner said since Gigantes was not in her office on Friday, CUSA will invite her to campus sometime in the new year to hear students' opinions on tuition hikes.

"Being the only New Democratic Party MPP in this area, (Gigantes) is going to have to listen to the students of Carleton," said Haselsteiner. □

Entertainment park on hold, for now

by Andrea Wiebe
Charlatan Staff

The Carleton University Development Corporation has stopped its review of a proposal to put a seasonal entertainment park on the field near residence.

Carleton administrators and CUDC held a closed meeting on Nov. 29 to discuss the review of a proposal put forward by Bretton Woods Entertainment Inc.

CUDC is a university-owned corporation which attracts and investigates corporate investment proposals for development on campus.

Because of opposition from CUSA as well as community groups surrounding Carleton, it was decided that the review should be suspended, says Kristine Haselsteiner, vice-president external of the Carleton University Students' Association.

"I talked to the president of CUDC, David Brown, who relayed the message to me," she says. "The board has decided not to put any further study into that proposal."

The park, which would have included a large tent called a melody tent, was intended to operate from June until August. The time frame might have expanded to include May and September, according to a preliminary evaluation prepared by FoTenn Consultants, who were hired by CUDC to review the Bretton Woods proposal.

The melody tent was intended to be a tourist attraction which would host theatre, music and dance productions as well as sports activities, according to the report.

It is still not certain whether the project has been cancelled permanently, or has just been put on hold.

"Whether or not we continue to pursue a Bretton Woods proposal for a melody tent may or may not be the case, and that would be up to the president's office, but we will certainly continue to review potential economic development activity or expansion of the university," says Drew Love, vice-president of development for CUDC. "I'm awaiting further direction."

Carleton President Robin Farquhar told The Charlatan through his receptionist Karen Quinn that administrators will decide whether to shelve the project permanently at a meeting of senior management on Dec. 7.

Haselsteiner says she hopes administrators will cancel the project permanently.

"We have to keep in mind the needs of administration and the student body, making sure that students have the adequate buildings so they can be educated. Really, right now, our biggest concern is that a proposal like this is not put back on the table," she says.

Jim Watson, city councillor for Capital Ward, says he is pleased with the decision to stop the review of the proposal. He has two main objections to the plan.

"I don't think a university should be involving itself in issues outside of its jurisdiction. I think a university's first priority is academics. My second objection is the negative impact it would have on the surrounding community," says

Watson.

The main concerns surrounding the proposal include its impact on the community, especially because of excess noise and traffic, and the problems Carleton could face if it eventually wished to use the space to expand academic or residence buildings, according to Haselsteiner.

She says the proposal won't benefit the university.

"We're here to educate," says Haselsteiner. "The whole notion behind it being a beer tent, being an amusement-type park, being something that will breach noise barriers and things like that just is not the type of facility that I think we need on the Carleton campus."

Dave Carle, a third-year English and history major, says he thinks that Carleton's land could be put to better use.

"That land belongs to Carleton and they might need it later on. Carleton only has so much land," says Carle.

Third-year art history major, Nancy Simich, says she thinks the university should accept the proposal. "They should reverse their decision because a huge advantage like this could really put Carleton on the map," says Simich. □

on the cover

Happy 55th Sparky!
Sparky's birthday wish for Carleton: "Enough from the government so we wouldn't have to charge any tuition fees."

arts	21
classifieds	16
features	14
national	7
news	3
opinion	11
sports	17

index

PHOTO BY TIM O'CONNOR

CUSA may give Unicentre a facelift

by Brent Dowdall
Charlatan Staff

The first floor of the Unicentre may soon look very different, if the Carleton University Students' Association council approves the changes.

René Faucher, CUSA's finance commissioner, says he will present plans to re-organize the first-floor space to CUSA council on Dec. 2.

According to the plans, which Peter C. Pivko Architects prepared for free, the arcade and the billiards room would be switched around and the Copy Shop would move to where the arcade entrance is now. Some walls would be removed to create more open space.

Faucher says the changes should free up about 1,000 square feet of space for a "new joint venture," such as a business. He suggested a CD store as a possibility.

Faucher says he will ask council to approve money to get structural drawings done for about $500.

He says the proposed changes won't affect office space for the Gay, Lesbian and Bisexual Centre and CUSA's chief electoral officer, both of which are near the area. Hugo's would also stay in the same space, although the off-campus lounge might become smaller.

Faucher says he hopes renovations could be done around spring break in February, otherwise during and after exams in April. He says he doesn't know how much the renovations would cost.

He also says these changes could lead to a Unicentre expansion towards the Architecture Building, creating a "mall" effect.

Some CUSA councillors support Faucher's idea.

"This is a crucial year for the Unicentre," says arts and social sciences representative Tom Golem. "Because of the money we put into (renovating) Oliver's, we have to revamp this building. We can't scrap the building and move on to a new one."

Todd McAllister, a CUSA arts and social sciences representative, says the Unicentre expansion is a good idea because the area between the Architecture Building and the Unicentre is "kind of a dead zone anyway. There really isn't any green space and it doesn't infringe on the parking lot."

Some students question why it's even being considered, while others look forward to a change.

"I don't think it (the first floor) needs to be renovated," says second-year psychology student Dwight Irving. "It's not necessary. CUSA should put the money somewhere more productive."

"There's no need for it," says second-year economics student Lisa Fedoruk. "The money's better spent on students."

But Rob Cattral, a first-year arts student, says the first floor is starting to get a little stale.

"It needs a facelift. Swapping the arcade and the billiards area is a good idea," he says.

Special student Paul Ferreira says CUSA "could spend it (the money) a lot more wisely."

Both Golem and McAllister say Faucher should take the proposals through CUSA's long-range planning committee before bringing it to council. The committee assesses long-range projects for CUSA.

Faucher says he's bringing the proposal to council first to increase interest and "get the ball rolling."

He says CUSA might have to make changes to the area anyway to bring it up to full fire code standards because Travel Cuts, the Copy Shop and the arcade now block off the billiards area and leave no direct exit from the area.

Ahti Hamalainen, CUSA's financial administrator, says the university, which owns the building but rents it to CUSA, would want that problem to be addressed before permitting any renovations in the area.

Fun Farquhar Fact

under siege as president of an embattled university: the gift of self-knowledge.

Thanks to The Only Astrology Book You'll Ever Need (published by Stein and Day), we've learned that Sparky, a Sagittarian, is "energetic and ambitious." (First Carleton, tomorrow, the editorship of Maclean's!) But all is not fine and well for Sparky the Sagittarian.

"Sagittarian people are subject to accidents of fire" (are you sure you unplugged the iron before you left this morning, Sparky?). "Their strong desire for freedom may also incite jealousy and possessiveness on the part of a lover." (Uh-oh!)

However, we think that the last paragraph of his horoscope sums him up perfectly:

"Sagittarians are among the most likable people in the Zodiac. True, you can be extravagant and wasteful, even on occasion reckless and irresponsible. True, your life is full of forgotten appointments, missed deadlines, unfinished projects. True, your emotions can be shallow and your commitments almost nonexistent.

"Overriding everything, though, is the fact that you're fun to be with. So what if you promise the moon and everyone knows you won't deliver. You know it too. There's nothing underhanded or secretive in the way you deal. You play with all your cards on the table."

Robin Farquhar: rogue, lover, all-around nice guy. Just like we always thought.

by Blayne Haggart and Karolina Srutek Charlatrologers

Jesus Christ wasn't the only deeply misunderstood and widely misquoted prophet born in December. Yes, imagine our surprise to find out that our very own president and leader of his flock, Dr. Robin "Hugh" Farquhar, BA, MA, PhD, FCCA, DAE, was born on a cold winter morning on Dec. 1, 1938.

And although we're a day late (hey, it's the thought that counts), we decided to give him a 55th birthday gift we're sure he'll treasure as he spends another year

The Charlatan Give Away - The Charlatan Give Away - The Charlatan Give Away

20 FREE TICKETS

Yes, The Charlatan is giving away 20 passes to see this fabulous 2nd annual anticipated PRE New Year's Eve party! All you have to do is: 1. Visit the Charlatan's Office, Room 531, Unicentre, Carleton University. 2. Bring them something that comes from a restaurant, bar or an hotel, anything such as a menu, uniform, sign, flyer, room's key, mini-coop, beer cap, even the waitress, the cook or the owner... 3. Fill up a 5 questions survey.

PRE
NEW YEAR'S EVE

WEDNESDAY DEC. 29

PAPA MAGOO'S
STONE SOUL PICNIC
featuring FRANK and MEEJAY SOUL EXPLOSION REVIEW

FABULOUS SHOWS

BYWARD
MAYHEM

Also featuring
Yuk Yuk's
Stand-up
Comedy
with Angelo
Saroukas

FEATURING
LIVE ENTERTAINMENT
STAND-UP COMEDY
FASHION SHOW

An Introduction to PLASTIK
FANTASTIK

the
CHARLATAN
Room 531, Unicentre, Carleton U.

Hurley's
73 York St. in the Market

Tickets are $9.00 in advance or $11.00 at the door. Available at all Hurley's location, Bud City, Denim & Diamonds & through Ticket Master

TICKETMASTER

CAROLAN
Rocks PRESENTS

SARAH MCLACHLAN &

ginger

WEDNESDAY December 8 • Congress Centre

Tickets available at TicketMaster outlets or call 755-11-11 to cl urge

FORMER MEMBERS OF THE GRAPES OF WRATH

NE TWERK

MCA
CONCERTS LIVE

Do your Christmas shopping
at
Final Touch
Accessory Boutique

Exclusive Collection of Ties,
Scarves, Hosiery, Belts, Hats

10% discount for all Carleton Students and Staff

Billings Bridge Plaza
739-4369

Sigma Pi fraternity speaks about date rape

by Mo Gannon
Charlatan Staff

There is no talk of babes, beer or big-time bashes tonight.

About 30 very clean-cut guys from the Carleton chapter of the Sigma Pi Fraternity are discussing one word and how it's related to all of the above: no.

Far removed from any party-on scene in Animal House, they are gathered in Dunton Tower on a Sunday night to talk about date rape. The room is silent enough to hear a fraternity pin drop from a sweatshirt as they listen to one of their founding members talk about the problem.

Robert Kisielewski, now a Sigma Pi alumnus, gives a casual talk about when it's cool to make the moves on someone and when it's not.

"No does mean no, okay? Don't fucking take it as anything else," says Kisielewski. He explains that education will prevent a problem before the legal system has to intervene.

"As fraternity members . . . we've got to be extra, extra careful about what we do and when we do it," he tells the guys.

The talk is the first in a series of educational presentations Kisielewski is planning to have at Sigma Pi's weekly meetings. Other topics, presented by himself or an outside expert, will include alcohol awareness, AIDS, and possibly racism and homophobia.

The fraternity has dealt with these topics before in a less formal manner, Kisielewski says. But this is the first structured effort to talk about these things within this Sigma Pi chapter, which is following the lead of other American chapters involved in date rape prevention programs.

After speaking, Kisielewski shows a video called Playing the Game, which tells a story about a woman who is raped by a man at a fraternity party. Kisielewski asks if there are questions. There is silence.

"Has anybody been in a situation where they know that they avoided something like this?" he asks. One guy raises his hand and Kisielewski acknowledges he has done the same.

"Yep. Right here, over the weekend," Kisielewski says. "Now I'd rather play it safe and not get charged and I'd also rather not fuck somebody's personality up for a long time."

The guys start raising their hands. "I was just going to say that nothing should be understood in a situation like that unless it's spoken," says Sigma Pi President Dave Rigby. "You should ask what's understood and what isn't."

Baseball caps and crew cuts nod up and down in agreement.

Before wrapping up the 45-minute presentation, Kisielewski warns them about drinking and its tendency to dilute

Frats looking to change 'Animal House' image.

Kisielewski says the education is necessary.

"I think that if we're going to produce leaders for the future . . . they better not be afraid of what's going on in society, and at least through education I hope to break the initial barrier, of people being homophobic, of people being racist, of people raping, all kinds of things."

Some studies show that there's a big barrier there to break.

One American study about sexual assault on campus shows that 35 per cent of fraternity men have reported forcing someone to have sex; another shows that 55 per cent of alleged gang rapes by college students in the 1980s were committed by fraternity members.

Kisielewski says that's hokey. "If this is true, then out of the 65 guys that we've got, 35 per cent of those forced somebody to have sex, and 55 per cent have gang-banged somebody? I mean, it's just not true."

Shirley Anne Off, co-ordinator of the date rape prevention campaign at Carleton, says there is truth in the numbers. While she says Sigma Pi's efforts are a good start, the complex issue of date rape deserves more time and facilitated discussion by experts.

"What (fraternities) should be talking about is whether or not there is something in their structure . . . that promotes treating women poorly."

Kisielewski says within the frat structure, change is taking place.

"Fraternities have had in their past the Animal House-type deal and one thing has led to another and there have been problems," he says.

"Nowadays, everything is controlled and structured. It's not optimal, because we all make mistakes." □ thinking. "Don't feel scared. Just chill out. Go out and have a good time. Just don't do anything stupid," he concludes.

The guys hammer on the desks in thanks.

Raul De Lima, a Sigma Pi member for two years, says he found the talk informative.

"It was pretty good," he says. "I'm sure a lot of guys knew about the issue, but I think this might have reinforced it."

Rigby says while there is the odd Sigma Pi guy who doesn't think date rape prevention education is necessary, his chapter has never had any problems with date rape. "I think we do a pretty good job of judging the character and the morals of the guys we bring into the fraternity," he says.

Pool Parties
at CACHET
(Billiards That Is!)

Book Your Faculty Party
at CACHET

96 George Street in the Byward Market

STUDENT NIGHTS
Tuesdays & Wednesdays

Hottest Item On Campus
CACHET

New Years Eve tickets
Now on Sale
Buy yours NOW limited quantity
Great Prizes

562-0433

Hang Loose!

An easy, relaxed, loose fit – that's Eurofit, that's Levi's® jeans! Eaton's has men's waist sizes 28 to 38 in 32 and 34 lengths (17 1/2 to 34).

1. 535 Levi's Red Tab jeans.

$49⁹⁹

2. Levi's jean shirt S to XL.

$44⁹⁹

3. Levi's belt collection.
Sizes 30 to 38

$4⁹⁹ TO $24⁹⁹

4. Levi's jean jacket. S. to XL.

$69⁹⁹

EATON'S

Goods Satisfactory or Money Refunded

NATIONAL AFFAIRS

U of C opens food bank for students

by Jill Mahoney
Charlatan Staff

Incidents of students going hungry have prompted University of Calgary students to open a food bank, bringing the number of food banks started on Canadian campuses to 13 in the last three years.

But despite calls for similar action at Carleton, the undergraduate students' association says there is no room to open a food bank here.

Calgary's campus opened its food bank in October to provide emergency food to students in financial difficulty because some students saw the need to help others who were literally starving.

"It basically started with a lot of rumors that people had been lodging academic appeals for failing exams because they hadn't eaten for days," says Catherine Franssens, a representative on the student food action committee of the Calgary Students' Legislative Council.

She says U of C's food bank is unlike most other university food banks in that it screens candidates to verify their need for assistance. Recipients of food must be U of C students and pass a test of financial eligibility that questions their rent, student loan and work situation.

"I don't think we've had to turn anyone away," she says.

Franssens says in the first month of operation, the food bank gave hampers of food to about 20 students. Each eligible student is allowed one hamper of food every two months.

Though the food bank is student-run from an office on campus, it is a subsidiary of Calgary Interfaith, a local food bank which provides the food given to students.

Franssens says one of the committee's concerns is that students might be ashamed to be seen going into a food bank located in the student centre. So, the volunteers decided to keep the centre open in the evening, when fewer students are on campus.

Franssens says although the U of C student association has given its support, student volunteers do most of the work.

"The legislative council was involved in supporting our efforts. But as far as planning and distribution goes, they haven't really been involved."

Franssens says the problem of student poverty "extends across the country."

Although there are no official statistics on food bank use, the National Anti-Poverty Organization says there are 450 food banks that serve about 2.5 million Canadians. The first official food bank opened in 1981.

François Dumaine, the organization's assistant executive director, says the growing number of food banks is part of the overall bleak economic picture.

"The increase in the number of food banks is one clear illustration of all the cuts we've had to social programs," says Dumaine.

He says students are especially hard-hit because their earnings are limited and they have many unavoidable expenses.

"With these sort of expenses, you have no choice—you pay or you're out. When you add them all up, you'll see at the end that many people see food as flexible," he says. "They say, 'I have to cut somewhere' and they can't cut their bus passes or rent, so they cut food."

But Dumaine says food banks are not long-term solutions to student hunger. "The mission of all food banks is to close all food banks," he says.

Franssens agrees.

"When people say we're a Band-Aid solution, it's true. But we have to address this problem."

Some people believe there should be a food bank at Carleton.

"As a NUG (New University Government) rep, I've known people who are hungry. I've known people who haven't eaten for three days," says Wayne Ross, co-ordinator of the Student Academic Action Bureau and NUG representative for the department of philosophy.

Ross says he is committed to getting a food bank here at Carleton.

"There will be a food bank before I leave this university," he says. "I'm quite certain that next year it will come about. People have a right to eat. I think food should be free."

Rob Jamieson, CUSA's vice-president internal, agrees there is a need for a food bank here.

"I think the statistics tell us most students are definitely under the poverty line in Ottawa-Carleton," says Jamieson. "There are 20,000 students here. You can't tell me there isn't even five students short on food."

CUSA looked at the possibility of a food bank last summer, but found they lacked space to operate it.

"If the student association runs it, it has to be out of the Uniceentre. Everything we have is overflowing already," says Jamieson.

Other Canadian universities and colleges that have food banks include: the University of Winnipeg, Lakehead University in Thunder Bay, Ont., Simon Fraser University in Burnaby, B.C., Ryerson Polytechnical University in Toronto, Dalhousie University in Halifax, the University of Alberta in Edmonton and the University of Toronto.

With files from The Gazette, University of Western Ontario

Government tests income-contingent loan plan

by Franco D'Orazio
Charlatan Staff

An Ontario government project testing a new student loan program is "significantly flawed," says a Canadian Federation of Students official.

For the next semester, the pilot project will lend 1,000 students due to graduate in April $2,500 each, according to Jamie McKay, director of the Ontario student support branch of the Ministry of Education and Training.

Emechete Onuoha, chair of the CFS-Ontario, says the income-contingency loan repayment project is inflexible because its life span is too short. He also says the 1,000 university students involved do not meet the Ontario Student Assistance Program's qualifications in evaluating financial need.

"What possible value could this study have with those figures?" Onuoha asks.

Essentially, an income-contingent loans program offers government-sponsored loans to students to cover the cost of their education. Upon graduation, a set percentage of the graduate's annual income is used to determine the rate of repayment.

The loan given to students in the project will accumulate interest as soon as they borrow the money. They will begin to pay back the loan six months after graduation.

If a student's income remains below $20,000 for two years after graduation and he or she cannot repay the loan, it will be paid by the government.

Onuoha said the project should not be tested on students who have been refused financial aid from the OSAP, but on students who presently receive OSAP loans.

"If you used a different applicant pool, the results would be different," he says.

Onuoha says the type of participants, as well as the small amount of money lent out to them, will provide the government with "results (which) will be used to justify the income-contingent loan program as a valid means to get loans."

But McKay denies the provincial government is attempting to distort results in its favor.

"We know that we're not going to get the data that would decide how we're going to implement such a program," he says. "I appreciate that point."

But he says the project will be useful because the provincial government will gain experience in administering the new loans.

Although the CFS opposes the new loan scheme, some student leaders support it.

The project may fail to produce adequate results, "but it's not as bad as Emechete suggests," says Rick Martin, liaison officer of the Association of Part-Time University Students at the University of Toronto. Martin is also a spokesperson for the Ontario Undergraduate Student Alliance, a student lobby group formed recently among five Ontario universities.

"It's difficult to project over a longer period how this project will work because it's being tested over a short term," says Martin, but he also says it is not without benefits.

"You will get a sense of what sort of demands there will be from students," says Martin, who, along with Onuoha, sat on an advisory board which studied the proposal for income-contingent loans.

At Carleton, 39 students will take part in the pilot project, according to Carol Fleck, director of student awards.

"We were informed this week (in November) that we'd be allocated 39 spaces in the project," she says.

She says letters will be mailed in December to students graduating in April whom OSAP refused to assist, inviting them to take part in the project. But she could not say whether the program at Carleton will be ready to take effect next semester.

Fleck says students who have been refused financial assistance do not necessarily come from affluent families. Factors such as students' income, their parents' combined income and the number of children attending university are all considered in the needs test used to assess a student's eligibility for financial assistance, she says.

"For example, one dependent child whose parents earn more than $60,000 will likely not get assistance," she says.

Onuoha says the type of participants, as well as the small amount of money lent out to them, will provide the government with "results (which) will be used to justify the income-contingent loan program as a valid means to get loans."

"But in a family with three children living away from home and whose parents earn more than $75,000, all three children would get loans."

Although it is not a new idea, an income-contingent loan program was proposed in August by the Council of Ontario Universities, a group consisting of university presidents, as an alternative to current student loan programs in a paper on tuition fee reforms.

According to the discussion paper, the loan program's repayment system, in theory, would make higher tuition fees possible because students would be able to borrow as much as they need to pay for their expenses.

But to start up a full-fledged income-contingent program, according to McKay, the Ontario government would require nearly $1 billion in the first year to lend to students. McKay says that's based on the 150,000 Ontario students who received either Canada Student Loans or OSAP loans this year.

It is unlikely that such a loan program would be implemented soon, he says.

"The provincial government has said it would not act alone," McKay says, adding that some other provinces are also supportive of an income-contingent loan program, but there has been no word from the federal government.

"A great deal of money will be needed if all 11 governments are to create a national program," McKay says. He estimates that between $30 and $40 billion in funds would be required over 15 to 20 years before the loan program would be self-sufficient. The program would be self-sufficient when the money paid back by some students with loans is recycled and lent out to other students.

Violence against women remembered

by Karolina Srutek
Charlatan Staff

"It's good to remember — but bad to hate men because of it. It's important to remember that no one has the right to abuse anyone else," says third-year science student Elizabeth Davis about the annual commemoration of violence against women.

On Dec. 6, Carleton will be holding a commemorative gathering with a candle ceremony to observe the National Day of Remembrance and Action on Violence Against Women.

The gathering, at noon in residence's Fenn Lounge, will start off the official Week of Reflection observed by the Canadian Federation of Students.

The gathering is scheduled to have 40 minutes of music and speeches, says Theresa Cowan, director of services for the Carleton University Students' Association.

The "candle of hope" ceremony will involve a candle that will be lit by a woman, followed by a male speaker speaking on how women and men can work together on the issue of violence against women.

The national day of remembrance coincides with the anniversary of the Dec. 6, 1989 massacre of 14 women at the Ecole Polytechnique in Montreal.

CUSA enlisted the help of many committees and groups to organize the gathering, says Cowan. The groups involved include the Status of Women Office, the Carleton Women's Centre and the Catholic Chaplaincy on campus.

The Week of Reflection is "a time when all of us can reflect on the reality of terror and fear that women know," says a leaflet distributed by CUSA. "Most of all, during this Week of Reflection, women and men can make the commitment to work together to stop the violence and to change the social norms that perpetuate men's violence against women."

During the week, information tables will be set up in Baker Lounge from the Sexual Assault Support Centre, the Ottawa Rape Crisis Centre and Interval House, a local shelter for women who have to leave their homes to escape violent situations.

The Carleton White Ribbon Campaign, an awareness campaign organized by men, will also set up in Baker Lounge. This campaign is not officially affiliated with the national one, says Tom Golem, a CUSA arts and social sciences representative in charge of the campaign.

"Lots of people complained last year, (that) our campaign is similar to the national one, but we want to bypass some of the concerns the women's community has had in the past," says Golem. He says last year, too much attention was focused on the men's movement and not enough on the issue of violence against women.

Last year, the gathering at Carleton was focused more on the women who were killed in Montreal, but this year will be different, says Cowan.

"It's very painful for the families of the killed women to have to deal with every Dec. 6. This year it's more of a memorial for all women around experiencing violence."

A recent survey demonstrates the level of violence against women in Canadian society. Statistics Canada released a survey of violence against women on Nov. 18, which found that 51 per cent of women said they have experienced at least one incident of physical or sexual violence by men.

During the week, students can contribute to the Interval House drive by bringing shampoo, toothpaste, toothbrushes, soap, pyjamas and other personal products.

Students can also contribute their poetry, art or other forms of expressions at the Carleton Women's Centre to be displayed during the week. □

In years past, Carleton has commemorated the 14 women slain in Montreal.

Ministry begins funding review

by Brent Dowdall
Charlatan Staff

The Ontario Council on University Affairs will conduct a review of how grants are distributed to Ontario universities.

Dave Cooke, the minister of education and training, made the announcement on Nov. 24 in the Ontario legislature. He said OCUA will report its findings late in 1994.

Cooke said the council will examine the government's current allocation of spending on universities among teaching, administration, research and community service.

He also said the council will have several factors to consider, including accessibility and teaching.

"It's clear that there must be a stronger emphasis on teaching in our universities," Cooke told the legislature.

OCUA is a government-sponsored body made up of appointees from various groups involved in education, such as students, faculty, administrators and staff. They make recommendations to the ministry on education policy.

Liberal MPP Dalton McGuinty (Ottawa South) said the problem with the review is that any recommendations it may have won't take effect until 1995-96.

"In the meantime, the only alternative source of funding the government is considering is on the backs of students," McGuinty told The Charlatan.

McGuinty said the latest rumor about the possible tuition hike is that it will be 30 per cent over three years. He said Cooke will probably announce the increase before the end of the calendar year, "when everyone's gone home for Christmas", said McGuinty.

McGuinty also said the OCUA will not get funding to conduct the review, but the service of several ministry officials will be loaned to the council.

"OCUA is supposed to be an objective, arms-length group, but it's going to have ministry officials. It's like giving advice to yourself. The optics are bad," McGuinty added.

The announcement does not mean new funding can be expected, said Bill Pickett, Carleton's director of budget planning.

"We don't know whether we will get more (funding) or less."

But he said the university is looking forward to the review, because he said Carleton's enrolment has grown faster than other universities in the province. The number of students admitted to first-year this year increased 11 per cent over last year.

He said because Cooke said the review would encourage accessibility, it might reward Carleton.

In a response to Cooke's announcement delivered in the legislature on the same day, McGuinty suggested criteria for the review.

"Universities exist, obviously, to fulfil a number of obligations, but one of them is surely to serve students and not the other way around," McGuinty said.

"For this reason, a new formula for funding should reward a university for good teaching, for smaller class sizes and for more contact time."

He also said the review should try to make universities more accountable to the government and taxpayers. □

MASTERS AND PhD PROGRAMS IN ENVIRONMENTAL STUDIES

The FACULTY OF ENVIRONMENTAL STUDIES offers unique opportunities for those interested in graduate work leading to the Masters and PhD degrees. Students pursue their own interests, building on past experience and exploring ideas in the broad spectrum of perspectives on natural, social, built and organizational environments. Individualized and flexible programs are possible in a wide range of environmental studies areas. Some of these areas are:

- environmental thought
- organizations and change
- gender and environment
- environmental education and critical pedagogy
- urban politics, planning and design
- environmental and social policy
- global/international and Canadian development
- environmental planning and design
- regional and community development
- the study of the future
- communication, advocacy and social change
- resource management
- Native/Canadian relations
- housing
- impact assessment
- women and development
- environmental politics and ecological economics
- cultural studies
- biological conservation and biodiversity
- action learning
- environmental and political linguistics
- environment and behaviour
- cooperative management
- health and environment

Applications for September 1994 should be received by March 1, 1994.

The Faculty also offers an undergraduate degree program leading to a Bachelor in Environmental Studies (BES). Information for all programs can be obtained from:

Coordinator of External Liaison
Faculty of Environmental Studies
York University
4700 Keele Street
North York, Ontario, Canada M3J 1P3
Tel: 416 736-5285 Fax: 416 736-5679
BitNet: ES052003@ORION.YORKU.CA

a call for volunteers...

We would love your help!

Volunteer training for the winter term takes place January 8, 1994 during the day. Call or drop by for more information or to pre-register.

GAY, LESBIAN AND BISEXUAL CENTRE
127A Unicentre • 788-2600 ext. 1800

Plans made to privatize Queen's MBA degree

by Matt Skinner
Charlatan Staff

A proposal to privatize the master's of business administration program at Queen's University will make it "world-class," says the program's chairperson Ken Wong.

But Emechete Onuoha, chair of the Canadian Federation of Students' Ontario wing, says Queen's is seeking a "self-desired position of academic elitism."

The proposal, made by officials in the program, means students would pay $20,000 for a MBA degree, reducing the current two-year (16-month) program to a 12-month program. Currently, the MBA program costs students $2,600 per year in tuition, for a total of $5,200 for their degree.

If implemented, the new program would have room for 50 students and accept its first applicants in 1996. The current program has about 230 students, with around 120 graduates each year.

Wong says he thinks the program will be privatized by the end of the decade, regardless of what happens to the department's proposal because of anticipated reductions in government funding.

With larger numbers of students going to the United States to study business each year, Wong says the Queen's program must improve to appeal to students who will be paying the same amount of tuition at Queen's if it is forced to privatize.

He says the students would have the same number of class hours and credits, but they would have better access to faculty because fewer students would be admitted and the program's resources would be improved.

Wong says the proposal must be approved by the faculty of the school of business, then by the university's senate and again by the board of trustees.

Under the new program, there would be no government funding to the MBA degree, placing all of the cost of the degree on students. Wong says the 200 government-subsidized student spaces usually allocated to Queen's school of business would be distributed to other faculties on campus, allowing these departments to accept larger numbers of students.

Wong says MBA graduates usually have high starting salaries and should therefore be more accountable for their tuition. He says the university has placed two-thirds of MBA graduates with jobs in the past.

Onuoha says the proposed hike in tuition that accompanies privatization is inconceivable, because the cost of the MBA program would be too much for many students to bear.

"You can kiss accessibility good-bye," he says.

Wong says the reduced number of positions in the program will not make education inaccessible for students because "other business programs in Canada can pick up the excess students."

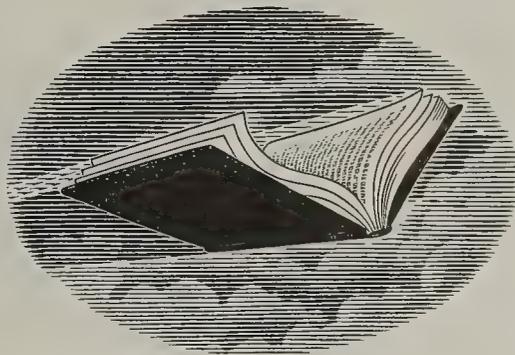

Onuoha says other Canadian business programs shouldn't be required to absorb Queen's extra students. He says he thinks Queen's is using taxpayers' money to create a private institution. A public school is supposed to be accessible and accountable to society at large, he says, and not just partially accessible.

Wong says the proposal also stipulates the necessity for an income-contingent loan repayment plan to help students cope with the higher tuition.

The income-contingent plan would mean students would not start paying off their loan until they have found a job and the rate of payment would vary with the students' salaries, says Wong.

But Onuoha says this system is doomed to fail because there is no guarantee of students having jobs. □

STAND-BY FOR TAKE-OFF.

At Canadian Airlines, we understand how difficult it is for students nowadays to make ends meet.

That's why we're offering a year-round student stand-by fare at 65% off the regular economy fare anywhere that Canadian flies.

So, if you thought a flight home or a chance to get away was beyond your budget, then think again.

For more information, call your travel agent or Canadian Airlines and simply stand-by.

Canadian

Canadian is a registered trademark of Canadian Airlines International Ltd. Fares available on a one-way or return basis. Fares applicable for students between the ages of 12 and 24. Proof of age is required. Travel on a stand-by basis only.

* Applies for domestic travel only

Can we talk?

We want to get your input on how we're doing. Tell us what you like or what you don't about your student newspaper this year at the:

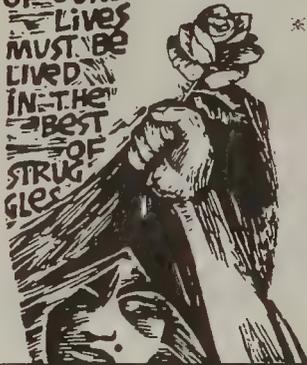

CHARLATAN READERS' FEEDBACK TABLE

See us at Baker Lounge on Dec. 2 from 10 a.m. to 2 p.m. and give us the scoop!

Come to a Commemorative Gathering for December 6th
National Day of Rememberance and Action on Violence Against Women

Monday, December 6, 1993
12 Noon
Fenn Lounge, res commons

WOMEN!
THE REST OF OUR LIVES
MUST BE LIVED
IN THE BEST OF STRUG
GLES

- * Music
- * Candle of Hope Ceremony
- * Perspective Sharing
- * Refreshments

Everyone Welcome!
Only together can we stop the pain, heal the wounds and create an equal society.

Everything
for Christmas!
at Delightful Fancies and International

Treasures

30 Main St.,
Manotick, Ont.
613-238-2058

Come share our
*Olde Fashion
Christmas Party*
in the village from
Dec. 5 onward

Great prizes,
Free refreshments,
Free gift wrapping!

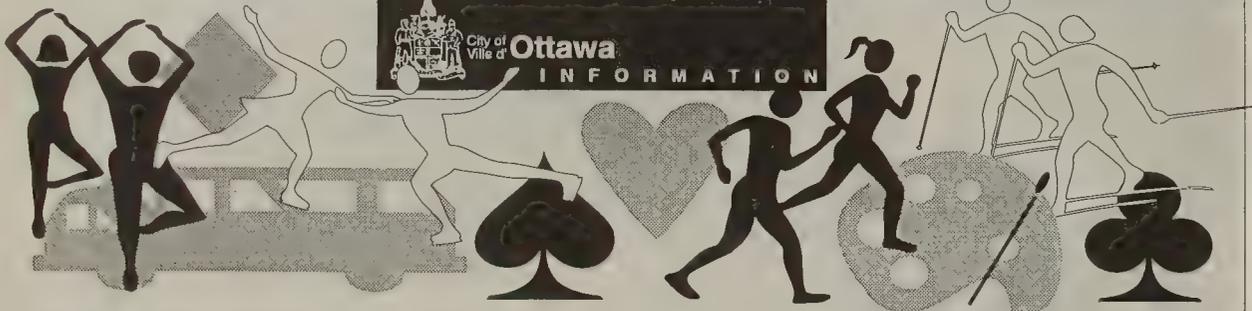

The Appeal
Ranchwear Outfitters

Australian
Outback,
Koolah,
and Driza Bone
Oilskins
WESTERN BOOTS INCLUDING
CUSTOM BUILT

Uptown, Downtown
& Out of Town
Ranchwear

150 Robertson Road,
Bells Corners
829-3030

Get ready for a Great Winter
...with Recreation & Culture

Did you take a good look at your Winter Programme Guide outlining all our programmes and services for Winter 1994? Here's only a sample of what's inside.

- Cross-country Ski lessons right in the city!
Register now.
- All community centre programmes and services.
From playgroups for preschoolers to aerobics for adults!
- Skating lessons and figure skating in your neighbourhood arena.
A great way to try your new skates!
- Programmes for Seniors.
Bus trips, Tai Chi, Line Dance, Bridge, Painting, Walking
- A listing of cultural and heritage programmes and services.
A key element of Ottawa's cultural community.

Do take a look at your Guide - discover the Winter oasis you were looking for!

Copies of the City of Ottawa's Winter Programme Guide are available at Recreation and Culture facilities (community centres, pools) and at Ottawa City Hall.

Information: 564-1234.

The Ottawa Indoor Track and Fitness Facility is now OPEN
Coliseum Building, Lansdowne Park, 1015 Bank Street
For more information, call 564-1094

Pour un hiver mémorable
...avec Loisirs et Culture

Avez-vous feuilleté votre Guide des programmes d'hiver, vous offrent un aperçu de tous nos programmes et services pour l'hiver 1994? Voici un bref échantillon de ce que vous y retrouverez.

- Des leçons de ski de fond en pleine ville!
Inscrivez-vous maintenant.
- Tous les programmes des centres communautaires
Du groupe de jeu pour préscolaires jusqu'à l'aérobic pour adultes.
- Des leçons de patinage et du patinage artistique dans vos arénes.
La façon idéale d'étrener vos nouveaux patins!
- Des programmes pour les aînés
Peinture, Clubs de marche, excursions en autobus, danse en ligne
- Un répertoire des programmes et des services dans le domaine de la culture et du patrimoine.
Une partie intégrante de la communauté culturelle à Ottawa.

Découvrez votre Guide et inscrivez-vous c'est ce qui fait que certains hivers sont longs et d'autres pas!

Des copies du Guide des programmes d'hiver de la Ville d'Ottawa sont disponibles dans les installations de loisirs et de culture (centres communautaires et piscines) ainsi qu'à l'hôtel de ville d'Ottawa.

Installation intérieure d'athlétisme et de conditionnement physique d'Ottawa est maintenant OUVERT

Colisée du parc Lansdowne, 1015 rue Bank
Reservations: 564-1094

F1225-93 COR

A message that needs repeating

Dec. 6 marks the fourth anniversary of the massacre at the École Polytechnique. Every year since then has been commemorated — with candlelight vigils, moments of remembrance and other activities.

Right now, we still remember the event, but the edge dulls a little and the pain becomes easier to cope with every year. The gatherings shrink and people forget.

Can we just relegate the memory of the 14 women killed to a memorial once a year? No, we can't.

The memory has to be kept alive so that years from now, people will remember the women who died and not their murderer. People must not just mark the anniversary of the event, but work actively to combat the larger social problem the event represents.

The Montreal massacre has come to represent all violence against women, yet some people still don't get the point.

It is sad that this is an editorial that needs to be written every year. It's even sadder that it could probably be written every day.

It gets tiring, explaining the same problem over and over again. What is really tiring is that the problem still exists. Getting the message out that violence against women must be fought is worth repeating.

It is especially worth repeating when you see statistics like those released by Statistics Canada recently. Its survey of women found that 51 per cent of them had experienced at least one incident of physical or sexual violence since the age of 16.

There's no need to belabor this point — violence against women is a reality.

However, violence against women does not just effect women. Too often, violence against women is seen as only a women's problem and the ceremonies around Dec. 6 become women's events. But it's not a problem caused by women — it's a societal problem. It may be impossible for the individual to change society, but that's not an excuse for inaction. Society as a whole needs to change its attitudes about women and all individuals can help contribute to that.

For every person who attends a ceremony on Dec. 6 or takes some other positive action to end violence, there are still too many people out there who don't.

This year, do something to acknowledge the problem. Attending a ceremony does a lot by acknowledging the problem in an environment which provides a place for healing and a show of solidarity. But it's not the only action people can take. Activities may be centered around this one week, but individual action can continue throughout the year.

There are a countless number of actions the individual can take to help solve the problem. First, examine your own attitudes and actions. Use your convictions to help educate a friend or a neighbor. Make a contribution to a women's shelter or better yet, see if you can volunteer your time in some way for one.

If you see a woman being harassed, don't be afraid to speak up. If you hear someone telling sexist jokes, challenge them. Ask them why they think what they're saying is funny.

Each change the individual makes counts toward a cumulative societal change. It will also prevent Dec. 6 from becoming an once-a-year anniversary.

Instead, a commemoration of one event can become the catalyst for years of action.

Action will help transform the society we live in, a society where women are killed and raped, into a society we really want live in. SP & SK

The Charlatan welcomes all letters and opinion pieces. Letters should not be more than 250 words and opinion pieces not more than 700 words. Pieces may be edited for length or clarity. The deadline is Tuesday at noon. Include your name, signature, faculty, year and PHONE NUMBER or your letter won't be published. Phone numbers are for verification only and won't be published. Send to: The Charlatan, Room 531 Unice Centre, Carleton University, 1125 Colonel By Drive, Ottawa, Ont. K1S 5B6.

RODNEY, SO WILD...

... SO FREE

OPINION

War toys not root of violence

by Jennifer Clarke Wilkes

Jennifer Clarke Wilkes graduated from Carleton in 1982 with a bachelor degree in classics. While at Carleton, she belonged to the Strategy Club, a group which plays games, including military strategy games and role-playing games.

One of the more ironic things about "War toys out, play with peace!" The Charlatan, Nov. 11, 1993, is the illustration that accompanied Richard Sanders's predictable tirade against "violent" toys and games. It showed a child, surrounded by toys glorifying mass destruction, plaintively asking "Chess, anyone?"

Anyone who has the slightest familiarity with chess knows that it is an abstract simulation of warfare. The objective is to infiltrate the enemy position and ultimately kill the opposing king. The word checkmate comes from the Persian shah kumāt - "the king is dead."

Chess is used in schools as an educational aid in mathematics courses. Children as young as six are being exposed to this "war toy," but no one is making a fuss about it.

Contrary to popular belief, there is no satisfactory proof of a cause and effect relationship between violent entertainment and violent behavior.

Spurious linkages can easily be made between events that are found to have no solid connection on closer examination. If a study finds a significant increase in the number of car accidents in the Glebe immediately after Rough Riders' games, does that mean that football is the cause?

Of course not — higher traffic volume, drinking at the games, or other events occurring at the same time as the games are all factors. While there is a link, the cause is less sure.

The 1991 Canadian Radio-Television and Telecommunications Commission survey on television violence to which Sanders refers also examined many studies that could not demonstrate a clear link between televised scenes of violence and actual violent behavior. Because the body of studies as a whole claimed mutually contradictory findings, the CRTC survey was unable to draw a definite conclusion.

The best the researchers could conclude, a point that Sanders conveniently omitted, was that "there is a link, although not necessarily one of cause and effect."

I have played war games, fantasy role-playing games, video games and paint ball. I have never been inspired to translate the simulated violence of these activities into real-life violent acts. I have also never known a game-playing friend to do so.

When I was young, I played "cops and robbers" with guns fashioned from tree branches and hockey sticks — I did not then go out and stick up a convenience store. I watched the Three Stooges — I did not then poke people in the eye, nor did I learn that dropping an anvil on someone was a "preferred means of resolving conflicts."

Like any normal individual, I was able to separate fantasy from reality and could readily perceive that material intended for entertainment was perforce exaggerated. A child growing up in a healthy and supportive environment will have no difficulty understanding what is appropriate behavior. If the child's environment is not healthy, it is blame to be laid on games?

If it were true that exposure to "violent" games desensitizes people to real violence, then everyone who ever played the war game Risk would constitute a threat to society. By that logic, anyone who plays Monopoly would be desensitized to economic hardship.

Don't misunderstand me — there are excellent skills taught by peaceful toys. As a child I enjoyed Lego, Tinkertoy, chemistry sets, crystal radios and jigsaw puzzles. But any board game or video game is not in itself violent, unless you throw it at someone.

Far from encouraging violent outbursts, games are social activities that bring people together. It can be argued the camaraderie of playing games does much to counter the isolating and dehumanizing trend of our society. Game players tend to be a tightly knit group and the sense of belonging has real therapeutic value.

To understand the roots of violence, we must understand our own nature. Like other animals, we instinctively respond to stress either by fighting or fleeing. Where flight is not possible, humans react violently to a stressful situation, be it overcrowding, domestic abuse, poverty, unemployment or an increasingly impersonal society. These are the true causes of aggression.

What is disturbing about violent themes in entertainment is that they reflect the ugly side of our nature. Attempts to suppress these surface manifestations, however, ignore the deeper forces that breed violence. Our unwillingness to face the real problems, in favor of attacking convenient scapegoats, does more harm than good. □

LETTERS

the CHARLATAN
CARLETON'S INDEPENDENT STUDENT NEWSPAPER

December 2, 1993
VOLUME 23 NUMBER 16

Editor-in-Chief Mo Gannon
Production Manager Kevin McKay
Business Manager Jill Perry

NEWS
Editors Mario Carlucci, Karin Jordan, Brent Dowdall
Contributors Mo Gannon, Matt Skinner, Andrea Wiebe
Volunteer Co-ordinator Johanna Ciszewski

NATIONAL AFFAIRS
Editor Arn Keeling
Contributors Franco D'Orazio, Jill Mahoney, Karolina Sruk

FEATURES
Editor Andrea Smith
Contributor Jonathan Kotcheff, Sean Silcoff

SPORTS
Editor Steven Vesely
Contributors Bill Labonte, Mike Rappaport

ARTS
Editor Blayne Haggart
Contributors Rori Caffrey, Johanna Ciszewski, Stephanie Garison, Rob McLennan, Anthony Pangalos, Rob Willbond

OP/ED
Editor Sheila Keenan
Contributors Sandeep Panesar, Jennifer Clarke Wilkes

VISUALS
Photo Editor Tim O'Connor
Photo Assistant Andre Bellefeuille
Contributors Joanne Capuani, Mo Gannon

Graphics Co-ordinators David Hodges, Mike Rappaport
Graphics Assistant Joel Kenneth Grant
Contributors Sarah Abernethy, Derrick McAliffe

Cover Tim O'Connor

The Charlatan's photos are produced using the Carleton University Students' Association Photo Service

PRODUCTION
Production Assistant Kim Alf
Contributors Josée Bellemare, Johanna Ciszewski, Jodi McKenzie, Audrey Simtob, Ryan Ward, Brandie Weikle

CIRCULATION 14,000
Circulation Dave Carpenter, Joellen Walsh

ADVERTISING 788-3580
Ad Manager Karen Richardson

The Charlatan, Carleton University's weekly news magazine, is an editorially and financially autonomous journal, published weekly during the fall and winter term and monthly during the summer.

Charlatan Publications Incorporated, Ottawa, Ontario, a non-profit corporation registered under the Canadian Corporations Act, is the publisher of The Charlatan. Editorial content is the sole responsibility of editorial staff members, but may not reflect the beliefs of its members.

Contents are copyright © 1991. Nothing may be duplicated in any way without the prior written permission of the Editor-in-Chief. All Rights Reserved. ISSN 0315-1859.

Subscriptions are available at a cost of $40 for individuals and $52 for institutions. Includes GST.

National advertising for The Charlatan is handled through Canadian University Press Media Services (Campus Plus), 73 Richmond St. W., 4th Floor, Toronto, Ontario, M5H 1Z4, phone (416) 481-7283.

Members of the board: Ken Drever, Mo Gannon, Anna Gibbons, David Hodges, Fouad Kanaan, Warren Kinsella, Mark LaFreniere, Yvonne Potter.

The Charlatan Room 531 Uncentre Carleton University, Ottawa, Ontario. K1S 5S6 Telephone: (613) 788-6680

Just a natural question

Editor:
Re: "What is racism?" The Charlatan, Nov. 25, 1993.

Last week's article in the hate supplement was good and to the point. Everything in the two panels from Amoja Three River's Cultural Etiquette, where racial stereotypes are pilloried, was indeed racist, with one exception: "Where are you from?"

Obviously any question in a particular context or said in a particular tone of voice, could be intended as, or assumed to be racist. But whereas "You people are so exotic" is obviously racist, "Where are you from?" is a natural opening question when strangers meet and of itself has no racist overtones.

It is usually an open question that makes no assumptions, so that to include it in this list is overkill of a sort that will not help to eliminate racist attitudes. Instead it makes a mockery of the whole issue of racism and only serves to diminish the article.

Christopher Levenson
English professor and Oonagh Berry

Keep fighting the power

Editor:
Bravo Karin Jordan and Andrea Smith! Thank you for addressing the ever-present feminist backlash in North America in your article "Plagues of a movement," The Charlatan, Nov. 25, 1993.

Many women believe that equality has already been achieved, and seem to ignore the fact that violence against women, unequal pay, discrimination and a myriad of other barriers still exist in Canada. I am a feminist, but I do not believe that pointing out injustices in society leaves me without power. Rather, it is only when I, or others, stop fighting for equality that we will lose the power to change our lives for the better.

Thanks again. Your article was a pleasure to read.

Laura Bonnett
Qualifying year
Master's in Canadian studies

Rag-tag fitness centre needs help

Editor:
As an avid weekend athlete and fitness-oriented person, I find the present quality of the athletic facilities at Carleton ridiculous. I'm sure that I'm not alone in my dissatisfaction about this issue. I'm therefore surprised and disappointed that in my two years at Carleton I have not seen one letter addressing it.

My concern especially is the virtually complete absence of free gym time for anyone interested in pick-up sports of any kind or just relaxation and enjoyment between classes.

You have a better chance of getting a dentist appointment the next day than getting gym time.

Virtually all universities, even those one-fifth the size of Carleton, have at least two gyms. Hell, most high schools have two gyms.

We pay $127.06 per year for a rag-tag fitness centre and limited-access swimming. Almost everything else offered, including racquet sports, means more dollars. Perhaps if there was an increase in commitment to athletics at Carleton, we would have more successful varsity programs and fewer disgruntled students.

Tim Olaveson
English/Anthropology III

Friendly service at Carleton, believe it or not

Editor:
I'm going to miss the temporary parking lot when they close shop for the winter. No, I have not lost my mind. I have not enjoyed paying the full $4 flat rate to park in what has been a perpetual mud puddle because there are more cars than pavement on this campus.

However, what I have enjoyed is the friendly service provided by the parking lot attendants tending this slop lot. Did anyone else notice the greetings and the smiles that were provided to the customer at this lot?

As a long time Carleton customer, I noticed. In fact, with my first few visits to the lot, I couldn't believe it. Who on earth would expect a Carleton parking attendant to smile and wish a good morning to a customer at each and every visit? Hell, I could even manage a smile myself as I handed over the daily toll and heard the magical words "Thank you," from the attendant.

I was amazed, even curious. After all, I'd been parking on campus for years and never experienced such courtesies. How could this be happening while in the very shadow of the Death Star Command Centre (the administration building)?

Well, I figured it out. Aside from the possibility that Carleton may have actually hired a few friendly staff members, I discovered that there was no phone in the temporary lot booth.

With no temptation to perform the annoying phone-to-shoulder-to-ear balancing routine so often displayed by the other attendants, the slop lot keepers actually managed to acknowledge the customer. Imagine that!

S.D. Becksted
Sociology IV

Keep it down you squeaky CUSA people

Editor:
Re: the rally against tuition hikes (Friday, Nov. 26, 1993).

Now, I fully support any effort that aims at improving the lot of students, but the methods used to encourage us to turn out at these rallies are inconsiderate and unfair.

I live in residence and therefore, Carleton is my home, my place of study and rest. To have some squeaky-voiced CUSA rep with a megaphone screaming out her calls of "50 per cent is too much," outside my home is ridiculous.

If my home were off campus, she would be charged and possibly fined for such annoying activity. If a cat were making such a squeaky racket, you'd call animal control to dispense of the offender. As it is, I have no effective recourse.

This activity only reinforces the view that CUSA has no respect for the studies of students, which is the only reason I'm here.

Now, I'm all for lower tuition, respect and fair treatment from the government, but for CUSA to not even give residence students that some respect is hypocritical.

I wonder how successful her megaphone antics were? The best measure of this would be the numbers of residence students at these rallies. From those I've spoken to, the verdict is a big negative.

I suggest you come up with a few new, perhaps effective, means of attracting us to your rallies and next time leave the megaphone at home.

Matthew Beesley
Political Science III

"No" committee did exist

Editor:
I would like to answer some questions about the CFS referendum No committee campaign which Dawn Walton raised in her letter to the editor ("The not-really, sort of No committee," The Charlatan, Nov. 25, 1993).

First, Daren Givoque was the spark that lit the No campaign, and along with Pierre LeDuc and I, formed the executive of the unofficial committee. We had about 20 volunteers who helped run the whole campaign, in addition to a number of people who campaigned on their own. The campaign was a grass roots movement that hasn't been seen in these hallowed halls for years.

Second, according to the CUSA constitution, we should have been allowed to campaign regardless of deadlines, just without funding, as stated in Section 7.5.

Yes, we did put up 2,000 posters, but all those were torn down by the Yes committee, a few hours after they were put up. So, there was no real exposure for our campaign. On election day, our efforts forced the Yes committee to work overtime to literally plaster the walls with their propaganda posters while we had none.

Third, I mention propaganda because the Yes committee, comprised of head CUSA members, misled students into believing that if they paid the fee increase, there would be no tuition increases.

I say to you, Dawn and all my fellow Carleton students, be aware, be very aware that we got screwed, large. Next time, please wear a constitutional condom, okay?

Robert K. Kisielewski
Law IV

Learn the lessons only history can teach

Editor:
Re: "Burning questions about witch film," The Charlatan, Nov. 25, 1993.

The author of the letter, Robert Eady, argues that The Burning Times, a Studio D National Film Board film, is an example of "how far some are prepared to falsify history in order to target a specific religious group," perhaps suggesting this film as an example of deliberate hate against a group, (Roman Catholics).

Is he prepared to suggest that the burning of witches never happened? From having re-read the letter a couple of times, I see no evidence of that, and certainly such church documents as the "Malleus Maleficarum" support these occurrences.

Rather, his protest seems to be over numbers. He cites a few scholars who apparently dispute the film's statistics and back him up, but then, we could say the Holocaust never occurred in World War II and cite David Irving as our source.

He also says that a petition to ban the film with 500 signatures was presented to Parliament, yet fails to mention that it was he who played a crucial role in organizing it — talk about distorting the truth.

What Eady has yet to realize is that the film documents a certain part of history, with the hope we might learn from that period of history. The Roman Catholic Church does not have a glorious past, something that is evidenced in the Crusades, the Reformation and the Inquisition. The beauty of history is that we might learn from it. Otherwise, as the old, wise adage goes, we are condemned to repeat it.

John Stopa
MA Religion

Thank You . . .

The staff of The Charlatan would like to thank each and every one of the funky-licious people who gave their free time to the paper over the term. Your dedication makes The Charlatan a kickin' paper and our office a heavenly place to be. You move and shake our worlds.

Please come out and toast yourselves at our Christmas Bash, on Saturday, December 4, at Caehet (96 George St.) in the Market. The fun starts at 8 p.m. Have a well-deserved, big-assed break and we hope that we get to see more cool people up here next term. Please come join the list. Bring your fresh ideas and faces to Room 531 Uniceentre.

Bram Aaron
Sarah Abernethy
Carla Agnesi
Hana Ahmad
Susanne Andrew
Doron Aronson
David Bartolf
Jodi Batori
Josée Bellemare
Gladys Bichat
Naomi Bock
Sharon Boddy
Alex Bodnar
Jennifer Boyle
Pat Brethour
Peter Brewer
Matt Bruce
Anna Brzozowski
Alex Bustos
Rori Caffrey
Sarah Cairns
Frank Campbell
Joanne Capuani
Pam Chynn
Johanna Ciszewski
Elizabeth Clark
Rob Clements
M.G. Comino
Bill Cooper
Mark Cotgrave
Christina Craft
Vanessa Crosbie
Lisa Currie
Martin J. David
Jennifer Davies
Glen Dawes
Derek DeCloe
Tracey Dewar
Steve Dobrenski
David Docking
Franco D'Orazio
Brent Dowdall
Ken Drever
Paula du Hamel
Michael Dufresne

Todd Duncan
Drew Edwards
Charlie Elcock
Alexis English
Heather Farrow
Kelly Fines
Kevin Finn
Max Fishman
Amanda Follett
Sussana Forster
Maurice Fortier
Shannon Fox
Shannon Fraser
Roy Fu
Angie Gallop
Stephanie Garrison
Janice Giavedoni
Anna Gibbons
Sarah Goodman
Joel Kenneth Grant
Doris Gutenkunst
Susie Haley
Neil Herland
David Hodges
Jama Ibrahim
Suzanne Izzard
Kate Jacobs
Ali Jafri
Doug Johnson
Fouad Kanaan
Michael Kearns
Greg Kerr
Warren Kinsella
Stephanka Kirincich
John Kirkham
Yonnie Kim
Robert K. Kisielewski
Alex Klaus
Bill Labonté
Mark LaFreniere
Eric Lagenbacher
C.D. LeBlanc
Sara-Lynne Levine
James Lewis
Mark Lukac

Janine Macdonald
Alec Maclaren
Jill Mahoney
Michael Mainville
Renata Manchak
Dave Manor
Derrick Meliffe
Aleksandar Mitik
Dave Moodie
Sarah Morris
Sarah Mullin
Janet Murphy
Carolyn McBain
Christine McConnell
James McCrostie
Jodi McKenzie
Rob McLennan
Ian McLeod
Ryan Nakashima
Fraser Needham
Joe Norminton
Chris Nuttall-Smith
Ron Orol
Greg Owens
Prema Oza
A.J. Pace
Anthony Pangalos
Grace Park
Pam Paterson
Doug Pen
Mike Peters
Jacques Poirtras
Debbie Poon
Trina Poots
Yvonne Potter
Gavin Power
Steve Pruner
Tim Pryor
Mike Ramanaukas
Jason Ramsay
Dave Randall
Natasha Rapchuk
Mike Rappaport
Chris Reid
Kevin Restivo

Sarah Richards
Michael Richardson
Tim Riordan
Graham Robertson
Richard Sanders
Ean Sane
Dave Sali
Shawn Scallen
Richard G.D. Scott
Adam Seddon
Neil Seto
Cindy Shigetomi
Angus Shirling
Ann Showalter
Matt Shurrie
Sean Silcott
Andrew Smales
Matt Skinner
Audrey Simtob
Wishnu Som
Karolina Srucek
James Q. Stansfield
John Steinbachs
Dahlia Tanasiou
Jane Tattersall
Jay Therayil
Cristin Tierney
Dean Tomlinson
Ray Verbyla
Kira Vermond
Ryan Ward
Caron Watt
Michelle Watt
Brandie Weikle
Andrea Wiebe
Rob Willbond
Allan Wille
Margaret Wilson
Christina Wolanick
Clayton Wood
Tanya Workman
Lisa Young
Tonya Zelinsky

Love from The Charlatan staff: Kim Alf, Andre Bellefeuille, Mario Carlucci, Dave Carpenter, Mo Gannon, Blayne Haggart, Karin Jordan, Arn Keeling, Sheila Keenan, Kevin McKay, Tim O'Connor, Jill Perry, Karen Richardson, Andrea Smith, Steven Vesely, Joellen Walke.

by Leonard Stern, Jonathan Kocheff, Gil McGowan and Sean Silcoff
Canadian Press

The hardest thing Kim Ostrom ever did was throw a birthday party for her youngest son on the day she learned she had breast cancer. Ostrom says she'll never forget that day in May 1991 when her doctor told her she almost certainly had breast cancer. This warning was confirmed the following week.

When she got home from the doctor's office, Ostrom says she felt like "collapsing in a heap." Instead, she prepared an after-school party. Ostrom says she kept the news to herself for two weeks. "I couldn't believe it myself. Telling it to the world would be like confirming it for real," she says.

Two and a half years later, Ostrom, now 48, does not hesitate to talk about breast cancer. According to Statistics Canada, breast cancer is the number one killer of Canadian women, which will kill an estimated 5,400 Canadian women this year. One out of every nine can expect to have breast cancer in their lifetime, according to the Canadian Cancer Society.

Ostrom is co-founder of the Breast Cancer Action Resource and Support Centre, a local drop-in centre at Billings Bridge for newly diagnosed patients and breast cancer survivors.

Two weeks ago, from Nov. 14 to 16, Ostrom took her message to the National Forum on Breast Cancer in Montreal. The forum came about based on the recommendations of a parliamentary committee report released in June 1992, entitled Breast Cancer: Unanswered Questions.

The report concluded: "We feel that breast cancer needs to be understood as a social problem of near epidemic proportion."

Based on the committee's findings, last December the federal government pledged $25 million over five years to breast cancer research, declared breast cancer a national concern, and set an agenda which called for a national forum which included survivors of the disease.

The forum was the first time survivors of the disease were included in discussions of breast factors, such as family history and a diet high in animal fats, 70 per cent of all cases fall outside the high-risk group.

They pointed out that the government is spending $17.8 million a year to research AIDS — a disease which killed 72 Canadians in 1991 — and $5 million on breast cancer, which killed about 5,000 women in 1991.

They say they are angered by medical professionals who they feel don't know enough about breast cancer to diagnose the early symptoms, or who prescribe radical mastectomies when they may not be necessary.

Despite the past anger that lingers, the women from Breast Cancer Action say they have reason to hope their efforts have been effective.

Breast Cancer Action's 1992 Write Now campaign flooded Parliament Hill with over 10,000 letters demanding increased funding for breast cancer research.

Last December, the federal government responded.

Calling breast cancer "a national concern," former health minister Benoit Bouchard announced the government would spend $25 million over the next five years to fight the disease. Bouchard also promised that breast cancer survivors and support groups would have a say in the way the research money was spent.

According to the survivors, this is at the heart of the breast cancer issue.

Kelly says medical researchers place too much emphasis on finding treatments such as drugs and new surgical procedures, and not enough effort on preventing the disease. Activists at the forum said breast cancer research should focus on areas where little is known, like the possible environmental and dietary causes of breast cancer. But so far the focus has been on other areas.

Different groups of researchers are hot on the trail of what they think might be a breast-cancer-causing gene. The feeling among them is that if the gene can be identified, the effects of possible environmental factors can be determined.

less effective when testing younger women. Many young women may not even be given a mammogram, since the country's four breast cancer screening programs focus on women between the ages of 50 and 69. Breast cancer affects women as young as 25 and incidence rates rise steadily as women grow older.

There is also a growing debate over the effectiveness of conventional drugs and treatments like chemotherapy.

Some activists, like Sagietta Macdonald of Winnipeg, say that alternative therapies, such as herbal remedies and vitamins, are more effective than a traditional, scientific approach.

Moreover, some professionals also doubt the value of physician-conducted breast examinations.

Dr. Anthony Miller, director of the National Breast Screening Study, told the parliamentary committee that breast examination "... is rarely performed well by physicians. The reason is that physicians just do not take the time. They do not actually know what they are looking for..."

The parliamentary committee also heard Kelly's Burlington support group tell how 25 per cent of them "were advised upon initially reporting a suspicious breast lump to a physician that it was 'probably not serious.'" Within a year, every one of those women were diagnosed with breast cancer.

Ottawa activist Carol Spiro says one answer women sometimes get from doctors is to wait six months after they find a new lump in their breast. Others, she says, are told they are too young to have breast cancer and are sent home.

This is what happened to Jeannette Matthey, a CBC radio journalist. According to an article written by Matthey's partner Thomas Ginsberg in the Nov. 12 Globe and Mail, Matthey's breast cancer was initially diagnosed a year ago as a harmless cyst. Because of this diagnosis, it was left untreated.

When she went back to the doctor in January to get the lump removed, it was too late. Her cancer had advanced and treatment could

The Breast Cancer Action Ribbon: The pink honors survivors of sease; the black is in memory of those women who've died.

do!" She had to tell her doctor to increase her dosage of chemotherapy.

It cannot be said for sure whether early detection would have saved Matthey. But the fact that her lump was ignored points to the ignorance of doctors about the disease.

Spiro says she urges women to make sure they are comfortable with what doctors tell them, "based on test results, not guesses." She says women should seek a second opinion, demand a biopsy or do whatever they feel is necessary to address their concerns.

Spiro's concerns were addressed by the forum's committee on treatment and care, which recommended that patients should be made active "team players" in their own treatment. That wasn't the only promise made at the forum.

Researchers promised survivors a role in determining the research agenda; survivors in turn promised to be a strong force in increasing awareness and lobbying for more research dollars.

While a number of survivors hesitated to call the event an outright success -- choosing instead to adopt a wait-and-see attitude to determine if changes will actually take place -- Batt says she was "totally exhilarated" by the process.

Among the dozens of recommendations presented during the forum's closing remarks were calls to lobby governments for more research money, to have breast cancer patients act as team players with doctors in their treatment and to have the federal government provide money for three years to set up a national network of breast cancer survivors.

"It's been absolutely fantastic," says Batt. "There's an openness to having women involved at the decision-making process on research bodies.

"They've agreed that we do have something important to say and they want us to be involved in setting directions for research. That's really important, because there was really an uneasiness there." □

Researchers found that survivors who took Tamoxifen had lower recurrence rates. They reason that if Tamoxifen can prevent breast cancer from recurring, it might prevent it in the first place.

But Batt says activists have started to wonder why mainstream research has largely ignored the role of environmental toxins in the development of breast cancer.

Chlorine compounds called "xeno-estrogens" are at the centre of the debate. These are found in common pesticides, weed killers and even condom lubricants.

The study of these chemicals is important because research has shown that the more a woman is exposed to estrogen during her lifetime, the greater her chances are of getting breast cancer.

Some studies of the relationship between chlorine compounds and the incidence of breast cancer, including an Israeli study involving chlorinated water, suggest a strong link between environmental chemicals and high rates of incidence.

But some scientists at the forum argued that more basic research needs to be done before the causes of breast cancer, like the environmental connection, are studied.

Montreal cancer specialist Dr. Richard Margolis one of the researchers involved in the Tamoxifen study, believes scarce research dollars would be better spent on more genetic research.

"The environment is important, but it isn't going to be cost effective right now to do something about the environment until we find out what aspect of it needs to be done. And that means basic research," he says.

Survivors also say doctors lack the skills and knowledge to diagnose the disease and are often confused about how to treat patients. Some survivors say they feel doctors are often as confused about the disease as they are.

For instance, there is no longer any consensus on whether mammograms can save lives through early detection. Mammograms are limited in the preventative sense as they are with about 500 doctors, medical researchers, health organization representatives and policy makers to take part in the three-day event. The message of survivors at the forum came through loud and clear: breast cancer can no longer be ignored.

Sharon Batt, a breast cancer activist and one of the forum's organizers, told delegates about when she first started thinking about breaking the silence around breast cancer.

It was June 1989, and Batt was in a Montreal hospital undergoing radiation therapy for breast cancer.

Outside the window she could hear the shouts of protesters. There was a huge AIDS conference going on and activists were rallying to take control of the agenda.

Batt decided then that women with breast cancer should borrow a protest strategy from AIDS activists to focus attention on their own disease, and within a few months Batt was able to put her ideas into action.

When a parliamentary committee looking into the controversy over the safety of breast implants turned into a year-long study of breast cancer, Batt was invited to testify as a survivor. At the hearings Batt met two other breast cancer survivors who wanted to take action.

The three women, Batt of Montreal, Pat Kelly of Burlington, Ont., and Carole Jones of Ottawa, started Breast Cancer Action, Canada's first national breast cancer lobby group. As Kelly wrote in a letter to the Ottawa Citizen last year:

"We will no longer die quietly. We don't want more daffodils, we don't want more charity lunches. We want a cure."

In this spirit, breast cancer activists at the forum targeted a number of areas where they felt the scientific community had let them down.

They cited the fact that incidence rates have risen from one in 20, to one in nine over the last 30 years, and that mortality rates have stayed the same.

They are frustrated that while the medical community has identified a handful of risk

Harley's

SPORTS COLOSSEUM

1500 Bank St., Blue Heron Mall, 526-2685

SPORTS SHOP
BEST SELECTION
PERFECT FOR YOUR CHRISTMAS SHOPPING

THE ROOFTOP

Fr Fridays & Saturdays

$2.50 WEEKEND'S VALUES $2.50

GREAT FOOD
Harley's
GOOD FRIENDS

"Friendly & Affordable"

73 York St, Byward Market

4 Shows including Byward Market & Stone Soul Picnic

RESTAURANT
BAR & HOTEL
STAFF
WEDNESDAY DECEMBER 29

RESIDENCE FELLOW

Free room and board in residence.

Positions available for the 1994-95 Academic Year. Applicants must achieve 6.25 GPA in four credits during the 1993-94 Academic Year.

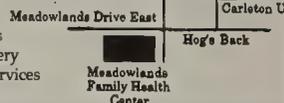

Applications are available at the Service Desk, Commons Building. Deadline for applications is Friday, January 14, 1994.

Residence Life Office
260 Stormont House
788-5615

Meadowlands Family Health Centre

Hog's Back Plaza
888 Meadowlands Drive East
corner of Prince of Wales Dr. and Meadowlands Dr.
(behind McDonald's)
Ottawa, Ontario K2C3R2
228-2882

Family Medicine Pediatrics
Adolescent Medicine Minor Surgery
Obstetrics and Maternity Care Counselling Services

Open 7 days a week With or without appointment

Weekdays 8AM to 8PM
Weekends / Holidays 10AM to 6PM

The Un Classifieds

Messages for the following boxes can be picked up @ 531 Unicentre.

LGBNAF, SSS, PICH, LGBENG, KAFKA

RIDES

Ride wanted to Oakville/Hamilton area. Dec 16th (ish). Return Jan. 2. Will help pay. Phone: Grant 730-1720.

FOR SALE/RENT

Furnished room for rent in large, six-bedroom Glebe house. Dishwasher, laundry, 2 bathrooms, 20 minutes walk to Unicentre, close to buses. $385 inclusive. Call Dee 730-1194.

LOST & FOUND

Stolen: Black leather lady's wallet. Contains I.D. and photos - basically my whole life. Please report if found. Call Gillian Roseway. 820-5713 or leave a message.
Found - Rosetta confirmation bracelet. 10K. Identify! Dan 567-8820.

WANTED / JOBS

Earn up to $700 weekly from home! Rush SASE to Glasin, 2407A - 515 St Laurent Blvd., Ottawa, Ont K1K 3X5

I am a female who overcame bulimia and I am now writing a book about it. I would like to talk to others who have bulimia for info on my book and to help offer support. Reply box Pat.

Canadian Penfriend Wanted: My name is NAMUKASA DOROTHY BROWN aged 21 years. I would like to find many friends of either age and sex from Canada. My hobbies include music, exchanging snaps, movies, travelling and learning new things etc. All letters to be replied. Thanks. P.O. Box 4528, KAMPALA

DAYTONA: The best!! We're local and looking for Carleton Reps. The best oceanfront Hotel on the beach with 7 days 6 nights, highway coach transport and non-stop activities, over 12 buses last year, earn $$ and free trips with all promo materials provided, sound interesting?? 5 Seasons 567-4565.

Awesome Spring Break Trips! Campus reps needed. Cuba, Cancun, Daytona, Montreal & Quebec City. Call now!! 1-800-363-0634.

FREE TRIPS AND MONEY!! Individuals and Student Organizations wanted to promote the Hottest Spring Break Destinations, call the nation's leader. Inter-Campus Programs 1-800-327-6013.

SERVICES / AVAILABLE

Spring Break '94 - Daytona or Bust!! Party with Breakaway Tours (Reg 2422707) in Daytona for only $209 + 60 tax. U drive for only $109 + 40 tax. Book now. Space is limited. Call Chris 564-0564

SUMMER JOBS: Applications are now being accepted for summer jobs on cruiseships, airlines and resorts. No experience necessary. For more information send $2 and a self-addressed stamped envelope to: World Wide Travel Club, 5334 Yonge Street, Suite 1407, Toronto, Ontario, M2N 6M2

JITSU. Enjoyable training which provides effective defence for men and women. Techniques suitable for law enforcement. Sun 5pm-7pm, Wed. 4pm-6pm. Combatives Room. New members always welcome. Contact: Dery 523-1507

Word Processing, Accuracy and Deadlines Guaranteed. Central Location. 233-8874.

University-experienced secretary will type essays, reports, etc... on IBM Selectric. Fast, accurate and professional. Different type styles available, deadlines met. $1.50/page. Call Brenda 234-7565.

Law Schools - Do you know which of Canada's law schools is best for you? For information about a guide to each of Canada's law schools - 1-800-567-PREP(7737)
Word Processing. Accurate, professional, prompt, economical. Reports, essays, term papers, transcripts, theses. Reasonable editing provided and grammar corrected free. 731-9534

Companion Travel Consulting. Discover a travel club that offers travel packages, travel companions, honeymoon vacations and wedding photography, all in one call 820-6800.

Studio time available in Midi quality studio. Producer available. Songwriters' special $100 per song. 230-6056.

Word processing: Quality work in: term papers, theses, reports, resumes and covering letters. Free pickup/delivery to Carleton campus. Laser output. Competitive rates. For more information phone Deepak @ 736-9652 (After 5 p.m. please).

MESSAGES

We met at Oliver's during the 2nd week of school in Sept. We danced, talked and you and your roommate Mark drove me home in a black car. You're in 4th yr. Economics, you live near Maitland and you wore a striped rugby shirt. I'd love to see you again. Please contact me. Box Architecture.

Dear Indiana Jones: Hoping to meet you in Heaven, so you can reintroduce yourself to Freddie & Eddie. The Boddie season is approaching! Ginger.

Dear H.B.O.O.: Best of luck on your exams. I know you'll do really well. I'm truly proud of you. I miss you so much. I love you DEARLY. Love, James.

Debbie: I'm sorry, I didn't mean to be so forward. I know I was wrong for rushing things. Can we still be friends? Call me anytime soon. Still waiting. Dave.

Hi Miss Jumpy, Miss Poopoo! It has been two years and they have been un-believable! Oh! You batter get ready for the next couple of years cuz Evil Never Dies! Here comes lunch-oh! The Bunky One!

Margo - I love your bare feet and your lusty voice. Run away with me and never be a junkie again. Anyways, all that hanging around with your brothers isn't normal. You may be ten years my senior, but yer still the nextiest gal this side of the Peecos. XXOO

Tommy: I like you more than Am likes Margo. Smitty.

MAN TO WOMAN

Dear bee excrement, Le Renard wants to plant a cherry tree in your flux capacitor whenever your net force can meet his mass times acceleration! Meet me in the hen house on 3/12/93! Until then, stay out of the romper room with the jerky boyz, and keep your hair in place. I look forward to an equally gross reply, your man from Barney's back-side.

MAN TO MAN

Male 24- attractive, athletic, straight looking and acting. Hates feeling alienated and would like to meet some for friendship. Interests include: English football, hockey, LL Bean and keeping fit. Respond to: 41 York St., Box 52017 Ottawa, K1N 5S0.

WOMAN TO WOMAN

Do you like doing the "disco thang" (Spanky's, Broadstreet)? Aspiring socialite seeks other avid party girls who enjoy dancing, drinking & man-watching. Don't delay, write to-day! Box Fun Awaits

Happy-go-lucky, attractive, 21, bisexual is looking for an unattached, sensual, attractive, fun bisexual or femme lesbian who believes that three's company! If this is you, I'm dying to meet you! Remember: friendship first. Don't be shy, send me your photo and phone number and hopefully we'll get together! Box U-3.

The Un Classifieds

Message (30 or words or less)

Name

Student No.

Box No.

Looking to buy or sell something? Need to make an announcement? Or maybe you're intrigued at the thought of having your own personal ad. The Charlantan Unclassifieds are a great way to reach over 20,000 people every week. Just fill out the form and bring in into the Charlantan office, 531 Unicentre.

Unclassified Rates

Student Rates $3.21
Non Student $6.42
Personal Ads Free

These are per issue prices and GST has been included.

To get the student rate you must have your student card.

The Man behind the Mask

by Mike Rappaport
Charlatan Staff

The Charlatan is pleased to bring you this report of Carleton's mascot, Rodney the Raven. Earlier this year Rodney visited us and told us his story...

When Brad Ellis dons the Raven costume and takes to the bleachers, shudders have been known to shiver down the spines of opposing teams.

This is one bird who knows how to rally fans' support and root for Carleton teams — from football to water polo.

Ability at this level is only arrived at through much devotion and many sacrifices. Diet and exercise are important considerations for any would-be mascot.

Consequently, Ellis avoids milk, abstains from alcohol, stretches and limbers up before a big event. Becoming Rodney requires both physical and mental preparation, he says.

Early Influences

Rodney's list of influences ranges from the San Diego Chicken (one of the earliest mascot innovators noted for his work with springboards) to the Philadelphia Phanatic (a latter-day master of his craft to whom many mascots are indebted to).

However, Ellis tries to make Rodney's act original and spends time between games visualizing routines. The effort is always made worthwhile by the air of sophistication the Raven is able to bring to even the most uncultured of sporting events.

All is not glamor for Rodney the Raven. Those who assume the onerous role of mascot must overcome many hardships and obstacles.

The stench of stale sweat from previous Rodneys, combined with the discomfort of the costume, makes wearing the suit nearly intolerable.

The lingering smell of vomit from a past Rodney who was drunk during Panda four years ago and threw up inside the uniform only adds to the general unpleasantness.

Transportation is also a problem as not many taxis are able to comfortably fit a large bird. Many times, Rodney has been forced to ride an OC Transpo bus to athletic gigs around the city.

The Chicken Label Thing

Rodney has also had to endure the indignity of being mistaken for a chicken by Carleton students. "It's not so much the apathy as the ignorance" that bothers him, Ellis says, adding he is also rapidly tiring of Chicken McNugget jokes.

Bratty kids who attempt to unmask Rodney by ripping his head off and disgruntled fans who take out their frustrations on him are only the more extreme part of the widespread systemic abuse society has directed against mascots.

Of lesser annoyance, says Ellis, are the

Brad Ellis doubles as Rodney the Raven at most Carleton varsity events.

misguided amateur ornithologists who are able to distinguish a Raven from a chicken but still confuse the caw of a crow with the call of a Raven. Those who attempt the Raven call at games should know that the Raven's call when spelled phonetically is "Bdwoowk." One should never call out "Pwaaacocok."

Perils and Near-Death Experiences

No sport is without its injuries and being a mascot is no exception. Ellis's sports-related injuries rival those of any other athlete or mascot.

His list of injuries is endless. It includes: bruises, sprains, bloody noses, collapsing twice from heat prostration, having drunken fans pepper his head with punches, tendinitis from pounding his hand on benches and a separated shoulder from falling down bleachers. "People love seeing the bird get hurt," muses Ellis, who remains undaunted despite the hazards.

Danger for a Raven can lurk in unexpected places. While innocently entertaining students during this year's orientation festivities, a group of frosh (exact number unknown) grabbed Rodney from behind and threw him into the administration fountain.

Raven Suit Doesn't Float

Rodney the Raven's suit is fabricated from terry cloth, which can absorb many times its weight in water — essentially the costume is a giant sponge/death trap. Rodney sank to the bottom of the fountain and desperately flailed about on his back with his water-logged wings as frosh looked on and laughed.

One student (although this has not been confirmed yet, as witnesses to the event in question have been reluctant to come forward) was overheard to remark "Hey, look at that chicken over there, I think he's drowning." Rodney survived this most grievous ordeal somewhat ruffled and with a new respect for water safety.

Hopefully, after reading about these ordeals you will also develop a new respect for water safety and for Rodney as well. And one final note to all you sports fans out there — if you must throw things at Rodney, try aluminium cans, not beer bottles. The bottles hurt. □

RANT 'N' RAVEN

NHL Hardball Won't Work

by Steven Vesely
Charlatan Staff

The NHL has won. The referees have lost.

So why is it the officials are still striking and no agreement has been reached?

Because league executives aren't satisfied with victory. They want annihilation. They want total capitulation. They want to make the referees grovel like dogs.

And if they keep up this hard-line attitude, it's going to backfire in their faces.

Three weeks ago, after months of negotiations came to naught, the referees decided a 29-per-cent pay hike wasn't enough for their pains — officiating an 84-game regular season plus a month-long playoff schedule.

At the time, there was no sympathy from a public either out of work or just barely hanging on to their jobs.

We wondered how the linesmen, who get paid $33,000, and the referees, who get paid $50,000 already, could turn down an offer like that. How hard could it be to officiate games for 10 months of the year and vacation for the other two? If only we had such a rough life.

The referees must have been crazy.

So scab officials were hired on as replacements. Some nights they've been great calling the right penalties even late in the game. Other nights they've been terrible and hopelessly out of their league. But on most nights they haven't been noticeable. Just the way it should be.

The replacements' surprising success has led to some of the quickest reversals in the history of the labor movement. Now the referees, who had asked for a 60-per-cent wage increase, are eager beavers looking to settle for the NHL's offer of 29 per cent.

The referees blundered and they know it. And now they do have public sympathy on their side. They've admitted their mistakes and they want to settle a contract in good faith with the NHL.

All they want is a chance to save face with a small improvement somewhere in the package.

But the NHL has the upper hand and the executive would love to tame the referees to their liking. Commissioner Gary Bettman is new to the job and he'd like nothing better than to use this strike to demonstrate his tough bargaining skills to the players, the owners and the referees.

But this Machiavellian attitude is wrong and not going to get him or the league anywhere. Players are complaining inferior officiating is letting nasty stickwork and checks creep back into the game.

It's certainly no coincidence many of the game's true stars are out with early-season injuries right now. And now with the strike dragging on and unhappiness creeping in among the players, there's already talk about the players staging a one-game strike in support of the referees if the situation isn't settled soon.

What the NHL should do is take the victory they've won and be magnanimous about it.

Because if they don't, public opinion could quickly turn against them and leave them in the doghouse. □

Raven Records

OWIAA WATERPOLO East Division

	W	L	T	F	A	PTS
Toronto	4	0	0	40	13	8
Carleton 3	1	0	0	38	14	6
Queen's	2	2	0	32	21	4
McMaster	1	3	0	24	43	2
Brock	0	4	0	13	56	0

OWIAA VOLLEYBALL East Division

	W	L	T	F	A	PTS
York	4	0	0	12	0	8
Ottawa	4	1	0	12	6	8
Toronto	2	1	0	8	3	4
Queen's	2	2	0	7	7	4
Ryerson	1	4	0	3	12	2
Carleton 0	5	0	1	15	0	0

OWIAA BASKETBALL West Division

	W	L	T	F	A	PTS
Windsor	2	0	0	131	70	4
Brock	1	0	0	65	53	2
Guelph	1	0	0	78	41	2
Western	1	0	0	78	52	2
Waterloo	1	2	0	148	150	2
McMaster	0	1	0	52	78	0
Laurier	0	3	0	90	198	0
Lakehead	0	0	0	0	0	0

OWIAA HOCKEY OWIAA Division

	W	L	T	F	A	PTS
Toronto	5	0	0	22	5	10
Guelph	3	2	0	12	11	6
York	1	3	0	6	9	2
Queen's	1	5	0	6	21	2

OWIAA Athlete of the Week

Nancy Gyurcsik of the Windsor Lancers basketball team is the OWIAA athlete of the week. The fifth-year Masters human kinetics student leads the OWIAA scoring race with an average of 21.5 points per game, shooting 70 per cent from the free throw line as well as grabbing a total of 19 offensive and defensive rebounds. The Lancers currently hold first place in the west division largely due to her efforts.

OAAA HOCKEY Far East Division

	W	L	T	F	A	PTS
McGill	7	2	0	47	21	14
UQTR	6	1	2	44	24	14
Ottawa	6	3	1	41	30	13
Cncordia	6	3	0	39	26	12

OAAA VOLLEYBALL East Division

	W	L	T	F	A	PTS
York	6	0	0	18	4	12
Queen's	5	1	0	17	5	10
Laurent	2	4	0	10	14	4
Toronto	2	4	0	8	14	4
Ryerson	0	6	0	2	18	0

OAAA Athlete of the Week

Mitch Proteau of the York University volleyball is this week's OAAA athlete of the week. The 6'5 outside hitter recorded 45 kills, 27 digs, 11 blocks and four service aces last week as York won three matches to move into first place in the east division.

Offence missing in road losses

Basketball men still looking for that elusive road victory

by Kevin Restivo
Charlatan Staff

Road woes continue for the Carleton men's basketball team.

The Ravens remained winless on the road in their exhibition schedule, dropping a pair of games in Windsor Nov. 26-27.

Windsor 93 Carleton 83
Western 91 Carleton 64

Carleton lost 93-83 to the University of Windsor Lancers and 91-64 the University of Western Ontario Mustangs.

A scrappy full-court press kept the Ravens within striking range early and trailing 44-37 at halftime. But the Ravens' poor free-throwing did them in later in the game.

Carleton shot 45 per cent from the foul line while Windsor converted on 79 per cent of its opportunities.

"We made our free throws and they didn't," said Lancer head coach Mike Havey. "And that's why we won."

First-year Raven forward Brian Russell agreed mistakes did them in.

"We could've used some more concentration. We had a couple of missed layups and our free-throw shooting wasn't too good," said Russell.

Furthermore, the Lancers were able to pound the ball inside the key, continually drawing fouls off Raven forwards.

"They consistently fouled us inside," said Havey. "They just couldn't handle our size."

Though the Ravens were down by as much as 18 points in the second half, their tenacity was evident.

"They competed well and they kept coming at us. They're a very scrappy team and that resulted in a lot of turnovers," said Havey.

Russell agreed.

"I thought we really hustled and played good defence."

Taffe Charles led the way with 33 points, while James Marquardt added 17.

Against Western, the Ravens hung tough once again in the first half, down 40-32 at halftime, but were done in by a lack of balanced scoring.

Charles, usually the Ravens' leading scorer, could only muster up 10 points and the rest of the team was unable to pick up the slack.

Carleton shot 39 per cent from the field and was out-rebounded 35-21.

The Ravens were led by swingman Reagh Vedito, who netted 17 points.

Next up for the Ravens is the Seneca College Tournament in Toronto on Dec. 3-4. □

Hockey club crowned in close loss

by Bill Labonte
Charlatan Staff

It was supposed to be seventh heaven. It became seventh hell.

Still looking for their first win of the season in their seventh game of the year, the Carleton hockey club played its best game yet — and lost.

Kings 7 Carleton 5

The Graduate Kings hockey club defeated the Carleton hockey club 7-5 in Senior R.A. League action on Nov. 24, dropping Carleton's record to 0-5-2.

With Carleton trailing 6-5 late in the game and pressing with an extra attacker, the Kings scored an insurance goal into an empty net.

"We wanted to beat them badly because we know them well," said goaltender Pat McFetridge. "The guys are not scared to play physically with them because they're the same age as we are."

The Kings are a group of Carleton graduates who played for the hockey club last year.

Carleton captain Darren Keating made the club's comeback a possibility when Carleton was trailing 6-4. Keating set up the nicest goal of the night, a beautiful feed to open forward Craig Boehler, who only had to tap the puck in from the side of the net.

New addition Mike Kiely also impressed coach George Brown with his physical presence. Kiely received Carleton's only two penalties, one for cross-checking and one for roughing.

Scoring for Carleton were forwards Jason Tamo, Craig McLeod, Rob Carleton, Boehler and defenceman Jeff McKenna.

Carleton's next game is against the Wizards hockey club on Dec. 8 at 8:40 p.m. at the R.A. Centre. □

Raven Rumblings

QUOTE OF THE WEEK

"I realized that a new costume was needed. A good one that didn't look like a chicken. One that the university could be proud of."

Raven mascot Brad Ellis has lobbied Carleton's department of athletics for the past three years for a new Raven suit.

BRIEFS

Carol Turgeon, director of sports services at the University of Ottawa, announced on Nov. 25 he will be retiring as of Jan. 31. Turgeon has served as the director and a physical education professor for a combined span of over 30 years.

DID YOU KNOW

Athletics director Keith Harris coached the football Ravens from 1959-68. His 36 wins are the most ever for a Carleton football team.

HAVE YOU HEARD

A coach walks into the deans office with a star recruit who failed his entrance exam. The coach gets down on his knees and begs the dean to let him in anyway. At wits end, the dean finally asks the athlete what's 7 + 7.

Thirteen, the recruit answers.

Then the coach jumps. Let him in anyway, dean, he only missed by two.

CALENDAR

Friday, Dec. 3.

BASKETBALL — Carleton travels to Toronto to participate in the Seneca College Tournament. Also participating are the colleges of Seneca and Sheridan, and the universities of Ottawa and Laurier.

The women's team will be in Halifax for the St. Mary's Tournament.

STUDY — Exams are coming. Exams are coming. Exams are coming. So goddamn it — study!

Saturday, Dec. 4.

FENCING — The fencing team was supposed to be at the University of Ottawa's Montpetit Hall competing in the Ottawa Invitational. But it was cancelled because it was too close to exams. So they'll be studying instead.

STUDY — Exams are coming. Exams are coming. Exams are coming. So goddamn it — study!

Sunday, Dec. 5

STUDY — Exams are coming. Exams are coming. Exams are coming. So goddamn it — study!

December Break

SWIMMING — The swim team will be training down in Florida for about a week in late December. Lucky them. □

Rodney seeks a suitable suit

by Steven Vesely
Charlatan Staff

Raven mascot Brad Ellis would give the proverbial kingdom not for a horse, but for a new Raven suit.

Since Ellis took over the mascot duties three years ago, he's doggedly lobbied the department of athletics, administration, the Carleton University Students' Association and just about any student who will listen, about the sad state of the costume he wears.

"It's lost massive strands of feathers," says Ellis of the suit which dates back to 1985. "The underarms are ripped, protective padding is falling out, holes are developing in the knees when I dive and the stitching is falling apart."

Now, slowly, it appears his lobbying efforts might finally be bearing fruit.

Since September, Ellis has raised about $60 from a donation box at Carleton sports events.

Three weeks ago, Ellis addressed a CUSA council meeting with a passionate speech. Council agreed to give him $500 provided he had a firm financial commitment from athletics to cover the rest of the $3,000-$5,000 estimated cost.

Then, two weeks ago, Ellis presented Paul Armstrong, director of men's sports information for Carleton athletics, with a detailed proposal for a new suit. Armstrong approved of the proposal.

Money for a new suit has not been set aside in this year's athletic budget, but athletic director Keith Harris is not closed to the idea of reviewing the budget looking for funds.

"Obviously, if we can be convinced that it will be reasonably priced, durable and of good quality, then we'll be open-minded," says Harris.

Over at the University of Ottawa, the Gee-Gee mascot cost their athletic department $3,500 two years ago, while this past summer the University of Windsor paid $5,000 for a new Lancer costume, says Ellis, who is good friends with many of the other university mascots.

Now Ellis is canvassing local costume-makers looking for the best deal he can find. He hopes to have a final cost figure available to Harris by exam time, a deposit made by the end of exams and a new suit for the new year.

Meanwhile, he also continues to search for support. The Varsity Athletics Council and the Ravens' R'Us club have agreed to raise funds for the costume.

But most of all, he's after student support with his donation box, which he'd like to have permanently installed at the Unicentre Store and CUSA's front desk.

"If every student threw in 20 cents, that would cover it," he says. "It's the price of every student giving up a cup of coffee. That's all." □

Charlatan Hockey Pool

Here are the point leaders in the Charlatan Hockey Pool.
Points were tabulated as of Tue. Nov. 30, 1993.

BAXTER'S

1344 Bank Street
(at Riverside)
738-3323

1	Patrick Soden	281
2	Whitney Reynolds	275
3	S. Bhattacharyya	274
4	R. De Vecchi	271
5	Blair Sanderson	271
6	Anjali Varma	270
7	Vicki Mavraganis	269
8	Sean Wright	269
9	Brent Quinn	268
10	Don Belanger	267

After being #2 for two straight weeks, Patrick Soden finally leads the pool. You can pick up the $25 dinner certificate for Baxter's restaurant at The Charlatan.

Charlatan Sports Trivia

Answer the following question correctly and become eligible to win a $25 dinner for two at Schadillac's Saloon.

Don Shula is one of two NFL coaches to win 300 career games. Name the other.

Congratulations to Chris Fox who knew Jerry West was the only player to win an NBA finals MVP in a losing cause. (back in 1969)

1. Place your answer, name and phone number on a piece of paper and submit it to The Charlatan sports editor, room 531 Unicentre. The recipient of the prize will be determined by a supervised draw of all correct answers.

2. All answers must be received by Tuesday, Jan. 4, 1994. The winner will be contacted by phone, by the sports editor of the Charlatan.

3. Contestants may submit only one entry per week.

4. Charlatan staff members and their families are not eligible to participate.

Answer:

Name:

Phone:

WHERE CAN YOU AND YOUR DATE EAT A GREAT DINNER...FOR LESS THAN $20!!!

NOV. - DEC. COUPON

Full Course Dinner
only
99¢

(max. value $13.50)

order any full course dinner at reg. price & receive a second dinner of equal or lesser value for 99¢

Not valid with any other offer. PST & GST extra (coupon expires Dec. 15, 1993)

Ottawa South's
Finest Sunday
Brunch 10:30-2:30

FULL 3 COURSE DINNER - Soup or Salad, Fresh Baked San Francisco Sourdough Bread, Entree Selection, Spumoni Ice Cream, Coffee or Tea

HOMEMADE PASTA DISHES • VEAL • CHICKEN & MORE

2446 Bank at Hunt's club
(Towngate Plaza)
736-6677
Reservations & Banquet
Facilities Available

JANUARY COUPON

Full Course Dinner
only
99¢

(max. value $13.50)

order any full course dinner at reg. price & receive a second dinner of equal or lesser value for 99¢

Not valid with any other offer. PST & GST extra (coupon valid from Jan. 1 - 31, 1994)

It's A,
ootin' Tootin'
Merry Christmas!

We've got the largest and the best selection of Western Boots, clothing and hats from the world's top suppliers in our new, larger store.

SCHADILLAC RANCH

99 CLARENCE ST.
562-1320
BYWARD MARKET

Drawing for Adults & Teens

Winter session begins
January 10th

- Beginner - Advanced Levels
- Adult Draw to Paint
- Figure/Still Life
- Teen Program (age 10 - 17)

Painted Word Studio
(in the Glebe) 234-1987

DENTAL OFFICE
DR. PAUL GREENACRE
& ASSOCIATES

Convenient Location
Emergency Care
Flexible Hours
Gum Problems
Wisdom Teeth
Fillings
Braces

WE CATER TO COWARDS!

Fisher Heights Plaza 225-3564
780 Baseline Road at Fisher Ave
(Beside The Lone Star Cafe)

"NOBODY PARTIES LIKE THE IRISH!"

Heart & Crown

IRISH PUB & RESTAURANT

NO COVER 10¢ WINGS 15¢ SHRIMP
IMPORTED DRAFTS
LARGE PATIO DAILY SPECIALS
DART BOARDS SATELLITE TV

LIVE "IRISH" ENTERTAINMENT
EVERY WED., THURS., FRI. AND SAT. 9 P.M.

GOOD FUN GOOD FOOD GREAT BEER
67 CLARENCE STREET, BYWARD, MARKET, 562-0674

OLIVER'S
Calendar

December 2
through December 11
1993

2 THURSDAY
BON JOVI
PROMO with Jimmy George
Sony Discman prize

3 Friday Pubs
Mystery
Friday
Freebies
COFFEEHOUSE!
Cooper,
Emmerson,
& King!

4 LIVE BANDS ON SATURDAY
CFMY (Toronto) presents the band
HEAD

6 MONDAY NIGHT
FOOTBALL!
Weekly Pool League
20¢ Wings!

7 TUESDAY
COMMERCE SOCIETY PUB
Meatball sandwiches - daily special!

8 WORLD FAMOUS WEDNESDAYS

9 RETURN TO THE EDGE
Last BASH of the Term...
CASH!
93.10

10 Friday Pubs
Oliver's and Rooster's are still open for chasing away those exam doldrums...
Friday Freebies continue in January!

Closed Sunday!
Closed Saturday December 11!

ORLANDO + DAYTONA BEACH
7 nights!!

Spring Break

PACKAGE INCLUDES:

- 2 nights accommodations at the Quality Inn on International Drive, only minutes away from any of Orlando's hottest attractions.
- Special All Canadian Welcome Party at Disney's Pleasure Island! Featuring 5 night clubs in one!
- Discount admissions to all Orlando attractions
- 5 nights accommodations at Daytona's best hotels - the Howard Johnson or Whitehall hotel
- A complete schedule of great pool deck parties
- Food, merchandise, and service discounts
- All taxes, tips, service charges included
- Full-time staff on location to serve your needs

$139 Quad Occupancy WITHOUT TRANSPORTATION

$289 Quad Occupancy WITH MOTORCOACH TRANS.

THE WHITEHALL
HOWARD JOHNSON.

FOR FURTHER INFORMATION AND RESERVATIONS
STOP BY YOUR TRAVEL CUTS OFFICE
1st Level Unicentre
Carleton University
Ottawa, ON
OR CALL 238-5493

ARTS & ENTERTAINMENT

News Flash! Pearl Jam hugely popular

by Johanna Ciszewski and Blayne Haggart
Charlatan Staff

The results are in! Our first entertainment poll has been compiled and the results are enlightening, to say the least.

There were the expected responses; everyone loves Pearl Jam, Furnaceface is the most popular local band, and Zaphod's rates well as both a bar and a live venue. And thanks to you good folk (all 51 of you) who answered the survey. We at the Charlatan—who have no life—now know where to go to pick up the babes (Oliver's), how to pick 'em up ("Can I buy you a drink or would you just like the money" is our favorite) and where to take them afterwards (ATTENTION: AVOID THE FIFTH FLOOR OF THE LIBRARY!).

So without further ado, here are your answers, ranked according to the number of votes received:

Favorite Music Group

1. Pearl Jam, R.E.M. (tie)
2. Tragically Hip, U2 (tie)
3. Depeche Mode

Honorable mention: Furnaceface

Best Local Band

1. Furnaceface
2. Fun For Malakai, Heaven Dog (tie)
3. Illegal Jazz Poets

Honorable Mention: September Child

Dumbest Band Name

1. PooPoo KaKa and the BumBums
2. The Band, Corky and the Juice Pigs (tie)
3. 4 Non Blondes, Whoa Bazooka (tie)

Honorable Mention: Archers of Loaf Child

Best Album of the Year

1. Pearl Jam — Vs.
 2. U2 — Zooropa
 3. Smashing Pumpkins — Siamese Dream
- Honorable Mention: Dinosaur Jr. — Where You Been?

Worst Album of the Year

1. Meatloaf — Bat Out of Hell 2
2. Moxxy Frúvous — Bargenville, The Bodyguard Soundtrack (tie)
3. Blind Melon — Blind Melon

Honorable Mention: Snow — 12 Inches of Snow

Best Concert of the Year

1. Another Roadside Attraction
2. Me, Mom, and Morgentaler
3. Fugazi, with Shudder to Think and Lockjaw

Honorable Mention: Neil Young, with Pearl Jam and Soundgarden

Worst Concert of the Year

1. Pearl Jam with Doughboys
2. Def Leppard
3. Rod Stewart

Honorable Mention: Loverboy

Best Live Ottawa Venue

1. Zaphod Beeblebrox (a landslide)
 2. The Penguin
 3. Creeque Alley, Grand Central (tie)
- Honorable Mention: "Non-existent"

Best Bar in Town

1. Zaphod Beeblebrox
2. Manx Pub
3. Spo-dee O-dee's

Honorable Mention: Château Lafayette House

Most Notorious Meat Market

1. Yucatan Liquor Stand
2. Indigo
3. Oliver's

Honorable Mention: 1st floor of the library

Favorite Campus Hangout

1. Rooster's
2. Mike's Place
3. Oliver's

Honorable Mention: the library

Favorite Alcoholic Beverage

1. Beer (surprise)
- Honorable Mention: "Don't drink"

Cheeziest Pick-up Line (rated in terms of cheese)

1. "Excuse me, do you have a quarter? My mom told me to phone her when I fell in love."
 2. "Are your feet tired? You've been walking through my mind all night."
 3. "What is your favorite letter? Mine is 'U.'"
 4. "You know, you are what you eat... and I could be you by tomorrow morning."
- Reality Check: "What isn't a cheezy pick-up line?"

BODY PART THAT LOOKS BEST PIERCED

1. Ear
2. Nipple, belly button (tie)
3. Nose

Honorable Mention: "None"

Favorite Place You've Had Sex on Campus (rated in terms of believability)

1. Various places around the library
 2. Against the windows in the Architecture Building, handcuffed to the pipes
 3. Salad bar at Saga (off-hours)
 4. Back of campus-cop cruiser
- The Only One We Really Believe: "Like I'd tell you and lose it."

What to buy for someone who hates Eric Clapton

by Rori Caffrey
Charlatan Staff

Why buy local music as Xmas gifts?

First, you're supporting independent artists, thus making their holiday a much happier one.

Second, you're giving the gift of music, which, cheezy as it sounds, is the gift that keeps giving all throughout the year.

Third, if you're buying for family or friends outside Ottawa, you're widening the audience for local artists. In addition, it's not likely someone from out of town will have heard many Ottawa bands, thus eliminating the chance of buying them something they already have.

Below is a list of gift ideas for the music connoisseur in your life. It is by no means a complete list, so when you go to local record stores looking for these items, be sure to check out what else the Ottawa scene has to offer.

1. Illegal Jazz Poets, self-titled cassette

The band that has drawn comparisons to the Clash, EMF, and the Jackson Five, brings forth this five-song forerunner to their soon-to-be-released debut CD. IJP is Ottawa's most original, most promising, and probably all-around best band. Buy their tape now, or risk feeling like a dork when they get really big.

2. Nevergreen, self-titled cassette

This nine-song tape beats out black-market American smokes as Cornwall's coolest export. Great power pop with punk spirit that begs to be hummed along with.

3. Various Artists, Plug! CD

Eleven local bands, 23 tracks, $15 — 'nuff said.

4. Resin Scraper, 7" single (i.e. vinyl)

Seattle-inspired "grunge rock" in the vein of Pearl — JOKING! Loud and angry. Very loud and angry. Although nobody you know owns a turntable, giving them

Ottawa's newest indie release will inspire them to start combing used-appliance stores for one.

5. Mushroom Explosion T-shirt

Snatch up one of these gems if possible! Mock John Deere logo on front, with "I Want To Be Different Just Like Everyone Else" on back. Even if you don't like the band, as hard as that is, this tie-dyed shirt can double as a pro-drug rave garment.

6. Electric Embryo, Pinball Organs cassette

A great stocking stuffer for a sibling into the flannel 'n' Docs thing. Ten boss tunes served up in a mighty professional package.

7. Rebo Band, She-Male Atrocities cassette

This has to be the most over-looked local offering. Music for, and by, weirdos bent on the Jerky Boys, circus freak shows and the Amazing Reveen. A must for any Primus/Mr. Bungle fans, or for that black sheep uncle who collects dead flies.

8. Various Artists, Concrete Poetry cassette

Ex-Organized Rhymer and Loeb pizza pitchman MC Bones has assembled the capital region's best rap groups for this project. The tunes range from commercial to hard core, making Concrete Poetry the perfect gift for either the groover or gangsta in your posse.

9. Heaven Dog, Holy Cow cassette

This is Ottawa's feel-good alterna-pop release of the year, guaranteed to be a hit with the younger brother or sister who can't stop listening to "Shine" by the Doughboys.

10. Furnaceface, Just Buy It CD

Take the tip from the CD title and share the positive FF vibe with relatives everywhere this holiday season. □

DISCOGRAPHY

Roy Rogers
Slide of Hand
BMG

Remember the trendy black and white Levi's 501 commercial in a laundromat?

Well, that's the blues of Roy Rogers in the background and if you like the commercial, his new album, Slide of Hand, isn't comparable.

It's worse.

This Mississippi Delta blues singer/

guitarist's latest album is a blend of generic southern blues tunes, bland organs, a sorry slide guitar, pathetic harmonicas and uninspiring lyrics.

Only on a few songs does Rogers shine. "Don't Say a Word" features Rogers playing a slide guitar that would make John Lee Hooker smile and on "Mellow Apples" his guitar work brings Stevie Ray Vaughan to mind.

Doesn't "Cure for an Achin' Heart," sound almost like the title of an old and forgotten Billy Ray Cyrus tune? It's played like one.

Lyrics like: "Every time I kiss you girl/ It tastes like pork and beans/ Even though you're wearing those certified high heels/ I can tell by your giant step/ You've been walking through the cotton field," from "Down Home Girl," is what you can expect from this album.

Only on "Change of the Season" does Rogers play the Mississippi blues like he means it.

If you're a truck driver on a lonely stretch of highway then this might fit your fancy. Otherwise, Slide of Hand is not worth your time.

Anthony Pangalos

artist Johnny Marr. But she makes the mistake of falling into the Pogues-ish invocation of disaffected immigrants in Soho on the aforementioned track. "Bad" is a Shirley Valentine-style tale of a mutinous housewife who decides, in this scenario, to kill her family. Yum.

Overall, however, the lyrics of the songs are as vapid as their sound.

MacColl's lacklustre performance is what holds these tunes back. If you're looking for songs to belt out with your friends on a rainy night at the Duke of Somerset, this album will not impress.

Arn Keeling

Spiny Norman
Rang
Kid/Bosco Records

The Spinies were started in 1990 by drummer Anthony Ellis and guitarist Larry Newman.

They've now released this promising guitar pop album that isn't boring.

Half the tape is studio recorded and half was recorded live on to a two track. The best songs are the live ones, although it would've been nice to hear them with better sound quality.

"Stop" is an enjoyable attempt at funk. "Rang" gives the bassist, Jason Farrar, a chance to wail and he does. "Crazy" is an example of the power pop of the late '70s and early '80s and "Hot 'n' Cold" is a welcome R & B change from the rockin' pop tunes.

Musically Rang is a winner. So, if you're in the mood for good guitar pop, Rang is the album for you.

Anthony Pangalos

Eight CDs you may want to consider purchasing this Christmas:

A Tribe Called Quest: Midnight Marauders

Wonder Stuff: Construction For the Modern Idiot

Ani DiFranco: Puddle Dive

Cracker: Kerosene Hat

Curve: Cuckoo

Velocity Girl: Copacetic

James: Laid

Me, Mom and Morgentaler: Shiva Space Machine

Charlatan Staff

KIRSTY MACCOLL

SNFU
Something Green and Leafy This Way Comes Epitaph

SNFU is a brilliant window into reality.

This latest release will leave those "corporate-alternative" music types wishing they could create something of the same magnitude and impact.

For those of us whose claim to the "alternative" label is a new pair of Docs and a Pearl Jam record, don't even bother. You've missed the point.

SNFU glide through this album with solid rhythms and intensely inspirational poetic lyrics. If you are a fan of Olive Lawn, their guitarist O makes a guest appearance with some guitar leads as well as taking the band's photos.

All the tracks are equally well done. From the recognition of today's frightening age in "A Bomb," to the insecure trappings of "Limping Away," the listener is taken on a well-directed tour of the insanity of our society.

If you're free Dec. 3, SNFU will be taking to the stage at Porter Hall with Alice Donut for a highly recommended dose of today.

Rob Willbond

Kirsty MacColl
Titanic Days
I.R.S.

Kirsty MacColl is a long-time Pogues sidekick, famous for her crusty performance on their classic song "Fairytale of New York."

But when flying solo, MacColl seems to lose her edge, as on this poppy release.

This album, released by the granddaddy of underground labels, I.R.S., is an uneven smattering of overproduced pop tunes mixed with interesting, but uninspiring, funk-based tracks.

Falling into the latter category, "Angel" and "Just Woke Up" come complete with a funky beat, bass line and MacColl, who shows a dreamy side to her usually gritty voice.

One of the highlights of the album requires close listening — it is the excellent string arrangement on "Soho Square" by Fiachra Trench, who is also a regular on Pogues records. The strings provide an element of depth on an otherwise superficial album.

MacColl had a hand in writing all the songs, including "Can't Stop Killing You," which she co-wrote with ex-Smiths gui-

If you'd like a booklet about Jack Daniel's Whiskey, write us here in Lynchburg, Tennessee 37352, U.S.A.

IT DOESN'T TAKE LONG to do your Christmas shopping in Lynchburg, Tennessee.

Every one of our stores can be found on the town square, so it doesn't take much walking, either. (This gentleman found everything he needed in Tommy Sullenger's place.) All of us at Jack Daniel Distillery hope you're getting to everyone on your list in timely fashion, and remind you that gift boxes of our rare Tennessee Whiskey are sure to please. Happy Holidays!

JACK DANIEL'S TENNESSEE WHISKEY

Writer-in-residence program concludes

by Rob McLennan
Charlatan Staff

Carleton University is wrapping up its first writer-in-residence program.

Toronto-based author and poet Elisabeth Harvor has been in Ottawa as Carleton University's first writer-in-residence, a term which lasted from September until the end of November.

As the writer-in-residence, she read and commented on manuscripts of poetry, fiction and non-fiction for students and non-students alike.

While in Ottawa, Harvor divided her time between Carleton and the Ottawa Public Library for "financial reasons," according to English Professor Tom Henighan, who was responsible for the writer-in-residence program.

It cost $12,000 in salary to bring her to Ottawa, half of which came from a Canada Council writer-in-residence program which has since been cancelled due to cutbacks. Carleton and the Ottawa Public Library split the rest.

Harvor has won a number of awards for her writing, including the Malahat Long Poem Prize, the League of Canadian Poets' National Poetry Prize, and most recently, the 1992 Lampart Award for the best first book of poetry by a Canadian writer. Her work has appeared in journals and periodicals such as Arc, Event, The New Yorker, Saturday Night and Quarry.

Henighan says Carleton has never had a writer-in-residence before because "it requires a number of writers at the school. Before, only (Christopher) Levinson was teaching writing courses."

Plus, he notes, because Carleton's writing program was so small there was never any pressure to get one. Before Harvor, the closest thing Carleton had was Mordecai Richler, who taught a course in fiction writing as a visiting lecturer in 1971-72.

The response to Harvor has been overwhelming. At the Ottawa Public Library, she says they had to cut off submissions after 80, of which there was still a large pile for her to return to at the end of November. She will work at the library until her term ends at Christmas.

Harvor has written two books of short stories: Women and Children, published in 1973 (re-issued under the title Our Lady of All the Distances) and If Only We Could Drive Like This Forever, released in 1988, and 1992's collection of poetry, Fortress of Chains. Harvor is originally from New Brunswick, the daughter of well-known potters. Reading any amount of Harvor's work is like seeing a fraction of her own life, her own experiences. In "Afterbirth," the first poem in her collection of poetry, she makes a reference to a woman giving birth to a baby way out on the river one winter, after the river had frozen over.

According to Harvor, this has its genesis in a story Harvor heard in her childhood. The woman in question was trying to cross the river to get to the doctor's house. After giving birth to a baby on the ice, she wrapped the kid up in a fur rug that she had with her and simply drove back home in the sleigh.

In a long section of her book If Only We Could Drive Like This Forever called "The Age of Unreason," Harvor includes the whole description of the party where she met her husband in the mid-1950s and whom she married in 1957.

She tells how "he arrived at the door and I opened it, and my sister came racing up because she had invited him herself. . . . She told me later that she just knew right away at the door that he was in love with me. She said he had that ring tonality. Despite this low point, this collection is worthy of your time.

The various contributions to the collection span a fair spectrum of tastes; there's enough here to satisfy most listeners of alternative, er, contemporary non-pop rock.

If you'd enjoy a sampling of acts like the Breeders, Sonic Youth, American Music Club and Sarah McLachlan, there's a good chance you'll enjoy this one.

Mario Carlucci

Elisabeth Harvor, Carleton's first writer-in-residence family and because she had the time. For a while they had taken in boarders to supplement her husband's income, but she hated having to share her house with strangers.

This gave her an incentive to start writing. As she says, "It's amazing what some people will do so you won't have to go out and work and that's exactly the way I felt. I felt, 'I'll do anything but that (take in more boarders).'"

She then stayed home with her children and began to write what would eventually become the book of stories Women and Children.

Harvor says even though she has no problem with the act of writing itself, shyness and seeing what fame did to her parents make it difficult for her to handle publicity, even to the point of refusing a television interview when her first book came out.

"I saw what fame had done to my own family," she says, explaining that her parents' fame as potters had placed a "burden" on their family by forcing them to act like the perfect family for the media, something she did not want for her own children.

It wasn't until many years later that she realized that interviews, articles and appearances are necessary to sell books, whether one particularly wants to go through them or not.

After she took her master's in English with a specialty in creative writing at Montreal's Concordia University in 1986, Harvor taught creative writing at York University for six years.

Of her experiences at Carleton, she says, "I often feel people aren't writing about the most interesting lives; people don't value their own lives enough as material." □

Alternative to what?

Various Artists
No Alternative
Arista

Just so everybody knows, "alternative" rock does not exist. It is a myth on par with Elvis sightings, quality airline food and stress-free relationships."

This assertion comes courtesy of the noble folks at the Red Hot Organization, which raises AIDS awareness and funding and is responsible for this compilation.

So now that the ground rules have been established — and our ignorant vocabularies have been swept clear of petty categories — we can delve into the compilation that just might end all compilations.

With superlative acts like Soul Asylum belting out passionate renderings of Marvin Gaye's "Sexual Healing," how can this compilation not be "alternative?"

Seriously though, Gaye would certainly roll around convulsively in his grave, given a tiny dose of Soul Asylum's instrumental hatchet job and lead singer Dave Pirner's insipidly jar-

A Christmas Carol...

On the 12th day of Christmas, ISYS sold to me,

- | | |
|----------------------------|---|
| 12 Function Keys, | (89 Other keys included with keyboard) |
| A Seagate 1144A, | (130Mb, 15ms Hard Disk) |
| 10 Floppy Disks, | (1.44Mb High Density 3 1/2") |
| A 9 Pin Connector, | (Attached to a Microsoft Mouse) |
| 8 Meg of RAM, | (70 ns) |
| $70 Windows 3.1, | (We have all of your software needs!) |
| DOS 6.0, | (Call for more information on software) |
| A CTX 5468NI, | (14" 0.28 dot pitch Non Interlaced Monitor) |
| A 486 DX-33, | (FIC, 128Kb cache, upgradeable to DX/2) |
| A 3.5" Disk Drive, | (Yes, the 5.25" drive is included too!) |
| 2 Serial Ports, and | (1 Parallel and 1 Game port, too!) |
| A VGA Wonder GT! | (Made in Canada by ATI!) |

What a deal! The ISYS Christmas special comes encased in a minitower case with 200 Watt power Supply, but we ran out of days of Christmas! The entire package is available until Boxing Day, for the special price of $2200.00

Merry Christmas from ISYS !!

The ISYS Christmas special is only one of a myriad of system configurations that we can provide for you! We can provide solutions for Programming, Graphics, Multimedia, 'The Ultimate Game System', or just about any application you need! We can upgrade your existing computer, as well! Call for more information about hardware and software solutions, all at special Christmas prices until Boxing Day!

We reserve the right to substitute named items for items of equivalent value, functionality and capacity, depending upon product availability at time of order.

ISYS

Telephone: 769-8894
Fax: 730-0640

Talking mellow with the Cowboy Junkies

by Arn Keeling
Charlatan Staff

Cowboy Junkies
Creeque Alley
Dec. 2

It seems to be a trend among prominent Canadian musicians to inject a little musical nationalism into their lyrics; witness Tom Cochrane's "Big League" and Tragically Hip's "Wheat Kings."

But Michael Timmins, guitarist and songwriter for one of Canada's best-known groups, Cowboy Junkies, says he doesn't like to use specifically Canadian lyrics.

"There are identifiable Canadian elements in our songs, like the weather," says Timmins, talking about the Junkies' forthcoming fifth album Pale Sun, Crescent Moon. But he says any nationalistic impulse is unconscious.

"I don't have any desire to write Canadiana," he says. "Those kinds of specific references I tend to shy away from." Rather, the Montreal-born songwriter says he prefers to leave the setting and interpretation to his listeners.

Timmins and the band—sister Margo, brother Peter and Alan Anton—have released their fifth album, 12 tracks that showcase both Michael's evocative lyrics and a rawer sound blended with the Junkies' trademark ethereal style.

The Junkies are rolling into Ottawa as part of a five-date mini-tour to kick off the new album before they embark on a full-scale tour. Unlike their previous tours following Caution Horses (1990) and Black-Eyed Man (1991), Timmins says the band will be playing smaller venues. To make up for the decreased capacity of clubs, he says the band will play more gigs in each place on the full-scale tour.

"Last time out we felt, on our end, it was getting a bit stale," says Timmins. He says the Junkies' return to a more intimate, intense sound lends itself better to smaller venues.

"With this record, it's a lot more guitar-oriented and raw-edged, which works better in a smaller venue," he says.

Raw-edged is an apt description of the new songs. The Junkies have abandoned the country influence that marked their previous two albums to return to the bluesy sound of 1987's The Trinity Sessions and 1986's Whites Off Earth Now.

The difference on this record is the lead guitar of guest Ken Myhr, who played on the band's last tour and has injected some hard sounds into the Junkies' laid-back souls.

"The sound really developed during the tour," says Timmins, who then invited Myhr to contribute to Pale Sun. "It was definitely a conscious effort to include the lead guitar."

For a band that's so mellow, these folks look almost too happy.

The Junkies also used less of the harmonica, accordion, mandolin and steel guitar found on past albums, reverting to a stripped-down sound. Timmins says this helped the band focus on its sound without the distractions of too many outside influences.

Loud sounds from Almonte invade Ottawa

by Sussana Forieri
Charlatan Staff

When you hear Generic, you can't help but wonder how they can sound so good, merging such divergent sounds to make the band whole.

Hailing from Almonte, each member brings a different influence to the band. This mix of inspiration—everything from Led Zeppelin to classical music—allows them to form their own unique style, a fast-paced, aggressive sound similar to what's found on Bad Religion's Epitaph label.

Sound like a strange mix? The band probably wouldn't disagree. "We hate each other's bands," laughs drummer James Mace.

With heavy drums, singing guitar, forceful lyrics and a soothing bass, this band has a little something for everyone.

"We don't know what we are," says Mace.

"We're just generic," says lead guitarist Andrew MacPherson.

The band was started last summer by MacPherson and bassist Vince McGrath. Mace and singer Solo (it's a Madonna thing) joined later that summer and their guitarist Riel Boire left his job a couple months ago to make the band complete.

"We're a new band, but we like to think of ourselves as well-rounded," MacPherson says.

Upcoming projects include a video and possibly recording a full-length independent album.

"I have ideas for television and stuff I'd like to start," says MacPherson.

Making the rounds of the Ottawa Valley for the past two months, Generic made a stop at the Pit Nov. 13, opening for Black Triangle. The show was recorded for an upcoming independent cassette which should be released around Christmas, if all goes well.

Vocalist Solo and guitarist Andrew MacPherson: it's the boys from Almonte.

The gig was a good showcase for the band. Mace played an impressive drum solo, while hints of Zeppelin shone through on guitar. Solo captured the audience's attention through his genuine emotion. These guys even surprised themselves when MacPherson began smashing the amp with his guitar while a shocked Solo looked on.

When asked after the show what had come over him, MacPherson replied, "I just haven't gotten enough sleep and my head hurts."

Although the band flares and explodes musically, there is a message behind the thrash.

"I think that a lot of our lyrics have a bit of a message in them, something about our experiences," MacPherson says.

"On this record, we wanted to sound more like a band from song to song," says Timmins.

The band has achieved its goal. Pale Sun is a solid album from the destined-for-radio-play opener "Crescent Moon" to the mournful closing track "Floorboard Blues."

Perhaps the album's strongest moment is in the remake of the Dinosaur Jr. tune "The Post." Myhr's wailing guitar aches distortion across the incomprehensible, psychedelic vocals of Margo Timmins.

One of Michael's most interesting songwriting efforts is a departure, both for himself and male lyricists in general. "Hunted" is a disturbing series of scenarios detailing the day-to-day fear of violence faced by most women:

"Emma's in a part of town/Where she doesn't recognize the streets/Named for famous native sons/And out of every crevice comes creeping/A threat in her direction."

"I don't think as males we can totally understand it," says Timmins of the lack of safety many women feel. "I didn't want it to be sensational, but I wanted to put the point across."

He says he got the idea for the song like he does for all his songs: "It was just a matter of keeping your ears open."

True to form, the Junkies have created music that challenges any definition of their style. Once described as "Patsy Cline on Valium," perhaps they now sound more like the child of a sober Jimi Hendrix with an element of blues diva Nina Simone. Or maybe they just sound like Cowboy Junkies.

"To me, all those styles merge into pop," says Timmins of their musical comparisons. "We're part of the large amalgamation of music called pop." □

Andrew MacPherson, concentrating.

Arts insight: when journalists and artists get together

by Tim O'Connor
Charlatan Staff

Some journalist bashing and artist slagging took place at a forum examining the relationship between the media and the arts community held in Ottawa last week.

The forum featured fairly polite discussion among six panellists from both the media and the arts community in Ottawa. It was moderated by media talent Laurier Lapierre and sponsored by the Council for the Arts in Ottawa.

The question being considered was "What shapes the arts community's relationship to the media in Ottawa and how can this relationship best be defined and developed?"

Judging from the discussion at the forum, the panelists obviously thought this question could best be answered by bickering over the Ottawa Citizen's coverage of the 1993 Manotick Fringe Festival.

An audience member (Susan Ure, an art programmer with the City of Ottawa who helped organize the Manotick Festival) suggested that Citizen critic Michael Groberman reviewed the novice festival by the same standards he would have reviewed the Stratford Festival.

Citizen arts columnist Jay Stone (a.k.a. Doktor Kultur) was quick to pick up this snowball and roll it down the hill, picking up the other panelists in its path.

"Do you think he (Groberman) should have lowered his standards when he reviewed it because it was new?" asked Stone.

"There is a place in the media for defining the context in which the event took place," said Mark Frutkin, a writer and teacher of creative writing at University of Ottawa.

Lapierre jumped in at this point on the side of the media saying, "Yeah, but if it was lousy, it was lousy."

Ottawa X Press managing editor Derek Raymaker later added, "I don't have a background in arts writing. I'm a rookie at this."

Thanks for coming out, Derek.

The discussion on coverage of the Manotick Fringe Festival soon turned into a discussion on the abilities of the arts journalist as a critic.

"We (the public) know that the artist must have a skill or gift. We do not know if the critiquer has any training or skill," said Lapierre.

Frutkin added punch to anti-journalist-as-critic sentiment saying, "Just to show you how unqualified a reviewer may be — before Nancy Beale was (visual) arts critic at the Citizen, I was at the job for about six months and I'm color blind!"

In the end, the only conclusions reached were that the arts community wanted more media coverage — and more favorable media coverage at that. This sentiment was accompanied by the media's insistence that they have been hit hard by the recession and must be selective in their coverage. Successful artists must therefore compete more aggressively for media attention.

Doktor Kultur had a tip for artists competing for media attention: "Send in a press release and follow it up with a phone call."

☐ Moderator Laurier Lapierre makes a point.

TIM O'CONNOR

RUSSIAN PRINCE^{REG} VODKA

PRESENTS

NEW STUFF

Russian Prince Vodka and Impact Magazine would like to expose you to some great new music. Be one of the first 125 people to respond to this offer and receive a NEW STUFF CD—FREE! There's a new CD every other month, available only through your subscription to Impact, Canada's new music magazine. Here's an act that previously appeared on a NEW STUFF CD and is now touring Canadian campuses.

HEADSTONES

You want rock 'n roll that's dark, dangerous and on the edge? Say hello to the Headstones! This Kingston/Toronto quartet have really turned heads with their MCA debut, Picture Of Health. Charismatic vocalist Hugh Dillon best describes the group's volatile relationship — "It's like a dysfunctional family. We'll kill each other but if anyone else comes in and says something, then Bang!" Guitarist Trent Carr sees rock 'n roll as their saviour. "It keeps us from being completely lost with absolutely nothing, no future, no hope."

Even if you are not one of the first 125, everyone who responds will be eligible to win:

- One of the following: a NIKKO Remote Mini-Stereo System, a NIKKO 5 Disk Drawer Stereo Remote Multi-CD Player, a NIKKO Portable Compact Disk Player, or a NIKKO Deluxe Integrated Telephone Answering System or
- One of fifty packs of TDK tapes

NIKKO

TDK

Contest winner!

Congratulations to Cat Whelan who picks himself a limited edition Chapterhouse CD, all for dropping off a poll form. Thanks to everyone who dropped off a form. Cat, come on up to the Charlatan to pick up your prize.

OOPS!

In last week's story "Deep dark secrets of the Age of Faith, we forgot to mention that Brian Avery is also a member of the aforementioned multitalented musical collective. Actually he plays lead guitar. We apologize to Brian, his family, the band and all you Age of Faith fans for any inconvenience this inadvertent omission has caused.

Mail completed coupon to IMPACT Campus Offer, Roll Magazines Inc., 219 Dufferin St., Suite 100, Toronto, Ontario, M6K 3J1

No purchase is necessary. To enter and be eligible to win, a person must be a resident of Canada who has reached the age to purchase beverage alcohol and who is not an employee of, or a member of the immediate family of, or domiciled with, an employee of FBM Distillery Co. Ltd. or its affiliated companies, the Provincial Liquor Boards, their licensees, agencies, Roll Magazine Inc., advertising and promotional agencies, prize suppliers or the independent judging organization. Chances of winning depend on the number of correct entries received. For complete contest rules write to: Impact Campus Offer, Roll Magazine Inc., 219 Dufferin St., Suite 100, Toronto, Ontario M6K 3J1. Contest closes December 17, 1993. Winners will be drawn on January 10, 1993.

NAME: _____ AGE: _____
UNIVERSITY: _____
ADDRESS _____

POSTAL CODE: _____

PHONE NUMBER: _____

4

The Charlatan Pub Crawl Extravaganza

Deep within the bowels of Ottawa lies The Pit

by Dahlia Tanasoio
Charlatan Staff

Let's face it: the Ottawa bar scene is pretty limited and trekking to Hull is now tiresome no matter how old you are.

No longer: a refreshing variety of music and people await you in the Pit.

You can barely tell the entrance exists on Rideau Street next to On Tap, except for the funky Pit mascot on the sign, a crouching gnome.

Descending the stairs to the "pit" you get that sort of New York basement bar feeling. It is definitely not pretentious, but has plenty of atmosphere. The decor is black, of course, and the ceiling is adorned with menacing gargoyles and a mirrored ball.

The Pit opened up six months ago and has steadily grown in popularity, finding its niche in the Ottawa scene. It differs from most venues in Ottawa because it caters to different groups of people.

On weekend afternoons, the Pit opens its doors to all ages, so under-age teenagers can see local or upcoming bands without having to fake their I.D. Erminio Deangelis, the manager, says this gives them a chance to experience the Ottawa scene "like an adult."

Monday nights is DJ night with Rob McLean and Stefan Gerambert for a combo of rap, techno, Manchester alternative pop and industrial music.

Usually a venue for local acts, the Pit also has specialty nights. Acid jazz night on Tuesday is the best time to go if you're in a mellow Kerouac kind of mood. DJ Trevor is a master at meshing his funk to the live jazz of his friends. They've found what jazz was always meant to be: dynamic improvisation. Check them out while they're still underground.

Decked out in polyester and macramé on Thursdays, the Hammerheads keep '70s music alive and jiving as the young and not-so-young shake their shaky things. They are currently enjoying some well-deserved success since the Ottawa disco underground has finally come out. Now the Hammerheads have other gigs at Irene's and the Glue Pot.

Compared to some Ottawa clubs, the Pit is one of the most supportive of fledgling local bands.

The Pit usually gets three to four demo tapes a week from bands and "if we like it, we call them back," says Deangelis. According to Deangelis, about 90 per cent of bands booked at the Pit are local.

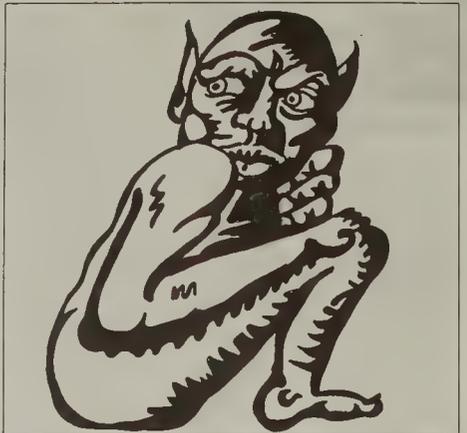

The greatest drawback to the Pit is its size, although this is also an advantage for local bands who can't fill a larger venue. When the Hammerheads play the Pit, there is barely enough room to strut the Traolta.

But this small dark hole in the ground has intimacy and charm. Owner John Wilson says he wants a "carefree" and "hassle-free" environment for his patrons.

Some people might find it a little too different. Deangelis smiles when he explains how he can spot an "On Tapper" come down the stairs by mistake: they often look confused when they reach the bottom and they quickly turn around to go back upstairs. But Deangelis says he has nothing against On Tap—it simply has a different crowd, but everyone is welcome at the Pit.

If you've ever wondered about the logo, it's Deangelis's invention. He was just working with clay one day and a shape was evolving and became the logo. The original work is proudly displayed behind the bar. The gargoyles and the paintings are all Deangelis's works too.

The Pit seems less of a place of business than a dark living room belonging to a struggling artist. It's a mellow atmosphere where you can either dance, mosh or just hang out.

A door.

JOANNE CAPUANI

Gothic gender-bender at a school for girls

by Stephanie Garrison
Charlatan Staff

The Wives of Bath
by Susan Swan
Random House
$26
237 pages

A gothic novel has certain traditional elements to it, such as ghostly appearances, orphans and cryptic alter-egos.

Susan Swan's latest book, The Wives of Bath, updates these elements, combining them with the contemporary theme of gender identity.

Swan spins a macabre tale, one much darker than the story's heroine, Mary (Mouse) Bradford would lead you to believe. From largely inattentive parents, to the bizarre associations between various peers at an ancient private school, there are few relationships in the novel that are what they appear to be.

Mouse is 16 when we first meet her, but the story is largely a flashback to three years previous, when she is shipped off by her stepmother to Bath Ladies College, on the outskirts of Toronto.

Mouse struggles against what she perceives to be two large barriers to acceptance: she is two years younger than most of her classmates (being exceptionally intelligent) and she has a malformed back, due to an earlier bout with polio.

Determined not to fit in, she instead becomes embroiled in a gender-bending drama largely due to her seemingly insane roommate Paulie. Initially moved by Paulie's forceful influence, Mouse later disentangles herself from the cancerous friendship and narrowly misses being an accomplice to murder.

What makes The Wives of Bath so engaging is not so much the plot as much as Mouse's character. Being placed in an emotionally vulnerable position, Mouse is intelligent enough to see past the easy option of feeling sorry for herself. Despite this intellect, she is still prone to occasional bursts of emotion and this makes her both human and likable.

Small aspects of the book strike a false chord, such as Paulie's moronic worshipping of King Kong, which make passages of the book uncomfortable to read. However, the phenomenal sub-plot that questions roles of gender and identity, with its brief and subtle details of lesbian history of the 1950s (revealed through letters stolen from the headmistress), is an "other" view of history that fascinates.

Swan incorporates an extensive amount of research into this work, showing admirable restraint in selecting only the most telling details to set a scene.

Quick and interesting to read, The Wives of Bath is a fascinating combination of ancient gothic conventions with voguish concerns of androgyny and gender reversal. Refined writing and an unusual protagonist make this an intriguing and unique choice for leisure reading.

That's it for Long Day in the Universe for 1993. We're all off studying now, but if you want something in this calender for 1994, fax us at 788-4051 or stop by at 531 Unicentre sometime before Dec. 31.

FAST-FORWARD YOUR CAREER AS A TECHNICAL WRITER STARTING THIS JANUARY!

If you have proven communication capabilities and a good technical background (i.e.: successful completion of 3 semesters in a technology program, a University degree or its equivalent), you can be accepted in the 4th semester of Algonquin College's Technical Writer program.

Applicants can be accepted, without a technical background, by enrolling in a regular electronics, mechanical or computing science program for the first three semesters then begin the specialized curriculum learning how to create, plan and manage technical documents using a wide selection of media.

Graduates may find excellent employment opportunities as technical communicators in a variety of public and private sector environments. Discuss details of this career field with qualified staff at a Special Information Evening Wednesday, December 8.

Other technical programs starting this January include: Architectural Technician, Computer Engineering Technology*, Computer Technology-Computing Science*, Electronics Engineering Technician*, Electronics Engineering Technology*, Heating, Refrigeration and Air Conditioning.

*These programs offer a Co-op option.

SPECIAL INFORMATION EVENING
Wednesday, December 8th, 1993
5:30 - 8 pm
Algonquin College
Woodroffe Campus "J" Block Lobby
1385 Woodroffe Avenue, Nepean

For more information on January programs contact Admissions at 727-0002.

ALGONQUIN

LONG DAY IN THE UNIVERSE

THURSDAY, DECEMBER 20 TO FRIDAY, DECEMBER 31

Thursday, December 2

Body and Soul continues its run for three more days at the NAC Atelier at 8 p.m. each night. Tickets are $12.50.

Cowboy Junkies play Creeque Alley tonight. If there are any tickets left, they're $18 at the door.

Friday, December 3

Canadian punk rock legends SNFU, along with Alice Donut and the unfortunately named PooPoo KaKa and the BumBums, play Porter Hall for the low, low price of $10 at the door or $8 in advance at the Unicentre Store and the usual independent outlets. Show starts at 8 p.m.

At the SAW Gallery this very same night you can skank your brains out to the sounds of Ottawa's own Skatterbrains. Special guests: the Wooden Stars. Doors open at 8:30 p.m. and cover for this all-ages extravaganza is $5.

It's a Leonard Cohen Pub at Bumper's tonight, featuring Cohen's videos and poetry (bring your own or someone else's to read aloud, if you so desire). The evening, which gets underway at 8 p.m., is sponsored by the fine folks from the English Literature Society.

At Zaphod's tonight it's a free show, featuring local bands Cookie at 8 p.m. and Blind at 9 p.m. What to do, what to do...

Saturday, December 4

Blue Cow! Soluble Fish! Poetry! Five dollars will get you into the launching of Ink, a national magazine covering literature and art. The fun starts at 8 p.m. at Creeque Alley.

At 11 p.m. in the NAC's Atelier, the play Body and Soul will be presented as a benefit for Equity Fights AIDS Fund. Tickets are $12.50.

Sunday, December 5

Nothing says Christmas like choral music and church. Combine the two and go see the Johannes Brahms Choir and the Nepean Youth Choir perform Christmas standards. They'll be performing at St. Brigid's Church at 7:30 p.m. Tickets are $6 for students.

You might as well just camp out at the Pit today, especially if you're a popcore fan. Connecticut's Monsterland, Ottawa's Uncommon Society and Electric Embryo play an all-ages matinée at 3 p.m. Cover is $5. This evening, it's a seven-inch release party featuring loud punkers Resin Scraper and Spiny Ant-eaters. Cover is only $4.

Monday, December 6

Parents: finally you can take your young, impressionable children to the cinema to enjoy some family fare. Two fine holiday films are showing at the Mayfair this evening. At 7 p.m. catch the heart-warming adventures of a young man as he embarks on an amazing adventure in A Clockwork Orange. And in the fine tradition of White Christmas comes the modern Christmas classic The Shining at 9 p.m.

The boys from Blind Melon (or is it Blind Lemon? It's so hard to keep these silly rock and roll names straight - ed.) grace our fair city with their fine quality musicianship. Opening for these socially responsible fellows is the Tea Party, those Doors rip-offs from Windsor. Tickets for this Porter Hall show are $19.50 in advance (tickets are available at the Unicentre Store) or $22 at the door.

Tuesday, December 7

If you don't have tickets for tomorrow's Sarah McLachlan show in Ottawa and you have a car, head for the Palladium in Toronto to see and hear McLachlan, the Skydiggers, the Waltons, Meryn Cadell and more! Tickets are $16.50.

Wednesday, December 8

Sarah McLachlan plays the Congress Centre tonight at 8 p.m. for the completely reasonable price of $24. Opening the show is Ginger, featuring, if you don't already know, ex-members of the Grapes of Wrath.

The Nutcracker, not starring Macculey Culkin (just one more reason to go see it) is being performed tonight through Dec. 12 at the NAC Opera.

Friday, December 10

Kanehsatake: 270 Years of Resistance, a film about the Oka crisis, premieres tonight at 7 p.m. at the Bytowne. If you miss it tonight it's playing until Dec. 14.

The Bourbon Tabernacle Choir bring some Christmas cheer to the Penguin tonight. Opening band is the Rhinos.

Wednesday, December 22

Now that you're all finished those nasty exams, you'll probably be in the mood for some entertainment. What better way to relax than by listening to Ottawa's very own Angstones perform the entire soundtrack of that holiday treat: The Sound of Music, as well as some "holiday favorites!" It's happening tonight and tomorrow at the Arts Court Theatre. Tickets are $10 and you can reserve them by calling 233-3449. Doors open at 8 p.m. and the show starts 30 minutes later.

Thursday, December 23

Stuck for gifts to get that special (or not-so-special) someone? May we suggest a book or two? How about John Ralston Saul's Voltaire's Bastards? It's a critique of modern society that actually makes sense. It puts a lot of what we learn at Carleton into a historical perspective.

Charlatan production manager Kevin McKay is tired. He's been doing way too much Christmas shopping. But just before he passed out beneath 100 pounds of holiday cheese, he managed to mumble, "Shakespeare. King Lear, Macbeth, The Tempest. I hear this fellow's quite good."

After you've finished your Christmas shopping, relax to the soothing sounds of the Holly Cole Trio as they perform in the NAC Opera, accompanied by a 17-piece string ensemble. Show starts at 8 p.m. and tickets range from $16 to $24.

Saturday, December 25

Christmas. Eat hot, home-made food. Receive presents. Wonder why you moved away from home.

Sunday, December 26, 9 a.m.

Remember why you moved away from home.

Friday, December 31

New Year's Eve. Express feelings of friendship to your fellow man and woman. If you're too intoxicated to express these feelings coherently, just try not to throw up on them (see Vomiting Etiquette, Charlatan Frosh Supplement, Sept. 2, 1993).

At the Penguin you can celebrate this fine New Year's Eve along with the Drew Nelson Band.

For five bucks you can enjoy New Year's Eve reggae with the Al Miller Band at Zaphod's.

THE 10th ANNIVERSARY

POP PROMOTIONS PRESENTS

BLACK & WHITE BASH

DECEMBER 31 • CONGRESS CENTRE

10 years

10

10 THEME ROOMS
-the ultimate house party!

Kitchen...bedroom, basement etc

BANDS

for $25

SAVE $3.00
Early Bird Tickets
(Before Dec. 15)
Students Only

TICKETS $25*
ADVANCE

755-1111
Rideau Centre 232-1810
St-Laurent Shopping Centre 741-8536
Bayshore Shopping Centre 596-1288
CENTRAL DES COMMERCES 563-1984
OTTAWA CONGRESS CENTRE
Plus GST - Surcharge en plus de l'impôt

LAWRENCE GOWAN
??? Mystery Band t.b.a.
ANDREW CASH
AND

• THE BIRD
• BLACK BOOT TRIO
• BLEEDING HEARTS
• BYWARD MAYHEM
• IN CITY DREAMS
• JIMMY GEORGE
• SOUL TRAIN

PLUS
NON-STOP DANCE MUSIC

with 4 D.J.'s
various rooms

NO LINE-UPS
GUARANTEED

AND 5000 OF YOUR CLOSEST FRIENDS!

APPLE SADDLERY

Canada's Largest Western Boot Store

SALE

Christmas

LOWEST
GUARANTEED
PRICES

BOULET
TONY LAMA
CODE WEST
H.H. BROWN

EXTENDED
CHRISTMAS
HOURS

MON-FRI 12-9
SAT 10-5
SUN 12-5

INNES JUST EAST OF THE 417, 744-4040

Apple Saddlery gives Students a Christmas Price Break!

APPLE SADDLERY

$20 off
with coupon

Adult Western Boots

Offer good until Dec.24

APPLE SADDLERY

$20 off
with coupon

Western or Australian Coats

Offer good until Dec.24

APPLE SADDLERY

$10 off
with coupon

Western Shirts

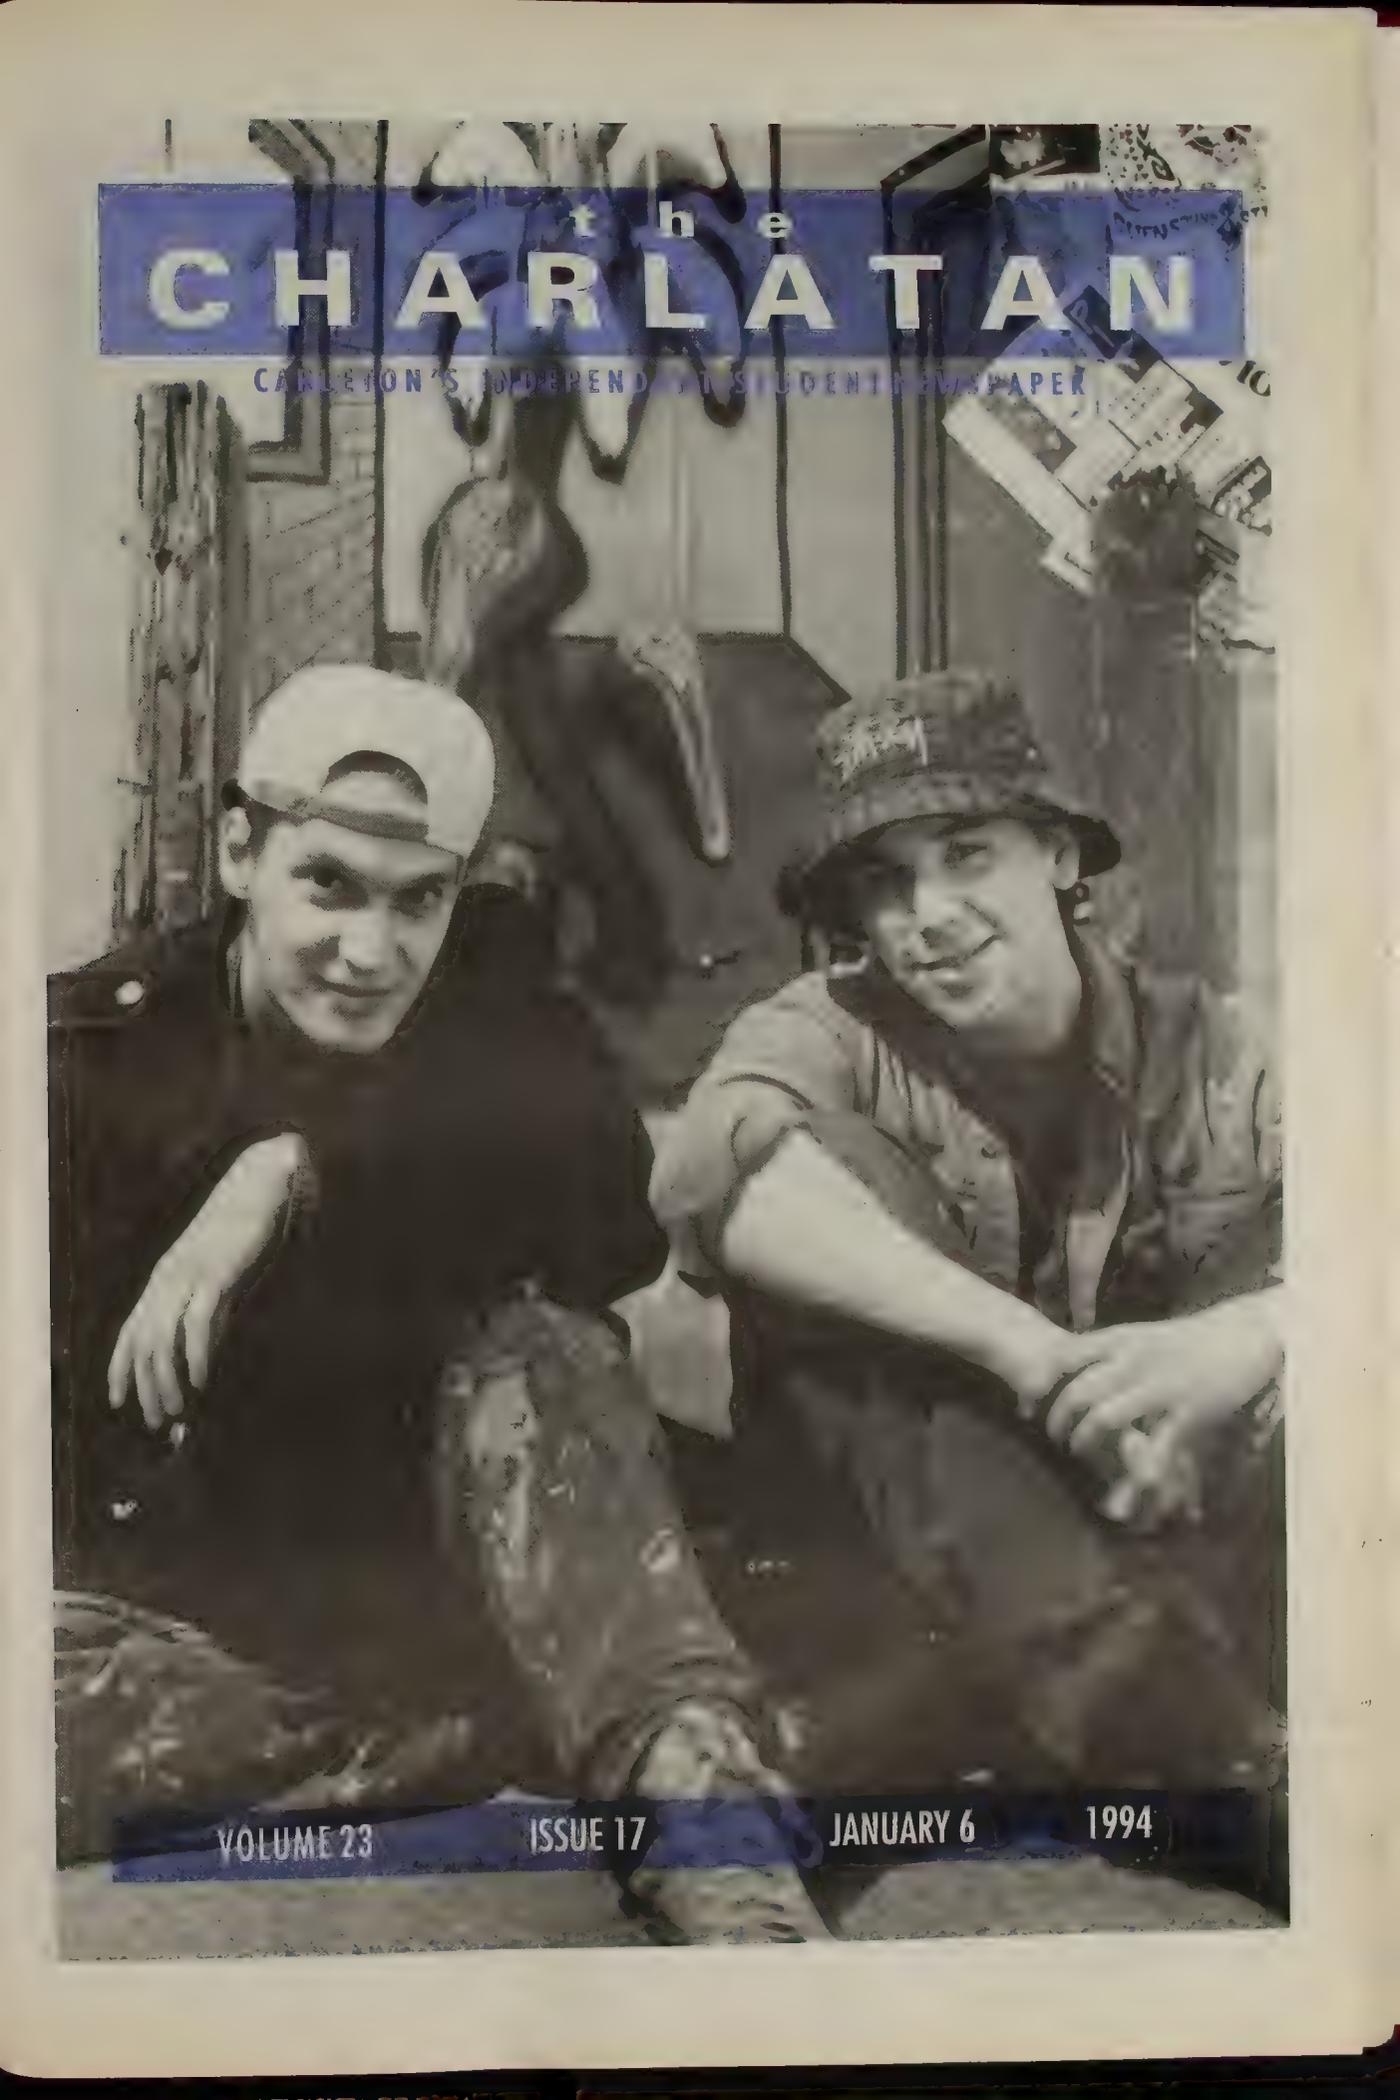

Offer good until Dec.24

APPLE SADDLERY

$10 off
with coupon

Any Hats

Offer good until Dec.24

The cover of 'The Charlatan' student newspaper features a black and white photograph of two young men sitting on a bench in a hallway. The man on the left is wearing a dark jacket and a white baseball cap worn backwards. The man on the right is wearing a light-colored button-down shirt and a bucket hat. In the background, a person is hanging laundry on a rack. A blue banner at the top contains the title 'the CHARLATAN' in white, with 'the' in a smaller font. Below the title, the text 'CARLETON'S INDEPENDENT STUDENT NEWSPAPER' is printed in a smaller font. At the bottom, a dark blue banner contains the text 'VOLUME 23 ISSUE 17 JANUARY 6 1994' in white.

the CHARLATAN

CARLETON'S INDEPENDENT STUDENT NEWSPAPER

VOLUME 23

ISSUE 17

JANUARY 6

1994

Ontap

160 Rideau

classic rock & roll

1.75

..at classic prices

SUNDAYS

CRACKERS TWO

Sundays & Mondays
Sports on the
Big Screen
15¢ Wings

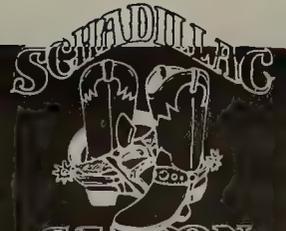

Tuesdays
Karaoke
Nite

$2.50 Wednesdays
Ladies' Night
FREE POOL for Ladies

January 6, 7, 8

The One

175 Richmond Road Tel. 722-3201

SALOON
Ottawa's Only
Authentic
Western Saloon

Sundays - Wednesdays

BEVERAGE

$1.50 Draught

SPECIALS

NFL on the Large
Screen

Come down to watch the NFL
Playoffs

Win tickets to the Superbowl

FREE Burgers at Halftime

Meet Owner Mike
Schad from the Philadelphia Eagles

Come see us down
in the Byward Market

105 Murray St.
233-5716

SCHADILLAC RANCH

3 DAY SALE
January 7, 8, 9

UP to 70% OFF all merchandise.

Boulet Boots
starting at $99.00

Oilskin Coats
50% OFF

Guaranteed
Best Selection

Convenient Location
in the Byward Market

99 Clarence St.
562-1320

HOME OF THE SOUTH END BLUES

TUCSON ROADHOUSE

Jan. 6/7/8
Suicide Kings
Jan. 13
The Boogiemens
Jan. 14/15
Backtrack Blues
Band

2440 Bank Street (Bank at Huntclub) Ottawa
For Entertainment Information call 739-7586

Tucson's West

NOW OPEN

Jan. 6/7/8
Spirit Brothers
(From Montreal)
Jan. 13/14/15
Stone Soul Picnic

1541 Merivale Road, Ottawa
For Entertainment Information call 228-6666

"The Mother of All Pizza"

Grand Central

141 George St.
233-1216

Introducing....

= Super Value!

only $8.95
plus taxes

ZAPHOD

BEEBLEBROX
OFTEN IMITATED, NEVER DUPLICATED

THU. JAN. 6 (9PM) $5
SOUL TATTOO
+ CHUCKLEHEAD

FRI. JAN. 7 (9PM) $5
PERSONA
+ JUMBLEFREEK

SAT. JAN. 8 (9PM) $6
KING COBB STEELE
+ COOKIE

DANCING NIGHTLY *NO COVER
THE ELECTRIC BALLROOM

BINGO JET
INTERNATIONAL
8 PM TUESDAYS

COMING SOON
JAN. 13 SAM I AM / HEAVEN DOG
JAN. 14 LES HARDIS MOUSAILLONS
JAN. 15 RAIL T.E.C.
JAN. 20 BHEAD
JAN. 21 LOST DAKOTAS
JAN. 22 CORNY & THE JUICE PIGS
JAN. 28, 29 GRIEVOUS ANGELS

MUSIC * BEVERAGES * ADVENTURE
27 YORK ST.

OC Transpo hikes fares again

By Naomi Bock
Charlatan Staff

For the second time in five months, OC Transpo has hiked its fares, prompting a debate which found the mayor of Ottawa and Carleton's assistant vice-president academic on opposite sides.

At a Dec. 1 meeting, OC Transpo commissioners had planned to raise student bus passes by $1.50 a month to $45, while adult and senior passes were only going up by $1 to $54 and $24 respectively.

But Capital Ward Councillor Jim Watson introduced a successful motion to lower the student increase, which he said "defied logic," to make it equal with the other increases.

Ottawa Mayor Jacquelin Holzman opposed Watson's motion, which made the cost of a student pass $44.50.

At the same meeting, commissioners agreed to raise cash fares by 10 cents, raising off-peak fares to $1.60 from $1.50 and peak fares to $2.10 from $2.

Watson issued a press release before the meeting which prompted people to come out and speak on students' behalf, including representatives from the Carleton University Students' Association, the Graduate Students' Association, the University of Ottawa, and Carleton's assistant vice-president academic, Tom Wilkinson.

Wilkinson told The Charlatan he argued that the OC Transpo commissioners shouldn't raise fares at all, in order to stop the "drastically" falling number of bus riders.

"Business-wise, to me, they're going about it the wrong way — but they... obviously didn't listen to that part of it," he said in a later interview.

What the commissioners did listen to was Wilkinson's and others' pleas to keep the student increase level with the other increases.

All except one voted to lower the proposed student increase. Canterbury Councillor Jack MacKinnon voted to keep it higher.

"It's not a matter of ability to pay. If someone down the street earns half as much as I do, does that mean they should pay less?" said MacKinnon in a later interview.

Watson said Holzman left the meeting early, declaring she supported the increases the way they were and if she had stayed she would have vote against lowering students' pass increases.

"I was so furious," said Watson of Holzman's stance.

Kristine Haselsteiner, vice-president external for CUSA, said she was surprised at Holzman's reaction, since when she spoke with Holzman and Watson a week before the meeting, Holzman had said she had a problem with the unequitable increases.

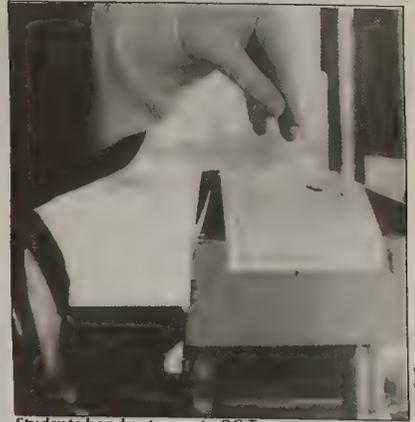

"Her exact words were, 'Jim, we have to look into this and see if there's something we can do,'" said Haselsteiner.

Holzman was on holiday this week and could not be reached for comment.

"It's targeting those who are least able to pay," said Haselsteiner, who spoke at the meeting about high unemployment, cutbacks to the Ontario Student Assistance Program and other financial woes facing students.

Erin Chisholm, a second-year film studies student, said she walks to school because she can't afford the bus anymore.

"I can use that money in a lot more important places, like food," said Chisholm.

Students hand out more to OC Transpo.

Oxana Sawka, OC Transpo's director of customer and community relations, said the hikes were necessary due to provincial fund freezes and a proposed regional funding reduction of nearly $1 million.

TRANSPO cont'd on page 6

Dunton Tower air quality in question

by Sean Silcoff
Charlatan Staff

News that Carleton has stopped pumping fresh air into Dunton Tower has prompted an employee in the building to file a complaint with the university's support staff union.

Maureen Sherman, a union representative who looks after the interests of 36 employees, made a verbal complaint to CUPE 2424 on Jan. 3 about concerns over the air quality in the building.

Her complaint followed a meeting on Dec. 16, when department heads and administrators working in Dunton Tower were told that their building had been without pumped-in fresh air for four weeks.

Three members of Carleton's physical plant department, including special projects officer Gilbert Belair, told about 25 people at the meeting the university stopped pumping in fresh air after some coils which heat incoming air stopped working.

They added that the situation would not change until new coils could be installed. The coils are now in, but the system will not be turned back on until the end of January, says Belair.

News of the building's current ventilation shutdown was not the main reason for the meeting, Belair says. Rather, it was to inform building staff about a new air system that will be installed over a 40-week period starting this month.

The $1.2-million renovation of the building's heating, ventilation and air-conditioning system is meant to fix a system which the university's air quality specialist, John Jones, says is in a "very bad state of disrepair."

Jones says air is not properly distributed through the tower, making for an uncomfortable working environment.

"The building isn't maybe the most comfortable in the world, but there's nothing poisonous in there," he says.

Beverly Hall, an administrative assistant with the classics department, says she "was just appalled" that the university had taken four weeks to warn people in the building of the news, and added

"We should have been told sooner."

Sherman's complaint prompted CUPE 2424 president Joanne Cameron to call a meeting with Dunton Tower union members, which she says will happen "in the near future," to discuss employee concerns about air quality.

The union has kept a file on Dunton Tower air-quality complaints since 1986, although Cameron says Sherman's complaint is the first in recent years.

Most complaints in the past centred on temperature problems, lack of humidity, odors and health problems associated with sick building syndrome, like sore throats and dry eyes, says Cameron.

A 1988 Public Works Canada survey of the building's air quality, which was requested by the union, found air quality to be "well within acceptable comfort standards and guidelines."

Hall says she asked at the meeting if any fresh air was getting into the building while the ventilation system was down. She was told the building's front doors, elevator shafts and structural leaks still let in an adequate level of fresh air from the outside.

"I just rolled my eyes and laughed. Our office is on the 20th floor," she says.

Jones tested the air on the 21st floor on Jan. 4 and found a carbon dioxide concentration of 700 parts per million. That is higher than the university's target average of 600 ppm, but within the acceptable standard of 1,000 ppm. Carbon dioxide testing is used to measure air quality.

Belair says enough air is coming into the building to satisfy a building code recommendation of 10 to 15 per cent fresh air intake into the building at all times. But he says even if the intake dips below that level, the building will probably not be shut down.

"There is adequate air for all occupants in the building," Belair says.

A number of Dunton Tower employees say a few people working in the building have suffered from "sick building syndrome" in the past.

The term is commonly used to describe a host of ailments including headaches, fatigue, eye irritation and respiratory problems that affect workers in office buildings that have bad air.

The bad air is usually caused by high levels of carbon dioxide or by mould, which can develop in a number of places including unclean ventilation system drip trays.

In one case, a woman, who asked not to be named, moved to a different Carleton department office in May 1992, away from Dunton Tower, after she spent nearly two years on disability leave.

A string of respiratory viral infections left her so debilitated that she says "I ended up breaking down, basically. I had no immune system left."

Although doctors say they couldn't confirm the connection, she says her health problems definitely had to do with the building. She says the problems only started when she began working in Dunton Tower — her health has returned to normal since she moved to another

DUNTON cont'd on page 4

on the cover

Graffiti guerillas
Dan Buller and Eric Grice: still at large.
See story page 19.

arts	19
classifieds	10
comics	18
features	12
national	7
news	3
opinion	9
sports	15
sunshine rori	14

index

Res cigarette smuggling nothing new

by Ryan Nakashima and Ryan Ward
Charlatan Staff

Proposals designed to tighten the province's control of cigarette sales won't have a big effect on smokers at Carleton, say some students.

One measure proposed by the province Nov. 29, designed to curb cigarette smuggling, would mean anyone in possession of 50 or more cartons of smuggled cigarettes could face penalties of $2,000 for a first offence or a jail term of up to two years.

Michelle Veinot, a first-year criminology student, says the guidelines probably won't stop cigarette smuggling in residence.

"If you really want to smoke, you can get them no matter what," says Veinot.

The selling of smuggled cigarettes "definitely goes on in residence," says Derek Zeisman, general manager of the Rideau River Residence Association.

Cpl. Daniel Desmarais, from the customs and excise department of the RCMP, says illegal cigarettes are sold everywhere and it's not surprising if they are sold in Carleton's residence too.

Last spring, following an anonymous tip, police investigated the selling of smuggled cigarettes in residence and arrested a male student for possessing contraband, says Desmarais.

The fine for possession is $30 per carton under federal laws, but the province will add $39 per carton to that fine if tougher enforcement measures are put in place.

Desmarais says police are ready to act if they get any tips with specific information. "If we do get information that so-and-so is dealing in something, if it's specific information, we'll work it."

Rumors of smuggled cigarette sales in residence have been around for years, but it's something the department of housing and food services hasn't been able to prove, says the department's director, Dave Sterritt.

Zeisman says a former resident of Lanark House popularly known as the Smokelord "made a fortune" by buying cigarettes from Cornwall and selling them to students. Cornwall is close to the U.S.-Canada border and is targeted as a major cigarette-smuggling outlet by police.

Zeisman says the former student made about $20,000 per academic year, and since he left in 1992, someone is likely selling in his place.

Smuggled cigarette sales were so prevalent they prompted RRRA to sell cigarettes in the Bree's Inn in September of this year, says Zeisman.

A residence student, Bob, who didn't want his real name published, told Charlatan staff where to buy smuggled cigarettes in Russell House.

Bob, 18, says he ordered his first carton of smuggled cigarettes in October from a n o t h e r friend for $25. The price for legal cartons, containing eight packs of 25 cigarettes, is about $55 after sales taxes.

Another bill introduced by the province on Nov. 22 would raise the legal age to buy tobacco to 19 from 18, outlaw cigarette vending machines and prohibit campus building.

DUNTON cont'd from page 3

Beverly Plato, manager of the university's occupational health and safety department, says she has never heard of this woman's case.

When asked if Dunton Tower was a sick building, Plato wouldn't say yes or no, adding "There's a lot we don't know about (the building)."

Some staff figure that a lack of fresh air will only make things worse in the short term.

"I don't think it's the greatest thing to be in here when there's no fresh air — it couldn't be terribly healthy," says Hall.

Sherman says she hasn't noticed any difference in the air quality over the past month.

"To me, there's never any fresh air."

But she adds that she expects the problem will be solved when the new system is completed this year.

Stores still sold us cigarettes, depending on who ran it and how lenient they were. There's a lot of ways around it so there's no point in raising it (the age limit) again."

air will only make things worse in the short term.

"I don't think it's the greatest thing to be in here when there's no fresh air — it couldn't be terribly healthy," says Hall.

Sherman says she hasn't noticed any difference in the air quality over the past month.

"To me, there's never any fresh air."

But she adds that she expects the problem will be solved when the new system is completed this year.

Summer Employment Opportunities

with the City of Nepean
Parks and Recreation Department

Looking for a fun and rewarding way to spend your summer? The Recreation Division is accepting applications for summer positions in a wide variety of areas such as:

- Senior athletic camp leader
- Athletic camp leader
- Program assistant (community recreation)
- Program assistant (leadership development)
- Hockey camp leader
- Day camp leader
- Child care playleader
- Computer camp instructor
- Visual arts instructor
- Day camp director
- Aquatics instructor/lifeguard
- Aquatics instructor
- Cashier/locker room attendant
- Inter Action coordinator
- Assistant day camp director
- Program assistant (senior summer)

Interested in joining our team for the summer of 1994?

Application forms may be obtained from the Human Resources Department or forward your resume to:

City of Nepean, Human Resources Department
Nepean Civic Square, 101 Centrepointe Drive
Nepean, Ontario K2G 5K7

Nepean Civic Square Offices will be closed from noon on December 24, 1993 and will re-open January 3, 1994.

Deadline for applications is February 14, 1994

(Note: Applications will not be acknowledged. Candidates chosen for interviews will be contacted in March, April or May)

For more information call 727-6640

The City of Nepean is committed to the employment of a qualified workforce which reflects the community's diversity.

BAXTER'S

SECOND FLOOR
BAR & GRILL
MONDAYS &
SATURDAYS
PARTY NITES
$250

- WINGS
 - ZUCCHINI
 - NACHOS
 - CAESAR SALAD
 - ESCARGOT
 - ONION RINGS
- 5 PM - CLOSE

TUESDAY NIGHTS
SENATORS
Hockey Ticket GIVE AWAY
Chicken Wing .19¢ ea.

WEDNESDAYS
1/2 PRICE FOOD
5 P.M. - 11 P.M.

THURSDAY NIGHT
"A Carleton Tradition"
Chicken Wings 19¢ ea.

UPCOMING PROMOTIONS
Thursday, Jan. 13
Labatt Blue Promotion
Hats, T-shirts, Prizes,
Giveaways

1344 Bank Street
(at Riverside)
738-3323

Ottawa's Meanest wings

only 25¢ each.
at

McGinnis
LANDING
Restaurant

every night after 9:00pm.

Monday: 2 for 1 beef fajitas
Tuesday: 20¢ wings
1896 Prince of Wales Dr.
723-2096
bus route 175

Enviro-activist whistles while he works

by Caron Watt
Charlatan Staff

John Zronik says he loves his job so much, he keeps forgetting it's a job.

"I keep forgetting to get paid. It's not like a job. I'm having a good time," he says.

Zronik was hired as environment commissioner in September by the Carleton University Students' Association. He says his goal this year is to raise students' awareness of environmental issues.

"The way I'm taking this job is to put more of a focus on things that are happening outside the school, but also at the same time things that are happening inside of the school."

One environmental issue on campus is the fact that many of the food outlets on campus still use Styrofoam packaging, says Zronik.

"That's not acceptable," he says. Styrofoam containers are a major contributor to landfill sites since they are not bio-degradable.

He says individual environmental actions like recycling help relieve the pressure on landfill sites. However, Zronik says students have to look beyond their own backyards when it comes to environmental issues.

He gives the example of students lobbying MacMillan Bloedel Ltd., the company that is logging the old-growth forest at Clayoquot Sound in British Columbia.

He says MacMillan Bloedel is exploiting Canada's natural resources in Clayoquot Sound for short-term profits instead of long-term sustainability.

So far, Zronik is "doing well, networking with individual groups on campus," says Heather Farrow, a co-ordinator with the Ontario Public Interest Research Group at Carleton.

OPIRG and Zronik have co-ordinated events together, including the visit by the tree stump from Clayoquot Sound that took up residence outside Dunton Tower on Oct. 26.

Zronik says another company he wants to raise awareness about is Du Pont and the environmental damage it causes through its production of plastics.

"I want to show people what they can do about these things," says Zronik.

He is trying to educate people through field trips to local recycling facilities, information tables in Baker Lounge.

Zronik has also produced about 20 30-second segments which will start running on CKCU, Carleton's radio station, later this month.

Zronik has also put together a forestry group of about 50 students who are concerned about forest depletion and especially about the environmental threat to Clayoquot Sound.

"We want to give people the option of coming (out) and becoming involved," he says.

"Apathy is our worst enemy, just like anything else when somebody tries to motivate people to do something. It's really hard."

Zronik was hired by Theresa Cowan, the director of services for CUSA, who says there were a few other applicants.

"(Zronik) was really the only person who showed sustainable interest," says

Cowan.

He also had experience in dealing with environmental issues, through his involvement with Greenpeace and the Coalition to Save Clayoquot Sound, she adds.

Zronik consults with Cowan and says she has been supportive, although she says he has not needed a lot of direction. "I want him to be able to develop what he wants to do."

Zronik, a second-year geography and political science student, applied for the position through Carleton's work study program.

Cowan says the program gives students the chance to pick up a few extra hours of work a week, while helping out organizations which may not have a lot of money to hire extra staff.

Zronik's salary is $6.50 an hour and he receives $1,000 a year from Cowan's

Zronik takes his environmental message to the campus.

ANDRE BELLEFEUILLE

SECURITY BRIEFS

Two flashings in Tory Building over holidays

by Charlatan Staff

There were two incidents of indecent exposure around the Tory Building over the holidays.

On Dec. 21 at 7 p.m., a woman saw a man with his pants down in the tunnels near the Tory Building and the post office.

Len Boudreault, the assistant director of the department of university safety, says there was no contact between the man and woman. He says she observed a man, who was masturbating, and then left the area.

A poster circulated on Dec. 22 describes the man as in his mid-20s, Caucasian, with fair skin and a heavy build.

He was wearing a red and white baseball cap and a blue shirt.

In a second incident on Dec. 28 at about 3:35 p.m., a woman studying on the third level of the Tory Building was approached by a man who made sexual comments to her and then exposed himself.

Boudreault says the man made a sexual proposition to her, but did not directly threaten her with physical violence.

Boudreault says the woman got up and moved away from the man, and the man then left in the other direction.

A poster circulated on Jan. 3 describes the man as in his late-20s, five feet six inches tall, Caucasian with fair skin and about 130 pounds. He was wearing a light blue sweater and off-white sweatpants.

Boudreault says there is "no indication" that the two incidents are related, but the department hasn't ruled out the possibility.

He says both incidents are under investigation by the department and the Ottawa Police. He says there are no leads yet. □

Foot Patrol impersonator on campus

by Charlatan Staff

A man is impersonating a member of the Foot Patrol on campus, says patrol co-ordinator Brenda Kennedy.

Kennedy says in December a woman told a patrol team she had received an escort from a single man. The Foot Patrol only offers co-ed escorts.

The man wore a red jacket similar to those worn by patrollers and carried a flashlight and walkie-talkie, Kennedy says.

She says people who want to flag down patrollers should remember a man and woman always act as escorts together, they always have identification tags and their jackets are red with "Foot Patrol on duty" on the back in white.

She says if anyone sees anything suspicious, they should report it to the department of university safety immediately.

Len Boudreault, the assistant director of the department, says safety patrols are watching for suspicious individuals. □

APPLE SADDLERY
The Largest Western Boot Store in Canada.
INNES ROAD JUST EAST OF THE 417 (NEAR THE PRICE CLUB)

Sun lights up Rideau path after dark

by Jodi McKenzie
Charlatan Staff

Anyone walking along the footpath beside the Rideau River recently may have noticed strange squares of metal attached to new lights.

These squares are the panels for 10 new solar-powered lights along the river that were installed in November. The solar panels on the lights store energy from the sun to power the lights after dark.

The lights are an experiment to test the new technology and see how well the lights work on campus over time, says Ben Solomon, an engineer with Carleton's physical plant. He says he hopes the lights will be installed across campus in a few years.

"I don't think there will be a problem with them," he says.

The lights cost physical plant a total of $23,000. The solar panels themselves are guaranteed for 20 years and the batteries are guaranteed for 10 to 15 years. The university should save on electricity costs because of the lights, says Solomon.

The plan to install the lights was recommended by a committee of the Carleton University Students' Association which conducted a safety audit two years ago.

The location for the experiment was chosen because the southern exposure to the sun makes storing power for the lights more efficient. Also, the audit recommended the area should be lit from the road down to the water, says Foot Patrol co-ordinator Brenda Kennedy.

The lights are designed to go on automatically at dusk, but they only stay on for three hours. After this period, the lights come on again when something moves inside their movement sensors' range, which is just over five feet in diameter, Kennedy estimates.

The lights will stay on for 10 to 12 minutes, but Solomon says the length of time can be changed from three minutes to about 30.

Bill Radway at the physical plant says the sensors' range is small and that you seem to have to be directly under the light to turn it on. He says he is talking to the contractor about fixing the problem.

Kennedy says the new lights may give people a false sense of security about the footpath. She says because the path is isolated, "people shouldn't be walking down there at all."

But Solomon says the lights were installed to improve safety in the area.

"It is not a matter of encouraging people to walk there. It's a matter of protecting the people that do," he says.

Renée Twaddle, co-ordinator of the Carleton Women's Centre, says she doesn't agree with the lights either. She says the area is still not sufficiently lit despite the addition of the 10 lights. "Walking there, you are still in darkness. The lights are only in a small area and you are walking from puddle to puddle (of light)," she says.

Kennedy says the lights are about 20 to 30 feet apart on the path, but the diameter of light cast by the lamps is only about five feet across. Radway estimates it to be closer to 10 feet than to five. Twaddle says the presidential advisory committee on personal safety, made up of staff, students, and administration, may decide to move the lights to a less-isolated location which would be more appropriate for the experiment.

New panels help shed some light on paths.

"We don't want people to get into the habit of walking there thinking it's safe, and then thinking it's still safe after we move them," she says.

TRANSPO cont'd from page 3

"The dollars are shrinking," said Sawka. "You still have to meet your bottom line."

Watson said the $900,000 regional decrease is only a proposal which hasn't passed yet, and he plans to try to convince council to defeat it at a Jan. 26 council meeting.

Sawka said that since ticket prices remain the same, riders willing to "make a commitment to transit" will have cheaper rides.

Watson says, however, that transit is not making a commitment to riders, especially students. He cited the lack of Route 4 service on campus as an example.

Haselsteiner said CUSA has started a petition to get the route back on campus. The petition can be found in the CUSA office and Baker Lounge and will be circulated around campus.

"We're constantly being asked to pay more money, but... the service to campus has decreased," said Haselsteiner.

This sentiment was echoed by Winston Yeung, a first-year student, who said the hikes are unfair because the service has not improved.

"The bus is always late, and the service is not good now. I don't think the increase of fares can improve the situation," Yeung said.

Watson called the increases "a backwards step," since less use of public transit worsens pollution and wear and tear on roads. He also said students, as "the growth market for the future," need to be better served, or else in the future OC Transpo may find itself lacking riders.

"If we constantly treat students unfairly, they're going to be left with a very bad impression," said Watson.

Winterlude Street Closures

FREE SNO-BUS SERVICE, FEBRUARY 4, 5, 6, 12, 13, 19 AND 20!

For OC Transpo bus route information, call (613) 741-4390.

For STO bus route information, call (819) 770-3242.

For Winterlude programming information, call the NCC at (613) 239-5000.

Fermeture de rues durant Bal de Neige

SERVICE BUS-O-NEIGE GRATUIT LES 4, 5, 6, 12, 13, 19 ET 20 FEVRIER!

Pour des renseignements sur les horaires d'autobus d'OC Transpo, composez le (613) 741-4390.

Pour des renseignements sur les horaires d'autobus de la STO, composez le (819) 770-3242.

Pour des renseignements sur la programmation de Bal de Neige, appelez la CCN au (613) 239-5000.

Street Closures

- Friday, Feb 4 6 pm - 11:30 pm
- Saturday, Feb 5 10:30 am - 10:30 pm
- Sunday, Feb 6 9 am - 6:30 pm
- Saturday, Feb 12 10:30 am - 10:30 pm
- Sunday, Feb 13 10:30 am - 6:30 pm
- Saturday, Feb 19 10:30 am - 10:30 pm
- Sunday, Feb 20 10:30 am - 6:30 pm

Local traffic only

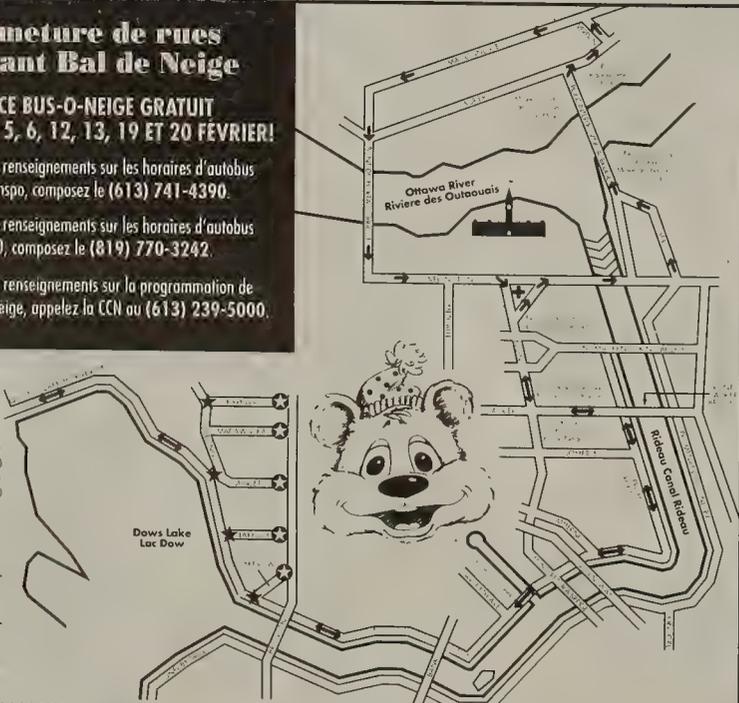

- Sno-Bus route - one-way
- ↔ Sno-Bus route - two-way
- +
- Sno-Bus transfer point

Fermetures de rues

- Vendredi 4 fevr de 18 h à 23 h 30
- Samedi 5 fevr de 10 h 30 à 22 h 30
- Dimanche 6 fevr de 9 h à 18 h 30
- Samedi 12 fevr de 10 h 30 à 22 h 30
- Dimanche 13 fevr de 10 h 30 à 18 h 30
- Samedi 19 fevr de 10 h 30 à 22 h 30
- Dimanche 20 fevr de 10 h 30 à 18 h 30

Circulation locale seulement

- Trajet du Bus-o-Neige - aller seulement
- Trajet du Bus-o-Neige - aller-retour
- Bus-o-Neige - point de correspondance

National Capital Commission
Commission de la Capitale nationale

City of Ottawa

Ottawa-Carleton

OC Transpo

STO
SOCIÉTÉ DE TRANSPORT
DE L'OUTAOUAIS

NATIONAL AFFAIRS

Campbell, scandals and scuffed-up sandals

A review of the national headlines of 1993

Compiled by Arn Keeling
Charlatan Staff

He should be suspended from something.

In November, University of New Brunswick math professor Matin Yaqzan is suspended by the university after his controversial article about date rape runs in the student newspaper, The Brunswickan. The opinion piece suggests that a woman who willingly enters a man's room "could consider it an invitation to sexual intercourse."

But would she ask him for a date?

Controversial author and intellectual Camille Paglia defends Yaqzan's right to his views in an interview with The Brunswickan.

Is Matin Yaqzan aware of this?

In February, two Carleton professors release a national study, reporting that 81 per cent of female students surveyed said they were psychologically, physically or sexually abused in the previous year.

Don't let the door hit you on the ass on the way out.

Brian Mulrone announces in February he will step down as prime minister and leader of the Tories amid record unpopularity in national polls.

But they can still register a china pattern at Eaton's if they want.

Former Carleton student Pierre Beaune and his partner Todd Layland are denied legal status as a married couple by the Ontario Divisional Court in March.

So what does that make Hillary Rodham Clinton?

"Lesbian chic" and goddess worship are hot topics in the student and mainstream media.

Finally, a politician representing real change.

In April, B.C. Member of Parliament Jim Fulton proposes a bill in the House of Commons that would decriminalize the growth and personal use of marijuana.

Oh, it's that spiralling tuition cost thing, isn't it?

Several university student associations in Ontario vote to withdraw from the Canadian Federation of Students, saying the national lobby group has been ineffective and irrelevant.

What, no collateral? Don't you own a house or something?

In March, the Tories reveal a plan to privatize the Canada Student Loans program.

Would you like fries with that degree?

Queen's University announces plans in November to privatize its masters of business administration program.

Not to mention some people actually like Madonna.

During the Tory leadership race, the British press compares Kim Campbell to Madonna because of a photo of her holding judge's robes in front of her bare shoulders. Campbell's reaction: "A comparison between Madonna and me is a comparison between a strapless evening gown and a gownless evening strap."

We would have preferred Madonna.

Kim Campbell is proclaimed the new leader of the PC party at its Ottawa convention in June, becoming Canada's first female prime minister.

Finally, someone putting their degree to some use.

An on-campus prostitution ring run by a former student is uncovered at the University of Waterloo in May.

One small step backwards for man...

The student association at the University of British Columbia suspends the operations of the student newspaper The Ulysses in the summer, then creates a publications board to oversee all student publications.

One giant leap backwards for mankind...

The Reform Party garners 52 seats in the federal election Oct. 25.

Well, dat's a relief.

Jean Chrétien's Liberal Party creams

Campbell and Chrétien: separated at birth?

the competition on election day, winning a comfortable majority and forming the first Liberal government in nine years.

Where's that @$%&# Mulroney?

The Tories are reduced from a majority government to a paltry two seats (way to go Elsie!!) in the House of Commons and left with a huge campaign debt.

Where's that @#@$%&# Rae?

The federal New Democrats sink further into obscurity, winning only nine seats in the election.

At least he's got a job to go back to.

Carleton business professor Ian Lee runs unsuccessfully as a Tory candidate in the Ottawa Centre riding, losing to Liberal incumbent Mac Harb.

Hey! They were only two seats behind the Tories!

The Natural Law Party of Canada runs a huge election campaign behind leader Neil Paterson, calling for the training of 7,000 yogic flyers to "dissolve the collective stress" of society. They fail to win a seat.

We'll give you intolerance!

Wolfgang Droegge, leader of the white supremacist group the Heritage Front, visits Ottawa in May, prompting an anti-racist demonstration.

Hey, I know that voice! You're not from People magazine at all, are you?

Carleton announces in September that it will not participate in the Maclean's magazine annual ranking of Canadian universities. The survey, using last year's data on Carleton, places Carleton eighth out of 12 universities in the comprehensive universities category.

Bloody cops! They scuffed our Birkenstocks and scratched the VW van!

Hundreds of protestors, including many students, are arrested during summer-long protests at Clayoquot Sound in B.C., where loggers were given the go-ahead by the provincial government to log portions of the old-growth forest.

The Out-of-Touch-Rhodes-Scholar-of-the-Year Award goes to...

... Bob Rae, the Ontario NDP premier who brought us the social contract this year, a public sector cost-cutting measure which made nearly the entire populace angry.

Don't look at me, I owe that much in student loans.

Paul Martin, the new Liberal federal

I don't remember signing any damn contract, Bob.

Ontario universities face cutbacks of up to $118 million for 1993-94 under the NDP government's social contract.

Maybe if there had been a mosh pit

Smilin' Neil Paterson, luminary.

on the Hill...

Only about 31 students from Ottawa universities showed up on Parliament Hill to protest underfunding for education on National Student Day in November.

But what have they done for us lately?

Prominent politicians and activists who visit Carleton in 1993 include: Judy Rebick and Sunera Thobani, former and current presidents of the National Action Committee on the Status of Women; former deputy prime minister Jean Charest; New Brunswick Premier Frank McKenna; former Soviet leader Mikhail Gorbachev; Canadian Labor Congress leader Bob White; radical environmentalist Paul Watson; Natural Law party Leader Neil Paterson.

Maybe they should cancel the Ravens' program and just not bring it back.

Only a year after having its football program cancelled due to lack of funds, the University of Toronto Varsity Blues win the Vanier Cup after being bailed out by deep-pocketed alumni.

So what's their Maclean's ranking?

Some members of the Natural Law party plan to establish a Natural Law college in Saint John, N.B.

They should see some of the equipment Carleton students have to put up with.

A Queen's University alumnus donates a 550-year-old castle in England to his old school for a new International Study Centre last spring.

So, here's the scoop on Karla Teale: xxxxxxx beagle xxxxx sex xxxxx home video xxxxxx censorship xxxxxxxx.

In December, a Victoria, B.C. newspaper breaks the national publication ban on the trial of Karla Teale, a St. Catherine's woman convicted of manslaughter.

Quote of the Year:

"They just don't get it... I mean the 20th century." — Uttered by a Tory party member after watching a play performed by provincial party members in Alberta, which included racial stereotypes and sexist roles. □

COU under attack from senates and students

by Sara-Lynne Levine
Charlatan Staff

The Council of Ontario Universities is taking heat from student groups and some university senates over its proposal to hike tuition fees by up to 50 per cent.

The senates of Trent University in Peterborough, Algoma University College in Sault Ste. Marie and McMaster University in Hamilton voted at the end of last term to reject the council's proposals.

"This is a victory for student leadership," said Emehete Onuoha, chair of the Canadian Federation of Students-Ontario. "This means that if students want to make a statement, they can do so through the senate."

Each year, the provincial government sets maximum tuition hike ceilings for Ontario's universities. In each of the last three years, the ceiling has been set at seven per cent.

Last August, the council released a discussion paper calling for tuition hikes of 30 to 50 per cent for undergraduate programs and up to 200 per cent for some graduate programs over the next two years.

The report also recommended the creation of an income-contingent loan repayment system to help students pay for the increased tuition.

The council is a body of university presidents who make recommendations to the government on education policy.

On Nov. 22, Trent's senate voted to reject the council's recommendations and have the university's president write a letter of disapproval to the council and Ontario Minister of Education Dave Cooke. On Nov. 24, McMaster passed a similar motion.

"This indicates that there are some pockets of discontent in some parts of the province and at some institutions," says Michel Gaulin, clerk of Carleton's senate.

Gaulin says while some universities have rejected the discussion paper, he has "received no indication whether the Carleton senate will issue a statement to support or reject the proposal."

Peter George, the council's president, says while McMaster voted to reject the council's paper, it recommended that tuition fees should increase at a slower pace.

"There is a real inability or unwillingness to recognize that COU's paper was a discussion paper, not a formal recommendation," George says.

He says the paper "was only one piece of input" for the government and the council is "not writing the government policy for them."

George says the Canadian Federation of Students has "consistently gotten it wrong over the last six months."

The CFS was one of three student groups asked to speak at one council meeting on Dec. 17.

"CFS-Ontario, the Ontario Undergraduate Student Alliance and the Graduate Student Association of Ontario were all given the opportunity to speak to the COU," says Gaulin, who was at the meeting.

Onuoha says the meeting went well. "The idea was for us to get our foot in the door and our ideas on the table," says Onuoha.

He says it was the first time in 30 years that student groups were invited to address the council.

Onuoha says some of the issues discussed included "student aid, student participation, high-school outreach programs, and things that CFS and COU should be working on together."

The student representatives also proposed that the council be restructured to provide students full voting positions on it. George says the meeting was a good idea because it was an opportunity to meet with student leaders.

"It is a helluva lot better than what they had in the past, a non-event, and they should be gracious and say it is better than nothing."

George says the council may consider having annual discussions with student leaders. □

StatsCan survey finds university graduates happy with their Canadian education

by Michael Mainville
Charlatan Staff

Initial results from a Statistics Canada survey indicate that Canadian university graduates seem reasonably satisfied with their education.

Statistics Canada is currently analyzing data from a 1992 survey of 1990's university graduates, which will be released in its entirety next fall.

Part of the survey asked about 53,000 graduates across Canada about how satisfied they were with their education, including the quality of teaching, class size and preparation for future careers. The rest of the survey has to do with their employment histories since university.

"I would say students are reasonably satisfied with the skills they are learning," says Doug Lynd, chief of the post-secondary education section at Statistics Canada. He says the central focus of the survey is to examine students' transition from university to the job market.

The satisfaction portion of the survey was released in advance of the rest of the report for use by Maclean's magazine in its annual ranking of Canadian universities last November.

Responses were ranked from 0 to 3 (0 — very dissatisfied, 3 — very satisfied) according to major fields of study. For instance, the satisfaction with class sizes for students in humanities (arts) scored a 2.26 out of three, about average for the programs surveyed.

The rating for how well universities prepared graduates for jobs was somewhat lower, with scores ranging from 1.81 in the social sciences to 2.25 in engineering and applied sciences.

Unlike the annual Maclean's magazine survey, Statistics Canada will not rank individual universities. Instead, it will concentrate on the satisfaction of graduates in general, Lynd says, because that is the goal of the survey.

"The sample methodology is geared toward process, not institutions. The sample would have to be larger for a reliable sample of institutions," says Lynd.

Also unlike the Maclean's survey, Carleton is supportive of the Statistics Canada report, says Bill Pickett, the university's director of the office of budget planning.

"Carleton is in favor of this being done because it allows for a measure of satisfaction for graduates," he says.

But because Statistics Canada did not survey a large enough number of Carleton graduates, the results are not relevant to the university, says Pickett.

"It's not useful concerning Carleton," he says.

Although universities may not use the survey individually, it can be used to analyze overall programs, says Lynd.

Lynd says the survey is conducted every four years by Statistics Canada and funded by the federal government.

A number of organizations use the results, including provincial education and labor ministries, the Canadian Manufacturers' Association and the Canadian Labor Commission.

Lynd says future surveys may have increased numbers which would allow ranking of individual institutions. Statistics Canada is currently working with the Association of Universities and Colleges of Canada, a national research and public relations organization, to accomplish this. □

The final question of the Statistics Canada survey of 1990's bachelor's degree recipients asked:

"Would you have gone to the same school or institution?"

The responses are listed by university type, the programs the graduates took and the percentage of "yes" responses.

Type of university	Percentage
Total (all universities)	79.8
Primarily undergraduate	79.2
Medical/doctoral	80.6
Comprehensive	78.6
Major field of study
Agriculture & biological sciences	77.2
Commerce, management and administration	81.6
Engineering and applied science	83.2
Fine and applied arts	70.8
General arts and science	82.7
Health professions	83.5
Humanities	80.4
Mathematics and physical sciences	82.3
Social sciences	76.7

St. Peter's Lutheran Church

400 Sparks Street (at Bay)
233-9911

Sunday Worship 9:30 and 11:00 a.m.

Everyone Welcome

"NOBODY PARTIES LIKE THE IRISH"

IRISH PUB & RESTAURANT

NO COVER 10¢ WINGS 15¢ SHRIMP
IMPORTED DRAFTS

LARGE PATIO DAILY SPECIALS
DART BOARDS SATELLITE TV

LIVE "IRISH" ENTERTAINMENT

EVERY WED., THURS., FRI. AND SAT. 9 P.M.

GOOD FUN GOOD FOOD GREAT BEER

67 CLARENCE STREET, BYWARD, MARKET, 562-0674

Trans
PLAN 94

Open House Invitation

OC Transpo will be holding an open house session on campus. OC Transpo planners will be there to describe the 1994 service plan in detail, and to receive your comments.

CAMPUS OPEN HOUSE

Date	Time	Place
Tuesday January 11	2pm ~ 4pm	Carleton University Unicentre, Baker Lounge

OC Transpo

1994: Drama, excitement and really big hair

Another new year and time for the usual new year's schmaltz, otherwise known as "Things that probably won't happen this year but hey, you never know." Or: "The editor is still recovering from a bad New Year's Eve hangover but something had to fill this column, damn it." (Take your pick of title.)

Actually, writing New Year's predictions AFTER the new year has started may be a little redundant. Uhh, prediction number one — there will be a whole ton of snow dumped on Ottawa on Jan. 4.

Well, there's one right! I mean who could have guessed that — snow? In Ottawa? In January? AMAZING.

But, looking a little further ahead in the new year, things get a little murkier. What dark and mysterious goings-on will torment Canadians this year?

(Although how much more dark and mysterious can you get than Kim Campbell as prime minister? Oops, forgot about that schmuck from Alberta — but, let's not get ahead of ourselves, no one will have to make that dark prediction until the next federal election.)

So, let's stick with 1994.

First, a little weather cheer. While it will continue to be cold and snowy in Ottawa, Vancouver will also receive a big dump of snow and -20 degree weather in February. That should wipe the snotty smirks off the faces of British Columbian who play golf in short sleeves while the rest of the country suffers.

Moving closer to home, students' association President Lucy Watson will continue to be haunted by the ghosts of referendum and labor-board hearings past. Look out Lucy.

CUSA finance commissioner René Faucher's hair will continue to get bigger and bigger, until even his super glue gel can't control it. He disappears from sight, hidden by hair, emerging only to keep track of profits from Oliver's.

There's intrigue ahead in the federal arena. Jean Chrétien will take another secret vacation. Sheila Copps is left in charge. Heady with power, she will try to seize total control of the country by declaring the Emergencies Act. But Jean decides his golf game can wait and comes back to save the day.

For students, there is good news in store.

Dave Cooke, the Ontario education minister, will continue to put off announcing tuition hikes for 1994. Strangely, he ends up becoming a hero of the students when it is realized that if he continues to delay the announcement, tuition hikes can't happen. As a result of his stalling, tuition at Ontario universities will be frozen for the next several years.

(Might as well be a little optimistic about this one, 'cause just predicting tuition increases is a little too simple — too much like predicting snow in Ottawa in January. So, why not be optimistic instead? While we're at it, we'll also predict zero unemployment, an end to poverty and world peace.)

But Carleton students will not be so lucky. Despite his birthday wish to the university for no tuition fees, Carleton President Robin Farquhar will get a little wingy and raises tuition by 800 per cent. This results in mass dropouts, until only one student remains left at Carleton.

But, happily for athletics, the student is a member of the Ravens football team and somehow single-handedly takes Carleton to victory at the 1994 Vanier Cup.

The mass dropouts will also cause Carleton to move up to number two in the Maclean's rankings. Because it only has one student to deal with, the university is able to send in the necessary data.

Drama and excitement will be the rule, not the exception, in 1994. So be prepared. And remember, our predictions may not be 100 per cent accurate, but we can be sure about this one — all those new year's resolutions you made are already broken. SK

OPINION

Canada land of fun, but not jobs

by Gladys Bichat

Gladys Bichat is from France and attended ESL courses at Carleton from September to December. Now she is looking for volunteer work in Ottawa to keep practising her English.

I first decided to come to Canada because I wanted to improve my English. There are many reasons why I chose Canada instead of the United States or England.

The landscape is both nice and clean. Canadian people are aware of protecting their environment. To me, the Canadian way of life is also different. Canadian people are relaxed; they take the time to enjoy themselves. But what I enjoy the most is their kindness.

When I arrived in Ottawa in September, I was very surprised to see how friendly Canadian people were. After helping me with my luggage at the airport, a man who had sat beside me in the plane offered to take me to the youth hostel downtown.

I had talked to him during the trip from Toronto to Ottawa. I asked him many questions about Ottawa because he has been living here for many years. He saw that I was worried about my arrival at Ottawa.

I felt so lost — I did not know how to get to the youth hostel. Also, I was really exhausted because it took about 11 hours to get to Ottawa. Finally, I accepted his offer because it made things easier for me. This friendliness surprised me.

In Canada, the way of treating people is very different from my country. Canadian people use your first name easily and talk to you casually. In France, the way of treating people is more formal. French people are accustomed to using specific words and manners when they speak with someone.

In fact, whatever your age or your social status, it seems to me there is no social discrimination in Canada. For example, I think in Canada people don't care if you're a waitress. They won't think that just because you're a waitress you don't have a good education or you are a bad person.

French people care too much about social status. There, relationships depend on the social rank people belong to. In other words, people from the bottom of the social hierarchy are not treated the same way as people from the top.

For all these reasons, I have always been attracted by Canada. However, what strikes me is how difficult it is to get one's working visa in Canada. I would like to work here because I have been planning to live in Canada for many years.

I found a job as a waitress in an Italian restaurant, but the immigration centre here did not want to give me a working visa. I didn't know how hard it was to get a working visa before I came here.

If you want to work in Canada, you have to find a job which cannot be filled by any Canadian people. Finally, your employer has to prove that you are the only person qualified for this job. This reduces your chances of getting a job very much. It is really unfair!

I know they want to protect Canadian workers above all, as the rate of unemployment is increasing in Canada. It may be hard to get a working visa in other countries as well; however, I think they could give a chance to immigrants who want to work.

To be allowed to work in Canada, the best way is to apply for your permanent residence visa. With this visa, you are considered a Canadian citizen. But you have to be in your home country to apply for it.

I really want to work in Canada, so I will do my best to get my residence visa, even if I have to go back to France and wait for several months before getting it. I am determined to come back even if it requires a lot of effort. That's how much I've come to like Canada. □

The Charlatan welcomes all letters and opinion pieces. Letters should not be more than 250 words and opinion pieces not more than 700 words. Pieces may be edited for length or clarity. The deadline is Tuesday at noon. Include your name, signature, faculty, year and PHONE NUMBER or your letter won't be published. Phone numbers are for verification only and won't be published. Send to: The Charlatan, Room 531 Unicentre, Carleton University, 1125 Colonel By Drive, Ottawa, Ont. K1S 5B6.

LETTERS

Condemn the CUSA executive

Editor:

In a number of articles published in The Charlatan there is an inclination to refer to the CUSA executive as "CUSA." It is important to note that the label "CUSA" includes all members of the association plus all our employees.

If the reporters at The Charlatan wish to condemn or criticize the executive, it would be most appropriate to make a distinction between the executive and the association in general. It is unfair to include all members of the association and our employees in generalized comments which are actually intended for the executive.

The CUSA Executive:
Lucy Watson
Gary Anandasangaree
Rob Jamieson
Theresa Cowan
René Faucher
Kirstine Haselsteiner

escape. The "officer" rudely told me to "read the rest of the sign," which states "Loading zone 30 minutes max." He also bluntly added "... it doesn't mean 30-minutes free parking." After I explained my situation, the "officer" reversed his car and released me from custody.

Not once in the years that I've attended this university have I seen security personnel in the tunnels or elsewhere on campus where security is questionable.

I am left to assume that there is more money to be made in handing out citations than preventing vandalism and sexual assaults on campus. From this incident, it is clear to me that Carleton security's interests lie elsewhere.

So, the next time you see a new orange and white poster warning us of a crime perpetrated on campus, remember our dear friends at security services who enjoy playing Starsky and Hutch rather than keeping Carleton safe.

Jan Bronski
Political Science IV

would like to have us believe the war in Bosnia-Herzegovina is a civil war, this is not the case. There is an aggressor government and a victimized government: the Serbian government and the Bosnian Muslim government respectively. It befits the international community to call the war a civil war because it gives it an excuse not to intervene.

I am not knocking the Serbian people. I am criticizing the Serbian government for perpetrating a war against the Muslim people of Bosnia-Herzegovina. I say "people" because they are the targets, sadly enough, not the Muslim government.

So, as much as sanctions are affecting civilians in Serbia, so are mortar shells, bullets, torture, rape and murder affecting the civilians in Bosnia-Herzegovina.

Ahenk Ozakpinar
Political Science/English I

In tough times Carleton cares

Editor:

I am writing to express a thank-you to all students attending Carleton for their continuing support of Interval House. The yearly donation made on your behalf by the students' association represents an important source of ongoing funding for our shelter.

It is especially appreciated at this time when students are facing large increases in tuition. Your generosity when you are experiencing increasing financial pressures deserves acknowledgement. I extend a heartfelt thank-you on behalf of residents, staff and board members.

Karen Wiss
Fundraising Committee
Interval House

Starsky & Hutch security sucks

Editor:

I am writing this letter in regards to the sad state of security services here at Carleton University.

Recently, I was asked by a colleague in the architecture department to drop off a few articles at the architecture building. Unfortunately, my friend was not there and I returned to my car with the items still in the trunk.

As I attempted to leave, a security "officer" quickly blocked my vehicle with his, supposedly foiling any attempt at

Laying the blame for Bosnian war

Editor:

Re: "Sanctions in Serbia are affecting students," The Charlatan, Nov. 25, 1993.

As much as one can sympathize with the civilian population of Serbia, they have no one to blame but the Serbian government of Slobodan Milosevic.

It is he who ignited the war in Bosnia-Herzegovina and it is he who armed the Bosnian Serbs so they can carry out the destruction of the Muslim culture in the newly independent republic.

Much as the international community

the CHARLATAN CARLETON'S INDEPENDENT STUDENT NEWSPAPER
January 6, 1994
VOLUME 23 NUMBER 17
Editor-in-Chief	Mo Gannon
Production Manager	Kevin McKay
Business Manager	Jill Perry
NEWS
Editors	Mario Carlucci Karin Jordan Naomi Bock
Contributors	Jodi McKenzie Sean Silcoff Caron Watt
Volunteer Co-ordinator	Johanna Ciszewski
NATIONAL AFFAIRS
Editor	Ann Keeling
Contributors	Sara-Lynne Levine
Michael Levine
FEATURES
Editor	Andrea Smith
Contributor	Christopher Levenson
SPORTS
Editor	Steven Vesely
Contributors	Richard Scott Ryan Ward
ARTS
Editor	Blayne Haggart
Contributors	Josée Bellemare Franco D'Orazio Sussana Forieri Adam Seddon
OP/ED
Editor	Sheila Keenan
Contributor	Glady's Bichat
VISUALS
Photo Editor	Tim O'Connor
Photo Assistant	Andre Bellefeuille
Contributors	Joanne Capuani Eric Grice
Graphics Co-ordinators	David Hodges Mike Rappaport
Graphics Assistant	Joel Kenneth Grant
Contributors	Sarah Abernethy William Morris
Contributor	Frank Campbell
Cover	Andre Bellefeuille
The Charlatan's photos are produced using the Carleton University Students' Association Photo Service
PRODUCTION
Production Assistant	Kim Alf
Contributors	Bram Aaron Richard Scott Jodi McKenzie
CIRCULATION 14,000
Circulation	Dave Carpenter Joellen Walsh
ADVERTISING 788-3580
Ad Manager	Karen Richardson
<small>The Charlatan, Carleton University's weekly newsmagazine, is an editorially and financially autonomous journal, published weekly during the fall and winter term and monthly during the summer.</small> <small>Charlatan Publications Incorporated, Ottawa, Ontario, a non-profit corporation registered under the Canadian Corporations Act, is the publisher of The Charlatan. Editorial content is the sole responsibility of editorial staff members, but may not reflect the beliefs of its members.</small> <small>Contents are copyright © 1991. Nothing may be duplicated in any way without the prior written permission of the editor-in-chief. All rights reserved. ISSN 0315-1839</small> <small>Subscriptions are available at a cost of $40 for individuals and $52 for institutions. Includes GST.</small> <small>National advertising for The Charlatan is handled through Canadian University Press Media Services (Campus Plus), 73 Richmond St. W., 4th Floor, Toronto, Ontario; M5H 1Z4; phone: (416) 481-7283.</small> <small>Members of the board: Ken Drever, Mo Gannon, Anna Gibbons, David Hodges, Fouad Kanaan, Warren Kinisla, Mark Lenfeller, Yvonne Porter</small> <small>The Charlatan Room 531 Unicentre Carleton University Ottawa, Ontario, K1S 5B6 Telephone: (613) 788-6680</small>

The UnClassifieds
FOR SALE/RENT

For rent: 2-Bedroom cottage, 45 minutes from downtown. Dishwasher/water stove. $500 + utilities. 729-1299

Apt 2 share w/ other female. Large bedroom (10x13 ft) + walk-in closet. Immediate. $333 / month inclusive. Call Ann 746-7913.

LOST & FOUND

Lost - Blue corduroy baseball cap, Canadian Ski Patrol System written on front panel. 1990 First Aid Competition Kawartha Zone. High sentimental value. Lost on Jan. 3rd., Baker's Lounge or 416 Southam Hall. If found please call 233-2304 or leave message at 565-9819.

WANTED / JOBS

Wanted: The Big Nasty Rock and Roll Adventure, Silk Toxik's self produced comic book, drawn by Dave Mercal. Will pay cash for copies. Call Alex 731-0369.

Earn up to $700 weekly from home! Rush SASE to Claslin, 2407A - 515 St Laurent Blvd., Ottawa, Ont K1K 3X5

Canadian Penfriend Wanted: My name is NAMUKASA DOROTHY BROWN aged 21 years. I would like to find many friends of either age and sex from Canada. My hobbies include music, exchanging snaps, movies, travelling and learning new things etc. All letters to be replied. Thanks. P.O. Box 4528, KAMPALA

DAYTONA! The best!! We're local and looking for Carleton Reps. The best oceanfront hotel on the beach with 7 days 6 nights, highway coach transport and non-stop activities, over 12 buses last year, earn $$ and free trips with all promo materials provided, sound interesting?? 5 Seasons 567-4565.

Iband desperately seeks singer! Well-practiced band with about 20 original tunes needs vocalist. Major influences include King's X, Tool, Hendrix, but is limited to none of these. Gender unimportant, initiative and creativity essential. Those who won't work need not respond. Call Pat @ 729-3239 or Matt @ 567-2524.

SCHOLARSHIPS

Ontario Public Interest Research Group (OPIRG-Carleton) Graduate Scholarship - Discipline (s): Social Justice and Environment Issues. This scholarship is intended to provide assistance to a student working in the field of social justice and/or environmental issues. Preference will be given in areas that fall within OPIRG's mandate and the award is to be used to aid thesis research. A brief outline of proposed research and budget should be submitted to the co-ordinators of OPIRG. Award Type: Scholarship Level: Master's Open to: Canadians, Permanent residents, Student authorization (visa) Value: $500 Number of Awards: 1 Duration: 1 year Renewable: No Tenable at: Carleton University Contact: OPIRG-Carleton, 326 Unicentre, Carleton University, Ottawa K1S 5B6, (613) 788-2757 Deadlines: January 31/1994.

SERVICES / AVAILABLE

Public Speaking Workshop starting Friday, January 21, 1994. Register Now. For more information contact Counselling and Student Life Services 788-6600.

Poetry read by Peter Dale Scott. In 254 Hertzberg, Jan 12, 2:30 - 4:00pm

Applying for a summer job? Running in student elections? Want to strengthen your leadership skills? Then the leadership seminar is for you. Register today! Enrollment is limited. Contact Counselling and Student Life Services, room 501 Unicentre, 788-6600 for more information. Registration deadline - January 21, 1994.

SPRINGBREAK '94 is around the corner. No place to go? Join the biggest party in CUBA only $399+tax get return flight + meals +7nits. Hotel + "Kodak" camera + "Keala Springs" party + chance to win "Jeep YJ" + more + more... Daytona Beach $99 U-drive or $199 Bus + tax. (Ont. Reg. #04106282) Call 724-9974 or 725-1821

POTTERY CLASSES - Hand-building & wheel-throwing starting 17 Jan. Instructor: Debra Ducharme, full-time production potter & sculptor, 15 yrs. experience. Location: Private studio, walking distance to Carleton. Cost: $75.00. Six week session, incl. materials & class time. Pre-registration: Limit 6 per class. Phone: 730-0394.

Thesis Writer's Work Group starting soon. Contact

Counselling and Student Life Services 788-6600.

JITSU. Enjoyable training which provides effective defence for men and women. Techniques suitable for law enforcement. Sun 5pm-7pm, Wed. 4pm-6pm. Combatives Room. New members always welcome. Contact: Derry 523-1507

Word Processing. Accuracy and Deadlines Guaranteed. Central Location. 233-8874.

Word Processing. Accurate, professional, prompt, economical. Reports, essays, term papers, transcripts, theses. Reasonable editing provided and grammar corrected free. 731-9534

Attention students with portfolios! Have you considered a video of your work? Tech2 Midi offers video solutions in Resume/Music/Insurance/Corporate. Call for DIY or Professional productions, 596-4096.

PANAMA CITY BEACH, in FLORIDA! Hottest Spring Break location today. Activities galore, party till day-break! High quality beachfront accommodation. You drive for only $119, $259 with our transportation. For more information and bookings call 523-9640.

Studied for an A...got a D? Join one of the many study skills workshops offered by Counselling and Student Life Services. For more information call 788-6600

MESSAGES

"Victoria" - Sorry my reply is soooo late but I missed the deadline. "Polyester", "B"-movies and Tom Jones sounds like fun! If ya still remember me and want to meet, let me know. "Lane"

Brenda Smith, call Peter Smith now that you are at Carleton. You've got my card, if you lost it place an ad here.

MAN TO WOMAN

Big cuddly teddy bear with a quick smile and warm heart looking for a woman who's not afraid to experience life. Write and tell me about yourself. Box Curdly.

I'm a 23 yr old part-timer (seems like full time) who enjoys underground/alternative music, cheesy B-movies, Kids in the Hall and doing the movie thing at the Mayfair. Sound interesting? Hope so. Seeking intelligent woman with sense of humour and same interests. Box LANE

The UnClassifieds

Looking to buy or sell something? Need to make an announcement? Or maybe you're intrigued at the thought of having your own personal ad. The Charlatan Unclassifieds are a great way to reach over 20,000 people every week. Just fill out the form and bring in into the Charlatan office, 531 Unicentre.

Message (30 or words or less)

Name _____ Student No. _____ Box No. _____

ARARAT

TAE KWON DO

INSTRUCTOR: SALAH GHELANEY
4th Dan Black Belt

Achieve internal and external health, fitness, and self-discipline. Develop concentration, self-control, co-ordination, and self-defence.

Overcome stress and pressure, learn the art of living.
STRONG SPIRIT, HEALTHY BODY, PEACEFUL MIND

Starts Wednesday, January 12, 1994

Classes: Wednesdays 3:30 to 4:30 (Room 215) and Fridays 1:00 to 2:00 (Room 209)

Address: Room (215 - 209) Carleton Athletics Building

Cost: $72.00 per semester

For more information, contact the Carleton University
Students' Association, Room 401 Unicentre

SECOND LOCATION

Days: Monday & Wednesday
Time: 6:00 - 7:00pm
Where: Foster Farm Community Centre
1065 Ramsey Cres.
Ottawa, Ontario

For more information
please call:
564-1256

Feeling a little lost?

Come get some direction at your student newspaper. The Charlatan is always looking for new volunteers to write stories, shoot photos, create graphics and help lay out our pages.

No experience necessary - just an unhealthy desire to work hard and play harder.

Come by the office in Room 531 Unicentre anytime or show up at our weekly staff meetings, every Thursday at 5:30 p.m.

JIM WATSON: CARLETON'S VOICE AT CITY HALL

Fight is on for Route #4

The fight is on to get route #4 on campus.

I urge all students (whether you use #4 or not) to help in our battle with OC

Transpo to reinstate route #4 to come back onto Carleton's campus.

On January 11 drop by OC Transpo's Open House in Baker Lounge and fill out a form asking for the return of the #4.

Also, sign the petitions around campus so we can present hundreds if not thousands of signatures to the Board of OC Transpo in February when routes are discussed.

Councillor Jim Watson

City of Ottawa
111 Sussex Drive
Ottawa K1N 5A1

Tel: 564-1308 Fax: 564-8412

Carleton Advisory Committee

Everyone is invited!

Date: January 25, 1994
Time: 10 am
Location: Fenn Lounge, Res Commons
Topic: OC Transpo
Guest: Chair Peter Clark

Daycare: City and Region Help Out

Councillor Watson presents a panda bear and a $93,750 cheque from the City of Ottawa to Carleton University towards Carleton's new child care facility. Watson (second from right) is seen here with President Robin Farquhar (left), Coordinator of Colonel By Daycare Margot Henderson and Cynthia Godbold, President of the Board of Directors of Colonel By Daycare.

by Andrea Smith
Charlatan Staff

Professor Christopher
Levenson's new book

Duplicities: New & Selected Poems

(Mosaic Press, $14.95)

spans the breadth of his development as a poet over the past 40
years:

Born in London in 1934, he was educated at Cambridge

University and the University of Iowa, and came to Carleton in 1968.

Since that time he has contributed his work and his initiative to the small but determined poetry community in Ottawa.

In 1978, he co-founded and became editor of a review of Canadian poetry called Arc magazine, and started the complementary *Arc Reading
Series* in 1981. Since he left Arc in 1988,

Levenson has kept busy with Duplicities, and says he is hoping to publish an anthology of
"non-macho male poets" in the coming year.

While many of his poems resonate with political and social commentary, Levenson says his work is firstly introspective.

"Political poetry isn't going to be very much good if you are simply using it as a platform," says Levenson. "The poems have to come out of some personal experience, and be based on what you have seen and know about.

"With a good political poem you start off by wanting to explore something within yourself, and then at the end of it you've found you have said something which has a wider political or social application."

Neither is Levenson's poetry esoteric or filled with impenetrable enigmas. Rather, he says it attempts to speak to most people so that they can at least relate to it from the first reading.

"I'm very pleased when people who do not normally read poetry say 'I like that, I can understand that.' . . . I try to be as direct and simple as possible. It's difficult being simple."

The following poems are excerpts from Duplicities.

French Leave

I

Thirty three years my father taught French at the Reg

almost an hour each way on the Underground.
He spent his evenings sandbagged with exercise book Though he'd help me with my French homework we my father tongue at home except when Grandmère dragged herself over from Clapton for Christmas or E and she was stone deaf, reeking of eucalyptus, sentimental, easily shocked. On buses and trains my father would shout at her; the other passengers would wonder what was happening to the poor old la

II

My first trip abroad with the school: dinner in Paris and a quick bus tour of the city, our guide intoning
"A la gauche vous voyez . . ." "on ze right side you w
the Eiffel Tower, Notre Dame — a blither of images.
The waiters impatient, disdainful, as we worked out th
Then all night sleeping in the train with my prized bottle of "vin rouge ordinaire," harsh
I was sixteen, a romantic man of the world en route for safe Switzerland — Clarens, near Montre had

"berceau de toute amour vraiment passionée," so I felt obliged to fall in love with Olive all that brief holiday.

III

Later I visited "Oncle" Georges, "Tante" Rosette, in the 18th Arrondissement, my father's almost-relativ and later still the real ones, Leon and Marguerite second cousins, twice or three times removed, he had

After thirty five years he was so much the Englishman you could only tell from two or three words, "creature that he hadn't been born there. Only my mother called by his middle name, René, that he passed on to me. B never v

I did that for him in '62, '63, three weeks each time in the hills above Carpentras, Provence, uneasily at ho in the chateau of Marie Bonheur, who had me crowne
"

"jeune poète anglais, très bon, très bien connu."

IV

Not until Canada was there any real need to know where I belonged. René, the silent name
I had kept for thirty years under wraps, is now reborn. Here I am often taken for French, something to do no doubt with the shape of my head, my hair, and sometimes I to return the verbal ball three times in a row.
In the Byward Market I string a few phrases together like Spanish onions, try them out on vendors, but cannot catch their replies. And you, long dead, cannot help me. These onions unravel to tears as I face the sad duplicities of choice.

The Saved

In a Saskatoon motel I read an abandoned
Full Gospel Businessmen's Voice — a change from the Gideon Bible, the porno mags or the local entertainment guide (all its offerings either topless or mindless)
but still I want to know:

why are the saved always clean shaven?
why do they wear such neat suits?

They are all bespectacled, wear the iron-on permapress smiles of insurance salesmen, tax lawyers, morticians, hear voices over the intercom
and take telex orders from God:

*Could it be true? Had God really spoken?
Was he really calling to me to be a plastic surgeon? Apparently, yes.
Now I make faces for God, the crooked straight.*

These abandoned full businessmen know they are onto a good thing: prayer is the ultimate private enterprise, and they have a good product.

And their women, real women who stand by their menfolk and stand up on cue blondly gleaming, to pat their halos of lacquered hair add a dab of righteousness behind each ear, wear silicon implants of sincerity
Severely motherly, they know what's best:
They all have the ingredients pat for a heavenly pie and many endorsements for their plump obedience.

*Before I was like an airplane, designed to fly
but just sitting in a hangar.
Now that I've turned the controls over to Jesus my life is on an upward course.*

In the motel john a streamer informs me
"This world has been specially sterilized for you."

Pit Ponies, Sydney, N.S.

Born underground and grown used to the dark,
they are well cared for,
they have all they need to survive and haul coal ten hours a day:
warm straw, food, a clean barn.
The pit ponies,
oblivious of seasons,
stay there all winter long,
half a mile out
under the Atlantic.

One day each year
they are brought to the surface, stand sniffing the unpumped air, discovering fresh grass,
feeling on jaded flanks
if the day is fine
unmediated sun.

Declaration

This love that I carry with me is within the allowed limits, is for my own use,
a personal gift
of no commercial value.
I declare that it is the first time this year and that I fully understand the penalties for a false declaration.

PHOTO BY ANDRE BELLEFEUILLE
PATTERNS BY WILLIAM MORRIS

STYLE IS YOUR STATE OF MIND

coming next week

CHARLOTTE FASHION SUPPLEMENT

1993 was worth remembering Ravens soared to new heights last year

by Steven Vesely

Charlatan Staff

It wouldn't be fair to close the door on 1993 without highlighting some of the more memorable moments played out by Carleton athletic teams.

And halfway through the academic year, there's already a mountain of moments to choose from.

On the men's side, the rugby team's probably still basking in the warm afterglow of its accomplishments. After finishing second in their division a season ago, the Ravens went 6-1 this year to win the Ontario Universities Athletic Association division two rugby title in October. They then lost to the Queen's Golden Gaels in the playoffs.

The men's soccer team was expected to do well. And it delivered. Ranked among the top five in the country the entire year, the Ravens finished first in the OUAA east division before disaster struck on a cold and wet pitch in October. The fourth-place Queen's Golden Gaels silenced Carleton with a double overtime shootout win. Ouch.

After what seemed like an eternity of futility, the football team rebounded to win two games this year and was in contention for a playoff spot right until the last game of the season in late October. Now the basics are set. Progress is in motion. Good times are just a spring and summer away.

The waterpolo team rounds out the men's highlights. After a third-place regular-season finish in OUAA waterpolo action, the Ravens fell short of a medal in a dramatic 12-11 overtime loss to the University of Western Mustangs in November.

The women's soccer team's 5-3-2 record in the Ontario Women's Interuniversity Athletic Association was its best in recent history. A late-October 3-2 win over the first-place York Yeowomen was a large reason why the Ravens did well. Still, the Ravens were unable to advance beyond the first round of the playoffs for a third consecutive year.

The women's field hockey team is the lemon in the bunch, having finished with a 2-11-3 record, eighth among nine teams in the OWIAA field hockey league and out of the playoffs. Still, the Ravens had three players good enough to play for provincial teams at the Canada Games last summer and they have a whole year of experience behind them for next year.

Finally, there's the rowing team, which produced its best-ever results at the combined men's and women's rowing championships at the provincial championships in October. Six crews qualified for the rowing finals in late October, with men's lightweight double crew of Rob Bennett and Trevor Mackay coming away with a second-place result. □

The year of the Mario

by Richard G.D. Scott

Charlatan Staff

Hockey's most talented star has probably never been asked a better question than this.

"Are you human?"

It was a simple question, asked by a child fan. And in answering, he just smiled.

What better question could there be to ask of hockey superstar Mario Lemieux after 1993 — the most tumultuous of his 28-year-old life.

Super Mario, a nine-year veteran of the NHL's Pittsburgh Penguins, was one of the most intriguing and talked-about athletes in 1993.

Leading the league with 104 points and on pace to break Wayne Gretzky's single-season record of 215 points, Lemieux was diagnosed with Hodgkin's disease in early January. Yet he returned after an absence of over two months to the scoring race, trailing Buffalo Sabre Pat LaFontaine by 12 points with only 20 games left. The difference should have been too much.

But in an amazing final stretch, Lemieux erased the difference and won the Art Ross trophy for the fourth time. Lemieux scored 30 goals and 56 points (an average of 2.8 points per game) and helped the Penguins win their final 17 games in a row, setting a NHL record.

The feat was incredible, but nearly inconceivable when considering the reason why he missed 23 games.

After the cancer was found in his neck, the hockey world was in shock and Lemieux was dumbfounded.

But his outlook quickly changed as he began radiation treatment. Nights after he finished the last of his four weeks of therapy, Lemieux was back in the lineup, scoring two points against the Philadelphia Flyers in his first game back in March.

His speedy return to the scoring race illustrated his nearly supernatural prowess — especially considering the physical and emotional scars of his treatment were expected to keep him out for the rest of the season.

Instead, the Magnificent One returned and proved himself the greatest of all superstars.

Only the recurring back problems which have hindered him throughout his career stopped Lemieux and the Penguins from attaining a third consecutive Stanley Cup. At season's end, the six-foot-four 210-pound forward had racked up 160 points and was awarded four NHL awards.

Even in the summer and autumn Lemieux made the news — his marriage in June, a controversial unauthorized book, a TV movie, and his endorsement of the new Leaf hockey card set.

Finally, there was another back surgery in July. Lemieux's back has not been as easy to vanquish as his cancer and he is once again on the sidelines.

The only good news about the end of Lemieux's 1993 was his first Marsh trophy as the Canadian Athlete of the Year.

After making every possible headline in 1993, Lemieux will hopefully find a little peace and quiet in the new year. Maybe then, he will have time to show a little more of his human self. □

Who makes resolutions these days?

by Ryan Ward

Charlatan Staff

New Year's resolutions anyone?

It seems not. In fact, judging by the response to our question, it appears the only resolution many Carleton athletes made this year is not to make any resolutions. Nevertheless, some Ravens did offer up the following words of wisdom for 1994:

"All I can come up with at this moment is to try to do better the next time." — Director of athletics Keith Harris

"I don't want to blow all my money in the first month. I don't want to have to crawl back to my parents to ask them for more." — Rugby player Michael Davies.

"I would like to get rid of my beer gut." — Football player Trevor Charles.

"I want to study harder and keep working out." — Football player John Thom.

"I want to do better with my school work at university." — George Ziguomis, also of the football team.

"I plan to drink less and study harder." — Waterpolo player Trina Krantz.

"I plan to help Carleton avenge their second-place finish every year I have been here and to achieve my peak of physical fitness as I go into the world of work at the end of this year." — Nordic skier Frank Ferarri. □

AUDITORS' REPORT TO THE MEMBERS

We have audited the balance sheet of Charlatan Publications Inc. as at April 30, 1993 and the statements of income and expense, surplus and changes in financial position for the year then ended. These financial statements are the responsibility of the Corporation's management. Our responsibility is to express an opinion on these financial statements based on our audit.

We conducted our audit in accordance with generally accepted auditing standards. Those standards require that we plan and perform an audit to obtain reasonable assurance whether the financial statements are free of material misstatement. An audit includes examining, on a test basis, evidence supporting the amounts and disclosures in the financial statements. An audit also includes assessing the accounting principles used and significant estimates made by management, as well as evaluating the overall financial statement presentation.

In our opinion, these financial statements present fairly, in all material respects, the financial position of the Corporation as at April 30, 1993 and the results of its operations and the changes in its financial position for the year then ended in accordance with generally accepted accounting principles.

Coopers & Lybrand

Chartered Accountants
Ottawa, Canada
July 9, 1993

CHARLATAN PUBLICATIONS INC.

(Incorporated under the laws of Canada)

Balance Sheet as at April 30, 1993

	1993
Assets
Current Assets
Cash	$ 6,603
Accounts receivable	43,382
Marketable securities - at cost (quoted market value $26,670; 1992 - $60,800)	25,077
	75,062
Equipment (net of accumulated depreciation of $25,887; 1992 - $17,466)	28,237
	$ 103,299

CHARLATAN PUBLICATIONS INC.

Statement of Income and Expense

For the Year Ended April 30, 1993

	1993
Income
Grant from Carleton University Students' Association, Inc.	$ 94,689
Advertising	135,558
Other	6,287
	236,534
Expense
Administration	1,345
Bad debts	6,273
Computer supplies and maintenance	2,069
Memberships	8,689
Photo mechanical charges	6,139
Printing and production	76,690
Professional fees	3,318
Rent	12,108
Salaries	96,233
Sundry	7,157
Telephone	6,073
Travel and conferences	1,973
Depreciation	8,421
	236,488
Net Income (Loss) for the Year	$ 46

Liabilities and Surplus

Current Liabilities
Bank advances	$ -
Accounts payable	19,745
	19,745
Surplus
Unappropriated surplus	58,477
Reserve for future expenditures	25,077
	83,554
	$ 103,299

Coopers & Lybrand

OLIVER'S
Calendar

JANUARY 6 THROUGH 12

6 Thursday
Pub Night

8 Saturday
Belfast Cowboys

11 Tuesday
Country Music
Line Dancing
Charity Ball Pub

12 Wednesday
WORLD FAMOUS
WEDNESDAYS

*Come check out
our new food menu*

ATTENTION STUDENTS!

GET OFF THE BENCH AND INTO THE BAR!

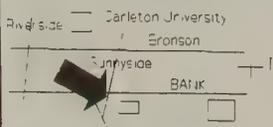

Take the time out from the books & make the move to the SUNNYSIDE SPORTS BAR!

Come and shoot some pool or catch the game on the big T.V. screen . . .

Great hang out for any university club, team or society . . .

We have daily bar specials and our kitchen is now open for munchies . . .

WE ARE EASY TO FIND

1077 BANK

(corner of Sunnyside & Bank)
telephone #: 730-5748

a call for volunteers...

We would love your help!

Volunteer training for the winter term takes place January 13, 1994 during the day. Call or drop by for more information or to pre-register.

GAY, LESBIAN AND BISEXUAL CENTRE
127A Unicentre • 788-2600 ext. 1860

Is 5 HRS/Month too much to invest in campus safety?

The Carleton Foot Patrol needs women and men to volunteer their time to patrol the campus and escort people at night. Patrollers work in co-ed pairs for 2 - 2 1/2hr shifts a month.

Applications are now available at:

Foot Patrol Office (461 Unicentre), CUSA Office (401 Unicentre)
R.R.R.A. Office (Res Commons), Volunteer Bureau (128 Unicentre)
Women's Centre (308 Unicentre)

Applications are due at 4pm, January 14, 1994 at the CUSA Office. Interviews will be held January 17, 18, 19. Any Questions? Call the Foot Patrol Office at 788-4066 for more information.

CUSA

Raven Rumblings

QUOTE OF THE WEEK

"Any win is exciting this year."
Paul Correy, the Carleton hockey club's general manager, was pleased as punch that his team finally won its first game of the season this past December.

FLORIDA BOUND

Don't go looking around the athletics building for the men's and women's swim teams. Ditto for the men's and women's basketball teams. They're not here. They're somewhere warm. Like Florida. The basketball and swim teams are currently training in Ft. Lauderdale, Fla. until Jan. 9, when they'll return to flaunt their glorious sun-tans.

FOOTBALL CUT

The board of governors at the University of Alberta voted to drop the university's Golden Bear's football program last month, according to a Dec. 7 story in the university paper The Gateway. The board cited unstable funding and poor game attendance as reasons behind the decision. Three years ago, the football program was also dropped but later rescued by alumni and community support and funding.

TIME TRIALS

The men's and women's nordic ski team were out at Gattineau Park on the New Year's weekend practising time trials for the upcoming ski season. Time trials are a measure by which racers are able to gauge their performance against objective timed standards.

CALENDAR

Saturday, Jan. 8.

FENCING — The fencing team hosts the Carleton Invitational fencing tournament all weekend at the Ravens' Nest gym.

SKIING — The nordic ski team will be out at 10 a.m. in Gattineau Park practising timed trial runs against members from the universities of Ottawa, Queen's and McGill.

Sunday, Jan. 9.

FENCING — The Carleton Invitational fencing tournament continues at the Ravens' Nest gym.

Tuesday, Jan. 11.

BASKETBALL — The Raven women's basketball team opens its season against the University of Ottawa Gee-Gee's at Montpetit Hall at 6 p.m. The men's team will follow with its season opener at 8:30 p.m. □

Hockey team glad last year is over

by Steven Vesely
Charlatan Staff

Classes may have stopped last month, but hockey didn't.

And members of the Carleton hockey club probably wish it had.

The club posted a 1-3 record in four league games during the exam period.

On Dec. 1, the Carleton team finally celebrated its first win of the season.

"Any win is exciting this year," said the club's general manager Paul Correy.

One week later, the Wizards hockey club outgunned Carleton 9-5, ending any hopes of a Carleton winning streak.

The following week, the first-place Abloom club trounced Carleton 6-2.

Finally on Dec. 22, with an ad hoc lineup of nine players, Carleton lost 9-5 to the Ottawa Nepean Sports Club.

"We had a lot of guys out of town so we dressed the assistant coach and our trainer," said Correy. "It was a big game because we were trailing them by four points for the last playoff spot."

After their best season yet last year, when the club finished 10-7-3 and won their first-ever playoff game, this year's team is languishing in fifth place in the six-team league with a 1-9-2 record midway through the season.

"It's a lack of experience," said Correy, commenting on the team's poor performance compared to last year. "All our old boys graduated and this is a first-year team without anything."

Incidentally, last year's graduates formed a team of their own -- the Kings. With 17 points, the Kings are four points behind the first-place Abloom club.

"It's funny how all our old boys, the Kings, are doing fine," said Correy, "while we're struggling to win a game." □

Charlatan Hockey Pool

Here are the point leaders in the Charlatan Hockey Pool. Points were tabulated as of Tue. Jan. 4, 1994.

BAXTER'S

1344 Bank Street
(at Riverside)
738-3323

1	Patrick Soden	444
2	Jeff Parker	431
3	Jeff Pavkev	431
4	Anjali Varma	427
5	Vicki Mavraganis	426
6	Don Belanger	426
7	Blair Sanderson	423
8	Sujoy Bhattacharyya	422
9	Thomas Corakis	420
10	R. De Vecchi	419

Congratulations to Jeff Parker who wins this week's dinner prize. Parker and our December winner Patrick Soden can pick up their $25 dinner certificate for Baxter's restaurant at The Charlatan.

Charlatan Sports Trivia

Answer the following question correctly and become eligible to win a $25 dinner for two at Schadillac's Saloon.

Name the youngest major league baseball player to hit three home runs in a single game.

Congratulations to Paul Lattman who knew George Halas was the other coach besides Don Shula to win over 300 career games.

1. Place your answer, name and phone number on a piece of paper and submit it to The Charlatan sports editor, room 531 Unicentre. The recipient of the prize will be determined by a supervised draw of all correct answers.

2. All answers must be received by Tuesday, Jan. 11, 1994. The winner will be contacted by phone, by the sports editor of The Charlatan.

3. Contestants may submit only one entry per week.

4. Charlatan staff members and their families are not eligible to participate.

Answer:

Name:

Phone:

THE NATIONAL THEATRE SCHOOL OF CANADA
Acting Directing Playwriting Scenography Technical Production
Call or write: National Theatre School of Canada 5030 Saint-Denis St., Montreal, Quebec H3J 2J8
A U D I T I O N S
DEADLINE FOR APPLICATION: FEBRUARY 15 TEL: (514) 842-7954 FAX: (514) 842-5661

Est. 1977

DARLENE SCOLARIDES

Hair Shops...

SHAMPOO CUT & STYLE $12 SPECIAL REQUESTS pay extra

PERMS $45 SPECIAL REQUESTS pay extra

...For men and women

• 232-1763 •

249 Bank Street
BETWEEN LISGAR & COOPER • PARKING ON COOPER

Meadowlands Family Health Centre

Hog's Back Plaza
888 Meadowlands Drive East
corner of Prince of Wales Dr. and Meadowlands Dr.
(behind McDonald's)
Ottawa, Ontario K2C3R2
228-2882

Prince of Wales Drive
Colonel By Drive
U of O
Carleton U
Hog's Back

Meadowlands Drive East
Meadowlands Family Health Centre

Family Medicine
Adolescent Medicine
Obstetrics and Maternity Care

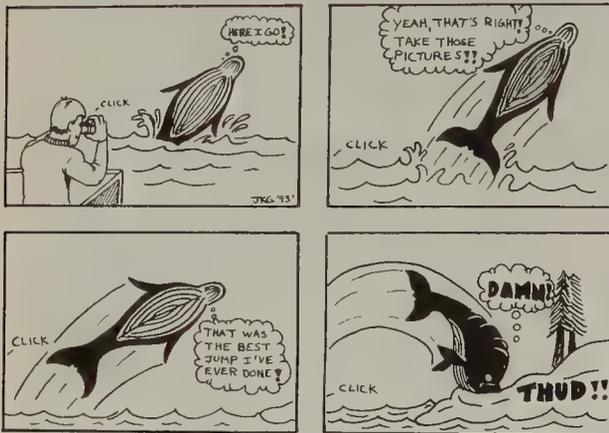

Pediatrics
Minor Surgery
Counselling Services

Open 7 days a week
Weekdays 8AM to 8PM
Weekends / Holidays 10AM to 6PM

With or without appointment

DISGRAPHIA

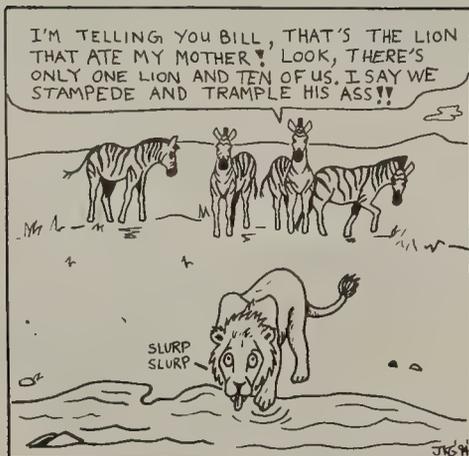

IN HARM'S WAY

How whales beach themselves

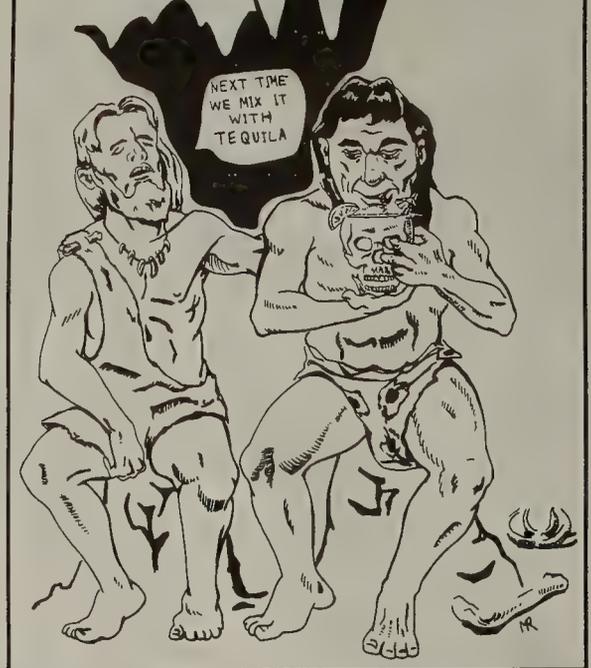

Bugs Bunny's trip to Germany takes a disastrous turn at Albuquerque

Why zebras travel in herds

PRE-HISTORIC MAN DISCOVERS THE... 'GIRLIE DRINK'

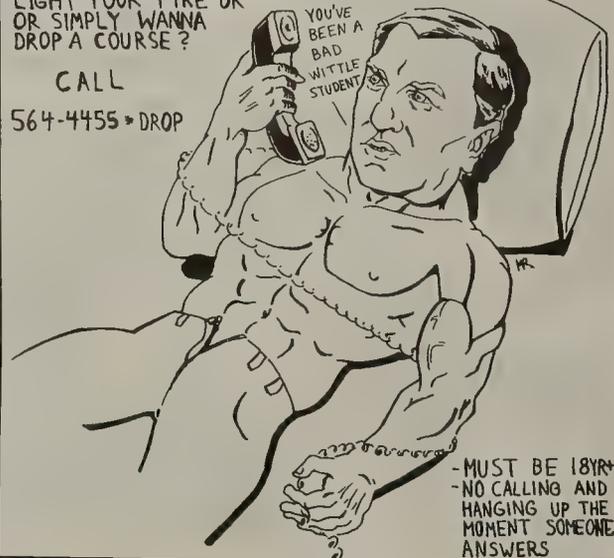

UNIVERSITY SURVIVAL GUIDE
Tip #31: Keeping up with Old Friends

Tip #67:
AVOID LARGE PHONE BILLS!

NEED A SPARKY TO LIGHT YOUR FIRE OR OR SIMPLY WANNA DROP A COURSE?

CALL
564-4455 • DROP

Spray painting the town with PUZZLE

by Tim Pryor
Charlatan Staff

PUZZLE
Dec. 17 — Jan. 8
Carl Davis Gallery

Since early last summer, Eric Grice and Dan Buller have been decorating the streets. Using spray paint, ingenuity and a little caution, Grice and Buller have been painting on buildings in the Ottawa area, under the name of PUZZLE.

Now, you can see their first art exhibit at the Carl Davis Gallery on Dalhousie Street, which showcases the pair's talents in a different setting than their public art.

"It's an experimentation with graffiti styles on canvas. With a canvas piece you can take a lot more time and effort with minor details," says Buller. "If you're doing a graffiti piece, then you have to do it quick, and you have just spray paint to work with." Grice and Buller met at a party and discovered they were both interested in bringing art to the streets. Now it's their full-time occupation.

"One of the big reasons I moved to Ottawa was so I could have some time to do real art," says Buller, a native of Belleville, Ont. "We decided to start this graffiti campaign."

Grice and Buller's work has escaped much of the criticism usually associated with graffiti.

"Before I started doing this, I expected a lot of negative response, but mostly it's been all positive," Buller says.

One exception was a letter to the Ottawa Citizen after the paper ran an article about them. The letter called their art "juvenile, childish spattering," says Grice.

"At the National Defence building (across from the Rideau Centre) there's that huge bent piece of steel," he says. "You have to be artistically literate to appreciate that piece. What we do is have something where you can associate the gist of an idea or thought with an image."

Grice and Buller have yet to be caught in the act by the police.

"There's no fear when we go out, just a little caution. It puts some juice in it, makes it more exciting," says Buller.

"There's certain areas where there's a lot of traffic and you have to watch out," says Grice.

PUZZLE won't be hibernating this winter. They plan to paint indoors on metal scraps (donated by Capital City Surplus as thanks for a mural the duo painted on their building) and then take them outdoors.

"We're going to be using those sheets this winter to keep the graffiti aspect alive. We're going to be doing pieces on these metal sheets and go around and bolt them on telephone poles or abandoned buildings," says Buller.

Grice and Buller have much larger plans for the summer, like starting a co-operative of artists.

"The ultimate goal of PUZZLE isn't just to saturate Ottawa with graffiti. We're going to be a little mural company. We're also going to have another show in the summer and it's going to be a lot better," Buller says.

"We also want to open an art community space. It's going to be our work space. We also want to have regular art parties there and we want to promote hometown bands there."

"The whole purpose is to try to get other people interested in doing stuff," adds Grice.

"You can call it an art community or whatever," says Buller. "Art comes from inspiration. Inspiration comes from each other. Art inspires art, so if you get enough artists together, they're going to inspire each other, and there will be this inspirational spiral that shoots everyone straight up." □

Hi, Mom! Eric Grice, Dan Buller and their Art.

ANDRÉ BELLEVEILLE

"Juvenile, childish spattering?" We think not.

ERIC GRICE

It's the Partridge Family of punk

by Sussana Forieri
Charlatan Staff

Diverse sounds and an intense live show sum up the effect of Black Triangle.

Although they would probably balk at the description, the band sounds like the Dead Kennedys with a Celtic influence. One thing is certain, they're always loud and full of energy.

This six-piece band — two guitars, bass, violin, drums and vocals — blasts punk sound to the fullest degree.

Part of what makes Black Triangle so great is the members' close ties. I guess you could say they're the Partridge Family of punk.

Vocalist Steve Hopkins and guitarist Kevin Hopkins are brothers and they've been friends with bassist Steve Row and guitarist Vic Smith since childhood. The drummer, Alec Scott, has been with them since their first show.

"We all know each other and I think that helps when we're working," Kevin says.

The band has been playing around town since its formation about four and a half years ago.

"Steve (Hopkins) was hoping to get a band together and I had just bought my first bass," Row recalls. "I had never played before and Steve was talking about needing a bass (player)."

"I said, 'Well I just picked up a bass, I could do it.' We got Vic Smith because we needed a guitarist as well."

Like any band, they've paid their dues. Their first drummer only had a three-piece set and they used to jam in Row's bedroom, which was too small to accommodate them all. As a result, their drummer "kept dropping drumsticks and drums down the stairs," says

Kevin.

Judging from their sound, they've come a long way. The newest member, violinist Tanya Onysko, joined a year ago after hearing them at Ottawa's Arts Court. According to Onysko, "I liked them and I was going to jam with them so I did and a week later I played a gig in Kingston."

When asked why the violin was added, Smith says, "We just thought, 'Hey that's neat. A violin — cool, let's put it in.'"

Listening to their music, you'd never guess some of their influences. "Leonard Cohen, I think mostly," says Scott.

"We are all so diverse. I think most of us will go home and I might put on Slayer and right after that I might put on, I don't know, something classical," Kevin says.

The band has a strong relation with its audience. Some local fans even sport the Black Triangle logo on their jackets.

"It's kind of frightening when something like that happens," says Steve.

To get the full effect of Black Triangle, they must be seen and heard live.

On stage, the band delivers high-energy music that makes it almost impossible to stay seated. This was the case the last time I saw them play, at the Pit back in November. Not long after Steve screamed "Get up and dance," a group gathered in front of the stage. Steve lunged into the crowd and Onysko took over lead vocals and screamed through a powerful version of "Tattered Bags of Water." And, as always, their rendition of "The Cat Came Back" was as hardcore as you can get.

Black Triangle is fun, full of humor and a really remarkable group of people both on and off the stage. □

JOANNE CARPUANI

Black Triangle type in motion.

This week: Possible headlines for 1994's Canadian Enquirer

1. "Ralph Benmergui, Alan Thicke and Chevy Chase: no one's home; no one's watching"
2. "Rush Limbaugh caught covertly supporting Queer Nation"
3. "Gay blades: Yashin and Daigle make it official"
4. "Mike Duffy eats tiny wafer, explodes"
5. "Sparky bans Greco-Canadian Athletic Communities at Carleton"
6. "Caroline Mulroney arrested at Harvard for topless protest"
7. "Kim Campbell . . . oh geez, who cares"
8. "A nation rejoices: Moxxy Frùvous stricken with lar yngitis"
9. "Rideau Canal floods; U of O washed away"
10. "Preston in Playgirl: check out those Reform Party assets!"

PLACEMENT & Career Services

Check the posting boards at
the Placement Centre for
more job listings.

Programs and services of interest to undergraduates, graduating students, as well as alumni.

508 Unicentre - 788-6611
January 6, 1994

ON-CAMPUS RECRUITING

Permanent full-time positions are directed towards graduating students (available May '94). Dates, unless specified, refer to deadlines.

To find out the types of positions, how to apply and where to find more information on the companies, please contact the office.

Finance Canada

Jan. 14, Mail Direct
Economics - BA., M.A., PhD.
Positions: Economists

Revenue Canada

Jan. 21, Mail Direct
Computer Science, Commerce
Positions: Computer Systems Analyst/Programmer Analyst

Corel Corporation

Jan. 24, 12 noon
Computer Science, Computer Systems Engineering
Positions: Software Developers

AMS Management Systems

Jan. 25, 12 noon
Computer Science, Commerce-MIS
Positions: Programmer/Analyst

Canadian Political Science Assoc.

Jan. 28, Mail Direct
Political Science, Other Disciplines
Positions: Ontario Legislature Internship Programme

Easel Corporation

Jan. 28, 12 noon
Computer Science
Positions: Technical Support Consultants

FULL TIME EMPLOYMENT

Please visit Placement & Career Services for more full and part time employment opportunities.

Environmental Youth Corps Ministry of Environment

Jan. 21, Mail Direct
Request Job Order #D-11
All Disciplines
Positions: Regional Coordinators

SUMMER EMPLOYMENT

For more information on the types of positions and application procedures consult the summer job board.

Ontario/Quebec Summer Student Job Exchange Program

Jan. 14, 12 noon
All Disciplines
Positions: Various

Pulp & Paper Research Institute

Jan. 20, Mail Direct
Biochemistry, Chemistry, Physics, Mechanical Engineering
Positions: NSERC related

Ontario Quebec Municipal Student Exchange Program

Jan. 21, 12 noon
Political Science, Public Admin., French, Economics, Business, Engineering, Computer Science
Positions: Various

Gov't of Northwest Territories

Jan. 24, Mail Direct
All Disciplines
Positions: Various Summer Aquatic Positions

Legislative Assembly of Ontario

Jan. 24, Mail Direct
All Disciplines
Position: Information Officer

AECL - Chalk River

Jan. 28, Mail Direct
Computer Science, Engineering, Science, Physics, Chemistry
Position: Summer Student Program

Ontario Place

Jan. 28, Mail Direct
All Disciplines
Positions: Various-consult booklet

Regional Municipality of Ottawa Carleton

Jan. 31, 4:30pm
All Disciplines
Positions: Various-consult booklet

PCL Constructors (Eastern) Inc.

Feb. 3, 12 noon
Civil Engineering, 3rd/4th year
Positions: Field Engineer or Student Engineer

National Round Table on the Environment & the Economy

Feb. 14, Mail Direct
All Disciplines
Positions: Roy Aitken Internships

Paramount Canada's Wonderland

Feb. 16, In Person
All Disciplines
Positions: Singers, Actors, Dancers Technicians

City of Nepean

Feb. 14, Mail Direct
All Disciplines
Positions: Various

Ontario Geological Survey

Feb. 25, Mail Direct
Geoscience
Positions: Various

Department of National Revenue Customs & Excise (Sarnia)

Feb. 28, Mail Direct
All Disciplines
Positions: Student Customs Officers

Algonquin Park Visitor Services

Feb. 28, Mail Direct
Various Disciplines
Positions: Park Naturalist, Museum Technician

COSEP-Career Oriented Summer Student Employment Program

Ottawa-Hull Region Only
Feb. 28, Mail Direct
Administration, Arts, Pure Sciences, Applied Sciences, Socio-Economics
Positions: Career-related summer jobs in federal government

Kinark Outdoor Centre

ASAP, Mail Direct
All Disciplines
Positions: Counsellors, Activity Instructor

SWAP-Student Work Abroad Program

ASAP, Mail Direct
All Disciplines
Positions: See SWAP brochure for participating countries

Ontario March of Dimes

ASAP, Mail Direct
All Disciplines
Positions: Various

COSEP

CAREER ORIENTED SUMMER EMPLOYMENT PROGRAM

The COSEP program is for post-secondary students seeking career-oriented summer employment with the Government of Canada. Students are employed in various disciplines including: administration and arts, pure sciences, applied sciences and socio-economics. Students may be employed in a variety of areas such as: business administration, finance, scientific research and survey, geology, accounting, computer programming and law. To be eligible for a COSEP job, you must be registered full time at a university and must be planning to return to school full time in the fall. Preference is given to Canadian citizens. If you were employed by the federal government last summer and wish to be considered again this summer, you must use the COSEP form to re-apply.

Ottawa-Hull Region

In the Ottawa-Hull region, a centralized inventory of student applications will be maintained by Human Resources and Labour Canada. Complete the COSEP form, attach a resume and forward your application, by February 28, 1994 to:

COSEP Coordinator
Human Resources and Labour Canada
National Capital Region
P.O. Box 3450, Station "D"
Ottawa, Ontario K1P 6P7

Outside the Ottawa-Hull Region

Students must apply directly to positions advertised by federal departments and agencies based on academic specialization and skill requirements. Jobs will be advertised through on-campus student placement offices, Canada Employment Centres (CECs) or CECs for Students.

Students must complete and send the COSEP form directly to hiring departments and agencies by the closing date indicated on the job poster/advertisement. It is advisable to include a resume with your application. Deadlines will vary, but will be noted on the job vacancy postings.

The Government of Canada is committed to the principle of equal opportunity in employment.

The Charlatan Pub Crawl Extravaganza

What I did on my Christmas vacation

by Josée Bellemare
Charlatan Staff

The drinks are expensive, but the shock is worth it.

Outrageous dancers, trapeze artists, drugs, sex, costumes — and up to $25 to get in to a whole host of clubs. Such is the nightlife in Manhattan.

On Tuesday, I went to Nell's on 14th Street between Seventh and Eighth Avenue. This is a place to socialize for a price of $7. The top level of this two-level outfit is crowded with Victorian couches, tables and chairs.

The place is packed with well-dressed people ranging from 21 to about 40 years old. It's the perfect place to meet people, talk with them, butter them up and ask them out to breakfast when the club closes down at around 6 a.m. Acid jazz, house and old disco plays on the floor below.

The dim lighting can result in some surprises. I danced with a guy who looked about 25 years old, but he was really 38. This was a shock.

I was also surprised at how bold people were. When I attempted to go to the washroom, I was grabbed by at least three men who wanted to dance. A friend of mine was given two business cards while she was dancing with someone.

There was one dancer who took up a large section of the dance floor. He looked like a machine, his muscular bare chest shining with sweat while he danced with astonishing flexibility. In a split second, he would fall down on his back, jump up on his feet again and continue to dance.

When I left this club, it felt funny to know a fair amount of people, since I didn't know a soul when I first walked in.

On Wednesday, I went to the Sound Factory on Sixth Avenue between 19th and 18th Street. For $10, you can spend a night in this club with two levels of house music.

The people in this club were not shy either. When I went to the bottom level, I couldn't believe my eyes. There was a girl laying on top of a guy on a wooden block in the centre of the room. They kissed while they pretended to perform many different sexual acts.

Couches and benches were lined up against the walls. On small wooden tables people were rolling joints. By the end of the night, the couches and benches were crowded with passed out people.

The dance floor was a shock as well. On the small dance floor, one guy pretended to perform sexual episodes with many different women. A girl would be thrown at him from the crowd. He would begin to dance with great energy while she did the same. He would then grab her and pretend to have sex with her in many positions while they moved their bodies to the music. Soon after, another girl was thrown at him and they would perform the same episode, only with new dance steps and positions.

While all this was going on, someone pointed out to me a dancer who had supposedly performed in a Janet Jackson video. He danced in a circle with other excellent dancers while they competed with each other.

These informal dance competitions were popular on the top level of the club, which was brightly lit with blue flashing lights. Here there were three dance competitions going on at the same time. There was one male dancer who danced like a ballerina to house music. I was amused and impressed at the same time.

On Thursday, I went to Webster Hall on 11th Street between Third and Fourth Avenue. The line to get in this massive place reached the end of the street.

It's a club almost anybody could enjoy. Instead of going to four bars, you can pay $10 to dance on four levels which have different music, people and atmospheres.

The first level played disco music. A female go-go dancer in a G-string danced on a brightly lit stage in a packed room. The level above played rock music, with a similar conservative crowd. The bottom level was definitely not conservative. It was packed with people dancing to hip hop, reggae and rap. Fish aquariums lit up the small room as couples danced everywhere, on the dance floor and against walls.

I was told by a person who frequented the place that people can be found having sex on the couches in the corners of the room. I didn't see this, but I did see a couple pressed up against the wall enjoying a good grope.

The top level was the biggest shock. I opened the doors to see a trapeze artist swinging upside-down on ropes. This was a sight to see. A pamphlet said there was a performance the night before which involved artists throwing sticks of fire in the air and catching them in their mouths.

This reveals to what lengths New York clubs will go in order to attract a crowd. I wouldn't be surprised if clubs decided to allow tigers to walk around. Or better yet, if clubs decided to allow people to dance without their clothes on. □

STUDY SKILLS

WEEKEND WORKSHOPS OFFERED BY THE SCHOOL OF CONTINUING EDUCATION 788-3500

Returning to School? Whether it's your first or second time around, make sure you are prepared for new academic challenges.

Session I

NOTE-TAKING/EXAMINATIONS
Tips and techniques to develop effective listening and note-taking skills, textbook reading skills, systems of study; reduce exam anxiety, and improve concentration and memory building.

ESSAY WRITING
An exploration of all aspects of the writing process. Analyse an assignment, research and organize a topic, write and revise a draft.

Section A	Time:	Saturday, January 15, 9:00 a.m.-4:00 p.m.
	Fee:	$40.00 (Includes Saturday Lunch) $35.00 (Without Lunch)

Session II

ESSAY WRITING WORKSHOP

Join us for this full-day workshop which is designed to help you produce more effective essays. All aspects of the writing process will be explored—from the planning stages through to final draft. During the morning, we will focus on specific strategies for selecting a topic, researching, planning, drafting and revising. The Afternoon session will provide you with an opportunity to explore a topic of your choice and to receive reader feedback. The day will then conclude with a review of the characteristics of a first class essay.

Section A	Time:	Sunday, January 23, 9:00 a.m.-4:00 p.m.
	Fee:	$50.00 (Includes Sunday Lunch) $45.00 (Without Lunch)

SOCIAL SERVICE CAREERS

Ottawa Carleton Lifeskills is dedicated to assisting adults who are developmentally handicapped in their journey toward interdependence and personal growth. Our proven residential and community-based services equip them to lead productive, rewarding lives and to overcome the obstacles in mainstream society that make extraordinary challenges of everyday events.

We are presently seeking part-time employees for the following two positions:

Lifeskills Instructor: Under the direction of the Lifeskills Supervisor, you will provide programs to adults with developmental handicaps using a community-based general service plan. You will also ensure safety for all our clients in all aspects of the program.

Residential Counsellors: You will provide professional support in a home setting to developmentally handicapped individuals adjusting to their community, or in one of our support homes for multiply challenged individuals. We are interested in students presently studying in Human or Social Sciences, and/or have experience working with mentally handicapped individuals on a formal or a voluntary basis. You must also have completed your first aid certificate.

We provide competitive salaries and benefits along with opportunities for personal and career growth within a vital, positive and highly professional environment. If you believe in making people your number one priority and regard their challenges as opportunities for mutual development, please send your resume to:

Human Resources, Ottawa-Carleton Lifeskills Inc., Suite 200 - 63 Glencoe Street, Nepean, Ontario, K2H 8S5, or fax (613) 596-6840.

NAME _____ STUDENT NO. _____
ADDRESS _____
CITY/PROVINCE _____ POSTAL CODE _____
PHONE (H) _____ (B) _____
SESSION AND SECTION _____ LUNCH: YES ___ NO ___

Payment may be made in cash, by cheque (payable to Carleton University) Return this registration form and payment to the School of Continuing Education, Room 302, Robertson Hall, Carleton University, Colonel By Drive, Ottawa, Ontario, K1S 5B6.

Please Note: Fees are non refundable. Registration must be complete 24 hours before session date.

DISCOGRAPHY

Underbelly

Mumblypeg
Brake Out Records

Too-loud guitars and far too-quiet vocals make this 10-track effort by Underbelly a huge disappointment.

The singing dragged on and bored me almost to tears. The music is depressing and it's not even a good depression like you would get from, say, the Smiths.

On half the tracks I could hardly even tell that there were any vocals. The noise of the guitars in the background drown out everything else. Perhaps the guitarists in this band should be playing in a more heavy-metal-type outfit like Slayer.

What this CD reminded me of was the scenes from Bill and Ted's Excellent Adventure before they learn how to play their guitars. You know the part? When they stand in the garage and screech out all those horrendous noises?

It's really too bad when you think that money actually was spent to produce Mumblypeg, a CD whose musical quality is even less than mediocre.

Vanessa Crosbie

The Pogues

Waiting for Herb
WEA

This album, the Pogues' ninth, resembles the good old days when every other song was a rhapsody of insults and curses aimed at Great Britain, and the others were either ballads or tragedies.

But this album lacks the sharp wit that Shane MacGowan — that walking billboard advertising the hazards of poor dental hygiene — provided when he wrote and sang the lyrics to most of the Pogues' songs. Now, due to an alcohol problem, he's out for the good and Spider Stacey is handling the lead vocals.

"Tuesday Morning" has an interesting sound to it, but its lyrics leave the impression that one is eating popcorn. Few of the other tracks have any substance to them. "Once Upon A Time," with its melancholic theme, is one of the album's few redeeming songs.

Waiting For Herb is a good reason to wait for the Pogues' next release. If you like change, go ahead and buy it. But be warned: the album will not fetch many requests at the next IRA jamboree.

Franco D'Orazio

Idols of Perversity

Idols of Perversity
Independent

Familiar rock and heavy metal sounds fill one's ear when listening to this Nepean band.

This CD may not be revolutionary in terms of music, but its heavy percussion and loud guitar will bring a smile to the face of any rocker.

All tracks have a clear, unified sound and solid lyrics. Tracks like "Bitter Things" bring out the softer side to the band, while "Fence" highlights their powerhouse blast.

The influence of the Cult on their music is apparent but not overbearing, while lead vocalist Jason Storfer has a voice similar to Soundgarden's Chris Cornell.

Idols of Perversity are quite impressive, having all the markings of a major-label rock band. This release sounds like it's ready for radio play. Even though I'm not a fan of hard rock, some tracks had me slamming. If you're a supporter of rock and the Ottawa scene, be the first on your block to own this album.

Sussana Forieri

Shootyz Groove

Respect EP
Mercury

Ugh.

This horrid CD is living proof you can't believe everything you read.

England's New Music Express wrote (as quoted on the CD cover): "Let's not fanny around the foliage. Last year, New Music Express came home from New York's CMJ Festival still ricocheting from its first live experience of the then unknown Rage Against The Machine.

"Nine months later, and worming around the Big Apple again, the puzzlingly named Shootyz Groove are doing a fair old job of proving that lightning never strikes . . . KAPOW!!!!"

If only lightning had struck Shootyz Groove. Then we would all be spared the tedious sounds emanating from this disc.

For the record, they mix rap and live guitars, like the aforementioned Rage Against the Machine. Although Rage is completely insincere (they're on a major label and they're singing "Fuck you, I won't do what you tell me"? Please.), they at least have the decency to sound good.

Shootyz Groove sounds painfully bad. Avoid.

Blayne Haggart

Tad

Inhaler
Giant/Warner

Tad, the behemoth of Seattle, has finally been signed to a major label, leaving the infamous Sup Pop record label.

Tad's latest release sounds very over-produced. Musically, though, it is fairly strong and a logical progression from the band's previous release, 8-Way Santa.

Tad Doyle, the 350-plus pounder and former meat butcher, is the frontman of the band. He still pumps out the same old crunchy guitar riffs like he always has done, along with his traditional barking vocals. The songs are, however, slightly more complex and more thought-out than those on previous albums.

Tracks like "Rotor" and "Pansy" are some of the heaviest songs Tad has written to date.

The only major flaw of this album lies in its production. The album comes across as sounding too clean and polished. If less attention was paid to the production process, this album would likely have been much better.

Even Butch Vig, known for his polished-yet-rough style of sound production, knew when to stop when he produced the previous Tad album.

Despite this shortcoming, Inhaler is a reasonably good album. Tad fans shouldn't be overly disappointed.

Adam Seddon

Wonder Stuff

Construction For the Modern Idiot
Polygram/Polydor

This one starts off with a bang.

With feedback droning on in the background, the character Reverend Hellacious Boom Boom yells, "So good of you to come, I call on the priests, the saints, the dancin' girls and the God-damned reprobates!"

And again: "Free us of the modern idiot, cast away the bogey men, detonate your hate bombs! Pick your victims! But take good care of yourselves."

Thus, in this introduction to "Change Every Light Bulb," we are treated to the best moment on the Stuffies' new album and given a good idea of what to expect. That is, a bit of anger ("I Wish Them All Dead"), a bit of fun ("Cabin Fever"), laced with a bit of reverent irreverence ("A Great Drinker," an ode to poet Charles Bukowski).

Although this album is typically Wonder Stuff material — equal parts indie guitar music laced with fiddle and mandolin — the big question is, "What is with Miles Hunt's voice?"

On albums past, the lead's vocals were sneering. Here, they've mellowed almost beyond recognition. This time 'round his voice is much smoother, and while it's a bit disconcerting for long-time fans of the band (like myself), the annoyance factor fades quickly.

Even though "On the Ropes" is a bit too poppy and they strike too many rocker poses in the photos in the CD jacket, Construction For the Modern Idiot is enough to keep us Wonder Stuff fans happy.

Blayne Haggart

Mudhoney

Five Dollar Bob's Mock Cooter Stew EP
Reprise

What happened to this once-great punk rock band?

During Mudhoney's stint on the Sub Pop label, the band released exceptional material.

Their initial disk, Superfuzz Bigmuff, was superb. Two of the succeeding albums, Mudhoney and Every Good Boy Deserves Fudge . . . were ingenious. At that time, they were deemed to be the most promising of the emerging Seattle bands.

Their tendency to receive high critical acclaim abruptly ended with their disgraceful 1992 release Piece of Cake. Incidentally, that was their major-label debut.

Mudhoney didn't necessarily "sell out." They still did record on an eight-track. Their musical creativity just simply dried up.

Judging by Mudhoney's last two releases, Piece Of Cake and Five Dollar Bob's Mock Cooter Stew, there's little reason to be overly optimistic that the band will release any strong-sounding material in the near future.

The opening track on the latest album, "In The Blood," has Mudhoney sounding like a Bob Dylan rip-off. The ensuing songs on this EP get progressively worse. "Between You And Me Kid" has the band making a feeble attempt at blues.

"Deception Pass" and "Underide" were recorded several years ago and are likely songs that weren't deemed good enough for Piece of Cake. Mudhoney also redoes "Make It Now," ruining one of the few decent tracks found on their previous album.

The saving grace of this album is that it is under 25 minutes in length. It's a shame to see a band such as Mudhoney fall into a rut that's below mediocrity.

Adam Seddon

WHERE CAN YOU AND YOUR DATE EAT A GREAT DINNER... FOR LESS THAN $20!!!

JANUARY COUPON

Full Course Dinner
only
99¢
(max. value $13.50)

order any full course dinner at reg. price & receive a second dinner of equal or lesser value for 99¢

Not valid with any other offer. P.S.T. & G.S.T. extra (coupon expires Jan. 31, 1994)

2446 Banks at Hunt's club
(Towngate Plaza)
736-6677
Reservations & Banquet
Facilities Available

THE NOODLE
WORKS

Ottawa South's
Finest Sunday
Brunch 10:30-2:30

FULL 3 COURSE DINNER - Soup or Salad, Fresh Baked San Francisco Sourdough Bread, Entree Selection, Spumoni Ice Cream, Coffee or Tea

FEBRUARY COUPON

Full Course Dinner
only
99¢
(max. value $13.50)

order any full course dinner at reg. price & receive a second dinner of equal or lesser value for 99¢

Not valid with any other offer. P.S.T. & G.S.T. extra (coupon valid from Feb. 1 - Feb. 28, 1994)

HOMEMADE PASTA DISHES • VEAL • CHICKEN • MORE

LONG DAY IN THE UNIVERSE

THURSDAY, JANUARY 6 TO THURSDAY, JANUARY 13

Thursday, January 6

The Wedding Banquet and Orlando are both playing tonight at the Bytowne at 7 p.m. and 9:20 p.m. respectively. Isn't life grand?

Friday, January 7

Relive the adventure! Jurassic Park! It's playing at the Mayfair at 7 and 9 p.m.!

Saturday, January 8

Pretty good lineup here. Tonight at Zaphod's six bucks gets you in to see Guelph's King Cobb Steelie and Ottawa's Cookie.

Corpus Interruptus, an art exhibit about the "migratory relationship between the human body and its representation in art" by Catherine Heard, Suzanne Maurice and Roman Valera, is being presented tonight through Feb. 4 at Gallery 101. At 8 p.m. tonight, artist Douglas J. Back will give a talk about the body and art. His exhibit, The Body Obsolete, is showing Jan. 7 through Feb. 11 at Galerie SAW Video.

Sunday, January 9

Well, there's always Jimmy George at the Duke of Somerset.

At the Mayfair, they're holding a benefit screening of Kanehsatake: 270 Years of Resistance for Peace Brigades International, "a group dedicated to the non-violent resolution of conflicts." The screening starts at 2 p.m. and tickets are seven dollars.

Monday, January 10

This week's reading tip, courtesy of the well-rested Charlatan production manager Kevin McKay, is Norman Maclean's A River Runs Through It. Says McKay, "It's an excellent story of family and fishing in Montana. It will leave you with a desire to grab your pole and a box of flies."

Tuesday, January 11

How about taking in some acid jazz at the Pit?

Relive the anxiety, the last-minute cramming for exams! It's the timely film The Nightmare Before Christmas, showing at 7 p.m. at the Bytowne.

Wednesday, January 12

What can you expect from something entitled The Great Fishing Debit Seminar? How about fishing experts Reno Viola and "Big" Jim McLaughlin facing off in a discussion of "10 of the most common basic angling situations?" We all know how passionate anglers can get, so a heated discussion seems inevitable. It's happening at Centrepointe Theatre in Nepean. Tickets are $15 at the door, $13.50 in advance. The fun gets underway at 7 p.m.

On In A Mellow Tone (CKCU 93.1 FM at 9 p.m.), Ron Sweetman will be playing recent jazz and blues releases.

Want to get rid of some surplus blood? The Canadian Red Cross Society is holding a blood donor clinic in Porter Hall from noon until 4 p.m. today. Their goal is 190 donors and there'll doubtlessly be cookies and other treats available.

Thursday, January 13

Tonight at 8 p.m. and again on Saturday at 2 p.m. at the Bytowne: a live dramatic reading of Terry Eagleton's Wittgenstein, to be followed by a screening of the film. Sez here in the press release that Terry Eagleton is England's "most significant Marxist literary critic," so now you know what to expect.

Savage Graces: "After Images" by Gerald McMaster is showing at the Ottawa Art Gallery today through Feb. 27. This evening, to commemorate the opening, Namowan Michael Kirby will be reading some of his poetry at 8 p.m.

If you have an event you want to appear in this handy calendar, you can drop your announcement off at The Charlatan, Room 531 Unicentre during regular business hours or you can fax us at 788-4051. Announcements must be in by the Friday before publication.

Contest winner!

Just a reminder to Cat Whelan to come on up to The Charlatan, Room 531 Unicentre to pick up your Chapterhouse CD from The Charlatan Poll contest.

CORRECTION

Due to an editorial error in the Dec. 2 issue of The Charlatan, Mushroom Explosion T-shirts were described as being "tie-dyed." They're not. That doesn't mean, though, you can't do it yourself if you really want to.

SPRING BREAK PANAMA CITY BEACH, FLORIDA

Shell Island Party Cruise
650' Gulf Beach Frontage
2 Outdoor Swimming Pools
1 Indoor Heated Pool
Restaurant, 2 & 3 Room Suites

Beach Bonfire Parties
Tiki Beach Bar/Volleyball
Sailboats, Jetskis & Parasails
Karaoke Beach Party
Area Discount Coupons

SANDPIPER BEACON
17403 Front Beach Road
Panama City Beach, FL 32413
904-234-2154

RESERVATIONS 1-800-488-8828
FROM $104 PER WEEK PER PERSON 4 PERSON OCCUPANCY

RESIDENCE FELLOW

Free room and board in residence.

Positions available for the 1994-95 Academic Year. Applicants must achieve 6.25 GPA in four credits during the 1993-94 Academic Year.

Applications are available at the Service Desk, Residence Commons & Info Carleton, Unicentre. Deadline for applications is Friday, January 14, 1994.

Residence Life Office
260 Stormont House
788-5615

GOOD TIMES

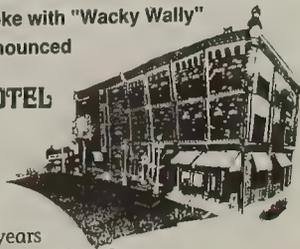

GOOD VALUE

Join us for Great Food, Refreshment and Entertainment
4 Large Screen TV's
TSN and Satellite Dish for the best in sports
Breakfast Menu served Saturday and Sunday till 4 pm
Saturday and Tuesday - Wing Nights
and now with SUPER PIZZA!
Live Entertainment Friday, Saturday, Sundays
No Cover

Club F. Jan. 7, 8
Hot Mustard Jan. 14, 15
Once Again Jan. 21, 22
Wednesdays - Karaoke with "Wacky Wally"
Sundays - To Be Announced

SOMERSET HOUSE HOTEL

In the heart of the city for 95 years
A great, inexpensive spot for visiting friends
352 Somerset St. W., at Bank
Telephone 233-7762

STUDENT NIGHTS

Tuesdays & Wednesdays

FREE POOL

12pm to 5pm DAILY

FULL Lunch Menu

D.J. Every Night

4 T.V.'S & 3 Big Screens

BEVERAGE

99¢

DRAUGHT

Specials

96 George Street in the Byward Market
562-0433

110 YORK ST., BYWARD 234-0950

HOULIHAN'S

"LADIES' NIGHT"

NO COVER CHARGE FOR WOMEN

Every Tuesday Night

15¢ WINGS TUES. & WED.
4:00 - 11:00

GOOD FOOD CHEAP! * POOL TABLES * VIDEO GAMES
AIR HOCKEY * HUGE DANCE FLOOR

TWO FLOORS OF FUN * PARTY NIGHTS
Sun, Mon, Tues, & Thurs

t h e CHARLATAN

CHARLETON'S INDEPENDENT STUDENT NEWSPAPER

VOLUME 23

ISSUE 18

JANUARY 13

1994

WHERE CAN YOU AND YOUR DATE EAT A GREAT DINNER...FOR LESS THAN $90!!!

JANUARY COUPON

Full Course Dinner
only

99¢

(max. value $13.50)
order any full course dinner at reg. price & receive a second dinner of equal or lesser value for 99¢
Not valid with any other offer. P.S.T. & G.S.T. extra (coupon expires Jan. 31, 1994)

2446 Bank at Hunt club
(Toungate Plaza)
736-6677
Reservations & Banquet
Facilities Available

The NOODLE WORKS

Ottawa South's
Finest Sunday
Brunch 10:30-2:30

FULL 3 COURSE DINNER - Soup or Salad, Fresh Baked San Francisco Sourdough Bread, Entree Selection, Spumoni Ice Cream, Coffee or Tea

FEBRUARY COUPON

Full Course Dinner
only

99¢

(max. value $13.50)
order any full course dinner at reg. price & receive a second dinner of equal or lesser value for 99¢
Not valid with any other offer. P.S.T. & G.S.T. extra (coupon valid from Feb. 1 - Feb. 28, 1994)

HOMEMADE PASTA DISHES • VEAL • CHICKEN & MORE

CRACKERS TWO

Sundays & Mondays
Sports on the Big Screen
15¢ Wings

Tuesdays
Karaoke Nite

$2.50 Wednesdays
Ladies' Night
FREE POOL for Ladies

January 13, 14, 15

The One

January 20, 21, 22

Sound Storm

175 Richmond Road Tel. 722-3201

HOME OF THE SOUTH END BLUES

TUCSON ROADHOUSE

Jan. 13
the Boogiemens
Jan. 14/15
Backtrack Blues Band
Jan. 21/22
The Joneses
(Toronto's Hottest Blues Band)

2440 Bank Street (Bank at Huntclub) Ottawa
For Entertainment information call 736-7506

Tucson's West

Jan. 13/14/15
Stone Soul Picnic
Jan. 20
The Joneses
Jan. 21/22
Tony D.

1541 Merivale Road, Ottawa
For Entertainment information call 228-6666

"The Mother of All Pizza"

Grand Central
141 George St.
233-1216

Introducing...

 Pizza & Pitcher

+

= Super Value!

only $8.95 plus taxes

ZAPHOD
BEEBLEBROX
OFTEN IMITATED, NEVER DUPLICATED

THU. JAN. 13 $5
SAM I AM
+ HEAVEN DOG

FRI. JAN. 14 (9PM) $5
LES HARDIS MOUSAILLONS

SAT. JAN. 15 (9PM) $6
RAIL T.E.C.
+ Zykotik K9

DANCING NIGHTLY *NO COVER
THE ELECTRIC BALLROOM

BINGO JET INTERNATIONAL
8 PM TUESDAYS

COMING SOON
JAN. 20 HEAD
JAN. 21 LOST DAKOTAS
JAN. 22 CORY & THE JUICE PIGS
JAN. 28, 29 GRIEVOUS ANGELS

MUSIC * BEVERAGES * ADVENTURE
27 YORK ST.

SCHADILLAC

SALOON

Ottawa's Only
Authentic
Western Saloon

Sundays - Wednesdays

BEVERAGE

$1.50 Draught SPECIALS

Thurs. Jan 20
"Lucky Ron"
NFL on the Large Screen
Come down to watch the Playoffs
Win tickets to the Superbowl
Meet Owner Mike Schad from the Philadelphia Eagles
Come see us down in the Byward Market
105 Murray St.
233-5716

SCHADILLAC RANCH

Boulet Boots
starting at $169.00

The Lowest Prices Guaranteed!
Convenient Location in the Byward Market
99 Clarence St.
562-1320

7th Annual Carleton University

CHARITY BALL and Casino

January 22, nineteen ninety four, 8 pm
Ottawa Congress Centre

tickets $20.⁰⁰ • available at the Unicentre Store, Baker Lounge, Information Carleton and Abstentions group discounts available—inquire at vendors • black tie optional • licensed, proper I.D. required • ♿

In benefit of:  the Community Foundation of Ottawa-Carleton and the Rideau Street Youth Initiative

OTTAWA
CONGRESS
CENTRE

CENTRE DES CONGRÈS
D'OTTAWA

580 CFRA

EATON

KOOL
FM 93.9

What have the services done for you?

by Matt Skinner
Charlatan Staff

Carleton's student service co-ordinators are funded out of the $80-$95 annual fee each undergraduate student pays to the Carleton University Students' Association.

With the academic year half over, The Charlatan decided to find out what the co-ordinators have done so far this year and whether they have any new plans.

This week we profile the Student Academic Action Bureau and the Gay, Lesbian and Bisexual Centre.

WAYNE ROSS STUDENT ACADEMIC ACTION BUREAU

The bureau helps address questions and concerns students have about academic issues, says co-ordinator Wayne Ross.

Some students may feel uncomfortable addressing the university's administration or may not know where to go, he says.

"A lot of people come here to get answers to those questions, like 'How do I drop a course?', 'What does it mean if I drop a course?', 'What happens if my marks fall below this level?'," says Ross.

"I can answer some of those questions, but most often I direct students to the people who have the answers," he says.

If the student's problem is of a pressing nature, such as one involving deadlines, Ross says he can sometimes speed up the issue by talking to faculty members or administrators who can help the student.

Ross says this is the first year a full-time co-ordinator has been hired to run the bureau.

In previous years the New University Government chair was also responsible for running SAAB.

Ross says he thinks more students have made use of the bureau this year.

He attributes this to public relations and advertising.

"I'm not a lobbyist, nor am I an advocate," says Ross, explaining why the bureau does not lobby against issues such as tuition hikes.

But he says he still thinks the bureau serves students well.

"It's an incredible asset, everything is confidential. Use it, it's there, it's yours, you have every right to it, and I'm more than happy to help you," says Ross, addressing the student body.

He says students don't need an appointment to see him — they can just walk in.

PETER NOGALO GAY, LESBIAN, BI- SEXUAL CENTRE CO-ORDINATOR

Peter Nogalo, co-ordinator of the Gay, Lesbian, Bisexual Centre, says the centre provides support and a safe place for people when they're uncomfortable or when they're first coming out.

"They have a place to come and talk to people, meet people," he says. The centre holds a "coming-out group" every Monday at 6

he quickly put on his clothes and got into a car that was waiting outside Alumni Theatre.

Black writes in his autobiography that "the performer had fled to the showers and his co-producers had removed the till and deserted the gate."

But Bond, 51, now a director of TV movies including several Star Trek episodes, disagrees with his colleagues.

"(Black) was treasurer of Sock 'n' Buskin. I was president," he says. But he added, "This is so old I don't remember it... I think he was treasurer, but I could be wrong."

"I just remember it was a lot of fun," says Aubrey, 49, who is now a Toronto-based actor. "I'm quite certain that Tim (Bond) has it right. I think Conrad was treasurer. If Conrad wants to think he was president, it's sort of funny, isn't it?" he says. □

Nogalo says centre is open for all.

Nogalo says this is the first year the centre has had a full-time co-ordinator and a budget of $30,000 comparable to that of other CUSA services.

He says the centre also operates a resource centre which has books available to students for essays or personal use. The centre purchases literature on topics such as HIV and AIDS, sexuality and spirituality. About $3,500 goes towards the centre's resource centre, which is on par with previous years.

The GLB centre works with other groups on campus to bring in authors and other people to speak to students on campus throughout the year, says Nogalo.

In February the centre holds Bisexual, Gay, Lesbian Awareness Days or BGLAD, a week of events devoted to issues relevant to the centre.

This year's events will include workshops, speakers, and films aimed at educating students.

Unique to this year's BGLAD events will be a cultural night which will include a dance and party on campus, says Nogalo.

"That'll be something that has never been done before. I think it will be fun," he says.

Nogalo says that while the centre is not an organization with an activist mandate, it does have an activist role.

He says the centre will, upon request, provide groups with anti-homophobia and anti-heterosexism workshops. He says the centre will be speaking to President Farquhar later next month.

On a day-to-day basis, the centre provides people with free condoms, pamphlets, information and support, says Nogalo, adding that the centre is available for all Carleton students, regardless of their sexual orientation. □

Ross says he's no lobbyist or activist.

BLACK cont'd from page 3

bum.)

Angus and Maltby say Black was only in the audience, and wasn't a member of Sock 'n' Buskin.

Angus says he and Maltby knew Black, but weren't actually friends.

"He was the jerk who hung around the tunnel junction with a three-piece suit," Angus says.

Black says in his letter that Angus "had absolutely nothing to do with (the production), other than being a complainant who felt he had not received value for money for the ticket he had purchased." Angus admits that he was only in the audience, but says he knew the performers.

Black says in his autobiography that tickets were $2.50 each, but Angus's letter claimed they were sold for $5.

Maltby says after he appeared nude

APPLE SADDLERY
The Largest Western Boot Store in Canada.
INNES ROAD JUST EAST OF THE 417 (NEAR THE PRICE CLUB)

by Brent Dowdall
Charlatan Staff

One thing about the Carleton University Students' Association council this year—it certainly has developed stamina.

And it certainly was required during the numbing six-hour extravaganza on Dec. 2. Five weeks later on Jan. 11, councillors did it all again, but this time it only took three and a half hours.

The festivities began early Dec. 2 when Derek Zeisman, the general manager of the Rideau River Residence Association, announced he would not bring a motion of censure against CUSA President Lucy Watson, as he had promised the last council meeting, Nov. 16. Zeisman said a censure is a "constitutional warning, which lets the president know the council's not happy with her actions."

He said he didn't bring forward the motion because he thought it wouldn't pass. Then he spent 20 minutes telling everyone why he thought it should.

Zeisman said Watson hasn't kept council informed and has exercised poor judgment on issues such as changes to the structure of CUSA. As evidence, he cited the appointment of the New University Government chair, who has been elected in previous years, and the long battle over the unionization of CUSA employees.

"There has been a bad tone set on this council since day one," he said.

He then finished by apologizing to those councillors who would have supported his motion and "condemned" those who would have opposed it for falling in line with the executive.

When Watson got a chance to respond, she suggested she would have tried to address Zeisman's concerns had he come to her.

The Dec. 2 meeting also had a pas-

CUSA council meeting-a-thon

sionate speech from finance commissioner René Faucher.

He wanted council to approve $500 to spend on architect's drawings for renovations to the first floor of the Unicentre. These would involve moving the arcade, billiards hall and Copy Shop.

"Let's get something down on paper that we can actually debate," an ardent Faucher told council. "This is my fourth year here and every year it's talk. Let's talk about the Unicentre building. Well, let's do something about the Unicentre building."

Council approved the $500.

Then the fireworks were re-ignited over another always-flammable topic, the referendum on a fee increase for the Canadian Federation of Students.

On Dec. 1 CUSA's constitutional board ruled 3-2 that CUSA's chief electoral officer, James Rilet, violated a bylaw by denying the No committee the right to campaign during the referendum because the committee had not been officially approved by the CEO.

In short, the referendum is overturned and won't be brought up again this year.

Council chair Dave Gregory ruled that since the CEO is an employee of a unionized association, the matter was staff-related, and council had to go in camera. They were gone for two hours.

And, as if things weren't bad enough, even game show hosts are writing nasty things about CUSA. Last fall Watson complained to Jeopardy host Alex Trebek for making a reference to "the dreaded Carleton" on his show earlier in the fall, when a University of Ottawa student appeared on the show.

On Jan. 11, Watson, back from either a southern hotspot or a phenomenal holiday under a tanning lamp, passed around Trebek's response to her complaint, saying "I'm not sure whether you should laugh or get angry."

In the letter, addressed "Dear Lucy," Trebek says his comment about Carleton on the show referred to a sports rivalry between the University of Ottawa and Carleton, and wasn't a comment on Carleton's academic standards.

He chastised Watson, writing, "as a student leader, you should be more careful in your knee-jerk reactions. Had you done your homework and paid closer attention to the facts, you would have realized that you have clearly taken offense where none was intended."

"No reasonable person [not our underline] would have interpreted my comments as a serious put-down of Carleton, particularly one that would have a 'damaging impact' on the school. If any retraction of comments is due, I would think an apology from you [not our underline] might be in order."

Gee, he seems like such a nice guy when he's on Jeopardy.

Also on Jan. 11, council got around to passing the writ of general election for Feb. 8-10. Once again three zillion posters will invade every building on campus in that annual search for the new mesiah.

Included in the writ are two referendum questions. The first asks if students would like to pay $1 to continue funding a community legal clinic at the University of Ottawa, where Carleton students can get help with legal problems.

As for the other referendum question, the NHL's newest expansion team is Carleton... well, not quite. But students will be asked if they wish to pay $1 a year to create and maintain a Carleton hockey team to play in the College Hockey League, against teams such as Algonquin and St. Lawrence College.

Council also gave $600 to the men's and women's rowing teams because nine rowers have been offered a chance to train with the Canadian National Rowing Team. Because the department of athletics doesn't fund the rowing club at all, the rowers must do their own fundraising. The $600 is a portion of the team's total expenses, which include travel, equipment and coaching.

This came after vice-president internal Rob Jamieson called for a "revolution" to overthrow the tyrants over at the department of athletics for not giving the rowers enough money to train with the team. Power to the people. □

Watson tries to explain how she lost on Jeopardy.

ALEX BODNAR

Constitution board overturns referendum

by John Steinbachs
Charlatan Staff

The results of a referendum held Nov. 9-10 have been overturned.

The constitutional board of the Carleton University Students' Association has ruled the Canadian Federation of Students and the Canadian Federation of Students-Ontario will not receive any extra money from Carleton students.

The referendum question asked whether or not Carleton students want to pay $4 more each in annual fees paid to CFS and CFS-O, raising each group's levy by $2. CFS presently gets $4 from each student, and CFS-O gets $3.

Students voted 669 to 645 in favor of the hikes, with 58 spoiled ballots.

The board annulled the results of the November referendum because CUSA's chief electoral officer, James Rilet, did not allow the No committee to take part in the campaign.

The board voted 3 to 2 in favor of overturning the referendum. Rob Jamieson, vice-president internal and Theresa Cowan, director of services, voted against overturning the results. Rob Bennett, an arts and social science councillor, and two of the boards student members Cindy Frzer and Chaminda Thotahewa, voted to overturn the results.

After missing the Nov. 2 deadline to register as a committee with Rilet, a group of students supporting the No side were not allowed to officially campaign in the referendum, including speaking at all-candidate meetings and putting up posters.

John Edwards, a CUSA arts and social science representative, filed a challenge with the constitutional board, protesting the exclusion of the No campaign from the referendum. Edwards says he felt there should have been a No committee to ensure students were informed of both sides of the issue.

Edwards also says he believes there were discrepancies in the number of spoiled ballots which could have been avoided if a No committee member would have been allowed to question vote counts in the scrutineer's office.

Because the No committee was not recognized, its members could not question the vote counts.

Edwards says he has spoken with a No committee member who was in the scrutineer's office and witnessed many "borderline" No ballots counted as spoiled.

Rilet says the constitution says officially recognized committees have the right to have a scrutineer present to ensure accurate vote counts.

Rilet says he didn't allow the No committee to campaign because no members of the committee showed up for a meeting advertised to elect their chair.

Edwards says the meeting was advertised in The Charlatan but "way back in the paper, past where I usually read."

He says the unofficial No committee should still have been allowed to campaign.

"If the committee misses the first meeting the question is, does that mean they won't exist at all or does it mean that the committee should be allowed to exist but not receive funding?"

Rilet says the constitution is "not specific at all" on this point and it was up to him to rule on the issue.

"I ruled one way, and they (the constitutional board) ruled another," he says.

CUSA's constitutional board held Edwards' complaint and released a report to CUSA council on Dec. 2 which criticized the decision to exclude the No committee from the campaign. Edwards says on Dec. 7 the board released another report which recommended the referendum be overturned.

"It's all a matter of the way you see it and I guess they didn't see it my way," says Rilet.

Rob Jamieson, CUSA's vice-president internal, says there is no law in the constitution regarding whether a committee can be stopped from campaigning, but he backed up Rilet's right to make decisions. "I mean, that's what we pay the guy for," says Jamieson.

Rilet says part of his job is to interpret the electoral code, which is part of CUSA's constitution, but the constitutional board has the power to overrule his rulings.

Jamieson says he doesn't think the question will come up again in this February's general election.

Jocelyn Charron, communications director for the CFS, says the federation will not be affected by the loss of revenue from Carleton because "we didn't budget for it this year."

Charron says the CFS would still like to receive more money from Carleton students so they can serve students better through lobbying campaigns.

Jamieson says as far as he knows, there won't be a referendum in the near future.

The CFS researches student issues, acts as a lobby group for students and provides services like Travel Cuts for students.

It is also a member of the International Union of Students, which helps defend student rights. □

NATIONAL AFFAIRS

Quebec students get tiny tuition hike

by Michael Mainville
Charlatan Staff

Despite the announcement of a surprisingly low tuition hike in Quebec, some university students remain concerned about the rising cost of tuition in their province.

On Dec. 15, Lucienne Robillard, Quebec's minister of education and science, announced a tuition-increase ceiling of 1.9 per cent for all Quebec post-secondary students. This means tuition increases for 1994-95 at Quebec universities must not exceed this limit.

The government decided on the increase using guidelines taken from the Consumer Price Index, a measure of the rise in prices of common consumer goods and services over a fixed time period. It is used by governments to determine the annual increase in the cost of living.

A maximum tuition hike of 1.9 per cent would raise the maximum full-time undergraduate tuition from $1,632 to $1,663.

Marc Luz, president of the Students' Society of McGill, says students are guardedly happy, but disappointed the Quebec government did not undertake a study of tuition fees.

"The government chose to avoid the question and not increase tuition dramatically purely for political reasons," says Luz, referring to the upcoming provincial election in Quebec. "The government didn't want student protest."

Luz says he thinks the Quebec government is hoping to win the student vote by lowering the tuition increase after its initial proposal.

The ministry's original plan to raise tuition by 51 per cent would have brought Quebec tuition fees up to the Canadian average, says Pierre Villeneuve, the education and science minister's press agent. However, Villeneuve says the hike was set below the first estimate because the sudden increase would have been too sharp for students to handle.

"The intention (to raise tuition to the Canadian average) is always there. Every year we will review the decision," says Villeneuve.

But Luz says the government is trying to take the emphasis off the broader issues, such as underfunding and student poverty, by focusing on the tuition hike.

While the increase was less than expected, Luz says he thinks the Quebec government will compensate by cutting funding to universities, a more subtle way of reducing costs.

"The hike will affect all students (who are) not of the upper class," says Berger. "It means you have to shoplift more than usual."

"Universities are becoming less important to the Quebec government," he says. "We are trying to make this a priority."

Roy Berger, a third-year sociology student at Concordia University in Montreal, agrees. "The hike will affect all students (who are) not of the upper class," says Berger. "It means you have to shoplift more than usual."

The hike will have major effects on students in Montreal, probably causing many to drop out, says Berger. He says he thinks the Quebec government will continue to raise tuition a little every year, slowly pushing people out of post-secondary education.

Kristine Haselsteiner, vice-president external for Carleton's student association, says she hopes the low tuition increase for Quebec students could influence the Ontario NDP government's impending decision concerning tuition hikes.

"I think it shows a step in the right direction," says Haselsteiner. "The fact that Quebec students have lower tuition is really good for them."

She says even if the low hike was politically motivated, it shows students can influence the government's decision.

"We have to realize we are a power and we can institute change even if it's not an election year," she says.

With this year's tuition increases, the gap between the cost of post-secondary education in Quebec and Ontario seems poised to grow.

Last August, Dave Cooke, the Ontario minister of education, said there would be "substantial" tuition increases for 1994-95 of higher than seven per cent.

In the past, the difference between tuition increases in Ontario and Quebec was not nearly so drastic. Last year, tuition-increase ceilings in Quebec and Ontario were six and seven per cent respectively.

Ontario students pay more overall for tuition than Quebec students. On the average, a full-time arts student in Ontario paid $2,372 for tuition this year while a student in Quebec paid $1,632.

Students fear massive funding cuts in Alberta

by Arn Keeling and Ryan Nakashima
Charlatan Staff

The impending $300-million cut to education funding in Alberta will be "like chopping off one of your legs," says Terence Filewych, president of the University of Alberta Student Union.

"It's going to affect the quality of education," says Filewych.

On Nov. 24, Alberta Education Minister Halvar Jonson announced in a press release plans to reduce government funding to education by five per cent this year. This first round of cuts are planned to take effect April 1.

This year's cuts are part of an overall plan to cut government spending by 20 per cent in all areas over three years, says Filewych.

But Filewych says the $300 million in proposed cuts would actually remove 24 per cent of the budget for education.

According to the government's press release, the April 1 deadline was set so that universities, school boards and their staffs' unions could decide for themselves what areas would be cut. The government encouraged education administrators to cut the five per cent from salaries and benefits.

Murray Fraser, president of the University of Calgary, says administrators and students at the province's universities have met with the government in round-table discussions over the past two months to discuss the funding cuts.

He says since he is unsure how severe the cuts to the university will be, he can't say where the university will cut.

But the amalgamation of faculties at the U of A and a program of early retirement for staff at the U of C are already being implemented as the universities anticipate the proposed cuts.

Student protests at both the province's major universities have been vocal. About 500 University of Calgary students rallied on campus Nov. 24 to coincide with a visit from Jack Ady, the Alberta minister of advanced education and career development.

They chanted "Stop the cuts" and "Education not deregulation," waving placards with slogans like, "Keep the (tuition) cap," and "Education not corporate buy-outs," according to the U of C student newspaper, The Gauntlet.

On Dec. 7, about 750 U of A students rallied at the university and heard speeches from both Filewych and the university's president Paul Davenport, reported The Gateway, the U of A student paper.

Filewych told protestors to "demand this government prioritize the budget. Across-the-board cuts have no foresight or vision."

Davenport also said the cuts could mean enrolment would drop by "2,000 or 3,000 in three or four years."

Sandra Halme, a public affairs officer for the U of A, says there was an internal review of how the cuts will affect the university, but the administration is not prepared to comment until February.

In February, the government will release its budget and make clearer how much the cuts to the province's education budget will affect post-secondary institutions, said Siobhán Thomas, The Gauntlet's news editor. Thomas says there will be board of governors meeting Jan. 28 at the U of C to discuss the cuts.

Fraser says the increased demand for university education in Alberta, coupled with cuts to education funding, will put pressure on the province's education system. Fraser says the U of C administration has been supportive of student efforts to protest the proposed cuts.

"We are together on this issue," says Fraser. "We are concerned with the quality of education and access to education."

Filewych says the administration at the U of A has also been vocal in its support of students.

"Our president has said openly that these cuts go too far too fast," he says.

Filewych says although he believes that cuts are imminent, he hopes there's still time to keep them to a minimum.

"I'm not a pessimist," says Filewych. He says he is trying to convince the government and the people of Alberta that education is a priority.

With files from The Gauntlet, University of Calgary and The Gateway, University of Alberta.

Teacher Training in Australia or Britain

Obtain Graduate Qualifications in Primary and Secondary Education that will allow you to teach in Ontario

3 or 4 year graduates may apply

Information may be obtained by contacting:

K.O.M. CONSULTANTS

P.O. BOX 60524

Mountain Plaza Postal Outlet

Hamilton Ontario

L9C 7N7

Telephone or Facsimile

(905) 318-8200

Carleton UNIVERSITY

Library

LIBRARY HOURS

1994 Winter Session

Monday, January 3, 1994 - Friday, April 29, 1994

	Building Open	Circulation Desk	Information Desk
Monday to Thursday	8 am - 11 pm	8:30 am - 11 pm	9 am - 9 pm
Friday	8 am - 11 pm	8:30 am - 11 pm	9 am - 5 pm
Saturday	10 am - 11 pm	10 am - 11 pm	10 am - 5 pm
Sunday	10 am - 11 pm	10 am - 11 pm	12 noon - 5 pm

For current Library Hours, call 788-5621 or enter HELP HOURS in CUBE.

NOTE:

Easter Hours will be issued at a later date. Library Hours may change on Friday, April 29, the last day of exams.

The UnClassifieds

RIDES

I go to Toronto every other weekend. Need a lift? $30.00 return. Call Kelly 231-3364.

FOR SALE/RENT

Female roommate wanted for large, bright house; share with one other, close to Carleton & bus routes, $426.00/month + utilities. Phone 725-9166

For rent: 2 Bedroom cottage 45 minutes from downtown. Dishwasher/wood stove. $500 + utilities. 729-1299

LOST & FOUND

Lost - Blue corduroy baseball cap. Canadian Ski Patrol System written on front panel. 1990 First Aid Competition Kawartha Zone. High sentimental value. Lost on Jan. 3rd., Baker's Lounge or 416 Southam Hall. If found please call 233-2304 or leave message at 565-9819.

Found: outside uncentre, Jan. 6, electronic device. If you lost it, call 236-6912. Leave name, phone # and identify item.

WANTED / JOBS

Wanted: The Big Nasty Rock and Roll Adventure. Slik Toxik's self produced comic book, drawn by Dave Mercel. Will pay cash for copies. Call Alex 731-0369.

Earn up to $700 weekly from home! Rush SASE to Clasin, 2407A - 515 St Laurent Blvd., Ottawa, Ont K1K 3X5

DAYTONA: The best!! We're local and looking for Carleton Reps. The best oceanfront Hotel on the beach with 7 days 6 nights, highway coach transport and non-stop activities, over 12 buses last year, earn $5 and free trips with all promo materials provided, sound interesting?? 5 Seasons 567-4565.

Volunteer Positions: Two Event Coordinators needed to develop a new fund-raising event for Kids Help Phone in Ottawa. Applications due Jan 17. Fax: (416) 921-9656. More details available at Career Centre.

Are you a Q-yr masters student or a masters student now who did a Q-yr? If so, interested in hearing from you. Box Q-yr.

SERVICES / AVAILABLE

SPRINGBREAK '94 - Daytona or bust! Party at the world's most famous beach with Canada's only student travel company - BREAKAWAY TOURS (Reg 2422707), $209 + 60 tix for bus $ hotel or U-drive for $109 + tix. Call Chns 526-0776 or 564-0564.

Having trouble writing papers and essays? Have difficulty with grammar, spelling and/or organizing your thoughts clearly on paper? Want to improve your writing skills and raise your grades? Ask for Dorothy, B.A. English Language and Literature, Teaching ESL experience. 232-8835.

Legal problems? Landlord-tenant matters, small claims court, provincial offences (traffic court) & summary convictions. Call Jacquard Legal Services 247-1915.

INTERNATIONAL STUDENTS: DV-1 Greencard Program. Sponsored by the U.S. Immigration Dept. Greencards provide permanent resident status, in USA. Citizens of almost all countries are allowed to take part. Students, tourists, illegals may apply - wherever they live. Chance: 1 in 14. For info & forms: New Era Legal Services, 20231 Stagg St., Canoga Park, CA 91306, USA. Tel: (818)998-4425; (818)882-9681, Monday - Sunday: 8 a.m. - 11p.m.

Essays and Theses - laserprinted - $1.60 per page. Also available - resume writing, editing, writing tutoring, charts, graphics & tables. Fax & pick-up service can be arranged. Please call 721-8770.

Public Speaking Workshop starting Friday, January 21, 1994. Register Now. For more information contact Counselling and Student Life Services 788-6600.

Applying for a summer job? Running in student elections? Want to strengthen your leadership skills? Then the leadership seminar is for you. Register today! Enrolment is limited. Contact Counselling and Student Life Services, room 501 Uncentre, 788-6600 for more information. Registration deadline - January 21, 1994.

SPRINGBREAK '94 is around the corner. No place to go? Join the biggest party in CUBA only $399 + tix get return flight + meals + 7nits. Hotel + "Kodak" camera + "Koala Springs" party + chance to win "Jeep Y!" + more + more... Daytona Beach $99 U-drive or $199 Bus + tix. (Ont. Reg. #04106262) Call 724-9974 or 725-1821

POTTERY CLASSES - Hand-building & wheel-throwing starting 18 + 19 January. Instructor: Debra Ducharme, full-time production potter & sculptor, 15 yrs. experience. Location: Private studio, walking distance to Carleton. Cost: $75.00. Six week session, incl. materials & class time. Pre-registration: Limit 6 per class. Phone: 730-0394.

Thesis Writer's Work Group starting soon. Contact Counselling and Student Life Services 788-6600.

JITSU. Enjoyable training which provides effective defence for men and women. Techniques suitable for law enforcement. Sun 5pm-7pm, Wed. 4pm-6pm. Combatives Room. New session starts Jan. 5. New members always welcome. Contact: Derry 523-1507

Word Processing. Accuracy and Deadlines Guaranteed. Central Location. 233-8874.

Word Processing. Accurate, professional, prompt, economical. Reports, essays, term papers, transcripts, theses. Reasonable editing provided and grammar corrected free. 731-9534

Live it up this Spring Break in PANAMA CITY BEACH, FLORIDA - the hottest Spring Break location today!! Activities galore, party till daybreak!! High quality beachfront accommodation. You drive for only $119, $259 with our transportation. For more information and bookings call 523-9640.

Studied for an A...got a D? Join one of the many study skills workshops offered by Counselling and Student Life Services. For more information call 788-6600

MESSAGES

The original Gilligan's Island Fan Club. P.O. Box 25311 Salt Lake City, Utah. 84125-0311 U.S.A. $15 membership fee includes newsletter, T-shirt and membership card. Box 22.

I am going to the Philippines during February & March. I would appreciate if anyone who is from the Philippines or has travelled there can offer some advice about where to go. Contact Jay Flesher @ 723-7868.

Do you like doing the "disco thang" (Spanky's Broadstreet)? Aspiring socialite seeks other avid party girls who enjoy dancing, drinking & man-watching. Don't delay, write to-day! Box Fun Awaits.

Brenda Smith, call Peter Smith now that you are at Carleton. You've got my card, if you lost it place an ad here.

MAN TO WOMAN

Your presence is requested at the Carleton University Charity Ball! A graduate student is available to go with you to the Congress Centre on Saturday, January 22. My background is academic. I am multilingual and hold several degrees. Pleasant, struggling, idealistic and very determined to get that Ph.D. My objective is to locate intelligent women who are fun to go out with. The ideal person would have an interesting background, i.e. well-read, widely-travelled or studying in a creative field, e.g. architecture or ballet. You should be tall, slim, Caucasian, with blue eyes, very long straight blond or brown hair and have a terrific smile. Interested correspondents should send a brief description, color photograph and telephone number to PO Box 9173, Station T, Ottawa, Ontario K1G 3T9. In conclusion, good times await...

The UnClassifieds

Message (30 or words or less)

Name

Student No.

Box No.

Looking to buy or sell something? Need to make an announcement? Or maybe you're intrigued at the thought of having your own personal ad. The Charlatan Unclassifieds are a great way to reach over 20,000 people every week. Just fill out the form and bring in into the Charlatan office, 531 Uncentre.

Unclassified Rates

Student Rates $3.21

Non Student $6.42

Personal Ads Free

These are per issue prices and GST has been included.

To get the student rate you must have your student card.

Weather's chilly and the CUSA car is stalled

"CUSA council is like a Hyundai in a winter storm in Ottawa. It goes nowhere."

Thanks to René Faucher, CUSA's finance commissioner, for this apt description. We couldn't have said it better ourselves.

It's January and CUSA hacks are already preparing for the February elections for next year's council. But we can't let them forget what has happened over the past four months.

A review of their actions should serve as a reminder that this year isn't over yet. Perhaps it'll also get people a little more interested in an organization that has an operating budget of over $2.2 million, more than half of which comes from students.

There is much to jeer and little to cheer in council's behavior this year.

We could spend years on what went on in the summer, with all the wrangling over a union for CUSA employees, but besides that, there's more than enough fodder for discussion since September.

There have been problems with the council from the top down. For example, what was the holdup with finding a new safety commissioner? The position wasn't filled until Nov. 16. The only explanation for why it took so long was CUSA President Lucy Watson's weak excuse that she was busy in September and "the month just disappeared." Looks like October just disappeared too.

Then came the referendum asking for an increase in funding for the Canadian Federation of Students on Nov. 9 and 10.

The "Yes" side won, but several factions cried foul. Now, the referendum has been overturned. But the way in which overturning the referendum was handled brings questions about the way the council is structured.

When council was debating the issue they used the CUSA constitution to take the meeting behind closed doors. Some members of council claimed it was because it was a staff-related matter, which according to the CUSA constitution, can't be discussed in an open meeting.

But, it could also be argued that certain employees, especially those in managerial positions, need to be directly answerable to the public. Having that clause in the constitution makes it a little too easy for council to cry "staff-related matter," and run and hide whenever a sensitive issue comes up.

At least council's constitutional board overturned the referendum, as it should have been.

The CUSA Hyundai isn't really going nowhere. It's just going wherever it's going really slowly, (and sometimes going there in reverse.)

That no one seems aware of its destination is one of the biggest problems with the council. It's hard for a group of people to learn their jobs and make real change, all in only one year.

It's also too bad that whatever good the council does accomplish is usually covered up by all the foolishness that goes on at the meetings.

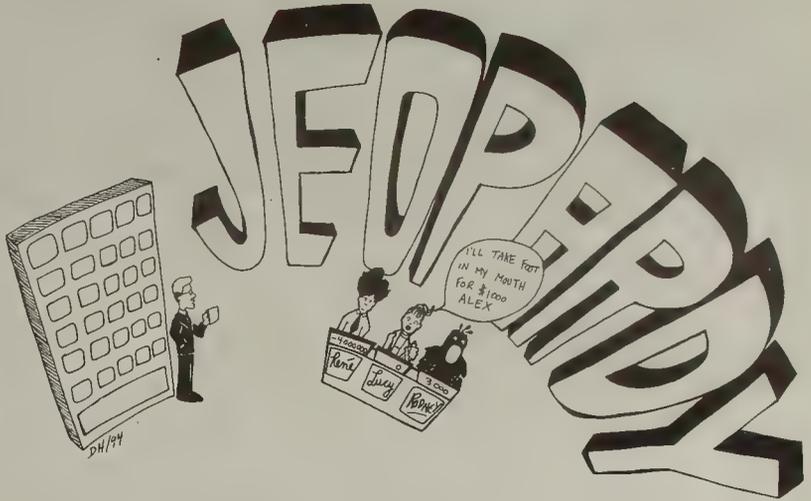

Foolishness like arts and social sciences representative Todd McAllister sitting through part of a meeting wearing the head from Rodney the Raven's costume. Surely time could be spent at meetings more productively.

While the length of the average CUSA meeting at least indicates that people want to talk, too much of it is spent on petty bureaucracy. For example, at one meeting the placement of agenda items was debated for 45 minutes.

Whatever you want to blame the stalled Hyundai on, whether it be personality conflicts, unnecessary politicking or a problem inherent in the structure of CUSA itself, the point is, that old CUSA Hyundai just isn't running very well. Soon, we'll be making a trade-in on it.

Let's hope we don't get stuck with a Pinto council next year.

RW & SK

ESSAY

Music makes the world go 'round

by David Dunn

David Dunn is a first-year arts student who aspires to be a rock lyricist or a construction worker.

Where does the true essence of a person lie? Perhaps I should first mention that "essence" is intended only to impart its most tangible associations -- I do not wish to discuss the soul as a spiritual vehicle.

Rather, I would like to establish an entirely new set of parameters and criteria with which to judge people within our burgeoning theme-park culture.

Now, let's rid ourselves of that nasty preoccupation with the eyes as windows to the soul. Windows? Believe me when I say your windows could use some soapy water and a squeegee. Your eyes cry when you want to laugh, and laugh when you'd rather cry; they fidget when you need them to be still; sometimes they'll say too little, but often times too much; and they can be green when you're raging red, and blood-red when you're blue.

No need for such bombastic complexities! Our essence is much simpler and obvious than these quasi-intellectual ramblings may lead you to believe.

You (as both consumer and connoisseur) reveal more about yourself than you might otherwise care to with each trip to H.M.V. or every swap at Bonehead's: our true essence lies in our musical taste.

Witness the evolution of the importance of music and song, its flourishing within individual communities, and later, the flourishing of various styles and individual techniques.

Music existed for centuries before the great Christian liberator Pope Gregory got his missionary hands on it, shortly thereafter incorporating the chant in Christianized pagan ritual.

Music remained relatively simple for centuries until a beleaguered Frankish battalion (from present-day France) was overheard singing an account of the ass-whipping they had received at the hands of fiery Spanish Moslems.

Music and song had transcended church boundaries and reached the peasantry, the commoners. It would forever after represent a means of pleasure and unison, more elaborate in composition and lyrically poetic in style, and more intensely personal.

Still not convinced? Consider this: why do you beeline to the stereo and fumble through the record collection of anyone you've recently met?

You thumb through the jewel cases as you would your recipe book, looking for something to whet your insatiable musical appetite, and perhaps reason to draw them into your fold. You utter pronouncements of approval ("Cool!"), or disapproval (commonly acknowledged with mental footnotes: the guy is a zucchini -- at first light I break for the door.)

It follows that music alone can tear down boundaries or manifest itself in unbridgeable societal chasms.

To wit: you may be shocked to find that your new friend, about whose coffee table is strewn copies of Spin and Rolling Stone, owns a Cole Porter album, or several of Tchaikovsky's symphonies. Or you may be delighted to find that Jane's Addiction disc, or an ABBA compilation.

Aw, sure! As citizens of a democratic society we are certainly entitled to preferences, as guaranteed by Trudeau's Charter of Rights and Freedoms, but that doesn't exclude you from being cast into musical exile.

What's the bottom line? We find solidarity in music. Our unions and communities, and certainly our friendships, need more than common political ideologies, or favorite sports teams, to maintain good karma and keep a virtually unshakable peace. (You think that's a load of hooley? What, then, do you make of national anthems?)

Together we stand, and divided we disco: it's really that simple. But! If you still don't believe me, I'll visit your apartment, and we can rationally debate this further.

I ask of you only two things: a nightly stocked cabinet of liquors and fridge of beer, and that you lock up your Billie Holiday or Nina Simone 'cause I'm a Robert Plant fan.

LETTERS

the CHARLATAN CARLETON'S INDEPENDENT STUDENT NEWSPAPER

January 13, 1994

VOLUME 23 NUMBER 18

Editor-in-Chief Mo Gannon
Production Manager Kevin McKay
Business Manager Jill Perry

NEWS

Editors Mario Carlucci
Karin Jordan
Contributors Brent Dowdall
Blayne Haggart
Ryan Nakashima
John Stelnbachs
Volunteer Co-ordinator Johanna Ciszewski

NATIONAL AFFAIRS

Editor Arn Keeling
Contributors Michael Mainville
Ryan Nakashima

FEATURES

Editor Andrea Smith
Supplement Editor Stephanie Garrison
Contributors Andre Bellefeuille
Rori Caffrey
Kim Brunhuber
Johanna Ciszewski
Arn Keeling
Billie Littlechild
Alison Theodore
Sarah Richardson
Kira Vermond

SPORTS

Editor Steven Vesely
Contributors Bram S. Aaron
Derek DeCioet
Richard Scott
Kevin Restivo
Carl Sunstrum
Ryan Ward

ARTS

Editor Blayne Haggart
Contributors Stephanie Garrison
Noel Germundson
Doug Johnson
Tim O'Connor
Mike Peters
Karolina Srutek
Jane Tattersall
Adam Seddon

OP/ED

Editor Sheila Keenan
Contributors David Dunn
Ryan Ward

VISUALS

Photo Editor Tim O'Connor
Photo Assistant Andre Bellefeuille
Contributors Joanne Capuani
Dean Tomlinson

Graphics Co-ordinator Joel Kenneth Grant
Graphics Assistants David Hodges
Mike Rappaport
Bram Aaron
Contributors Sarah Abernethy
Nika Berdichevskaya
Frank Campbell
Jennifer Davies
Cover Andre Bellefeuille

The Charlatan's photos are produced using the Carleton University Students' Association Photo Service

PRODUCTION

Production Assistant Kim Alf
Contributors Bram S. Aaron
Gladys Bichat
Joel Kenneth Grant
Richard G.D. Scott
Karolina Srutek
Ryan Ward
Caron Watt
Brandie Weikle
Tanya Workman

CIRCULATION 14,000

Circulation Dave Carpenter
Joellen Waishe

ADVERTISING 788-3580

Ad Manager Karen Richardson

The Charlatan, Carleton University's weekly newsmagazine, is an editorially and financially autonomous journal, published weekly during the fall and winter term and monthly during the summer. Charlatan Publications Incorporated, Ottawa, Ontario, a non-profit corporation registered under the Canadian Corporations Act, is the publisher of The Charlatan. Editorial content is the sole responsibility of editorial staff members, but may not reflect the beliefs of its members. Contents are copyright © 1991. Nothing may be duplicated in any way without the prior written permission of the Editor-in-Chief. All rights reserved. ISSN 0315-1859

Subscriptions are available at a cost of $40 for individuals and $50 for institutions including GST. National advertising for The Charlatan is handled through Canadian University Press Media Services (Campus Plus), 73 Richmond St. W., 4th Floor, Toronto, Ontario, M5H 1Z4; phone: (416) 481-7283.

Members of the board: Ken Drever, Mo Gannon, Anna Gibbons, David Hodges, Fouad Kanaan, Warren Kinzella, Mark LaFreniere, Yvonne Potter.

The Charlatan Room 531 Unicentre Carleton University
Ottawa, Ontario K1S 5B6 Telephone: (613) 788-6680

Conrad Black not responsible for naked man . . .

Editor:

One of Carleton's best-known alumni, Conrad Black, recently published his autobiography. Unfortunately, it misrepresents his activities at Carleton.

While Black was at Carleton in 1964, several students perpetrated one of the greatest student pranks of all time. They announced a dramatic production called "1001 Freudian Delights," and promised it would be obscene. On that basis, they sold about 300 tickets at $5 each.

When the curtain rose, a brief introduction announced the first-ever appearance of "The King's Camel-Leopard." Then a nude man appeared, painted from head to toe and growled at the audience. He left the stage, the curtain went down and the audience waited for more. But there was no more -- the organizers had skipped out the back door.

In his book, Black claims to have been one of the organizers of this event. He made the same claim to Peter Newman, who reported it in his biography of Black, The Establishment Man.

It's time to set the record straight on this. Black had nothing to do with "1001 Freudian Delights." He was not involved in any way.

I was there and I knew everyone involved. (I even bought a $5 ticket.) The people behind "1001 Freudian Delights" were Larry Aubrey, Tim Bond, Kent Doe and Michael Maltby. They were leading lights in the campus drama club, Sock 'n' Buskin.

Black was not, as he claims in his autobiography, "president of the club." He wasn't even a member. In 1965, a year later, he was involved for a short time with a different group, the New Theatre Club, but it had nothing to do with "1001 Freudian Delights."

To confirm my memory of this, I have consulted with others who attended Carleton in 1964, including Maltby who was the painted man on stage. All agree. Black may have attended the show, but he was not otherwise involved.

"1001 Freudian Delights" was the most entertaining event of 1964 at Carleton and I am very disappointed that Conrad Black has attempted to appropriate the memory of a great prank.

Ian Angus
BA 1970

Editor's Note:

After receiving Angus's letter, we faxed it to Conrad Black for his comments. He sent The Charlatan the following response.

. . . or "Yellow Submarine" either

Editor:

In response to Ian Angus's letter, "1001 Freudian Delights" was carried out under the auspices of the New Theatre Club which was set up after Tim Bond, Michael Maltby and Larry Aubrey were accused of plagiarism at the club where they were formerly involved.

They asked me to be president of their club and it was in that capacity that I was called as a witness at the honor committee hearing presided over by Gordon Ritchie, Canada's subsequent free trade negotiator, who has already written to me confirming the accuracy of my version of those hearings.

While I was aware of the planning of the program, it is true that I had nothing to do with its organizing nor in my book did I claim to have anything to do with organizing it.

I will not be held accountable for what Peter Newman wrote. I never suggested that the song "Yellow Submarine" was played, merely "a 45 rpm Beatles record." I gave evidence at the hearing to help exonerate the organizers of the charge of wrongdoing, as did Professor Fred Cedarstrom.

Angus, I may say, had absolutely nothing to do with it, other than being a complainant who felt he had not received value for money for the ticket he had purchased.

I felt my defence of the authors of the scheme justified my reference which was "A theatre club of which I was the president staged . . ."

I certainly did not mean to appropriate either the idea or enactment of the scheme for myself and no responsible reader of my book would conclude that I attempted to do so. I am afraid, to judge from the intemperate and largely inaccurate letter that he has written to you, that that is not a category in which Angus is to be found.

Conrad Black
BA 1965

The Charlatan welcomes all letters and opinion pieces. Letters should not be more than 250 words and opinion pieces not more than 700 words. Pieces may be edited for length or clarity. The deadline is Tuesday at noon. Include your name, signature, faculty, year and PHONE NUMBER or your letter won't be published. Phone numbers are for verification only and won't be published. Send to: The Charlatan, Room 531 Unicentre, Carleton University, 1125 Colonel By Drive, Ottawa, Ont. K1S 5B6.

Gold looks Good in Any Degree

GOLD SALE
SAVE UP
TO $125

Jostens gives the highest degree of: ♦ Quality
♦ Customer Satisfaction
♦ Service ♦ Warranty
Order your University Ring NOW!

JOSTENS
CANADA

WHEN: January 19, 20, and 21
WHERE: Carleton Bookstore

10am to 5pm
Deposit: ONLY $25.00

Meet with your Jostens representative for full details. See our complete ring selection on display in your college bookstore.

S

style.

by Stephanie Garrison
Carleton staff

Fashion is an enigmatic concept -- it can be as lightweight or as political as it wants. From the cultural appropriation that takes place when designers borrow styles from other societies, to the "art-for-art's sake" reasoning behind a particular style, few concepts can so effortlessly run the gamut between being tongue-in-cheek and serious.

Even the most uncompromising social activist has a stake in fashion; disinterest in the topic is, in itself, a value judgment. However, those who don't buy into the concept of a consumer society can still appreciate design that's engaging and original.

If viewed as an artful means of self-expression, the conflict between politics and aesthetics cannot be resolved, but somewhat abated.

Fashion magazines don't give students much to choose from in terms of interesting and affordable clothing. So we went out to find some ourselves. The organization, styling and photography of this supplement was completely student-produced. Only two models had previous modeling experience -- the rest were selected because of their unique look and sense of style.

Organizing this supplement was interesting; some constraints came up which made sussing out the most amazing outfits possible a challenge.

Most apparent is Ottawa's dearth of stores with funky, non-assembly line clothing.

Second, most of the shops we had approached were not able or did not want to participate in a "student production."

Third, many of those who lent stuff would not let their clothing be used with merchandise from other shops (many companies believe combining labels -- something most students do -- lessens the impact of a particular line to a consumer.)

Mix and match the clothes to your liking because we couldn't.

The clothes used are from Ottawa stores and an attempt was made to make them as cheap as possible. Don't expect an authoritative view of Carleton student fashion; it was our intention to merely scratch the surface of Ottawa style and photograph some cool outfits.

Style is a matter of personal interpretation, and a sense of humor when dressing is usually a plus. This feature, like the subject of style itself, was meant to be eclectic and slightly tongue-in-cheek. Enjoy.

Photo by Johanna Ciszewski

Mo does the mysterious ingenue thing.
Ear Gear fun fur hat, $59.00; Gap ribbed v-neck cardigan shirt, $58.00.

ELEVATOR

HORROR STORIES

If you're sick of waiting, bouncing, stalling and sweating on a Carleton University elevator, The Charlatan will give you a chance to have your say.

Just give us 300-words worth of campus elevator angst.

Your piece can be: funny or bitter, creative or newsy, tame or biting.

The Charlatan reserves the right to edit stories for space reasons, style and libel.

All stories become property of The Charlatan.

Send submissions to:
Karin or Mario, Rm 531 Unicentre

Mature and Part-Time Students' Centre

Helping Make University Bearable

EMPLOYMENT OPPORTUNITY

Positions: Childcare Workers

Pay Rate: $7.00/hr

Time: March 7 - 11 / 14 - 18, 1994

Qualified and experienced childcare workers to supervise children between the ages of five and thirteen during the 1994 Elementary School March Break Program.

Deadline for applications and/or resumes:

Thursday, January 27, 1994

Interviews will be held during the week of:

January 31 - February 4, 1994

Interested persons should contact the
Mature and Part-Time Students' Centre
314 Unicentre (788-2754) for further information

the CARLETON VOLUNTEER BUREAU

ARE YOU LOOKING FOR CAREER RELATED EXPERIENCE?

• on or off campus?

The first 50 people to sign up at the Carleton Volunteer Bureau will receive a free T-shirt (starting January 24th)

Drop by the Office:
Rm 128 Unicentre
or call for an appointment

CUSA

788-2600 ext. 1858

LOOKING FOR VOLUNTEER EXPERIENCE?

"MARKETPLACE"

Thursday, January 20th, 1994
Baker Lounge (4th Floor Unicentre)
10:30 am to 3:00 pm

Find out about gaining Career Related Experience with volunteer agencies - on and off campus.

Drop-in at the Volunteer Bureau,

Room 128 Unicentre 788-2600 ext. 1858

The Volunteer Bureau is also seeking volunteers.

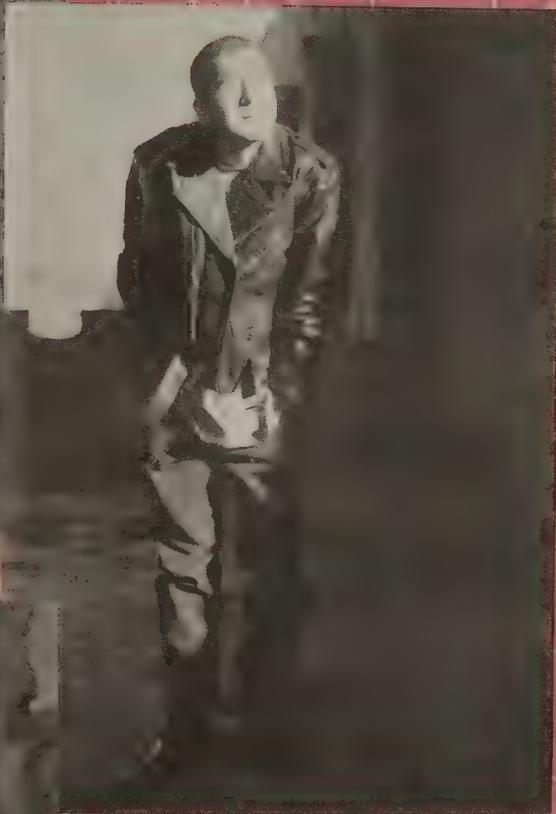

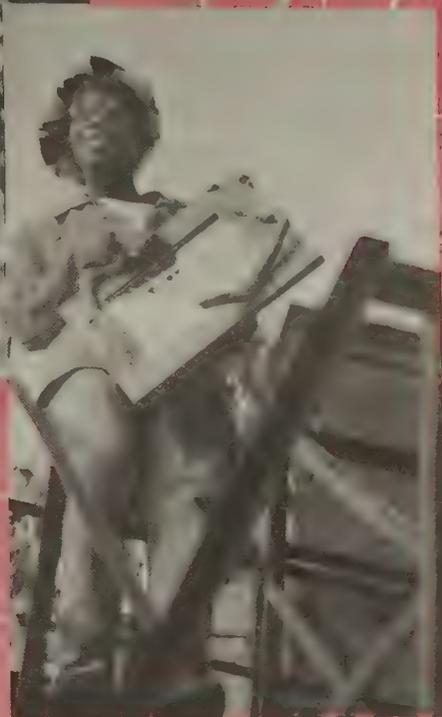

Top to bottom:

Sarah gets diplomatic with Lester B. Pearson.
Jacob panné velvet bodysuit dress with flared hem, $120; Aldo strapped modified platforms with buckle, $120; Borealis hand-painted silk earrings, $19.

Don't mess with tough women in elegant dress.
Allegro velvet dress with woven sash ribbon top (originally from Creed's in Toronto), $80; model's own heels. Allegro long velvet spaghetti strap dress (originally from Bergdorf Goodman), $60; Aldo modified platform shoes, $120; model's own gloves. Allegro fishbone backdrop blanket, $35.

Billie in repose; "where's my cappuccino?"
Beret, $17; knit mock turtle bodysuit, $32; ribbed V-neck cardigan dress, $88; flare pants, $62; all from the Gap. Aldo chunky lace-up English walking shoe, $60.

It's not Kali, but our own goddess-in-training Kira.
Gap lace knit button-down underwear shirt, $27; matching longjohn leggings, $23. Allegro fish neck/lace, $10.

Cool Doc 12-holes from Neon, $110. Alison looking funky. But what's she holding? Oversized fun fur cow print beret designed by Stephanie Garrison. Borealis mirror with snake accents, $90. Fabric coat, $55. St. Vincent de Paul Sting T-shirt (worn backwards), $1. Bis flared short-hem pants (originally from Max Mara), $50. Aldo strapped modified platforms with buckle, $120. Ex-boy, angst boy, you'll never be an angst man... Leather biker jacket, $100; long-sleeve Doc Martens T-shirt, $43; modified baggy jeans, $40; 12-hole Docs, $110; all Neon. Go directly to T-shirt, $19; all Warren's House of Britches. Irving Rivers fun fur hunting cap. She's so hardcore. Long velvet coat, $75; suede sixties mini skirt, $28; long-sleeve crew sweater, $18; all $25; John Lennon shades, $10; all Allegro. Aldo lace up industrial-look boots, $140.

Hmmm . . . how d'you spell
"epistemology?"

Fun fur zip-front hooded jacket, $3; tee, $1; jeans, $10; all St. Vincent de Paul. Allegro fabric Dumbo patterned hat, $22. Aldo adidas gazelles, $60. Cow-print cover book, $11;
alligator pen, $4; elf necklace, $5; all Mrs.
Tiggy Winkle's.

Honey, it's not the clothes, but the attitude. Nice coat, though.
Allegro tapestry-patterned self-belt coat, $60. Irving Rivers Greek fisherman cap. Aldo high-heel chelsea exaggerated platform boots, $120. Allegro thick-frame glasses,
$10.

When not smashing the state, Arn likes to hang out in big window frames.

Arctic fleece button-down shirt worn as jacket, $50; zip flannel jack shirt, $30; button-down long sleeve henley top, $42; baggy jeans, $25; six-hole Doc Martens, $100; all Neon.

Kim's right! Kindergarten teachers ARE an acceptable fashion icon!

Corduroy button-down shirt, $48; zip-front V-neck ribbed vest, $48; pocket tee, $15; loose-fit jean, $48; all Gap. Apple Saddlery two-tone cowboy boot with contrast stitch, $330. Mrs. Tiggy Winkle's Big Bird puppet, $25.

Billie, Kermit and Rori hike about town.

Long-sleeve crew sweater, $28; suede sixties mini skirt, $18; both Allegro. Aldo leather-look knapsack, $50. Mrs. Tiggy Winkle's Kermit the Frog puppet, $45. Allegro fabric Dumbo pattern hat, $22. Warren's House of Britches tee, $19. Mrs. Tiggy Winkle's kid backpack, $14.

Billie's not the only person wearing something in this photo. Epoch long-sleeve T-shirt, $25. Epoch condom on Rori (hidden), 99 cents each.

Credits:

Features editor: Andrea Smith.
 Fashion editor/stylist: Stephanie Garson.
 Photographer: Andre Bellefeuille.
 Supplement cover photograph: Johanna Ciszewski.
 Models: Kim Brunhuber, Rori Caffrey, Mo Gannon, Ari Keeling, Billie Littlechild, Sarah Richards, Alison Theodore, Kira Vermont.
 Special thanks to these stores for participating: Aldo, Allegra, Apple Saddlery, Arbour Recycled Products, Bis, Borealis, Domus, Ear Gear Epoch, Gap, Irving Rivers, Jacob, Neon, St. Vincent de Paul, Mrs. Tiggy Winkle's, Warren's House of Britches. Your participation was greatly appreciated.
 Extra thanks to Instructional Media Services and the School of Journalism at Carleton for lending out the backdrop, lights, umbrellas and other really technical paraphernalia.

Here's the good clean fun most parents wish their kids were practising instead. Left to right: lace knit button-down underwear shirt, $27; matching longjohn leggings, $23; waffle-knit long-sleeve henley top, $28; plaid flannel pj pants (hidden), $30; long-sleeve lace inset pointelle trim top, $34; plaid flannel long boxers, $23. Cookie monster puppet, $25; Burt puppet, $22; Ernie puppet, $22; all Mrs. Tiggy Winkle's.

Raven fencers were already hard at practice just one day after they picked up five medals at the Carleton Invitational.

Fencers stick it to competition

High fives all around after Ravens grab five medals in five events

by Bram S. Aaron
Charlatan Staff

There's no place like home. Hosting their own Carleton Invitational fencing tournament Jan. 8-9, the Ravens were the only team to win medals in all five classes of competition.

Carleton also picked up a gold, two silver and two bronze medals against competition from five other squads from the R.A. Centre, a Quebec college, and the universities of Ottawa, Trent and Royal Military College.

Carleton fencing coach James Ireland said he was happy with the Ravens' good showing.

"I was surprised to win so well. It was a pretty good result — I can't argue with it," he said.

The men's sabre team, led by Simon Pianarosa, defeated the R.A. club 5-0 in the final round to win the gold medal.

"It was a tough tournament. There were a lot of experienced veterans. We went in trying to fence as best as we could. We realized what restraints we had to contend with," said Pianarosa, commenting on the holidays' layoff.

Ireland said the men's sabre team had to overcome an error on the part of tournament organizers to win the gold. Organizers mixed up the order of combat and pitted Carleton rookie Sean Carson against the top fencer from the R.A. Centre squad.

"(Carson) did well considering he was supposed to go second, but they made a mistake and put him in first instead," said Ireland.

The coach said Carson fought hard for the win.

"He won a big fight everyone thought he would lose. It was icing on the cake," said Ireland.

Silver results came to the men's épée and women's foil team.

Women's foil captain Liliana Piazze lost her final round set 5-3, but two of her bouts were lost by one point.

Rounding out the medal finishes were the men's foil and women's épée squads, who claimed bronze.

The men's foil team was particularly pleased with its result as two members — captain Neil Seto and Gordon Wong — competed despite being ill.

Rookie Raven Dwight Irving "came up with some good victories when we really needed him," Seto said.

The women's épée team, comprised of captain Terry McPherson, Nyka Alexander, Lisa Tulk and Shirley McCuaig, was also pleased with its finish, said McPherson.

"We were hoping we'd medal," she said. "James had us working really hard (last) week."

McPherson said one important part in the road to their bronze was the fact that they beat both the University of Ottawa and RMC in direct elimination rounds.

Ireland said he was also happy the tournament gave him a chance to see Trent's teams, whose women fencers won gold in both women's classes.

"We'll beat them in the Ontario finals," he said.

The Carleton Invitational is an open competition, which means fencers not eligible for varsity competition are allowed to fence. It also allows more experienced over-aged fencers to compete and raise the calibre of competition.

The first of two men's and women's sectionals, which are qualifying tournaments for the provincial championship, will be hosted by Carleton Jan. 22-23. □

RANT 'N' RAVEN

Expansion hockey death

by Steven Vesely
Charlatan Staff

Remember the last time you saw a real hockey game?

You know. The kind of game where there's skating, shooting and scoring?

Where Gretzky sets up a perfect pass from behind the net to an open forward in front? Where Messier muscles his way through three defenders for a shot on the net? Or Pavel Bure scores on an end-to-end rush?

Remember? I don't.

That kind of hockey excitement has disappeared, only to be replaced by boring hockey full of clutching, grabbing, dumping and excruciating slowness.

How did this happen? Expansion.

Ever since the National Hockey League decided to expand from 21 teams three years ago to its current slate of 26, real hockey has been in decline.

The addition of the San Jose Sharks, Tampa Bay Lightning, Ottawa Senators, Anaheim Mighty Ducks and Florida Panthers has created a situation that rewards mediocre play and stunts the creativity, finesse and brilliance that used to flourish.

With the exception of the Senators, who redefine pitifulness each time they step out on the ice, the remaining four expansion teams have successfully adopted a defensive style of play, one suited to weaker teams without legitimate stars.

Consequently, they have slowed other teams down to their snail-like speed of play.

This slower defensive game has also become a necessity because the addition of the five new teams has given career minor-league players as well as washed-up veterans a second chance at playing in the NHL.

Unfortunately, many of these players have skills nowhere near the calibre of a true NHL player. Randy Ladoeur. Scott Levins. Bill Huard. Mike Rathje. Steve Kasper. The list is endless. Guys like these should still be in diapers or retirement homes.

And where has this defensive hockey led to? Stagnation.

By choking the life out of the game, by clogging up centre ice, by clutching and grabbing and stifling the very essence out of a game built on speed — expansion teams have forced the play down to a speed where they can compete.

Incredibly enough, more often than not they've been rewarded with ugly, boring and low-scoring wins.

The Panthers, in fact, coached by the king of defensive hockey himself — Roger Nielson — actually have a winning record almost midway through the season. Who would have thought it just a few short months ago?

As a result, all these newcomers are in contention for playoff berths.

Hooray.

They may be doing themselves a short-term favor by worming their way into the playoffs.

But they're killing hockey along the way. □

Polo women preparing to resume action

by Richard G.D. Scott
Charlatan Staff

Practice makes perfect.

And the Carleton women's waterpolo team has been practising hard to prepare for its second sectional tournament Jan. 15-16 at McMaster University.

Currently, the Ravens are second in the five-team Ontario Women's Interuniversity Athletic Association waterpolo league, with a 3-1 record behind the undefeated Toronto Varsity Blues.

Heading into the tournament, coach Steve Baird and team members say they are confident they can move into first place after this upcoming final weekend of regular season play.

"(First place) is within our grasp and we're hoping to avenge a 4-3 loss to Toronto," said Baird.

Carleton is scheduled to play four games at the crossover sectional against Brock, McMaster, Toronto and Queen's universities.

The McMaster tournament is the sec-

The Ravens practised their throwing skills in practice earlier this week.

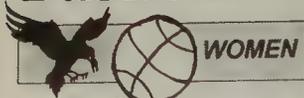

PHOTOS BY TIM O'CONNOR

ond and last sectional in the women's five-team division. Final regular season standings will determine the playoff schedule. All five teams will advance to the championship finals, which will be held this year at the University of Brock on Feb. 5-6.

Carleton's three wins at the Nov. 13-14 tournament came against Brock (13-1), McMaster (15-3) and the defending champions Queen's (7-6). Their only loss was the 4-3 setback against Toronto. □

Basketball previews promise rough road

by Derek DeCloe
Charlatan Staff

If you've never watched the Carleton women's basketball Ravens before this year, you won't notice what's missing.

But what's missing from this year's edition of the Ravens is almost as notable as what's there. The team is coping with the loss of several key players from last year.

Still, despite that void, the Ravens' style of play probably won't differ much from past years as they hope for their first playoff spot since coach Marg Jones took over the team five years ago.

Here's a look at what to expect.
LAST YEAR: Finished seventh in the east division of the Ontario Women's Interuniversity Athletic Association with a 2-10 record and finished 9-19 overall when including exhibition games.

OFFENCE: The Ravens will be emphasizing a team approach this year, says Marg Jones. They have little choice after losing Tracey Carey and Nancy Forget, who combined for 29 points per game last year, over half the team's scoring.

"Obviously we have to look to other people to score our points," says guard Helen Collins, one of the team's co-captains. "We're not looking for a single person any more."

However, the style will still be the same. Not blessed with great size, the Gillian Roseway is one rookie the Ravens will be handing the ball to this year.

Ravens will continue to try and outrun their opponents.

"We try and use our quickness to our advantage," says forward Heather McAlpine.

DEFENCE: Literally, the biggest thing missing is six-foot-four rookie Christine Steele, who played during the pre-season but quit to concentrate on academics.

"Christine would've made a big impact for us," says Jones. "The difference she made defensively (was a) big intimidation factor." None the less, Jones says the Ravens are strong defensively, though they're still learning the perils of being too aggressive.

"Our big concern is our fouling — committing fouls we don't have to commit," she says.

LEADERSHIP: One of the Ravens' key leaders, co-captain guard/forward Dana Nicholas, will be watching from the sidelines after she tore a ligament in her knee during the pre-season.

"She was a key leader for us on the floor," says Jones, who says Nicholas was

"the hardest-working player on the team."

Without her, the Ravens will look to returnees like forward Valerie Gates and the quiet Collins.

"She's not particularly vocal, (but) she's very much a leader by example," says Jones of Collins.

Experience-wise, the Ravens will rely on seven returning veterans to make up for the losses of Carey, Barbieri, Forget, and now Nicholas.

Jones will be hoping that Collins, Gates, McAlpine and guard Erin O'Grady have broad enough backs to carry the team until its five rookies can gain some experience.

PROGNOSIS: It'll be tough to replace last year's scoring punch. Only three of the Ravens' top eight scorers from 1992-93 will see action this year. As a result, the Ravens will have to do a better job on defence if they want to win.

"I would say we're going to have to hold teams under 60 if we're going to beat them," says Jones.

But you can still look for an entertaining style of play: lots of fast breaks and about a million shots every game. Jones probably wouldn't have it any other way.

The team's goal is a playoff spot, but that will be tough in the OWIAA east division. Perennial powerhouses Laurentian, Queen's and Toronto will probably be the top three, leaving Ottawa, York, Ryerson and Carleton to battle it out for the last playoff spot. □

by Kevin Restivo
Charlatan Staff

Hang on to your seat-belts.
With only five returning players from last year's 12-man squad and a 3-12 pre-season exhibition record, it looks like this year's team is in for another rough ride.

So what we can expect from this year's team? read on.

LAST YEAR: The 1992-93 Ravens compiled a 3-9 record in OUAA east division basketball action and a 5-20 record overall.

OFFENCE: Balance is the key for the Ravens. Too often, the Ravens stand around and wait for acknowledged team leader Taffe Charles to take over.

The team needs its new players to step up and become more involved in the fast-paced, high-octane offence preached by coach Paul Armstrong. Look for players like first-year swingman Reagh Vidito to start showing his pre-season potential on a more regular basis. Unfortunately, a lack of size and experience will likely hurt the Ravens in close games and result in many a long scoring drought.

One should also have pity on poor Brian Russell and Jeremy Sims. Along with Charles, the first-year forwards will cruelly be expected to shoulder most of the rebounding load because of the Ravens' lack of size. Luckily for Carleton, their OUAA east-division opponents shouldn't have as many behemoths as some of their pre-season opponents. Armstrong has stressed the importance of rebounding to his team in practice, so look for this weakness to be minimized as the season progresses.

DEFENCE: This is an area that most of the team takes great pride in. Though the Ravens may not be as talented as other teams, Carleton does work extremely hard at proper positioning and smart team defence.

The Ravens often employ different trapping schemes and full court presses in an attempt to kick-start fast breaks and create easy baskets. Armstrong always employs excellent defensive schemes to throw Carleton's opponents off their game.

The Ravens will count on Taffe Charles for points.

In the pre-season, these proved to be effective at keeping the Ravens competitive against some of their larger non-conference opponents. If the Ravens hope to be successful this season, they're going to have to bank on their defence.

LEADERSHIP: Any and all of the five veterans on the team will be expected to provide leadership.

And the rookies will play a role too. This team has the potential to steal some games from opponents despite its lack of experience. First-year guard Andrew Smith and second-year forward James Marquardt personify the work ethic of the Ravens. Smith is a tireless worker who frequently frustrates opponents with his in-your-face style of play, while Marquardt commands the respect of his teammates with his no-nonsense approach to the game.

PROGNOSIS: The Ravens could do some damage this year. If Armstrong is able to find somebody to take some of the offensive load off of Charles's back, if the team can overcome its lack of experience and size, if they can limit their turnovers... get the picture?

Too many questions and not enough answers means the men's team will end up fighting for a .500 season in the OUAA east division. □

Counselling and Student Life Services Carleton University 501 Unicentre 788-6600

DROP IN HOURS

Mondays
5-6 pm

Tuesdays
2-4 pm

Thursdays
2-4 pm

15-20 minute counselling session for students to briefly discuss career or personal concerns.

EVENING HOURS

Mondays 5pm - 8pm
September 20th - April 25th
(Except Statutory Holidays)

Counselling appointments and drop in for students unable to come during the day.

Raven Rumblings

QUOTE OF THE WEEK

"She is fearless."

Women's basketball coach Marg Jones commenting on the attitude of rookie guard Gillian Roseway.

HOCKEY HEARTBREAKER

The Carleton hockey club lost 3-1 to the graduate Kings in Senior R.A. League action at the R.A. Centre on Jan. 5. After two scoreless periods, the Kings potted two quick goals in the third period on Carleton goaltender Pat McFetridge, who turned away over 30 shots in the loss. Carleton cut the margin in half on a late goal but the Kings edged the win with an empty net marker.

FOOTBALL SAVED

The University of Alberta Golden Bears football program may be saved.

Brick Warehouse furniture chain owner Bill Combie has offered to underwrite any losses for the $150,000-a-year program for the next three years, says a report in the Ottawa Citizen.

The 90-year-old football program folded a month ago because of a lack of stable funding.

CORRECTION

Oops. Last week we incorrectly reported the women's basketball team was training down in Florida. They were out of town, but they weren't that lucky. The women's team was practising in Halifax, while the men's team was in Florida.

CALENDAR

Friday, Jan. 14.

BASKETBALL — The women's basketball team will be in Kingston to take on the Queen's Golden Gaels in a 6:30 p.m. match at the Bartlett Gymnasium. The men's team will follow with an 8 p.m. game.

SWIMMING — The swim team will be at the University of Montreal open swim meet, starting at 1 p.m.

VOLLEYBALL — The women's volleyball team hosts the Carleton Invitational. Teams from the universities of Waterloo, Western, Ottawa, McGill, Queen's and Guelph will participate at the Ravens' Nest gym. The tournament begins at 6:30 p.m.

Saturday, Jan. 15.

FENCING — The fencing team will travel to Toronto to take part in the York Invitational at the Taj McKenzie Gym.

SKIING — The nordic ski team will participate in the Nakkertok Invitational just outside Gatineau Park in Cantley, Que. this weekend. Classic-style races are scheduled for today.

BASKETBALL — The men's basketball team travels to Toronto to take on the University of Toronto Blues in a 2 p.m. match. The women's team follows with a 6 p.m. tip-off.

VOLLEYBALL — The Carleton Invitational continues in the gym.

Sunday, Jan. 16.

FENCING — The York Invitational fencing tournament continues.

SKIING — Freestyle races are scheduled at the Nakkertok Invitational.

VOLLEYBALL — The Carleton Invitational's gold-medal game will be at 1 p.m. in the Ravens' Nest. The bronze-medal game is at 11 a.m. and the consolation matches at 9 a.m. □

Chickens, bacon and pep talks

by Carl Sunstrum
Charlatan Staff

Okay. Most people have probably heard the story about the chicken and the egg, but what about the bacon and egg breakfast?

Well, as the story goes, there was once a coach who was having trouble motivating a player, so he called him aside at practice. The coach explained to the player that he didn't think his heart was in the game and he needed more out of him. The player replied that he felt that he was making a contribution.

"I don't need a contribution," said the coach, "I need a commitment."

The player looked at the coach with a puzzled stare and asked him to explain.

"What did you have for breakfast this morning?" asked the coach. "Bacon and eggs," the player replied.

"Well, you see son, when it came to your breakfast, the chicken made a contribution. But the pig, he made a commitment. That's what I want from you."

That anecdote was a pep talk. And its purpose is to inspire players to perform to their potential and sometimes beyond. A pep talk can be a source of inspiration or a method of getting a team to focus on the task at hand.

Often, in the heat of competition, a team can forget what it's trying to accomplish and start to perform like a fire out of control. So whether for inspiration, or for the calm, steady, re-focusing of a game plan, a pep talk is an important tool in every in every coach's tool-box.

Carleton men's basketball coach Paul Armstrong recalls this pep talk from a 1988 league championship game:

"We were playing Toronto and leading by two points at halftime. We huddled together just before the second half started and I reminded the players that what had got us here were the mechanics of our game, and to stick with them. Then I asked them if they could remember what our goals were at training camp . . . to be right here, right now," says Armstrong. "I reminded them that our whole focus had been geared toward being in the league championship game and having a shot at winning it. Then I asked, 'Do you realize where you are at this very moment?' Light bulbs started going on everywhere. In the midst of all the tension and excitement, we had managed to put everything in perspective. We won the game 73-57."

Women's volleyball coach Peter Biasone has a different idea about pep talks. He says he likes to have his players motivate themselves through proper preparation.

"All I can really do is refresh technical information and go over our game plan again. It's up to the athlete to be prepared mentally and to be aware of the team's goal and what we're trying to accomplish."

The rugby team, coached by Lee Powell, takes a different approach. It's the captain's duty to get the team focused before the game, says Powell.

His captain, kicker Mike Rys, agrees. "We knew we had a good shot at the championship this year, so to be focused for every game was all important. One 'blown' game could have cost us the whole season," says Rys. "I'll challenge them to 'pick it up' and get their head in it if they aren't going our way during the game, but most of the talking goes on before the game starts," says Rys.

Women's basketball coach Marg Jones says different athletes respond to different approaches.

"Some players have to be pampered and stroked, while others have to be yelled at. Sometimes you never find out what they respond to, but I try to never give them more than they can handle. Hopefully, they motivate themselves."

From Carleton coaches' perspectives then, it appears the Knute Rockne "win one for the Gipper" philosophy of pep talks has been replaced by mental and technical preparation.

This philosophy may have its merits, but it's hard to believe that somewhere, sometime, some coach isn't going to pull out that old story about the bacon and eggs. □

Charlatan Hockey Pool

Here are the point leaders in the Charlatan Hockey Pool.

Points were tabulated as of Tue. Jan. 11, 1994.

Regular season leaders can only win the dinner prize once.

1344 Bank Street

(at Riverside)
738-3323

1 Patrick Soden	471
2 Jeff Parker	461
3 Jeff Pavkev	461
4 Anjali Varma	456
5 Blair Sanderson	452
6 Vicki Mavragonis	449
7 Thomas Corakis	449
8 Marc Arsenault	447
9 Scott MacKenzie	447
10 Jason Beifuss	445

Congratulations to Jeff Pavkev who wins this week's dinner prize. Pavkev and last week's winner Jeff Parker can pick up their $25 dinner certificate for Baxter's restaurant at The Charlatan.

Charlatan Sports Trivia

Answer the following question correctly and become eligible to win a $25 dinner for two at Schadillac's Saloon.

Who was the last NHL goaltender to lead the league in G.A.A. in back-to-back seasons?

Congratulations to Mike Beatty who knew Juan Gonzalez was the youngest baseball player in recent history to hit three home runs in a single game.

1. Place your answer, name and phone number on a piece of paper and submit it to The Charlatan sports editor, room 531 Unicentre. The recipient of the prize will be determined by a supervised draw of all correct answers.

2. All answers must be received by Tuesday, Jan. 18, 1994. The winner will be contacted by phone, by the sports editor of The Charlatan.

3. Contestants may submit only one entry per week.

4. Charlatan staff members and their families are not eligible to participate.

Answer:

Name:

Phone:

Hug somebody's heart on Valentine's Day with an "adult" greeting card

Box sets of 20 available for $19.95 (P.S.T. Included) Plus $2.95 S/L (TNREG)

Send cheque or money order to:

Hospice House Association, 1200 - 261 Cooper St., Ottawa, Ontario, K2P 0G3

Meadowlands Family Health Centre

Hog's Back Plaza
888 Meadowlands Drive East
corner of Prince of Wales Dr. and Meadowlands Dr.
(behind McDonald's)
Ottawa, Ontario K2C3R2
228-2882

Family Medicine Pediatrics
Adolescent Medicine Minor Surgery
Obstetrics and Maternity Care Counselling Services

Meadowlands Family Health Center

Open 7 days a week

With or without appointment

Weekdays

8AM to 8PM

Weekends / Holidays

10AM to 6PM

Going for groceries in a biology lab

by Pamela Paterson
Charlatan Staff

Bioengineered food is coming soon to a supermarket near you, but not without controversy over its effect on the environment.

Bioengineering consists of transplanting genes from one organism, either a plant or an animal, into another organism. Right now, researchers are using this technology with food to try and improve its quality.

For example, transplanting the gene that protects fish against the cold into a plant can protect it against frost.

Transferring genes could also help crops resist disease and pests, says Rick Walter, executive director of the Canadian Institute of Biotechnology.

But not everyone likes it. Brewster Kneen is a member of the biotechnology caucus of the Canadian Environmental Network. He says nature may not be able to handle changes to organisms that are speeded up by science.

"In traditional natural evolution, it's constantly in change, but it is always slow. If something creates a new mutant strain, the environment has an opportunity to adapt, and it does adapt," Kneen says.

"The problem with bioengineering is exactly one of the points that people pride themselves on — that we can do it much more quickly — is precisely the problem. We plug something novel into the system with no opportunity for the process of adaptation."

He says bioengineering will force the environment to adapt to these new organisms more quickly than it naturally would, and too quickly.

Walter says speeding up nature isn't a concern because the traits worked on in bioengineering would not affect the way the plant interacts with nature.

"Traditional mutation changes a whole raft of things in the chromosome structure. The genome (the genetic composition) of the plant has been altered in more than one location. In genetic engineering, we are very precise and only change one structure," Walter says.

"I don't believe the speed (of the changes) has anything to do with the effect on the environment. Just because we can alter a genetic structure in a very short time compared to that done in nature doesn't mean genetic engineering is any riskier."

Walter says there may be even fewer risks with bioengineering, since these plants are thoroughly tested before being released into the environment, while natural species are not tested at all.

Agriculture Canada spokesperson Joyce Byrne says the first species are due to be released into the environment later this year. So far, she says, the department's lab testing hasn't shown problems with genetically engineered plants and the environment. She says genetically engineered plants have been tested for certain criteria, such as their ability to reproduce with other plant species and the way the trait being worked on behaves.

"That's exactly what the environmental tests are designed to do. We've been working very closely with Environment Canada and working with data since 1988 in very confined testing," Byrne says.

Kneen isn't convinced the current data on field trials will be practical for the future. He says natural conditions or the organism itself may change and make today's tests outdated.

Psst! Wanna be a wine connoisseur?

by Kimberley Fehr
Charlatan Staff

Have you ever, sometime between that first glass of wine and the moment you pass out, taken time to reflect on the natural wonder that is wine?

Wine is about as old as recorded time. When Noah emerged from the ark after the Great Flood, one of the first things he did was plant a vineyard.

"He planted the vineyard; he drank of the wine and he became drunk, and lay uncovered in his tent" states the Revised Standard Version of the Holy Bible (Genesis 9:20-21).

Getting drunk and naked is a familiar scenario for many of us, but not too many go around planting vineyards.

While today's technology has vastly improved the quality of wine, the actual process that changes grape juice into wine, called fermentation, remains the same as it was in Noah's day. We just know more about it now.

Making wine is almost as simple as adding yeast, a single-celled living fungus, to grape juice. Yeast eats the sugar in the grape juice, according to Matt Cramer's Making Sense of Wine. When the yeast eats the sugar, the waste product produced is alcohol.

Cramer says it's important to start with a grape with enough natural sugar to feed the yeast. At the same time, too much natural or added sugar will make the yeast inactive, because if the yeast eats too much sugar, it will be poisoned.

To ferment the wine, wine-makers add cultivated wine yeasts. In beer, bread and wine-making, the yeast commonly used is of the genus Saccharomyces, meaning sugar fungus in Greek. Seven species within this genus are responsible for some of the subtle nuances of different wines.

The fermentation process changes the sugar into alcohol and carbon dioxide while giving off heat, causing the mix-

"When you're dealing with a self-replicating organism. How do you know about tomorrow?" he says. "The environment is still interacting and factors come into play constantly. We have no way of knowing what's going to happen."

Walter says there is no need for concern.

"I believe there are certain levels of risk involved in bioengineering, but those risks are lower than they would be in with similar mutations in the environment."

Byrne says these questions will be looked at by Agriculture Canada before species are released into the environment.

"A lot of the data will be looking at how stable an organism will be in an environment. It's a long-term impact that needs to be addressed. We're still addressing the information required to make sure there are no concerns," she says.

Byrne adds that the guidelines, currently being developed, are "not done in isolation." All bioengineering research, by both private and government organizations, is analyzed on a case-by-case basis by the federal government and needs its approval.

The nature of the research is analyzed based on criteria such as the species' life cycle, ability to reproduce, characteristics of the genes being inserted into the organism and potential for changes in the organism after the transplant.

The future guidelines would regulate food safety, marketing, labelling and products that can and can't be imported. □ ture to froth and bubble like a raging sea. In home wine-making, this stage lasts about five days. Fermentation involves at least 30 different chemical reactions, each one triggering the next.

Eventually, the alcohol produced by the yeast turns against the yeast and renders it inactive and powerless. The alcohol content for wine is no higher than 20 per cent because the yeast is poisoned above that per cent. Most yeast is poisoned when the alcohol content reaches 17 or 18 per cent.

Commercial wines usually have a much lower alcohol content, usually around nine to 14 per cent. Sherry and Port have a higher percentage, at 15 to 22 per cent, because they are fortified, meaning alcohol was added after fermentation.

After fermentation, the wine is syphoned to another container, in order to leave behind deposited yeast particles and other debris so the wine won't be murky. The volume of wine should fit the container exactly so there is no air contact with the wine. Wine that meets air will turn vinegary, because the wine is oxidized by the air.

Eventually the wine should be bottled, but when this happens depends on the discretion and patience of the wine-maker.

There is a lot more to wine science than could be covered here. Many sanitization chemicals and temperature control methods have not been mentioned here. If you think you are another Julio Gallo, here are some books for your information:

Penguin Wine Book, Pamela Van Dyke
Enjoy Home Winemaking, Robert and Aileen Frishman □

That's homework for you!

"If only I could get credit for drinking, I'd be an 'A' student!"

A very common lament by even the best university students. If you're tired of hearing your friends complain about the lack of credit for drinking, tell them all they have to do is enrol at the University of California at Davis, Calif.

Its College of Agriculture and Environmental Science offers a bachelor of science degree in fermentation science. The first-year course, an introduction to wine-making, covers wine appreciation, which means students get to drink in class. The course calendar (available in the library, if anyone wants to transfer) doesn't say whether they have to spit it out, as is often done in snootier wine circles.

Unfortunately, it also covers the history of wine, viticulture (the cultivation of grapes for wine-making), fermentation and wine procedures, so if students spend all their time drinking they might not get any credit for it. Interested students can specialize in enology, which is the study of wines. Only in California.

Closer to home, the University of Guelph offers correspondence courses in viticulture, general and technical enology and wine-marketing, which lead to a certificate at the college diploma level upon completion.

Algonquin College also offers a wine-making, tasting and brewing certificate.

For $120, you can take a course in basic wine appreciation, which allows you to taste about five or six types of wine each night on your way to a college certificate. □

Attention journalist wannabes. . .

Any and all Charlatan staff and volunteers are welcome to attend a newswriting seminar given by Ottawa Citizen writing coach Lynn McAuley.

McAuley will discuss writing style, interviewing technique and ethics among other things.

Date: Thursday, January 20, 1994
4 p.m. 531 Unicentre

For more information contact Mario, Karin or Arn

the
CHARLATAN
CARLETON'S INDEPENDENT STUDENT NEWSPAPER

Up Creeque Alley without a paddle

by Blayne Haggart
Charlatan Staff

Creeque Alley, a mainstay of the Ottawa live-music scene since its inception in 1992, will be closing for a few months in order to renovate and revamp the club.

The Rideau Street club, which has booked bands like the Cowboy Junkies, Fun For Malakai and Tom Cochrane, will be closing Jan. 22. In its absence, the Downstairs Club, located below Creeque Alley, will once again start booking bands on a regular basis.

Creeque Alley and the Downstairs Club are owned by Grace Mulvey, Clyde Ross and Iona Sloan. They turned the Downstairs Club into a sports bar when Creeque Alley opened in October 1992.

According to Mulvey, Creeque Alley will be closed for a few months and will be re-opening sometime in the future. "I'm not sure about the exact time yet," she says.

John Fairfield, manager of Creeque Alley, says crowd sizes at the club were "inconsistent" and the closure is "more of a restructuring to appeal to more (people)." He suggests a name change might also be in the works and a March re-opening is possible. He says one option being considered for Creeque Alley is it becoming a sports bar.

Mulvey cites crowd size as a major factor influencing the decision to close the club.

"We haven't been as busy as we thought we would be," she says. Mulvey says bands they used to book at the Downstairs Club, which holds 110 people, were pulling in the same numbers as Creeque Alley, which can take an audience of up to 280.

Ironically, crowd-drawing ability was the reason Mulvey cited for opening Creeque Alley in 1992.

In an interview with The Charlatan back when Creeque Alley was first opened, Mulvey stated, "We felt we were limited downstairs by the number of bands we could bring in and the kind of bands. Our competition may have been able to bring in bigger name acts and we couldn't because we didn't have the space."

Marty Jones, keyboardist for the local band Furnaceface, has played both the Downstairs Club and Creeque Alley and says he feels it's too bad the club is closing.

"It's a shame when a place that has live bands goes under," he says. "It was a pretty large club. It's nice to have a place that large to play."

When told that the Downstairs Club would be re-opened to bands on a regular basis, Jones noted, "Maybe (they'll be) better off with the smaller space." □

Secret meanings and deformed dolls

by Karolina Srucek
Charlatan Staff

Corpus Interruptus
Gallery 101
Jan. 8 — Feb. 4

his exhibit proved to be an out-of-body experience.

Climbing up the gallery stairs, I heard the buzz of Ottawa's art bunch gathering to view the works of artists Catherine Heard, Suzanne Maurice and Roman Valera.

I walked around the white room in about 20 minutes and looked at the 11 pieces. I acknowledged them, but I didn't understand them.

The press release described the pieces as "migratory relationships between the human body and its representation in art." It asked viewers to "reflect upon how contemporary theories of gender,

Nope. Ain't nothing phallic about this.

sexuality and race have left their marks on these texts — whether by intent of the artist or through our interpretations."

Maurice's pieces were part of her larger solo show she presented earlier this year in Montreal, where she primarily works with ceramic sculpture, found objects and mechanical devices.

Each piece on display represents a day of the week and deals with the themes of women and the earth. Maurice says women are not recognized in our society as inventors of great things and that is why she chose to work with ceramic and terracotta — because, according to Maurice, women invented it.

Her ideas are present in her work "Mandala de l'axis-mundi," in which a naked, armless woman is strapped on to a turning wheel, representing Leonardo da Vinci's "Universal Man" and playing on her theme of women and inventions.

Maurice says in each piece she hides a secret and only gives certain people a chance to see it. I was a chosen one, so she showed me the hidden meaning in a piece of art that consisted of an iron representation of a horse with feathers in place of a tail. The piece was surrounded by dark brown sand.

She dedicated this piece to Annie Sprinkle, the New York prostitute and performance artist who founded PONY — Prostitutes of New York, an organization that helps raise money for the children of prostitutes.

What was the big secret? Inside the iron horse sculpture is an article about Sprinkle and her crusade for the prostitutes' children.

I then moved on to Valera's four pieces on the body.

"H y m a n i Corpus" consists of female and male painted chests and

Just remember kids, it's Art.

torso which seem like enlargements taken out of anatomy encyclopedias.

This Montreal-based, Mexican-born artist's other two pieces, "Fetich de Felicidad" and "Tzompanti-Ordination," were more on the original side.

"Tzompanti-Ordination" is a wall-mounted wooden box holding a computer keyboard and a plastic skeleton. On the keys are painted skulls. When you press certain keys, lights around the skeleton's head are illuminated. Why only certain keys? According to Valera, "because only certain keys are important."

He also says the piece signifies the conflict between Christianity and the traditions of the ancient Aztecs, Mayas and Incas, and the mixture of today's high technology with mysticism.

The third artist's piece was very awakening. Nine dolls made of silk and human hair, with defects like two heads and four eyes, were hanging on the wall. The fetus-like dolls, according to Heard, represent the pattern of defects found most commonly in females.

Heard says she discovered this pattern while looking through medical books and was very surprised that it has never been recognized. Women in society are always being brushed aside and not recognized, she says.

The ongoing theme of women throughout the exhibit makes the show worth going to. Discovering the issue within each exhibit is a task in itself. If you have nothing to do on a cold evening here in Ottawa, head over to Lisgar Street and have an out-of-body experience. □

This week: Where To Go For Your Summer Vacation (Part I)

1. Shag Harbor, N.S.
2. Climax, Sask.
3. Heart's Content, Nfld.
4. Dildo, Nfld.
5. Spuzzum, B.C.
6. Windy Tickle, Nfld.
7. Knob Lake, Que.
8. Witless Bay, Nfld.
9. Punkedoodle Corners, Ont.
10. Ecum Secum, N.S.
11. Swastika, Ont.

Sarah McLachlan fumbles towards ecstasy

by Noel Germundson
Charlatan Staff

Sarah McLachlan has come a long way since her days in Halifax.

This Vancouver-based songstress has moved from smaller venues like Porter Hall to the Congress Centre, where she performed in December in support of her latest album Fumbling Towards Ecstasy.

What hasn't changed since her previous release is the fans, notes McLachlan.

"Since Solace, the audiences across Canada have been incredibly supportive and really into it in a great way. . . . The crowds are just getting a bit bigger now," she says.

What has changed is her band. "As far as my show goes there's better production and incredible musicians now," she says.

The band includes Ashwin Sood (percussion), Brian Minato (bass), and David Kershaw (keyboards) at the core. Guitarists David Sinclair and Luke Ducet and singer Camille Henderson round off the group when McLachlan's on tour.

Although she is now based in Vancouver, McLachlan is originally from Halifax, where she spent years training in classical music at the Royal Conservatory of Music.

Back then, in the mid-eighties, McLachlan was spotted by Nettwerk Records at a show at the Dalhousie University Students' Centre in Halifax. On the strength of this performance, she was signed to the Vancouver-based label.

She moved to Vancouver because Nettwerk and McLachlan agreed it would be better for her to live near the musicians she was working with. As well, she says she wanted a change from Halifax.

Fumbling Towards Ecstasy signifies a slight departure from her previous albums. In the past, it was her darker feelings that came through in her lyrics.

The trip she made to Cambodia and Thailand after the Solace tour, as part of a World Vision documentary film team that was raising awareness of famine conditions, was an uplifting experience.

Up close and personal with Sarah McLachlan's microphone.

"That trip changed my life in a lot of ways and it gave me a much broader spectrum of understanding humans, or at least getting a true glimpse into what human beings are capable of," McLachlan says. "For myself that experience was incredibly liberating for me because that made me feel so blessed and so untied down to a lot of stuff that I'd clung too, and how lucky we are to be living in such a free country."

In order to work on Fumbling Towards Ecstasy, McLachlan secluded herself in a cabin in the Laurentian Mountains north of Montreal for several months. She found the results very beneficial.

"I could have done it (written the album) many ways, but that was the most favorable one, and I think it was important for me to be by myself," she says.

It also helped get the creative juices flowing.

"It was just really good to (be alone) and really tough because I hadn't been by myself, hadn't lived by myself, and it was in the country in the middle of nowhere," she says. "But once I finally got over my brain eating itself and just finding a way to get through that and deal with it, I got really strong, and that I think had a lot to do with a lot more lightness in the songs."

Down on the Pigfarm

by Mike Peters
Charlatan Staff

Pigfarm
Thunderdome, Hull
Jan. 28

In 1988, a Toronto band rose from obscurity to secure the number one spot on Canadian campus radio charts for five straight months with its first album hold your nose.

By the time the eighties were over, however, the two main members went their separate ways and Pigfarm sank back into anonymity. Vocalist and guitarist Adam Faux went on to join the prolific folk-rock band the Lost Dakotas. Bassist John Deslauriers hooked up with Montreal punk veterans the Doughboys. After two years, they both left the bands. "The timing was a coincidence," claims Faux, "though I think we both left for the same reasons. Call it boredom, I guess, but both (the Lost Dakotas and the Doughboys) are extremely busy bands — there was no time for writing or playing just for fun. We didn't seem to fit."

Faux explains he and Deslauriers, who form the core of the band, "just fell back together" in 1992. In this incarnation of Pigfarm, producer Michael Philip

"I mean I think there's a greater degree of darkness in this record than there was on any other too. There's a broader spectrum that definitely came from the World Vision experience, of understanding human experience, and it was like writing from a spiritually high place instead of a spiritually low one, which I figure is where a lot of Solace and Touch came from."

Her videos also have strong spiritual overtones, most notably through the symbolic use of water and nudity.

"Water has always been an important thing in my life", she explains. "Other than the fact that we all need it to survive, the ocean has always been a great really intense spiritual place for me. I've always lived by it and I feel I need it very much in my existence. It's sort of like the giant womb. It's very much a mother thing."

As for the nudity, it is partly "a natural, vulnerable state to be in, and partly a reactionary thing against all of the women being objectified in videos by men. . . . It was sexual but not in a way that men portray women."

If you missed her in Ottawa this time around, rest assured she's preparing for a tour of the United States, with more Canadian dates planned for this spring. □

Wojewoda is sitting in on drums.

Adds Faux, "We tried to come up with another name, but we couldn't think of one — Pigfarm was back."

Last year, they released their second album, Plug, which has appeared on campus radio charts across the country. Plug, however, bears little resemblance to its predecessor.

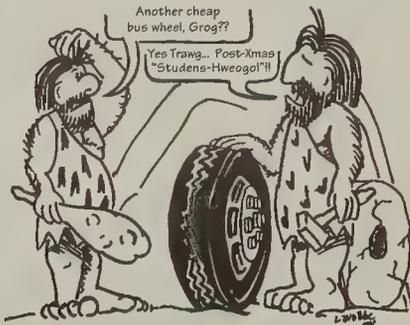

Although in the past the band found inspiration in punk bands such as Hüsker Dü, the Replacements and Black Flag, Faux explains Plug has less to do with punk and more to do with "the obvious kind of pop ideas."

Indeed, there is very little evidence of the band's punk rock origins on the album; replaced, it seems, with a folk sensibility that surprised even the band.

"That's how we wanted it," says Faux, "but on our next album the direction is definitely a little stronger — back to our roots, I guess."

The next album, being recorded this month, will be a major-label release (they're now negotiating with several record companies) and is expected in stores by April or May. Until then Pigfarm will be appearing across Canada, opening for such bands as the Waltons and Zen Bugalow and headlining several tours of their own. □

VOYAGEUR RE-INVENTS THE WHEEL!

"STUDENS-HWEOGOL"? "Students' Wheels" to the uninitiated like TRAWG. Yes, looks like GROG has taken a turn for the worse and gone off to study Old English this term, or should we say Future English for him?! Anyway, for you the "studens", it means a good deal. Take advantage of GROG'S post-Xmas deflationary, antiquarian stance and travel between Ottawa and Toronto at just $59.* return with Voyageur.

Grog's busy with his ancient manuscripts right through March 30* 1994. But you must return by that date!!

TORONTO - OTTAWA $59.*

238-5900

*CONDITIONS
You must be 25 years of age or less and present a valid 1993-94 full-time studies Student ID card (cards issued in previous school years must be validated for '93-94) or Registrar's Confirmation of Enrollment. No discounts. One-way fare available. Taxes as applicable are extra. All travel must be completed by March 30th, 1994.

Voyageur

SPRING BREAK PANAMA CITY BEACH, FLORIDA

Shell Island Party Cruise
650' Gulf Beach Frontage
2 Outdoor Swimming Pools
1 Indoor Heated Pool
Restaurant, 2 & 3 Room Suites

Beach Bonfire Parties
Tiki Beach Bar/Volleyball
Sailboats, Jetskis & Parasails
Karaoke Beach Party
Area Discount Coupons

SANDPIPER BEACON
17403 Front Beach Road
Panama City Beach, FL 32413
904-234-2154

RESERVATIONS
1-800-488-8828

FROM $104 PER WEEK
PER PERSON
4 PERSON OCCUPANCY

St. Peter's Lutheran Church

400 Sparks Street (at Bay)
233-9911

Sunday Worship 9:30 and 11:00 a.m.

Everyone Welcome

The Charlatan Pub Crawl Extravaganza Celebrating Canadiana at the local watering hole

by Doug Johnson
Charlatan Staff

Since the mid-eighties there has been an alarming trend in Canadian bars, that of, "let's pretend we are not in Canada."

These days the bar scene is clogged with Celtic pubs, bars emulating the southwestern United States and, worst of all, California-style health bars for pushy, uptight types who don't drink.

This invasion has become so overwhelming that the traditional Canadian beer parlor is in jeopardy, simply because it doesn't purport to be anything but a place to drink.

It is now time to hit back and defend this Canadian institution. The beer parlor is a vital part of Canadian culture. Ubiquitously known as the hotel, the beer parlor is the anchor of most small towns. Its only real competition comes from the Legion, but you need to be a member to get in there.

What is it that makes a beer parlor? Farley Mowat described them as alcoholic filling stations. Former local radio personality Dalby MacGregor was closer when he said, "No dance floor, gotta sell pitchers and must have a jar of pickled eggs on the bar."

Across the country beer parlors' decors change little; rather they rely on their clientele for their atmosphere. All of them have one element in common: there must be at least one fight a night.

At the Mackie House in Pembroke, the atmosphere comes from the adrenaline rush one gets from drinking with members of the Airborne Regiment (the military's version of the Hell's Angels).

The Yale in Vancouver has a rough-textured salty flavor from the vagrants, Simon Fraser University students and blues aficionados who gather to listen to the fine music offered there.

Toronto's Brunswick House has a pure animal clientele who slurp down trays of beer (24 glasses to a tray). The Gold Range in Yellowknife gains its working-class atmosphere from the mix of trappers, miners, office workers and prospectors who come to forget the long northern winters.

Here in Ottawa my favorite member of this fine tradition is the Lockmaster at the intersection of Bank and Somerset streets. What makes the Lockmaster attractive is that the clientele is the opposite of what Ottawais—a city of too-slick money lovers with bloated Holt Renfrew accounts. Not so of those who frequent the Lockmaster. The people who frequent the Lockmaster have, for the most part, seen the rough side of life.

Inside, one will not find ferns, water in little bottles or flashing lights over the dance floor. What you will find are quarts of domestic beer, the game on oversized televisions and bands that play music that wouldn't exactly be described as avant-garde. The food at the Lockmaster is so cholesterol-laden that just reading the menu causes your heart to skip a beat.

For me, the Lockmaster is like retreating back to my eastern Ontario small town, white trash roots. It gives my brain a chance to relax after it has been overstimulated by what's new and unusual. □

LOVE MAY SUCK, BUT THIS BOOK DOESN'T

by Stephanie Garrison
Charlatan Staff

Written On The Body
By Jeanette Winterson
Random House
190 pages
$13.50

Most people know from personal experience that love sucks.

Writers are doubly aware of this universal truth; they too suffer the angst of a bad relationship and many are panned by critics after writing about a failed romance.

In the realm of a novelist, the game is to explore romantic stirrings without resorting to clichés of red roses, heartfelt sobs and clandestine meetings past midnight. This challenge stumps most contemporary writers. One exception of note is British novelist Jeanette Winterson.

Written On The Body is a wondrous book by Winterson that artfully escapes mediocrity. The theme of love is probed with intimacy and respect, never less than the all-encompassing emotion it ultimately can be in life.

The story's genderless narrator is a romantic explorer with an ardent passion for Louise. She is the object of desire that eludes being objectified, despite her lover's literal dissection of her presence and meaning.

Death is the pitfall their relationship faces. Yet the novel's conclusion is one open to interpretation and, more importantly, to a sense of hope.

Winterson has received critical praise for her subtly creative writing style since first being published in the late eighties. One of her many gifts is an ability to wrap characters in a mystique that is both intense yet accessible to the reader.

The narrator of Written On The Body is peculiar, an unusually passionate presence in a world that holds increasingly pragmatic views on relationships. (S)he experiences shortcomings and passions that are identifiable to readers who don't function particularly well in "modern relationships," minefields riddled with concepts like personal space and couple therapy.

Deadpan observations sprinkle the pages: "She was compressed, stoked down, a volcano dormant but not dead. It did occur to me that if Louise were a volcano then I might be Pompeii."

Eclectic metaphors also illustrate Winterson's broad knowledge of intellectual trivia; medical metaphors for love and desire pepper the pages. Winterson uses sterile textbook excerpts as a departure for the narrator to examine the nature of his or her love for Louise.

The use of language is so expert that the plot is minimal, almost an afterthought. Getting there is inconsequential and doesn't really happen. What propels this book forward is the storytelling.

Full-blown romance is rare—a well-written account of it even rarer. Written On The Body is a tale befitting the pretentious title of "modern classic." Do not pass it by, because it's a romantic jewel that never loses its inner strength. And you'll still resist the morning after. □

Summer Employment

Earn up to $11.41 per hour!

250 Summer Park and Wading Pool Programme positions available!

(Part-time and Full-time)

Apply by February 4, 1994

Have an outstanding summer while building a first-rate resumé.

- Work with children and the public
- Learn aquatic supervision
- Develop leadership skills
- Work in a team setting

Come work with us!

Applications are available throughout the City.

Call The Department of Recreation and Culture,

Park Programmes Division

8:30 a.m. - 5:00 p.m.

564-1081

Department of Recreation & Culture
Service des loisirs et de la culture

REQUIRED FOR MP HILL OFFICE

Researcher and staff writer.

Requires background in economics min. masters, familiar with computer operations - Windows, Microsoft Word and Access, bilingualism and some practical business experience as asset but not necessary.
Salary $32000 - $35000.

Apply in writing to:
252 Confederation Building
House of Commons, Ottawa
K1A 0A6

SPRING BREAK
PANAMA CITY BEACH FLORIDA

- High quality beachfront accommodations for 7 exciting nights.
- Round trip chartered motor coach.
- Free pool deck parties, activities, & promotions.
- Inter-Campus Programs I.D./Discount card.
- On-location staff for complete assistance.
- All taxes, tips, & service charges included

$119 <small>WITHOUT TRANSPORTATION</small>	$259 <small>WITH TRANSPORTATION</small>
---	--

For information and reservations
CALL WENDI 523-9640

ARRANGEMENTS BY INTERCAMPUS PROGRAMS

Godstar: guts, glory and girlfriends

by Jane Tattersall
Charlatan Staff

If you haven't heard of Godstar before, don't worry. The Australian band has yet to become a household name in North America.

Part of the reason is since its formation in 1991, band members frequently take time off to devote themselves to various side projects. Until this year they had only put out a few seven inch singles.

With the recent release of their debut album, however, it may be only a matter of time before they achieve the recognition they deserve. The album, Sleeper, has been getting positive reviews in Canada and the United States.

Godstar frontman and guitarist Nic Dalton is the driving force behind the band, which also includes drummer Alison Galloway, bassist Rachael King and guitarist Tom Morgan.

Dalton, who is Godstar's principal songwriter, brightens considerably when Godstar's new album is mentioned. "I'm so proud of that one," he says. "I wrote the songs on it during a very specific period of my life and those songs really define that phase of my life. I look at it as a complete reflection of that time."

Dalton is possibly the busiest man in rock and roll. In addition to Godstar, he runs Half-A-Cow Records, an independent label in Australia, and is currently bass player for the super alterno-feel-good group the Lemonheads.

Having time for all of these projects might seem impossible, but Dalton explains, "It's not as hard as it seems, really. My friend Dave takes care of Half-A-Cow when I'm on the road, and he faxes and phones me every day or two to keep me updated."

The label features bands like Smudge, Boston's Fuzzy, and, of course, Godstar.

Dalton admits taking time off from the band to tour with the Lemonheads was a difficult choice and is quick to point out that Godstar is his main band.

The Lemonheads gig came up just after It's A Shame About Ray was recorded in 1992. Juliana Hatfield, who played bass on the album, couldn't go on the tour, so Dalton's longtime friend Evan Dando invited him to join the Lemonheads. He accepted and stayed on to record and tour for their latest release.

"Evan was a good friend," says Dalton, "and when he invited me to join up for the tour, I went because it was a great chance to travel and see the world."

"Being in Godstar is my first choice," he adds. "It's my band. The Lemonheads is Evan's band. It sounds funny to say that because I spend most of my time on what is not my priority, but it's true. I'll probably leave after this tour to spend some time on Godstar."

Dalton is prone to making comments like this to the press. Despite his obvious sincerity, however, he has encountered reporters who have twisted his words to give the appearance of conflict within the Lemonheads.

He admits this does bother him. "It's tough sometimes, when you come into a town and are faced with that. I mean, we all know better than to believe everything we read about ourselves."

He sighs. "But it's tough sometimes." In truth, the connections between Godstar and the Lemonheads are so numerous they make your headspin. Dalton is in both bands. Dando appears on the Godstar album. Godstar's drummer is the subject of a song on It's A Shame About Ray.

The album also includes a couple of tracks co-written by Morgan and Dando and was largely influenced by the time Dando spent with them in Australia. Morgan and Dando also co-wrote the greater part of the newest Lemonheads release, Come On Feel the Lemonheads, and one track was written by occasional Godstar vocalist Robyn St. Claire. In light of this, rumors of Lemonheads infighting seem even more preposterous.

Comparisons to the Lemonheads are inevitable, but Godstar is spunkier, with more edge to their guitars. Some reviewers have given Godstar the upper hand. One critic described Sleeper as "everything the new Lemonheads album should have been but wasn't."

The songs are strung together with a playful intensity that flows from one track to another, all based around the theme of love and relationships.

But recording an album isn't cheap. "I guess that's another reason why I stayed with the Lemonheads for so long," remarks Dalton. "It gives me the opportunity to do something that I really love—Godstar."

It's interesting to note, however, that despite the influence he wields as part of one of music's hippest groups of the moment, Dalton's own group remains on an independent label. Rather than use his connections to swing a bigger deal, Dalton prefers it that way.

"It makes more sense for us. If we were on a major, they'd be pressuring us to constantly tour and promote the album, and we wouldn't be free to do other things. Robyn has a baby and a job. I wouldn't be able to tour with the Lemonheads and spend time on Half-A-Cow."

This leads to a question about whether Godstar has any plans to hit the road soon and play some dates in North America. "It all depends on the reaction we get to the album," says Dalton. "If we thought it got a lot of interest, we might come, but even then it probably wouldn't be until 1995, owing to possible future lineup changes."

"You see," he explains, "when we started the band, it was with my ex-girlfriend and my then-girlfriend. Now it's with two of my ex-girlfriends."

Does this bear any relation to the "specific period" in his life that is reflected on the album?

"Um... yeah," he confesses. Complicated, sure, but it makes for great music. □

Counselling and Student Life Services

Winter Term 1994

Personal Development Groups

Developing Assertive Behaviour

Mondays, January 24th 9:30-11:30am (7 sessions)

Career Development Workshops

Ongoing (2-2hr sessions)

Talking it Out (for women dealing with abusive relationships)

Fridays, February 4th 10:00-Noon (8 sessions)

Procrastination

Mondays, February 21st 9:30-12:30pm (2 sessions)

Offered Jointly with Health Services

Group for Men

Tuesdays, January 25th 3:30-5:30pm (10 sessions)

Self Esteem/Self Care

Thursdays, February 10th 10:00-Noon (5 sessions)

Call Counselling and Student Life Services for information and registration.
Room 501 Unicentre, 788-6600

Ottawa's Hottest Dance Bar
BAR TAKTIX OTTAWA

151 George St. Ottawa
(613) 236-5477
Open 9-1:30 Weekdays

NOW OPEN AFTER HOURS
Friday till 2 • SATURDAY till 3

Welcomes the Gay and Lesbian community

Friday, Jan. 14, 1994
BLACK-OUT PARTY
Free Glow in the Dark Novelties to the first 400 customers.

Thursday January 20, 1994
Female Impersonator Show from Toronto "Jackée"

LONG DAY IN THE UNIVERSE

THURSDAY, JANUARY 13 TO THURSDAY, JANUARY 20

Thursday, January 13

The Hammerheads at the Pit? Just a suggestion.

Friday, January 14

This week's free lunch-time concert at 12 p.m. in Carleton's Alumni Theatre features local jazz courtesy of the Brian Tansley Jazz Quartet at 12 p.m.

In the same room at 8 p.m. for the same price, Don Ross is playing as well. He's a phenomenal acoustic guitar guy.

At the Great Canadian Theatre Company, the Company of Fools presents Shakespeare's Interactive Circus. As they describe it, "the audience is encouraged to talk back to actors, eat and drink during the show and even get involved in the action during crowd scenes." Sounds like a scene straight from the pro wrestling circuit. It's playing Fridays and Saturdays at 10:15 p.m. until Jan. 29. Tickets are $4 for NightHowl members and $8 for non-members. These are available, along with memberships, at the GCTC.

Paris, France, the Canadian film that freaked Cannes out because of its, ahem, sexual content, premieres at 9:30 p.m. at the Bytowne. It's showing until next

Thursday.

Les Hardis Moussaillons, a local French band, stop in at Zaphod's tonight for some regulated mayhem. Enjoy!

Saturday, January 15

Nothing to do this afternoon? How about heading down to Creeque Alley to see Lucky Ron around two-ish?

For those of you who are into Canadian reggae, Lazo's playing at Creeque Alley this evening.

There's nothing quite like the experience of a late, late-night screening of your favorite cult film. Eraserhead fans take note! Be at the Mayfair at 10:50 p.m. tonight. Bring five bucks.

At Zaphod's this very evening, you can enjoy the dancy, Toronto sounds of Rail T.E.C. Go ahead, you owe it to yourself.

Sunday, January 16

It's Sunday and you don't feel like studying or going out. Charlatan production manager Kevin McKay recommends At Play in the Fields of the Lord by Peter Mathiessen. Says McKay, "Like Conrad, Mathiessen uses the jungle as his setting to explore character, family and faith." Wow, tigers!

Or you can check out the documentary Black to the Promised Land at the Bytowne at 4:45 p.m. As the Bytowne blurb says about the premise: "Take 11 African-American teenagers from Brooklyn. Send them to an Israeli Kibbutz. See what happens."

Monday, January 17

Parliament opens today. Your Members of Parliament get down to work in an impartial manner, setting aside partisan differences for the good of the country.

Tuesday, January 18

Since this is a new session of Parliament, why not take the kids down to Parliament Hill for Question Period? Just remember, don't tap the glass, it'll frighten the ministers.

Wednesday, January 19

Cinéma-thèque Canada, at the Museum of Civilization, is screening the Swedish film Good Evening, Mr. Wallenberg, a film about World War II war hero Raoul Wallenberg. It's being presented in Swedish with some German along with English subtitles and will be shown tonight and tomorrow at 7 p.m.

On the radio at 9 p.m. this evening, In a Mellow Tone (CKCU-FM 93.1) profiles the World Saxophone Quartet.

Thursday, January 20

There's nothing quite like the experience of attending a Rocky Horror Picture Show screening. Or so I've heard. This film and its sequel Shock Treatment are showing tonight at the Mayfair, starting at 9 p.m.

If you have an event you want to appear in this handy calendar, you can drop your announcement off at The Charlatan, Room 531 Unicentre during regular business hours or you can fax us at 788-4051. Announcements must be in by the Friday before publication.

Hey kids! It's the first Charlatan contest of the new year!

And here's what you can win this time 'round:

Your very own copy of the Red House Painter's CD, aptly titled (wait for it) Red House Painters!

This 4 A.D. band (the same one that spawned the Pixies and the Breeders) plays really mellow tunes and their CD can be yours if you answer the following skill-testing question:

Of the main characters, who's left standing at the end of the film Reservoir Dogs?

Easy, huh? Now all you have to do is bring your answer up to The Charlatan, Room 531 Unicentre by 3 p.m. Monday January, 17. Drop it in the Arts Editor's mailbox.

One other thing: Charlatan staff aren't eligible for this contest.

MUCH MUSIC

JAMMIN' IN JAMAICA

Spring break '94

Come to your Jammin' in Jamaica Party for a chance to win a trip to Jamaica and lots of great MuchMusic prizes. MuchMusic's Jammin' in Jamaica Spring Break '94 is coming!

Your Jammin' in Jamaica '94 Party

Place: OLIVER'S	Date: Thursday Jan. 20
---------------------------	---------------------------

TRAVEL CUTS
Carleton University
111 Level Unicentre
238-5493

HAWAIIAN TROPIC

WAKE UP CARLETON!

CUSA

ARE YOU BEING REPRESENTED?

CAN YOU AFFECT CHANGE?

IS YOUR VOICE BEING HEARD?

NOMINATIONS OPEN MONDAY, JANUARY 17TH
FOR ALL C.U.S.A., SENATE, AND BOARD OF GOVERNORS POSITIONS. IF YOU HAVE EVER CONSIDERED RUNNING OR WOULD LIKE TO FIND OUT MORE ABOUT THE PROCESS, CONTACT ELECTIONS CARLETON.

IT'S EASIER THAN YOU THINK!

CONTACT: James Rilett, Colleen Felstead, or Jane Suh in the Elections Carleton office, 127D Unicentre (behind the Off-Campus Lounge) or call 788-2600 ext. 1648.

MAKE A DIFFERENCE!

Whereas, pursuant to section 4.2 of the CUSA Consolidated Electoral Code, The Chief Electoral Officer shall issue a Writ of Election; Be it hereby known that Elections Carleton intends to hold elections for the positions below on CUSA Council, the Carleton University Senate and the Carleton University board of Governors (hereafter referred to as General Elections) on February 8, 9, 10, 1994.

ELECTIONS CARLETON CUSA

POSITIONS AVAILABLE ARE:

C.U.S.A.

President (1)
Finance Commissioner (1)
Architecture (1)
Arts and Social Sciences (14)
Commerce (3)
Computer Science (1)
Engineering (3)
Industrial Design (1)
Journalism (1)
Science (3)
Special Students (3)

SENATE

2 Arts seats
2 Social Science Seats
1 Architecture/Industrial Design seat
1 Engineering seat
2 Computer Science/Science seats
2 Graduate Studies and Research seats

Two (2) positions

VOTING:

Voting Periods will be as follows:
February 8 - 11:10a.m. - 9:10p.m.

February 9 - 11:10a.m. - 9:10p.m.
February 10 - 11:10a.m. - 9:10p.m.

POLLING STATIONS:

The polling locations will be as follows:

Loeb Tunnel Entrance
Unicentre
Mackenzie Building
Tunnel Junction between Steacie and Herzberg Building

Tunnel Junction
Residence Commons
St. Patrick's Building

For further information, please contact James Rilett, CEO, at 127D Unicentre, 788-2600 ext. 1648

ELECTIONS CARLETON

Elections Carleton will be holding referendums on the following questions during the election period:

Referendum # 1

Whereas: This year funding from the Carleton University Students' Association has allowed the University of Ottawa Community Legal Clinic, a student organization, to provide legal representation and advice to Carleton Students. Do you support the continuation of C.U.S.A. funding to continue these services?

The first meeting of the "YES" Committee shall take place in Room 424 Unicentre on January 20, at 12:00 p.m.
The first meeting of the "NO" Committee shall take place in Room 424 Unicentre on January 20, at 1:30 p.m.

Referendum # 2

Do you support paying a $1.00 levy (per student) toward subsidizing the creation and maintenance of a Carleton Hockey team which would join the College Hockey League?

The first meeting of the "YES" Committee shall take place in Room 424 Unicentre on January 21 at 12:00 p.m.
The first meeting of the "NO" Committee shall take place in Room 424 Unicentre on January 21 at 1:30 p.m.

NOW HIRING POLL CLERKS

Applications can be picked up from the Elections Carleton Office (127-D Unicentre) starting Thursday, January 13 (noon). Contact the DEO, Colleen Felstead at 127-D Unicentre. DEADLINE: Friday, January 21, 1994 (noon).

110 YORK ST., BYWARD 234-0950

HOULIHAN'S

"LADIES' NIGHT"

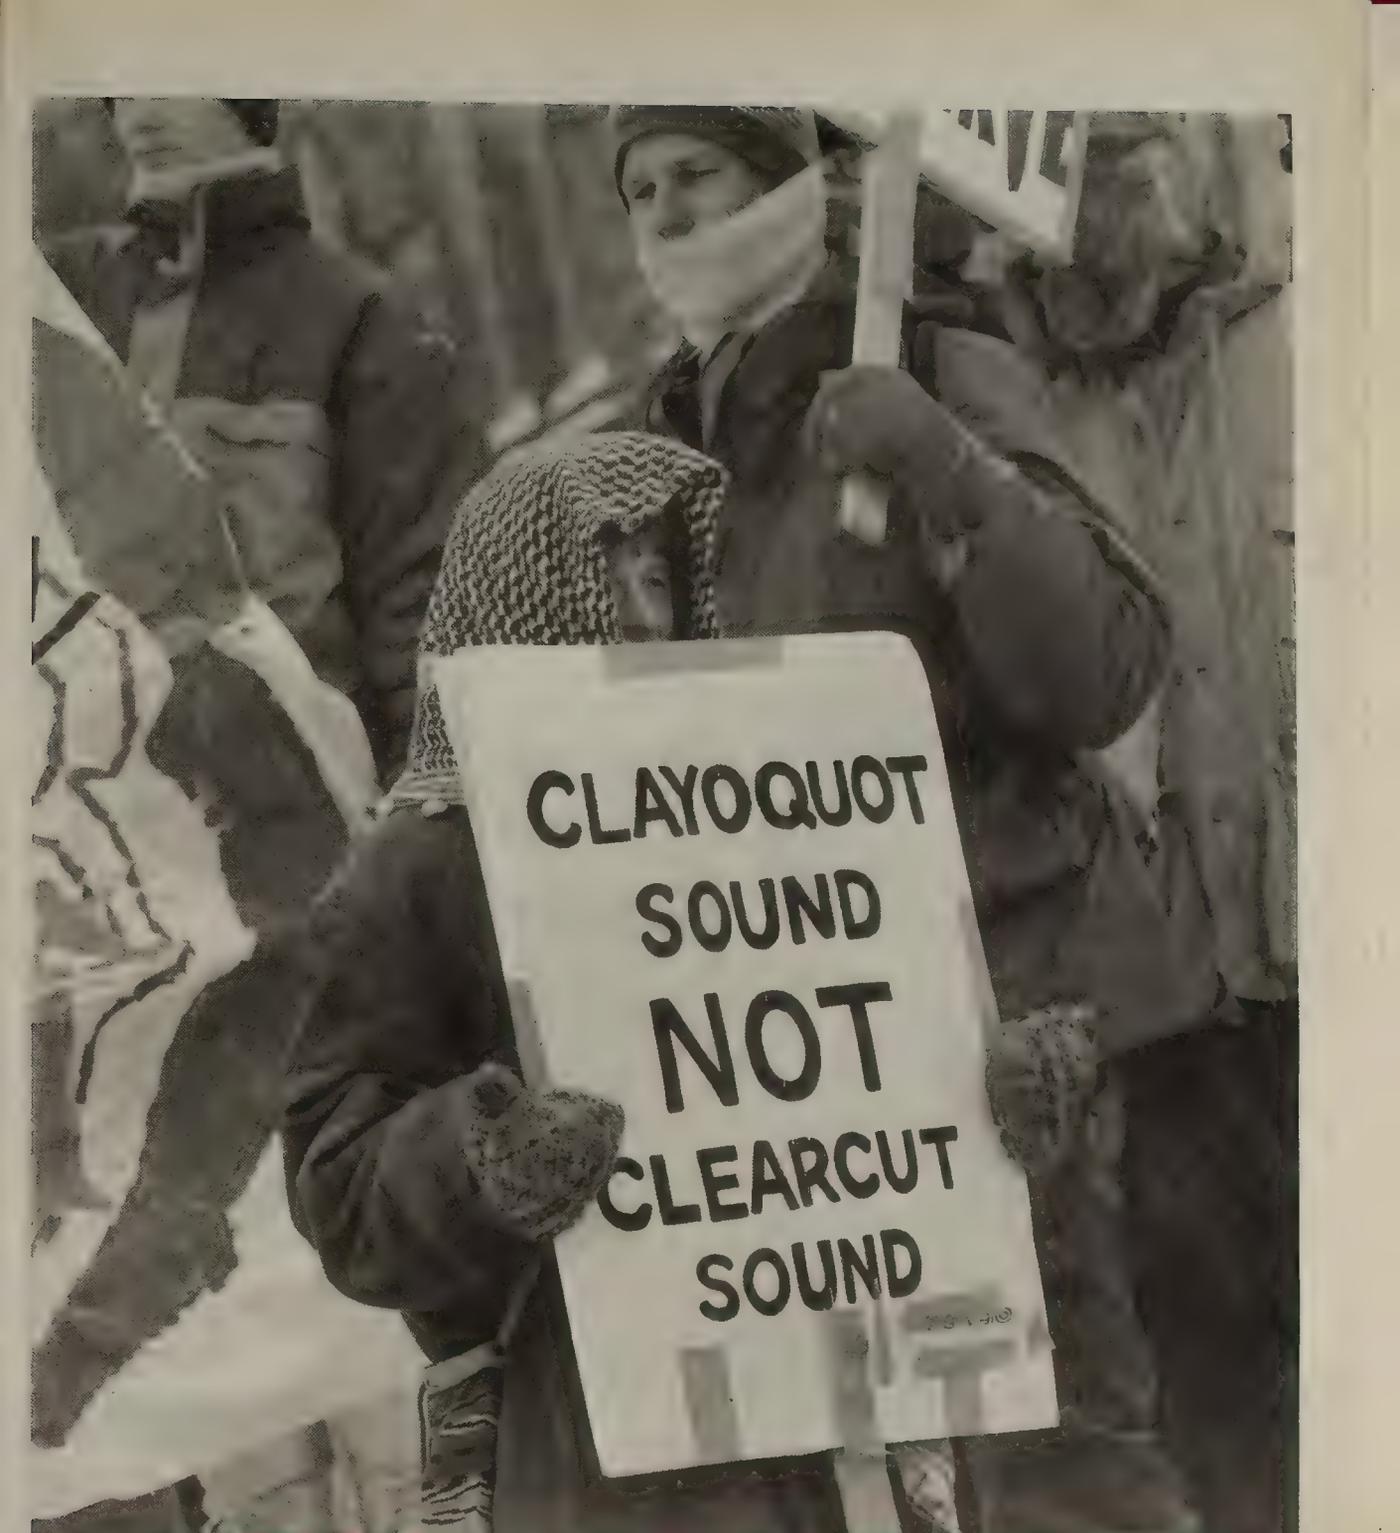

NO COVER CHARGE FOR WOMEN

Every Tuesday Night

15¢ WINGS TUES. & WED.
4:00 - 11:00

GOOD FOOD CHEAP! * POOL TABLES * VIDEO GAMES
AIR HOCKEY * HUGE DANCE FLOOR

TWO FLOORS OF FUN * PARTY NIGHTS
Sun, Mon, Tues, & Thurs

CLAYOQUOT SOUND
NOT CLEARCUT SOUND

t h e
CHARLATAN

CARLETON'S INDEPENDENT STUDENT NEWSPAPER

VOLUME 23

ISSUE 19

JANUARY 20

1994

WHERE CAN YOU AND YOUR DATE EAT A GREAT DINNER...FOR LESS THAN $20!!!

JANUARY COUPON

Full Course Dinner
only
99¢

(max. value $13.50)
order any full course dinner at reg. price & receive a second dinner of equal or lesser value for 99¢

Not valid with any other offer. P.S.T. & G.S.T. extra (coupon expires Jan. 31, 1994)

2446 Bank at Hunt club
(Towngate Plaza)
736-6577
Reservations & Banquet
Facilities Available

THE NOODLE WORKS

Ottawa South's
Finest Sunday
Brunch 10:30-2:30

FULL 3 COURSE DINNER - Soup or Salad, Fresh Baked San Francisco Sourdough Bread, Entree Selection, Spumoni Ice Cream, Coffee or Tea

FEBRUARY COUPON

Full Course Dinner
only
99¢

(max. value $13.50)
order any full course dinner at reg. price & receive a second dinner of equal or lesser value for 99¢

Not valid with any other offer. P.S.T. & G.S.T. extra (coupon valid from Feb. 1 - Feb. 28, 1994)

HOMEMADE PASTA DISHES • VEAL • CHICKEN & MORE

CRACKERS TWO

Sundays & Mondays

Sports on the
Big Screen
15¢ Wings

$2.50 Wednesdays

Ladies' Night
FREE POOL for Ladies

Tuesdays
Karaoke
Nite

January 20, 21, 22
Sound Storm

175 Richmond Road Tel. 722-3201.

HOME OF THE SOUTH END BLUES

TUCSON ROADHOUSE

Jan. 21/22
The Joneses
(Toronto's Hottest Blues Band)
COMING UP
Jan 28/29
Mojo Buford
(Muddy Waters' Harp Player)

2440 Bank Street (Bank at Huntclub) Ottawa
For Entertainment Information call 738-7586

Jan. 20
The Joneses
Jan. 21/22
Tony D.
COMING UP
Jan. 28/29
Dutch Mason
Prime Minister of the Blues

1541 Merivale Road, Ottawa
For Entertainment Information call 228-6666

Ottawa's
Meanest wings

only 25¢ each.
at

every night after 9:00pm.

Monday: 2 for 1 beef fajitas
Tuesday: 20¢ wings
1896 Prince of Wales Dr.
723-2096
bus route 175

ZAPHOD

BEETLEBROX
OPEN IMITATED, NEVER DUPLICATED

THU. JAN. 20 (9PM) $6
hHEAD
+ Trailer
Dickson

FRI. JAN. 21 (9PM) $6
CD RELEASE PARTY
LOST DAKOTAS

SAT. JAN. 22 (9PM) $7
CORKY & THE JUICE PIGS
+ Plain & Simple

8 pm
MONTY PYTHON VIDEO
Sunday

BINGO JET INTERNATIONAL
8 PM TUESDAYS

Fri. & Sat. Jan. 28 + 29
CD Release Party
GRIEVOUS ANGELS

MUSIC * BEVERAGES * ADVENTURE
27 YORK ST.

SALOON
Ottawa's Only
Authentic
Western Saloon

Sundays - Wednesdays

BEVERAGE
$1.50 Draught
SPECIALS

TONIGHT
Thurs. Jan 20
"Lucky Ron"
NFL on the Large
Screen
Come down to watch the Playoffs

Win tickets to the Superbowl
Meet Owner Mike
Schad from the Philadelphia Eagles
Come see us down
in the Byward Market
105 Murray St.
233-5716

Boulet Boots
starting at $169.00

The Lowest Prices
Guaranteed!
Convenient Location
in the Byward Market
99 Clarence St.
562-1320

TAs one step closer to strike

by Matt Skinner
Charlatan Staff

A conciliator appointed by Ontario's Ministry of Labor has failed to settle a dispute over the collective agreement between Carleton's administration and the Canadian Union of Public Employees Local 2323.

Discussions between the two parties broke off Wednesday, Jan. 12. The local's membership includes teaching assistants, research assistants, student computer consultants and student sessional lecturers at Carleton.

The local's collective agreement, which establishes wages, benefits and working conditions with the university, expired last August. The local filed for conciliation when talks between the two sides reached a standstill in October.

During conciliation, a government-appointed third party tries to help negotiate a suitable agreement between the two parties. If conciliation is unsuccessful, the parties go on to mediation, which is the final step before a legal strike is possible.

Local president Michel Roy says conciliation between the university and the local went nowhere because the university was inflexible.

"They sent back a message that they weren't willing to talk about any of the things that we needed to talk about, including wage and tuition proposals," he says.

The local has proposed administration give its members a five-per-cent increase in wages, a tuition freeze and an extra 10 paid hours each year. If accepted, a tuition freeze would maintain a local member's tuition fees for the duration of their employment.

David Van Dine, who is part of the university administration's negotiating team, says it estimates the wage increase, combined with the tuition freeze and increased hours, will result in a 12-per-cent wage increase for union members.

Roy says the local was willing to compromise on certain proposals it had suggested for the collective agreement, but the university negotiating team was less flexible. He says during conciliation, the local proposed to set aside demands for dental-care and vision-care packages in order to talk seriously about wages and tuition.

Van Dine says the university's proposal to the local was no wage increase and no tuition freeze. He would not comment on the negotiations because he says the bargaining process is a matter between union and employer. But he says the main issue in the talks has been money.

"We (the local) made it clear that we have to see some sort of improvement in the university's position that will allow us to at least come close to maintaining our poor standard of living," says Roy. "We are already the second worst-paid TAs in Ontario after Lakehead (University)."

Roy says if the university's proposal stands, some union members will be paying more to the university in tuition than they are taking home in pay. Currently, graduate TAs earn $6,471 per school year.

"The union is not willing to stand by and let this happen any longer," he says. "They don't respect us as employees. The bottom line is that the (local) membership really can't afford to pay more money of final positions.

Michel Roy : CUPE 2323 President.

"If the university's position remains the same, we'd have to take that pile of trash to the membership to see if they thought that that was a good offer," he says.

After mediation, the local's 1,200 members will vote on whether to accept the university's final offer. If the local doesn't accept it, a strike will be legally possible.

In a general membership meeting held on Jan. 8, the local's members voted unanimously to hold a strike vote on Feb. 15, 16, and 17.

"There definitely will be a strike vote," says Roy.

He says if 60 per cent of the members who vote in February are in favor of a strike, the university will be unable to, according to the "anti-scab" section of the labor relations act, allow anyone else to complete work that is normally done by members of the local.

"Even professors will be prohibited from doing teaching assistants' work," says Roy.

He says the union members will receive no wages while they are on strike. Brian Edgecombe, interim business agent for the local, says starting on the 10th calendar day the union members have been on strike, they will begin to receive $30 a day, up to a maximum of $150 a week, from CUPE's national strike fund.

"This is quite unfortunate but the university is going to have to realize that there are a great many functions that teaching and research assistants perform on this campus, and without them, this university won't function properly," says Roy.

Van Dine says Carleton has not had to deal with a strike by teaching and research assistants before, and is not sure whether or not it will slow down the operations of the school. □

Spit raises ire of GLB centre volunteers

by Andrea Smith
Charlatan Staff

A big wad of spit graced Lucy Watson's office window for over a week. It was put there by some unknown party who probably has a problem with the poster it landed on.

The poster, on the office window of the president of the Carleton University Students' Association, was produced by the York Federation of Students and the Colleges' Constituency Committee.

The poster features two men kissing and reads: "Who are you bashing? Brothers, neighbors, fathers, friends. Challenge homophobia."

On Jan. 4, Ernie Gibbs, a volunteer at Carleton's Gay, Lesbian, Bisexual Centre, complained to CUSA about the spit. Brian Evoy, another volunteer at the centre, says he and Gibbs complained again on Jan. 6.

Evoy says they were told by the receptionist that the CUSA office windows were cleaned regularly and the spit would soon be gone. Four days later on Jan. 10 the spit was still there, and Evoy says he complained again.

"It made me angry," says Evoy. "Obviously it means more than spit on a window. They're saying it's literally okay to spit on gay and lesbian people."

On Jan. 13, Evoy says he went to the office with GLB Centre co-ordinator Peter Nogalo to complain again.

Nogalo says he was personally assured on Jan. 13 by CUSA office manager Linda Stewart that the spit would be cleaned up by the next day. He says it was finally cleaned off in the afternoon of Jan. 14.

"I'm upset that once these complaints were made they weren't acted upon," says Nogalo. "It shouldn't take me as co-ordinator to get a reaction."

Nogalo says the university has a "zero-tolerance policy" regarding offensive graffiti which stipulates that once a complaint is registered, the graffiti must be removed within 24 hours.

But Don McEown, executive assistant to the university president of the university, says the university's policy doesn't apply to CUSA's offices or services.

"It's up to the students' association to abide by their own rules," says McEown.

Theresa Cowan, CUSA director of services, says the complaints weren't intentionally ignored.

"I think it was just an oversight," she says. "It's not that CUSA doesn't think we don't have to have and maintain these posters. It's not like we want people to see an anti-gay presence on campus."

She says the posters were Watson's idea, and added that as a service co-ordinator and member of CUSA staff, "It wouldn't have been difficult for (Nogalo) to wash it off either."

Speaking to Cowan's statement, Nogalo replied: "We could have removed it, yes. But it wasn't my window, my office, or my poster. And frankly, I don't do windows." □

WHO ARE YOU BASHING?

THE YOUTH FEDERATION OF STUDENTS AND COLLEGES' CONSTITUENCY COMMITTEE CHALLENGE HOMOPHOBIA

on the cover

It was cold enough to freeze the sap in your limbs, but over 100 protestors hit Parliament Hill, including this bundled woman, to protest logging on Vancouver Island. See story on page 7.

arts 21

classifieds 22

feature 14

national 7

news 3

opinion 11

sports 19

index

PHOTO BY TIM O'CONNOR

CKCU faces CRTC complaint over show

by Michael Mainville
Charlatan Staff

The Catholic Civil Rights League has filed a complaint with the Canadian Radio-television and Telecommunications Commission about comments made on CKCU, Carleton's radio station.

Robert Eady, a Kanata resident and league representative, filed the complaint Dec. 9 with the CRTC, a federal government agency responsible for regulating Canadian broadcasting. It has the power to regulate the content of programs, issue broadcasting licences and revoke them.

Eady's complaint deals specifically with two episodes of CKCU's gay and lesbian radio show called Defiant Voices. Eady says comments made on these episodes showed "ferocious hostility towards Catholics."

Eady says the hosts of the program, Kevin Gibbs and Kerry Durant, attacked him personally and the Catholic Church in general during their Dec. 1 and 8 broadcasts.

According to Eady, the attacks stemmed from a letter he wrote to The Charlatan, which appeared in the Nov. 25 issue. In the letter Eady is critical of Carleton students for screening the National Film Board production The Burning Times as part of Hate Hurts Week. The film states that the Catholic Church organized the burning of women suspected of being witches during the Spanish Inquisition.

In the letter, he wrote that historians have "disputed the film's claims about the number of victims of the medieval witch-burning craze and who was alleged to be responsible for the burnings."

Gibbs and Durant criticized Eady's letter on the Dec. 1 episode of Defiant Voices. Gibbs says what he and Durant said was that "perhaps when the Catholic Church learns to stop persecuting people, we can learn to stop persecuting it."

In response to Eady's complaints about the Dec. 1 show, Max Wallace, CKCU's station manager, allowed Eady to broadcast an unedited statement addressing his concerns on the Dec. 8 show.

Wallace says he specifically asked the hosts not to comment about the statement and they agreed. While they did not openly comment on the statement, Wallace says they did not stick to the spirit of the agreement.

Eady says Durant and Gibbs offended him several times on the Dec. 8 show, by discussing Irish singer Sinead O'Connor's tearing up of the Pope's photograph on the television show Saturday Night Live, and discussing the CBC production The Boys of St. Vincent, which is based on the sexual abuse of boys at an orphanage run by the Catholic Church in Newfoundland.

Eady says the program also incited violence against Catholics by playing two songs: "B-B-Q Pope" by the Butthole Surfers and "Will the Fetus Be Aborted," which is a parody of an American religious song, performed by Jello Biafra and Mojo Nixon.

During the episode, the two hosts "made a deliberate attempt to offend me and as many people of the Catholic faith as possible," wrote Eady in his letter to the CRTC. However, Gibbs says their ac-

Gibbs: compelled to refute Eady's comments.

ANDRÉ BELLEFLEUR

prohibits "any abusive comment that, when taken in context, tends or is likely to expose an individual or group or class of individuals to hatred or contempt on the basis of . . . religion."

Bill Allen, the CRTC's director of public information, says it's too early for a definite response to Eady's complaint, adding the commission will go through "an extended process" before making a decision. Allen says he is hoping to have the matter resolved within a month.

He says when looking at allegations of abusive comment, the commission tries to balance freedom of expression with the right to be protected from abusive comment. "When in doubt, the CRTC usually sides with freedom of expression," he adds.

Allen says it would take numerous complaints before there was a possibility of CKCU's licence being revoked. Wallace says he does not think it's likely that will happen.

"By its very nature, a gay and lesbian show is going to be controversial and will offend a lot of people," he says.

Despite Eady's complaint, Wallace defends the hosts' right to free speech. "I would defend, without a moment's hesitation, their rights to attack church policies on homosexuality. That is their obligation as advocates of the gay and lesbian community," he says.

Wallace sent a letter to Eady on Dec. 16 apologizing for any offence the show's content may have caused, although he says the show was not a personal attack on Eady.

"I'm not apologizing for what they broadcast . . . They did not attack Robert Eady, not the church, they attacked certain church policies, and that's their right," says Wallace.

Gibbs says the hosts were compelled to refute the comments in Eady's letter to The Charlatan because "he misrepresented the intent of the showing of the film." □

VOYAGEUR RE-INVENTS THE WHEEL!

"STUDENS-HWEOGOL"?? "Students' Wheels" to the uninitiated like TRAWG. Yes, looks like GROG has taken a turn for the worse and gone off to study Old English this term, or should we say Future English for him?! Anyway, for you the "studens", it means a good deal. Take advantage of GROG'S post-Xmas deflationary, antiquarian stance and travel between Ottawa and Toronto at just $59.* return with Voyageur.

Grog's busy with his ancient manuscripts right through March 30th 1994. But you must return by that date!!

TORONTO - OTTAWA $59.*

238-5900

*CONDITIONS
Non-must be 25 years of age or less and present a valid 1993-94 fulltime studies Student ID card (cards issued in previous school years must be validated for '93-'94) or a Registrar's Confirmation of Enrollment. No discounted One-way fare available. Taxes as applicable are extra. All travel must be completed by March 30th, 1994.

Voyageur

Fake parking passes make rounds

by Brandie Weikle
Charlatan Staff

A number of counterfeit parking permits have been found on the windshields of cars in Carleton's parking lots and the parking garage near administration.

"Individuals are reproducing the parking permits for the various lots, putting them on their vehicles, and illegally parking there," says Len Boudreault, assistant director of the department of university safety.

Parking staff have discovered some of the fake permits and had the cars towed. Offenders have been billed for the permits they were imitating, which cost up to $600, depending on which lot the permit was for, says Boudreault.

Carole Dunlevie, manager of parking and lockers, says regulations set by the university's parking committee allow the university to bill offenders for using a fake permit.

Boudreault says most offenders are being found in the lot next to the football field and the one near the residences, as well as in the visitor parking garage by the administration building.

In light of the problem, Boudreault says of future offenders: "I'm going to charge them criminally."

Offenders will face charges of fraud, the subsequent fines, and a criminal record, he says.

Dunlevie says the fake passes are produced by making a color photocopy of a real pass and then stenciling a new serial number over the original one. This is then laminated in plastic and stuck on a vehicle windshield.

She says the forgeries are getting more ingenious, adding she has seen crude copy which was a Polaroid photo of a parking pass which someone was trying to pass off as an original.

Dunlevie says the fake passes were spotted by attendants doing random patrols of the lot, or working at lot entrances.

"On a dark, dreary day or in the evening, the parking attendant would not catch it," says Dunlevie.

Boudreault says offenders may make a fake permit using the number of a pass held by a person who legally bought it. He says this could implicate someone who had nothing to do with the forgery.

Dunlevie says fake permits are sold in the parking lot and there are unauthorized signs up in the Unicentre and the library advertising these permits for sale.

Dunlevie says it is possible that some people may have bought a counterfeit permit without realizing it. She says a student could think they were buying a parking pass from someone who was quitting school. But it is illegal to buy and sell permits outside the parking control office, she says.

The permits are "not-transferrable," says Dunlevie. "So when a student withdraws or quits or completes (school) they bring the permit back to us for a refund and we can go to a waiting list."

There are presently about 600 people on a waiting list for parking, says Dunlevie.

Boudreault and Dunlevie say they do not know how many fake permits there are. Dunlevie says there have been fake

FORGE cont'd on page 6

Aboriginal centre celebrates birthday

by Caron Watt
Charlatan Staff

Carleton's Centre for Aboriginal Education, Research and Culture is celebrating its first birthday this month.

The centre was opened last January in conjunction with the United Nations' International Year of Indigenous Peoples. It was "established so that aboriginal heritage could find expression alongside other Canadian heritages on campus," says Madeleine Dion Stout, the centre's director.

The centre provides personal support as well as academic and career counselling for Carleton's aboriginal students, says Dion Stout.

The "support that the centre has provided for the students is our biggest accomplishment," says Dion Stout.

The fact that the centre is officially recognized by the university and has a space on campus "goes a long way in enhancing the identity of aboriginal people," says Dion Stout.

A common problem for aboriginal students is that of identity, she says. Many aboriginal students studying at "modern" institutions like universities are, at the same time, trying to maintain their traditional roots, she says.

On an academic level, says Dion Stout, university can be a big struggle for aboriginal students.

"They want to get into university and be able to stay in and do well," she says. But she says universities can alienate them with courses that in some cases teach only about European experiences, Stout says.

"If a professor gets up there . . . and says that aboriginal people don't exist as a distinct nation, that's a way that could alienate students," she says. "In a case like that we are hoping that the aboriginal student . . . would feel good enough about their aboriginality to challenge that."

Roberta Stout dances at powwow.

In the next year, the centre hopes to "continue the good tone that has been set with the students," says Dion Stout.

The centre is also trying to encourage the university to recognize that "there are other ways (and) other knowledge around that isn't necessarily steeped in academia," she says.

"Universities like Carleton are traditionally very Eurocentric. . . There's this dominant way of viewing the world, a 'modern way,'" Dion Stout says.

No records are kept of how many aboriginal students there are on campus, but about 40 have come to the centre for various reasons, says Dion Stout.

For many aboriginal students, the centre "provides a study area, privacy, a quiet place to crash, think, call someone or socialize," says John Cheechoo, a first-year student who spends time there.

"We could have a bigger space available. There's only room for about six people to sit comfortably," he says.

The centre is located in Room B255 of the Loeb Building and takes up two rooms, one which students use to relax on the couch or do homework at a table.

The second room contains Dion Stout's office and a desk for her assistant.

This year, there are "a lot more new students," says Billie Littlechild, a second-year student from a Cree reserve called Hobbema in Alberta. She has lived in Ottawa for the last two years.

"It hard to come to an urban centre from a reserve," says Littlechild. "You go through difficult stages and are homesick a lot."

"There's still a lot of students who don't come by the centre," says Roberta Stout, who is Dion Stout's daughter and a third-year student.

Reaching more aboriginal students is not an immediate concern of the centre, says Dion Stout.

She says she feels most of the aboriginal students know about the centre, but it's their choice whether or not they come in, says Stout.

"Some people just aren't joiners. It's a very personal decision," says Dion Stout.

Dion Stout was hired in July 1992 by a university task force that was set up in 1989 to plan for the opening of the centre. The centre did not officially open until January 1993.

"There were many people involved from the larger community," says Dion Stout. "There is a strong linkage with the community through our students."

The anniversary was celebrated by a series of events in the second week of January, including a film presentation, panel discussion, a powwow and an art exhibit in Carleton's art gallery by Gerald McMaster.

About 50 people attended the powwow held in Porter Hall on Jan. 14. Both aboriginal and non-aboriginal people were invited to participate in the dancing.

Many of the dancers donned traditional dress, which they made themselves, says Dion Stout. □

Panelists call for inclusive education

by Andrea Wiebe
Charlatan Staff

Panelists at a discussion last week said there is a need to include Native perspectives and experiences in university education.

The discussion, called "Indigenizing Academia," was organized by Carleton's Centre for Aboriginal Education, Research and Culture as part of its first anniversary this month.

The two-hour discussion on Jan. 12 explored the incorporation of aboriginal traditions and culture into post-secondary education. Panelist Gordon Polson, a Native person working on a research project at Carleton, discussed the problems that arise from differences in cultural values and the clash between two separate ways of thinking.

To overcome these fundamental problems, said Polson, there must be a give-and-take relationship between cultures as well as a mutual respect for different types of knowledge.

Jim Albert, a professor in Carleton's school of social work and a panelist, said he has been working to include indigenous peoples in education through community-based teaching in the communities of Kitigan Zibi and Kahnawaki.

Albert explained that education must begin inside the communities by working with community leaders, so that the specific needs of each community can be met.

Panelists (l-r) Albert, Kinoshameg and Polson.

Panelist Nancy Kinoshameg, a second-year political science student and president of the aboriginal student group called Carleton First Nations, talked about her experiences in classes at Carleton.

She said the only course she has taken that explores aboriginal history in any detail is Canadian Studies.

She explained that, instead of being taught in one or two lectures, aboriginal culture and history should be woven through all lectures, in the same way French culture is taught.

The panelists agreed that incorporating indigenous culture into the academic system is hampered by a lack of funds which are needed to fund new programs and hire new professors. □

APPLE SADDLERY
The Largest Western Boot Store in Canada.
INNES ROAD JUST EAST OF THE 417 (NEAR THE PRICE CLUB)

What have your services done for you?

by Matt Skinner
Charlatan Staff

Carleton's student service coordinators are funded out of the $80-$95 annual fee each undergraduate student pays to the Carleton University Students' Association.

With the academic year half over, The Charlatan decided to find out what the coordinators have done so far this year, and whether they have any new plans.

This week, we profile the Foot Patrol and the Carleton Women's Centre.

BRENDA KENNEDY — FOOT PATROL CO-ORDINATOR

The Carleton Foot Patrol gave its first escort in the fall of 1990. Since last September, it has provided 1,155 people with escorts across campus, on par with the 1,162 people escorted for the same time period last year.

This service is offered seven nights a week from 8 p.m. to 1 a.m., says Brenda Kennedy, the patrol's co-ordinator. It will provide people with a two-person escort (a man and a woman), from wherever they are on campus to wherever they want to go on campus.

"Students, staff, visitors, faculty, whoever is on campus can use us," says Kennedy.

She says the patrol service was extended to include escorts through Brewer Park in 1992. This year patrol members may escort people as far as Hog's Back on the canal and to the Route 3 bus stop on Prince of Wales Drive, says Kennedy.

"My next plan, if I can get it through, would be to go across the Bronson Bridge," says Kennedy. She says this has to approved by the insurance company before it can be implemented.

Kennedy: Foot Patrol making progress.

"Walk-bys" can also be arranged, where a pair of patrollers walks by where a person is studying or researching. Kennedy says the patrol also is on duty in the sense that at any given time between 8 p.m. and 1 a.m. there are four co-ed teams patrolling the campus.

"When we're not actively escorting someone, we're still out there," she says.

Kennedy says the patrollers work in pairs and rely on the "safety-in-numbers idea." She says the patrol does not encourage people to rely on products marketed as "safety gadgets," such as personal alarms or pepper spray.

Kennedy says these devices give users a false sense of security and can be turned against them. She also says she disagrees with firms which make money off people's fear.

The centre operates with the help of about 250 volunteers who undergo a full day of "extensive training," led by Kennedy and experienced volunteers. The training includes a seminar on emergency procedures, such as how to help sexual assault victims, says Kennedy.

"We like to make sure our patrollers are fully equipped to deal with anything that could possibly happen," she says.

If someone wants an escort they can arrange one in advance, drop by the patrol office in Baker Lounge or call 788-4066 from where they are.

"I encourage everyone to use (the service). Don't feel embarrassed," she says.

While the structure of the service remains the same as in previous years, Kennedy says this year she is trying to do more to recognize the contribution of the volunteer patrollers.

Sponsorship from various local businesses allows the patrol to have random draws for prizes twice weekly, with two more draws each month for larger prizes.

The Foot Patrol does not operate during the summer months, even though there are many evening courses offered during the summer. Kennedy says it would be hard to organize a patrol service in the summer because of a lack of volunteers, but adds a reduced service may be possible.

She says the patrol could operate under a reduced schedule, with two teams instead of four. Kennedy says she's planning on looking at the idea seriously in February or March.

RENÉE TWADDLE — CARLETON WOMEN'S CENTRE CO-ORDINATOR

"The primary function of the women's centre is to serve the needs of the women on campus," says Renée Twaddle, co-ordinator for the centre. She says the centre tries to meet the needs of the diverse women on the campus.

This year, for the first time, the centre has four caucuses which women can join. There are caucuses for women with disabilities, women of color, lesbian women and black women. These caucuses can meet at the centre to discuss issues and bring in guest speakers.

The women's centre provides users with literature that cannot be found in the MacOdrum Library or in most bookstores, she says. Twaddle says about $5,500 of the centre's $40,000 budget goes towards books, magazines and journals. The literature covers such topics as spirituality, religion, anthropology, sociology, sexuality, lesbianism and racism.

The centre also has a referral system for women who need services such as lawyers, doctors, gynaecologists or midwives.

Twaddle says while the centre is not a crisis centre, they do get women in crisis who need to talk to someone right away. She says a volunteer from the centre talks to them and tries to refer them elsewhere, depending on their needs.

Volunteers are trained by Twaddle on how to listen, so when women come in with problems and need someone to talk to they will be prepared, says Twaddle. Volunteers are trained in workshops to deal with various problem-solving situations.

She says the topics covered in the centre's awareness campaigns vary annually. Some issues focused on in past years were sexual abuse and eating disorders.

This year Womancare Week will be held Feb. 7 to 11. She says this will cover eating disorders, body image, women with disabilities, women and sexually transmitted diseases, spirituality, and hopefully new reproductive technology.

Rape Awareness Week will be held in February just prior to the reading break.

"A lot of students, a lot of women, come back after reading week and have been date raped," especially while on vacation, says Twaddle. Last year Rape Awareness Week was held earlier in the academic year.

Twaddle says International Women's

Twaddle: works to meet diverse needs.

Week is scheduled for March.

"This is when we celebrate the diversity of women internationally. The whole world holds this week," she says.

During these weeks the centre brings in guest speakers, holds panel discussions and workshops and shows films pertinent to the week's theme.

"We're trying to raise awareness. That's the whole point of the centre, (to) raise awareness that it's not just women's issues. These are issues that affect everybody in society," she says.

Twaddle says the committees that prepare for such events as Womancare Week and Rape Awareness Week consult the four caucuses to ensure no issue is overlooked in the planning.

Twaddle says the centre runs with the help of trained volunteers. In September about 30 people trained to work at the centre and Twaddle says everyone has stayed to help. The next training session for new volunteers will be held Feb. 5 and 6.

She says volunteers can attend workshops on anti-sexism, anti-homophobia, anti-racism and collectivism. □

Official-Languages Monitor Program

Under a program funded by the Government of Canada, the Ministry of Education and Training in conjunction with the Council of Ministers of Education, Canada, invites students to apply for the position of second-language monitors (French or English) for the 1994-95 academic year.

Part-Time Monitors

Official-languages monitors must be full-time postsecondary students usually studying in a province other than their own. They will work between six and eight hours per week under the supervision of a second-language teacher. Some francophone monitors will be assigned to French schools outside Quebec. For eight months' participation in the program, they will receive at least $3,500 and one return trip between their home and the host province.

To be eligible for the part-time program, students must have completed at least one year of postsecondary studies or will have completed such studies by the end of the 1993-94 academic year.

Full-Time Monitors

Full-time monitors must have completed at least one year of postsecondary studies. Duties consist of assisting French second-language teachers in rural or semi-urban areas usually in a province other than their own, for 25 hours per week. Some francophone monitors will be assigned to French schools outside Quebec. Monitors will receive up to $11,400 for 10 months of participation. They will also receive two return trips per year between their home province and the host province. They may also receive a moving allowance of a minimum of $300 and a maximum of $1,110 for commuting expenses within the host province.

Application forms and program brochures may be obtained from placement offices in postsecondary institutions, or from the address below:

Provincial Co-ordinator, Monitor Program
Ministry of Education and Training
French Language Education, Policy and Programs
16th Floor, Mowat Block, Queen's Park
Toronto, Ontario
M7A 1L2

Duly completed application forms must arrive at the address indicated in the information package, postmarked no later than February 18, 1994. Qualified candidates will be required to attend an interview.

FORGE cont'd from page 4

permits recovered in previous years, but this year there seems to be a much greater number.

Parking attendants frequently experience problems with people driving over curbs, through the gates or simply pleading at the gate in front of a long line of cars that they have no money, says Dunlevie. Recently, concrete barriers have been put in around the lots to prevent people from sneaking a free park.

Dunlevie says there is a direct link between parking lot fraud and the increased cost of parking on campus. Last September parking fees went up an average of 20 per cent.

In addition to this, says Dunlevie, the cost of enforcement has risen now that the department of university safety is involved. She says investigating the fakes takes officers away from other duties. □

NATIONAL AFFAIRS

Clayoquot protestors ask PM for help

by Derek DeCloet
Charlatan Staff

Over 150 people gathered on Parliament Hill Jan. 17, vowing to make the Liberal government keep its promise to protect Clayoquot Sound from clear-cut logging.

"We wanted Jean Chrétien to know that we're going to be here until he does something about this," said organizer Chloe Sage of the Ottawa Coalition to Save Clayoquot Sound. "Chrétien did promise to get involved and we're going to hold him to that."

Chrétien said on Oct. 21 he would try to have the area designated as a national park, protecting it from extensive logging. Four days later, he was elected prime minister with a majority government.

MP and Clayoquot defender Svend Robinson.

Sage, a second-year sociology student at Carleton, said she would be willing to go farther than just protests and petitions, if the issue isn't a part of the new government's agenda.

"I can't speak for the coalition, but I'd go as far as hunger strikes," she said. "It's something that is very important."

About 40 Carleton students were among the protestors.

"I'm pretty pleased with the amount of Carleton students," said John Zronik, CUSA's environment commissioner. "A lot of them are pretty apathetic."

The protest was held to coincide with the opening of Parliament, said Sage, and to lend support to jailed environmentalists who are appealing their sentences. Jan. 17 is the first day B.C. courts were scheduled to hear the appeals of those people convicted for illegally blocking logging roads to Clayoquot Sound.

Environmentalists are hoping Ottawa will intervene in negotiations between the B.C. government and the Nuu-chah-nulth nation, indigenous people who have title to the land. The negotiations are supposed to end in a treaty which will settle the issue of who controls the land and how it will be used.

"We're hoping there's enough goodwill in the B.C. government and in their cabinet," said Elizabeth May, executive director of an environmental group called the Sierra Club. "One hopes that when the federal government offers them (the B.C. government) help, they'll accept that and create protected areas within Clayoquot Sound."

May said she hopes the Liberal government will designate the area as a tribal park, giving aboriginal people control over the land. But any move to create a national park would have to be approved by the province.

The B.C. government agreed Dec. 10 to jointly manage the area's resources with the Nuu-chah-nulth nation. But the agreement only lasts for two years and must first be ratified by the legislature and the tribes of the Nuu-chah-nulth nation, said coalition member Ron LeBlanc.

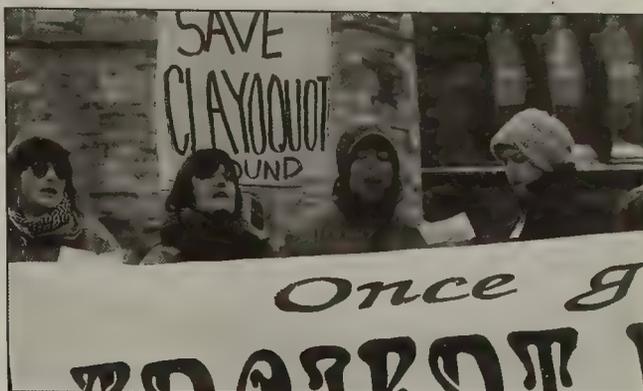

Giving aboriginal people control over the land is the best chance for stopping the logging of Clayoquot Sound, he added.

"That is our message to Mr. Chrétien," said LeBlanc. "Let's help get the Nuu-chah-nulth a fair deal and then let's help them develop a sustainable economy in Clayoquot Sound. That is our best hope right now."

About 20 students from St. Pius X high school cut classes to join the protest.

"There will be consequences, but we're prepared to take them," said Michelle Legendre, a Grade 11 student.

About 30 students from McGill University in Montreal were supposed to show up, but couldn't make it because of the weather, said Sage, although she was pleased with the turnout. □

"Women of Notice" sing to protesters at Clayoquot Sound rally on Parliament Hill.

Environmentalists sound warning

by Brandie Welkie
Charlatan Staff

At a press conference Jan. 17, the Western Canada Wilderness Committee and the Sierra Club of Canada presented the new Parliament with 105,000 signatures calling for the preservation of Clayoquot Sound.

The petition was presented on the first day of Parliament to remind Jean Chrétien of his campaign promise to negotiate the preservation of the area, said Elizabeth May, executive director of an environmental group called the Sierra Club.

Clayoquot Sound is a large area of old-growth forest on Vancouver Island that was the scene of confrontations between loggers and environmentalists last summer.

Liberal MP Charles Caccia was present at the conference and said he would table the petition in the House of Commons. He expressed his concern that satellite pictures of Vancouver Island indicate the rainforest has been "badly over-cut."

He said there is a "deficit in the reservoir of timber on the island and poor results in second growth. The way the clearcuts have been carried away is an embarrassment. The availability of timber has decreased at such a fast rate that eventually there will be no jobs for loggers."

Caccia said he "can't understand why the government of B.C. has not taken the steps to protect the Clayoquot Sound."

NDP MP Svend Robinson, who was active in last summer's protests in his home province, said if "intact areas are not protected, there will be no question this protest will go on."

The efforts to save the largest remaining tract of temperate rainforest in North America began when the B.C. government approved plans for logging in the area, said Adriane Carr, executive director of the wilderness committee.

Last April, MacMillan Bloedel and Interfor forest companies were granted permission to log in the area.

Carr said Canada made interim agreements to protect Clayoquot at the International Biodiversity Convention, one part of the Rio de Janeiro summit on the environment in 1992. These agreements came into effect Dec. 23, 1993.

The Sierra Club and other environmental groups hope to use the agreements as part of a strategy to stop the clearcutting, said Toki Geuer, a researcher for the Sierra Club.

She said the groups are looking at the possibility of charging "the provincial government of B.C. with contravening the agreements made at the convention" by allowing clearcutting.

But Geuer said forestry is a provincial issue and this has been "Chrétien's excuse for back-peddaling on his campaign promises."

But since the agreements made at the convention were on behalf of the entire country, interested groups may be able to demand federal intervention, said Geuer.

The federal government should make Clayoquot Sound "a showpiece for the world" or face increasing international tension and another summer of blockades, said Carr. □

Employability skills: the future of education?

by Ian Mcleod
Charlatan Staff

"Work tomorrow is going to be different than work yesterday," says Stan Jones, a Carleton linguistics professor and resident expert on educational testing.

In a lecture given Jan. 14 at Carleton as part of a series entitled "Rethinking the University: A Look To The Future," Jones spoke on the employability skills movement and how it will affect undergraduate university education. About 20 faculty and students attended the lecture.

Employability skills are described as generic, basic skills required for a person to participate effectively in the work force. Some of these skills include basic literacy and numeracy, as well as the principles of teamwork and critical thinking.

School boards and educational authorities are realizing, according to Jones, that students are not necessarily being well-served in this area by secondary-school curricula.

Changes are being made to some degree, with the introduction of programs such as the Transition Years Program in Ontario, which aim to develop a standard level of competency in literacy, numeracy and other skills across the school system.

Organizations such as the Conference Board of Canada and the Ontario Premier's Council have also expressed their support for the development of employability skills in schools.

The irony of this newfound support for employability skills education is that most of the skills that fall into this category are already either explicitly or implicitly taught in schools. Skills such as literacy, numeracy and effective oral communication have traditionally been considered key goals of schooling.

Jones says schools are not doing a bad job teaching these skills, but rather the wrong job.

For example, Jones says reading can be grouped into two distinct types: "reading to learn" and "reading to do." Reading to learn is the traditional kind of reading done in secondary school and university — the reading of a standard text for general comprehension.

Reading to do, by contrast, is the kind of reading done most commonly in the world of work — the reading of blueprints, charts and lists, literally what to do, and how to do it.

Jones says surveys conducted to classify adults' level of literacy showed that those people considered reasonably literate still had trouble following instructions and making associations based on information they were given.

The subjects in this and other surveys who fall into the youngest age ranges tended to have more difficulty with this type of "reading-to-do" comprehension. Jones believes this is because of the lack of experience and training this group of 16 to 20 year olds have in reading to do.

Studies show that as these people age,

SKILLS cont'd on page 9.

FACULTY OF ARTS

INFORMATION

ADVISING SERVICES OF THE REGISTRARIAL SERVICES OFFICE, FACULTY OF ARTS

This office provides advisory services regarding the regulations and policies of the Faculty and handles student petitions concerning these regulations and policies. Students requiring advice on matters of faculty regulation and policy should contact the Arts Registrarial Services Office at 788-7462. Students requiring academic advice on their specific program of study should consult their academic department.

MARCH ADVISING

Advisors will be available to answer questions regarding academic performance. The Arts Registrarial Services Office is offering a walk-in advisory service from March 14 through March 25th. The hours will be 10:00-12:00 and 1:00-3:30 each day.

RECORDS SERVICES OF THE REGISTRARIAL SERVICES OFFICE, FACULTY OF ARTS

The office processes student applications for Declaration of Major & Change of Major, Letters of Permission, Graduation, Review of a Course Grade, and Supplemental or Grade Raising Exams.

The office is also responsible for assessing students' academic standing, explaining student's Academic Audits and responding to students who encounter registration problems. If you have enquiries of this nature, contact the Arts Registrarial Services Office at 788-7460.

WITHDRAWAL DEADLINE

Students should keep in mind that they may withdraw from Fall/Winter or Winter term courses by March 11th with no academic penalty.

If you have declared a major, or part of your combined major, in any of the disciplines listed below, or have not yet declared a major, you belong with Registrarial Services for Arts, Room 318, Paterson Hall.

Art History
Canadian Studies
Classics
Directed Interdisciplinary Studies
English
Environmental Studies
Film Studies
French
German
History
Italian
Journalism
Linguistics and Applied Language Studies
Music
Philosophy
Religion
Russian Spanish

POTENTIAL SPRING GRADUATES

Dates and Deadlines for June Graduation
Application Deadline: February 1
Last day to cancel application: April 29
Senate meeting/results mailed: June 7
Convocation ceremonies: June 16, 17 and 18

Changing to Pass to Graduate

Those of you who have switched from a B.A. Honours program to a B.A. Pass in order to graduate but plan to continue with a B.A. Honours, must apply for re-admission through the Office of Admissions.

If you have any questions about your eligibility for re-admission, ask to speak to an Advisor when applying for graduation.

Letter of Permission Transcripts

If you are completing degree requirements at another University on a Letter of Permission, you are responsible for ensuring that final transcripts reach our office no later than April 29th. Late transcripts may jeopardize your eligibility to graduate.

Degree Program Requirements

Questions concerning specific program requirements should be directed to the Undergraduate Supervisor(s) in your major department(s).

DECLARING A MAJOR

Students in the Faculty of Arts must declare a major by the end of their first year. Students who have not declared a major must request special permission from their faculty Registrarial Services Office to register in second year.

NOTE: Students in third and fourth year who have not declared a major will be DEBARRED from further studies.

To be accepted into a major you must have completed at least one course leading to the major discipline. The average for all courses in the major discipline must be 4.0 (C-) or above for the Pass Degree program, and 6.0 (C+) or above for the Honours Degree program to be accepted into that discipline. For the Honours program, students entering fourth year require a grade point average (G.P.A.) of at least 6.5 in the major discipline.

Applications to declare a major will be accepted at the Arts Registrarial Services Office until May 13, 1994. Changes will be in effect for the fall of 1994.

ACADEMIC STANDING DECISIONS

The University makes Academic Standing Decisions at the end of each Fall-Winter Session. Many students—but not all students—will receive a Standing Decision at the end of the Winter term. There are three possible Academic Standing Decisions:

- ◆ Good Standing
- ◆ On Probation
- ◆ Debarred

The Arts Registrarial Services Office has a leaflet entitled Your Guide to Academic Standing. The information in the leaflet should help you to determine whether you are likely to receive an Academic Standing Decision or not. It should also assist you in assessing your own academic performance and what your next Academic Standing Decision might be.

If you feel that your grades are likely to be low this term and that you might receive an Academic Standing Decision other than Good Standing,

Arrange to see an Advisor in Registrarial Services before March 11th

CHANGE OF ADDRESS

It is important that you advise us of any change of address to ensure that we can notify you of your results. If you move, please notify your faculty Registrarial Services Office immediately indicating that you are a potential graduate. We will not be held responsible if your diploma is sent to the wrong address.

APPLYING FOR TRANSFER OF CREDIT

If you have completed a minimum of 4.0 credits at Carleton, are in good academic standing and have successfully declared a major, you may be eligible to take courses at another university for credit towards your degree program.

A brochure describing Letters of Permission is available in the Arts Registrarial Services Office.

Letter of Permission Deadlines

March 30 Last day to apply for Letter of Permission for May 15 registration.

April 29 Last day to apply for Letter of Permission for July 1 registration.

July 15 Last day to submit transcripts for winter-term Letters of Permission.

If you are completing a final credit for your degree on an LOP during the Fall/Winter session, grades may not be available in time for spring graduation. Official Transcripts must be received by April 29.

Carleton
UNIVERSITY

Ottawa professor under investigation

by Josée Bellemare
Charlatan Staff

Complaints by students at the University of Ottawa about a professor's controversial remarks have sparked an investigation into his teaching practices.

About eight students at the U of O walked out of their first-year sociology class Jan. 4 when they heard Professor Paul Lamy make homophobic statements in his lecture.

Joel Duff, a second-year sociology student at U of O, says he heard Lamy say during the lecture, "You call them bisexuals, I call them psychopaths."

Duff made a verbal complaint to Fred Caloren, department head of sociology, immediately after he heard the professor's comment. Later that week, Duff composed a formal letter of complaint to Henry Edwards, the dean of social sciences.

In a press release Jan. 12, Edwards agreed to conduct an investigation into Lamy's views on bisexual relationships.

"As part of my investigation, I will consider objectively the perspectives of all concerned, including those of the students who submitted the complaints, and those of Professor Lamy," his press release said. "It is only after this investigation that I will be able to determine whether the complaints are valid or not, and what measures if any should be undertaken."

The investigation's report should be completed by the end of the month. The dean's office says it has no further comment about the investigation or the kind of disciplinary action that could be taken against Lamy. The professor has made no comment to the media on the situation.

In his letter to the dean, Duff described how, during an in-class discussion on "the family," Lamy said he excluded gay and lesbian relationships from the discussion because they could not possess family values.

"He delegitimized the legalization of gay and lesbian marriage on the grounds that by its inclusion, we would then have to legalize bisexual marriage and then by extension that we would have to legalize polygamy," said the letter. "It was at this point, and in this context, that he chose to equate bisexuals with psychopaths."

Duff says when students left the class after they heard this statement, Lamy told the class they must have left because they are bisexuals.

Lamy also said gay and lesbian relationships within the institution of marriage would lead to the breakdown of marriage itself.

"The whole thing was appalling," says Meredith Lilly, a first-year student in sociology.

When Lamy was questioned about how gay and lesbian relationships broke down the institution of marriage, Lilly says he side-stepped their questions.

"He would talk around it," she says. Lilly says Lamy usually conducts a one-sided discussion, neglecting the advantages or disadvantages of a certain topic.

"I want to know the advantages of bisexuals," she says.

Duff says during the break in Lamy's class the following week, he tried to circulate a petition calling for disciplinary action against the professor's teaching practices. Because Lamy told the students they couldn't sign the petition in his class, Duff says some went out into the hall to sign the petition.

Duff says he was disappointed because many students seemed uncertain about signing after Lamy yelled at the class. He says seven students signed the petition out of a class of about 200 students.

Shannon Balla, a first-year psychology student, says students obeyed him because he made them feel uncomfortable.

"He seemed extremely angry," Balla says. "He was yelling."

There were other complaints as early as November about controversial comments made by Lamy.

Balla says she complained to the sociology department in November when Lamy equated marital violence with a bar-room brawl. She says Lamy refused to provide concrete sociological evidence to support his statements when the students challenged his views.

Lamy also told the class they shouldn't be concerned with date rape and marital violence because it only concerns a few people, says Balla. "He said we should be worried about getting an education."

"I found that class fairly insulting," she says. "I think it's absolutely inappropriate for a sociology professor to be putting his biases in his teaching."

Lilly says she feels the same. "I feel he's abusing his position of authority," she says. "(It) being a first-year class, he has a lot of influence over them."

Duff says he hopes his petition will result in a serious review on Lamy's teaching practices.

"I don't think his views are representative of the department's views," he says. "It's for this reason that I think it's important for the department to demonstrate that his teaching doesn't meet their standards and values."

The press release from Edwards said the dean's investigation would review the effects of Lamy's statements on his class.

"I assure all concerned that the faculty of social sciences, in keeping with the policies of the University of Ottawa, does not tolerate discrimination or harassment against minorities, and is committed to fostering a productive and orderly classroom learning environment," said Edwards.

Duff says he feels optimistic about the investigation.

"I think (Edwards will) do nothing but the right thing," he says. "I just don't want to hear them (offensive comments). It offends us. It hinders our pursuit of knowledge, and academically, he shouldn't be able to make them without qualification." □

Lamy also told the class they shouldn't be concerned with date rape and marital violence because it only concerns a few people.

McMaster students fail to turn out for CFS referendum

by Michael Mainville
Charlatan Staff

Students at McMaster University in Hamilton have lost their chance to vote on whether or not to accept a hike to their annual student fees for the Canadian Federation of Students.

In a referendum held Nov. 30 and Dec. 1, student participation did not reach the required 10 per cent necessary for the referendum to be valid. The referendum question asked McMaster students for a $4 increase per student to their annual student levy for the CFS.

"Only 8.75 per cent of the student population voted in the referendum," says Marzena Gersho, chief returning officer for the McMaster Student Union's elections committee.

Gersho says the decision will now be handed over to the student representative assembly and will probably be made at the Jan. 30 meeting.

Universities belonging to the CFS have been holding referendums across Ontario to increase the organization's funding.

The results of the referendum at Carleton, which approved the fee increase of $4 for the CFS and $3 for the CFS-Ontario, were overturned in December because a committee opposed to the hike wasn't allowed to campaign. □

SKILLS cont'd from page 7.

they will develop a greater ability in reading to do, because of the practical experience they will gain over time.

According to Jones, the major problem with developing employability skills is that many of them are difficult to chart. While skills such as literacy are fairly easy to quantify, other skills, such as teamwork, critical thinking, or even numeracy, are extremely difficult to measure accurately. The success of programs to develop these skills is correspondingly difficult to assess.

Jones says the effects of the employability skills movement on university education includes the need for the development of teamwork in the university classroom, which has previously tended to be ignored, but is considered invaluable by the many proponents of the movement. □

Feeling a tad LOST?

Come get some direction at your student newspaper. The Charlatan is always looking for new volunteers to write stories, shoot photos, create graphics and help lay out our pages.

No experience necessary — just an unhealthy desire to work hard and play harder.

Interested? Pop up to Room 531 Unicentre and see what you can do.

Carleton University Students Association

STUDENT HEALTH INSURANCE ARE YOU COVERED?

"Well, I guess that explains the abdominal pains."

788-3999

788-3999

788-3999

788-3999

788-3999

788-3999

788-3999

♦ All full-time students (4 credits or more) are automatically covered.

♦ Part-time students (3.5 credits or less) can opt into the plan by paying $49.05 at the CUSA office before FEBRUARY 1.

♦ Family coverage is available by paying an additional $45.05 at the CUSA office before FEBRUARY 1.

♦ Any student enrolled in full-time studies in January 1994 may opt out before FEBRUARY 1 by providing proof of similar coverage.

♦ For more information, see the pamphlet in the CUSA office, 401 Unicentre Building or call 788-3999.

DEADLINE: FEBRUARY 1

Universities form business consortium

by Jill Mahoney
Charlatan Staff

A new national student group has been formed by some university student associations in an attempt to increase their purchasing power.

The Canadian Campus Business Consortium will negotiate for better contract deals with companies to buy items in bulk. This will save student associations money by lowering the cost of items like paper clips, furniture, student handbooks and beer.

Currently, individual universities negotiate their own contracts with companies for supplies and retail products.

Jefferson Rappell, president of the student association of Dalhousie University in Halifax, says the consortium is something a lot of student leaders have wanted for years.

"Everyone saves. It's that simple a concept," says Rappell.

The group was founded last November in Edmonton. It will have an executive director who will seek national deals from companies, as well as a part-time office position. The consortium will operate from an office in the Kitchener-Waterloo area.

Currently, student unions at Waterloo, Sir Wilfrid Laurier, the University of Western Ontario, Queen's, the University of British Columbia and the University of Alberta are involved in the group.

Michael Burns, president of Western's student council, which just ratified Western's membership in the consortium last week, says the only financial risk to members is the initial cost of membership.

This is based on student enrolment and the budgets of the student associations.

Burns says Western will pay between $12,000 to $15,000 for its first six months of membership, but he expects to save more than that from the student handbook alone.

Rappell stresses that the consortium is a business arrangement and will not become involved in student politics. But some critics say it could be a step towards another national student lobby group.

Jocelyn Charron, communications officer of the Canadian Federation of Students, says he doubts the group will keep out of politics.

"I think they want to keep away from politics, but politics is nothing but making choices about values," says Charron. Burns denies it will become a political lobbying group.

"This is an apolitical organization in that it's just business," he says.

He says the CFS and the consortium have different objectives because the CFS provides student services, like Travel Cuts, as well as government lobbying, while the consortium will focus exclusively on getting better business contracts.

The CFS does seek corporate sponsorship for its student saver, an annually published coupon book distributed to students at member schools.

But Charron also says the CFS tries to include different concerns, like the past ethical record of companies, into its choices about doing business. He said if a company is doing something CFS doesn't agree with, the federation won't associate with it.

However, members of the consortium say individual universities will be able to opt-out of any contract if they don't want to participate.

Charron says he is uncertain about relations between CFS and the new group.

"It remains to be seen what they'll do, if they want to compete and go against us in certain areas, especially if they aim to create some sort of turf war," he says.

All the schools in the Ontario University Student Association, a recently formed student lobby group, are involved with the group. Western, Waterloo, Sir Wilfrid Laurier and Queen's are among the founding members of the consortium. Brock University and the University of Toronto are considering membership.

Burns says all the companies the group has approached, like Labatt, Molson, Coca-Cola and Jostens, are interested in dealing with it.

"Not one corporation we have approached has said that it's a bad idea," he says.

Carleton hasn't been approached to join the organization, says René Faucher, finance commissioner of Carleton University Students' Association.

But Faucher says he likes the concept of buying in bulk.

"Theoretically, it's a great idea," he says.

Faucher says the group isn't a threat to the CFS because it is mainly a political organization. He also says he hopes the new group stays out of student politics.

"I agree and endorse what they do if it stays apolitical. . . . Whether or not they do so remains to be seen." □

Let's Change The Face of CUSA!!!

CUSA needs:

- * Women
- * International Students
- * Mature Students
- * Students with Disabilities
- * Aboriginal Students
- * Gay, Lesbian, Bisexual Students
- * Students of Colour

to run in the Election!

We need CUSA to be more representative...

This is Your Association! Get Active! Get Involved!

Nominations run until Tuesday, January 25. For nomination sheets and more info. call 788-2600 ext. 1648, or drop by 127D Unicentre

Bug the board!

If students don't start to raise hell about the rising cost of education, they will be forced to take a hike.

On March 29 of last year, Carleton's board of governors approved a seven-per-cent increase in tuition fees for 1993/94. This was the third consecutive year students were hit with a seven per cent hike.

This year, the board, faced with further cutbacks to education funding over the past year, will again consider whether or not to saddle students with more of the responsibility for the university's funding. Right now, according to Statistics Canada, students pay roughly 20 per cent of the general operating cost of universities in Ontario through their tuition.

Some board members say that for them to maintain the standard of education at Carleton, they must increase tuition by the maximum amount allowable each year to compensate for the cutbacks in funding from the province. They say they are unable to find places in the already stretched Carleton budget to cut and they have to avoid running the university deep into debt.

This year, however, things may be even worse. The provincial government has promised to establish a "substantial" tuition hike ceiling to make students pay more of the cost of their education.

This ceiling is due to be announced by the government next week and is rumored to be at least seven per cent, or perhaps as high as 30 per cent.

What does this have to do with the board? Barring the unlikely stoppage of a major tuition hike by the NDP caucus, the board is the last chance to save accessibility to education, which is already quickly eroding under the strain of spiralling tuition fees and living costs.

Although the province has not announced this year's tuition ceiling yet, the threat of huge increases in tuition means students must act now and lobby locally to oppose the hikes.

The board of governors will likely vote on next year's tuition increase in March, but students must demand now that the board defy the provincial government by not jacking tuition fees skyward.

The board should take an active role, along with boards at other universities, by giving the government new solutions to the education funding problem instead of just chaining the cost to students.

The names listed below are the members of Carleton's board of governors. As well, we've listed their office phone numbers. They usually hear very little from the student population, although they make major decisions which affect us all. Call them and tell them how tuition hikes will affect you.

Board members who voted in favor of last year's tuition hike:

A.J. Freiman 567-8050	Brian Hedges 723-6500
William Joe 564-0218	Wesley Nicol 232-4241
Maureen O'Neil 241-3535	Kate Thome 788-2748
Italo Tiezzi 788-3811 (board of governors office)
Dr. Ivan Fellegi 951-9757
Dr. Christina Fiedorwicz 235-6740

Members who voted against last year's tuition hike:

Iris Craig 226-5139 (home)
Marion Dewar 722-0220 (home)

Members who did not vote:

Dr. Robin Farquhar 788-3801	Zeev Vared 225-3640
Jim Watson 564-1308	Samuel Hughes 238-5678

New members to the board (not present for last year's vote on tuition hikes):

Allan Lumsden 824-4934	Sue Richer 788-3700
Elaine Silver 788-6688	James Taggart 521-3000
Lucy Watson 788-6688	Vlad Zhivov 788-6616
Dr. G. Stuart Adam 788-2355

Members who refused to say how they voted on tuition hikes last year:

Dr. Michel Gaulin 788-4477

The board should be accountable to students. Tell the board not to cave in to the government and to fight the systematic erosion of the quality and accessibility of university education in Ontario. AK & JS

OPINION

Just another "little" racist incident

by Nadini Sankarsingh

Nadini Sankarsingh is a second-year student at Carleton in political science and French.

Racism has always been an awkward concept to confront. People aren't very willing to talk about it. Perhaps I live in a world of denial, where racism is not the first thought on my mind when I'm ill-treated by individuals of other races.

I am a person of color. I object strongly to those who immediately think that any type of harassment from someone of another race is because of racial prejudice. However, my views have become more enlightened because of an incident with a New York police officer on Christmas break.

I was returning by car to Canada from a short visit to New York City. I was accompanied by two friends, who are also of color, on the journey back to Canada on Jan. 4. The roads were terrible as there had been a major snow storm in New York, so driving back was quite slow.

We were suddenly pulled over by a white, male police officer in Albany. He said we were going 78 miles an hour in a 55-mile-per-hour zone. His tone of voice was harsh and commanding, as if to reinforce his authority. He then proceeded to give us a speeding ticket. His name was C.J. Cuprell.

What Officer Cuprell did not realize was that we had a powerful radar detector that picks up the frequencies of any radar used by police. Our radar detector never once picked up Cuprell's radar for the mere reason that he never turned his radar on. We were given a speeding ticket by an officer who did not even know our speed. He would not even show us the speed at which his radar had supposedly clocked us.

When I tried to explain that what he was doing was illegal, Cuprell began reprimanding me by saying, "Shut-up" and "Don't talk unless you're spoken to, missy." I was upset by this officer's conduct and mishandling of the situation. As he walked away, I turned to my friend and swore in anger.

Cuprell returned on hearing this and demanded to see my identification. He proceeded to beckon me out of the car by using a microphone: "Passenger get out of the car

... " Feeling like a true criminal, for a crime I was not aware of, I confronted Cuprell.

He began to threaten me by saying that he had the authority to arrest me or to "put my ass in jail," and that I would never make it to the Canadian border if I continued to "obstruct" him.

Verbally and physically, there was nothing that I could say or do to resolve the situation. I was not afraid of him, but I was helpless. I felt violated and belittled, especially when he kept viciously waving his flashlight at me and blinding my eyes with it so that I had to turn away from his glare.

He proceeded to criticize the way that Canadian police handled matters, insisting that American police work differently. His tone of voice was cynical and demeaning. For the first time, I had a strong feeling that this conflict was of a racial nature.

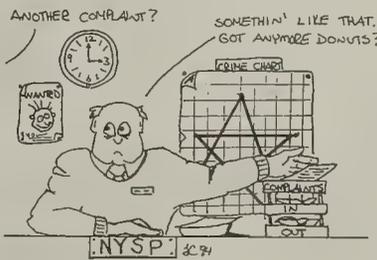

It's quite hard to explain what constitutes racial harassment. But in this situation it was a mixture of the officer's actions, tone of voice and the circumstance itself that really made me aware that this was more than just a routine traffic violation. There was absolutely no reason to explain why Cuprell reacted the way that he did.

Perhaps U.S. officers do work differently, but it's this difference that causes so much upheaval between white cops and people of color in the United States. Obviously, something is wrong.

I decided to take action and called Major Corber, the troop commander of Troop T, a division of the New York State Police. Although I filed a formal complaint, conversations between Corber and myself suggested no real action could be taken to reprimand Cuprell's behavior.

Because the officer didn't physically harm me, Corber seemed to think the incident wasn't all that important. It seemed like the battle was lost before it ever started.

This case will be shut away like many other cases of racism encountered between white officers and people of color. These problems still occur, yet it's a vicious cycle that never gets anywhere. It is quite sad that many of us have lost the faith in fighting gross miscarriages of justice. □

NEWS

Editors Mario "Birthday Man" Carlucci
Karl Jordan
Contributors Michael Mainville
Matt Skinner Andrea Smith
Caron Watt Brandie Weikle
Andrea Wiebe
Volunteer Co-ordinator Johanna Ciszewski

NATIONAL AFFAIRS

Editor Am Keeling
Contributors José Bellemare
Derek DeCloet Ian McLeod
Jill Mahoney Michael Mainville

FEATURES

Editor Andrea Smith
Contributor Ryan Ward

SPORTS

Editor Steven Vesely
Contributors Derek DeCloet
Bill Labonte Kevin Restivo
Sarah Richards Richard G.D. Scott
Jason Tamo Jay Tharayil
Ryan Ward

ARTS

Editor Blayne Haggart
Contributors Suzanne Andrew
Mario Carlucci Neil Herland
Sheila Keenan Tim O'Connor
Greg Owens Andrea Smith
John Steinbachs Murielle Varhelyi

OP/ED

Editor Sheila Keenan
Contributors Am Keeling
Nadine Sankarsingh John Steinbachs

VISUALS

Photo Editor Tim O'Connor
Photo Assistant André Bellefeuille
Contributors Bill Cooper
Todd Duncan Rebecca Ford
Mark Lamb Chris Nuttall-Smith

Graphics Co-ordinators

David Hodges
Mike Rappaport
Graphics Assistant Joel Kenneth Grant
Contributors Nika Bervichevskaya
Jennifer Davies

Cover

The Charlatan's photos are produced using the Carleton University Students' Association Photo Service

PRODUCTION

Production Assistant Kim Alf
Contributors Bram S. Aaron
Glady's Bichat Franco D'Orazio
Julie Dyer Sarah Goodman
Kaleem Khan Ryan Nakashima
Mona Park Richard G.D. Scott
Ryan Ward Caron Watt
Brandie Weikle Tanya Workman
Tonya Zelinsky

CIRCULATION 14,000

Circulation Dave Carpenter
Joellen Walsh

ADVERTISING 788-3580

Ad Manager Karen Richardson

The Charlatan, Carleton University's weekly news magazine, is an editorially and financially autonomous journal, published weekly during the fall and winter term and monthly during the summer. Charlatan Publications Incorporated, Ottawa, Ontario, a non-profit corporation registered under the Canadian Corporations Act, is the publisher of The Charlatan. Editorial content is the sole responsibility of editorial staff members, but may not reflect the beliefs of its members.

Contents are copyright © 1991. Nothing may be duplicated in any way without the prior written permission of the Editor-in-Chief. All Rights Reserved. ISSN 0315-1859
Subscriptions are available at a cost of $40 for individuals and $52 for institutions includes GST.

National advertising for The Charlatan is handled through Canadian University Press Media Services (Campus Plus), 23 Richmond St. W., 4th Floor, Toronto, Ontario, M5H 1Z4, phone: (416) 481-7283.

Members of the board: Ken Drever, Mo Gannon, Anna Gibbons, David Hodges, Fouad Kanaan, Warren Kinsella, Mark Lafreniere, Yvonne Potter.

The Charlatan, Room 531 Unicentre Carleton University
Ottawa, Ontario K1S 5B6 Telephone: (613) 788-6880

LETTERS

It's policy - you have to know how to drive to watch a movie

Editor:

During the summer, I was visiting a major video rental franchise with a friend. After browsing and selecting our movie, he approached the check-out desk to inquire about applying for membership. The cashier informed him that it was policy to have a major credit card or driver's licence to join.

My friend does not believe in using credit cards and is legally blind, making a driver's licence impossible. He did, however, own an age-of-majority card, a valid substitute for a driver's licence.

The company would not accept this identification, even after he explained the position he was in. His application was denied, making our trip a complete waste of time. We experienced this same problem at many other stores thereafter.

I was extremely upset to find that something as simplistic as getting a movie membership could be so difficult for the blind or visually impaired — or anyone else with a disability for that matter.

If retailers appreciate their consumers' business as much as they claim they do, they would pay closer attention to how glitches in their system can create roadblocks for some people.

Clayton Dignard
English I

GLB centre can exist, but not with my money

Editor:

Re: "What have the services done for you?" The Charlatan, Jan. 13, 1994.

I'm glad The Charlatan wrote this article. I was ignorant of where my money was going to.

I don't like how my money is being used to fund certain organizations. For example, I have nothing against the existence of the Gay, Lesbian, Bisexual Centre. However, I object to the fact that MY money is being used to support this group. I want more control over my money — I don't want it to go to activities that have no benefit to me.

I have a solution to this problem. CUSA could send out a questionnaire asking its supporters which activities they would like to support. That way, I would be able to support those activities and groups that benefit me the most.

I'm sure that some of CUSA's supporters would be apathetic about choosing where their money is sent and CUSA would have complete control over those funds.

I respect other people's right to do what they can to improve their lives with their own resources. I demand that others respect my right to use my money to pursue my interests.

Michael Blank
Biology I

HEY YOU!

The Charlatan welcomes all letters and opinion pieces. Letters should not be more than 250 words and opinion pieces not more than 700 words. Pieces may be edited for length or clarity. The deadline is Tuesday at noon. Include your name, signature, faculty, year and PHONE NUMBER or your letter won't be published. Phone numbers are for verification only and won't be published. Send to: The Charlatan, Room 531 Unicentre, Carleton University, 1125 Colonel By Drive, Ottawa, Ont. K1S 5B6.

OPINION

We admit it - sometimes we're wrong

by Sheila Keenan
Charlatan Staff

Everyone makes mistakes. Every paper makes mistakes. Keeping this in mind, Charlatan staff decided to hand our paper over for an accuracy check by a second-year Carleton journalism class. Their mission was to seek out errors in Charlatan copy.

The accuracy check did not include a very large sample of Charlatan issues, so it is hard to say how accurate it is. But we thought the results would interest our readers.

The class looked at the Nov. 4 and Nov. 11 issues of The Charlatan. Stories that were opinion-based (like reviews and editorials) or stories with sources outside of Ottawa were eliminated from the accuracy check.

In total, 27 stories were checked for errors. Of those 27 stories, 19 were found to contain errors. Eight stories had none. So, 70 per cent from those two issues had errors.

When the journalism school did an accuracy check on The Charlatan back in 1982, 82 per cent of the stories had factual errors. Second-year journalism students found 56 errors in 17 stories.

In the recent accuracy check, some of the errors the class discovered are undebatable. These were errors like names spelled wrong or incorrect game scores in sports stories. About 24 of the total 55 errors found were of this type.

Some of the errors identified by the accuracy check were more open to interpretation. For example, in one soccer story, The Charlatan gave the score as Queen's 1, Carleton 0. The accuracy check classified this as an error because the goal was scored in a post-game penalty kick. The accuracy check report said this didn't alter the score of the game, but "simply determines which team won."

Well, if we would have written the score as Queen's 0, Carleton 0, readers would have thought the game was tied. Expressing the score as Queen's 1, Carleton 0 was what we saw as the best way to inform our readers of the win. So sometimes even "the facts" are debatable. That's where Charlatan editors have to use judgment.

The point of publishing the results of the accuracy check is not to beat up on ourselves. It's also not to defend ourselves. But just as we hold other people on campus accountable for their actions, we feel we should be answerable for our own mistakes.

All Charlatan staff cringe when we find mistakes, along with our readers and sources. The Charlatan does aim for perfection, but sometimes, despite the careful work of our reporters, editing by two to three other people and copy editing, mistakes get by.

Errors happen in the major dailies and magazines, as well as smaller publications like student newspapers. The accuracy check's report, written by Professor Joseph Scanlon, points out that past studies have shown daily newspapers have at least one factual error in about 40 per cent of their stories.

Considering that The Charlatan has a new editorial staff each year and new volunteers, some of whom have never written a news story before, we feel we compare very favorably with major dailies, where most staff members have years of experience.

The results of the accuracy check should not discourage people from reading The Charlatan. But they should serve as a reminder that just because something is written down, it doesn't mean it can be trusted implicitly. Readers shouldn't just be passive consumers of the news, sucking up information like a vacuum.

Interestingly, before the accuracy check was done, we had not heard about most of these errors. If you see something wrong in the paper, it's easy enough to give us a call at 788-6680 and point it out.

In the case of The Charlatan, readers have a unique opportunity because they can directly affect the contents of the paper. If readers have concerns about the contents, ANYONE is more than welcome to come help out in producing The Charlatan.

INCREASING TUITION FEES ARE RESTRICTING YOUR ACCESS TO UNIVERSITY ...
GET OUT AND MAKE YOUR VOICE HEARD

PROVINCIAL DAY OF ACTION PROTESTING TUITION INCREASES

Wednesday, January 26, 1994

All Ontario students from post-secondary institutions are setting this day aside as a day to protest together to raise their concerns about tuition increases.

Carleton students, come to Baker Lounge at 3 p.m.

- 4th Floor Unicentre Building

To get involved - come sign a petition - fax your MP

- phones available all day - join our protest rally.

COME TO BAKER LOUNGE AT 3 p.m.
WEDNESDAY JANUARY 26, 1994

For more info call the CUSA office @ 788-6688.

CUSA

Canadian Federation of Students
CFS FCE
Fédération
canadienne
des étudiant(e)s

Safety first.

by Ryan Ward

Ryan Ward is a first-year art student, Foot Patrol volunteer, and an exceptionally enthusiastic Charlatan writer.

On Saturday, Dec. 4, at approximately 10:30 p.m., a female student working alone in Room C460 of the Loeb Building was approached by a man who was wearing running shoes only. The female was grabbed by the male before he fled the area.

On Tuesday, Dec. 21, at approximately 7 p.m., a woman in the tunnels near the Tory Building and the post office observed a man with his pants down. There was no physical contact between the woman and the suspect.

These are the people in your neighborhood, a campus with over 20,000 students, a place where most people want to feel safe when they walk around at night.

Since September, there have been about 16 reported incidents of indecent touching, indecent exposure, or assault. As of last year, Carleton's department of university safety began to keep records of these incidents. Because of this, they can't say if the numbers are rising or falling over the years.

But since October of 1992, when the names and photographs of 23 women were stolen from an office in the Herzberg Building and subsequent death threats were phoned in to various offices on campus, there has been a heightened awareness of personal safety at Carleton.

Last year, the Carleton University Students' Association created the position of safety commissioner to act as a liaison between various administrative committees dealing with safety issues, as well as initiating safety audits and other initiatives on behalf of students.

Samantha Sheen, last year's safety commissioner, is largely responsible for the bright orange safety posters which notify students of the date, location and nature of recent attacks on campus, says Nancy Adamson, the coordinator of Carleton's status of women office.

While Sheen may have initiated the idea, a committee whose members include Pat O'Brien from public relations, Mark Tinlin from university safety, Adamson and the safety commissioner, decides when a poster goes out to the rest of the Carleton community.

The safety commissioner at present is Donna Gilbert, who wasn't hired by the CUSA executive until well into the school year on Nov. 16.

Gilbert says she is still getting her bearings, but has planned a safety audit of the entire campus for Jan. 26. She says her most pressing concern is for the safety of women on campus and the various "problem spots" in regards to lighting and visibility.

Gilbert is reluctant to say anything in regards to specific safety policies set by the university, as she hasn't had the opportunity to attend any meetings of the presidential advisory committee on personal safety, which sets the safety agenda at Carleton. The committee's last meeting took place on Nov. 22, barely a week after she was hired.

The committee is made up of about 27 representatives from administration, different university departments, the Foot Patrol, CUSA, and the Rideau River Residence Association, who meet every four to six weeks to discuss policies and strategies concerning campus safety.

The committee was originally set up three years ago to administer funding of $47,000 a year for two years from the provincial Ministry of Colleges and Universities. That ministry no longer exists. Its responsibilities were absorbed by the Ministry of Education and Training and the funding for campus safety improvements was cut.

"In the past the money for various safety measures was provided by the provincial government, but this year there has been no grant so the university has had to find money for the safety committee," says Adamson, who is the committee's co-chair.

She says despite this funding cut, Carleton's vice-president of finance Spruce Riordan (the other co-chair), was able to obtain a budget of about $30,000 from the university's Alumni Fund. However, on Jan. 17 Riordan told The Charlatan the provincial government had come through at the last minute with a further $47,500, on the condition that it be "directed particularly towards women's safety on campus."

As to what the new found cash will go towards, Riordan says, "we have yet to make a proposal as to what we'll do," but added that part of the money might be put toward an "anti-date rape campaign." Adamson and Riordan both say that over the past three years the committee has focused on the campus's physical landscape and the safety problems it presents.

This has resulted primarily in interior renovations to the tunnels to provide better directional signs, removing lockers, painting over murals, making the entrances to buildings more accessible and installing a number of emergency phones.

This year, Adamson says the committee's focus has shifted to the outside landscape, providing well-lit and clearly designated pathways to and from parking lots and buildings with accessible emergency phones.

"We will be improving the safety of those routes, improving lighting, emergency telephones, trimming shrubs, and providing directional signs," says Adamson. "The committee is trying to do a lot to make the campus safer by making emergency phones accessible across campus and working on improving safety by the river."

Bill Ferguson, from the office of computing and communications services, is also a member of the advisory committee. He says the emergency phones are a way to make all areas of campus safer by improving security's ability to respond to an emergency.

Safety Commissioner Donna Gilbert

CHRIS NUTTALL-SMITH

He says the emergency phones all over campus automatically dial the emergency services monitoring office (788-4444) and immediately alert campus security to the location of the incident.

The emergency "phones" in the tunnels don't have a receiver — they require only that someone push a large button and a microphone will pick up their voice. This is because a person who is being chased or is struggling with an attacker has only to hit the button and then yell what is happening, rather than stop to pick up a receiver.

Ferguson says there are also red phones in the stairwells of the library parking garage, the corridors of the science buildings, and the computer labs in the Loeb Building. These have receivers, but dial emergency services automatically nonetheless.

The phones are routed to campus security rather than 911, says Ferguson, because "the Carleton campus is a big place." Unlike emergency services, he says, the 911 dispatchers cannot simply refer to a digital display to know the location of the caller. Police or ambulance drivers would have to waste valuable time searching for the scene of the incident.

With the emergency phones, even if the caller says nothing, security can immediately notify 911 and dispatch officers to the scene of the incident, he says. But whether they do or not is up to the security desk, depending on the circumstances of the incident.

Riordan says the first draft of an emergency response plan, which would spell out the official procedural rules to such situations, is in the works, and "that's the kind of thing we'll have to take into account when we put the emergency response plan together."

Riordan says the final draft of the emergency response plan should be available in six weeks.

He added the personal safety committee will be seeking input from the university community on safety concerns. Adamson, Riordan and Ferguson all say there is no such thing as a totally safe campus, because as Adamson puts it, "people are unsafe."

But CUSA employees like Gilbert and the Carleton Women's Centre co-ordinator Renée Twaddle say they don't think that means settling for a new paint job for the tunnels to make women at Carleton feel better about walking alone at night. They say the committee is a step in the right direction, but there is still room for improvement.

"The campus is not safe enough," says Twaddle. "The safety committee is trying to fulfil required areas concerning safety. There are lots of areas to improve, though, such as the paths on the river."

While Adamson and Twaddle agree that the most unsafe places on campus are the dark alleys behind residence and the poorly lit pathway along the river, the one area of campus they consistently disagree on is the tunnels.

Twaddle maintains that the tunnels are unsafe and advises women not to use them alone at night.

Adamson says she disagrees with the perception that the tunnels are unsafe, citing that most of the attacks against women take place in the academic buildings or outside rather than in the tunnels. She also points out that: "They said not to use the tunnels, but disabled students have to use the tunnels. If we all use the tunnels, we make it safer for everybody."

Twaddle and Gilbert both advocate the use of video cameras to monitor the tunnels. Twaddle says at the last personal safety committee meeting on Nov. 22, suggestions were made to install video cameras in the tunnels, so they would be under constant supervision.

"There are (security) cameras still in boxes which would increase the chance of catching perpetrators in the tunnels," says Twaddle. "Mark Tinlin and others are thinking of excuses to not use the cameras instead of their job to improve safety."

She says Tinlin, the director of university safety, opposed their use because of the possibility of vandalism to the cameras.

But Len Boudreault, assistant director of university safety, told The Charlatan the university has no such video equipment in boxes or otherwise.

"All we're really doing is looking at our options. Certainly there are none ordered, there are no plans to order any, there are none in storage," he says.

Ferguson and Riordan also say they know of no unused video equipment sitting around collecting dust.

Boudreault says the option is still being debated, but the expense of monitoring the tunnels by video camera has to be taken into account.

"The camera itself is not costly," says Boudreault. "The housing for the camera could be more expensive, but the biggest, most significant cost is the interface between the camera and the patrol officer."

Adamson says the committee has discussed the option of cameras at length.

"Other universities that have installed video cameras have not found them to be as effective as they hoped," says Adamson. "The committee on personal safety has had a full discussion of cameras as something that we would not invest in."

Gilbert, on the other hand, feels the video cameras would be important for the safety of women on campus.

"Despite the cost of the cameras, I believe we need them, not only in the tunnels but everywhere on campus," says Gilbert.

Twaddle and Gilbert both think women don't use the tunnels because they don't feel safe.

Riordan says if this is the case, "we're saying, 'tell us what more we can do?' What is it that people think can be reasonably improved?"

But Twaddle says without cameras "there's a pretty good chance that somebody could be assaulted and not be near a phone. There's a lot of space between phones for something to happen."

Until the tunnels and campus in general are safer, she says, a woman's only option is to be escorted by the Foot Patrol.

Since the beginning of September 1,155 people have requested the Foot Patrol's escort service to get to their car, bus stop or residence because they feared to walk alone. At this time last year, more than 1,162 people had used the service.

According to Foot Patrol co-ordinator Brenda Kennedy, there is still a very large need to be filled by the volunteer organization.

"The students realize there is a problem out there and we are a solution to walking alone," says Kennedy.

"The campus is not really well lit," says the patrol's staff supervisor Derek Watt. "Despite the improvements to the tunnels, 1,500 metres between emergency phones is quite a distance to travel."

Each patrol is made up of a male and female, and it is important for anyone interested in being escorted by the Foot Patrol to keep this in mind, as in December a lone man impersonating a patroller was reported. The patrollers work outside or in the tunnels for two and a half hour shifts starting at 8 p.m.

Watt says an extra shift is needed starting at 6:30 p.m. in the winter, because it gets dark around 5 p.m.

"I get phone calls and I have to turn them over to the campus security," he says. "With the extra shift there will not be a need for this."

He added the Foot Patrol is necessary to provide protection for students on campus, because campus security is heavily under-staffed and under-paid.

But Gilbert feels the Foot Patrol should not be compared to security.

"Foot Patrol should not be there to relieve security's burden," she says. □

With files from Brandie Welkie

Women's Centre co-ordinator
Renée Twaddle

Foot Patrol
co-ordinator
Brenda Kennedy
CHRIS NUTTALL-SMITH

PLACEMENT & Career Services

Check the posting boards at
the Placement Centre for
more job listings.

Programs and services of interest to undergraduates, graduating students, as well as alumni.

508 Unicentre • 788-6611
January 20, 1994

ON-CAMPUS RECRUITING

Permanent full-time positions are directed towards graduating students (available May '94). Dates, unless specified, refer to deadlines.

To find out the types of positions, how to apply and where to find more information on the companies, please contact the office.

Revenue Canada
Jan. 21, Mail Direct
Computer Science, Commerce
Positions: Computer Systems Analyst/Programmer Analyst

Corel Corporation
Jan. 24, 12 noon
Computer Science, Computer Systems Engineering
Positions: Software Developers

AMS Management Systems
Jan. 25, 12 noon
Computer Science, Commerce-MIS
Positions: Programmer/Analyst

Canadian Political Science Assoc.
Jan. 28, Mail Direct
Political Science, Other Disciplines
Positions: Ontario Legislature Internship Programme

Easel Corporation
Jan. 28, 12 noon
Computer Science
Positions: Technical Support Consultants

Universal Fundraisers
Feb. 4, 12 noon
All Disciplines
Positions: Fundraising Consultants

London Life
Feb. 10, 12 noon
Commerce, Arts, Social Sciences
Positions: Sales & Marketing Reps

Ontario Ministry of Transportation
Feb. 14, 12 noon
Civil & Electrical Engineering
Positions: Engineering Development Program

T.W. Austin
Feb. 18, 12 noon
Commerce, Economics
Positions: Financial Counsellors

SUMMER EMPLOYMENT

For more information on the types of positions and application procedures consult the summer job board.

Pulp & Paper Research Institute
Jan. 20, Mail Direct
Biochemistry, Chemistry, Physics, Mechanical Engineering
Positions: NSERC related

Ontario Quebec Municipal Student Exchange Program
Jan. 21, 12 noon
Political Science, Public Admin., French, Economics, Business, Engineering, Computer Science
Positions: Various

Gov't of Northwest Territories
Jan. 24, Mail Direct
All Disciplines
Positions: Various Summer Aquatic Positions

Legislative Assembly of Ontario
Jan. 24, Mail Direct
All Disciplines
Position: Information Officer

City of Ottawa
Jan. 28 - May 27, Mail Direct
All Disciplines
Positions: Various

AECL - Chalk River
Jan. 28, Mail Direct
Computer Science, Engineering, Science, Physics, Chemistry
Position: Summer Student Program

Ontario Place
Jan. 28, Mail Direct
All Disciplines
Positions: Various-consult booklet

Regional Municipality of Ottawa Carleton
Jan. 31, 4:30pm
All Disciplines
Positions: Various-consult booklet

PCL Constructors (Eastern) Inc.
Feb. 3, 12 noon
Civil Engineering, 3rd/4th year
Positions: Field Engineer or Student Engineer

City of Ottawa-Parks Programme
Feb. 4, Mail Direct
Positions: Various

International Development Research Centre
Feb. 4, Mail Direct
Int'l Affairs, Social Sciences, Commerce, Info. Sciences/Systems, Economics
Positions: Various

Iogen Corporation
Feb. 11, 12 noon
Biochemistry
Positions: Lab Technicians

City of Nepean
Feb. 14, Mail Direct
All Disciplines
Positions: Various

National Round Table on the Environment & the Economy
Feb. 14, Mail Direct
All Disciplines
Positions: Roy Aitken Internships

Paramount Canada's Wonderland
Feb. 16, In Person
All Disciplines
Positions: Singers, Actors, Dancers Technicians

Ontario Geological Survey
Feb. 25, Mail Direct
Geoscience
Positions: Various

Department of National Revenue Customs & Excise (Sarnia)
Feb. 28, Mail Direct
All Disciplines
Positions: Student Customs Officers

Algonquin Park Visitor Services
Feb. 28, Mail Direct
Various Disciplines
Positions: Park Naturalist, Museum Technician

COSEP-Career Oriented Summer Student Employment Program
Ottawa-Hull Region Only
Feb. 28, Mail Direct
Administration, Arts, Pure Sciences, Applied Sciences, Socio-Economics
Positions: Career-related summer jobs in federal government

Deep River Science Academy
Mar. 1, Mail Direct
Science, Engineering, Commerce
Positions: Tutors/Research Assistants, Administration

Environmental Youth Corps
ASAP, Mail Direct
All Disciplines
Positions: Various

SWAP-Student Work Abroad Program
ASAP, Mail Direct
All Disciplines
Positions: See SWAP brochure for participating countries

TREE PLANTING

Upper Canada Forestry Northern Ontario
Feb. 1, Mail Direct

Natural Borders Reforestation
Feb. 3, Sign Up
Feb. 4, Interviews

Apex Reforestation
Feb. 9, Sign Up
Feb. 10 & 11, Interviews

Outland/New Forest
ASAP, Mail Direct

Broland Enterprises Inc.
ASAP, Mail Direct

SUMMER JOB AND CAREER EXPLORATION FAIR

Mark Tuesday, February 1, 1994 on your calendar - the date for the first ever joint Summer Job & Career Exploration Fair, organized by Carleton University, Algonquin College, La Cite Collegiale, and the University of Ottawa.

This is your chance to participate in an unprecedented opportunity to meet various employers in the private and public sectors. With all the changes in the labour market the Summer Job & Career Exploration Fair can offer you:

- * the chance to meet employers offering summer employment opportunities
- * an opportunity to explore full time careers by talking to professionals from various fields

This unique opportunity will be taking place in the Assembly Hall (East entrance to Lansdowne Park) at the Civic Centre from 1:00pm - 8:00pm. Students will be required to pay $1.00 in advance or $2.00 at the door. Tickets can be purchased from Placement & Career Services, 508 Unicentre.

 Carleton
UNIVERSITY

 Cite

 ALGONQUIN

Polo women splash into first

by Richard G.D. Scott
Charlatan Staff

Mission accomplished.

In their season-ending tournament at McMaster University, the Carleton women's waterpolo team posted a perfect 4-0 weekend to finish first in the five-team Ontario Women's Interuniversity Athletic Association waterpolo league with a 7-1 record.

Carleton 7 McMaster 4
Carleton 7 Queen's 5
Carleton 8 Brock 2
Carleton 8 Toronto 4

What's more, the Ravens atoned for an earlier season 4-3 loss to the University of Toronto Varsity Blues with an 8-4 victory in the tournament's last game battle for first place.

Carleton's victories came against McMaster (7-4), Queen's (7-5) and Brock (8-2).

The thrashing began with the 7-4 win against the 1-3 McMaster Marauders. After falling behind 4-3 at the half, the Ravens rebounded with four goals while holding the Marauders scoreless.

Next, Carleton held off the persistent 2-3 Gaels squad to squeeze out a 7-5 win, breaking a 4-4 tie in the second half with three consecutive goals. Drivers Stephanie Burgess and Anne Stacey paced the Ravens with three goals apiece.

"We were much smarter and much more in control," said coach Steve Baird. "We got our jitters out."

The Ravens then played against the 0-6 Brock Badgers. Baird substituted his lineup with reserves and many Raven rookies saw varsity action for the first time. But the Ravens' play remained unaltered as they romped to an 8-2 win over Brock.

"We're good defensively and the rookies did an amazing job," said Burgess.

Action then peaked as the Ravens doubled Toronto 8-4 to clinch first place.

"It was our best game and the four-goal margin made up for the one goal loss earlier in the year," said Baird.

Tied at four in the third quarter, Stacey scored a power-play goal and then the Ravens added three more in the fourth quarter to round out the score.

Tanya Pierunek played a strong game in net while Stacey completed an 11-goal weekend with four goals against Toronto. Burgess and Jen Hampton were the other scorers with two goals each.

Now, the Ravens will look ahead to the OWIAA finals Feb. 4-6 at Brock University in St. Catharines with another mission in mind—to bring home gold. □

Ecstatic win not predicted

by Kevin Restivo
Charlatan Staff

Who would have thought it.

That infamous line from former New York Yankee skipper Casey Stengel probably typifies popular reaction to the strong start put forth by this year's Carleton men's basketball team.

Heading into league play a week ago, the Ravens' chances for a win looked bleak at best for a number of reasons. Coming off a 3-12 exhibition game record, the Ravens lacked offence and cohesion. Having only five returning players on a team of 12 will do that to you.

Despite that, Carleton won two of its first three games in a commanding fashion.

Who would have thought it.

Tipping off in their season opener against the University of Ottawa Gee-Gees, the Ravens' prospects for victory were slim, especially after three pre-season losses to Ottawa.

Yet the underdog Ravens went out and thoroughly dominated the supposedly more talented Gee-Gees from start to finish. The Ravens maintained their poise throughout the game, consistently breaking Ottawa's pressure and ignoring their incessant trash-talking.

Let's not forget either that these are essentially the same Gee-Gees who made it all the way to the Canadian Interuniversity Athletic Union's version of the Final Four last year. Winning the so-called Gorilla Game, basketball's version of the Panda Game, after a two-year hiatus only made the win oh-so-much sweeter.

Who would've thought it.

So big deal you say? They were bound to win against Ottawa one of these days — let's see them win a tough road game against a team like Queen's who has arguably the best scorer in the country with forward Dave Smart.

And so they did. Once again, Carleton went out and led for the better part of the game and eventually stole a win from the high and mighty Golden Gaels squad. Head coach Paul Armstrong called it an absolutely great effort. And so he should. Neutralizing Smart and winning two in a row on the road is a lot to ask of any team, especially one as green as these young Ravens.

Who would've thought it.

After their team-bonding training session in Florida over the Christmas break and two huge morale-building wins, it's probably safe to say the Ravens are brimming with confidence despite their lacklustre 3-12 pre-season record and a teensy weensy 76-71 loss to the University of Toronto Varsity Blues.

And if they can keep up the pace, a winning season and a playoff berth isn't out of the question.

Not to mention that such an occurrence would have the entire campus and all the pundits uttering one line— who would've thought it. □

Raven road warriors stomp Ottawa

Gorilla Game victory starts season right

by Kevin Restivo
Charlatan Staff

The song goes two out of three ain't bad, and the song's right.

The Carleton men's basketball team shocked the University of Ottawa Gee-Gees, winning 88-85 in their season opener Jan. 11 at the U of O's Montpetit Hall.

Not satisfied with just one win, the Ravens then went on to beat the Queen's Golden Gaels 80-75 before falling 76-71 to the University of Toronto Varsity Blues in road action Jan. 14-15.

Carleton 88 Ottawa 85
Carleton 80 Queen's 75
Toronto 76 Carleton 71

Against Ottawa, the Ravens won the Gorilla Game, basketball's answer to the Panda Game, with a combination of tenacity, desire and ball control—giving up only 17 turnovers.

Carleton pounced all over Ottawa right from the start, forcing the Gee-Gees into numerous first-half turnovers to get a comfortable 52-42 halftime lead.

"We wanted to keep the tempo up so we could get some easy stuff from the fast breaks," said head coach Paul Armstrong.

The Gee-Gees tried to get back in the game in the second half with a variety of pressure tactics and intimidation, but

PHOTOS BY TIM O'CONNOR

A stong pressure defence and timely scoring resulted in two Raven wins.

these proved futile.

"We weren't intimidated at all by them.... We were a lot fresher than they were," said fourth-year forward Taffe Charles. "Maybe they'll give us some respect now."

Afterwards, the Ravens were ecstatic with the win over their cross-town rivals—who were good enough to advance to the national semi-finals last year.

"I don't care, we just won," whooped third-year guard Luca Diaconescu enthusiastically, when asked to comment.

Charles netted a game high of 27 points while guard Brian Smith added 18 points in a solid effort.

Carleton's good fortunes carried over into the next game against Queen's, where once again, the Ravens received an extremely solid team effort in their win over the Golden Gaels.

Charles once again led the Ravens with 30 points, while first-year forward Reagh Vidito added 25 points.

After two road wins the Ravens suffered their first loss of the season to Toronto. Yet even in that loss the Ravens stayed close throughout the contest. □

Lack of experience shows in road losses

by Jay Tharayil
Charlatan Staff

The Carleton women's basketball team's lack of experience played a key role in three road losses to open their basketball season.

Ottawa 81 Carleton 42
Queen's 60 Carleton 39
Toronto 94 Carleton 41

The Ravens were thumped 81-42 by the University of Ottawa Gee-Gees on Jan. 11. They then went on to lose 60-39 to the Queen's Golden Gaels and 94-41 to the Toronto Varsity Blues Jan. 14-15.

With eight rookies, four sophomores and only three third-year players, the Ravens' inexperience led to 95 turnovers in the three games—37 against Ottawa, 35 against Toronto and 23 against Queen's.

"It wasn't so much that they beat us (but) we beat ourselves with turnovers," said rookie guard Gillian Roseway. "They're more experienced than us, especially Toronto, who are third- and fourth-year players while we're only first and second."

That lack of experience shook the Ravens' confidence early on, said second-year forward Heather McAlpine.

"We're a type of team, (who) when we get down, it's hard for us to get back up, and we lose a lot of confidence," said McAlpine. "But that will have to come when experience comes."

Experience will also help the offence, said forward Valarie Gates. □

TIM O'CONNOR

Ottawa pressure stifled the Ravens.

Raven Records

OWIAA WATERPOLO East Division

	W	L	T	F	A	PTS
Carleton	7	1	1	68	31	14
Toronto	7	1	1	72	28	14
Queen's	3	5	0	58	42	6
McMaster	2	6	0	42	70	4
Brook	1	7	0	30	99	2

OWIAA VOLLEYBALL East Division

	W	L	T	F	A	PTS
York	4	0	0	12	0	8
Ottawa	4	1	0	12	6	8
Toronto	2	1	0	8	3	4
Queen's	2	2	0	7	7	4
Ryerson	1	4	0	3	12	2
Carleton	0	5	0	1	15	0

OWIAA BASKETBALL East Division

	W	L	T	F	A	PTS
Toronto	3	0	0	240	125	6
Lmtn	2	0	0	155	99	4
Queen's	1	0	0	60	39	2
Ottawa	1	1	0	124	113	2
York	0	1	0	59	82	0
Ryerson	0	2	0	81	148	0
Carleton	0	3	0	122	235	0

OWIAA Athlete of the Week

Lisa Thomaidis, a 22 year-old basketball player with the McMaster Marauders is the OWIAA athlete of the week after averaging 22.0 points per game in three games this past week.

OAAA BASKETBALL East Division

	W	L	T	F	A	PTS
Toronto	3	0	0	236	212	6
Lmtn	2	0	0	192	170	4
Carleton	2	1	0	239	236	4
Queen's	0	1	0	75	80	0
York	0	1	0	78	98	0
Ottawa	0	2	0	155	168	0
Ryerson	0	2	0	163	174	0

OAAA BASKETBALL East Scoring Leaders

	FG	AT	FT	AT	AVE
Beason	29	49	14	16	38.0
Charles	24	50	29	38	25.7
Clarkson	8	16	6	8	25.0
Swords	19	31	3	5	24.0
Reid	17	33	8	14	22.5

OAAA Athlete of the Week

Alex Beason, a forward with the Ryerson Rams basketball team is the OAAA athlete of the week after scoring a league high 52 points against Laurentian in league play.

That broke a 12 year-old record set in 1982 when York's David Coulthard scored 50 points in a game against Toronto.

Ravens rise and fall at tourney

Volleyball team wins twice and places sixth

by Sarah Richards
Charlatan Staff

Count on Raven women's volleyball head coach Peter Biasone to tell it like it is.

After his team finished sixth in the eight-team Carleton Invitational tournament on the Jan. 15 weekend, Biasone described his feeling going into the tournament.

"I was a little apprehensive to tell you the truth because we could have come in and sucked the whole weekend," he said. But they didn't.

Instead, the 0-5 Ravens, last in the east division of the Ontario Women's Interuniversity Athletic Association, beat the Guelph University Gryphons 2-0 and clawed past the University of Waterloo Athenas 3-2 to post their first victories of the season.

"Guelph was a nice reward, but Waterloo will go a long way to help us because for the rest of the season we'll think back to that match," said Biasone.

The Ravens made up a 10-point deficit in the final set against Waterloo to win the match 3-2.

That win set up a fifth-place battle against a local Ottawa club where the winning ways stopped short. In their final game against Club Six, the Ravens came out flat, and were unable to deliver the points despite some strong rallying. They lost three straight sets 15-8, 15-8 and 15-8 and settled for sixth place.

"We didn't capitalize on some of the opportunities we got, like some of the missed services from the other team or when they hit balls out of bounds. It just didn't seem to go our way," said middle Carolyn Haddock.

It didn't help that Raven setter Laurie Malone sprained her ankle in the victory against Waterloo, causing a shift in positions for the players.

"They passed well, and Sue (Edecomb) set really well, but... people had to play Tournament MVP Tracy Liburd.

TIM O'CONNOR

different positions that they weren't really familiar with," said rookie Malone.

The two wins are a big first step for the Ravens, who have only two returning players and whose All Star setter, Marilyn Johnston, graduated last year.

But for Biasone, inexperience is no excuse for losing a game.

"I don't think we've ever used that excuse. I think our inexperience leads us to not know what to do sometimes," he said. "We are inexperienced, that goes without question, but I think so are some other teams that are playing."

The Club Six women's team is composed entirely of Ottawa-area veterans.

The tournament bronze went to the University of Western Mustangs, who beat the Queen's University Golden Gaels. The Gaels squandered their impeccable quick spikes to allow the unimpressive Mustangs to take the win 3-1.

Carleton Invitational

Round Robin

McGill 2 Carleton 0

(15-11, 15-12)

Western 2 Carleton 1

(15-5, 11-15, 15-13)

Carleton 2 Guelph 0

(15-13, 15-8)

Quarter Finals

Carleton 3 Waterloo 2

(5-15, 15-7, 13-15, 17-15, 15-12)

Consolation Round

Club Six 3 Carleton 0

(15-8, 15-8, 15-8)

The finals saw Carleton's cross-town rivals from the University of Ottawa play the McGill Martlets. The game proved to be an interesting clash between two very different teams. Ottawa's team-oriented play eventually beat out McGill's heavy reliance on star players, in particular left-side player Fanny Wong.

"She was an outstanding player," said tournament MVP, Tracy Liburd of the Gee-Gees. "I think (McGill) know who their assets are and they use them very well."

With the Gee-Gees riding high on their win, their home tournament on Jan. 28 will be a challenge for the less-talented Ravens.

"Our goal isn't anything less than to win the tournament," said Gee-Gee head coach Lionel Woods.

Ravens, brace yourselves. □

Hockey club finds southern discomfort

by Bill Labonte
Charlatan Staff

It was no miracle on ice.

Amidst snowy mountain peaks nesting the imposing Lake Placid Olympic site, the Carleton hockey club lost 10-2 to Northwood Prep Jan. 14.

The next day, it was defeated by a more respectable 5-2 score by the North Country Community College.

Northwood 10 Carleton 2
North Country 5 Carleton 2

The hockey club must have been awestruck by Lake Placid's arena. There's a big American flag hanging from the rafters. Reminders of the 1980 Olympics everywhere. And waiting for them was a talented team of 17 to 20 year olds.

Northwood Prep is a well-respected academic school with an excellent hockey program whose hockey alumni include NHLers Mike Richter and Tony Granato.

Carleton kept the game close in the first five minutes, but things soon fell apart. Goalie Pat McFetridge was replaced with backup Kevin Convey after Northwood exploded for six unanswered goals. Carleton forward Ken Pagan then answered with two but that wasn't anywhere near enough.

"The loss was expected, but the 10-2 final score was not anticipated," said coach George Brown after the game. "The officiating was terrible."

Sporting a fat lip after an errant high stick, defenceman Mike Pagan agreed.

"The officiating obviously lacked fairness — just look at my lip."

Forward Ian McIntosh offered this explanation.

"They (Northwood) are used to playing with a floating red line. What seemed like an off-side or a two-line pass was not. That's why they were able to send in so many guys on breakaways. We're just going to have to get used to playing a faster more open game with a floating red line."

After a short night's rest and a plea by coach Brown to his number one line for more production, a fatigued Carleton team lost a match 5-2 to the North Country Community College from Saranac Lake, N.Y.

"I look to you guys to set the pace," Brown told forwards Darren Keating, Jason Tamo and Tim McAllister before the game. "Your line is in a slump."

The line played better but was unable to solve its offensive woes. Carleton bombarded the other team's goalie in the dying minutes without getting a lucky bounce.

The weakly enforced 1 a.m. curfew was one reason behind the loss.

"It was four a.m. and the guys were still up. You can't expect to play good hockey on a few hours sleep," said general manager Paul Correy.

Carleton resumes Senior R.A. League action against the Abloom hockey club Jan. 26 at 7:30 p.m. at the R.A. Centre. □

Hockey vote next month

by Ryan Ward
Charlatan Staff

In its never-ending quest to achieve varsity status, the Carleton hockey club has finally got a shot on net.

At the Carleton University Students' Association council meeting of Jan. 11, councillors voted 17-1 to hold a referendum on student funding for the hockey club in next month's CUSA elections.

The Bald Ravens, a group of ex-varsity Carleton hockey players, proposed to ask for a $1 levy per student, which would raise almost $20,000 — enough money for the hockey club to play in the Ontario College Athletic Association Hockey League.

"It's time to move up to the next level," said the club's general manager Paul Correy. "We have played exhibition games against several universities and colleges over the past few years with over a 65 per cent winning percentage."

Currently, the hockey club plays a 20-game schedule in the Senior R.A. League on a $5,000 budget raised from a CUSA grant, local sponsorships and the players themselves. □

Raven Rumblings

QUOTE OF THE WEEK

"You don't have to write about the game, do you?"

Carleton hockey club captain Darren Keating expressed this forlorn hope after his team lost 10-2 to Northwood Prep — an American team composed of 17 to 20 year olds.

CUBS BEAT LIONS

The Carleton fencing team hosted an Alumni Challenge fencing tournament Jan. 16 in the gym's multi-purpose room with satisfying results. Raven fencers defeated a 32-strong alumni squad in all five fencing classes in their last tune-up before next week's season-opening tournament.

"It was a combination of two things," said fencing coach James Ireland. "It was a chance for them to get to know the alumni and it's our last chance at settling a lineup for next week."

DAMN IT WAS COLD

How cold was this past weekend you ask? It was so cold that even the nordic ski teams stayed inside. The Jan. 16-17 Nakkertok Invitational outside Gatineau Park was cancelled due to the frigid weekend temperatures.

CALENDAR

Friday, Jan. 21.

BASKETBALL — The 0-3 women's basketball team hosts their home opener tonight against the 0-2 Ryerson Lady Rams in a 6 p.m. match at the Raven's Nest. The 2-1 men's team will follow with their home opener against the 0-2 Rams at 8 p.m.

Saturday, Jan. 22.

FENCING — The women's fencing team hosts the first sectional tournament of the Ontario Women's Interuniversity Athletic Association East fencing division at the Ravens' Nest from 9 a.m. till 5 p.m.

SKIING — The nordic ski teams travels to London to participate in the SOD Interdivisional Duntroon at the University of Western Ontario.

SWIMMING — The men's and women's swim teams will be in Hamilton participating in a tri-meet with the universities of Guelph and McMaster.

Sunday, Jan. 23.

FENCING — The men's fencing team will host the first sectional of the Ontario Universities Athletic Association east division at the Ravens' Nest from 9 a.m. to 5 p.m.

SKIING — Racing continues for the nordic ski teams at the SOD Interdivisional Duntroon.

Wednesday, Jan. 26.

VOLLEYBALL — The 0-5 women's volleyball team travels across town to take on the 4-1 University of Ottawa Gee-Gees in league action at Montpetit Hall. Game time is 8 p.m.

MVP hoping to overcome injuries

by Derek DeCloe
Charlatan Staff

Last year, Cindy Krenosky didn't play basketball because she wanted to hit the books instead.

This year, her comeback has been thwarted by another book: Gray's Anatomy.

The Raven guard is coming off a list of injuries that have limited her role so far in the Ravens' fight for a playoff spot in the Ontario Women's Interuniversity Athletic Association.

First, she severed tendons in her wrist in a kitchen accident in the spring. The wrist required surgery, and Krenosky bears an impressive scar from the incident.

After that healed, she proceeded to injure a muscle in her hip, damage a nerve in her elbow, and pull a tendon in her knee.

Krenosky admits the injuries have been a little frustrating.

"They kind of keep you from progressing," she says, adding the wrist injury was "the only tough thing" about getting back into university basketball after a year away from it. "At first I was scared to shoot."

That's a notable fear indeed for someone who loves to shoot. She was the team's MVP in 1991-92, a scoring machine on a last-place team in desperate need of offence.

"Cindy's the type of player who, if she's focused and concentrated and settled, can give us a real quick scoring punch," says Raven coach Marg Jones. The catch, says Jones, is that "sometimes she tries to do everything."

Krenosky agrees she has a hard time keeping her game on an even keel. "Inconsistent" is the word she uses.

"If I see a problem I try to do it all myself right away," she says.

Krenosky, a fourth-year aerospace engineering student, dropped basketball last year to concentrate on her academics.

"I missed the competition of it and the general camaraderie of the team," she says. "It's a really good time... but it has its limitations."

With an easier course load this year, she decided to return. The team's modest success last year — two league wins and nine overall — and the chance to play with some quality veterans helped make the decision to come back and play easier.

It's a commitment non-athletes have difficulty comprehending, she says.

"I think you wouldn't really understand the kind of sacrifice it takes unless you played," she says.

But balancing books and basketballs has helped teach her how to manage her time, she says.

"I think you wouldn't really understand the kind of sacrifice it takes unless you played."

- Cindy Krenosky

The Ravens' on-court style appeals to Krenosky. Jones tries to take advantage of the team's quickness by using a lot of fast breaks.

"Transition is my thing," says Krenosky. "I like to shoot and I like to run."

So far, her body hasn't let her do those things for the Ravens. But she says her knee is almost back to full strength and her days of coming off the bench are almost over. Soon she'll be starting. And hopefully, she'll be able to put that copy of Gray's Anatomy back on the shelf. □

Krenosky's hoping to lace up regularly.

BILL COOPER

Charlatan Hockey Pool

Here are the point leaders in the Charlatan Hockey Pool.

Points were tabulated as of Tue. Jan. 18, 1994.

Regular season leaders can only win the dinner prize once.

BAXTER'S

1344 Bank Street

(at Riverside)
738-3323

1	Patrick Soden	496
2	Anjali Varma	485
3	Jeff Parker	483
4	Jeff Pavkew	483
5	Blair Sanderson	481
6	Vicki Mavraganis	478
7	Marc Arsenaull	472
8	Thomas Corakis	472
9	Don Belanger	472
10	Joseph Kurkose	471

Congratulations to Anjali Varma who wins this week's dinner prize. Former winners Jeff Parker and Jeff Pavkew can also pick up their $25 dinner certificate for Baxter's restaurant at The Charlatan.

Charlatan Sports Trivia

Answer the following question correctly and become eligible to win a $25 dinner for two at Schadillac's Saloon.

Since 1985, only two other teams besides the Toronto Blue Jays have won the A.L. East. Name them.

Congratulations to Sarah Bechard who knew Ken Dryden was the last NHL goaltender to lead the league in G.A.A. in back-to-back seasons.

1. Place your answer, name and phone number on a piece of paper and submit it to The Charlatan sports editor, room 531 Uniceentre. The recipient of the prize will be determined by a supervised draw of all correct answers.

2. All answers must be received by Tuesday, Jan. 25, 1994. The winner should come up to the office for the prize on any Monday or Tuesday.

3. Contestants may submit only one entry per week.

4. Charlatan staff members and their families are not eligible to participate.

Answer:

Name:

Phone:

ARE YOU TIRED OF THE SAME PARTY SCENE, MEETING THE SAME DRY PEOPLE
WEEK AFTER WEEK?

THE CARLETON CARIBBEAN COMMUNITY

PRESENTS...

WINDSOR'S SPORTS WEEKEND

On March 18-20, come and join weekend of fun at Windsor's Sports Weekend. Here you'll have an opportunity to compete against other universities throughout Canada & the U.S. in various activities, e.g. Basketball, Volleyball, Dominoes...

Don't Forget NUFF PARTYING!

If you would like to attend this event,
please call the # below for more information.

780-3051

P.S. "JUST REACH"

Est. 1977

DARLENE SCOLARIDES

Hair Shops...

SHAMPOO CUT & STYLE
$12
SPECIAL
Requests pay extra

PERMS
$45
SPECIAL
Requests pay extra

...For men and women

• 232-1763 •

248 Bank Street
BETWEEN LISGAR & COOPER • PARKING ON COOPER

Another Raven swimmer qualifies for nationals

by Jason Tamo
Charlatan Staff

The Carleton men's and women's swim teams finished fifth and sixth respectively in the six-team Montreal Invitational Jan. 14.

The overall standings might not say so, but both coaches agreed the meet was a success.

"You can't just look at placements and judge success," said men's coach Brian Johnson. "The competition at the meet was at a very high calibre. So even though we clocked good times, our placement doesn't reflect it."

Carleton raced against the universities of Montreal, Sherbrooke, Laval, McGill and Ottawa—who all have competitive swim teams.

For the Ravens, Brigitte Davidson swam a personal best of 2:26.00 in the 200-metre backstroke, and in doing so, became the second Raven swimmer this season to qualify for the national championships.

"The entire team was very happy for Brigitte," said teammate Elizabeth Clark. "Everyone was watching the race and cheering for her because we knew she had a shot at qualifying."

Davidson will join Erica Kotler, who qualified in the 200-metre breast-stroke earlier this year, at the Canadian Interuniversity Athletic Union finals to be held in Victoria, B.C., in March.

"It's great individually for Brigitte," said Clark. "It's also great for the team, because if one more swimmer from the women's team qualifies for nationals we can send an entire relay team."

CIAU rules allow a fourth swimmer to compete in a relay event whenever a school already has three qualifiers.

If another member is to qualify, it is likely to be breast-stroker Sarah Dobbin, say teammates. Dobbin recorded a personal best time of 1:10.36 in the 100-metre event in Montreal and her results were just shy of the necessary qualifying time of 1:10.00 for the CIAU championships.

"I think Sarah will do it," said Clark. "If she keeps progressing as she should, she will qualify at the provincials for sure."

The women's provincial championships Feb. 12-13 are the last chance female swimmers can qualify for a national berth.

Carleton's best result on the men's side was Blair Christie, who won the 1,500-metre freestyle event in a time of 16:50.35. He also placed third in the 200-metre butterfly with a time of 2:14.26. Andrew Smith also placed well, finishing second in the 200-metre individual medley with a time of 2:16.97.

Christie and Smith are both hopeful of qualifying for the national championships. No men have qualified yet.

"The qualifying times are more difficult for the men to achieve and require more training time," said women's coach Jitka Kotler explaining that the men's times are shorter. "The men are more likely to qualify later in the year when the swimmers reach their peak."

Both the women's and men's teams took part in a two-week training camp in Florida over the winter break. The coaches of each team took this into account when assessing the weekend's performance.

"Many of our swimmers were hurting after the camp," said men's coach Brian Johnson. "It took a lot out of them, especially the less-experienced swimmers. We didn't expect great things right away. It's going to take time before they see the long-term benefits of the camp."

The swim team travels to Waterloo on Jan. 21 for an invitational meet at the University of Wilfred Laurier, then on to Hamilton to face McMaster and Guelph in a tri-meet on Jan. 22. □

Can we expect nordic ski success?

by Ryan Ward
Charlatan Staff

Success breeds success.

And over the past decade, probably no Carleton athletic team has enjoyed more success than the nordic ski teams.

The men's team has won silver medals at the provincial championships each of the last four years, while the women won gold last year for the fourth time in six years.

Together, the men's and women's teams have placed among the top three finishes at the provincial championships for six straight years.

This year looks to be no different.

The men's team has three returning veterans to lead the team with skiers Frank Ferrari, Scott Diamond and Chris Webb.

In four years, Ferrari has been a consistent contender in the classic style. Last year, he finished second overall in the provincial championship.

"He gets better and better as the season goes on," says teammate Al Pilcher.

Four-year veteran Diamond, who's also a six-year veteran of the Ontario biathlon team, is also a strong Raven contender.

"If I can be more aggressive, I should be able to better last year's performance," says Diamond, who finished 40th at last year's Canadian championships. "Who knows, I may surprise some people this season."

With two top-10 finishes last year, Webb rounds out the experience on the men's team.

"He's the kind of person nobody thinks about in a race, but he has the ability to defeat the competition," says Diamond.

Some of the other skiers who should make their mark on this year's circuit include newcomers Wayne Dustin, Darcy Bloom and Mike Cooper.

Dustin in particular, as an ex-national team skier rated among the top five nordic skiers in Canada, should add to the men's team strengths.

On the women's side, only two skiers remain from last year's gold medal squad.

Veterans Kirsten Davis and Catherine Muluhiill, as well as rookie Gayle Barrett, will be expected to provide leadership.

Davis, a member of the Ontario nordic ski team and a naturally talented skier, will look to improve on last year's eighth-place finish at the provincial championships.

"She's like a textbook," says Diamond. "If you want to show someone how to ski, look at Kirsten."

Muluhiill, on the other hand, has had to work harder for her success, but has shown improvement every year.

"I have strong depth and potential to excel," says Muluhiill. "After last year, I worked on improving considerably."

Newcomer Barrett is a former member of the Alberta nordic ski team hoping to post top results for Carleton.

"The more races I have the better I will do," says Barrett. "I'm pretty confident with my technique, but I still am not up to full form."

Other rookies to watch for include skiers Debbie McAuley and Erin Long. □

BAXTER'S

SECOND FLOOR
BAR & GRILL
MONDAYS &
SATURDAYS
PARTY NITES
$2.50

- WINGS
 - ZUCCHINI
 - NACHOS
 - CAESAR SALAD
 - ESCARGOT
 - ONION RINGS
- 5 PM - CLOSE

TUESDAY NIGHTS
SENATORS
Hockey Ticket GIVE AWAY
Chicken Wing .19[¢] ea.

WEDNESDAYS
1/2 PRICE FOOD
5 P.M. - 11 P.M.

THURSDAY NIGHT
"A Carleton Tradition"
Chicken Wings 19[¢] ea.

SUPERBOWL BASH
Sunday, January 30
Football Pool
49[¢] Hotdogs
Specials - Prizes!!!

1344 Bank Street
(at Riverside)
738-3323

By now, you've probably realized there's more to life than school. And that a job is only as good as the career it builds. We can help. We can give you the skills and financial knowledge to become an accounting professional: a Certified General Accountant. Our CGA program of studies can lead to better opportunities in business, government and public practice. If you're ready to make even more of yourself, call (613) 232-5363, or write to us at 222 Queen Street, Suite 302, Ottawa K1P 5V9.

We're accounting for the future in Ontario

CGA Certified General Accountants
Association of Ontario

A brief history of those Lost Dakotas

by John Steinbachs
Charlatan Staff

Lost Dakotas
Zaphod Beeblebrox
Jan. 21

In the beginning, they were called the Dakotas.

At the time, there was only vocalist Paul Dakota and bassist Greg McConnell: buskers on the mean streets of Toronto.

Later, they became the Lost Dakotas for copyright reasons after they began to gain some popularity.

"People started buying our tapes and we thought well, one of the bands called the Dakotas is going to sue us sooner or later and so we became the Lost Dakotas," says McConnell.

McConnell says the band was able to pay their bills by busking for two years. "Once the recession hit," says McConnell, "it forced us into recording albums and touring the country."

The band filled out its roster later on with Adam Faux on lead guitar and Ron Duffy on drums. Faux is now with Pigfarm and has been replaced by Rick O'Brien.

The Lost Dakotas' songs have a mix of folk, country, rock and blues. To achieve these sounds they use a violin, stand-up base and a lap steel guitar.

When they first started out, the Dakotas were known for their country sound but "we're getting less and less so all the time," says McConnell.

"The last album (Last Train To Kipling) was too country for rock 'n' roll and too country for country. But (now) we throw in a little country and folk for fibre now and then."

The Dakotas also throw into their repertoire several covers, including a hillbilly version of AC/DC's "Back in Black."

McConnell says when he and Dakota were busking on Yonge Street they needed a lot of material or they'd get bored. Dakota used to run down to the World's Biggest Bookstore and copy out lyrics and chord changes to songs. They would then come up with their own arrangements, adding their own twist to the songs such as their speed version of Steve Earle's "Copperhead Road."

One of their original songs from their latest album, Sun Machine, is called "Cowboys are Frequently Secretly," which examines homosexuality among cowboys. McConnell says the song got them kicked out of a bar in Nanaimo, B.C.

"I think they felt uncomfortable," he says.

The band has just finished a tour of Canada during which they say they've seen their popularity rise. McConnell says the Dakotas are wary of a burst in popularity because "you only get one chance

A wistful Dakota, thinking 'bout his gal back home.

Greg McConnell and Paul Dakota: together again!

Primeval, wild and sweaty

by Suzanne Andrew
Charlatan Staff

La Galerie des Horribles
Brouhaha Danse
NAC Atelier
Jan. 12 — Jan. 15

On a small, stark stage, four male dancers exposed a raw aesthetic of dance last Friday night.

The choreography of La Galerie des Horribles is stripped of anything delicate, graceful or flowery. It is not pretty stuff. As the dancers wrestled, shouted and thrust their bodies about the stage, they impressed one thing on the audience. This work is about power.

The dancers began the performance as soldiers who alternated between jocular familiarity and vicious fighting. Cleverly interspersed were scenes depicting army discipline. The soldiers were loud and obnoxious, embodying a brand of army evil caged within the hierarchy of power.

Upon removing their army coats, the dancers transformed themselves into more primitive creatures. Here, the choreographers created a wild, chaotic mood by deviating from a strong narrative. This transition was reinforced as one of the dancers escaped from the group of four.

Re-emerging with his face darkened with paint, the deviant ran in circles while babbling and making wild, insane facial expressions. He was watched by the others, then brutally attacked.

Throughout the performance, a percussionist hammered out raucous rhythms on drums and an odd collection of noise-makers. With a painted demon face, he was an integral part of the performance. Although stuck behind a bevy of percussion equipment, he had a few choreographed movements to complement that of the dancers.

Noise was an important part of this production. The dancers yelled, the percussionist roared and the drums were loud. But occasionally, the noise was toned down and the dancers whispered. There were a few highly effective gaps of silence manipulated by the percussionist, who would suddenly crash through the quiet to startle audience members.

Brouhaha Danse is a Montreal-based company recognized for its choreography which fuses theatre, visual arts and live contemporary music together with modern dance. La Galerie des Horribles is a collaboration of choreography by three of its four main members, Hélène Langevin, Rolline Laporte and Guylaine Savoie.

At 50 minutes, this piece seemed rather short. The choreography was good, but there were a few scenes lacking in originality. A dramatic scene in which one of the dancers is attached by his feet to a rope then hung upside-down is an acrobatic exercise done before by several choreographers. It needed something new, especially since it was near the end of the piece.

The dancers were generally successful in filling a bare stage. The intimate setting of the Atelier added another dimension of realism to the performance. An acid smell of sweat from the dancers' bodies began wafting through the air about halfway through the performance.

La Galerie des Horribles was powerful, athletic and sexy. The male dancers exerted their physical natures through strong movements executed without abandon. Although classical ballet fans would have seen this performance as technically messy, wild movements with a touch of chaos worked well in this production.

Just another example of Art we don't claim to understand.

This week: Where To Go For Your Summer Vacation (Part II)

1. Birr, Ont.
2. La Tuque, Que.
3. Snowdrift, N.W.T
(now Lutsel'Ke)
4. Cow Head Harbor, Nfld.
5. Smiley, Sask.
6. St. Louis de Ha! Ha!,
Que.
7. Yahk, B.C.
8. Osoyoos, B.C.
9. Acme, Alta.
10. Vulcan, Alta.

CHECK THIS LIST!

The following people have applied to be volunteers with the Carleton Foot Patrol. If you have any comments about any applicant's suitability to be a Patroller, please call Brenda Kennedy at 788-4066.

Your anonymity is assured.

Bram Aaron	Jason Cattle	Lauren Gabby	David Hein	Kyle Matthews	Jeremy Peck	Senthooan Sridas
Kerry Adams	Marc Champagne	John Gallen	Robert Henderson	Stephen Mayhew	Eric Perron	Wendy Stewart
Matt Adams	Janice Clark	Mandira Gauba	Joseph Hezron	Jennifer McHugh	Christina Persaud	Tracy Stocks
Daniel Albahary	Sheldon Clarke	Joel Germain	Corey Howse	Todd McIntosh	Gregory Phillips	Susan Stroud
Nigel Balgobin	Amy Comeau	Jessie Gibbs	Catherine Iwankow	Mary Carmen McLellan	Geoffrey Priems	James "Kirk" Strutt
Angela Barlas	Bryce Conrad	Donna Gilbert	Riali Johansson	Sean McWhinnie	M. Kathleen Quinn	Sudesh Sundralingam
Trevor Barnes	Stan Conron	Rebecca Gilbert	Ann-Marie Joiner	Derek Menard	Bonnie Ranalli	Alex Templeton
Kevin Barr	Wade Coombs	Tim Gilmour	Craig Jones	Derry Mihell	Senthooan Rasaratnam	Cathy Travis
Colin Betts	Shawn Cormier	Jerome Giovinazzo	Shamir Kanji	Lisa Miller	Amber A. Ra	Donna van den Oever
Janice Bishop	Theresa Cowan	Joanna Godden	Andrew Keenan	Patrick Murray	Catherine Reynolds	Michelle Walker
Simon Bower	Andrew Craxford	Paul Goff	Tiffany Kelso	Sherine Nahmias	Arkadi Romijn	Eben Watt
Roy Bradbury	Chris Crowell	Mark Goobie	Edward Khitab	Ken Nesbitt	Pat Rowan	Matthew Webber
Ruben Braiter	Lisel Currie	Chris Gooch	Lisa Khouri	Tung (Tom) Nguyen	Kristen Russel	Philip Weetman
Stephen Brode	John Cvijanovich	Catherine Gray	David Krajewski	Andrew Ning	Zakaria Y. Salim	Kelly Whitley
David Buckland	Janice Dahms	Stephen Green	Marisa Lang	Susan Nkansah	Solon Samothrakis	Allan Will
Rhonda Budz	Christian Dallaire	Matt Grierson	Rob Lawrence	F. Michael O'Brien	Mark Shepherd	Andrew Williams
Kim Buckland	Tammy Dewitt	Ryan Everett Griver	Harold LeGrand	Logan O'Connor	Jennifer Schilling	Lena Wilson
Jeeto Butaila	Tara Lynn Dillon	Paul Grzela	Doug Lloyd	Arie Odinocki	Ken Seafield	Rob Wong
Tamara Button	Clayton Dignard	Evan Jones	Betty-Ann Loucks	Natasha Ouellette	Greg Senechel	Ian Wayne
Anthony Carnovale	Judy Dominick	Judy Hacock	Jayson Luiz	Emmanuel Pangalos	Mark Shepherd	Wayne Yuke
Candace Carr	Marnie Edwards	Lisa Hagar	Lenida Lupez	RJ Partington	Ian Siesert	Matthew Zaldin
Mark Carroll	Brian Feldbloom	Shiva Hardeo	Scott MacDonald	Patrick J. Parent	Paul Skain	Julia Zilberman
Lesley Case	Kate Fitzpatrick	Sean Healey	Maureen Mathias	Jeremy Patric	David Slater

The Foot Patrol is a volunteer-staffed campus escort, walk-home, and patrol service. We operate 7 nights a week, 8 p.m. to 1 a.m. For an escort or for more information call 788-4066.

The UnClassifieds

THE FOOT PATROL is trying to locate one or more women who may have received an escort by a single male claiming to be the Foot Patrol. If you have ANY information on this matter, PLEASE call Brenda Kennedy at 788-4066

FOR SALE/RENT

Nice condominium to share. Total use of home, including laundry. 2 minute walk to shopping mall, bus stop outside front door, 20 minute walk to Carleton. Available Feb. 1/94 - $25,000 mth plus 1/4 of utilities. Call Andrew or Paula @ 733-9795.

For rent: 2-Bedroom cottage. 45 minutes from downtown. Dishwasher/wood stove. $500 + utilities. 729-1299

LOST & FOUND

Found: Student Card, number 221875. Call 731-3317

WANTED / JOBS

Help! I'm doing a journalism thesis on abusive (psychological, physical, sexual) dating relationships. If you are or have been in such a relationship, please call Tracey at 237-9393 or respond to box Date. Confidential.

We are doing a research project on programs to identify "johns" and want to know how prostitutes and clients feel. Box John.

Earn up to $700 weekly from home! RUSH SASE to Casin, 2407A - 515 St. Laurent Blvd., Ottawa, Ont K1K 3X5

DAYTONA! The best!!! We're local and looking for Carleton Raps. The best oceanfront Hotel on the beach with 7 days 6 nights, highway coach transport and non-stop activities, over 12 buses last year, earn $$ and free trips with all promo materials provided, sound interesting?? 5 Seasons 567-4565.

SERVICES / AVAILABLE

Earn $500 - $1000 weekly stuffing envelopes. For details - RUSH $1.00 with SASE to: GROUP FIVE, 57 Greentree Drive, Suite 307, Dover, DE 19901.

WORD PROCESSING - Fast, Accurate, Professional Word Processing, Essays, Reports, Thesis, Resumes, Flyers, Laser Printer. Pick-up and Delivery is available. Call Lena: 837-0183

SPRINGBREAK '94 - Daytona or bust! Party at the world's most famous beach with Canada's only student travel company - BREAKAWAY TOURS (Reg 2422707). $209 + 60 hrs for bus & hotel or U-drive for $109 + tax. Call Chris 526-0776 or 564-0564.

Having trouble writing papers and essays? Have difficulty with grammar, spelling and/or organizing your thoughts clearly on paper? Want to improve your writing skills and raise your grades? Ask for Dorothy, B.A. English Language and Literature, Teaching ESL experience. 232-6835.

Legal problems? Landlord-tenant matters, small claims court, provincial offences (traffic court) and summary convictions. Call Jacques Legal Services 247-1915.

INTERNATIONAL STUDENTS: DV-1 Greencard Program. Sponsored by the U.S. Immigration Dept. Greencards provide permanent resident status, in USA. Citizens of almost all countries are allowed to take part. Students, tourists, illegals may apply - wherever they live. Chance: 1 in 14. For info & forms: New Era Legal Services, 20231 Stagg St., Canoga Park, CA 91306, USA. Tel: (818)999-4425; (818)882-9681, Monday - Sunday: 8 a.m. - 11p.m.

Essays and Theses - laser printed - $1.60 per page. Also available - resume writing, editing, writing tutoring, charts, graphics & tables. Fax & pick-up service can be arranged. Please call 721-8770.

Applying for a summer job? Running in student elections? Want to strengthen your leadership skills? Then the leadership seminar is for you. Register today! Enrollment is limited. Contact Counselling and Student Life Services, room 501 Unicentre, 788-6600 for more information. Registration deadline - January 21, 1994.

JITSU. Enjoyable training which provides effective defence for men and women. Techniques suitable for law enforcement. Sun 5pm-7pm, Wed. 4pm-6pm. Combatives Room. New session starts Jan. 5. New members always welcome. Contact: Dery 523-1507

Word Processing. Accuracy and Deadlines Guaranteed. Central Location. 233-8874.

Live it up this Spring Break in PANAMA CITY BEACH, FLORIDA - the hottest Spring Break location today!! Activities galore, party till daybreak!! High quality beachfront accommodation. You drive for only $119, $259 with our transportation. For more information and bookings call 523-9640.

MESSAGES/MISCELLANEOUS

Are you a Q-Yr masters student or a masters student now who did a Q-Yr? If so, interested in hearing from you. Box Q-YR.

Liane Tabah please call your grandmother in Montreal. KIERAN

I am going to the Philippines during February & March. I would appreciate if anyone who is from the Philippines or has travelled there can offer some advice about where to go. Contact Jay Fleisher @ 723-7866.

Brenda Smith, call Peter Smith now that you are at Carleton. You've got my card, if you lost it place an ad here.

MAN TO WOMAN

Single, 21 yr old male wants to meet you! I'm good-looking, in shape and looking for a relationship. Good conversation and humour required. All responses will be answered. Serious inquiries please. Box REAL.

One owner Girl-Toy (slightly used and older) available to be borrowed, maybe future ownership. Present owner tossed me in the toy box as she has a new toy. Box Mr. Toy

Sex Tutor required to save my marriage. I'm kind, gentle, but lack the finer points of technique (according to wife!). Non-critical women only please respond. Box Tutor

WOMAN TO MAN

Purple Hat Man - Mark C. Saw you at Citi Club. Wanna have your children! Wanna get to know you better. If interested reply to Box Citi.

The UnClassifieds

Message (30 or words or less)

Name

Student No.

Box No.

Looking to buy or sell something? Need to make an announcement? Or maybe you're intrigued at the thought of having your own personal ad. The Charlatan Unclassifieds are a great way to reach over 20,000 people every week. Just fill out the form and bring in into the Charlatan office, 531 Unicentre.

Unclassified Rates

Student Rates $3.21

Non Student $6.42

Personal Ads Free

These are per issue prices and GST has been included.

To get the student rate you must have your student card.

Red Rock West: it's really, really bad. . .

by Greg Owens
Charlatan Staff

Red Rock West

Directed by John Dahl

In a recent interview, Dennis Hopper said he laughed a lot during the making of his latest film Red Rock West.

Well, Mr. Hopper was not the only person who laughed at this film. It was so bad I couldn't stop laughing from beginning to end.

The film is about a young drifter named Michael (played by Nicholas Cage), who leaves his native state of Texas to find employment in the oil fields of Wyoming. But, alas, Michael has a bum knee and the foreman won't hire him for insurance reasons.

How did the foreman know Michael had a bum knee? Michael told him — you see, Michael is honest and has a strict moral code. Michael will not even accept a few dollars from a friend.

But in a bar in Red Rock, the bar owner mistakes Michael for a hit man he had hired to kill his wife. At this point, Michael's strict moral code goes out the window and his IQ drops to the melting point of helium. So, for reasons known only to Michael, he pretends to be the hit man.

He then goes to kill the wife (played by Lara Flynn Boyle), but she offers him more money not to kill her, which he takes and runs off like a thief in the night.

For some reason, Michael drops the sheriff a note about the whole sorry hit man business and leaves town. Well, it just isn't Michael's day because, he runs over the wife's lover who, incidentally, has been shot twice.

At this point Michael's moral code comes back from its extended vacation, but the stupidity remains. He returns to Red Rock with the mortally wounded lover. Back in Red Rock, Michael meets the sheriff, who turns out to be none other than the bar owner.

The bar owner's unhappy about not getting the most for his money and tries to kill Michael. Michael escapes his certain doom and sprints through the woods at night, with a bum knee no less. Michael runs into Lyle, the real hit man played by Dennis Hopper. They hit it off and Lyle takes Michael back to the bar for a drink.

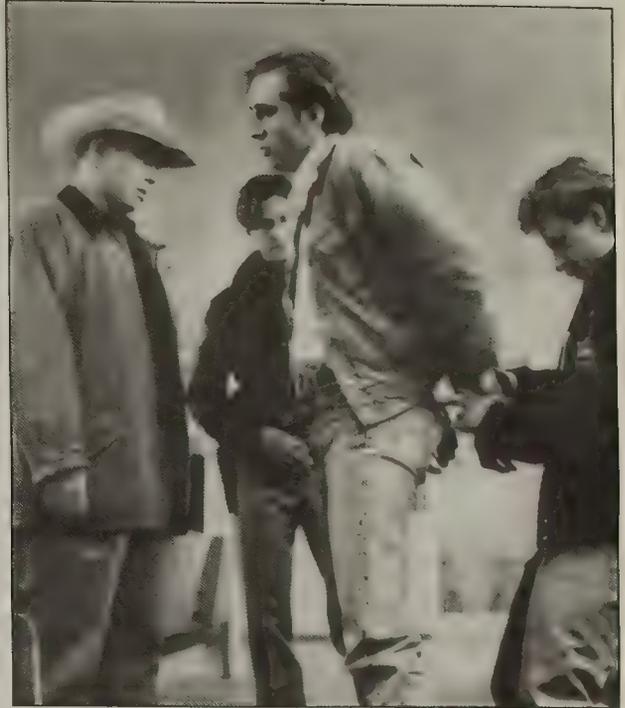

Plenty of other useless, stupid stuff happens, but it's really not that important or interesting. If all of this sounds stupid and convoluted, then you should avoid Red Rock West. If this sounds really cool and clever, then you must not get out much.

Red Rock West wants very much to be the Coen brothers' 1984 film Blood Simple. Both films are country and western film noirs, but where Blood Simple is awfully clever and intricate, Red Rock West is just awful.

Cage gives a solid performance as Michael. Of course, when I say solid performance, it is because Cage plays Michael as if his head was full of concrete.

Boyle stands around and looks lost throughout the film, even though she is supposed to be a level-headed woman who can look after herself.

The only life in the film comes from Hopper, who plays Lyle with a maniacal zeal. He seems to be the only one who is having fun in this turkey. Aside from him the only other interesting moment in the film is when Dwight Yoakam makes a

"I can't believe I'm in this movie."

cameo appearance.

Don't go see Red Rock West. You will feel ripped off even on cheap night. If you have a hankering to see a really good country and western film noir do yourself a favor and rent Blood Simple. □

. . . and this one isn't worth your time either

by Sheila Keenan
Charlatan Staff

Paris, France

Directed by Gerard Ciccoritti

According to Maclean's, this movie is supposed to be "the Canuck Kama Sutra."

In the Kama Sutra, that ancient Chinese love manual, everyone looked like they were having a good time. In the Canadian version, everyone looks like they would rather be doing something else. Part way through the movie, I kinda wished I was doing something else too.

There is a lot of sex in this movie, but it's not sexy sex.

The four central characters in the film, Lucy (Leslie Hope), Sloan (Peter Outerbridge), Michael (Victor Ertmanis) and William (Dan Lett) are all sexually entangled.

Lucy has sex with Michael (her husband) and Sloan. Michael has sex with Sloan. And Sloan . . . well, Sloan has sex with everyone.

Through flashbacks, we learn Lucy used to have sex with a guy named Minter (Raoul Trujillo), who she met when she was a struggling writer in Paris in the '60s. He inspired her creativity with their sexual entanglements. Now, her creative well has run dry.

Enter Sloan, a rough, tough poet. Sloan and Lucy have an affair. Through their sexual couplings, Lucy is supposed to rediscover her creativity. But the kind of sex Lucy and Sloan have wouldn't inspire most people to write their own name, let alone anything else.

There are some good parts in this film, but they just don't add up to make a consistent piece. It does, however, look very good. Director Gerard Ciccoritti shot most of the film in natural light. Although in places it's just too dark, other times this really works. The black and white flashbacks to Lucy's time in Paris with Minter also look good.

Unfortunately, any good parts are overwhelmed by the problems with the film. The biggest problem isn't that at the end of it you're left asking "What the hell was that supposed to be about?" -- although you are left asking that. There are some very good movies out there without a traditional Hollywood plot, but this just isn't one of them.

No, the biggest problem with this film is that it fails to raise any kind of response in the viewer. The only thing that made me really react — with a shiver — was Lucy shaving her pits with a straight razor. The scene of Lucy shaving Sloan with the straight razor — she wasn't shaving his face — probably would have made most men react.

Besides that, the occasional chuckle (when Michael and William compare their penises) and the occasional good line (like Lucy's "Trust your own cunt"), the film on the whole doesn't raise any consistent response in the viewer.

I'd have to trust my own brain on this one and tell people to stick with the original Kama Sutra for inspiration, sexual or otherwise. □

Ultrasexy Leslie Hope, clutching her script.

The Western
MBA

The Western Business School is widely recognized as one of the world's leading business schools. Please join representatives and alumni from the School at an information session on the Western MBA Program.

Date: Monday, January 24, 1994
Time: 5:30 - 7:30 p.m.
Place: Delta Ottawa
Delta B Room
361 Queen Street
Ottawa, ON

St. Peter's Lutheran Church

400 Sparks Street (at Bay)
233-9911

Sunday Worship 9:30 and 11:00 a.m.

Everyone Welcome

Audience members attempt to kill actor

by Kerry Taylor
Charlatan Staff

Shakespeare's Interactive Circus
A Company of Fools
The Great Canadian Theatre
Company
Jan. 14, 15, 21, 22, 28, 29;
10:15 p.m.

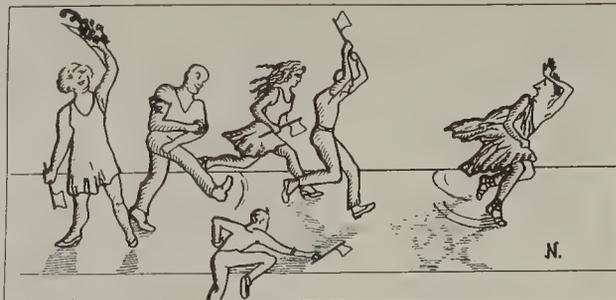

Wanna be an actor? At Shakespeare's Interactive Circus, you'll have your chance.

This play encourages the audience to eat with, yell at and attack the actors.

Opening with a kazoo song about a bastard, this interactive play leads the viewers through a series of fragmented Shakespearean parodies.

Scott Florence, Heather Jopling, Margo MacDonald and Mike Brunet all play actors who belong to a Shakespearean theatre company. Beginning with a short excerpt from Macbeth, these characters present a light side to this unlucky play.

Unfortunately, a great tragedy befalls the company during this performance, when it is announced that Sir Richard Lawrence Burbage-Attengood III, the company's founding leader, is dead. Without guidance, direction, or Sir Richard, the company bravely decides to continue with the show.

At this point, the audience is invited to direct the players in a choppy improvisation of the Taming of the Shrew. At the Jan 14 performance, many laughs were had here. However, with the endless heckling from the audience, the play began to drag. The players attempted to keep control, but at times, the audience clearly stole the show. Sometimes audience members' jokes got more laughs than the play.

Carleton student and actor Scott Florence plays the humorous role of Brie. He is both the least experienced player — having never studied theatre — and the most endearing, getting the most laughs of all the players this evening.

Florence was most comical in the role of Julius Caesar when, contrary to the original script, he avoids death at the hands of his fellow players. However, the situation became absurd when several audience members were invited up on stage in an attempt to kill him with trick daggers.

Another notable performance was Jopling as Constance. Her soliloquy in Titus Andronicus was well delivered and very funny. Jopling's commanding presence captivated the audience.

The role of Gilliam, played by Tony the "bored props guy" as the program called him, added to the show's absurdity. Tony spent the whole show walking around with a clipboard, showcasing his dramatic range when he played a dead guy in Richard III. His role was highly unnecessary, although amusing.

The set consists of two grassy hills on either side of the stage. The grass on the hills is unmistakably real. A wire fence, located behind the hills, is used as a framing device for the stage. The layer of pungent soil and garbage on the centre stage prevents the set from imitating a pleasant little park. The stage lighting is well done, giving the set the feeling of an isolated park at dusk.

This performance was enjoyable. However, due to the play's interactive nature, rowdy audience members can cause problems with the plot if the players fail to take control. □

A&E INSIGHT

Some thoughts on the Beatles' recently announced reunion

Who cares? □

OLIVER'S

Calendar

January 20 through January 27 1994

20 THURSDAY
Much Music
Jamaican Giveaway

21 FRIDAY
Freebie
Comedy

22 SATURDAY
Charity Ball

24 MONDAY
Battle of the Bands

25 TUESDAY
Line Dancing

26 WEDNESDAY
Superbowl
Giveaway

27 THURSDAY
Skatterbrains

The NAC Presents

Variété

By MAURICIO KAGEL
with musicians
and circus artists

It's a concert like you've never seen before!

Linda Bouchard, conductor
Michel G. Barette, director

Jan. 28, 20:30 Jan. 29, 14:00 20:30 NAC Theatre
Students with I.D. and children 12 and under from $10.00
Tickets from $15

NATIONAL ARTS CENTRE
CENTRE NATIONAL DES ARTS
Box Office opens all p.m. daily Shows at 8:00 unless a performance is scheduled

755-1111
Open at 8:30 daily
(Sundays at 1:00)

One Free Fall have rough night out at Oliver's

by Murielle Varhelyi
Charlatan Staff

One Free Fall, opening for Junkhouse
Oliver's
Jan. 15

It was 50 below outside and almost as cold inside.

The night ahead held promise; I had a good feeling about the upcoming concert.

Despite this optimistic outlook, things got off to a not-so-great start. Because their van had broken down, One Free Fall was considerably late getting to the show.

Things picked up after this. Mark Wilson, a second-year Carleton student, took to the stage around 10 p.m., acoustic guitar in hand. Wilson was an unexpected bonus for about 150 people who turned out for the concert.

Wilson's music was not at all like the two main bands', but he displayed some very impressive talent, not only on guitar but with his strong, commanding voice.

His set included "Rosemary," a Lenny Kravitz cover, as well as some original tunes, including the excellent "She Jumped." Although everyone was anxious to see the other bands, the crowd seemed to enjoy Wilson and his music.

Finally just before 11 p.m., One Free Fall arrived and went directly onstage. They were very rushed for time because Junkhouse still had to play. Lead vocalist Ken MacNeil spoke very little and the band went from song to song without much of a break.

Halfway through their loud, aggressive guitar set and in the middle of a song, MacNeil said, "Let's hear it for Furnaceface. You live in Ottawa, let's hear it!" (One Free Fall, who are from Toronto but originally Nova Scotia, opened for Furnaceface at Creeque Alley last time they were in town.)

There was zero response to his statement, which is kind of pathetic considering Furnaceface is one of the best bands presently in Ottawa.

For the majority of their set, One Free Fall focused on songs from their most recent album Mud Creek, including "Saved" and "Heaven to Bed."

Although it was painfully obvious the audience had come out to hear Junkhouse's hard rock, the crowd was somewhat interested in the incredibly distinct and powerful sound of One Free Fall. Sadly, the crowd was not entirely into the show despite the band's energetic performance.

Towards the end of their 40-minute set, a fight broke out outside the pub and almost the whole bar got up to see what all the commotion was about. While this happened, the band—still showing great enthusiasm onstage—had pretty well lost their entire audience.

Definitely more people ventured out on this frigid winter night to see Hamilton's Junkhouse than either opening acts. Even though both One Free Fall and Wilson did a superior job keeping the crowd amused, people were relieved and thrilled when Junkhouse finally came on. They immediately got up off their seats to get close to the stage.

One thing that can be said about their performance is they are excellent at interacting with the crowd. The highlight of their entire production was when a guy from the crowd jumped on stage and sang "Going Right Out of My Head" with the band.

One Free Fall was, musically speaking, the better band, although the crowd thought otherwise. Not saying that Junkhouse didn't put on a good show. They did, but were not as moving as the starting act. It was a shame that Mark Wilson and One Free Fall couldn't play longer because it would have made the show that much more enjoyable. □

Hairboys (a.k.a. One Free Fall) sing!

REBECCA THE MYSTERY PHOTOGRAPHER

Tough! play falls short of strict Degrassi standard

by Neil Herland
Charlatan Staff

Tough!
Green Thumb Theatre
at the Great Canadian Theatre
Company
Jan. 12—Jan. 29

Many women don't have the guts of Helma, Louise or Lorena Bobbitt.

Many of them have to actually deal with dysfunctional relationships caused by problem men. This idea of coping is projected throughout George F. Walker's teen-oriented play Tough!.

Tough!, directed by Patrick McDonald, attempts to examine the difficulties of male-female relationships in the '90s by showing us the frustrations faced by a pregnant teen.

Tina is an innocent and naive girl (played by Helen Taylor) whose boyfriend tries to back out of their relationship when he discovers Tina's pregnant. Soon, Tina's friend Jill (Leslie Jones) tries to convince her to forget the relationship, while Bobby "the cheating" boyfriend (Frank Zotter) tries to patch things up again.

Sound familiar? I thought it would be better as a Degrassi episode. The play is an attempt at a comical love story. Unfortunately, the humor constantly interrupts the love story, producing an unsatisfying comedy and a poor love story.

The love story itself is terribly unoriginal. The characters are shallow and the plot is older than a Lawrence Welk 8-track cartridge. The playwright fails to provide appropriate background information about the characters. They're simply Jell-O-moulded stereotypes.

It is common practice in many professional shows to cast adult performers in the roles of teenagers. The training, experience and rehearsal availability of professional adult actors makes casting them a more attractive option than casting actual teenagers. It's a gamble that rarely works out.

In this case, the gamble works for Zotter and Taylor, who deliver believable teenage performances. Unfortunately, Jones appears too old to be playing a teenager, despite her talents as an actress.

Though the actors are by no means incompetent, there is little they can do to salvage the script. Many well-acted moments between boyfriend and girlfriend were spoiled by a sudden cheap line thrown in. It's too bad, since the actors were obviously skilled enough to captivate the audience.

The set, designed by Philip Tidd, is quite good. A realistic urban park is created with two real grass-covered hills that surround a littered pathway. Soil and trees are contrasted with hypodermic needles and discarded cigarette packs, revealing the ease at which beautiful things can fall susceptible to decay.

The story of a relationship gone sour isn't new. It's extremely stereotypical to see the boyfriend begging the reluctant girl to get an abortion. It went out of vogue with Madonna's "Papa Don't Preach."

I find it hard to believe that this play was written last year, much less by Walker, one of our country's most produced playwrights. His play about love in the '90s fails to deliver any modern concepts or ideas about love. Even more outdated than the play's storyline is the advice Jill gives to the pregnant Tina: "Tough; what you got is what you got."

There are certain basic characteristics that define a good script. Tough! does not meet any of them. The language is awkward, the playwright doesn't state any new or revolutionary ideas, but most of all, it just isn't entertaining. □

Kids today...

Forkin' BREWERY & WINE CO.

HAVING A KEG PARTY?

PAGE

INNES RD

ORLEANS BLVD. JEANNE D'ARC BLVD

SAVE $$$

Make Your Own Beer

ONLY $80/ KEG. Inc. Tax

3469 INNES ROAD

CALL 837-7476

Timely but disappointing

by Suzanne Andrew
Charlatan Staff

The Porcupine
Julian Barnes
Random House
$12.50
138 pages

The Porcupine is a timely narrative replete with interesting ideas, yet disappointing in delivery.

The novel is a picture of the author's conception of the transition from communism to capitalism in an Eastern European country.

Stoyo Petkanov is the caustic and manipulative former communist leader on trial for crimes against the people. Peter Solinsky is Petkanov's character foil, a dispassionate intellectual appointed as the prosecutor general for the trial.

As the trial stretches across weeks, then months, the perceived moral chasm between the two men disappears. Using these characters as an analogy for the political systems of communism and capitalism, the author mixes black and white to reveal the greyness of reality.

Images of Petkanov as a pompous ogre are challenged by evidence of his vulnerabilities. Pictures of Solinsky as a virtuous role model are smeared by disclosures of his devious side.

Throughout the novel, the author shows the trial contains no justice, but serves as a necessary means to end an unfashionable regime.

The trial of the deposed communist leader is used by the author as the axis of the plot. While some of the characters and situations are directly involved in the trial, others simply swing around this axis as part of the author's social commentary. The trial is thus representative of many different voices.

The plot, however, is static. No attempt is made at incorporating suspense. This technique works to a certain extent because it serves to emphasize the characters' interpretations of events. But because the reader is told what is going to happen through heavy foreshadowing, the reader has to wade through muddy prose.

Characters are strewn about the pages without ample explanations as to why they exist in the story. For example, a group of students with nothing better to do than watch the trial on television are introduced early in the novel. The author brings these characters into the story intermittently and seemingly without reason.

The students have no bearing on the main characters or events, and although they could have been used to voice the concerns of regular citizens, their dialogue is shallow and rather silly.

The author's use of language in this novel often seems inappropriate. In keeping with the simplistic style, the characters use unsophisticated language. At times this seems incongruous with their formal, well-off roles in society.

Petkanov, for example, rejects the suggestion that he should read one of the new free-press newspapers, saying, "I could spare myself the trouble and pour a bucket of shit over my head instead."

The Porcupine is an interesting read because of its subject matter, but the author's criticisms of political systems are often too subtle. The novel's impact is lost in a puddle of ambiguities where depth and piquant description should have been. □

Don Ross delights

by Andrea Smith
Charlatan Staff

Don Ross
Alumni Theatre
Jan. 14

Even if you put Don Ross in a sound-proof room and just watched him play, after about five minutes you'd probably say to yourself: "Wow. Even if I practised for a billion years, I could never be that good."

Ross, a Toronto musician, has long been revered by those who can appreciate seriously good acoustic guitar music. Those of you who don't immediately recognize his name would none the less find his music frighteningly familiar, no doubt from hearing snippets used in between news clips on various CBC radio shows, such as As It Happens.

Last Friday, Ross packed the Alumni Theatre for a free concert, where he performed new and old songs. His proud parents sold CDs and tapes in the lobby.

Ross's style is an unusual mixture of classical guitar technique, modern improvisational style and casual acoustic melodies. Ross jokingly calls it "Heavy Wood guitar." Whatever you call it, from the word go, he had the crowd eating out of the palm of his very nimble hand.

Ross also talked up a very relaxed atmosphere, chatting with audience members as if they were guests in his living room.

Between songs, he kept everyone amused with stories gleaned from his travels. His description of the proliferation of vacuum stores in North Bay elicited a great deal of laughter, in particular a place called Homer's "... where all they sell are vacuums, electric guitars, and pet food." Thus the title of his song "Hoover the Musical Dog."

But where there is comedy, tragedy can't be far behind. This came when Ross told the audience: "It seems, that I will be signed to Sony Music..."

Ross sounded genuinely enthused.

But those people who've followed him on the comparatively independent folk festival circuit will certainly lose sleep, tormented by the thought of Michael Jackson using his pass card to sneak into Sony's studios late at night to fiddle with Ross's tracks, perhaps using a synthesized version as back-up on the Free Willy II soundtrack.

But all this anxiety washed away as Ross played on and the audience returned his efforts with hearty applause. By the end, all fears were put aside. Not even Sony Music could screw up something so perfect. □

Jerry Garcia look-alike Don Ross casts a spell on his guitar.

"NOBODY PARTIES LIKE THE IRISH"

Heart & Crown

IRISH PUB & RESTAURANT

NO COVER 10¢ WINGS 15¢ SHRIMP
IMPORTED DRAFTS
LARGE PATIO DAILY SPECIALS
DART BOARDS SATELLITE TV

LIVE "IRISH" ENTERTAINMENT
EVERY WED., THURS., FRI. AND SAT. 9 P.M.

GOOD FUN GOOD FOOD GREAT BEER
67 CLARENCE STREET, BYWARD, MARKET, 562-0674

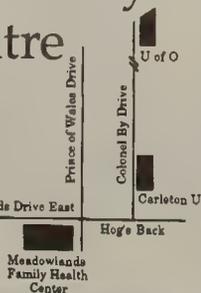

Meadowlands Family Health Centre

Hog's Back Plaza
888 Meadowlands Drive East
corner of Prince of Wales Dr. and Meadowlands Dr.
(behind McDonald's)
Ottawa, Ontario K2C3R2
228-2882

Family Medicine Pediatrics
Adolescent Medicine Minor Surgery
Obstetrics and Maternity Care Counselling Services

Nous Parlons Français

Open 7 days a week With or without appointment
Weekdays 8AM to 8PM
Weekends / Holidays 10AM to 6PM

Hey Kids!

How would you like to win an Attic music sampler?

To win this cassette featuring bands like the Juliana Hatfield Three, All you have to do is answer this skill-testing question:

What day does Robert Burns Day fall on this year?

That's it. To enter, just drop off your name and phone number, along with the correct answer in the Arts Editor's mailbox at the Charlatan, Room 531 Unicentre by 3 p.m. Monday, Jan 24. Winners will be determined by a random draw. Charlatan Staff aren't eligible.

Congratulations to Sarah Béchard who knew that nobody, not even Mr. Pink, survived Resivoir Dogs. Come on up and pick up your Red House Painters CD, Sarah!

LONG DAY IN THE UNIVERSE

THURSDAY, JANUARY 20 TO THURSDAY, JANUARY 27

Thursday, January 20

For the adventurous film buff, Urotsukidoji: Legend of the Overfiend is starting a five-day run at the Mayfair tonight at 7 p.m. It's described as a "legendary Japanimation horror/porn feature" and carries the warning: "Although this is an animated film it is definitely not for children, or those who are sensitive, faint-hearted or politically correct." Sounds splendid.

If this isn't quite your thing, the Hammerheads play disco at the Pit this evening.

Toronto band hHead is at Zaphod's this evening. Six bucks gets you in. Local band types Trailer Dickson open.

Friday, January 21

This afternoon's free lunch-time concert at noon in Carleton's Alumni Theatre features flautist Caroline Grimes and pianist Sandra Webster.

As if you didn't see enough of them on television, you can catch the World's Best Commercials 1993 (Isn't this an oxymoron? -ed.) at the Bytowne tonight at 7 p.m. It's also showing at various times until Jan. 27. If they show that Taster's Choice commercial, you have our permission to storm the projection room.

May we suggest. . . some poetry?

by Mario Carlucci
Charlatan Staff

I've always looked at modern poets as simply pseudo-writers who couldn't crack the big leagues. Justified or not, that's the way I've felt.

This extreme view may have been caused by a lack of exposure to real poets or maybe too much exposure to really bad poets.

But it wasn't until reading some of the work of poets featured in Ottawa's newest reading series that I've learned the personal and social value of good poetry.

This series, sponsored by Carleton University's Italian department and the Istituto Italiano di Cultura of Ottawa, demonstrates that these modern poets are anything but bad.

First of all, there are poets like Italian-born Pier Giorgio Di Cicco, who began the series with a reading at the Stone Angel Institute Jan. 11. His poems tell of the Italian immigrant contribution to Canada's social makeup and are testament to the community's cultural wealth.

The second author in the series, Mary Di Michele, teaches creative writing at Concordia University and has published extensive works of poetry since 1977. Her first novel, titled Under My Skin, should be available by the spring.

Her earlier works like Bread and Chocolate and Immune to Gravity have been characterized as "feminine, tough, ironic, and unsentimental," by Canadian Forum. Her reading took place Jan. 18 at the

The Publicans, a local folk-type trio with Celtic roots, play the Sunnyside Sports Bar tonight. Best of all, it's free!

Saturday, January 22

Appearing at the Penguin this very evening is the Belfast Cowboys and September Child, putting their unique spin on that alterno-folk-rock thing. Five bucks gets you in.

Tonight at Zaphod's you can see Corky and the Juice Pigs, those wacky, wacky guys who frequented the painfully bad and thankfully snuffed Ralph Benmurgui Show. Cover is seven dollars.

Sunday, January 23

Short Cuts is playing at 8:45 p.m. at the Bytowne. This is a film from the same man (Robert Altman) who brought us The Player, so you might want to consider checking this film out.

Monday, January 24

There's a little thing called the Vanilla Reading Series taking place at 8 p.m. this evening at 361 Elgin St. What can we tell you? Well, it's free, there'll be an open set of poetry and prose, it's hosted by Warren D. Fulton and it features readings from Jayne Holowachuk (who will read her story "When Bad Things Happen to Good Parents") and National Library.

Readings following Di Michele's, like Vittorio Rossi's and Antonio d'Alfonso's, will also take place at the National Library in subsequent weeks.

D'Alfonso, a literary critic, film producer and scriptwriter, also writes poetry, and according to critic Liliane Welch, "writes in the tradition of Baudelaire and Dante." He reads at the National Library Feb. 17 at 8 p.m.

Non-poets in this series include Rossi and Paul Tana. Rossi is a playwright and former writer-in-residence at Concordia. He has had his first two one-act plays Little Blood Brother and Backstreets produced by the Willow Cabin Theatre Company in New York. He will be reading at the National Library Feb. 1.

Rossi's work intensely examines communication and the obstacles of human interaction. His work as a new playwright is refreshingly frank and marks an optimistic future for Canadian drama. His work is rife with intelligent wit and passionate portrayals of sympathetic characters.

Tana's La Sarrasine, a film nominated for 11 Genies, will round out the series at the Bytowne (in French and Italian with English subtitles), March 13 at 3:30 p.m. There will be a discussion period with Tana at the end of the film.

Next fall, the producers of the series plan on presenting a similar series that will include Governor General's Award-winner Nino Ricci. □

Graham M. Fallis.

Rebecca Campbell, the omnipresent lead vocalist of several Ottawa bands like Fat Man Waving, will be singing this evening at the Great Canadian Theatre Company. She'll be backed by local jazz types Justin Haynes and Jordan O'Connor. Tickets are $16 at the GCTC box office.

Tuesday, January 25

In the spirit of Tuesday, Charlatan production manager Kevin McKay recommends you read Leaving Cheyenne by Larry McMurtry. Says McKay: "Quite unlike any of McMurtry's other writing, this is a character-driven story which offers a serene and feminine portrayal of the American West."

Just to put this review into context, right after offering this opinion, McKay started giggling uncontrollably. Hey, it's been a hard week.

Wednesday, January 26

Ummmmmm . . . you could always stay home, study and make yourself a snack. Our suggestion: put 12 Triscuits™ covered with old, undyed cheddar cheese in the microwave until the cheese starts to bubble. Serves 2. (Don't forget to turn the microwave on.)

Thursday, January 27

If there's something everyone enjoys, it's some good Hungarian folk music and dancers. Which is why I'm sure the Hungarian State Folk Ensemble show at Centrepointe Theatre (tickets: $28.65 and $24.35 for youths and seniors) at 8 p.m. tonight will be packed.

The Royal Winnipeg Ballet is presenting An Evening With Mark Godden, a salute to the ballet's resident choreographer, this evening at the National Arts Centre Opera at 8 p.m. Tickets are available through the NAC box office. They cost $22, $35 and $47.50.

If you have an event you want to appear in this handy calendar, you can drop your announcement off at The Charlatan, Room 531 Unicentre during regular business hours or you can fax us at 788-4051. Announcements must be in by the Friday before publication.

GOOD TIMES

GOOD VALUE

The LOCKMASTER LOUNGE

Join us for Great Food, Refreshment and Entertainment
4 Large Screen TV's
TSN and Satellite Dish for the best in sports
Breakfast Menu served Saturday and Sunday til 4 pm
Saturday and Tuesday - Wing Nights
Live Entertainment Friday, Saturday and Sundays
No Cover

Once Again	Jan. 21, 22
Tango Pirates	Jan. 28, 29, 30
and SUPER BOWL SUNDAY	Jan. 30
Wednesdays - Karaoke with "Wacky Wally"
Sundays - Check Weekly

SOMERSET HOUSE HOTEL

In the heart of the city for 95 years
A great, inexpensive spot for visiting friends
352 Somerset St. W., at Bank
Telephone 233-7762

The Mother of All Pizzas

GRAND CENTRAL

141 George St.
233-1216

Thursday,
January 27th,

Wild "T" and The Spirit

Wednesday, February 2nd,

ALANAH MYLES

Thursday, February 3rd,

*The Odds &
Rhymes with Orange*

ST PATRICK'S DAY

Thursday, March 17th

*Spirit
of the
West*

Portraits now

Bayshore The Official

Graduation Photographer for
Carleton University

Student Association, Inc. 1993/94

Why
PORTRAITS NOW?

- No Sitting Fee on Campus!
- Previews Back Next Day!
- Choice of Backgrounds!
- Satisfaction Guaranteed!

ATTENTION 1993/94 GRADUATES Early Bird Special FREE 8 X 10

RECEIVE ONE FREE 8 X 10 PORTRAIT with the purchase of any Portraits Now Graduation Portrait Collection shot on campus between Jan. 24 and Jan. 28, 1994. DON'T MISS OUT! MAKE YOUR APPOINTMENT by calling 596-1501 or visit our studio across from Porter Hall

2nd Semester Session starts January 24, 1994
across from Porter Hall

Portraits now Bayshore 596-1501
100 Bayshore Dr., Nepean Ont., K2B 8C1

FREE POOL

12pm to 5pm DAILY

FULL Lunch Menu

D.J. Every Night

4 T.V.'S & 3 Big Screens

96 George Street in the Byward Market
562-0433

STUDENT NIGHTS

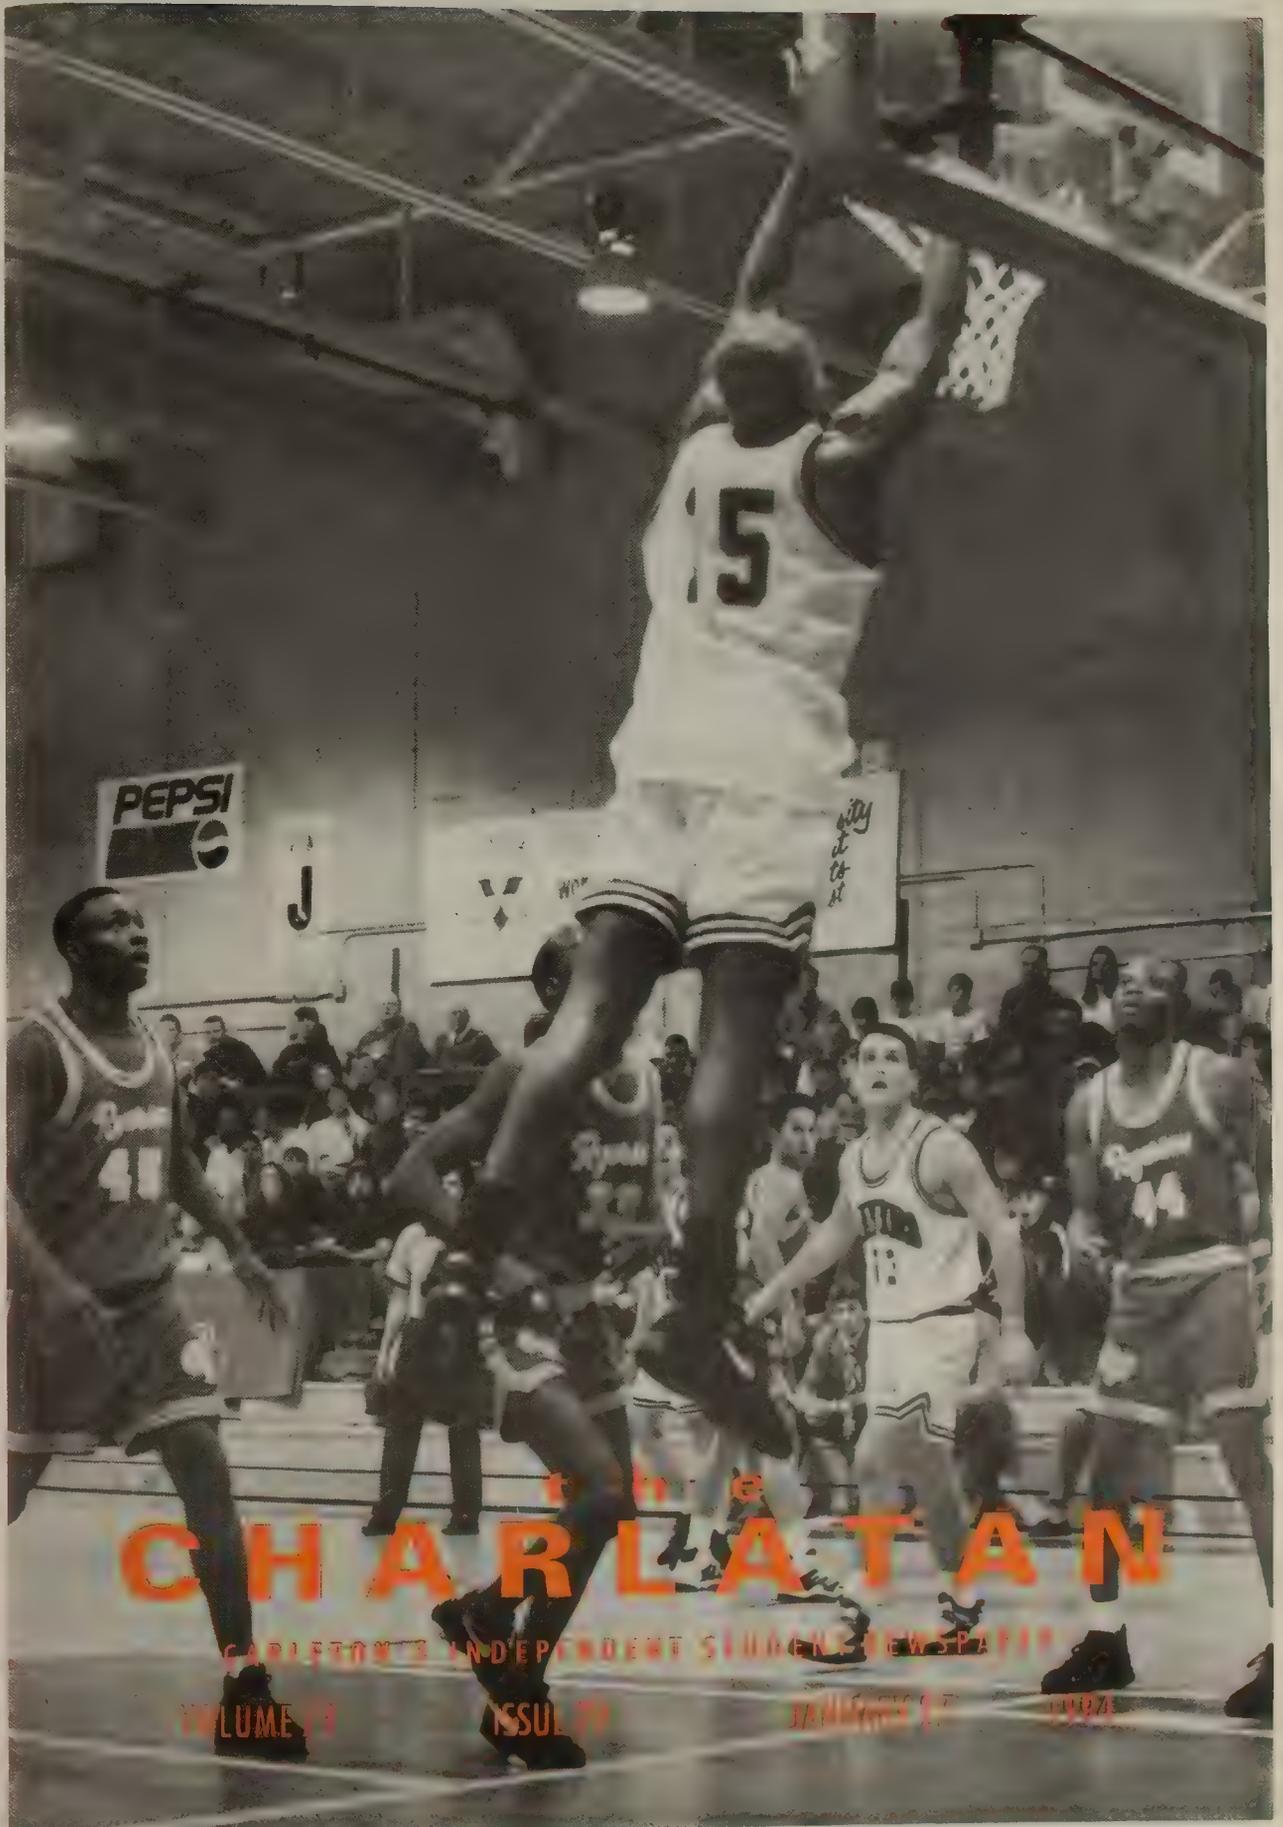

Tuesdays & Wednesdays

BEVERAGE

99¢

DRAUGHT

Specials

the
CHARLATAN

CHARLTON'S INDEPENDENT STUDENT NEWSPAPER

VOLUME 79

ISSUE 79

DECEMBER 17, 1992

1992

WHERE CAN YOU AND YOUR DATE EAT A GREAT DINNER...FOR LESS THAN $20!!!

JANUARY COUPON

Full Course Dinner
only
.99¢

(max. value $13.50)
order any full course dinner at reg. price & receive a second dinner of equal or lesser value for 99¢
Not valid with any other offer. P.S.T. & G.S.T. extra (coupon expires Jan. 31, 1994)

Ottawa South's
Finest Sunday
Brunch 10:30-2:30

FULL 3 COURSE DINNER - Soup or Salad, Fresh Baked San Francisco Sourdough Bread, Entrée Selection, Spumoni Ice Cream, Coffee or Tea

2446 Bank at Hunt club
(Towngate Plaza)
736-6677
Reservations & Banquet
Facilities Available

The NOODLE
WORKS

FEBRUARY COUPON

Full Course Dinner
only
.99¢

(max. value $13.50)
order any full course dinner at reg. price & receive a second dinner of equal or lesser value for 99¢
Not valid with any other offer. P.S.T. & G.S.T. extra (coupon valid from Feb. 1 - Feb. 28, 1994)

HOMEMADE PASTA DISHES • VEAL • CHICKEN • MORE

CRACKERS TWO

Sundays & Mondays
Sports on the
Big Screen
15¢ Wings

$2.50 Wednesdays
Ladies' Night
FREE POOL for Ladies

Fri. & Sat. Jan. 28, 29
Sour Mash

Tuesdays
Karaoke
Nite

Thurs. January 27
Sweet Rock All!

SUN. JANUARY 30
SUPERBOWL PARTY

175 Richmond Road Tel. 722-3201

SCHADILLAC

SALOON
Ottawa's Only
Authentic
Western Saloon

Sundays - Wednesdays

Draught $1.50

Thurs. Jan 27
"Lucky Ron"
No Cover

SUPERBOWL PARTY

Sunday January 30
Meet Owner Mike
Schad from the Philadelphia Eagles

Lots of PRIZES!

Come see us down
in the Byward Market
105 Murray St.
233-5716

SCHADILLAC RANCH

Boulet
Boots
starting at $169.00

The Lowest Prices
Guaranteed!
Convenient Location
in the Byward Market
99 Clarence St.
562-1320

HOME OF THE SOUTH END BLUES

TUCSON
ROADHOUSE

Jan. 28/29
Mojo Buford
Muddy Waters' Harp Player
COMING UP
Feb. 4/5
Mel Brown
The Legend

2440 Bank Street (Bank at Huntclub) Ottawa
For Entertainment Information call 738-7596

Tucson's
West

Jan. 28/29
Dutch Mason
Prime Minister of the Blues
COMING UP
Feb. 4/5
Frank Consentino
Screaming Guitar Blues

1541 Merivale Road, Ottawa
For Entertainment Information call 228-6666

GRAND CENTRAL

141, George St
241-2727

"The Mother of All Pizzas"

SATURDAY and SUNDAY

Brunch 10AM to 3PM
Over 100 items to choose from $7.99

+taxes

STEAK DINNER
SPECIAL

includes baked potato or fries, regular salad & garlic bread

$5.99
+taxes

CALENDAR EVENTS

Wednesday, February 2nd,
Alanah MYLES

★ Thursday, February 3rd, ★
The Odds &
Rhymes with Orange

ST PATRICK'S DAY

Thursday, March 17th

Spirit
of the West

ZAPHOD
BEEBLEBROX

OFTEN IMITATED, NEVER DUPLICATED

THURS. JAN. 27 (9PM) $5

S.O.N.G. BENEFIT

BLACK BOOT TRIO
SOLVEIG ANGELIQUE
SEVENTH FIRE
BIG STONE SINCERS

FRI & SAT. JAN. 28, 29
(9PM) $7

GRIEVOUS

+ Soluble
Fish (Fri.)

+ Melanie
Doane (Sat.)

EVERY THURSDAY

CHA CHA'S PLAYPEN

$1
FEB. 3

RESIN SCRAPER
SPINY ANTEATERS

COMING SOON

FEB. 4 TOASTED WESTERNS
FEB. 5 VARGA
FEB. 11 HEADSTONES
FEB. 12 EUGENE'S 10TH ANNIVERSARY PARTY

BINGO JET
INTERNATIONAL

8 PM TUESDAYS

MUSIC * BEVERAGES * ADVENTURE
27 YORK ST.

CUSA employees talk union

by Brent Dowdall
Charlatan Staff

Some employees of the Carleton University Students' Association say they're unhappy with a Ontario Labor Relations Board ruling which has forced them to join a union.

"People are upset about it," says Val Leinan, who works with CUSA's entertainment crew. "Most people did not have a voice or a vote and didn't really find out about it until they were told they were unionized."

Chris Larochelle, who works for Unicentre security, says he's upset at being forced into the union.

"I've talked to a lot of people and everyone has this feeling that we didn't really have a say."

In November, the board ruled that about 160 CUSA employees would automatically be unionized as part of Canadian Union of Public Employees Local 1281.

During the summer, CUSA fired two union organizers, Student Academic Action Bureau co-ordinator Wayne Ross and Carleton Women's Centre co-ordinator Renée Twaddle, leading to hearings before the board in Toronto in August. Ross and Twaddle were reinstated in September.

In the board's decision, CUSA's firings and "scheme of harassment and intimidation of union organizers and supporters," are cited as reasons why a fair and unbiased vote could not take place.

The decision was the first one to use year-old amendments to the Ontario Labor Relations Act, which allow the board to automatically certify employees if it finds an employer has interfered with a union drive. In most union drives, a vote of employees is needed to obtain certification.

The local is preparing to negotiate its first collective agreement with CUSA in the next few months, says Local 1281 president Rob Centa. A collective agreement is a contract between employees and an employer which sets out working and wage conditions.

The local's executive held its first meeting Jan. 18 in Porter Hall to inform employees and explain the structure of the union. Some at the meeting estimated attendance as being between 30 and 50 people. The meeting was closed to the press.

In the near future the bargaining unit will elect representatives to negotiate the agreement with CUSA, says Centa.

Some newly unionized employees say they are unhappy with having no choice about joining a union.

"I don't care for it," says Frank Bellantoni, who works at Oliver's pub in the Unicentre. "I was happy before the union came. Either way, it won't affect me at all."

Bellantoni says he wanted a vote on whether to unionize and does not want to pay union dues. Centa says dues are 1.75 per cent of an employee's gross monthly salary and won't be collected until after the collective agreement is negotiated.

James Rilett, CUSA's chief electoral officer, says because there was no vote, the union supporters didn't have to convince other employees that a union would be a good idea.

He says if there had been a vote, organizers would have had to "promise us what they'd do and we'd have something to hold them to."

Twaddle.

Derek Watt, staff supervisor of the Foot Patrol, says he's happy to see the unionization. He says he hopes it leads to pay increases.

"I think everyone's sadly underpaid and overworked," Watt says.

Watt says his honorarium calls for 15 hours of work per week, but because he works more than that, his wage works out to around $5 per hour.

Leinan says if wage increases come from the collective agreement, then CUSA may have to increase student fees.

"I think in the end, it's probably going to come down to more bucks out of students' pockets."

Rilett says a small group of supporters have pushed a union on everyone else. But Twaddle says employees who are angry with not being able to vote on whether to join should be angry with CUSA President Lucy Watson and not the union.

"Since Lucy took away everybody's right to vote, we got automatically certified," Twaddle says. "She took away the employee's right to choose when she interfered in the union drive."

In response, Watson says the CUSA executive went through the "expense and stress" of the board hearings to get a form employees and explain the structure of the union. Some at the meeting estimated attendance as being between 30 and 50 people. The meeting was closed

UNION cont'd on page 5

Watson.

Admission mark requirements may rise

by Tonya Zelinsky
Charlatan Staff

A proposal to raise admissions requirements for the faculty of social sciences shouldn't become university policy, says the director of academics for the Carleton University Students' Association.

Gary Anandasangaree says the proposal will prevent those with lower high-school grades from getting the opportunity to study at Carleton.

On Dec. 6, Carleton's social sciences faculty board passed a motion to raise entrance requirements to 70 per cent from 60 per cent for pass programs and to 75 per cent from 65 per cent for honors programs.

Before this becomes policy for the faculty, it must get passed by several academic decision-making bodies, says Michel Gaulin, clerk of the university senate. The senate is Carleton's highest academic decision-making body.

The motion will now be passed on to members of the senate executive, who will review the policy and decide whether to pass it on to the senate committee on admissions and studies. The committee will look at the policy and decide if it should pass it on to the senate, says Gaulin.

Rob Jamieson, CUSA's vice-president internal, says he doesn't believe the senate will pass the proposal. Jamieson, who is a student senator, says while there is "the odd senator" who would support a cap on enrolment, "the mood is still to keep an open philosophy."

The proposed raise in admission requirements was co-sponsored at the December board meeting by political science professor Radha Jhappan and sociology/anthropology professor Daiva Stasiulis. (Stasiulis was not present at the meeting.) Political science professor Teresa Rakowska-Harmstone seconded the motion.

According to the meeting minutes, Jhappan said universities are exploiting students with low averages for their money.

But Marilyn Marshall, the dean of social sciences, says she is "opposed to the motion" and voted against it at the faculty board meeting.

Marshall says a high-school grade point average is a bad way of predicting future academic standing. She says all students should have the opportunity to succeed at the post-secondary level.

Jhappan says she is worried that students entering Carleton with a weak academic standing cannot manage their time efficiently enough. She says she knows students who are carrying a full course load, taking out a student loan and working part-time.

Jhappan says the Ontario Ministry of Education and Training is "developing a new system" of re-classification for post-secondary institutions, and fears the government will downgrade Carleton to a community college.

But Diane Crocker, the ministry's university liaison, says this claim is unfounded.

"Carleton University is a government-funded institution and has a legal right to be called a university."

Crocker says she is unaware of any new evaluation and reacted to Jhappan's claim by laughing.

Kelly Young, a former law student at Carleton who transferred to a program at a different school, says she is upset about Jhappan's proposal. Young says she would never have been admitted to the

ADMISSION cont'd on page 5

Res drug bust nets five

by Andrea Smith
Charlatan Staff

On Jan. 14, two Ottawa police officers made five drug-related arrests in Carleton's residence.

Four charges of trafficking and one charge of possession with the purpose to traffic were laid.

Staff Sgt. Sue O'Sullivan says the police confiscated a "small quantity of cannabis resin," more commonly known as hash.

Helder Silva, 23, Brent Langan, 19, Bradley Sutton, 19, and Andrew Hill, 20, have been charged with trafficking in hash and marijuana, she says.

According to O'Sullivan, the charge of drug trafficking involves being caught in the act of selling illicit narcotics, usually through selling them to a police officer. Jacob Amis, 22, has been charged with possession for the purpose of trafficking marijuana.

Len Boudreault, assistant director of the department of university safety, says the arrests came about as a result of complaints.

Dave Sterritt, director of housing and food services, says four of those arrested are residents of the Russell and Dundas residence buildings.

Sterritt says his department knew nothing about the investigation. "I'm going to tell you quite openly" says Sterritt, "that I don't know how the police came by the information. Our department didn't give them the information. We weren't tipped at all."

Sterritt adds those charged have not been evicted from residence and says it will be considered after closer investigation.

"I think it's a well known fact that there's drug abuse in res," says Rideau River Residence Association President John Woods, who added trafficking is uncommon.

On the condition of anonymity, a person who lives in residence told The Charlatan most of the drug use in residence is "casual." The person adds the arrests "stemmed the use of drugs in residence for the first little while, but it really hasn't affected it too much." □

With files from Brandie Weikle

on the cover

PHOTO BY BILL COOPER
Forward Taffe Charles soared high this weekend, but the Ravens didn't, losing twice.

arts	19
classifieds	18
feature	12
international	9
national	7
news	3
opinion	11
sports	15

index

Service co-ordinators have their say

by Matt Skinner
Charlatan Staff

Carleton's student services are funded out of the $80-$95 annual fee each undergraduate student pays to the Carleton University Students' Association.

With the academic year more than half over, The Charlatan decided to find out what the co-ordinators have done so far this year, and whether they have any new plans. This week we profile the Peer Counselling Centre and the Carleton Disability Awareness Centre.

PEER COUNSELLING CENTRE

The primary function of the Peer Counselling Centre is to provide students with counselling, says Theresa Cowan, CUSA's director of services. The centre's coordinator, Dawn Fallis, was sick this week and could not be reached for comment.

Cowan says the centre's volunteers undergo 64 hours of mandatory training that cover issues such as body image, substance abuse, eating disorders and other personal problems students may encounter. She says the centre offers a listening ear, as opposed to advice.

Perry Simpson, a volunteer at the centre, says a lot of different people do the training.

"They get in professionals from different services all over Ottawa," he says.

Shelley Baker, another volunteer at the centre, says the services offered by the centre differ from that of Counselling and Student Life Services because you do not need an appointment at Peer Counselling.

"If students have an immediate problem they can come here," she says.

Simpson says training is another difference between these two services.

"They are professional; most of them have doctorates and masters. We're just volunteers with basic training," says Simpson.

Cowan says the centre acts as a referral service for students, to places like a crisis centre or a distress line. She says students do not need an appointment to talk to one of the centre's volunteers, who are trained to be "confidential and non-judgmental."

The centre also provides workshops on topics such as massage, relationships and stress management, says Cowan.

She says the centre does a lot of outreach work to high schools that have, or want to start, peer counselling centres, if they need training in peer counselling.

Cowan says the centre has a large resource file available to students that contains information on different organizations and centres across North America that deal with topics such as sexuality, health, and eating disorders.

The centre has a tutorial service where students can sign up if they need a tutor or if they want to be a tutor, she says. Simpson says the students often charge $10 to $20 an hour for tutoring.

"The students arrange their own fees," he says.

The centre also offers condoms at cost: $4 for a dozen lubricated condoms and $3 for a dozen non-lubricated. Foam is available for $12.

Cowan says the centre, which was established 17 years ago when people at the Carleton Women's Centre saw a need for peer counselling, has not changed much in recent years.

"(The centre) operates on a very progressive level — very pro-choice, pro letting people make their own decisions," she says.

The centre offers a phone-in counselling line at 788-3581. The line is open during the centre's hours of operation, which are 9 a.m. to 7 p.m. Monday through Thursday, and 9 a.m. to 4:30 p.m. on Fridays.

The centre is located on the third floor of the Unicentre across from the International Students' Centre.

JANET BURROWS AND SHERYL ANANNY — CARLETON DISABILITY AWARENESS CENTRE

The Carleton Disability Awareness Centre plays many roles on campus, says Janet Burrows, one of the centre's coordinators. Burrows shares the coordinator duties with Sheryl Ananny.

"We try to bring events and information to Carleton to make people more aware of issues that people with disabilities face, here at Carleton and in the community too," says Burrows.

She says the centre has hosted four speakers and events so far this year. The centre has arranged for Jean Stewart, a disabled feminist author, to speak on Feb. 11.

Burrows says she wants to emphasize the positive aspects of disabilities.

"What I'm trying to get away from is the highly medicalized type of emphasis on disability, meaning that someone is perpetually sick," she says. "We're trying to remove the label that disability is a personal tragedy, and trying to inform the Carleton community that there are aspects of being disabled that are very positive and rewarding."

Burrows says the centre is working on an art show for the end of the year. She says people with visible and non-visible disabilities may submit pieces to the centre.

The centre also has a resource section which includes newsletters, magazines, books, and newspaper clippings that cover such topics as employment equity, women's issues, men's issues, issues concerning the deaf community, transportation and accessibility issues. The centre's resources are available for anyone to use.

Burrows and Ananny: happy together.

Burrows says the centre, which receives just under $40,000 a year from CUSA, spends at least $2,000 on resource material.

She says the centre also provides support and advocacy for students with disabilities.

"If a student wants to come in here and wants to complete a project or wants to initiate a committee, they're more than welcome to do so. That's always been our policy," she says.

The centre also sits on many committees on campus. Burrows says one committee Ananny sits on, administration's dedicated access fund, has made a lot of improvements on campus this year.

She says the committee has done a lot of work making washrooms more accessible, installing automatic door openers and the installation of an elevator that goes from the tunnel to the library.

She says another role of the centre is to make committees "aware and accountable about issues that affect students with disabilities."

Ananny says the main difference between CDAC and the administration-funded Paul Menton Centre for Persons with Disabilities is that the Paul Menton Centre can test people for disabilities.

For example, if a student has a learning disability and needs more time to write an exam, the centre has trained staff which will test for and certify the student's learning disability. Ananny says CDAC offers advocacy and referral services, and does not have the same trained staff as the Paul Menton Centre.

Burrows says the centre will be holding a meeting for any students who are interested in supporting the disability rights movement or just want to find out "what the centre does" on Feb. 16 at 3 p.m. in the centre, which is located in Room 513 of the Unicentre. □

Peer counselling volunteers (l-r) Lyndsay Sieger, Jennifer Barnett, Marie-Claude Ravenelle, Tammy Sheehan and Jennifer Schilling.

Calling all Charlatan writers

Come one, come all to a seminar about covering gay, lesbian and bisexual issues. The seminar will be given by a representative of Carleton's Gay, Lesbian and Bisexual Centre.

DATE: THURSDAY, FEB. 3, 4 P.M., IN THE CHARLATAN OFFICE, 531 UNICENTRE.

For more information, contact Mario or Karin at 788-6680.

Calling all Charlatan writers

Meadowlands Family Health Centre

Hog's Back Plaza
888 Meadowlands Drive East
corner of Prince of Wales Dr. and Meadowlands Dr.
(behind McDonald's)
Ottawa, Ontario K2C3R2
228-2882

Family Medicine
Adolescent Medicine
Obstetrics and Maternity Care

Pediatrics
Minor Surgery
Counselling Services

Meadowlands Family Health Centre

Nous Parlons Français

Open 7 days a week

Weekdays

Weekends / Holidays

With or without appointment

8AM to 8PM

10AM to 6PM

COMMENTARY

OC Transpo should take its own hike

by Blayne Haggart
Charlatan Staff

Students reading the Ottawa Citizen's city section Jan. 16 would have been surprised by the revelation that OC Transpo service is both friendly and efficient.

Mary Ellen Collins, a journalism intern from the University of Western Ontario, was given a handful of quarters and loonies and took the bus on six (count 'em, six) separate occasions. She was assigned to the story to "get a consumer's perspective."

That she was from out of town and had never used OC Transpo before was not an accident. The Citizen wanted to hear the point of view of someone who had never (been) taken (by) this, ahem, rapid transit system before.

It boggles the mind that the Citizen would take this tack to evaluate the transit system. It's impossible for someone who has only taken an Ottawa bus six times to fully appreciate the grief OC Transpo causes its customers on a daily basis.

Especially with the "typical bus journeys" she was made to embark upon: downtown to Baxter Road (home of the Citizen), the Citizen to downtown, downtown to Place D'Orleans, Place D'Orleans to the Cumberland Wave Pool, Orleans to the Ottawa General Hospital on Smyth Road, and from there to Laurier Avenue.

Real typical, but only if you're a Citizen employee who wants to take their kids out to a wave pool in the boondocks. It's not a typical route for most regular bus riders who know the truth: OC Transpo sucks.

The service is generally lousy, the buses to and from campus — when they finally show up — are invariably full and their hours of operation screw everyone who isn't a government employee.

UNION cont'd from page 3.

vote for employees. She called Twaddle's statements "misleading."

"I don't think it's appropriate for one individual to be pinpointed in this entire matter," she says.

Centa says he was pleased with the meeting. He says employees who came expressed interest and asked many constructive questions. Twaddle says the meeting should have come sooner.

"I think that as soon as we were notified that we were certified, the union should have been here and talking to school if the requirements were as high as the proposed level.

ADMISSION cont'd from page 3.

"That is what's special about Carleton (low admissions requirements). Everyone deserves the opportunity for an education," she says.

According to the meeting minutes, Allan Riding, associate dean of the faculty of social sciences, said raising admission requirements would also harm the school's finances.

"Approximately 1,500 students would not be admitted if the proposal were implemented, and . . . the direct loss of fees would be $3 million per year."

However, Rakowska-Harmstone says students with lower grades getting in will do poorly and are a burden on the university.

"I don't think we should admit students with very low indicators. It puts a great strain on the university. I don't think this is much of a service to students because they don't gain much out of it. An increase in classes over several years has had a negative effect." □

Talk to any student freezing at 10 p.m., waiting for the Number 7 to come take them away, and you'll be inundated with anecdotal evidence clearly proving that OC Transpo systematically screws students.

They'll tell you about the time they were waiting for the bus and it didn't stop. They'll tell you about the time two weeks ago when droves of people waited at the Duntun Tower bus stop for an hour, only to discover from a passing car that buses weren't coming up the hill because the road was too icy. They'll tell you about how you can't take the bus to the clubs in town if you live anywhere outside downtown Ottawa.

Bus fares have gone up dramatically — 60 per cent in the last two years. Base fare has risen from 95 cents to $1.60, but evening service has been clawed back dramatically. The last local buses used to leave their points of departure (in Orleans at least) at about 1 a.m. No longer.

In my case, living all the way out in Orleans, the last local bus leaves Place D'Orleans at 12:18 a.m. and often before. This requires that I catch the 11:38 p.m. bus from Rideau Centre, which means I have to leave just as the city's nightlife comes out of hiding.

people."

She says the two months that elapsed between the board's decision and the meeting has made some employees "resentful," because they haven't had a chance to get their questions answered by the union executives.

Watt says there were many upset employees at the meeting.

"People were saying 'I've been working for CUSA for X many years and months and there's never been a problem.' Well, great, that's how it is now. Down the road there may be a problem and that's when the union comes in."

But Watt says the union is "going to make a tense working environment." □

The alternative, walking from Place D'Orleans, is not very practical on nights when the temperature reaches -40 degrees. Plus, I didn't pay $44.50 for a bus pass to enjoy the privilege of walking to my destination.

Collins also commented on the friendliness of Transpo employees, including the drivers. Granted, there are a few isolated souls who (God forbid) actually talk to their passengers. However, the friendly drivers who actually talk to us passengers are so rare they highlight how indifferent and sometimes rude bus drivers in this city are.

Collins took six bus rides and passed judgment on the system, a favorable judgment. This, in spite of deciding to walk in the cold and arriving at the Citizen 30 minutes late because she was given incorrect information by an OC Transpo employee who, presumably, should know the routes.

These things happen. It's just that when you're dealing with OC Transpo, these things seem to happen constantly.

If you want to talk typical experience, I'll give you typical experience. The experience of seeing the 95 pull away from my stop literally seconds before the 135 I'm on comes to a stop. The experience of a two-hour bus ride at home in the evening over a distance that takes 90 minutes at most to cycle. The experience of watching fares go up as service is cut back.

Carleton students get especially screwed. Even though we are a community of over 20,000 bodies, campus is served only by the Number 7 and 118 routes during off-peak hours. During peak hours, this service is "augmented" by the addition of the Number 19 route. Too bad peak hours don't coincide with when most classes are held at Carleton.

Service to Carleton is so bad Ottawa-area students often go to the University of Ottawa because it's more convenient by bus. On Sundays, not only do buses stop running from Carleton at 11:34 p.m. — as if nobody works or goes out on Sunday evenings — but service to Carleton is limited to two buses an hour on the Number 7 route all day. As if students never commute to campus or the library on Sundays. Sure.

None of this is news, except perhaps to the Citizen and our friend Mary Ellen Collins. The last thing this city needs is OC Transpo apologists and newspaper articles that insinuate bus service in this town is anything more than shoddy. □

Carleton has worked hard over the past number of years to make our campus more accessible but we have a long way to go.

The Dedicated Access Fund Committee is a joint committee between the Carleton University Administration and the Carleton University Students' Association. The Fund administers approximately $100,000 which it uses to undertake projects that improve the accessibility of the campus to people with disabilities.

Each year the committee consults with members of the Carleton community to establish a list of priority projects for the upcoming year. Listed below are the projects suggested to date. Now is your time to provide input to this process. Check off the 5 areas to which you think are the highest priority for making changes.

ACCESSIBILITY CHECKLIST

- AUTOMATIC DOORS:
 - Paterson Hall, Tunnel Level, Rear & Second Floor Entrances
 - Tory Building, Between West Foyer and Quad
 - Mackenzie, Tunnel Level
 - Architecture, Tunnel Level
- ACCESSIBLE WASHROOM UPGRADES:
 - Duntun Tower, Floors 2, 3 & 20
 - Southern Hall, Floors 4, 5 & 6
 - Unicentre, Tunnel Entrance (behind Hugo's)
 - St. Pat's, Floor 2
- Residence Commons, Ground Level:
 - Southam Hall, Tr'A Level
 - Leob, Lower Ground Level
- Library, Floors 4 & 5:
 - Mackenzie, in West Wing
 - Paterson Hall, Floors 3 & 4
- OTHER:

... or attend the INFORMATION TABLE on Campus Accessibility THURSDAY, FEBRUARY 1 3 pm, BAKER LOUNGE

CUSA

Clip this coupon & return-it to the C.U.S.A. Office, Suite 401 Unicentre, or Equity Office Room 507, Administration Building

CARLETON COMMERCE

UPCOMING EVENTS

February 3
Pub at Ollivers from 8:00 - 1:00

February 8 and 10
Commerce Society Elections

March 10
Business Banquet at the Château Laurier

March 18
Volleyball Tournament

March 25
Graduation at the Château Laurier

For information about the above events stop by 225 Paterson or call 788-2600 ext 2708

HALT THE

FRIDAY
FEB. 4

HIKE

A DAY OF PROTEST AGAINST TUITION HIKES

FREE!

NOON - 3pm Roosters
Heather Farrow
Fear and Loathing
Mark Wilson and the Heavy Brothers

FREE! 3-5pm

Porter Hall...
RALLY & PROTEST

5pm Porter Hall...
Jerry-Built
Belfast Cowboys
Electric Embryo
Fishtales
Black Triangle

CKCU FM
93.1

EUSA

the CHARLATAN
CARLETON'S INDEPENDENT STUDENT NEWSPAPER

NATIONAL AFFAIRS

Grad student reps fight tuition hikes

by John Steinbachs
Charlatan Staff

A cow in an office and a staged soup kitchen are two ways Ontario graduate students have planned to fight an impending tuition hike.

Graduate students may be the hardest hit if the province proceeds with its plans to hike the university tuition ceiling substantially.

A discussion paper released by the Council of Ontario Universities last August proposed to raise graduate tuition fees by up to 50 per cent and up to 200 per cent for professional programs like law and dentistry over the next two years.

An announcement of the tuition fee ceiling for 1994-95 is expected at the end of this month, after which university administrations can set their tuition fee increases for next year.

Some graduate student across the province, fearing the effects of larger-than-usual tuition hikes, have begun to take action.

This new round of tuition increases could drive many graduate students under the poverty line, says Dave Hubka, vice-president external of the Graduate Students' Association at Carleton.

Hubka says the association is working with the Canadian Union of Public Employees Local 2323, which represents teaching and research assistants, to fund a study on how many students would be impoverished by a tuition increase. The study is being conducted by Angus Reid Group Inc. and will be released by the first week in March.

Hubka says when the report is released, a 1930s-style soup kitchen will be set up on campus to serve students macaroni and cheese. He says he hopes this will bring attention to the plight of students.

Richard Nimijean, recording secretary for CUPE Local 2323, says the union is negotiating with administration for a new contract. He says the union is demanding its members be compensated by administration for any tuition increases.

"So far we have no way of knowing what tuition fees will be," says Nimijean. "Our goal now is to eliminate the impact the increase will take on our membership."

Michel Roy, president of CUPE 2323, says "even a 10-per-cent increase . . . is quite reprehensible." Roy says teaching assistants can't afford to give up more of their take-home pay to tuition.

Other graduate associations across the province are also preparing protests and lobbying government.

Rick Smith, president of the Graduate Student Association at Guelph University, says he has been carrying out lobbying efforts and circulating petitions against a hike.

If a tuition hike is announced, Smith says some graduate students will walk a cow to the office of the local member of provincial parliament.

"The point being that politicians are treating students like cash cows," he says.

Charlotte Reeve, a field worker with the Graduate Students' Association at University of Toronto, says the association is organizing rallies to protest the hikes.

But Marc Fonda, president of the University of Ottawa's Graduate Students Association, says he hasn't taken any steps to organize protests yet.

"We don't know what the increase will be so there's nothing we can do."

Fonda says he will wait until the in-

Michel Roy, CUPE 2323 president.

crease has been passed and "at that point we can decide what actions we can take." □

Student health plans: one yes, one no

by Gordon Loane
The Brunswickian, University of New Brunswick

FREDERICTON—UNB administration has given the go-ahead to a significantly expanded health plan for undergraduates on the Fredericton campus beginning next fall.

The future of the Canadian Federation of Students' health plan had been in some doubt despite an overwhelmingly favorable referendum result approving it in October.

But in December, the university's administration gave the approval needed for the student council to go ahead with the plan.

The new plan will cost each student $100, which is $75 more than the current plan.

Despite the increased cost of the new plan, Pat Fitzpatrick, UNB student council vice-president, says he believes the benefits outweigh the costs. He says he has already taken steps to implement the new plan.

"We signed a contract with Sun Life and have sent in the first $1,000 payment," he says.

The plan will be administered by the UNB student council. The old plan was run by the university's administration and the cost was included in tuition fees.

"A most important feature of the new health plan is that the $100 cost is refundable to those who might be included on some other health plan," says Fitzpatrick. He says if a student is already covered by their parents' health plan, they can opt out of the CFS health plan.

The new plan will partially cover medical expenses including prescription drugs, oral contraceptives, optometry, physiotherapy, psychological services and an accidental dental benefit.

The approval of the new plan does come at an additional price. Fitzpatrick says the administration will not rebate the $25 fee for their plan next year.

"Just where this extra money will be diverted is still up in the air, but the administration has made no commitments yet," says Fitzpatrick. □

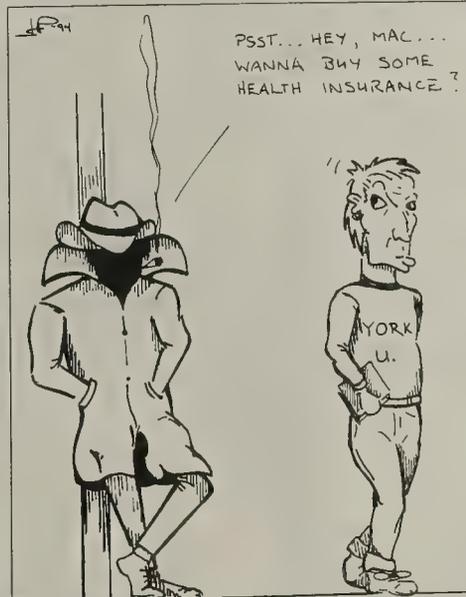

by Nina Kolunovsky
The Excelsior, York University

TORONTO—Unless they study law, York students will have to look for their own health insurance plans next year.

Students voted in a referendum last November to cancel a mandatory health insurance plan for full-time students administered by the York Federation of Students.

"They won't have a health plan because of a difference of 20 votes," says Debbie Glass, director of the university administration's student affairs office.

incided in a separate referendum to keep their health plan, but the Graduate Students' Association also voted to axe the plan.

The loss of the health plan will force students to seek alternative insurance plans next year.

"Some students will end up paying enormous health costs next year, especially those with pre-existing (medical) conditions," says Elissa Horscroft, the federation's health plan administrator.

Under the current plan, all full-time students pay $161 per year for their medical coverage.

Some students were disappointed to hear the health plan will be eliminated.

"This is awful," says third-year psychology student Kuda Vidmar. "I rely on the health plan for extra drugs. I would not be able to afford proper health care without it."

"I'll have to look elsewhere (for insurance)," says Sunita Ferrao, a second-year physical education student. "This was an easy way to do it."

Horscroft says the Ontario Health Insurance Plan is insufficient, because it does not cover such medical expenses as prescription drugs, oral contraceptives or medical equipment for people with asthma or diabetes. All these are covered by the current plan. □

U of O senate tells off gov't

by Charlatan Staff

OTTAWA—The senate at the University of Ottawa has joined three other Ontario university senates in publicly warning the government against large increases in student fees.

At the monthly committee meeting of the senate on Jan. 10, student senators demanded a position from the senate on a proposal to radically increase tuition fees.

Last August, the Council of Ontario Universities submitted a discussion paper to the provincial government recommending increases to tuition fees of up to 50 per cent for undergraduate programs over two years.

After some debate on the senate's position, Bernard Philogene, vice-rector academic, introduced a motion reading:

"The University of Ottawa senate expresses its concern that the government of Ontario is not funding higher education at the level required to guarantee accessibility and quality of teaching. It urges the government to take the required steps to provide adequate funding to ensure that student fees be kept at an acceptable level."

The senate will send a letter to the government of Ontario stating the U of O's position denouncing the discussion paper put forth by the council.

Ira E. Lax, vice-president (internal operations) of the U of O student council, said during the debate that accessibility will be decreased by radical increases in tuition fees if they are not accompanied by plausible grants and job creation.

Last November and December, university senates at Trent University in Peterborough, Algoma University in Sault Ste. Marie and McMaster University in Hamilton, also passed motions condemning the council's proposal for higher tuition hikes. □

With files from The Futuron, University of Ottawa

SFU students face fees for dropping courses

by Sara Martin
The Ubyssay, University of British Columbia

VANCOUVER — Students at Simon Fraser University in Burnaby, B.C., now pay a $50 fee for lightening their course load.

The new penalty policy, implemented in December, means SFU students must pay $50 for each course dropped from their course load, up to a maximum of $100. However, if a student drops a course and adds another one, they will not be penalized.

"The penalty is not just for dropping a course, it's for reducing a course load," said Ron Heath, the university's registrar, in an interview with UBC's campus radio station.

The drop fee was created to free up space in courses students register for but do not intend to take, said Heath.

"Our total number of students registered is up 4.1 per cent over last year and the number of course registrations is down 0.6 per cent," Heath said. "So in fact, it has already appeared to start some improvement of our situation."

Tracy Cummins, a first-year English student who started at SFU in January, said she was told by a student adviser to register for more courses than she intended to take.

"He told me to get extra courses so that I could drop one when school started. So I did that and I got charged 50 bucks," she said.

Cummins said she "found out about (the fee policy) the first day of school, on the fourth of January."

Third-year biology student Renee Martin was also upset about the new penalty.

"None of us knew about it. You can drop out by phone registration and the thing is you're not informed while you're dropping the course," she said. "It's just costing students money because they don't know about it."

Heath said the university did not impose the fee "as a way of raising money. It was put in as a way of increasing the availability of course spaces at a time when students could use it."

The money will go into the general university revenue, Heath said. He also said students can appeal their fines at the registration appeal committee.

The student council has opposed the penalties since they were approved last semester by the board of governors, said Brent Mueller, the council's university relations officer.

"Our biggest concern is students who don't have enough information about a course before they register for it, and if they don't like it and can't find another course, they will be penalized for dropping a course," said Mueller.

CFS-Ontario chair Onuoha quits at January convention

by Karolina Srulek
Charlatan Staff

Emechete Onuoha, chair of the Canadian Federation of Students-Ontario, has announced he will be leaving his post on Feb. 1 to pursue another job.

Onuoha made his announcement at a CFS-O conference held in Sault Ste. Marie Jan. 14 to Jan. 20.

Kristine Haselsteiner, vice-president external for the Carleton University Students' Association, says Carleton's four delegates left for the conference without receiving notice of Onuoha's resignation.

"We didn't know about it," says Haselsteiner, who attended the meeting. "We were surprised when we got there."

Onuoha's normal term would have gone until June, when a new elected chair takes over. With Onuoha's departure, Jason Hunt, presently McMaster University's student council president, was elected as the interim chair, as well as chair for next year. Hunt will begin his term Feb. 1.

In general, Hunt has been accepted with open arms by the CFS-O membership.

"I'm sure he will do a good job," says CUSA President Lucy Watson.

Rob Jamieson, student council president at Lakehead University in Thunder Bay and vice-chair of CFS-O says, "We work well together, which is a great asset. He's open-minded, willing to listen and a pretty good guy."

"He has many of the same beliefs as (Emechete) and I know he can do a good job," says Haselsteiner.

Onuoha was unavailable for comment, but Haselsteiner says he was offered a job at the office of a Liberal MP in Ottawa.

As well as electing a new chair, the CFS-O elected Watson as the Ontario student representative to the national board of the CFS. Watson was also elected to her post as the co-ordinator of the women's caucus of the CFS-O.

Haselsteiner was part of a campaign committee formed at the conference. She says the theme of this term's campaign is "Challenging Assumptions." The campaign will consist of publishing posters and bookmarks challenging issues of classism, racism, homophobia and ableism.

The Carleton delegation at the conference included Haselsteiner, Watson, CUSA's director of academics Gary Anandasangaree and Tim Oloane, an aboriginal representative from the Carleton First Nations Club.

GET OFF THE BENCH AND INTO THE BAR!

Make the move and take advantage of these awesome
SUNNYSIDE SPORTS BAR SPECIALS
MON - TUE: 25 cent WINGS
WED: half price off any large PIZZA
THURS: PITCHER night

SUPER BOWL PARTY

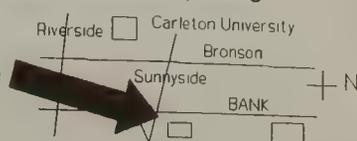

Jan. 30, 1994

You can win some prizes while watching the game on the big screen TV!
You never know when CAPTAIN SUNNYSIDE might show up...

We have POOL tables!

We are easy to find - Lots of free parking!

1077 Bank
(corner of Sunnyside & Bank)
phone: 730-5748

ORLANDO + DAYTONA BEACH

7 nights!!

PCR EQUIPPED COACHES!!

Spring Break Off

PACKAGE INCLUDES:

- 2 nights accommodations at the Quality Inn on International Drive, only minutes away from any of Orlando's hottest attractions.
- Special all Canadian Welcome Party at Disney's Pleasure Island! Featuring 5 major clubs in one!
- Discount admissions to all Orlando attractions
- 5 nights accommodations at Daytona's best hotels—the Howard Johnson on Whitehall beach!
- A complete schedule of great pool deck parties
- Food, merchandise, and service discounts
- All taxes, tips, service charges included
- Full-time staff on location to serve your needs

THE WHITEHALL
HOWARD JOHNSON.

$139
Quadr Occupancy
WITHOUT TRANSPORTATION

$289
Quadr Occupancy
WITH MOTORCOACH TRANS.

FOR FURTHER INFORMATION AND RESERVATIONS
STOP BY YOUR TRAVEL CUTS OFFICE
1st Level Unicef Centre
Carleton University
Ottawa, ON
OR CALL
838-5493

INTERNATIONAL AFFAIRS

Letters from Mexico and Guatemala Carleton grad accompanies refugees' return, writes back

by Tracy Hitchcock
Charlatan Staff

When Carleton graduate Colin Rowat left Canada to help refugees in Mexican camps return to Guatemala, he didn't know what he was getting into.

His letters tell us so.

Rowat is an "accompanier" — a human rights observer working in Guatemala through the Canadian organization called Project Accompaniment. Rowat, who is still in Guatemala, has been writing to The Charlatan about his experiences.

A Project Accompaniment newsletter says the Guatemalan government destroyed over 400 villages in the early 1980s, assuming the people living in them were supporting the rebels in the country's civil war.

Over 43,000 people were displaced and have been living as refugees since then in southern Mexico.

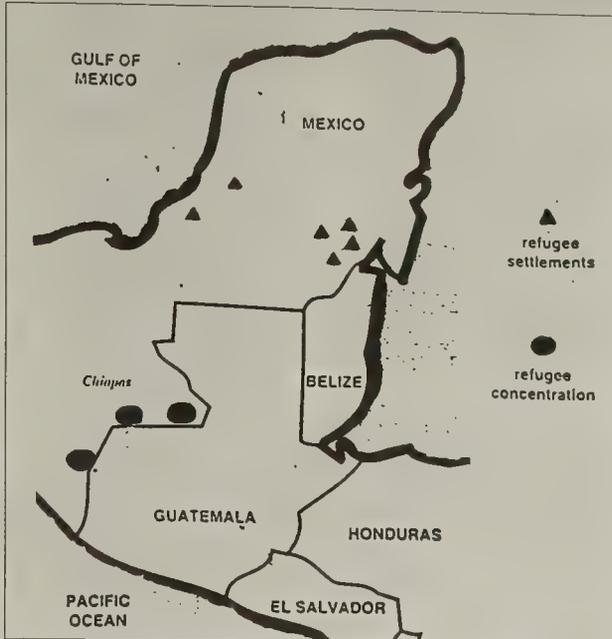

Those returning from exile in southern Mexico requested international volunteers to accompany refugees across the border as they make trips to look for land and resettle permanently.

In his Dec. 3 letter, Rowat wrote from Mexico, "The last news that I received from Guatemala while preparing to come down was that one of our project members was accompanying a Guatemalan refugee who had been detained and beaten by the Civil Defence Patrols. It made me wonder if I knew what I was getting into, coming to work in such a highly militarized state."

Rowat, 22, has several supporters back home.

Larry Reid, an Ottawa computer analyst, left with Rowat in September as his partner, but returned last month. Rowat isn't expected to return until April.

Reid says although he and Rowat went to help rectify the political situation, when they arrived they soon saw the human side.

"One night sitting in our house in Victoria 20 de Enero (the first resettlement community in Guatemala) we heard fighting. One woman came by and told us she was nervous, and how happy she was that there were accompaniers there.

"You don't just meet some refugees. You meet Juan, Felix, Lydia... you meet people."

Rowat's mother, Maura, who lives in Toronto, says she was a little uneasy about her son's trip at first.

"I was concerned. I needed to know he had thought it through. But if we have a yearning in our heart... we have to follow it."

Reid says most of the border camps are in the southern Mexican state of Chiapas, site of a recent rebel uprising. But he adds they are far removed from the fighting.

"There's a whole jungle and a whole range of mountains in between."

In Rowat's Dec. 3 letter, he said he didn't feel personally threatened "while passing civil patrols or while being stopped by the army." He added that his first three weeks in Victoria 20 de Enero were marked by "peace and quiet."

Victoria 20 de Enero means the "Victory of January 20," the date of the first resettlement of 2,500 people in 1993.

"My sense is that our international attention is working; with a world watching, the powers in Guatemala can no longer act as freely as they once did," he wrote.

His last letter was mailed Jan. 10, though he has been in contact with his mother, who visited him in Guatemala City Jan. 4-10, during his time off. His father is visiting with him now.

Accompaniers must go through an orientation and language training to prepare for the trip. They are expected to cover their own expenses or find their own sponsors. Reid paid for himself.

Rowat is being supported financially by his church, the Church of the Ascension. But Gary Hauch, the rector, says the church is helping with more than money.

"We write letters to him and on his behalf, and we support him constantly through prayer."

Maura says she supports her son, no matter where he goes.

"I don't mind if my children go away," she says. "Just as long as they know I'll have to visit them." □

For more information on Project Accompaniment, call Larry Reid at 526-0390.

Thursday, January 27

"Bosnia: What is the Future?" will be the subject of a lecture by Kemal Kurspahic, the editor-in-chief of Bosnia-Herzegovina's independent newspaper, Oslobodjenje, at 7 p.m. in Room 360, Tory Building.

Friday, January 28

"The Second Generation Muslim Experience: What Does It Mean?" To find out, go to 140 Université St., beside the Vanier parking lot, at the University of Ottawa at 7 p.m. For more information, call Akram Bhatti at 729-2702.

Debate about "Aid for Democracy: Should Developmental Assistance Be Tied to Democracy?" at 7:30 p.m. in Carleton's Bell Theatre, Minto Centre.

Friday, February 4

Have an ear for Latin music blended with European influences? The Chilean folk group, Inti-Ilumani, will play more than 30 wind, string and percussion instruments at the Centrepointe Theatre at 8 p.m. Tickets are $24. For tickets or information, call 727-6650.

Monday, February 7

Discover "The Greeks in the Black Sea: Recent Discoveries" at 8 p.m. in Room 2017 Dunton Tower. Put on by Carleton's department of classics. □

Study on the French Riviera

Oui! Please send more information!

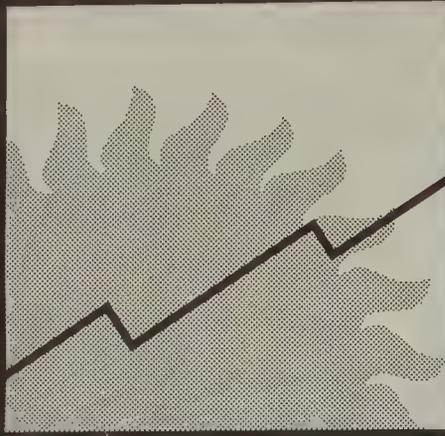

Earn up to one full year transferable Canadian university credits on a Canadian campus near Nice.

The Université canadienne en France offers courses in English or French. No French language skills necessary. Three semesters: Fall (September to December); Winter (January to April) Spring (May to June, six weeks.) Federal and Provincial student aid available. In Ontario phone 1-800-461-4030 Outside Ontario collect (705) 673-6513

Name _____
Address _____
City _____
Province _____
Postal Code _____
Telephone _____

For more information contact the Université canadienne en France, Laurentian University Sudbury, Ontario P3E 2C6

SUMMER JOB AND CAREER EXPLORATION FAIR

FEBRUARY 1, 1994

1 pm - 8 pm

Assembly Hall, Civic Centre
Lansdowne Park

Tickets
$2 at the door, $1 early bird

Bring copies of your résumé
Meet recruiting organizations

For more information, contact:
Placement & Career services
508 Unicentre, 788-6611

Confirmed employers

as of January 25, 1994

- Action Window Cleaning
- Au Pair in Europe
- Broland Enterprises
- Carleton University Housing
- Ceremonial Guard
- Le Château
- City of Ottawa
- College Pro Painters
- Communications Security Establishment
- Conference/Aide Tours
- CFS—Student Work Abroad Program (SWAP)
- Canada Employment Centre for Students (COSEP)
- Dovercourt Recreation
- Entertainment Publications
- First Class Redi-Cab Rickshaw
- Great West Life
- Metro Pro Painting
- National Gallery of Canada
- New Forest & Outland Reforestation
- Nutrilawn
- Office of the Auditor General
- Prior Data Sciences
- Prudential Assurance
- RA Centre
- Sales & Merchandising Group
- Student Sprinkler Services
- Student Works Painting
- Trillium Childhood Cancer Centre
- White Shark Window Cleaning
- Wilderness Tours

Carleton UNIVERSITY

ALGONQUIN

The rising cost of "free" speech

The day God was handing out freedom of speech, some people got in line twice.

Other people, for reasons including sexist, racist, or homophobic discrimination, couldn't get in line at all.

The idea that everyone is free to make their views known presumes that everyone enjoys the same privilege to it. This idea of "free speech" is what is always defended in arguments surrounding "political correctness."

Some people see "political correctness" as censorship of their ideas and as hurting their freedom of speech. These are people, like university professors, who enjoy seeing their "free" speech printed and re-printed by established institutions like academia or the media.

There is a long history of university professors being challenged on the grounds that their course material reflects sexist, racist or homophobic views. Professor Paul Lamy at the University of Ottawa is the latest.

Seven of his students filed a complaint with the dean of social sciences in response to remarks Lamy made in a sociology class on Jan. 4.

"You call them bisexuals, I call them psychopaths," he allegedly expounded. Offended, several students left the classroom. Lamy says this is because they are bisexuals. Maybe they are.

In a three and a half page letter of complaint, the students write, "In a discussion on violence last semester, Professor Lamy attempted to equate the emotional and physical harm sustained by a woman who is raped, or a wife who is abused by her husband, as being the same as the violence that men sustain in a bar fight."

Dean Henry P. Edwards issued a statement saying he will investigate the complaint and will decide how to resolve the situation by the end of January.

Another debate a few years ago involved Professor Phillippe Rushton at the University of Western Ontario. In 1989 he published a study which claimed some races are smarter than others because the size of their heads is bigger.

Although Rushton was totally out of touch with reality, advocates of free speech rushed to defend his right to profess these "politically incorrect" views. One assumes the same will happen with Lamy. And for every one of these professors whose ideas get to the press, there are 10 no-name Joes who continue to spew ignorance to a captive classroom.

Universities are reluctant to deal effectively with professors like these, citing freedom of speech, and the uncensored pursuit of academic research.

Rushton is still measuring heads at Western. But if you as a student concoct a thesis based on controversial studies with little or no empirical evidence, you probably won't get a degree. If you are a professor, you are given licence to decide what is correct and your right to free speech is defended.

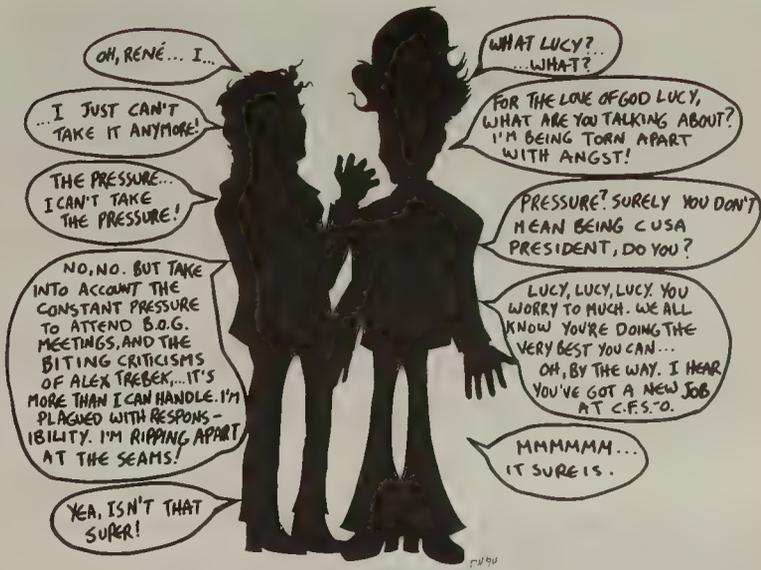

But what about the students' rights? What about the seven students that left Lamy's class? Should they be subjected to hate-mongering views? Furthermore, do students have to subsidize racist, sexist or homophobic slander with their tuition fees?

Those who cry "Free speech, free speech," forget those whose right to speak may be squashed by people like Lamy. Anyone who opposed his opinion was not given the chance to raise their objections in class. So, his right to speak is protected, but not that of his students.

There are few things in this world that we can all agree on. The world is round, it revolves around the sun, and bisexuality does not equal psychotic tendency.

Even if this last topic were to be debated in a class, professors should act as moderators, facilitating discussion and injecting well-established theories and concepts. Professors who use their desks as soapboxes aren't doing their jobs and they are not doing anything to further the right of free speech.

AS & BW

OPINION

Services benefit all students

by Matt Skinner
Charlatan staff

Re: "GLB Centre can exist, but not with my money,"
The Charlatan, Jan. 20, 1994.

In a blatant outburst of selfishness and ignorance, Michael Blank writes that the Gay, Lesbian and Bisexual Centre does not help him, so he feels his money should not go towards it. This attitude is all too common at Carleton.

People don't realize that the CUSA services, including the GLB Centre, are in place to benefit all students.

Blank suggests CUSA send out a questionnaire so people could indicate which services and groups are to be funded with their student fees.

Not only is this idea entirely impractical because of the numbers involved -- more than 20,000 Carleton students would have to indicate which of the 13 CUSA services and over 100 clubs and societies they would like to fund -- the cost of the questionnaire would be self-defeating. The money needed to print, distribute and collect it could take almost as much from Blank's student fees as the GLB Centre's $35,077.88 annual budget.

Also, how would CUSA keep track of people using the services they paid for specifically? If anyone wished to exclude CKCU from their list, could we stop them from listening? If a student became disabled due to an accident or illness during the school year, and had not chosen the Carleton Disability Awareness Centre from Blank's questionnaire at the beginning of the year, would CDAC turn them away? Would the Foot Patrol check to ensure each person it escorts has contributed financially to help the patrol?

Many sports teams at Carleton might not exist if they were only supported by the number of students who benefited from them. Before a sports team can be granted varsity status, it must have existed as a CUSA-funded club for three years. Many clubs on campus would shrivel and die if Blank's proposal becomes a reality. I can only hope some of those clubs are those that interest Blank.

The Charlatan, like CUSA, also receives funding from students. If half the campus decided they did not want to pay the $5.67 to fund The Charlatan, (assuming we could continue operation if this occurred), how could we ensure that only the people who paid the money would pick up a copy each week?

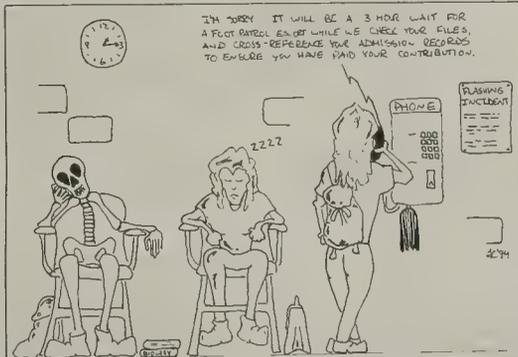

On Dec. 1, World AIDS Day, the GLB Centre set up a table in Baker Lounge. Red ribbons were offered to those who wanted to support the cause. Condoms and lubricant were also supplied. AIDS does not discriminate between bisexuals, gays, lesbians, or heterosexuals.

The co-ordinator and volunteers from the GLB Centre worked at the table to help raise money to fight a disease that threatens everyone on campus, and more importantly, everyone in the world. The GLB Centre helped raise awareness for the benefit of everyone on campus. The centre does not discriminate. Why should we?

What happens if someone who did not check the GLB Centre on Blank's questionnaire contracts the AIDS virus? Do we refuse to provide them with literature or support from the centre about the disease? Do we ensure that the money collected on World AIDS Day goes towards helping everyone but the likes of him?

CUSA provides services to accommodate the diverse needs of students at Carleton. These services help educate all students on the needs and rights of other students on campus.

Blank thinks the GLB Centre does not help him, but it's because he doesn't let it. The centre has seminars that address homophobia and heterosexism. Perhaps Blank should look into attending one. If his ignorance and selfishness were not so common place in today's society, perhaps Carleton would not be in such dire need of a GLB Centre. His suggestion is proof that such a centre is all too important on campus.

THE CHARLATAN IN SARAJEVO

by Graeme Lowthian
Charlatan Staff

Two years ago The Charlatan helped obtain accreditation in the former Yugoslavia. he obtained a United Nations' press accreditation aboard a UN-chartered humanitarian supplies. Lowthian arrived on July 28, 1992. The city was closed off from the frontlines of the encroaching Yugoslav army. He spent some time at the offices of Osllobodenje operating out of the basement of a building in the middle of Sarajevo. This is his story.

In 1991 several of Yugoslavia's provinces of the socialist federation separated to become independent countries.

Two of the ex-Yugoslav provinces took control of the Yugoslav Federal government in a war on the other provinces, including Belgrade, to keep them under its control.

Sarajevo is the capital of Bosnia and Herzegovina. The mountains controlled by Yugoslav army. In two years it has been continuously besieged at the intersection and open area in the city.

On Aug. 4, I met a man named Amir who works for Osllobodenje (pronounced: oh-SL-obo-den-je) which was still being produced every day. It is ironic because it translates from Serbian as "liberty" or "freedom." Amir was a man who was one of the newspaper's editors.

I got a ride to the Osllobodenje office in a carpool with some of his colleagues. The situation was different from a day in North America.

We had to drive at speeds of up to 10 mph because of the threat of snipers and mines.

The most important fact about Sarajevo is that its citizens cannot escape the city.

GRAEME LOWTHIAN

Entire floors are damaged in the Osllobodenje building.

Lowthian in front of the Oslobođenje building, Sarajevo.

GRAEME LOWTHIAN

Glass strewn hallway after an attack.

Lowthian get press
second trip last year
he flew into Sarajevo delivering food and and lived there for 16 world, circled by the eral Army. Lowthian
e, a daily newspaper out building in the

within the commu-ndent, democratic and Montenegro,

The army launched osnia, and tried to

in a valley between positions. For almost Almost every street
sniper's zone.

who worked for the ya), a newspaper name Oslobođenje
translation into English
ly, a middle-aged ctors.

g with Amir, in a wore suits and ties
though it were no

ometres per hour shells.
of Sarajevo is that the newspaper's perseverance symbolizes freedom and resistance. Because of this, the 50-year-old Oslobođenje building became one of the most attacked targets in Sarajevo.

The building is surrounded by fields, with three sides facing Yugoslav army positions. It is an extremely easy target for snipers because of its visibility.

In his office, Amir showed me the window over his desk, which had been riddled with sniper bullets. On the wall were a few maps and posters which had been punctured as well. Amir opened a drawer in his desk and placed a black, baseball-sized object in front of me. He explained that it was a 40-millimetre, armor-piercing, anti-tank bullet. He told me it was shot into the building — at the people.

The next day, Amir gave me the Aug. 5 edition of Oslobođenje. Only 14 pages in length, nine consisted of obituaries from the intense bombing that occurred immediately prior to my arrival in Sarajevo.

I was told that three days before I arrived, more than 325 people were killed when 10,000 bombs were dropped on Sarajevo. Peace negotiations in Geneva had come to a head and the Americans issued an ultimatum to the Yugoslav army threatening intervention should they continue to bomb Sarajevo. Because of this, the bombing subsided.

The headline on the back page of Oslobođenje read: "Russians against American intervention." It seems to me this could be a big reason why the Americans are hesitant about getting involved — they might be facing the Russians.

I was told the paper was one of Europe's leading newspapers before the war. I was impressed because the people of Sarajevo still took the effort to keep it going, and wondered how it was possible to print a newspaper in the destroyed Oslobođenje building.

Amir arranged a tour of the building for me, led by a local photographer who lived in the building. He took me to a hallway with walls which were waist-high, where once there had been windows reaching to the ceiling. The windows had blown out, leaving only triangle shards of glass sticking up from their empty frames.

We were visible to the fields, the villages beyond the fields, and the mountains behind it. The photographer warned that we would draw mortar shells or sniper fire if we were seen.

We moved slowly, keeping our heads and the hunch of our backs below the hallway's solid half-height walls. Broken glass and debris crunched beneath our feet.

We had to hop quickly past the doorways of the offices to avoid being shot. The desk of one office had papers and books, still held in place by rubble and damaged office furniture.

Crumpled venetian blinds, twisted from the impact of shrapnel and bullets, were splayed irregularly and dangled in the drafts coming in from the fields.

While making our way through the hallway, I kept my gaze downward. I did not want to look up. If I lifted my head I could enter the scope of someone's rifle. I concentrated on the path ahead of me, not wanting to trip, and watched the photographer for any signals he might give indicating danger or need for cover.

Scattered office files and paperwork lay in the halls amidst the debris. They looked like they had been hastily dropped or thrown there. They were covered not only in broken glass, but also in spent bullet casings.

Near the halfway point of the hallway, we came to some large pillars. We could stand upright beside them. I stood up and took some snaps of the office rubble, while the photographer hurried to the next pillar before motioning for me to follow.

I leapt out of the cover of the first pillar and landed beside him. I almost fell backwards as broken glass slid beneath my feet. Before he led me back, I took some more photographs of a hallway we couldn't use because the blown-out walls would have left us open to fire.

The photographer brought me down some stairs into darkness. Mortar rounds had damaged the steps and we had to go slowly. We walked along a catwalk which hung over huge printing presses, untouched by any bombs or shrapnel. They were powered by gasoline generators. Due to the seige, gasoline was scarce and cost about $20 a litre.

Despite this, and after 23 weeks of attacks, Oslobođenje still keeps the presses rolling to print a local daily and a global weekly. Its foundations are deeper than can be reached by any bomb. Oslobođenje, to me, is symbolic of the spirit of Sarajevo. □

Kemal Kerspahic, the editor of Oslobođenje, will speak Thursday Jan. 27, at 7 p.m. in Room 360 of the Tory Building.

LETTERS

the CHARLATAN
CARLETON'S INDEPENDENT STUDENT NEWSPAPER
January 27, 1994
VOLUME 23 NUMBER 20
Editor-in-Chief	Mo Gannon
Production Manager	Kevin McKay
Business Manager	Jill Perry
NEWS
Editors	Mario Carlucci Karin Jordan
Contributors	Brent Dowdall Andrea Smith Brandie Weikle
Volunteer Co-ordinator	Johanna Ciszewski
NATIONAL AFFAIRS
Editor	Arn Keeling
Contributors	Karolina Strutek John Steinbachs
FEATURES
Editors	Angie Gallop
Contributors	Andrea Smith Graeme Lowthian
International Affairs Editor
Contributor	Ryan Nakashima
SPORTS
Editor	Steven Vesely
Contributors	Derek DeCloet Kevin Restivo Jason Tamo Ryan Ward
ARTS
Editor	Blayne Haggart
Contributors	Christopher Bell Josée Bellemare Stephanie Garrison Charmead Schella Patrick White
OP/ED
Editor	Shella Keenan
Contributors	Matt Skinner Brandie Weikle
VISUALS
Photo Editor	Tim O'Connor
Photo Assistant	Andre Bellefeuille
Contributors	Bill Cooper Todd Duncan Chris Nuttall-Smith
Graphics Co-ordinators	David Hodges
Graphics Assistant	Mike Rappaport
Contributors	Joel Kenneth Grant Sarah Abernethy Jennifer Davies John Price
Cover	Bill Cooper
The Charlatan's photos are produced using the Carleton University Students' Association Photo Service
PRODUCTION
Production Assistant	Kim Alf
Contributors	David Carpenter Richard G.D. Scott Ryan Nakashima
CIRCULATION	14,000
Circulation	Dave Carpenter Joellen Walshe
ADVERTISING 788-3580
Ad Manager	Karen Richardson
The Charlatan, Carleton University's weekly newsmagazine, is an editorially and financially autonomous journal, published weekly during the fall and winter term and monthly during the summer. Charlatan Publications Incorporated, Ottawa, Ontario, a non-profit corporation registered under the Canadian Corporations Act, is the publisher of The Charlatan. Editorial content is the sole responsibility of editorial staff members, but may not reflect the beliefs of its members. Contents are copyrighted © 1994. Nothing may be duplicated in any way without the prior written permission of the Editor-in-Chief. All rights reserved. ISSN 0315-1859. Subscriptions are available at a cost of $40 for individuals and $52 for institutions (includes GST). National advertising for The Charlatan is handled through Canadian University Press Media Services (Campus Plus), 73 Richmond St. W., 4th Floor, Toronto, Ontario, M5H 1Z4; phone: (416) 481-7283. Members of the board: Ken Drever, Mo Gannon, Anna Gibbons, David Hodges, Fouad Kanaan, Warren Kinisla, Mark LaFreniere, Ivonne Potter. The Charlatan Room 531 Unicentre Carleton University Ottawa, Ontario K1S 5B6 Telephone: (613) 788-6680 e-mail address: charlatan@carleton.ca

Spit is only a drop in the bucket of problems to solve

Editor:
With the left increasingly under attack from conservative, right-wing forces, we still find time to waste our precious energy arguing over spit, ("Spit raises ire of GLB Centre volunteers," The Charlatan, Jan. 20, 1994.)

Defacement like this is angering, but the response to it was ridiculous. The article mentions no less than five people who could have wiped the spit off the window. Ten days were wasted with trips to the CUSA office, complaints and phone calls.

Peter Nogalo's and Theresa Cowan's finger-pointing as to who could or should have wiped it off is petty and immature, and Nogalo's comment that he doesn't "do windows," is simply insulting — classism is as ugly as homophobia.

That someone felt strongly enough to spit on the posterangers and frightens me. That no one who walked by felt moved to wash it off themselves worries me. What can be the future of a social justice movement that is unwilling to perform the menial tasks as well as the attention-grabbing ones?

A homophobic person remains uninformed, performing subtle acts of violence which may one day escalate; the Catholic Civil Rights League wages war over a gay and lesbian radio show; someone writes The Charlatan asking that his money not support the GLB Centre because it has no "benefit" to him; and a University of Ottawa professor dispenses homophobic hate propaganda in his sociology course. One Kleenex on Jan. 4, used by someone, anyone, and 10 days could have been spent on any one of these more important issues. We have too much to accomplish to waste our energy.

Karen Colvin
MA Canadian Studies

Do-it-yourself student services

Editor:
Re: "GLB Centre can exist, but not with my money," The Charlatan, Jan. 20, 1994.

Mr. Blank has clearly told the world that as an open-minded heterosexual, he is willing to let gays, lesbians and bisexuals organize on campus as long as they don't do it with his money. He then justifies this by saying that he doesn't benefit from any of the GLB Centre's services, so clearly he shouldn't have to pay for them.

Well, Mr. Blank, there are plenty of things (aside from "queer") that you are not. So why don't you demand your money back from all of the services? Hell, with all that money at your disposal, you could start up your own straight male society.

Matthew Bruce
Psychology IV

GLB Centre is for every student

Editor:
In the last issue, Michael Blank raised some interesting arguments as to the funding structure of CUSA. ("GLB Centre can exist, but not with my money," The Charlatan, Jan. 20, 1994.)

I too have paid for some things which have no benefit to me, or much worse, that have threatened my identity and safety. In my four years at Carleton I have never used athletics, but I recognize many students do and so I have no problem supporting its various programs.

I do, however, thank Michael Blank for his acquiescence of our existence, but I question his other arguments.

For CUSA to initiate a pay-per-usage system of funding, student fees would undoubtedly sky-rocket to pay for this bureaucratic colossus.

Secondly, the GLB Centre receives approximately 1.6 per cent of the CUSA operating budget. Based on many studies, gay, lesbian and bisexual people make up 10 per cent of the population; hence, we're getting ripped off.

Lastly, the GLB Centre is open to all students, regardless of their sexual orientation. We have just as many straight clients as we do gay men, lesbians or bisexuals. Perhaps Blank should walk through our door before he condemns our service. As for the concern about his money, which incidentally amounts to about $1.36, I will personally give him the equivalent in free condoms, (another one of our services), provided he can find a use for them.

Peter Nogalo
Gay, Lesbian and Bisexual Centre
Co-ordinator

Bisexual quote not in context

Editor:
The purpose of this letter is to inform The Charlatan of an inaccuracy in its Jan. 20 article "Ottawa professor under investigation." In the article I was quoted as having said, "I want to know the advantages of bisexuals."

I feel that this quote is both imprecise and taken out of the context of my conversation with the reporter. I mentioned the importance of addressing an issue in its entirety. I cited the nuclear family as an example of a concept that often receives only positive treatment.

I paralleled this to Professor Paul Lamy's negative treatment of bisexuality as an acceptable family form and suggested that its positive aspects could also be discussed to give the class a balanced overview of the issue.

From this, The Charlatan improperly quoted in my opinion, "I want to know the advantages of bisexuals." I trust that The Charlatan will make efforts to remedy this error.

Meredith Lilly
Sociology I
University of Ottawa

Robert Eady
Catholic Civil Rights League

The Charlatan welcomes all letters and opinion pieces. Letters should not be more than 250 words and opinion pieces not more than 700 words. Pieces may be edited for length or clarity. The deadline is Tuesday at noon. Include your name, signature, faculty, year and PHONE NUMBER or your letter won't be published. Phone numbers are for verification only and won't be published. Send to: The Charlatan, Room 531 Unicentre, Carleton University, 1125 Colonel By Drive, Ottawa, Ont. K1S 5B6.

St. Peter's Lutheran Church

400 Sparks Street (at Bay)
233-9911
Sunday Worship 9:30 and 11:00 a.m.
Everyone Welcome

Raven men drop pair at home

by Kevin Restivo
Charlatan Staff

In what amounted to two different performances with the same results, the Carleton men's basketball team lost 93-76 to the Ryerson Rams on Jan. 21 and 85-83 to the York Yeomen on Jan. 22.

The losses dropped the Ravens' record in the east division of the Ontario Universities Athletic Association to 2-3.

Ryerson 93 Carleton 76
York 85 Carleton 83

Carleton opened with a strong, early 12-2 run against Ryerson, but seemed listless afterwards, falling behind 38-34 at the half despite erratic play by the Rams, who committed 10 first-half turnovers.

Ryerson capitalized on Carleton's sloppiness — turnovers and poor rebounding — with a 9-2 run midway through the second half, pushing their lead to 14 points, and they never looked back.

"We played well the first half," said Carleton head coach Paul Armstrong. "But we got slack offensively in the second half. We may have been awed by their big guy — Alex Beason. He is awesome. But the guys have to learn they're players, not spectators."

Second-year swingman Jamie Marquardt agreed with Armstrong's assessment of the game.

"We had a physical let-down in the second half. They just came out stronger and their physical talent took over in the end."

Forward Taffe Charles led the Ravens with 19 points, while Marquardt added 15.

Against York, Carleton appeared determined not to let the previous day's let-down strike again.

The Yeomen appeared fatigued early on while the Ravens came out like gangbusters, building an early 11-point lead on the strength of four three-pointers by point guard Luca Diaconescu and the inside scoring of guard Charles.

The Ravens went into the second half with a 14-point lead and appeared to be well on their way to victory.

But the Yeomen, led by point guard Wilton Hall and his 34 points, opened up the second half with a 9-1 run, cutting the Raven lead to six points.

"There was a real lack of communication in the second half. I think we kind of panicked a bit when they started to come back," said first-year swingman Reagh Vidito.

York kept chipping away and eventually took the lead, 68-67, with just over eight minutes left in the game.

Only this time Carleton refused to fold.

With 52 seconds left, the Ravens regained the lead at 83-82 on a bucket by Charles — who finished with 34 points. Charles was then called for two fouls and York capitalized on their free throws to regain the lead at 85-83.

It was at this point that veteran leadership faltered.

Diaconescu threw the ball away with 13 seconds left. Then with just three seconds remaining Charles couldn't find an open man and threw the ball away, sealing York's victory.

"We just didn't use our heads down the stretch," said second-year guard Andrew Smith. "We just didn't get the breaks in the second half, but Taffe and Luca really kept us in the game. It wouldn't have been close if it wasn't for them." □

The Ravens sandwiched Ryerson on this play but...

BILL COOPER

No play, no stay — Raven quits team

by Kevin Restivo
Charlatan Staff

Raven guard Curtis Houlden, a second-year veteran of the men's basketball team, quit on Jan. 18.

"I just wasn't having that much fun, plus I wanted to study more. I was kind of stuck in a slump also, but playing time had something to do with it too," said Houlden.

Houlden has seen his playing time in the Ravens' starting lineup diminish game by game.

Houlden said despite the decision, he's still on good terms with head coach Paul Armstrong. The coach has no comment.

Many of the Ravens, though, were disappointed with the news of Houlden's departure.

"It really hurts our team," said second-year guard Andrew Smith. "I think Taffe (Charles) and him are our best players, so I think it's going to be a big loss to us. He's the best talent on the team hands down." □

Offence still missing in home losses

by Jay Tharayil
Charlatan Staff

Home sweet home?

The women's basketball team found home more sour than sweet this past weekend as they lost their first two home games of the season.

The Ravens lost 61-44 to the Ryerson Lady Rams on Jan. 21, and were blown out by the York Yeowomen 77-46 on Jan. 22, dropping their league record to 0-5.

Ryerson 61 Carleton 44
York 77 Carleton 46

Against the Rams, the Ravens started well and trailed by only eight points at the half. But an anemic offence, 19 second-half fouls and an early 16-0 run by the Rams in the second half buried the Ravens.

"We got into a lot of foul trouble, so they were scoring a lot of points with no time running off the clock," said co-captain Helen Collins. "So that got us down a lot."

The Rams were led by Darcel Wright, who scored 26 points. The Ravens' top scorer was Erin O'Grady with 14.

While the Ravens at least played a strong first half against the Rams, they had no such luck against the Yeowomen. York started the game with an 11-0 run and led 43-16 at the half.

The Ravens attempted a comeback in the second half — nearly doubling their first-half point total — but it was too little, too late.

"In the second half we played like we belonged on the floor with them. In the first half we played as if we didn't even belong there," said assistant coach John Johnson.

Despite the loss to the Yeowomen, Raven forward Cindy Krenosky still maintained a positive attitude.

"We played well and we're happy with our performance. It's just that we've got to be more consistent from now on." □

The Ravens are looking for offence.

TODD DUNCAN

Gliebermania!

by Brent Dowdall
Charlatan Staff

It may be Super Bowl week in the rest of the world — you know, the over-hyped, over-blown football game where somebody else beats the living day-lights out of Buffalo — but for football fans in Ottawa, we had our own Super Bowl this past week.

Ottawa booted the Gliebermans. Bernie Glieberman is the owner of the Ottawa Rough Riders. His son Lonie is the team president. At least they were until last week, when the city, the councillors and the fans decided the fast-talking pair should take a hike.

When the Gliebermans came knocking at council's door last week asking for a sweeter lease arrangement at Lansdowne than the one they had last year — the city finally said no.

A little background: Two years ago the Gliebermans, from Detroit, bought the Riders for a dollar and promised to keep the Riders in Ottawa "forever."

The very next year, (forever comes quickly) Bernie was threatening to move the team to any place American if they didn't get all the revenues from sales at food and drink stands. Ottawa city council caved in and made a deal to keep the team in town.

Once again, "this team will be in Ottawa forever," promised Lonie.

Not. Forever has arrived and it's over. The Gliebermans went out and no one's sorry to see them go.

Money is the reason they cry poor. They claim they lost $5 million in their two years of ownership. Obviously they didn't know what they were buying into. The Canadian Football League is not known for financial stability and the Ottawa Rough Riders haven't made money in a long, long time.

However, economics aside, the Gliebermans might have had a chance to earn at least some respect if they hadn't done so many stupid things in their two-year reign of error.

After a successful first year in 1992 in which the Riders finished with a 9-9 record and drew 25,000 fans every game, the honeymoon ended. In 1993 Bernie and Lonie hired a vice-president who had spent his career coaching downhill skiing. Soon after they fired the general manager and added his duties to the head coach's job. Then they took away the coach's authority by threatening after every game to fire his assistants. They then brought in consultants and guest coaches every week and of course — forced coach Ron Smetzler to play NFL castoff Dexter Manley.

By the time the Riders finished 4-14 and were beaten out in last year's playoffs (yes, playoffs), most fans had given up. Only the Gliebermans seemed surprised that ticket sales have been so slow over the winter.

The moral is that people can affect their team and in Ottawa the fans have spoken. The future of the Riders is doubtful. The Gliebermans say they're leaving town to set up a CFL team in Shreveport, La. (Maybe someone should warn them.)

The league is looking for a new owner for the Riders. Maybe they'll find one, maybe they won't. Maybe the Riders are dead. That would be a shame. But it wouldn't be half the shame if the Gliebermans were still around. □

Raven Records

OWIAA WATERPOLO East Division

	W	L	T	F	A	PTS
Carleton	7	1	1	68	31	14
Toronto	7	1	1	72	28	14
Queen's	3	5	0	58	42	6
McMaster	2	6	0	42	70	4
Brock	1	7	0	30	99	2

OWIAA VOLLEYBALL East Division

	W	L	T	F	A	PTS
York	5	1	0	16	3	10
Toronto	4	1	0	14	4	8
Ottawa	4	2	0	13	9	8
Queen's	4	3	0	13	11	8
Ryerson	1	4	0	3	18	2
Carleton	0	5	0	1	15	0

OWIAA BASKETBALL East Division

	W	L	T	F	A	PTS
Laurentian	4	0	0	298	202	8
Ottawa	4	1	0	351	283	8
Toronto	4	1	0	359	218	8
Queen's	1	2	0	179	199	2
Ryerson	1	3	0	195	270	2
York	1	3	0	223	274	2
Carleton	0	5	0	212	371	0

OWIAA Athlete of the Week

Queen's student Carolyn Russell is the OWIAA athlete of the week. Russell went undefeated in squash competition this season winning the OWIAA Individual Squash Championship for a second straight year.

OCAA BASKETBALL East Division

	W	L	T	F	A	PTS
Laurentian	4	0	0	345	314	8
York	3	1	0	320	316	6
Toronto	3	2	0	376	359	6
Ryerson	2	2	0	333	319	4
Carleton	2	3	0	398	414	4
Ottawa	1	4	0	372	412	2
Queen's	0	3	0	230	240	0

OCAA BASKETBALL East Scoring Leaders

	FG	AT	FT	AT	AVE
Beason	53	86	21	31	34.5
Smart	28	59	20	26	28.3
Charles	39	81	52	67	26.0
Fischer	32	60	25	31	22.3
Swords	32	66	5	11	20.3

OCAA BASKETBALL East Rebound Leaders

	G	RBS	Ave
T. Charles - Cln	5	54	10.8
A. Beason - Ryrsn	4	36	9.0
S. Swords - Lrntr	4	34	8.5
C. Fischer - Lrntr	4	33	8.3
C. Porter - Ott	5	40	8.0

OCAA Athlete of the Week

Quang Hoang, a member of the University of Toronto badminton team is the OCAA athlete of the week. Hoang won his third consecutive OCAA singles badminton title and paired up with teammate Mike Deane to also win his third consecutive doubles championship.

Nordic skiers powder competition

by Ryan Ward
Charlatan Staff

The nordic men are back to their winning ways and the women aren't far behind.

The nordic ski teams placed very well in the SOD Invitational at Duntroon, Ont., on Jan. 22-23.

Among over 90 men and 50 women, seven Ravens skiers placed among the top 30 results. Men's skier Wayne Dustin led the men's team with first-place results in both the 10-kilometre freestyle race and the 30-kilometre classic event.

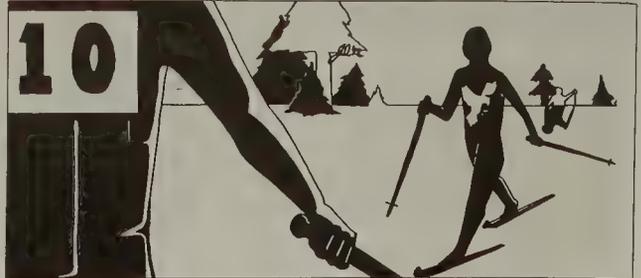

"It was hard to keep focus, but I knew I would do well," said Dustin. "It was pretty close between myself and two others after two kilometres (in the first race) but I started pulling away by the seventh kilometre."

Veteran Raven skier Frank Ferrari finished 16th in the freestyle race and placed sixth in the classic race.

"The first race was more of a building-block for me," said Ferrari. "I wasn't impressed with my finish, but skating style is not my specialty."

Carleton skier Chris Webb placed twelfth in the classic race and ninth in the freestyle.

Rookies D'Arcy Bloom and Mike

Cooper raced well, placing among the top 40.

On the women's side, Kirsten Davis finished eighth in both the 7.5-kilometre freestyle event on Saturday and the 10-kilometre classic race on Sunday.

"Despite being sick this weekend, I'm pleased with my performance," said Davis. "My technique was okay for the amount I have been training, but with more intensity I will improve."

Catherine Mulvihill finished 11th in the freestyle but did not compete on Sunday due to illness. Veteran Erin Long placed 21st in the freestyle race and 19th in the classic event.

Rookie Gayle Barnett placed a respectable 25th and 21st in the two events, but said she was not pleased with her results.

"I felt really sloppy," said Barnett. Nordic ski coach Mark Rabb was pleased with the results of the teams' first real race of the season.

"The season has begun well. This was the first real test for the team," said Rabb.

Rabb added that the 30-kilometre men's classic race was something the men did not train for during practice, so it was a real test for many of the rookie racers to even complete such a distance. □

Swimmer qualifies for nationals - again

by Jason Tamo
Charlatan Staff

The Carleton men's and women's swim teams hit the road again this past weekend.

The Ravens placed last at both the Wilfred Laurier Invitational on Jan. 21 and at the McMaster tri-meet in Hamilton on Jan. 22. While the team stalled, some individual swimmers fared well.

Erica Kotler's victory in the 100-metre breast-stroke in a time of 1:17.01 on Saturday was good enough to qualify her for the national championships in her second event and brighten Raven spirits.

On Friday at the Laurier meet, the Ravens competed against Laurier, Waterloo and Laurentian. Carleton competed in only one day of the two-day event because of their commitment to McMaster tri-meet, and thus did not compile enough points to avoid placing last.

Men's coach Brian Johnson said he felt Raven swimmers could have done better, but wasn't concerned with their results.

"I was hoping they would do better at the Laurier meet," said Johnson. "But we were tired after the long bus trip, we didn't really get a good enough warm-up and a lot of swimmers were complaining that the water temperature was too cold."

At the McMaster tri-meet, the Carleton teams placed last in competition against McMaster and Guelph, but both coaches were much happier with their teams' performances.

"The meet at McMaster went quite well," said women's coach Jitka Kotler. "We had expected a slight improvement over last weekend's results and that's pretty much what we got."

"We didn't swim well on Friday after the long bus trip but the team stayed in a hotel overnight and really seemed to come together. The spirit was great and that translated into a great afternoon."

Notable results from Saturday's racing include, first and foremost, Erica Kotler's victory in the 100-metre breast-stroke. She had already secured a berth at the Canadian Interuniversity Athletic Union finals when she qualified in the 200-metre breast-stroke earlier in the season.

The second qualification allows her to compete in five events at the meet. Qualifying for the first event only entitled her to compete in three contests.

Christie O'Brien also placed well, finishing third in the 50-metre breast-stroke in a time of 39.33.

On the men's side, Blair Christie followed up his victory last weekend in the 1,500-metre freestyle by placing second in the 800-metre freestyle this weekend. His time of 8:53.87 missed winning the event by only .59 of a second. Christie also finished second in the 400-metre individual medley, clocking a personal-best time of 4:52.55.

Men's captain Laszlo Alberti also did well by placing third in the 100-metre freestyle, posting a time of 58.38.

Both the women's and men's teams will now begin to focus on training for the provincial championships. For the women this event takes place Feb. 12-13 in Guelph, and for the men, Feb. 19-20 in Toronto. □

Charlatan Hockey Pool

Here are the point leaders in the Charlatan Hockey Pool. Points were tabulated as of Tue. Jan. 25, 1994. Regular season leaders can only win the dinner prize once.

BAXTER'S

1344 Bank Street
(at Riverside)
738-3323

Congratulations to Vicki Mavraganis who wins this week's dinner prize. Former winners Jeff Parker and Jeff Pavkev can also pick up their $25 dinner certificate for Baxter's restaurant at The Charlatan.

1	Patrick Soden	515
2	Anjali Varma	505
3	Vicki Mavraganis	499
4	Jeff Parker	499
5	Jeff Pavkev	499
6	Blair Sanderson	498
7	Don Belanger	492
8	Joseph Kurkose	489
9	Alex Varki	489
10	Marc Arsenaault	488

Charlatan Sports Trivia

Answer the following question correctly and become eligible to win a $25 dinner for two at Schadillac's Saloon.

How many times have the awesome Buffalo Bills won the Super Bowl before this year?

Congratulations to Greg Parnoutsoukian who knew Boston and Detroit have been the only teams other than Toronto to win the A.L. East.

1. Place your answer, name and phone number on a piece of paper and submit it to The Charlatan sports editor, room 531 Unicentre. The recipient of the prize will be determined by a supervised draw of all correct answers.

2. All answers must be received by Tuesday, Feb. 1, 1994. The winner should come up to the office for the prize on any Monday or Tuesday.

3. Contestants may submit only one entry per week.

4. Charlatan staff members and their families are not eligible to participate.

Answer:

Name:

Phone:

Raven Rumblings

Athletic fee increase expected

1994-95 budget proposes to create special reserve fund

by Derek DeCloet
Charlatan Staff

QUOTE OF THE WEEK

"In the second half we played as if we belonged on the floor with them. In the first half, we played as if we didn't even belong there."

Women's assistant basketball coach John Johnson on the Raven's 77-46 loss to the York Yeowomen this past weekend.

SPORTS THAT AREN'T

You lucky readers. In an effort to be more conscious of the wide variety of sports in this crazy world we live in, we at The Charlatan have decided to introduce you to something new — sports that pretend to be sports. This week's pick: battle chess.

HOCKEY MAGIC — NOT

The Carleton hockey club could have used a magic wand last week. Instead, they fell under the spell of the Wizard's hockey club, losing 5-0 in Senior R.A. League action on Jan. 19. The loss drops their league record to a woeful 1-10-2, good enough for fifth place in the six-team league.

CORRECTIONS

Oops, we were pretty sloppy last week.

Our apologies to nordic skiers Catherine Mulvihill and Gayle Barnett, whose names we misspelled last week.

As if that wasn't enough, we also got swimmer Sarah Dobbin's name wrong and printed 1:10.36 as her time in the 100-metre breast stroke. It may be a time Olympic swimmers would be proud of — but it wasn't hers.

CALENDAR

Friday, Jan. 28.

BASKETBALL — The O-5 women's basketball team travels to Sudbury to take on the Laurentian Voyageurs in a 6 p.m. match at the Avery Gymnasium. The 2-3 men's team follows with an 8:15 p.m. match.

SKIING — The nordic ski teams host the Polar Bear Challenge at Carleton University tonight. Relay races for women begin at 7:30 p.m. on the rugby field and the men's races follow at 8:30 p.m.

VOLLEYBALL — The women's volleyball team takes part in the Ottawa Invitational tournament which starts at 1 p.m. in Montpetit Hall.

Saturday, Jan. 29.

SKIING — The nordic ski team will be in Gatineau Park today competing at the National Capital District Races against the universities of Ottawa, Laurentian and Queen's among others.

Sunday, Jan. 30.

SKIING — The nordic ski team continues racing at the NCD Races in Gatineau Park. □

The Carleton athletics board wants students to pay more for athletics next year, despite projections it will have a surplus this year.

The 1994-95 preliminary athletics budget, revealed for the first time on Jan. 21, includes a two-per-cent increase in athletic fees over last year.

If passed at the next board meeting Jan. 28, full-time undergraduate students would pay just over $134 in athletics fees next year — about $2.60 more than right now.

Athletics director Keith Harris said the increase is needed to keep up with inflation, which was also around two per cent in 1993. Last year, the board approved an increase of 3.5 per cent for 1993-94.

If this year's increase is not approved, "then we'll have to start cutting," he said.

But some board members were not impressed by the move.

"I didn't expect that at all," said Rob Jamieson, one of CUSA's representatives on the board.

Athletics should move to more of a user-pay system, said Jamieson, where students who use athletic facilities — such as the squash courts — would bear the brunt of the increase.

"There's just so many students that don't use the athletic centre," he said. "I think we have to put a little bit more on to the user."

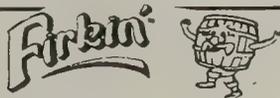

The key difference in the 1994-95 budget in comparison to past budgets is that athletics plans to put $150,000 into a special reserve fund, which will be used

94-95 Proposed Budget Breakdown

Renovations	$237,000	Student Fees	$2,619,627
Reserve Fund	$150,000	Grant	$271,425
Programs	$1,549,166	Sales	$433,950
Salaries	$1,156,866	Programs	$726,649
Operations	$995,712	Other	$106,837
Other	$91,385

Expenditures
$4,180,129

Revenues
$4,158,488

BREWERY & WINE CO.
HAVING A KEG PARTY?

SAVE $$$
Make Your Own Beer
ONLY $80/ KEG. Inc. Tax

3469 INNES ROAD

CALL 837-7476

If this year's increase is not approved, "then we'll have to start cutting."
- Keith Harris

later to build new buildings or fields.

This year's projected surplus — largely the result of social contract athletic wage cuts — will be added to the fund, although it is unknown how much will be left at the end of the year.

Harris said the fund is important, because rising enrolment will eventually force athletics to expand its facilities, already stretched to the limit.

While Jamieson agreed it is important to put something aside for the future, his reaction to the strategy was lukewarm.

"One hundred and fifty grand is a nice number, but at the same time we have to spend the money on the students that are paying for it right now," he said.

But Harris warned that today's students have to keep an eye on the future, because students in the past have paid higher-than-necessary fees to pay off debts on athletic facilities. And, he added, athletics can't use any surplus money without the university's permission.

The budget also does not give any money to teams that have been lobbying for varsity funding, such as hockey and rowing.

"We don't think we can afford it," said Harris.

But Theresa Cowan, another CUSA representative on the board, said students should be surveyed to find out if they're happy with the sports they're funding.

The budget projects a deficit of just over $21,000 for next year. □

Carleton University Students Association

STUDENT HEALTH INSURANCE ARE YOU COVERED?

788-3999

788-3999

788-3999

788-3999

788-3999

788-3999

788-3999

CUSA "Well, I guess that explains the abdominal pains."

- ♦ All full-time students (4 credits or more) are automatically covered.
- ♦ Part-time students (3.5 credits or less) can opt into the plan by paying $49.05 at the CUSA office before FEBRUARY 1.
- ♦ Family coverage is available by paying an additional $45.05 at the CUSA office before FEBRUARY 1.
- ♦ Any student enrolled in full-time studies in January 1994 may opt out before FEBRUARY 1 by providing proof of similar coverage.
- ♦ For more information, see the pamphlet in the CUSA office, 401 Unicentre Building or call 788-3999.

DEADLINE: FEBRUARY 1

Ottawa-Hull

INTERNATIONAL AUTO SHOW

OTTAWA CONGRESS CENTRE - FEBRUARY 2-6, 1994

The Ottawa Citizen
Winning Wheel

Spin the wheel and you could win $15,000 toward the purchase of your dream car.

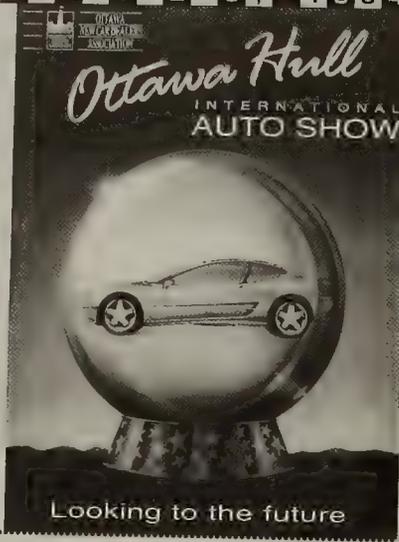

Drop by the Citizen booth and take your turn at the wheel. If you land on the car four times in a row, you'll win $15,000 toward the purchase of a new car.

There are scores of smaller prizes to be won including skis, bikes, sweatshirts, caps and car products.

Watch for your ballot at The Ottawa Citizen booth at the Auto Show.

Featuring the new models of:

- Acura
- Alfa Romeo
- Audi
- BMW
- Chrysler
- Ford
- General Motors
- Honda
- Hyundai
- Infiniti
- Isuzu
- Jaguar
- Jeep Eagle
- Lada
- Mazda
- Mercedes
- Mercury
- Nissan
- Saab
- Saturn
- Subaru
- Suzuki
- Toyota
- Volkswagen
- Volvo

Looking to the future

Show hours:

Wed. to Fri.: 11 a.m.-10:30 p.m., Sat.: 10 a.m.-10:30 p.m., Sun.: 10 a.m.-6:30 p.m.
Adults: $7 • Seniors/Students: $6 • Under 12: $3

THE OTTAWA Citizen
ALL YOU WANT US TO BE

The UnClassifieds

Replies are in for boxes: CITI, CUDDLY, REAL, SSS, PACHI, LANE. Please come to 531 Uncentre to pick up these responses.

THE FOOT PATROL is trying to locate one or more women who may have received an escort by a single male claiming to be the Foot Patrol. If you have ANY information on this matter, PLEASE call Brenda Kennedy at 788-4066

RIDES

!!!HELP!!! It's freaken cold outside (specially in the morning). C.U. Eng. student needs a ride at 8:15am from West End (Meadowlands & Mervale Area) to Carleton U. (or close). Your help will be Really appreciated!! PLEASE, call MEL 228-0402.

FOR SALE/RENT

Spacious, furnished 2-bedroom apartment in Glebe to share. At Bronson & Fifth - 5 minute walk to campus, bus share at door. Mature, quiet, non-smoker only. Large closets, storage, laundry in building. Carpeted, unfurnished bedroom. Shared bathroom, kitchen & livingroom facilities. Use of TV and microwave. Available Feb. 1/94. $350/month plus 1/2 hydro and phone. Heat, water, cable included. 231-5923, leave message or box 722 Charlatan.

HUGE APARTMENT TO RENT - LOTS OF PRIVACY. 7 rooms, 2 levels, loft bedroom, newly renovated bathroom and kitchen; study, storage room, walk to wall carpeting. Available immediately. $440 inclusive. Uppery/grad student preferred. Contact Rob 237-3621.

Encyclopedia Britannica - 1988 - 37 vols. Good condition. $450 or best offer. 257-2373. The Book Gallery, Carleton Place. 200,000 books - all types, ages, prices. Sublet May 1st: Sunnyside, 1 room separate lease, all inclusive, furnished, basic phone included. $350 ask for Grant 730-1720.

For rent: 2-Bedroom cottage. 45 min. from downtown. Dishwasher/wood stove. $500 + utilities. 729-1299

LOST & FOUND

Lost: Kenwood Faceplate and case. Outside Unicentre tunnel level (ramp). If found call 237-8831. Reward offered.

Found: Sunglasses. Last November... In ladies washroom (Paterson Bldg.) They are here at the Charlatan office. Describe? Box Sunglasses.

Found: Student Card, number 221875. Call 731-3317

WANTED / JOBS

Summer Jobs: Pripstein's Camp (Laurentians) hiring instructors: Kayaking, Waterskiing (OWSA certified), Pottery, Beadmaking/Jewellery Gymnasics, Swim (RC/RLSS inst. & Nationals), Canoeing, Judo (black belt), Drama (musicals), Photography, Keyboardist. Send resume 5253 Decarie #333, Montreal H3W 3C3.

Do you like music? Two guys who are into folk, punk, and sing in between are looking for someone who wants to sing. Call Tom or George at 237-9211

EARN FREE TRIPS AND CASH! Breakaway Tours is looking for motivated students, organizations & clubs to promote Spring Break Tours to Panama City Beach, Daytona & Cancun! Leader in student tours for the past 11 years, we are looking for the best reps to promote our Tours. Best commission structure available. so call today! CALL 1-800-465-4257. Member of the BBB. CALL AND COMPARE US TO ANYONE!

Wanted: Used camping equipment (i.e. sleeping bag, knapsack, tent etc). Call 567-7607.

Help! I'm doing a journalism thesis on abusive (psychological, physical, sexual) dating relationships. If you are or have been in such a relationship, please call Tracy at 237-9393 or respond to box Date. Confidential.

We are doing a research project on programs to identify 'johns' and want to know how prostitutes and clients feel. Box John.

Earn up to $700 weekly from home! Rush SASE to Classin, 2407A - 515 St Laurent Blvd., Ottawa, Ont K1K 3X5

SERVICES / AVAILABLE

SPRINGBREAK '94 We know where it's hot!! Come to CUBA. 2 hotels sold out, we are on our 3rd. Now $699 all inclusive. Return flight & beachfront hotel & all meals & all alcoholic drinks & water sports & all taxes + service charges & chance to win "Jeep YJ" & "KOALA SPRINGS" party & more... DAYTONA $99 + tax U-drive, $199 + tax Bus. Best price in town!! Guaranteed!! (Ont. Reg. 04106282). Book now!! at 724-9974 or 725-1821.

Word processing. Accurate, professional, prompt, economical. Reports, essays, term papers, transcripts, theses. Reasonable editing provided and grammar corrected free. 731-9534.

Invest in your future and earn extra income. Attend one of the most powerful and effective success courses in North America. Hear Richard Harty, founder and president of CREATIONS Inc. speak at the Westin Hotel - Sat. Jan. 29 10 a.m. Contact Ron Zimmer at 824-1713 for more details on this free event.

Daytona Beach from $99 - Howard Johnson Party Complex! Panama City Beach from $139 - Ocean Front Properties! Cancun Mexico from $559 - Ocean Front Hotel! Quebec City skiing from $239. BOOK NOW - SPACE LIMITED!! Visa, Mastercard, American Express. Call BREAKAWAY TOURS 1-800-465-4257 (Ont. reg#2422707)

Earn $500 - $1000 weekly stuffing envelopes. For details - RUSH $1.00 with SASE to: GROUP FIVE, 57 Greenleaf Drive, Suite 307, Dover, DE 19901.

WORD PROCESSING - Fast, Accurate, Professional Word Processing, Essays, Reports, Theses, Resumes, Flyers. Laser Printer, Pick-up and Delivery is available. Call Lena: 837-0183

SPRINGBREAK '94 - Daytona or bust! Party at the world's most famous beach with Canada's only student travel company - BREAKAWAY TOURS (Reg 242707) - $209 + 60 tax for bus + hotel or U-drive for $109 + tax! Call Chris 526-0776 or 564-0564.

Having trouble writing papers and essays? Have difficulty with grammar, spelling and/or organizing your thoughts clearly on paper? Want to improve your writing skills and raise your grades? Ask for Dorothy, B.A. English Language and Literature, Teaching ESL experience. 232-6835.

Legal problems? Landlord-tenant matters, small claims court, provincial offences (traffic court) & summary convictions. Call Jacquard Legal Services 247-1915.

INTERNATIONAL STUDENTS: DV-1 Greencard Program. Sponsored by the U.S. Immigration Dept. Greencards provide permanent resident status, in USA. Citizens of almost all countries are allowed to take part. Live. Chance: 1 in 14. Editing & Journals: New Era Legal Services, 20231 Stagg St., Canoga Park, CA 91306, USA. Tel: (818)998-4425; (818)882-9681, Monday - Sunday: 8 a.m. - 11p.m.

Essays and Theses - laser printed - $1.60 per page. Also available - resume writing, editing, writing tutoring, charts, graphics & tables. Fax & pick-up service can be arranged. Please call 721-8770.

Word Processing. Accuracy and Deadlines Guaranteed. Central Location. 233-8874.

MESSAGES/MISCELLANEOUS

Does anyone still believe in living larger than life? I don't own much except a lot of stories that in some way define my horizons. Anyone interested in exchanging small stories with great relevance please write to: Box Memory Oh, Steve, you Charlahak, I really hope to indulge in "You" again just like at Charity Ball.

Pookie, has it been two years already? Time flies when you're having fun. Here is to many more! Schnookums. COMMERCE STUDENTS - the Commerce Society will be holding a pub at Oliver's Thursday, February 3 from 8:00 till close.

The Commerce Society Elections will be held February 8 & 10. Nomination forms can be picked up at 225 PA. Deadline for nominations is Friday, Feb. 4. For more info call 788-2600 ext 2708.

Are you a Q-Yr masters student or a masters student now who did a Q-Yr? If so, interested in hearing from you. Box Q-YR.

Liane Tabah please call your grandmother in Montreal. KIERAN

MAN TO MAN

Gay psychology major seeking study buddy to discuss psychological issues from a gay perspective! An interest in light weightlifting also. Box Psych

MAN TO WOMAN

White, single, gentleman seeking attractive, sensual, petite female who loves hot tubbing, jacuzzis, romantic dinners, movies, music, slow dancing, silk lingerie...for casual or intimate relationship. Box Romantic.

Single, sort of mature and bankable! Easy-going and realistic seeks a gal with sense of humour and understanding. Some tune-up may be necessary! Civil engineering & political correctness an asset!! SERIOUS REPLIES ONLY. Box Civil.

One owner Girl-Toy (slightly used and older) available to be borrowed, maybe future ownership. Present owner tossed me in the toy box as she has a new toy. Box Mr.Toy

Sex Tutor required to save my marriage. I'm kind, gentle, but lack the finer points of technique (according to wife!). Non-critical women only please respond. Box Tutor

WOMAN TO MAN

Single, Jewish lady 38yrs, 162cm, attractive, sensitive, professional, wishes to meet single, professional, erudite man with academic background; distinctive scholar or scientist for meaningful relationship (divorced should not apply). Write 55-725 Bernard St., Ottawa ON, K1K 3H7.

ARTS & ENTERTAINMENT

A photo album of choreographed images

by Stephanie Garrison
Charlatan Staff

An Evening With Mark Godden
Royal Winnipeg Ballet
National Arts Centre Opera
Jan. 27 — Jan. 29

"All my ballets are very personal. They come from personal ideas. Sometimes I make them literal, but most often I abstract those ideas and I let them take on another sort of growth pattern; I don't hold them down to what they mean to me personally."

This intimate view of dance is Mark in his abilities as a choreographer has not gone unnoticed by dance critics, having been lauded by the Globe and Mail and the Los Angeles Times.

Although Godden has visual and movement ideas, his main inspiration comes from music; all the ballets he has created for the Royal Winnipeg thus far have been built on the strength of a composition. Godden would like to collaborate with a composer for his choreography, since he frequently must discard movement ideas unsuitable for the piece of music.

"But right now what really intrigues me is finding a piece of music," Godden says. "In a sense I feel that everything is there. It's just a matter of me discovering it — in the music, in the dancers, in the concept, in the ideas and in the research. So I feel like all the information is there, I just need to perceive it."

"I dream a lot about the dancers that are within the company. I think a lot about them," Godden says. "Once I get an idea . . . the idea probably could not have come to fruition without me knowing the dancers that I was going to do it on."

Godden may have a specific idea when he comes into the studio. Most of the time, however, he'll furnish an idea or an emotion he wants to project and the dancers will use their own personality and their understanding of life and music to bring his concept to life.

Their interpretation will either be what Godden wants, or he will coax something more from the dancers, all the while relating it back to the music. Another key collaborator for Godden's works is designer Paul Daigle, a former Royal Winnipeg dancer who has developed sets and costumes for all of Godden's major pieces thus far.

"Once that work is built, I have a perception for it," Godden says. "I always try to make up my own mind about my choreography before it goes onstage, so that I understand what it means to me."

Godden's choreography is not meant to be pure entertainment. The sombre, unresolved passions of A Darkness Between Us is Godden's exploration of darker sides in his personality and past relationships. However, moody contemplations of humanity are not an exclusive theme in his work. If anything, his range of interest is eclectic.

"I feel that my tastes are varied, and that's one of the reasons how this whole Godden evening originated. I had such varied works, with such a different look and such different subject matter that it was felt all could be combined in one evening of work and be entertaining." The main link binding these works together is that they were exclusively created for the Royal Winnipeg, from the artistic director to the technical staff.

A scene from Mark Godden's Dame Aux Fruits.

"I think that it's necessary for any company to really exist in the world, you have to have your own particular style, and you have to have your own ballets that other companies aren't doing," says Godden. "All the companies in the world are vying for the same market, and if we don't have our own product, then we can't exist."

In 1981 Godden entered the Royal Winnipeg Ballet School's professional division, joining the company in 1984. Founded in 1939 by Gweneth Lloyd and Betty Farrally, it is the longest continuously operating ballet company in North America.

The fact that everyone in the company, from the dancers to the wardrobe department, have complete faith in his vision, is still a bit of an amazement to Godden.

"It's new ground for myself, and it's new ground for all of us, because the RWB has never done (a show like) this before. So it's a little terrifying in that sense, but, in another way, everyone, especially myself, is intrigued to see how this is going to go." □

Godden: "I dream a lot about the dancers that are within the company."

Godden's, the resident choreographer for the Royal Winnipeg Ballet. Godden creates a photo album from his choreographed images, using his steps like snapshots to mark particular points in his life.

Since being appointed to his newly created post in 1990, the former Royal Winnipeg Ballet soloist has created several award-winning works, four of which will be performed at the National Arts Centre this week. They include Dame aux Fruits, Angels in the Architecture, A Darkness Between Us and La Princesse et le Soldat, which in 1991 won Godden second prize for new choreography at the International Ballet Competition in Helsinki, Finland.

Godden's straightforward confidence

And from the Charlatan mailbox. . .

It seems we have a dispute on our hands. Witness the following rebuttal to the contest answer that stated nobody survived Reservoir Dogs, signed by some mysterious individuals who identify themselves only as "The Dogs:"

ATTN: ARTS EDITOR JAN 21/94
RE: Reservoir Dogs CD contest.

We would like to know what proof you have that no one was left standing at the end of Reservoir (sic) Dogs? We believe (sic) (True "Dog" fans) that Mr. Pink was not killed based on the background sounds at the end of the movie. There is no way we know whether or not the gunshots in the background sound kill Mr. Pink.

There are other possible conclusions you can rightly assume, such as:

- a) Mr. Pink was shot but not killed
- b) The shots didn't hit him
- c) Many other conclusions

We believe (sic) your conclusion is possible but not necessarily correct.

The only fair thing to do is to have another contest based on Tarrantino's second movie True Romance.

Dogs

Editor's Ruling: Although we especially liked the way "The Dogs" covered all the bases with item c), we believe the conclusion that not even the weaselly Mr. Pink survived is only logical. Remember, we're talking about a movie in which everybody was singularly unlucky in dodging bullets, knives and gasoline. Mr. Pink is dead and not even "The Dogs" can bring him back. □

This week: Our Very Favorite Chinchilla Names

1. Sneakers
2. Lunch
3. Pedro
4. Jean-Paul Sartre
5. Kiefer
6. River
7. Smedley
8. Know-Nothin' Bozo
9. Umberto
10. Kevin

DISCOGRAPHY

The Inbreds

Hilario
PF Records (Independent)

Into a musical world of things grungy, pierced and tattooed come the Inbreds, a two-year-old, two-man outfit known as "Kingston's Smallest Band."

The band draws its influences not from the familiar breeding ground of Seattle (thankfully), but from more traditional sources, including the Beatles and garage rock.

The sound takes on its own unique character, as the band uses a bass in place of guitars to drive the melodies. Hilario is a 21-song celebration of sound technology, or lack thereof.

Some songs, like "Grandpa's Heater," are raw tributes to garage rock—you can almost smell the gas fumes amid the rough-and-tumble sound. A few songs appear in their original four-track demo form.

At the other end of the technological scale is the mellow "Noah's Cage," where singer/bassist Mike O'Neill overextends the band's limited resources by harmonizing sweetly with his thrice-overdubbed voice.

Throughout, the band impresses with its appealing songs. O'Neill's compositions are tightly written and laden with appealing hooks. The revamped bass sound provides a darkly poetic backdrop to the proceedings.

This is one of the best independent discs I've heard and is well worth picking up.

Sean Silcoff

Hilario can be obtained by calling 1-547-3703 or by writing Box 21003 Kingston, Ont., K7L 1C0.

The Nothingheads

The Note
Independent

Noteworthy!

The Note is a musically worthy debut for this refreshingly original local group. The music on this album makes you want to sing along. Its catchy melodies and lyrics evoke emotional messages we can all relate to.

The Nothingheads call upon the musical influences of folk, jazz, blues and rock to create their own interpretation of music which celebrates melody and rhythm. The result is an aesthetically pleasing, heartfelt style of music.

The recipe for this unadulterated collection of songs rests upon acoustic guitar rhythms flavored with tasteful electric guitar leads.

It's generously textured with melodic bass lines and solid, creative drumming. Finally, it's topped off with meaningful and sometimes humorous lyrics, sung with character and feeling.

Expect no slick production, however. The recording is raw, loose and honest, free of the techniques of overproduction employed in the dog-eat-dog industry of music.

As such, the band is true to itself, although in live performances their music tends to be more dynamic and intense.

Patrick White

Knocking Boots

Assimilated
Independent

Nursing a killer hangover and wondering how I got home from the Charity Ball, I rolled out of bed on Sunday to the sounds of Knocking Boots.

I thought I was listening to some band out of Seattle, but was surprised to find these talented guys are from Montebello, Que.

This last summer, with the help of Furnaceface's Marty Jones at Ottawa's Sound of One Hand Studio, they put together these four tracks that leave me in anticipation of tour dates and new releases.

It's strong, kickin' rock and roll from our own backyard. Keep your ears open for these guys.

Christopher Bell

Spring broke?

If spring break suddenly leaves you broke, let Western Union come to your aid.

We can transfer money from Canada to the U.S. in a matter of minutes. And with 22,000 locations worldwide, there's no faster or more convenient way to send and receive money.

So if your spring break leaves you spring broke, let Western Union help you have some funds in the sun.

In the U.S. call
1-800-325-6000

WESTERN UNION | MONEY TRANSFER

In Canada call
1-800-235-0000

The fastest way to send money.™

The Charlatan Pub Crawl Extravaganza

Across the river and to the dome

by Josée Bellemare
Charlatan Staff

The Thunderdome. I guess you can imagine what this Hull club (located on the infamous Hull strip) is like from its name alone.

As I stood in line to get in one Friday night, it sounded like there was a storm inside. I was curious to see what was behind these walls which shook from the loud alternative music inside.

After paying $4, I walked down a hall to a small opening which consisted of a bar with tables and chairs scattered about. Black mannequin chests stood in corners of the room with metal ropes chaining them together.

People stood around a solitary pool table and up against the walls, one of which was decorated with posters of parties and concerts.

I walked around the corner and down the stairs to see a world I never thought could exist in this humble city. It was a world spray painted with blue, green and multi-colored demons covering the walls from top to bottom.

The place was packed with sweaty bodies, some with colorful mohawks, others with pierced ears, nipples, eyebrows and belly buttons. In the centre of the dance floor, there were a few men who didn't wear shirts while they danced in a frenzied rage.

Their long hair slashed the air as they slam-danced into each other. Many other people stood around the bar observing the dance floor or talking with their friends.

It seemed to be a place where everybody knew each other, except for the lone visitors standing off to the side, perhaps there out of curiosity or just for a beer.

The disc jockey was caged in this small cubicle which resembled a jail. He didn't seem very enthusiastic to hear my requests. On my way to the washroom, I noticed there were open spaces to look into the men's washroom. There was no one in there when I first looked, so I walked in to see what other surprises awaited.

The men's washroom consists of a large, open-spaced room with a few spray-painted urinals stacked closely together on one wall and a few others on another wall. It seemed odd to use a huge vacant space for a few urinals.

It was strange to see men going to the bathroom without feeling self-conscious even if women could peer at them while they do their duties. I was glad to see there were no holes in the walls of the women's washroom.

My friend and I brought this guy with us, who seemed indifferent about going out to this club. About half an hour after we arrived, he was suddenly in a very good mood. He told me he just finished consuming some mushrooms. If this drug is taken in large doses, you're supposed to hallucinate. He told me he took only a small dose, which is supposed to lift your spirits. It made me wonder how many other people in this club were on this drug.

When I left this club, I knew I wouldn't come back. Even if you don't like punk, I advise you to go just for the experience. □

Warning: Overfiend is definitely not a date flick

by Rob Willbond
Charlatan Staff

Urotsukidoji: Legend of the Overfiend
Directed by Hideki Takayama

If you're planning a dinner and movie date, Urotsukidoji: Legend of the Overfiend may not be the proper film choice.

While containing some of the greatest animation techniques seen in a long time, the overkill of sex and violence undermines the use of such a fascinating art form.

The Mayfair's warning, "not for those who are sensitive, faint-hearted or politically correct," is indeed appropriate.

Plot is the greatest victim of this violence. This film is nominally about the Chojin, or god of all gods, being reborn in Osaka, Japan and setting about delivering peace to the three separate dimensions.

These three dimensions: the human world (Earth), the evil demon world (home of the Makai), and the man-beast world (home of the Iyujinkai) must all become united for this peace to come about.

Oddly enough, the instalment of this utopia means lots of big cheesy monsters must battle, rape and have their way with a multitude of defenceless human females. Amidst this sexcapade, plot cohesion evaporates — not wishing to disturb this crucial part of the story — returning only to close the film.

Many will say this film is sexist. They will be right. Are there no female demons out on the rape and pillage scene? The target audience for the film is quite obvious: the big, bad ultra-cool male crowd. If you thought Andrew Dice Clay was bad, he is a mere babe in the woods compared to the minds that created this number.

As the story unfolds further, it trips over itself a number of times. One moment the Chojin is good, the next he's bad. Then the supposedly good Iyujinkai are bad and the demonic Makai are not evil, but striving to preserve their already acceptable world.

Clichés abound. The audience is handed the overused idea that all evil henchmen are idiotic and incompetent as the failures of the Makai are produced. To lighten things up after all the rapes and murders, the animators throw in a cheesy moral love message. Why?

At the screening I attended, it appeared as though many people in the theatre were growing bored with the excessive violence and shaky plot. They showed their disdain by happily shouting out opinionated, verbal critiques of the movie. This live element added greatly to a film that was growing stale.

The actual plot, once finally understood, is lightly entertaining. The horror element is weaker, relying more upon visual effects than actually trying to frighten through mystery or suspense. The problem is that such an overload of gore soon becomes bland. Will Japan ever tire of big ego-tripping monsters beating each other up?

Overall, Legend of the Overfiend is excellent in its technical use of animation.

It's too bad that what it depicts is such poor male macho crap. Animation seems to have so much unused potential, be it wasted on Saturday morning television to market cheap toys, or in non-mainstream cinema to feed sick minds with horrid images. What's wrong with a normal, non-ultra-violent animated film, like Tim Burton's Nightmare Before Christmas? Sometimes even extremes grow tiresome. □

"A DAZZLER! SELDOM DO WE GET FILMS SO BRIGHT AND SO COMIC."

"STOCKARD CHANNING'S DRY, COMIC PERFORMANCE IS OSCAR CALIBRE BRILLIANT."

"GREAT FUN..."

with Stockard Channing as its hilariously brittle heroine. Donald Sutherland is a great comic asset."

STOCKARD CHANNING WILL SMITH DONALD SUTHERLAND

METRO-GOLDWYN-MAYER PRESENTS AN AARDEN MOVIES/NEW REGENCY PRODUCTION A FILM BY FRED SCHEPISI STARRING STOCKARD CHANNING WILL SMITH DONALD SUTHERLAND
"SIX DEGREES OF SEPARATION" MARY BETH HURT BRUCE DAVISON AND JAN MCKELLEN WRITTEN BY JERRY GOLDSMITH
DIRECTED BY FRED SCHEPISI COSTUME DESIGNER PATRIZIA VON BRANCKENSTEIN EXECUTIVE PRODUCERS IAN BAKER AND RYE AUDNEY PRODUCED BY JOHN GUARE
CASTING BY JOHN GUARE EDITOR FRED SCHEPISI EXECUTIVE PRODUCERS ARNON NALCHAN PRODUCED BY FRED SCHEPISI
© 1994 METRO-GOLDWYN-MAYER INC. ALL RIGHTS RESERVED

The Charlatan is giving away 20 double passes to the Ottawa premiere of Six Degrees of Separation. The first 20 people to come up to The Charlatan office at 531 Unicentre on Friday, January 28 after 10am and can answer the following trivia question will receive passes. Ask for Jill.

What T.V. series does Will Smith star in?

"I THOUGHT YOU SAID THIS WAS A DISNEY MOVIE?"

White Trash livin': good food, good times

by Charnead Schella
Charlatan Staff

Okay. So you were home for Christmas, sitting down to the feast of the year and just as your Aunt Dorothy hands you the turnip soufflé, you note that your mouth isn't watering and your hand is not shaking in anticipated delight.

You suddenly realize you're just not digging the home-cooked, market-fresh food anymore. The meals that made you yearn for home only months before now do nothing to stimulate any part of your body, including your taste buds.

You are dead to your mother's vegetarian lasagne; you are indifferent to Aunt Rochelle's stuffed cornish hens; your Dad's fettucini alfredo has become a mockery in your mind. You crave, instead, the white trash food you have become accustomed to eating while living on your own.

This realization was surprisingly liberating to me. I understood the seriousness of my affliction on the first day back in Ottawa after the Christmas break. It was then that I embarrassingly enough broke into a cold sweat while trying to find an opener for my can of Chef Boy-ar-dee ravioli.

My roommate had put the opener in an alien kitchen drawer by mistake. The experience was traumatic. I now keep can openers in three rooms of the house, in case such a mishap repeats itself.

Watching my mom nearly lose her mind preparing for Christmas dinner an entire week before just seems so silly to me, such an incredible waste of time. I can think of about a million things she could have been doing with that week instead of planning what bowl to put the home-made cranberry sauce into, and devising a schedule as to how often the turkey would need basting over a five-hour stint.

White trash food is the answer. For the uninitiated, white trash food and culture encompass almost everything that is tacky about North America, by which I mean white bread sandwiches, country music, Kentucky Fried Chicken™ and big shopping malls. I am not suggesting this generation has ceremoniously sprouted up to be historically labelled "The White Trash Generation." On the contrary, I feel confident in the assumption that the white trash way of life has been in play for many decades and perhaps even longer.

I find myself gazing back through time, to the great white trash mothers and fathers, and I am immediately serene. William Faulkner, Loretta Lynn, Tennessee Williams, Dolly Parton and, of course, Elvis Presley all sang or wrote about the glories of white trash.

Today we have Lisa Germano, Bruce Springsteen, John Cougar, Gord Downey, k.d. lang, Melissa Etheridge and, of course, Neil Young, who teach us all to appreciate the value and necessity of white trash in our lives.

I imagine you all have a fairly fundamental knowledge of white trash food, but to delve deeper into the realms it encases, I have included a few nonsense, fool-proof recipes (for those like me, who are virtually useless in the kitchen).

The Potato Chip Sandwich

You never ate this good at home! It's a meal designed to satisfy even the most finicky tapeworm. (Clockwise from top left)

Step 1: Just got home from shopping. Let's see, got my fake bread, my fake butter, my fake beverage, some chips and some ketchup. Lookin' good.

Step 2: Who needs jam when you've got margarine and ketchup?

Step 3: Don't scrounge on the chips! Remember, the key to making a good potato chip sandwich is plenty o' them potato chips.

Step 4: It took almost forty seconds to make, but the wait was worth it. Just try going into Mama Teresa's and ordering this!

PHOTOS BY ANDRE BELLEFEUILLE

Clip 'n' save! It's those handy White Trash recipes!

THE POTATO CHIP SANDWICH

(to end all potato chip sandwiches)

2 slices of Wonder bread
1 200-gram bag of plain, thin-cut potato chips

tato chips margarine (preferably yellow-colored) ketchup (though mustard, mayonnaise and relish all work just as well)

Spread margarine evenly across one side of each bread slice. Spread a generous portion of the ketchup (or whatever turns your crank) over the margarine. Proceed to add as many potato chips on top of the ketchup as you are able. Put pieces of bread together, squash everything down until all potato chips are broken, and enjoy.

This recipe shouldn't take more than about one and a half minutes to prepare.

Serves one. (It is recommended that Jolt™ Cola be served with the sandwich.)

MACARONI AND CHEESE DINNER

1 bag pasta elbows
1 jar processed cheese spread salt pepper
ketchup (optional)

Boil water in a pot (hot pot or conventional stove pot). Add pasta elbows when water is boiling. Stir occasionally, until the pasta is soft, yet still slightly firm (soggy pasta is BAD). Strain out excess water, and return macaroni to the warm element. Add cheese generously. When the processed cheese has all melted, and is no longer in the shape of the jar it came in, you know your macaroni and cheese dinner is ready for serving. Add salt, pepper, and ketchup to taste. Preparation time is no more than about 15 to 20 minutes. Serves about four, depending on how hungry you are.

BEEFARONI

1 Box Kraft Dinner™
1 pound o' ground beef
1 can spaghetti sauce

Prepare Kraft Dinner™ as per box instructions. Mix in pre-warmed spaghetti sauce and pre-cooked ground beef. Serves four hungry lumberjacks.

Try these handy little recipes; hell, have a white trash food party! This food is fine for survival, but it is, as is anything, more fun with two. White trash is not just a cruel-joke-turned-cultural-phenomenon, it's a way of life. Give me white trash, or give me death. ☐

Train to be a TEACHER
in Great Britain

Ministry approved courses in U.K.
Universities

For more information, contact:
Teach

Phone 1-905-388-7158
Fax 1-905-383-7770

Counting Crows & CRACKER

THU FEB 17TH DOORS AT 7PM PORTER HALL, CARLETON UNIVERSITY

TICKETS AT TICKETMASTER RES.: 755-1111, RECORDS ON WHEELS, SHAKE RECORDS AND UNICENTRE STORE.

LONG DAY IN THE UNIVERSE

THURSDAY, JANUARY 27 TO FRIDAY, FEBRUARY 4

Thursday, January 27

With a name like Mindfunk, you can't go wrong. This California-based band from Sausalito is playing tonight at the Thunderdome in Hull, along with The Mad from Toronto. Tickets are $8 at the usual independent music outlets or $10 at the door.

Freaks: A Circus Tale with Music is best described as, well, a circus tale with music. It's playing tonight through Feb. 5 at the NAC Atelier at 8 p.m.

The Royal Winnipeg Ballet is presenting several works by their resident choreographer Mark Godden, in the National Arts Centre Opera tonight until Jan. 29 at 8 p.m. Tickets range from $22 to $47.50.

Friday, January 28

This afternoon's free noon-time concert at Carleton's Alumni Theatre features the happy pianos of Miguel Sosa and Satoko Hojo.

Lowest of the Low return to the nation's capital, this time to the Penguin. Tickets are $8 in advance and can be picked up at the Penguin. Warning to audience members and bouncers: duck!

Much Ado About Nothing, that wacky Shakespearean film featuring Kenneth Branagh, plays at the Bytowne tonight at 9:15 p.m.

Me, Mom and Morgentaler, contrary to rumors, have not broken up. They are, as it were, playing, along with Pigfarm, at Thunderdome. Cover is a mere $7.

Maria Hawkins and the All-Stars are playing tonight and tomorrow evening at the Whipping Post on Rideau Street.

You have two chances to catch the uniquely Canadian sounds of the Grievous Angels. They're playing tonight and tomorrow at Zaphod's.

Saturday, January 29

More fun and adventure are to be had at Porter Hall this evening at 8 p.m. CKCU and CHUO are doing the fundraiser thing with D.J. D-Vine and D.J. Mike, spinning funk, hip hop, reggae and house. Cover is $6.

Stone Soul Picnic, fresh from their triumph at the Charity Ball, are at the Penguin this evening.

Fat Man Waving plays the Downstairs Club tonight.

Enjoy mindless violence? Missed last week's screenings of Urotsukidoji: Legend of the Overfiend? Never fear: the Mayfair is screening John Woo's cult film The Killer.

The Mayfair warns: "projectile firing toys or actual firearms are strictly forbidden in the theatre." I guess that means you can bring your cap guns and play along.

Sunday, January 30

Some free stuff in Carleton's Alumni Theatre tonight at 8 p.m. Elisabeth Pomès, a soprano-type singer, accompanied on piano by Peter Tiefenbach.

Blue Rodeo is at Centrepointe Theatre this evening at 8 p.m. Tickets are an astronomical $26.75. ($26.75 for Blue Rodeo? I don't think so. Wait for one of their cheap gigs. -ed.)

If you'd rather do something on the cheap, you can always head on down to the Duke of Somerset and listen to the Celtic bar sounds of Jimmy George.

Monday, January 31

Hungry? Wouldn't you enjoy a nice snack? This week's Charlatan snack tip is Peanut Butter and Jam Rollies™.

To make these Rollies, get four slices of fresh, enriched white bread (the stuff with all the chemicals), wrap them in Saran Wrap™ and put them in the fridge for 30 minutes. Then take them out and unwrap them, cut off all the crusts (give them to the birdies) and smear gobs of peanut butter and strawberry jam on one side of each "bread" slice. Roll them up, with the peanut butter and jam on the inside. Eat. Serves four.

Tuesday, February 1

As our Ottawa Valley types like to say at the beginning of each month, "White rabbit!" And what better way to celebrate the first of the month than with a good book, recommended by Charlatan production manager Kevin McKay.

This week, the fireless McKay takes note of Tim O'Brien's The Things They Carried: "It's a collection of short stories and anecdotes about growing up in the American heartland and going off to Vietnam." Coming from someone who volunteered for five tours of duty in 'Nam, this is high praise indeed.

British Columbia's Dancecorps is presenting two works by its co-artistic director Harvey Meller this evening at 8:30 p.m. in the National Arts Centre Theatre. Tickets are $15 and $20.

Wednesday, February 2

Not only is it Groundhog Day, but the Waltons are at the Penguin this evening. Oh, could this be my life?

John Hiatt is at the Centrepointe Theatre tonight at 8 p.m. Tickets are $27.50, but we're hoping this includes a catered seafood buffet.

On In A Mellow Tone (CKCU 93.1 FM at 9 p.m.), jazz great Stan Getz is profiled

by Bill Hartnett.

Tonight on TV Ontario at 10:30 p.m. is Part Four of The Future, a 12-part series focusing on the implications of the collision between art and technology. Topics covered on the show range from computerized photo manipulation technology to the new field of interactive and participatory art. It's worth a look.

Thursday, February 3

Stay home. Study. Enjoy a nice Peanut Butter and Jam Rollie™.

Or, as always, the Hammerheads are playing at the Pit.

Friday, February 4

If you're tired of tuition hikes and are in the mood for some good, old-time student protest stuff, head on down to the Unicentre this afternoon for 12 hours of music and demonstration. Halt the Hike gets underway at noon in Rooster's with Heather Farrow, Fear and Loathing (two guys from the Freeway Band) and Mark Wilson and the Heavy Brothers.

There'll be speakers and music there until 3 p.m., when you can assemble in Porter Hall to march to the admin building where there'll hopefully be much civil disobedience.

But wait, there's more! Go to Porter Hall at 6 p.m. for a free concert, featuring DJs, speakers and the soothing sounds of Jerry-built, Belfast Cowboys, Electric Embryo, Fish Tales and headliners Black Triangle.

With Help From Kaleem W. Khan

If you have an event you want to appear in this handy calendar, you can drop your announcement off at The Charlatan, Room 531 Unicentre during regular business hours or you can fax us at 788-4051. Announcements must be in by the Friday before publication.

The NAC Presents

Variété

By MAURICIO KAGEL
with musicians and circus artists

It's a concert like you've never seen before!

Linda Bouchard, conductor
Michel G. Barette, director

Jan. 28, 20:30 Jan. 29, 14:00 20:30 NAC Theatre
Students with I.D. and children 12 and under from $10.00

Tickets from $15

NATIONAL ARTS CENTRE
CENTRE NATIONAL DES ARTS

Box Office opens at noon daily
(Sundays of noon when a performance is scheduled)

755-1111
Open at 8:30 daily
(Sundays at 11:00)

Correction

Despite what we said last week ("... and this one isn't worth your time either"), the Kama Sutra is actually an Indian love manual. The Charlatan apologizes to the people of India for any inconvenience this may have caused.

APPLE SADDLERY

Ottawa's Western Boot Superstore

CANADA'S LARGEST SELECTION

TOP QUALITY

LOWEST PRICES
GUARANTEED

1875 INNES (Just East of 417)

Tues - Fri: 12-8 Sat: 10-6 744-4040

WESTERN APPAREL & ACCESSORIES

t h e
CHARLATAN

CARLETON'S INDEPENDENT STUDENT NEWSPAPER

VOLUME 23

ISSUE 21

FEBRUARY 3

1994

WHERE CAN YOU AND YOUR DATE EAT A GREAT DINNER...FOR LESS THAN $90!!!

JANUARY COUPON

Full Course Dinner
only
.99¢
(max. value $13.50)
order any full course dinner at reg. price & receive a second dinner of equal or lesser value for 99¢
Not valid with any other offer. P.S.T. & G.S.T. extra (coupon expires Jan. 31, 1994)

2446 Bank at Hunt club
(Tongate Plaza)
736-6677
Reservations & Banquet Facilities Available

The NOODLE WORKS

Ottawa South's
Finest Sunday
Brunch 10:30-2:30

FULL 3 COURSE DINNER - Soup or Salad, Fresh Baked San Francisco Sourdough Bread, Entree Selection, Spumoni Ice Cream, Coffee or Tea

FEBRUARY COUPON

Full Course Dinner
only
.99¢
(max. value $13.50)
order any full course dinner at reg. price & receive a second dinner of equal or lesser value for 99¢
Not valid with any other offer. P.S.T. & G.S.T. extra (coupon valid from Feb. 1 - Feb. 28, 1994)

HOMEMADE PASTA DISHES - VEAL - CHICKEN

"NOBODY PARTIES LIKE THE IRISH"

Heart & Crown

IRISH PUB & RESTAURANT
NO COVER 10¢ WINGS 15¢ SHRIMP
IMPORTED DRAFTS
LARGE PATIO DAILY SPECIALS
DART BOARDS SATELLITE TV
LIVE "IRISH" ENTERTAINMENT
EVERY WED., THURS., FRI. AND SAT. 9 P.M.

GOOD FUN GOOD FOOD GREAT BEER
67 CLARENCE STREET, BYWARD, MARKET, 562-0674

Est. 1977

DARLENE SCOLARIDES

Hair Shops...

SHAMPOO CUT & STYLE
$12
SPECIAL Requests pay extra

PERMS
$45
SPECIAL Requests pay extra

...For men and women

232-1763

248 Bank Street
BETWEEN LISGAR & COOPER • PARKING ON COOPER

SALOON

Ottawa's Only
Authentic
Western Saloon

Beverage
Specials

Sundays - Wednesdays
Draught $1.50

TONIGHT
Thurs. Feb. 3
"Lucky Ron"

No Cover

Mondays
are Movie Nights
9 pm
Come see us down
in the Byward Market
105 Murray St.
241-2233

Boulet Boots

starting at $169.00

The Lowest Prices
Guaranteed!
Convenient Location
in the Byward Market
99 Clarence St.
562-1320

HOME OF THE SOUTH END BLUES

TUCSON ROADHOUSE

Feb. 4/5
Mel Brown and the Homewreckers
COMING UP
Feb. 11/12
Spirit Brothers
from Montreal

2440 Bank Street (Bank at Huntclub) Ottawa
For Entertainment information call 738-7508

Feb. 4/5
Frank Cosentino
Screaming Guitar Blues
COMING UP
Feb. 11/12
Paul James

1541 Metivale Road, Ottawa
For Entertainment Information call 228-6666

GRAND CENTRAL

"The Mother of All Pizzas"

141 George St. 241-2727

SATURDAY & SUNDAY
Brunch 10AM to 3PM
Over 100 items to choose from $7.99
+taxes

introducing
STEAK

Dinner
$5.99
+taxes

EVENTS
Wed February 2nd: Alannah Myles & Carl Dixon
Thurs. Feb 3rd: The Odds & Rymes with Orange
Thurs Feb 17th: Rail T.C. & Most
Rock for the Ottawa Food Bank
Wed. March 2nd: TROOPER
Wed. March 16th: Colin James
Thurs. March 17th: Spirit of the West

ZAPHOD

BEEBLEBROX
AHEAD OF THE HERD

THURS. FEB. 3 (9PM) $1
RESIN SCRAPER & SPINY ANTEATERS

FRI. FEB. 4 (9PM) $6
TOASTED WESTERNS

SAT. FEB. 5 (9PM) $5
CKCU PRESENTS
BMG RECORDING ARTISTS
+ Peace Colony

COMING SOON
FEB. 10 CLAYMOUTH/FINGER
FEB. 11 HEADSTONES/MORGANFIELDS
FEB. 12 EUGENE'S 10TH ANNIVERSARY PARTY
FEB. 16 JUNKHOUSE/ZEN BUGALLOW

BINGO JET INTERNATIONAL
8 PM TUESDAYS

MUSIC + BEVERAGES + ADVENTURE
27 YORK ST.

Oh, those wacky CUSA hacks

by Charlatan Election Team Staff

The CUSA election race is now in full swing and thousands of faces are trying to win your vote. To help sort through the schmoozing and campaigning, The Charlatan has assembled profiles of the candidates for president and finance commissioner.

PRESIDENT — LLOYD BARRY

Lloyd Barry could not be reached for comment by Wednesday at 7 p.m. (Where are you Lloyd? If you exist, give us a call. - ed.)

PRESIDENT — BRENDA KENNEDY

by Michael Mainville

Brenda Kennedy is co-ordinator of the Foot Patrol and a fourth-year anthropology student. She served as co-chair of the CUSA women's issues committee in 1991-92 and chair in 1992-93.

Kennedy says she hopes to open a student-run food bank on campus, which would be funded by the Ottawa Food Bank.

Kennedy says she is wary of corporate sponsorship on campus and that while it is desirable in some cases, "you have to be careful with the type of corporations," such as those with records of environmental problems.

Kennedy says she is also concerned about the perks available to CUSA executives. These include free parking, unlimited coffee, tea or hot chocolate at Rooster's and gold CUSA rings.

"I think it really presents a bad face to students when they have to see the executive prancing around with their $700 CUSA rings or whatever they cost," says Kennedy. (According to CUSA finance commissioner René Faucher, the rings cost $273 each.)

Kennedy says her main goal is "to give a voice back to students." She says a lot of students don't feel CUSA is a voice for their concerns, such as poor housing, high tuition, safety on campus, and poor OC Transpo service.

PRESIDENT — TODD MCALLISTER

by Matt Skinner

"CUSA has to take its head out of the sand and start looking for corporate sponsorship," says Todd McAllister, who is running for CUSA president and the university's board of governors.

McAllister, a second-year political science student, says corporate sponsorship and corporate donations are "the wave of the future."

He says he thinks a new Unicentre, owned by CUSA, could be built with the help of corporate sponsors. Restaurant and merchandise franchises would generate enough revenue to help the operation and maintenance of such a centre, he says.

McAllister says he would have no problems with the new CUSA union, but thinks it may have been forced on the employees.

McAllister, who is also running for the board of governors, says he thinks it would be "ludicrous" for someone to run for president and not for the board.

PRESIDENT — ELAINE SILVER

by Brent Dowdall

Elaine Silver says she is running for president for the third time because she thinks "change has not been affected."

Silver, president of the debating society and an undergraduate board of governors representative, says she plans to slash the president's honorarium from $18,000 to $10,000 and put that money back into services, clubs and societies.

"Our primary goal should be promoting student activity through clubs and societies and services," she says.

Silver says she plans to start a food bank and a sexual assault support centre on campus. She also says she plans to put aside money for a Unicentre expansion. "It's proposed and is waiting to happen," she says.

Silver says she has "made things happen on campus," such as organizing an open forum between students and senior administrators in November and helping to make the debating society "thriving."

She says she wants to find new sources of revenue, such as corporate sponsorship, to keep tuition fees down to an increase no more than the rate of inflation, which is about two per cent. Silver is also running for re-election to the board.

PRESIDENT — RICHARD STANTON

by Mano Carlucci

Carleton University should attract more corporate investment to help reduce the cost of education, says Richard Stanton, a presidential candidate who's also running for the board of governors.

The former president of the Rideau River Residence Association says he will start an internship program with local businesses so university students can gain work experience.

Stanton says he's in favor of improving campus safety with more lighting, safety phones and more use of the department of university safety's courtesy van by letting the Foot Patrol operate it.

"I just want to keep them (the university) focused on it and keep going in that direction."

Stanton says he will treat CUSA's new employee union fairly.

"I'd like to keep it as civil as possible, yet cutting the best deal for the association. We can't necessarily offer to the union what we don't have the resources for."

Stanton says he's in favor of a plan to have a light rail system run through campus.

Stanton says it is vital for the CUSA president to put well-organized pressure on the board of governors.

"We need more of a voice on BOG. Two representatives there isn't enough," says Stanton. He says students have to properly inform BOG members of their concerns and then provide alternative approaches to problems.

FINANCE COMMISSIONER — ROB JAMIESON

by Brent Dowdall

Rob Jamieson says he doesn't have any major projects he wants to enact as finance commissioner, but wants to improve the current services run by CUSA.

Jamieson, this year's vice-president internal, says he has looked at CUSA's budgets since 1987. He says the high rent charges paid by CUSA to the university administration have been hurting the association's ability to make money and provide services.

Jamieson says he will ask council and if it wants to spend money, between $5,000 and $7,000, on business consultants to advise CUSA on how to improve the association's business operations.

He says he'd like to get more bulk foods in the Unicentre store, and open a food bank if space can be found for it.

He adds that he wouldn't want to bring in too many new businesses. He gives the example of York University, which he says has a mall which has "been a bust" financially.

He says corporate sponsorship of CUSA events such as orientation is good, but wouldn't want it "on a day-to-day basis."

FINANCE COMMISSIONER — ROBERT KISIELEWSKI

by Brent Dowdall

Robert Kisielewski withdrew his name three days into the campaign on Feb. 2 because he says the campaign spending has gone out of control and can't stand how "childish" this race has been.

"Other candidates and people affiliated with other candidates are pulling down posters," says Kisielewski. "That shouldn't happen in a university environment and especially with people who are trying to represent the student body," he says.

Kisielewski estimates that it would cost $1,000 to run a competitive campaign. "The expense is ridiculous. It's three days into the race and I've already spent $350 on posters."

"This school is so apathetic that people vote on the amount of posters, and the design of posters and quality of posters."

FINANCE COMMISSIONER — TREVOR MULZER

by Brent Dowdall

Trevor Mulzer says he wants students to get more value for their CUSA dollars. The finance commissioner candidate says he "is dedicated to a zero fee increase."

Mulzer, a former vice-president of the Rideau River Residence Association and fourth-year commerce student, says Unicentre expansion is something he's interested in, but only if the price is right. "It (Unicentre expansion) would be nice, but not at the expense of raising student fees," he says.

Mulzer says CUSA has to make the services it provides work better, by evaluating how the services are being used, how effective they are and by doing a study of the people that use them. He also says there has to be better promotion of the services through pamphlets and better signs.

FINANCE COMMISSIONER — WENDY STEWART

by Andra Wiebe

Wendy Stewart, a third-year economics major, says she took three and a half years off after high school, which provided her with work experience that would help her as finance commissioner.

She says her experience includes managing a bar and helping to finance two small companies.

Stewart was CUSA's financial review committee chair for the summer and fall/winter terms. The committee reviewed the year's budget during the summer.

Stewart says she would like to streamline the finances by buying office supplies in bulk, rather than having employees buy them individually.

Stewart says she would like to see CUSA more financially self-sufficient to reduce student fees. She supports building a new Unicentre which would be owned by CUSA instead of administration, and would like to see businesses, such as a grocery store, on campus. □

Man assaults woman on OC Transpo bus

by Charlatan Staff

A Carleton student was assaulted by a man on a Route 7 bus on her way to campus around 2 p.m. on Thursday, Jan. 27.

The woman was standing in the aisle of the full bus when a man began rubbing himself against her, according to an orange safety poster issued by the university. She tried pushing him away, but the man persisted.

The man began rubbing himself against another woman after the first woman found a free seat. He got off at the Dunton Tower bus stop.

According to the description of the man on the poster, he has a dark complexion, thin build and is about five foot five and 140 pounds. He has dark hair, a scraggly beard and was wearing a long dark coat, bright yellow shirt and a checkered hat.

Len Boudreault, assistant director of Carleton's department of university safety, says he's not sure why no one else on the crowded bus intervened in the situation. "Either no one saw it, or no one decided to take any action," he says.

Boudreault says the first woman the man rubbed himself against came to the department along with a witness.

He says the incident is "under active investigation" by the Ottawa Police. □

on the cover

PHOTO BY ANDRÉ BELLEFLEUR

Blur? No, it's Me, Mom and Morgentaler.

arts	19
classifieds	18
feature	12
national	7
news	3
opinion	11
sports	15
index

The Charlatan rates CUSA politicians

by Brent Dowdall and Mike Peters Charlatan CUSA Staff

Elect me! Elect me!
That's a familiar sound ringing throughout the hallowed halls of Carleton this week as the CUSA election gets under way.

Campaigning officially started Jan. 31 and voting takes place Feb. 8-10.

And some of those councillors who were elected last year are begging for votes again.

So, The Charlatan has prepared a little guide to what people have done and how they've done it in that theatre of the mind (or the absurd): council meetings.

This isn't an endorsement or rejection of anyone. It's just one person's sense of what your representatives who are running again have done this year on council.

Todd McAllister is the only arts representative running for president. He's been all over the map this year ideologically and slides back and forth between the right and left wings of council. He opposed a fee increase for the Canadian Federation of Students in a referendum last fall but he has also supported most students' requests for conference funds.

Vice-president internal Rob Jamieson is the only councillor running for finance commissioner. Cabinet solidarity has been Jamieson's forte this year — he and CUSA President Lucy Watson have been like two executive peas in a pod on everything from supporting the Canadian Federation of Students' feehike to going behind closed doors at meetings.

Councillors running again in arts and social sciences:

Ryan Butt: Butt is a diligent, relatively harmless councillor who regularly attends CUSA council. He doesn't say or do many dumb things, but he doesn't stand out in the crowd either.

Christian Dallaire: Newly elected in November's byelection, Dallaire hasn't said much at his first three meetings and is still trying to become more familiar with the ebb and flow of CUSA council.

John Edwards: Much unloved by the executive and some other councillors, Edwards can sometimes take his self-appointed role as executive opposition too seriously. He has done silly things that don't prove anything (like trying to read the entire 28-page decision of the Ontario Labor Relations Board at a Nov. 16 council meeting). But he provides good entertainment and he's kept the executive on its toes with his constant badgering against executive perks and CFS.

Tom Golem: Golem isn't aligned with anyone on council. He doesn't take on the executive too much (perhaps because he wants to be one someday), but isn't that cosy with them either. He's usually the one proposing amendments to try to bridge differences between councillors on motions. He's either a great conciliator or someone who can't make up his mind.

Bryan Jones: Not a vocal councillor, Jones attends most meetings as a warm body for quorum. When pressed, Jones usually comes down on the side of minding CUSA's money closely on items like conference requests.

In architecture, Sheldon Baker has been acclaimed. Baker is probably the most pro-executive councillor of them all. He abstained on impeaching an arts rep who hadn't made a meeting all year in September because he said stringent attendance requirements would make it difficult for busy architecture students to make meetings. He's made every meeting.

In commerce, Brian Cormier has been acclaimed. He was just elected in November and hasn't stood out at council yet.

Journalism students will have to wait until a bye-election in the fall for an elected representative. Fourth-year journalism student Peter Nogalo, the only student to hand in a nomination form, was disqualified by Elections Carleton after it was discovered that his nomination form contained two unsuitable signatures.

Nogalo says one signature was from a student that did not belong to the school of journalism. The other student signature had an incorrect student number.

There were no nominations for science, computer science, industrial design or for a special student seat.

James Rilett, chief electoral officer for Elections Carleton, says interim representatives will be appointed by CUSA following the election.

The byelection for a journalism representative and other vacant positions will take place next fall.

by Mike Peters
Charlatan Staff

The Charlatan has compiled a handy clip 'n' save chart. We asked the candidates running for CUSA council eight questions.

LEANING: Where are you on the political spectrum?

AFFILIATION: Are you affiliated with any political party?

FRAT/SOR: Do you belong to a fraternity or sorority?

OPEN DOOR: Do you support Carleton's open admissions policy?

UNION: Do you support the newly-formed CUSA employees' union?

FEES: Do you support introducing user fees for CUSA and administration services?

INVESTMENT: Are you in favor of corporate investment on campus?

SPONSORSHIP: Do you support corporate sponsorship of CUSA events?

Candidate

Candidate	Leaning	Affiliation	Frat/Sor.	Open Door	Union	Fees	Investment	Sponsorship
Jabril Abdulle	Left-centre	None	No	Yes	Yes	No	No	Depends
Michael Barbour
Colin Betts	Left	Liberal	No	Yes	No	Yes	Yes	Yes
Ryan Butt
Christian Dallaire	Centre	Liberal	No	Yes	Yes	No	Yes	Yes
Judy Dominick	Centre	None	No	Yes	Yes	No	Yes	No
John Edwards	Centre-right	Liberal	No	Yes	No	Yes	Yes	Yes
Loretto Estay	N/C	N/C	No	N/C	N/C	No	Yes	Yes
Tom Golem	Centre	No	Yes	Yes	Yes	No	No	Depends
Stephen Huycke
Heather Jenkins	Centre	PC	No	Yes	Yes	Yes	Yes	Yes
Bryan Jones	Centre-right	No	Yes	Yes	No	No	Yes	Yes
Kevin Lacey	Centre	PC	No	Yes	Yes	Yes	Yes	Yes
Ryan Lam	Centre	None	No	N/C	N/C	Yes	Yes	Yes
Pierre Leduc	Centre-right	N/C	No	Yes	Yes	No	Yes	Yes
Travis Lindgren	Depends	No	No	Und.	No	No	Yes	Yes
David MacDonald
Corey Mulvihill
Scott Paré	Centre	No	No	Yes	No	No	Yes	Yes
Jon Postner	Right	PC	No	Yes	Und.	No	Yes	Yes
Ian Reay	Centre	None	No	Yes	No	No	Yes	Yes
Wendy Reid	Centre	None	No	Yes	No	No	Yes	Yes
John Wayne Ross
Chris Schinurr	Right	PC	No	Und.	Und.	No	Yes	Yes
Perry Simpson	None	None	No	Yes	Yes	No	Yes	Yes
Renée Twaddle	Centre-left *	None	No	Yes	Yes	No	Und.	Und.
Shaun Vardon	Centre	None	No	Yes	Yes	No	No	Und.
Sandy Wakeling	None	None	No	Yes	Yes	No	Yes	Yes
Ryan Ward	Right-centre	Liberal	No	Yes	No	No	Yes	Depends

*Twaddle gave this response, but also told a Charlatan reporter anyone who knows her knows that she is "totally left wing", but she doesn't want to "scare off voters."

N/C = no comment

Und. = undecided

Students rally against hikes at BOG meeting

by Franco D'Orazio
Charlatan Staff

Armed with balloons and orange placards, 40 students marched through the tunnels to a board of governors meeting Jan. 26 to protest a potential increase in tuition fees.

Their battle cries of "No more fee hikes" and "Hell, no, we won't go," reverberated through the underground passages and piqued the curiosity of several university administrators as the protestors entered the administration building. The administrators tried to ignore the protestors after they discovered what all the commotion was about.

But the university's governors could not ignore the students once they reached the meeting. Some governors seemed perplexed at the sight of students standing in front of the coffee machine and drinking all of the canned juices.

During the meeting, the governors reworded and tabled a motion presented by Lucy Watson, president of the Carleton University Students' Association and also an undergraduate representative on the board.

The motion asked the board to direct Carleton President Robin Farquhar to withdraw his support of the Council of Ontario Universities' tuition fee reform proposal.

The proposal, introduced last July, suggests Ontario universities hike tuition by up to 50 per cent by the 1995-96 school year.

The proposal also suggests that university students get government-sponsored loans to cover the cost of their education. The loan must be repaid after graduation, with a set percentage of the graduate's annual income collected through the income tax system.

Kristine Haselsteiner, CUSA vice-president external, says the program means students will pay more for their education because it allows universities to increase tuition. She also says the interest charges under the loan plan can accumulate over a repayment period of many years.

The motion also called for Watson and Farquhar to "communicate on tuition policy issues which have a direct affect (sic) on the student body."

Many governors were not pleased to be confronted with the motion.

Lloyd Stanford, a governor, pleaded with the students for "a chance to sleep on" the motion, while governor Iris Craig questioned the validity of introducing a motion which had not been passed through a board committee.

Samuel Hughes, chair of the board's nominating committee, told the students he "cannot vote against the interests of this university." Several governors argued they could not vote on the motion because they were unaware of the council's proposal.

But Elaine Silver, the other undergraduate representative on the board, scoffed at this, explaining that the loan reform policy had been discussed in the media. "We're not ignorant," she said.

RALLY cont'd. pg. 5.

THE CANADIAN GUIDE TO Working and Living Overseas

Come and enjoy a lecture by the author, Jean-Marc Huchey

Job Search Strategies
Solid Advice and Encouragement
Profile of 750 Organizations and 230 Publications
Thursday February 10th (12:30 - 1:30)
(question period follows)

Arts Faculty Lounge
Room 2017, Dunton Tower

Sponsored by Counselling and Student Life Services

For more information contact Gifty Serbeh, International Student Advisor at 788-6602

Students changing The Peppermill's faces

by Caron Watt
Charlatan Staff

There may be a change of atmosphere in the Unicentre's Peppermill Cafeteria by next September, says Carleton's human rights educator.

Jane Keeler says a casual glance at the Peppermill's "warehouse ambience" reveals a sea of 15 white faces, only two of which are women, and the majority are American. Mahatma Ghandi is the only non-white face on the walls.

"I know there were a number of people talking about (the lack of diversity), especially when the pictures were first put up," says Keeler, who is one of the judges in a contest designed to put some fresh faces on the cafeteria's walls.

"People started getting uptight about the pictures" about one year after the Peppermill was re-decorated in the fall of 1991, says James Johnston, assistant director of food services and liquor operations at the department of housing and food services.

The contest opened to students, staff and faculty Jan. 28 and runs until Feb. 18. The winners will be announced March 1.

"What we're hoping is that people will take into account a better mix, images that represent where we are, represent who we are, who's eating there," says Keeler. "I certainly would like to see more Canadians," she says.

However, some Carleton students in the Peppermill didn't notice the lack of Canadian or female faces. "It really doesn't bother me at all who's up there," said J.P. Torunski, a first-year computer science student. "I don't come here for the pictures."

The department of housing and food services offered a vacant space on the wall to the Centre for Aboriginal Education, Research and Culture last January to celebrate the centre's opening, says

Madeleine Dion Stout, director of the centre.

She says she proposed Chief Dan George and aboriginal artist Buffy Sainte-Marie as alternatives.

Johnston says he had a letter "hand-delivered" to Sainte-Marie, asking for a photo to put up in the Peppermill, but he couldn't get a picture which would look good after it was enlarged to poster size.

Finding posters of Canadians may be difficult, says Keeler, because "the companies are very American-dominated."

Rob Jamieson, vice-president internal of the Carleton University Students' Association, is also judging the contest. He says he thinks the contest will reflect what students want.

"When (the lack of diversity) was brought to my attention it made me think about it and I said 'Shit, you're right,'" he says. "If students would rather see (other) people up there, then let's put them up there."

But one Peppermill customer isn't sure Canadian culture will be appreciated on the walls. "If they put up only Canadians, no one would know who the fuck they are," says Sonja Clark, a second-year psychology major.

Some suggestions from an informal poll of students in the Peppermill included Wayne Gretzky, Margaret Atwood, Laura Secord and Mother Theresa.

Contest forms are available at the CUSA office in the Unicentre and the Peppermill, and can be submitted to any of the cashiers, says Keeler.

There will be three prizes, each including $75 cash, meal certificates and a Carleton mug.

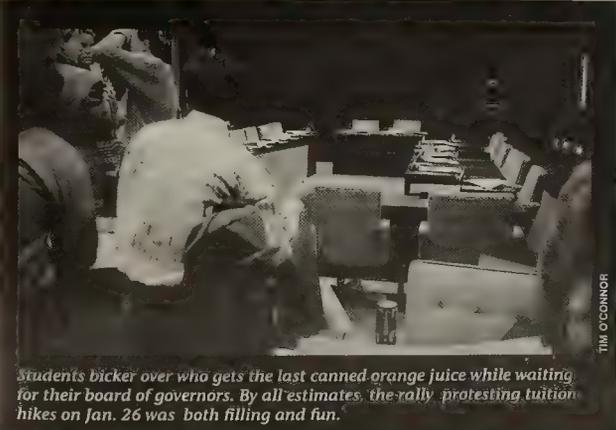

Keeler says the judges will use broad criteria to choose the winners. "We're looking for variety, more representativeness... it's pretty wide open," she says.

She says she expects an increase in female, minority and Canadian faces on the cafeteria walls. "Almost anything will be an improvement," says Dion Stout.

Housing and food services is footing the bill for the new decor. Between $1,000 and $2,000 has been set aside for the new posters, says Johnston. □

ANDRÉ BELLEFLEUR

TIM O'CONNOR

Students bicker over who gets the last canned orange juice while waiting for their board of governors. By all estimates, the rally protesting tuition hikes on Jan. 26 was both filling and fun.

RALLY cont'd from pg. 4.

After much debate, the governors amended Watson's motion, removing all reference to the council's proposal and replacing it with one which will "direct the finance committee to give considerable way to the concerns expressed by the students" present at the meeting.

Ivan Fellegi, the governor who proposed the amendment, told the visiting students that "there are a variety of pressures on the university which need to be balanced."

The board voted to refer the motion to its finance committee, which will meet in a closed session on March 16. It will decide if the board should consider the motion.

Students at the meeting told the governors they were opposed to the possibility of the board raising tuition fees. Several student organizations expect the Ontario government to announce some time in the upcoming weeks large increases in the ceiling it sets for university tuition fees. The Canadian Federation of Students estimates the increase will be between 10 and 20 per cent.

Carleton's board of governors will be allowed to raise tuition up to the amount legislated by the province, but the university is not required to follow the province's guideline.

Tuition fees at Carleton have risen 23 per cent over the past three years.

"Tuition fees are going through the roof," said Gary Baines, who released the balloons he was holding to illustrate his point.

At the meeting, Richard Stanton pleaded with the governors not to raise tuition fees any higher. Stanton, who is working on his second degree, is running for both CUSA president and undergraduate board rep in the upcoming CUSA elections.

"Carleton means a lot to me," he said. "Please do not squeeze us out. Please do not sacrifice us just to make ends meet. You have to find another alternative," he told the governors.

Several students were disappointed by the board's actions.

"The board has shirked its responsibilities to the students," said Theresa Cowan, director of services for CUSA. Cowan, who helped organize the rally, described the board's response as "a brush-off."

Watson described the governors as "stubborn." She said the board was "unable to take a stand on anything. But we'll have something to say when increases in tuition fees are announced."

Several governors, including Stanford and Fellegi, said they sympathized with the students. But many said nothing, and after the protestors left the meeting, a few got out of their seats and made a break for the coffee machine. □

With files from Bartley Kives

APPLE SADDLERY
The Largest Western Boot Store in Canada.
INNES ROAD JUST EAST OF THE 417 (NEAR THE PRICE CLUB)

The Charlatan in Co-operation with these local merchants
PRESENTS

9 FABULOUS VACATION GETAWAYS

YOU PICK YOUR DESTINATION

ATLANTIC BEACH

Sheraton Atlantic Beach Resort
4 Days / 3 Nights

LAKE PLACID

Lake Placid Hilton
3 Days / 2 Nights

HILTON HEAD ISLAND

Holiday Inn
4 Days / 3 Nights

Atlantis Beauty Spa

"The place for honouring the self"

Gift Certificate For

"A DAY AT THE SPA"

• Hydrotherapy • Swedish Massage • Facial • Manicure
• Pedicure • Make-up Application • Light Lunch
• Champagne (optional) • Shampoo/Blow Dry

• Esthetics • Ear & Nose Piercing • Waxing • Tanning
• Hair Extensions & Braiding • Gift Certificates For All Services

• HAIR STYLING

730-8500

1183 Bank St. (at Grove Ave.) Ample Free Parking

Bring in this ad &
receive 10% off any service
over $25

Dance Floor
D.J. Every Night

MONDAYS
Men's Nite

Half Price Pitchers
Trip for 2 Giveaway!!
FREE POOL Noon 'till nine

3 Big Screens
4 TVs & Satellite

THURSDAYS
Ladies' Nite

Complimentary Champagne
Trip for 2 Giveaway!!
FREE POOL Noon 'till ten

96 George St. 562-0433

Today, I'm gonna tell her I love her a dozen times

567-2600

Glebe
831 Bank St.
5th Ave. Court

729-7878

Hampton Park Plaza
Carling and Kirkwood

Remember Valentine's Day is February 14

Bring this coupon in before February 11 and receive a 10% discount

*Wet & Wild
Spas*

"Ottawa's Largest Spa Rental Company"

Party Tub Rentals & Spas

Tanning, Massage Therapy & Hot Tubbing

417 Rideau Street
Ottawa, Ontario
K1N 5Y9

(613) 521-9453
(613) 789-4114

Call For Reservations

Bring in this ad for 10 1/2 hr. sessions - $40.00

GRAND CENTRAL

Thursday, February 3

The ODDS &

RHYMES WITH ORANGE

141 George St. 241-2727

Oliver's

Thursday Nights

Party Nights
Pitcher Specials
Promo-Prize
Giveaways Weekly

Saturday Nights

The Best in Live Bands
Coming Soon..
WILD T & THE SPIRIT
Saturday, February 12th
an all-ages event

FREE SUNSHINE

A TOUCH OF SUN

Tanning Studios

2 Free Sessions

(an $18.00 value) with the purchase of 2 suntan sessions at regular prices. 1 per customer. Offer expires March 20, 1994.

723-0555

888 Meadowlands Dr.

236-0222

300 Slater St.

CALL US. IT'S A WARM IDEA.

244 Elgin Street • Ottawa • K2P 1L9 • (613) 238-BOOT (2668)

Bring in this ad and receive a 10% discount on any purchase.

MYERS

SINCE 1945

Take a Test Drive at MYERS and be eligible to WIN one of two Vacation Packages!

Bring in This Ad and Enter to WIN!

CHECK OUT
GM'S
$750.00
CASH BACK
GRAD
PROGRAM!

Ask Mike or any one of our
Sales Consultants about our
Low Monthly Lease Payments
on CAVALIERS or GEOs!

Draw to take place March 14/94

Mike Smith
Class of 91
Sales Consultant

MYERS CHEV • OLDS • CADILLAC 1200 Baseline at Merivale

225-1260

EACH BUSINESS ON THIS PAGE WILL BE GIVING AWAY A FREE TRIP.

Trip packages include deluxe accommodations for two adults, complimentary first morning breakfast and daily green fees for two adults when in season. Children occupying the same room as their parents stay free. Transportation is not included. All trips are fully transferable but must be used on or before February 28, 1995. To be eligible fill out an entry ballot at one of the participating merchants on or before Tuesday March 22, 1994. The winning entries will have their names published in the Thursday March 24, 1994 edition of The Charlatan. Staff members and contributors to The Charlatan for the 1993/1994 publishing year are not eligible for this promotion.

U of O prof reprimanded for remarks

by Josée Bellemare
Charlatan Staff

A University of Ottawa professor has been warned not to express controversial opinions in his class after an investigation into remarks he made last month.

A three-week investigation of the teaching practices of sociology professor Paul Lamy followed a complaint by Joel Duff, a second-year sociology student at U of O, that Lamy made homophobic remarks in class.

Duff wrote a letter to the dean of the faculty of social sciences claiming Lamy said, "You call them bisexuals, I call them psychopaths," during a lecture Jan. 4.

The dean, Henry Edwards, reprimanded Lamy in a statement following the investigation released Jan. 28.

"I have taken measures provided for in the collective agreement by sending Professor Lamy a letter explicitly directing him to refrain from expressing non-academic personal opinions which are likely to have counterproductive effects on the students," said Edwards in a press release.

If Lamy does not comply with the warning, the collective agreement between the university and its faculty allows the dean to recommend the suspension or dismissal of the professor.

"I'm a very controversial person," Lamy says. "But that doesn't mean I have malice."

Lamy says he will stop injecting opinion into his lectures, but doesn't see the justice of having his personal views restricted to his private life.

"I have my freedom from the Charter of Rights and Freedoms and I have the freedom to say what I want," he says.

Lamy says it's not possible for a professor to be sensitive to every point of view and that his remarks about bisexuals were oversimplified.

"I'm a very controversial person," he says. "But that doesn't mean I have malice."

Some of the students who complained about Lamy seemed satisfied about the investigation's outcome.

Meredith Lilly, a first-year sociology student in Lamy's class, says she is pleased with the decision restricting his personal opinions in class.

"All we wanted was unfounded opinions to be left out of the classroom," she says. "I do not want to impose on Professor Lamy's academic freedom, provided that opinions that aren't backed by valid studies are left out of the classroom."

"I think the dean has acted effectively," agrees Duff.

Lamy says the restrictions imposed upon professors speaking about their personal views in a classroom is just a "passing fad."

"Things will change," he says. "What you see now is an extreme."

Lamy says he thinks the rules at universities about revealing personal bias are becoming ridiculous compared to 10 or 15 years ago. He says he's afraid that students "can take a free shot" at professors and not get charged for making false accusations.

But Duff says he thinks people have neglected the main issue at stake by focusing on academic freedom. He says the problem is a lack of valid evidence behind Lamy's views.

"I respect Lamy's right to freedom of speech, but I don't respect his right to spread unfounded intolerance," he says.

Daiva Stasiulis, a Carleton sociology professor, says she finds Lamy's remarks offensive and inappropriate.

"It's not possible to express every point of view on every subject," she says, "(but) what is possible and necessary to do is to ensure that one does not express views that are hurtful to any social group whether defined by sexuality, race, gender, or any other grounds."

Stasiulis says sociology professors are, like everyone else, covered under the Charter and Rights and Freedoms. But she says they also have to respect human rights legislation and provisions in the Criminal Code which pertain to hatred against minorities.

"I believe that the statements he has made are irresponsible in the sense that he is expressing his own personal prejudices against... bisexuals," she says.

"I do not see any connection between the statements he had made which express these prejudices and legitimate debates in sociology pertaining to sexuality, family and state entitlements." □

"All we wanted was unfounded opinions to be left out of the classroom," says Lilly.

Int'l students under the gun at U of Calgary

by Siobhán Thomas
The Gauntlet, University of Calgary

CALGARY — A University of Calgary discussion paper has gained serious attention after suggesting foreign students should pay 100 per cent of their education at the university.

The paper was released in early January by associate vice-president academic Titus Mathews as part of an effort to come up with unique ideas for combating funding cuts from the provincial government.

It suggests charging international students about $10,000 per year instead of the current $4,128. This would cover all direct, indirect and overhead costs of the students' education.

"It's one of the many options we're looking at to try and generate increased revenue," says Murray Fraser, the university's president. "The university benefits by the presence of foreign students, but we also have to look at imaginative ways to increase revenue generation and that's why we're looking at full cost recovery for international students as a possibility."

Glynn Hunter, the U of C's international student advisor, says if implemented, such a proposal could dramatically affect the already shrinking foreign student population.

"Three years ago we had a high of about 1,140 international students. Now, we're down to between 850 and 900," says Hunter.

Hunter says a large hike in tuition without any consideration of support for international students would lead to a further erosion of those numbers.

Naheed Nenshi, student council president of the U of C, agrees.

"You have a policy which is talking about how important international students are and then you say you want to charge them full cost. What color is the sky of the planet of the people who are writing this?"

Nenshi says she doubts foreign students would be attracted to the university if fees increased drastically.

"Let's be perfectly honest here. If you could spend the same amount of money to go to the U of C or McGill or a private institution in the States — a Georgetown or Harvard or Yale — what are you going to choose?" □

Co-op j-school program created

by Tonya Zelinsky
Charlatan Staff

A new program offered by the University of Waterloo and Conestoga College aims to create a "different kind of journalist," says Robin Banks, the university's vice-president academic.

Conestoga College, a community college in Kitchener, Ont., has created a program in co-operation with the University of Waterloo. The program is meant to give Waterloo students the opportunity to receive a college diploma in journalism while studying for a separate undergraduate degree. The new program will be open to those students who have completed their second year at Waterloo and are in good academic standing.

Banks says students who take the new journalism program at Conestoga will be students with a background in a subject already. This will give them the advantage of applying their knowledge to the journalism program.

For several years, Conestoga has offered its own 80-week diploma program in journalism and will continue to do so once the co-operative program is implemented.

Only 15 students from Waterloo will be admitted into the new joint program, which will begin in September 1995.

A Waterloo student can complete a journalism diploma along with their undergraduate degree in only one year more than their degree would normally take, says Banks.

Peter Johansen, director of Carleton's school of journalism, says he doesn't believe any type of co-operative program between Waterloo and Conestoga could harm a student. Rather, it would give the student more of an advantage.

"I certainly applaud any initiative to create more experience for journalism students. In general, journalism editors always look for more course background."

Peter Desbarats, dean of the University of Western Ontario graduate school of journalism, has "mixed feelings" about the Waterloo-Conestoga joint program.

"We think it makes more sense for someone to get a strong education degree, and then concentrate on the graduate level," says Desbarats.

"We'll only know the result when students come out of the (joint) program, (and) when they compete for jobs against those students who come out of a program like Carleton or Western."

HEH, HEH... HEY GUYS!
SO WHERE'S THE SCOOP?

Western attempted a program with Fanshawe College several years ago with regard to their journalism program, but unfortunately nothing came of it, says Desbarats.

"It was difficult to see how the two programs could collaborate. We are a graduate program, and they are only a community college. There's a bigger gap that separates graduate programs and community colleges," says Desbarats.

Gary Anandasangaree, director of academics for the Carleton University Students' Association, says he thinks a joint program is a great idea.

"Students coming out of high school don't always know what they want to do and this type of program gives them the opportunity to explore other things," says Anandasangaree. □

Hong Kong agency watches students

by Clayton Wood
Charlatan Staff

Parents in Hong Kong now have a way to keep tabs on their children studying in Canada.

Gradwatch is a new program offered by Fact Finders, a Hong Kong-based detective agency which has just opened its first Canadian office in Vancouver. The program involves the surveillance of students' academic and social activities.

There are more than 12,000 students from Hong Kong studying at post-secondary institutions in Canada, including over 350 students studying at Carleton.

"Parents might say, 'we haven't heard from them in two to three weeks,' or 'we've heard they've been taking drugs, can you check up on them,'" says Fact Finders' director Ken Allen in a telephone interview from his Hong Kong office.

He says Gradwatch is not a spy service, but is meant to let parents know if their children are getting into trouble.

"For example, we might see if the student gets up and goes to university or not, or if he goes to bars at night," says Allen. "We don't use any special equipment. We follow people discreetly."

Some Hong Kong students studying at Carleton don't like the idea of their parents hiring investigators to monitor their activities.

"You want someone to support you, not keep track of you," says Andrew Auyeung, a first-year student at Carleton. "Some parents are pretty conservative. They try to dominate their kids."

He says most parents, however, are fully aware beforehand of the kind of lifestyle awaiting their children in Canada.

Priscilla Chan, also from Hong Kong, isn't too keen on the new service either. She says she enjoys the freedom she has while studying in Canada.

"Back home, they tell me I need to come home early, not to watch too much TV, or that I can't go out with my friends," says Chan.

Still, she says she understands how some parents might worry about their kids getting into trouble. For example, many parents disapprove of their kids going to karaoke bars in Canada, which Chan says are often frequented by members of the Chinese mafia.

Parents who use the Gradwatch service will receive quarterly reports on their children, with prices starting at $300 Cdn a month.

Allen says he draws the line at peering through keyholes or bedroom windows in order to spy on students.

"The old idea of the investigator in the dirty hat and hiding behind dirty curtains is outdated," he says. "We're just trying to provide a different type of service for our clients, within the bounds of the law." □

CFS put off by McMaster

by Michael Mainville
Charlatan Staff

The student council at McMaster University in Hamilton has decided to postpone its decision on whether or not to accept a hike to their annual student fees for the Canadian Federation of Students.

Jason Hunt, McMaster's student council president, says the council decided Jan. 31 to put the matter to a second referendum next year. The school's first CFS referendum, held last Nov. 30 and Dec. 1, asked students for a $4 increase per student to their annual student levy for the CFS. However, student participation did not reach the required 10 per cent necessary for the referendum to be valid.

But Hunt says he feels confident that next time McMaster students will support the CFS.

"I think that the profile of the federation on the McMaster campus has been very high," says Hunt.

All Ontario members of the CFS have been holding referendums to increase the organization's funding. Four more student associations, including the University of Ottawa, will hold their referendums this term.

As well as student council president, Hunt holds a new position as interim chair of the CFS-Ontario. He was elected to replace former chair Emechete Onuoha, who resigned before the end of his normal term at the CFS-O conference Jan. 14-20.

Hunt began his term on Feb. 1 and will continue as the regular chair for the next year. □

Algonquin College invites YOU to a...

SPECIAL INFORMATION EVENING ON FULL-TIME DAY PROGRAMS

Wednesday, February 9, 1994 5:30 - 8:00 pm
Woodroffe Campus Cafeteria
1385 Woodroffe Avenue

Don't miss this exceptional opportunity to:

- ☆ explore over 100 FULL-TIME PROGRAMS offered during the day starting this Fall
- ☆ discuss your career goals and employment opportunities with trained staff
- ☆ obtain information on how to apply and on financial assistance
- ☆ meet with qualified faculty who will advise you on academic studies

And... win one of three prizes to be drawn.

Find out what Algonquin College can do for your career this fall...plan to attend today!

Complete this coupon and bring it to this Special Information Evening to enter our draw for prizes.

Name _____

Address _____

City _____ Postal Code _____

This event and parking are free!

Here are a few examples of full-time day programs to choose from:

New Programs

Occupational Health and Safety
Environmental Technology
Hospitality Administration
Furniture Technician
Facility Planning & Management (Approval Pending)

Post-diploma Programs

Regulatory Law Administration
Festivals/Community Events Management
Dramatic Scriptwriting

Technology and Science Programs

Industrial Engineering Technology
Manufacturing Engineering Technology
Respiratory Therapy
Medical Laboratory Technology
Chemical Technology - Bioengineering

Programs with Co-op options

Business - Information Systems
Computer Engineering Technology
Electronics Engineering Technology

CHARLATAN JAN 94

▶▶▶▶▶
Algonquin WORKS

ALGONQUIN

BAXTER'S

SECOND FLOOR
BAR & GRILL
MONDAYS &
SATURDAYS
PARTY NITES

$250

- WINGS
 - ZUCCHINI
 - NACHOS
 - CAESAR SALAD
 - ESCARGOT
 - ONION RINGS
- 5 PM - CLOSE

TUESDAY NIGHTS
SENATORS
Hockey Ticket GIVE AWAY
Chicken Wing .19¢ ea.

WEDNESDAYS
1/2 PRICE FOOD
5 P.M. - 11 P.M.

THURSDAY NIGHT
"A Carleton Tradition"
Chicken Wings 19¢ ea.

UPCOMING PROMOTIONS
Thursday, February 10
Budweiser Promo
Giveaways, Prizes

1344 Bank Street
(at Riverside)
738-3323

Visiting Bosnian editor recounts turmoil of war

by Bram S. Aaron
Charlatan Staff

On a hill near Sarajevo, a tall monument rests inscribed with the names of Sarajevo citizens who lost their lives in four years during World War II.

In a 21-month period between 1992 and 1993, snipers surrounding the city have killed 10,000 people, many more than the names on the monument in less than half the time.

K e m a l Kursparhic, editor-in-chief of the Sarajevo daily news-paper Oslobodenje (aws-low-bo-JEN-yeh) told about 100 people at Carleton of the killing he has seen at a talk on Jan. 27.

During the summer of 1992, Kursparhic said he witnessed a bombing on a normally quiet residential street near the monument he talked about.

In less than two seconds, an entire balcony and large section of the residential apartment building across the street simply collapsed. The collapse was caused by a single-shell shot from a tank. Many lives were lost in the attack.

Oslobodenje, which means freedom, was founded in 1943 as a voice against fascism during World War II and has received many international awards. It has made history by continuing to publish each day and maintaining its editorial freedom in the war-torn Sarajevo, even after its publishing office was gutted by Serb shelling and three staff members were killed.

Despite the awards and the paper's incredible struggle to keep publishing, Kursparhic said he is most proud of the paper's editorial freedom.

Kursparhic said Oslobodenje is a rare example of Bosnia's ethnic mix before the current wave of nationalism and fighting began. "We have a variety of ethnic groups working together in a easy and professional manner.

"In my life, in my experience, there was no prejudice about possibility of living together. . . . And that's the way we lived in that city for centuries."

Kursparhic said a peace plan to divide Bosnia into three equal ethnic states discussed in Geneva last July would be impossible to implement. With a mix of ethnic minorities in most regions, many families would have to get up and leave what had been their homes for many generations and move to a new city in the country of their own ethnic majority.

He described the war as a situation in which you can't avoid shooting your own people. Kursparhic said a hit on an apartment building in his immediate neighborhood equally affected Serbians, Croats and Muslims. Of 800 people killed, 300 of them were Serbs.

Since the siege on Sarajevo began, there has been no milk, eggs, bacon or bread for several weeks at a time. Electricity, food and water are severely lacking. Soccer stadiums, which featured competition less than two years ago, are now mass graveyards. The 1984 Winter Olympic facilities have been destroyed.

Kursparhic said Bosnian marketplaces are favorite bombing targets due to the large number of people there. An Oslobodenje photographer was killed in 1992 in such an attack while taking pictures of people waiting in line for bread.

Although he doesn't see an end to the fighting, Kursparhic said he doesn't know of a better solution than United Nations intervention.

Until a solution is reached, the war continues.

But despite the incredible adversity, life in the city continues.

Kursparhic said mothers risk being shot by snipers if they go out to get water, yet they still feed their children.

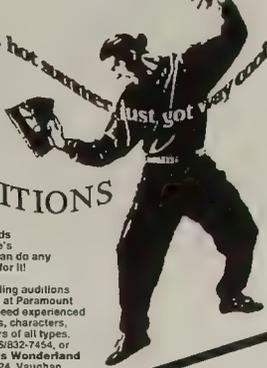

Openings of theatrical performances which are indirect social commentaries, musical performances, and Oslobodenje are all examples of people's will to continue despite the turmoil. □

— INTERNATIONAL —

states discussed in Geneva last

The long hot summer just got way cool

1994 AUDITIONS

Okay, what did you do last summer? Did you go where no man has gone before? Did you drive a stock car? Did you perform for thousands of people? NOT? Well, there's always THIS Summer. You can do any of these things and get paid for it! It's just too cool.

Paramount Parks is holding auditions for the 1994 Summer Season at Paramount Canada's Wonderland. We need experienced technicians, singers, dancers, characters, actors, and variety performers of all types.

If you're over 16, call 905/832-7454, or write: Paramount Canada's Wonderland 9590 Jane Street, P.O. Box 824, Vaughan, Ontario L6A 1S6. Paramount Parks would like to turn your summer break into your big break!

Ontario, Ontario
Tuesday, February 15
Holiday Inn, Ottawa Market Square
Launer Room/McDonnell Room
12:2:00, Technicians, Characters, Escorts
12:00, Variety Performers
12:30, Singers, Actors
1:30, Dancers

Vaughan, Ontario
Saturday, February 12
Sunday, February 13
Paramount Canada's Woodhead
The Paramount Theatre
12-3:00, Technicians, Characters, Escorts
12:00, Variety Performers
12:30, Singers, Actors
2:30, Dancers

*Are you concerned about campus safety?
Then help make a difference!*

the 3rd Annual CARLETON WINTER SAFETY AUDIT

February 15, 1994 at 7:30 pm
February 17, 1994 at 7:30 pm
Baker Lounge, Unicentre

Everyone is Welcome!

CAMPUS SAFETY IS EVERYONE'S CONCERN

For more information, please contact Donna Gilbert, Safety Commission at 788-6688

Sponsored by: EUSA

COME OUT AND MAKE A DIFFERENCE ON CAMPUS

PLACEMENT & Career Services

Check the posting boards at
the Placement Centre for
more job listings.

Programs and services of interest to undergraduates, graduating students, as well as alumni.

508 Unicentre • 788-6611
February 3, 1994

ON-CAMPUS RECRUITING

Permanent full-time positions are directed towards graduating students (available May '94). Dates, unless specified, refer to deadlines.

To find out the types of positions, how to apply and where to find more information on the companies, please contact the office.

Universal Fundraisers

Feb. 4, 12 noon
All Disciplines
Positions: Fundraising Consultants

London Life

Feb. 10, 12 noon
Commerce, Arts, Social Sciences
Positions: Sales & Marketing Reps

Ontario Ministry of Transportation

Feb. 14, 12 noon
Civil & Electrical Engineering
Positions: Engineering Development Program

Official Language Monitor Program

Feb. 18, Mail Direct
All Disciplines
Positions: Part-Time & Full-Time Language Monitors

T.W. Austin

Feb. 18, 12 noon
Commerce, Economics
Positions: Financial Counsellors

Andyne Computing Ltd.

Mar. 4, Mail Direct
Computer Science, Electrical Engineering, Computer Systems Engineering
Positions: Various

Communications Security Establishment

May 1, Mail Direct
All Disciplines
Positions: Languages Related

SUMMER EMPLOYMENT

For more information on the types of positions and application procedures consult the summer job board.

City of Ottawa

Jan. 28 - May 27, Mail Direct
All Disciplines
Positions: Various

PCL Constructors (Eastern) Inc.

Feb. 3, 12 noon
Civil Engineering, 3rd/4th year
Positions: Field Engineer or Student Engineer

City of Ottawa-Parks Programme

Feb. 4, Mail Direct
All Disciplines
Positions: Various

International Development Research Centre

Feb. 4, Mail Direct
Int'l Affairs, Social Sciences, Commerce, Info. Sciences/Systems, Economics
Positions: Various

Iogen Corporation

Feb. 11, 12 noon
Biochemistry
Positions: Lab Technicians

AECL Research Pinawa, Manitoba

Feb. 11, Mail Direct
3rd Year Honours Students of Various Disciplines
Positions: Various

City of Nepean

Feb. 14, Mail Direct
All Disciplines
Positions: Various

National Round Table on the Environment & the Economy

Feb. 14, Mail Direct
All Disciplines
Positions: Roy Aitken Internships

Paramount Canada's Wonderland

Feb. 16, In Person
All Disciplines
Positions: Singers, Actors, Dancers Technicians

The Senate of Canada East Block Tour Guide Program 1994

Feb. 18, Mail Direct
All Disciplines-Bilingual Imperative
Positions: Tour Guides

Parks of the St. Lawrence

Feb. 23, Mail Direct
All Disciplines
Positions: Various

Ontario Geological Survey

Feb. 25, Mail Direct
Geoscience
Positions: Various

Department of National Revenue Customs & Excise (Sarnia)

Feb. 28, Mail Direct
All Disciplines
Positions: Student Customs Officers

City of Gloucester

Feb. 28, Mail Direct
All Disciplines
Position: Counsellor

COSEP-Career Oriented Summer Student Employment Program

Ottawa-Hull Region Only
Feb. 28, Mail Direct
Administration, Arts, Pure Sciences, Applied Sciences, Socio-Economics
Positions: Career-Related Summer Jobs in Federal Government

Algonquin Park Visitor Services

Feb. 28, Mail Direct
Various Disciplines
Positions: Park Naturalist, Museum Technician

Deep River Science Academy

Mar. 1, Mail Direct
Science, Engineering, Commerce
Positions: Tutors/Research Assistants, Administration

Ontario Sports Centre

Mar. 4, Mail Direct
All Disciplines
Position: Supervisor

Marsaryk Fellowship Program

Mar. 18, Mail Direct
Eastern European, Political Science, NPSIA, EASL
Positions: Teaching English in Czech Republic

Sandy Hill Community Centre

Mar. 31, Mail Direct
All Disciplines
Positions: Child Counsellors, Youth Counsellors

Bark Lake

ASAP, Mail Direct
All Disciplines
Positions: Area Technicians

Environmental Youth Corps

ASAP, Mail Direct
All Disciplines
Positions: Various

SWAP-Student Work Abroad Program

ASAP, Mail Direct
All Disciplines
Positions: See SWAP brochure for participating countries

PAINTERS/HOME CARE

Action Window Cleaning

ASAP, Mail Direct
Positions: Area Managers

Creative Outdoor Lighting

ASAP, Mail Direct
All Disciplines
Positions: Outlet Manager

Metropro

ASAP, Mail Direct
Positions: Franchise Owner

Student Sprinkler Services

ASAP, Mail Direct
Positions: Branch Manager

Student Works Painting

ASAP, Placement Centre
Positions: Managers

White Shark Window Cleaning

ASAP, Mail Direct
Positions: Area Managers

TREE PLANTING

Natural Borders Reforestation

Feb. 3, Sign Up
Feb. 4, Interviews

Apex Reforestation

Feb. 15, Sign Up
Feb. 18, Interviews

Evergreen Forestry Services

ASAP, Mail Direct

Outland/New Forest

ASAP, Mail Direct

Broland Enterprises Inc.

ASAP, Mail Direct

SUMMER CAMPS

Camp Gracefield Presbyterian Centre

Feb. 15, Mail Direct

Camp Awakening

ASAP, Mail Direct

Camp Brebeuf

ASAP, Mail Direct

Camp MaroMac

ASAP, Mail Direct

Project D.A.R.E.

ASAP, Mail Direct

Ontario Camping Association

ASAP, Mail Direct

Sagitawa Christian Camps

ASAP, Mail Direct

Camp Tamakwa

ASAP, Mail Direct

Camp Walden

ASAP, Mail Direct

Waterton-Glacier International Peace Park

ASAP, Mail Direct

YMCA Camp Pinecrest

ASAP, Mail Direct

LODGES/RESORTS

Viamede Resort

Apr. 1, Mail Direct
All Disciplines
Positions: Various

Prince of Wales Hotel

Apr. 29, Mail Direct
All Disciplines
Positions: Various

Aspen Village Inn

ASAP, Mail Direct
Positions: Various

River Run

ASAP, Mail Direct
All Disciplines
Positions: Various

Posters, posters everywhere, and not a vote to cast

Ah, democracy! Next week, Carleton students are entrusted once again with the sacred duty of electing new CUSA representatives for 1994-95. There are important issues to be pondered before selecting our representatives to the council, senate and board of governors.

In this mighty contest, all students will of course attend all-candidate debates and quiz them on the issues. Then, after weighing the options carefully, and perhaps doing some background research, students will select the best and most qualified people for the job.

Yah, whatever. Let's face it, CUSA elections really hinge on one factor and one factor alone -- posters. For most people, posters are the only way they ever get to know the candidates.

So, democratic discourse is reduced to posters. Who has the best? Who has the most? Who has the neatest color? Who's got a catchy slogan?

Presidential candidate Richard Stanton's slogan may be "Experience, let it work for you," but what his bright orange posters, spottable at a hundred yards, are really saying is "Neon, let it work for me."

Some candidates make a pretence of trying to be issue-oriented. For example, Brenda Kennedy's posters for the presidency have a detailed explanation of her campaign platform. Admirable, yes. But, what is she really saying with her perky fuchsia posters? "Look at this neat layout, I'm so cool and progressive because I know my issues, so vote for me."

Other candidates are trying to present themselves as politicians for the little people. Both Lloyd Barry's and Elaine Silver's presidential posters quote the CUSA constitution, which basically says that CUSA should serve the needs of the students.

However, the posters (and the constitution) don't say which students. It doesn't say ALL the students. That's because once councillors get elected they soon take this to mean "the students" on CUSA council. Nice little loophole, Elaine and Lloyd!

The most sinister poster is probably Todd McAllister's poster for the presidency. He has chosen to have them say nothing but "Todd McAllister -- President." Seems simple, but beware. Beyond that toothy, chipmunk grin is an attempt at thought control. Students walking by are not to be distracted by anything like a discussion of issues. Just the message, "Todd, president, Todd, president, Todd, president," hypnotically weaving its way into your unconscious. Whoa, I'm getting a little dizzy.

Other candidates are sending even more cryptic messages.

John Wells, a candidate for a social science senate seat, has a poster with the figure "75 per cent" circled and crossed out, like those "No smoking" signs.

Now, this probably means that Wells opposes the suggestion that entrance requirements for arts and social sciences students be raised to 75 per cent, but it could also mean that:

- Wells has never received a mark over 75 per cent.
- No one at Carleton has ever received a mark over 75 per cent.
- Anyone who gets a mark over 75 per cent will be thrown out of Carleton, if Wells gets elected.

The truth-in-advertising award has to go to John Edwards, a board of governors and arts and social sciences candidate. On some of his board of governors posters, Edwards has the slogan "Wow! I get more posters."

Thanks John, for sharing the real reason some people run for board of governors -- just to get a bigger poster allowance, not because they want to do anything like, oh, I don't know, actually regularly attend board of governors meetings -- not that we have anyone particular in mind who's ever done that.

The most overwhelming message that all the candidates are really sending with their masses of posters is "We hate trees," so perhaps those enviro-types out there should think about boycotting the election.

But, being a responsible kind of paper, we want to encourage people to vote in the CUSA election and to really think about who you vote for. Weigh the relative merits of orange versus white paper. Think about issues like fonts and type size. (Because all the candidates have.)

May the best poster win!

SK

The race is on ... for Arts Rep

OPINION

Can women abuse other women?

by Paula Peter-Dennis

Paula Peter-Dennis is a political science and psychology student at Carleton.

When I entered the Lesbian community, I thought I was entering a utopia where everyone was supportive of each other, and a community in which sexual abuse and harassment had been eradicated. I was wrong.

In the past year, I have been sexually assaulted to the point of penetration once. I have heard countless stories of friends who have been assaulted in a sexual manner. Also, I have had sexual advances made upon me at bars or other establishments numerous times.

All of these incidents were clearly unwanted, yet because it was women making these advances and these assaults, I excused them. After all, a woman, especially a woman who supposedly knows of the violence against women in the heterosexual world, cannot abuse, can she?

The perception is that women are kind, caring individuals, so it is impossible for them to abuse. I thought to myself, what if it had been a man who had performed the same acts? What if it had been a man who continued to pressure me for sex after I had clearly stated no? I would have called it date rape, no questions asked.

I encountered many of the same fears and the same feelings that I would have if a man had assaulted me, yet, I also feared the stigma of "outing" myself to total strangers, friends and family should I speak out on the issue or go for help.

Because same-sex sexual assault is not an issue that is dealt with by mainstream society, resources are few and far between. Upon attempting to do a paper on the subject, I found a total of two pamphlets put out by provincial counselling centres that dealt with the issue. There were a few books that dealt with Lesbian battering, but not specifically with sexual assault.

Upon realizing how little research and understanding of this issue there is, I became even more frustrated and determined to speak out, particularly to address support organizations. People who have been assaulted by a member of the same sex have no idea if their local crisis line will discount the issue, or if they will be supported and their concerns addressed. Fortunately, I found the support and understanding I needed through the Sexual Assault Support Centre in Ottawa.

However, there are many friends of mine who feared calling any crisis line, not only because of the stigma around being assaulted, but also because of the special ramifications surrounding a same-sex sexual assault situation.

For example, if a woman who has been abused phones a crisis line and the counsellor is a Lesbian, it is quite possible that the counsellor knows the abuser because the Lesbian community is so small. This can make it very difficult for the person calling the line to talk about feelings and have trust that these feelings will be validated. As well, it also makes it difficult for the counsellor to remain unbiased in the situation. Although all counsellors working a crisis line are bound by law to confidentiality, it may be difficult for a woman who has already had her trust broken to trust a counsellor who may know her abuser.

In writing this article I encountered many difficulties around speaking out about same-sex sexual assault. One of these was the fear that speaking out may be met with denial from both inside and outside the feminist community. If the statement is made that women can abuse women, then, theoretically, women can also abuse men. Not only does this throw the idea that men are always the abusers out the window, but it also allows men the opportunity to speak out about abuse they endure by women.

Given this, some males may feel that they no longer have a responsibility to end violence against women. The fact remains that there are still many men who abuse women and that the balance of power is still tipped in our society towards the male population.

It is my opinion that everyone, including men, still have a responsibility to end violence against women. But, we must look at the issue as a whole and realize that abuse does not stop with the heterosexual community. Perhaps it is time to think about redefining our concept of who commits violence. The first step is to admit that a problem exists, and then to work together to find a solution. □

The Charlatan welcomes all letters and opinion pieces. Letters should not be more than 250 words and opinion pieces not more than 700 words. Pieces may be edited for length or clarity.

The deadline is Tuesday at noon. Include your name, signature, faculty, year and PHONE NUMBER or your letter won't be published. Phone numbers are for verification only and won't be published. Send to: The Charlatan, Room 531 Unicentre, Carleton University, 1125 Colonel By Drive, Ottawa, Ont. K1S 5B6.

by Jama Ibrahim

Jama Ibrahim is a member of the Muslim Students Association of Carleton, a fourth-year history student and a freelance journalist. In the following opinion he addresses what he sees as the misrepresentation of Islam.

On Jan. 13, Quebec provincial court Judge Raymonde Verrault found a 37-year-old stepfather guilty of sexually assaulting his 11-year-old stepdaughter. The man and his stepdaughter are Muslim.

Because the man forced his stepdaughter to have anal intercourse with him and never penetrated her vaginally, Verrault said he "spared" the girl's virginity and sentenced him to 23 months in prison. She said the stepfather deserved some lenience, because he had taken in to consideration the fact that virginity is very important to Muslim women. The issue of women's role in Islam is one of the most debated and misunderstood in the world today, and the affairs of Muslim women are meddled in by almost everyone. The verdict handed down by Judge Verrault is another example of a Westerner misinterpreting Islam and equating it with misogyny.

Fatima Houda-Pepin, president of the Centre Maghrébin de recherche et d'information, a research centre for Arab issues, said in the Jan. 15 Globe and Mail she is "triplely indignant — as a woman, as a mother, and as a Muslim," at the verdict.

"It is shocking that a Canadian court would allow a child rapist to hide behind Islam to minimize his crime," she said. "The Qur'an (the sacred book of Islam) does not condone the abuse of children." Nor does it condone the abuse of women.

While Western media and politicians use the mistreatment of women in some Islamic countries as an instrument to discredit the Islamic faith and its followers, many Muslims either deny the allegations as mere propaganda or ignore the issue. Regardless of media propaganda and despite the denials of some Muslims, many prominent Muslim scholars, like Al Garadawi from Egypt and Rachid Al Ghanuchi from Tunisia, agree there is a problem which needs to be addressed. There are many man-made misogynistic cultural practices used to subject women to men's domination, but these have nothing to do with Islamic law as it is written in the Qur'an.

The Qur'an is the text which is divine law. Jibra'il (Gabriel) the archangel dictated it to the Prophet Muhammad and it is the word of God. The Qur'an guarantees the equality of men and women (Sura IV, Verse 1), but some who call themselves Muslim ignore this tenet of Islamic law.

For example, following the Gulf War, the government of Saudi Arabia passed legislation banning women from driving, explaining that if a woman's car breaks down in the street she might be intimidated by men when she is forced to get out of the car. To this day Saudi Arabian universities deliver lectures by male professors to women via satellite. The women can see the professor and ask him questions through a TV screen, but he can never see them.

Hiding Behind

In some Gulf states like Qatar, women did not have the pictures on their passports until very recently, when Western governments demanded they do so or the women would not be granted entry visas to their countries.

The most apparent injustice inflicted upon women in countries like Saudi Arabia is their segregation and isolation from society. Sometimes a woman's mere presence where men are also present is considered unacceptable and shameful. Women are excluded from participation in public and political life in the belief that they belong in the home, and that their vote is unimportant. There, women have been reduced to the property of men, admired not for their personal merit but for their fertility and "femininity."

But these beliefs are not limited to far-off countries. A few days ago, I had a heated discussion with some Muslim students at Carleton. Many argued that a Muslim woman cannot and should not give a lecture in the presence of a man. There are rumors that even here in Canada some men do not allow their spouses or daughters to go to schools or go shopping by themselves in the belief that it is against Islam. Women in these instances are confined to their homes "in a manner prescribed in Islam only as a penal sanction for an act of adultery," writes the prominent Sudanese scholar Hassan Turabi in his book Women in Islam and Muslim Society. The reason women endure this abuse and mistreatment by their husbands is that in cultures which tolerate such treatment it is almost unthinkable for a woman who is divorced to remarry. The woman is always blamed for the failure of the marriage, and as such, she is shunned by other men and society in general.

A Muslim friend of mine told me a painful story of her uncle taking a second wife, while still married to his first. His first wife found out about the marriage several months after it had taken place. With three children, and the second wife pregnant, she broke into tears and could only throw up her hands saying, "What can I do?" This goes against the teachings of Islam.

According to the Qur'an, a man may take more than one wife, but this is contingent on the fulfilment of conditions stipulated in the Qur'an. The Qur'an states that the man must be "just" to his first wife and children and treat them with equanimity, as well as any further wives and children he takes on. This condition is difficult to fulfil and the interpretation notes in the Qur'an lean towards monogamy (Sura IV, Verse 3). But these conditions are always conveniently overlooked by Muslim men who are not interested in Islam.

Some of my fellow Muslims might deny these allegations of misogyny and selective interpretation of Islam. Apologists always do when confronted with the mistreatment of women in some Muslim societies. But let us face the reality. The mistreatment of women and the abuse in the name of Islam has reached mythical proportions.

These examples are not something I have read in some Orientalist books, as Western reporters usually do, about Islam. They are realities with which I am familiar. I feel obligated to express my dissatisfaction with the negative aspects of certain rigid customary practices which dehumanize women, and falsely lay claim to Islam.

By attaching Islam to the oppression of women, the abusers seek to give their abuse legitimacy, to attribute a "sacredness" to it, to raise it above criticism.

In some African cultures like rural Egypt, Sudan and Somalia, the practice of removing a woman's clitoris is performed with the idea that she will remain a virgin, and is often performed using Islam as its premise.

But this practice is prohibited in Islam. There is a principle in Islamic law which says if more harm than good comes from a practice or tenet, if it causes health problems as well as bodily harm, it goes against Islam (Sura VII, Section 157). With regard to the practice of clitoridectomy, there is no benefit, and there is most certainly much harm done. Moreover, it is not exclusive to the followers of Muslim faith. In the country of Chad, if there is one thing Muslims and Christians can agree on, it is the practice of clitoridectomy.

According to the Islamic law and teachings, a woman is an independent entity, and a fully responsible human being. Men have no authority over women, and no right to make the decisions which constitute their lives (Sura IV, Verse 1). In the book The Biography of the Prophet by Ibn Hisham, no woman is said to have embraced the faith unless she does so out of original and independent will, without male consent.

In the early days of Islam in the seventh century, women participated in military expeditions, treating the wounded and sometimes engaging in active warfare. The first martyr to die in Mecca for the cause of Islam was a woman named Sumayah.

While some men argue that Muslim women should be confined to the home, according to the Qur'an: "none and nothing in Islam may stand in the way of a woman contributing to the general good and competing for achievements," (Sura 16, Verse 97).

Young women in some Muslim countries are deprived of the right to decide to whom or when they will get married. In many cases their fathers, brothers, or uncles decide for them. Based on the principles of Islam, however, a Muslim woman enjoys the same freedoms as a man.

The Prophet Muhammad ordered that a woman should not be married without her will and consent. "Do not marry a non-virgin, except on her instruction, nor marry a virgin except with her permission," is written in a collection of quotations by the Prophet called the Bukhari. There is a strong conviction among some men to this day that women do not need higher education. But Muhammad, the Prophet of Islam, strongly recommended the education of women and girls. His wife, Ayshah, was one of the first teachers of Islamic law. She taught classes to men, and Muslim leaders sought her legal and judicial advice. According to Muslim scholar Al Ganuchi of Tunisia, women "can and should acquire any education without limit or hindrance."

Women's dress is another issue that is blown out of proportion by Westerners and Muslims. Proper and decent dress is required for both Muslim men and women, but it seems that they place so much emphasis on the Hijab (a veil which covers the head) that both assume it is one of the pillars of Islam.

For some Muslim men, the Hijab is a gauge by which to judge a woman's commitment to Islam. These people suffer from what might be termed "False Hijab Syndrome;" false, because the Hijab is not one of the pillars of Islam and does not determine if someone is a good Muslim; syndrome, because it seems that a lot of people are extremely preoccupied with Muslim women's dress. It cannot be emphasized enough, that the judgment of Muslim women by men, their sequestering in the home, their silencing through the threat of the punishment of God, goes against the fundamental principles of Islam.

Islam promises Muslim women full freedom of expression, the right to vote and the right to take part in the public affairs of the community. This attitude towards women is revealed in the history of Islam.

If Agnes MacPhail was the first woman Member of Parliament in Canada in the 1920s, a woman named Al-Shifa' was appointed by Omar, the second Caliph, to a position the equivalent to minister of trade more than 1,400 years ago in Medina, Saudi Arabia.

Why the contradiction between the misogynist practices in some Muslim countries and the divine teachings of their religion when it comes to women's affairs?

As Muslim countries become more secular, some Muslims have experienced a significant deviation from the general ideals of life as taught by Islam. Weak commitment to Islam, which guarantees the rights of women, cultivates unjust and inequitable treatment.

In many of the countries where this mistreatment is practised, men experience political and economic frustration while living under dictatorships, like those in Libya and Syria. These governments suppress all kinds of freedom and participation in policy-making. Lacking power, men turn their anger on those subjects available to them: women, who are both physically and fiscally less powerful. In this context, many Muslim women are not made aware of their rights as guaranteed by Islam. Usually these women acquire their knowledge of the Muslim religion through men and male-dominated interpretations of the Qur'an.

Two years ago, a Somali man who had recently come to Canada wanted to be reunited with his wife who was in Egypt and processed an application to sponsor her into the country. His wife turned down the proposal, claiming it is un-Islamic for a woman to travel by plane without her husband or first male kin. The man, who did not have enough money for two tickets, was set to despair.

Male jealousy is another cause of this misogyny. There is a prevalent ideology that describes women as weak by nature in commitment, as vulnerable to flirtatious impulses. This is more likely the insecurity of men manifesting itself in the outward hostility and oppression of women, and is the reason women are kept from active participation in the broad spectrum of human life and experience.

But the fact that some Muslim men hide their misogyny behind a false description of Islam should be viewed in its greater context — the predisposition of men in general towards the abuse of power in their treatment of women. The situation of Muslim women is similar in many ways to the reality of women in many other societies all over the world, including North America.

Canadians are still trying to absorb the Statistics Canada report released in November, which reported 51 per cent of Canadian women said they have experienced at least one incident of physical or sexual abuse at the hands of a man during their lifetimes.

Those Westerners who equate Islam with the mistreatment of women ignore the prevalence of the same abuses in their mostly secular culture. During the Gulf War the mainstream media was quick to accuse Muslim societies of restricting the freedom of women. Western women journalists were outraged when they were obliged to cover their heads when they walked in the streets and disdainfully accused Muslim women of submitting to the indulgences of Muslim men. But how many of these women routinely and voluntarily shave their legs, bleach their hair, or diet themselves into submission? In the secular West, some women are sexual objects for men's pleasure, not given autonomy as human beings, and are reduced to fodder for commercial promotion.

If Westerners like Judge Verrault do not understand the difference between misogynist practices of most societies and the normative practices of Islam, they will remain ignorant of its beauty, and Muslim men who cling to their oppressive power will hold fast to their defensive positions. In this, we all lose an opportunity to educate the ignorant and relieve the oppressed. □

LETTERS

the CHARLATAN
CARLETON'S INDEPENDENT STUDENT NEWSPAPER

February 3, 1994
VOLUME 23 NUMBER 21

Editor-in-Chief	Ma Gannon
Production Manager	Kevin McKay
Business Manager	Jill Perry

NEWS

Editors	Mario Carlucci Karin Jordan
Contributors	Franco D'Orazio Ryan Nakashima Mike Peters Caron Watt
Volunteer Co-ordinator	Johanna Ciszewski

NATIONAL AFFAIRS

Editor	Am Keelling
Guest Editor	Angie Gallop
Contributors	Bram S. Aaron Michael Mainville Josée Bellemare Clayton Wood
Contributor	Tonya Zelinsky

FEATURES

Editors	Andrea Smith Jama Ibrahim
----------------	------------------------------

SPORTS

Editor	Steven Vesely
Contributors	Bram S. Aaron Derek DeCloe Kevin Restivo
Contributors	Suzanne Izzard Sarah Richards

ARTS

Editor	Blayne Haggart
Contributors	M.G. Comino Stephanie Garrison Karin Jordan Andrea Smith
Contributors	David Hodges Mike-Peters Rob Willbond

OP/ED

Editor	Sheila Keenan
Contributor	Paula Peter-Dennis

VISUALS

Photo Editor	Tim O'Connor
Photo Assistant	Andre Bellefeuille
Contributors	Bill Cooper Rebecca Ford John Steinbachs
Contributors	Mark "Cookie Man" Lamb Dean Tomlinson

Graphics Co-ordinators	David Hodges Mike Rappaport
Graphics Assistant	Joel Kenneth Grant
Contributors	Frank Campbell Sheila Keenan John Price
Contributors	A.J. Pace Cindy Shigetomi

Cover Andre Bellefeuille

The Charlatan's photos are produced using the Carleton University Students' Association Photo Service

PRODUCTION

Production Assistant	Kim Alf
Contributors	Bram S. Aaron Josée Bellemare Kaleem Kahn Jill Perry Audrey Simtob Brandie Weikle
Cookies	Mark Lamb

CIRCULATION 14,000

Circulation	Dave Carpenter Joellen Walshe
--------------------	----------------------------------

ADVERTISING 788-3580

Ad Manager	Karen Richardson
-------------------	------------------

The Charlatan, Carleton University's weekly newsmagazine, is an editorially and financially autonomous journal, published weekly during the fall and winter term and monthly during the summer. Charlatan Publications Incorporated, Ottawa, Ontario, a non-profit corporation registered under the Canadian Corporations Act, is the publisher of The Charlatan. Editorial content is the sole responsibility of editorial staff members, but may not reflect the beliefs of its members. Contents are copyright © 1994. Nothing may be duplicated in any way without the prior written permission of the Editor-in-Chief. All Rights Reserved. ISSN 0315-1859. Subscriptions are available at a cost of $40 for individuals and $52 for institutions (includes GST). National advertising for The Charlatan is handled through Canadian University Press Media Services (Campus Plus), 73 Richmond St. W., 4th Floor, Toronto, Ontario, M5H 1Z4, phone: (416) 481-7283. Members of the board: Ken Drever, Ma Gannon, Anna Gibbons, David Hodges, Foud Kanaan, Warren Kinsella, Mark LaRennie, Yvonne Potter. The Charlatan Room 531 Unicentre Carleton University Ottawa, Ontario K1S 5S6 Telephone: (613) 788-6680 E-mail address: charlatan@carleton.ca

Letter writing with a purpose

Editor:

Robert Eady's contention that it "is not the intention of the Catholic Civil Rights League to interfere with anyone's right to say what they believe," ("Canadians can criticize, but not abuse," The Charlatan, Jan. 27, 1994), is in direct contradiction to his letter to the CRTC dated Jan. 20, 1994.

In the letter, Eady, on behalf of the league, requests that "the CRTC consider requiring all radio station to pre-record programs that are likely to be of a controversial or political nature."

If such a regulation were to be enacted, station managers would become the unilateral censors of all radio programming broadcast in Canada. This, coupled with the league's numerous complaints against such films as The Burning Times and War Against the Indians, clearly demonstrates the league's desire to suppress viewpoints critical or contradictory to their own.

We are personally incensed by the league's ludicrous contention that we have propagated hate against Catholics. From our perspective, their letter-writing campaign feigning indignation only serves to diminish the experiences of those who have actually been exposed to hate.

The league's primary objective has always been the elimination of a public platform for a community which has been critical of Catholic doctrine. Maligning us and our show is merely the means to that end.

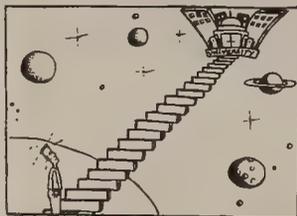

Kevin Aaron Gibbs
and Keri-Lyn Durant Hosts of Defiant Voices
CKCU-FM

Students must fight forces of evil for education

Editor:

Attacks on students are common these days. We have seen a decrease in the amount of services provided and larger class sizes. Tuition has risen over the last five years and there are threats of more increases. In addition, there is now the spectre of higher admission standards haunting applications to post-secondary education.

In "Admission mark requirements may rise," (The Charlatan, Jan. 27, 1994.) Radha Jhappan, a political science professor at Carleton, said she is worried that students entering Carleton with weak academic standings cannot manage their time efficiently. She mentions full course loads and part-time jobs as the cause of poor time management.

Such discussion arises at a time when tuition may increase by 50 per cent. This, combined with higher admission standards, will only result in the erosion of accessibility to university education.

Increasing tuition will mean that more university students will need part-time jobs, resulting in less time to study. Time management will be more difficult and more students will perform poorly. Who will not be affected by job pressures and high tuition? Only the rich.

As university students, we have a responsibility to defeat these policies which will affect us, as well as future generations of university students. It we don't, one day it will be our children who cannot afford university, even if they can get in. Education is a right, not a privilege.

Linda Ripley Arts II
Erinn Cunningham Arts I
Carleton International Socialists Club

GSA rep fails to take stand on tuition hikes

Editor:

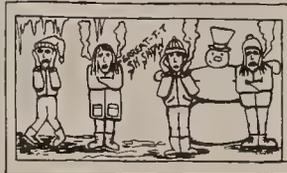

As a graduate student who attended last week's student delegation on tuition increases to the board of governor's meeting, I was extremely disappointed to observe that my elected representative, the president of the Graduate Students' Association, Vladimir Zhivov, had absolutely nothing to say on the issue.

The discussion in favor of limiting tuition was carried solely by the two undergraduate representatives, who received not one word of support from the graduate representative.

In fact, when the motion calling for the president of the university to consult with the CUSA president on tuition was voted on, it was not Zhivov that moved an amendment, but the dean of graduate studies.

What was the amendment? That the president of the university also consult the president of the GSA in regard to tuition. Does the GSA have a position on tuition increases or not?

Derrick Deans
MA II

Minors frozen out of Oliver's unfairly

Editor:

This letter serves two purposes. Firstly, to alert readers to a disgusting display of ageism which occurred on our campus. Secondly, it's an open letter to the management of Oliver's Pub.

On Thursday, Jan. 27, the Skatterbrains and Mushroom Explosion performed at Oliver's. Although posters advertised this event as being all-ages, and although the bands were told the event would be all-ages, approximately 50 people were turned away at the door because they weren't of legal drinking age.

Some would-be concert goers were forced to waste an hour or more busing back home. Others had to spend hours in the Unicentre waiting for parents to pick them up. A few die-hard fans even braved the elements and stood outside to watch the bands through the windows.

These 50 or more people wouldn't have been subjected to this treatment if they had not been lied to.

Of Oliver's Pub management I ask -- why did this unjust incident occur, and how do you plan to compensate those who you turned away?

Rori Caffrey
Journalism III

(See article on page 21 - "Mushroom explosion: frat-bound," this issue.)

Missing the point in debate on GLB centre funding

Editor:

In reading the debate about the funding of the Gay, Lesbian and Bisexual Centre over the last two weeks, I wonder if both sides haven't missed the real issue. The real question is not money, but ethics.

Should I be forced to fund something I morally disagree with? If a pornography club opened up on campus, would CUSA money support be used to support it? Would my students dollars go towards its upkeep? I should hope not.

Solomon Slazenger
English I

Get it together you shoddy OC Transpo people

Editor:

I am writing in response to the article "OC Transpo should take its own hike," The Charlatan, Jan. 27, 1994.

I very much agree with what Blayne Haggart has to say in the article, especially the comment, "The last thing this city needs is OC Transpo apologists and newspaper articles that insinuate bus service in this town is anything more than shoddy."

Shoddy, indeed! I recently moved and am required to take the Local 146 East to Billings Bridge and then transfer to get to campus. One morning, I called the bus stop number which informed me the 146 bus would be going by in six minutes (at 10:40 a.m.). I arrived at the bus stop with time to spare.

What I did not see was the 146 go by at 10:40 a.m. Actually, I did not see the 146 until 11:18 a.m., 40 minutes after I had arrived. What peeves me is that the 146 is supposed to go by at 10:40 a.m. and 11:10 a.m., so it was either early or late. Because of this incident with this particular route, I was late in arriving at campus, and therefore late enough that I missed a good portion of my history lecture. Also, I am mad because I am paying taxes that I can't afford to subsidize this bus system, which then hikes its prices to an even higher price and the service sucks. OC Transpo, get your act together!!

Catherine Reynolds
English II

Athletic fees remain unchanged

Two per cent increase proposal is defeated while reserve fund is cut

by Derek DeCloet
Charlatan Staff

The Carleton athletics board gave in to student pressure and scrapped its proposed two-per-cent increase on athletics fees at its Jan. 28 meeting.

The proposed increase would have raised athletic fees for full-time undergraduate students to just over $134. Instead, students will pay $131.52 toward athletics next year — the same as this year.

The increase — which would have raised about $50,000 for athletics — was passed by a quick show of hands.

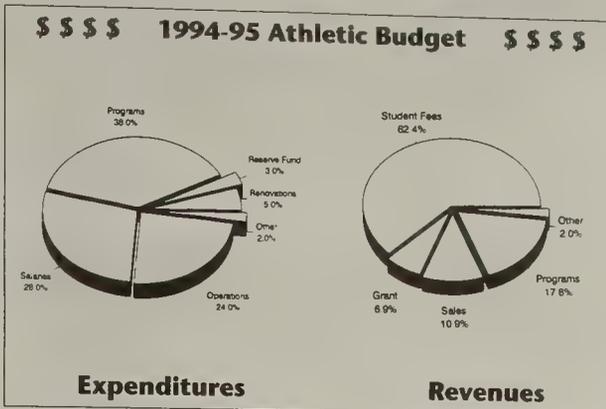

But the decision to shelve the increase comes at the expense of the board's special reserve fund.

The board had proposed putting $150,000 into the fund, which will be used to help pay for new buildings and fields as the university expands. Instead, the figure will be $112,000.

The board also saved about $28,000 by deciding not to buy an expensive protective cover for the gymnasium's new hardwood floor. It will buy a cheaper cover instead.

These cuts will allow athletics to balance its budget without raising students' fees or cutting programs.

"That was the main issue of our concern," said Ron Boyd, a representative from the Graduate Students' Association and a key opponent of the fee increase. "Tuition fees are going up, grad fees probably more than anyone else's, (and) we are unconvinced we're getting our money's worth (in athletic services)."

Most of the debate was about whether to slash the reserve fund to make up for the revenue that was lost when the board elected to freeze this year's athletic fees. "I know (the $112,000) is a drop in the bucket. But it's a start," said Rob Jamieson, who lobbied for the cut in the reserve fund.

Athletics should be careful about asking today's students to spend so much money on a fund that will be spent after they're gone, he added. "It's a matter of principle. I don't want to cut any programs."

But some senior board members were cool to the idea of cutting the fund.

"I know times are tough. But we have to be big in our mentality," said athletic director Keith Harris. "It was partly through the sacrifice of previous students that we put something aside (for today)."

Harris said he agreed student fees should be kept down. But the athletics staff could have squeezed out the savings in operating costs just as easily as cutting the reserve fund, he said.

Pat O'Brien, director of public relations for the university who sits on the board, also argued against cutting the reserve fund. Maintaining the $150,000 level is important, he said, when you consider the cost of building a new gymnasium might run into the millions. □

RANT 'N' RAVEN

Just wait 'till next year

by Derek DeCloet
Charlatan Super Bowl Correspondent

In the final seconds of Super Bore XXVIII, a friend of mine wondered aloud what the suicide rate would be in Buffalo that night.

My first thought was, is this guy morbid or what? But my second thought was to prepare myself for the inevitable onslaught of Bills-bashing that will not cease until Buffalo finally wins the Big One.

For the record, the Dallas Cowboys beat the Bills 30-13, sending Buffalo to its fourth straight Super Bowl defeat.

But for those nattering nincompoops of negativism, who insist on attacking the Bills and the fine citizens of Buffalo every time the Bills get stood up at football's royal ball, I have two words — please don't.

There are no complex reasons why the Bills have been left crying at the altar four years in a row. They're not chokers, or Super Losers, or too uptight to win. No, the reason Buffalo hasn't yet won the Super Bowl is simple.

They're just not good enough yet.

Don't let anyone tell you the Bills should have won this year because it was their fourth trip, like football is governed by some law of averages, or because they were "overdue," like football is some kind of library book.

No, the Bills have lost four straight because they were beaten by a better team almost every time.

Who can deny the Cowboys are the class of the NFL? Their romps over Buffalo explain the last two years. In 1992, the Washington Redskins were a team of destiny and their 37-24 rout was a closer game than pundits had expected. In fact, the only time Buffalo has ever played a Super Bowl against an ordinary opponent was their 20-19 defeat to the New York Giants back in 1991. If only a gentle breeze had blown Scott Norwood's last-gasp kick through the goalposts that year...

So they've lost four in a row. Big deal. Don't let anyone tell you the Bills didn't deserve to be in the Georgia Dome this year. Don't let anyone tell you the American Football Conference is just too weak to put up a decent fight in the big game. No, not when it's -50 in Buffalo in January.

You don't make it to four Super Bowls in a row by being weak — even if you are playing in a weaker conference.

And don't let anyone tell you that Sunday's game would have been better if Buffalo hadn't been in it.

If you think San Francisco could've given Jimmy Johnson's Cowboys a better run for their money, you obviously didn't see the National Football Conference championship game.

Nobody kicks around the 49ers. Nobody talks about how Steve Young can't win the big game, like they do about Jim Kelly.

If you don't like Buffalo because a blue-collar team in a blue-collar town, that's your prerogative.

But don't label the team and its fans as a big collection of losers, because they don't deserve it. They've been successful.

They're just not good enough yet. □

No end in sight for struggling Ravens

by Sarah Richards
Charlatan Staff

"It would be a rocky sea, let me tell you."

Those were the words used by coach Peter Biasone to describe the women volleyball team's performance after it placed last in the University of Ottawa Invitational Jan. 28-30.

"Our (performance) flow chart would be the earthquake in Los Angeles," said Biasone, as his zig-zagging hand imitated the needle movement of a Richter scale.

Ottawa 3 Carleton 0
Concordia 3 Carleton 0
Windsor 3 Carleton 1
McMaster 3 Carleton 2

"We're trying to play very consistent because we're not blessed by any stars. We have to make sure we don't make a lot of unforced errors," said Biasone.

The Ravens lost four games in the tournament, winning only three sets.

In their opening 3-0 match loss against Ottawa, (6-15, 3-15, 7-15) the Ravens could not hold off Ottawa's heavy-hitting middle Jennifer Villeneuve and left-side Tracy Liburd despite some good blocking and communication.

Just seeing Liburd's arched body reaching over the net, facial muscles strained as she proceeded to drive the ball through the Ravens' defence, was enough to make one understand why Ottawa beat Windsor 3-0 to take first place in the tourney.

"At times we hustled pretty hard. A couple of rallies you'd see we'd get a few points," said setter Laurie Malone. "But then, we just sort of backed down again."

Carleton also lost 3-0 to Concordia on Friday (3-15, 7-15, 7-15) before waking up Saturday and losing 3-1 to Windsor (4-15, 15-11, 12-15, 9-15).

The Ravens emerged much calmer and more organized in their final Saturday match against McMaster. The winless Ravens had nothing to lose, rallying hard throughout four sets only to crack in the fifth and final set.

Biasone said at times the losing gets frustrating.

"Oh yeah, most definitely. I get frustrated because I see our team do something in practice, and I think, 'hey shit, if we can just put that together in a game we might get somewhere'..." □

Sylvie Coutu drives for a kill at the Ottawa Invitational.

Raven asked to leave

Women's volleyball middle Carolyn Haddock left the team Jan. 29.

The first-year environmental engineering student had a heavy course load which interfered with her ability to attend practices, said coach Biasone.

"We decided to go with the girls that could make it to practice," said Biasone. "It wasn't an easy decision at all... but we always have to look after what's best for the team."

The Ravens responded to her departure with their best game of the tourney.

"They lost a player and bonded after it," said Biasone. "We played some of our best volleyball after she left."

Haddock could not be reached for comment. □

BILL COOPER

Raven Records

OWIAA WATERPOLO East Division

	W	L	T	F	A	PTS
Carleton	7	1	1	68	31	14
Toronto	7	1	1	72	28	14
Queen's	3	5	0	58	42	6
McMaster	2	6	0	42	70	4
Brook	1	7	0	30	99	2

OWIAA VOLLEYBALL East Division

	W	L	T	F	A	PTS
York	6	1	0	19	5	12
Ottawa	5	2	0	16	9	10
Toronto	4	2	0	16	7	8
Queen's	4	3	0	13	11	8
Ryerson	1	6	0	3	18	2
Carleton	0	6	0	1	18	0

OWIAA BASKETBALL East Division

	W	L	T	F	A	PTS
Laurentian	6	0	0	467	283	12
Toronto	5	1	0	424	276	10
Ottawa	4	2	0	403	359	8
Queen's	2	3	0	325	331	4
York	2	3	0	291	331	4
Ryerson	1	5	0	319	426	2
Carleton	0	6	0	241	464	0

OWIAA Athlete of the Week

Ottawa student Patti Wilhelm is the OWIAA athlete of the week. Wilhelm was the MVP at the 12th Annual Ottawa Invitational Volleyball tournament. Wilhelm led the Gee-Gees to a 3-0 gold medal win over Windsor with 11 digs and seven kills.

OAAA BASKETBALL East Division

	W	L	T	F	A	PTS
Laurentian	6	0	0	501	460	12
Ryerson	4	2	0	510	458	8
York	3	2	0	382	406	6
Toronto	3	3	0	440	426	6
Carleton	2	4	0	470	495	4
Queen's	1	4	0	374	391	2
Ottawa	1	5	0	446	487	2

OAAA BASKETBALL East Scoring Leaders

	FG	AT	FT	AT	AVE
Beason	76	138	39	50	34.7
Smart	42	93	38	50	27.4
Charles	49	105	82	27.0
Fischer	49	90	36	44	22.3
Swords	47	110	28	21.0

OAAA BASKETBALL East Rebound Leaders

	G	RBS	AVE
A. Beason - Ryrsn	6	72	12.0
T. Charles - Crl	6	69	11.5
C. Fischer - Lrntn	6	60	10.0
C. Porter - Ott	6	48	8.0
S. Swords - Lrntn	6	42	7.0

OAAA Athlete of the Week

Chris Fischer, a forward with the Laurentian Voyageurs, is the OAAA athlete of the week. Fischer scored 45 points and pulled down 19 rebounds as Laurentian defeated Carleton 81-72 and Ottawa 75-74 in basketball action this past week.

Polo captain a communicator

Raven hoping to lead teammates to golden podium

by Suzanne Izzard
Charlatan Staff

If J.J. Goldhar were the name of a song, everyone would know it and be singing it.

Like a catchy tune, the name of the Carleton women's waterpolo team captain seems to be on everyone's lips as she prepares to lead the team into the upcoming weekend at the Ontario Women's Interuniversity Athletic Association championships.

With one gold and two bronze medals in her three years on the team, Goldhar has had a lot to do with the Ravens' past success, although she'll never openly admit it.

"J.J. is a very positive, very thoughtful person," says waterpolo coach Steve Baird. "She's an incredibly effective liaison between myself and the other players. Her work ethic is good and she's extremely good at communicating."

And to a large extent, it's those communication skills which define her personality and help the team bond.

"I don't know anyone that knows as many people as J.J. does," says team member Pam Stewart. "If you took a survey of everyone at the school, I would bet that J.J. knows at least half of them."

Goldhar is training hard for the finals.

It shouldn't come as a surprise then, that the third-year student is majoring in mass communications and using her skills in places other than the waterpolo team.

Last year Goldhar represented the women's waterpolo team on Carleton's Varsity Athletic Council. This year she's the council's chair. She's got a part-time job at Hurley's Sports Coliseum and she's also a member of Carleton's Jewish Student Union.

It makes you wonder where she finds the time, says coach Baird.

"I like being busy," says Goldhar. "If I'm not doing something, I feel like I should be. I just love to be involved in everything."

Especially waterpolo.

Goldhar also plays for the Ottawa Titans in the city waterpolo league. She started playing waterpolo in Toronto after an old swim coach encouraged her to get involved. She played for the Toronto Jets for two years and joined the Titans when she came to Carleton.

Throughout her university years her play has improved, says Baird.

"Over the last three years she has turned herself into our number one centre forward. She's a very strong swimmer."

That quality should help the Ravens in the playoffs this weekend.

And if the team does come away with a gold medal — maybe people will start whistling her tune. □

Basketball men Buffaloeed by Laurentian

Ravens drop fourth straight to division leader

by Kevin Restivo
Charlatan Staff

They're road warriors no more.

The Carleton men's basketball team dropped their second consecutive road game 81-72 to the Laurentian Voyageurs in Sudbury on Jan. 28.

Laurentian 81 Carleton 72

After a surprising 2-0 start on the road, the Ravens have dropped their last four contests and now sit fifth among seven teams in the topsy-turvy east division of the Ontario Universities Athletic Association.

In the game, the Ravens improved significantly in some areas like rebounding and turnovers, but faltered in others like shooting from the floor.

Laurentian led 33-29 at the half largely because of the Ravens' atrocious 33-percent shooting efficiency.

Rebounds and turnovers helped the Ravens stay close. Carleton out-rebounded Laurentian 21-18 and only turned the ball over seven times in the first half.

Unfortunately for the Ravens, their defence failed them for most of the game.

"It wasn't a great game. There were a lot of missed lay-ups," said first-year guard Quinn Osbourne. "But what hurt was our defensive intensity. It was low in the second half. Mentally, we weren't 100 per cent into it."

Voyageurs' guard Shawn Swords ripped the Ravens' game plans to shreds, scoring 25 points.

"Our game plan was to stop Swords, but he ended up penetrating the whole second half," said Osbourne.

Forward Taffe Charles' 17 points in the second half and the three-point shooting of first-year swingman Reagh Vidito — who sank three of them at key moments of the second half — helped keep the Ravens in the contest.

Laurentian head coach Peter Campbell said he thought the game was decided in the second half.

"It was a real steady game, but our runs just came at the right time in the second half. Swords also helped us a lot. His penetration and distribution were the key," said Campbell.

Though Laurentian led for much of the game, Campbell said he was impressed with Carleton's overall play.

"They're playing really well together. They certainly didn't concede anything to us and they played hard for the whole 40 minutes. As a coach, that's all you can ask for."

Despite the loss, the Ravens remain upbeat at the halfway point of the season. They'll have to be, as Carleton's playoff hopes now hinge on a successful second half.

"Losing four in a row is a bit discouraging, but we still have confidence. Anybody can place second in the league and that's what we're aiming for. We'll win our remaining four at home and hopefully steal one on the road and we should be able to do it," said Osbourne. □

TWO GREAT CAREERS TO CHOOSE FROM!

- the Graduate Diploma in Taxation
- the Chartered Accountancy Program

These will lead you to a career as either a Tax Practitioner or as a Chartered Accountant in either a law firm, a C.A. firm or in Government.

FOR DETAILS ON ADMISSION:

Mailing Address:

McGill University
Department of Chartered Accountancy
and Graduate Administrative Studies
Redpath Library Building, Room 211
3461 McTavish Street
Montréal, Québec
H3A 1Y1
Tel.: (514) 398-2327
Fax: (514) 398-2832

McGill Centre for Continuing Education
What better place to better yourself

Raven Rumblings

QUOTE OF THE WEEK

"Taffe was excellent. In fact, he was a bitch to guard."

Laurentian men's basketball coach Peter Campbell on the difficulty his Voyageurs had containing Raven forward Taffe Charles in Laurentian's 81-72 win over Carleton on Jan. 24.

MIRACLES ON ICE?

The Carleton hockey club shocked the first-place Aloom squad 5-2 in Senior R.A. League action on Jan. 26.

The win improves the team's league record to 2-10-2, good enough for fifth place in the six-team league.

Carleton jumped out to a quick 2-0 lead in the first period and frustrated Aloom with smart defensive play thereafter for the win.

Centre Ken Pagan led Carleton with two goals. Forwards Jason Tarno, Brian Bocky and Jim Gibbens also scored.

Later in exhibition play on the Jan. 29-30 weekend, Carleton also beat Canton College 3-2 in overtime with eight seconds to play and tied the National Defence Headquarters club 5-5.

ROWING NEVER ENDS

Three Carleton rowers posted first-place results at the University of Ottawa's indoor rowing regatta on Jan. 22.

Janine MacDonald placed first in the lightweight women's category in a time of 10:01. Vicki Schouten placed first in the heavyweight women's category in a time of 10:08. Heavyweight men's rower David Zieba also placed first in a time of 8:28.

Fourteen Carleton rowers competed against the University of Ottawa and members of the Ottawa Rowing Club in the 2,500-metre distance category.

CALENDAR

Friday, Feb. 4.

WATERPOLO — The women's waterpolo team is aiming for gold at the OWIAA waterpolo finals at Brock University in St. Catharines, Ont. The Ravens face off against the McMaster Marauders tonight at 7 p.m.

Saturday, Feb. 5.

BASKETBALL — The 0-6 women's basketball team hosts the Laurentian Voyageurs in a 6 p.m. match at the Ravens' Nest looking to avenge last week's 93-29 thumping. The 2-4 men's team follows with an 8 p.m. match.

FENCING — The men's fencing team travels to Kingston for the OUAA's second sectional fencing tournament at Royal Military College.

SKIING — The men's and women's nordic ski teams will participate in the NCD Interdivisional classic-style races at Deep River, Ont.

WATERPOLO — The 7-1 Raven women take on Queen's and Toronto in OWIAA action today.

Sunday, Feb. 6.

FENCING — The women's fencing team travels to Kingston for the OWIAA's second sectional fencing tournament at Royal Military College.

SKIING — The NCD Interdivisional continues today with freestyle races.

WATERPOLO — The OWIAA waterpolo final concludes today.

ROWING — Five members of the Carleton rowing club will be competing at the Canadian Indoor Rowing Championships in Toronto against universities from across the country. □

Raven women thumped in loss

by Kevin Restivo
Charlatan Staff

The growing pains continue for the Carleton women's basketball team.

The Ravens were soundly thrashed 93-29 by the more experienced Laurentian Lady Vees on Jan. 28 in Sudbury.

Laurentian 93 Carleton 29

The Ravens are now 0-6 on the season and in last place of the Ontario Women's Interuniversity Athletic Association east division.

Carleton was never really in the game against the first-place Laurentian club, but the team did produce some modestly impressive offensive performances. Guard Gillian Roseway paced the team with 11 points, while forward Valarie Gates netted eight points on perfect shooting.

The Lady Vees, led by national team guards Carolyn Swords and Diane Norman, shot 60 per cent from the floor and pushed Laurentian to an early lead and an easy victory.

Second-year forward Heather McAlpine conceded that Laurentian is a much better team.

"They shot extremely well from the floor. Plus they had a total height advantage," said McAlpine. "But I think their experience was the key."

Despite the large margin of victory, Jones saw some definite positives from the game.

"We were really outsized but we did a good job on the boards, considering we had to play zone most of the game against them," said Jones. □

Charlatan Hockey Pool

Here are the point leaders in the Charlatan Hockey Pool. Points were tabulated as of Tue. Feb. 1, 1994. Regular season leaders can only win the dinner prize once.

BAXTER'S

1344 Bank Street
(at Riverside)
738-3323

1	Patrick Soden	547
2	Arijali Varma	537
3	Vicki Mavraganis	528
4	Jeff Parker	528
5	Jeff Pavkev	528
6	R. De Vecchi	525
7	Joseph Kurikose	525
8	Alex Varki	525
9	Blair Sanderson	522
10	Tyler Vaillant	521

Congratulations to Alex Varki who wins this week's dinner prize. Former winner Jeff Pavkev can also pick up his $25 dinner certificate for Baxter's restaurant at The Charlatan. (Italicized names are all former winners.)

Charlatan Sports Trivia

1. Place your answer, name and phone number on a piece of paper and submit it to The Charlatan sports editor, room 531 Unicentre. The recipient of the prize will be determined by a supervised draw of all correct answers.

2. All answers must be received by Tuesday, Feb. 8, 1994. The winner should come up to the office for the prize on any Monday or Tuesday.

3. Contestants may submit only one entry per week.

4. Charlatan staff members and their families are not eligible to participate.

Name the only player in the NHL to ever rack up over 100 points and 200 penalty minutes in the same season.

Congratulations to Jeff Coates who knew the poor Buffalo Bills have never won an NFL Super Bowl.

Answer:

Name:

Phone:

The Ceremonial Guard

This summer, participate in the colourful Changing the Guard Ceremony on Parliament Hill. You will be paid from May 11 to August 30, 1994, while learning basic military techniques with a group of dynamic young men and women.

Join the Reserve and enjoy summer employment with a difference.

For more information, contact:

The Governor General's Foot Guards
Cartier Square Drill Hall
Ottawa, Ontario
K1A 0K2 (613) 995-4020 (Collect)

The Reserve: Rewarding part-time employment

Jan, full-time student and member of the Ceremonial Guard during the summer months.

The Charlatan is working on a First Nations supplement to be published in the first week of March. As part of the supplement, we want to know what you know about First Nations culture and life.

1. Were you aware that 1993 was the United Nations' Year of Indigenous Peoples?

Yes
No

2. If so, how were you made aware of the situation of the Indigenous peoples of Canada and elsewhere?

3. Do you agree that Native peoples living in Canada should be granted self-government?

Yes
No
Comments (if any)

4. Did you know that Native peoples living in Canada only got the vote in 1960?

Yes
No

5. Did you know that before 1985, when Bill C-31 was passed, any Native woman married to a non-Native man lost her "Indian status," and was automatically considered non-Native by the Canadian government?

Yes
No

6. Are you aware of the services offered at Carleton for Native students or non-Native students wishing to know more of Native students, such as the Centre for Aboriginal Education Research and Culture?

Yes
No

7. How, if at all, have you been made aware of the Native student body at Carleton?

8. Are you familiar with the Carleton First Nations (CFN) club?

Yes
No

9. True or false, Native peoples all speak the same language.

True
False

10. Native peoples are all from the same cultural group.

True
False

11. Native peoples living in Canada are more susceptible to becoming alcoholics than non-native peoples.

True
False

12. The majority of Native peoples living in Canada live on reserves.

True
False

13. What is your idea of what an Aboriginal person should look like?

- (a) long black hair, brown skin and animal skin garments
(b) dark hair, dark skin, and Levi's
(c) just another dude or dudette in Levi's

14. Métis people:

- (a) have been here since the beginning of time
(b) have been around only since European contact
(c) don't exist

15. Pemican is made up of:

- (a) flour, water and salt
(b) moosemeat, potatoes and corn
(c) dried meat, dried berries and animal fat

16. What percentage of federal prisoners do Native peoples living in Canada comprise?

- (a) 10%
(b) 25%
(c) 60%

17. How many reservations exist in Canada today?

- (a) 50
(b) 150
(c) 500
(d) over 2000

PLEASE FILL OUT THIS SURVEY AND RETURN IT TO THE CHARLATAN OFFICE, RM. 531 UNICENTRE, AND BECOME ELIGIBLE TO WIN A COPY OF TOOL'S C.D. UNDERTOWN. SURVEY FORMS MUST BE RETURNED BY FEB. 18, AND A DRAW WILL BE HELD FEB. 20. NAME: PHONE #:

The UnClassifieds

Replies are in for boxes: LAURA, OYR, PACHI, SSS, QITL. Please come to 531 Unicentre to pick up these responses.

RIDES

!!HELP!! It's freakin' cold outside (specially in the morning). C.U. Eng. student needs a ride at 8:15am from West End (Meadowlands & Mervale Area) to Carleton U. (or close). Your help will be really appreciated!! PLEASE, call MEL 228-0402.

FOR SALE/RENT

Roommate Wanted: Spacious, furnished 2-bedroom apartment in Globe to share. At Bronson & Fifth - 5 minute walk to campus, bus at door. Mature, quiet, non-smoker only. Large closets, storage, laundry in building. Carpeted, unfurnished bedroom. Shared bathroom, kitchen & livingroom facilities. Use of TV and microwave Available Feb. 1/94 $350/month inclusive 231-5923. Leave message or box 722 Charlatan.

SKIING BEAUTIFUL CHALET for rent in the Laurentians at Mont Tremblant. 1,2,3,4 bedroom units. Fireplaces. Fully equipped. Also deluxe 2 bedroom condo at Pineau Village. Hot tub, fireplace. Fully equipped. Call 832-3947. All available off season for great get togethers.

HUGE APARTMENT TO RENT - LOTS OF PRIVACY. 7 rooms, 2 levels, 10th bedroom, newly renovated bathroom and kitchen; study, storage room, wall to wall carpeting. Available immediately. $440 inclusive for 1 roommate or 2 roommates, $295 each. Upperyear/grad student preferred. Contact Rob 237-3621

LOST & FOUND

Lost: Dark green scarf/white print (lost in Roosters) and small mint green Esprit bag (lost at Athletics). I'll pay $5 to have them back! Contact Info Carleton or CUSA. Please be nice - this stuff isn't yours! Deal with it!

Lost - black Binder, on 4th floor Southam Hall. Contains important notes for two classes and essay work. Please call Pat at 730-8443.

Lost: Kenwood Facelplate and case. Outside Unicentre tunnel level (ramp). If found call 237-8831. Reward offered Found: Sunglasses. Last November... In ladies washroom (Paterson Bldg.) They are here at the Charlatan office Describe? Box Sunglasses.

WANTED / JOBS

HELP! Die-hard Pink Floyd fan didn't know about sold-out shows! Ticket holders who have any to sell, please respond! I will pay generously. (Preferably T.O. or Montreal) Box: Crazy Diamond.

Are you feeling unhappy or down? A study investigating these feelings in the context of family relationships is being conducted at the U of O. If you are a married woman, ages 26-45, and have a child aged 8 to 12 living at home with you, we would appreciate talking to you. Participation will be compensated. For more info, call Dr. Valerie Whiffin or Ms. Veronica Kallos. 564-9461. Transitions is recruiting volunteers for the 1994-95 academic year. Volunteers are needed to assist new and returning students with the adjustment to university. Applications available: 501 UC, Info/Carleton, Residence Service desk. For more info, contact Counseling & Student Life Services 788-6600. Deadline: Feb 18, 1994.

Strictly for the Hardcore! 4th year Anth. student wanting to talk to serious ravers about the rave experience. For this paper. Contact Joel: 230-0710

SUMMER JOBS: Pnpstein's Camp (Laurentians) hiring instructors: Kayaking, Waterskiing (OWSA certified), Pottery, Beadmaking/Jewellery, Gymnastics, Swim (RC/RLSS inst. & Nationals), Canoeing, Judo (black belt), Drama (musicals), Photography, Keyboardist. Send resume 5253 Decarie #333, Montreal H3W 3C3.

Do you like music? Two guys who are into folk, punk, and lots in between are looking for someone who wants to sing. Call Tom or George at 237-9211

EARN FREE TRIPS AND CASH!! Breakaway Tours is looking for motivated students, organizations & clubs to promote Spring Break Tours to Panama City Beach, Daytona & Cancun! Leader in student tours for the past 11 years, we are looking for the best reps to promote our tours. BEST commission structure available, so call today! CALL 1-800-465-4257. Member of the BBB. CALL AND COMPARE US TO ANYONE!!

Wanted: Used camping equipment i.e. sleeping bag, knapsack, tent etc. Call 567-7607.

Earn up to $700 weekly from home! Rush SASE to Clasin, 2407A - 515 St Laurent Blvd., Ottawa, Ont K1K 3X5

SERVICES / AVAILABLE

Public Speaking Workshop starting Friday, March 4, 1994. Register Now. For more information contact Counseling and Student Life Services 788-6600.

Free hair cut or colour and highlights at cost of product. Done by apprentices in the professional atmosphere of The Parlour Hair Salon, 232 St. Patrick's St. For an appointment call Carfos at 241-6929. Please mention this ad.

Live it up this Spring Break on Panama City Beach, Florida - the hottest location today!! Activities galore, party till daybreak. Accommodation - finest hotels located right on the beach. Only $119 without ground transportation, $259 with. All taxes included. Book now! Call 523-9640

INCREASE ENERGY / BURN FAT - What if there was a product that...does all this plus: reduces cravings, reshapes your body, promotes the growth of muscle tissue. For free info call 235-1542.

20% student discount on pet-sitting services during study week. I provide loving and reliable care for cats, birds, small animals in your own home. Cat 'N' Caboodle, 235-3648.

Thesis Writer's Work Group starting Monday, February 7, 1994. Register Now. Contact Counseling and Student Life Services 788-6600.

SPRINGBREAK '94 We know where it's hot!! Come to CUBA. 2 hotels sold out, we are on our 3rd. NEW $699 all inclusive. Return flight & beachfront hotel & all meals & all alcoholic drinks & water sports & all taxes - service charges & chance to win "Jeep YJ" & "KOALA SPRINGS" party & more... DAYTONA $99 + bus U-drive, $199 + bus Bus. Best price in town!! Guaranteed!! (Ont. Reg. 04106282). Book now!! at 724-9974 or 725-1821.

Word processing. Accurate, professional, prompt, economical. Reports, essays, term papers, transcripts, theses. Reasonable editing provided and grammar corrected free. 731-9534.

Daytona Beach from $99 - Howard Johnson Party Complex! Panama City Beach from $139 - Ocean Front Properties! Cancun Mexico from $559 - Ocean Front Hotel! Quabec City skiing from $239. BOOK NOW - SPACE LIMITED! Visa, Mastercard, American Express. Call BREAKAWAY TOURS 1-800-465-4257 (Ont reg #2422707)

Earn $500 - $1000 weekly stuffing envelopes. For details - RUSH $1.00 with SASE to: GROUP FIVE, 57 GreenTree Drive, Suite 307, Dover, DE 19901.

WORD PROCESSING - Fast, Accurate, Professional Word Processing, Essays, Reports, Theses, Resumes, Flyers, Laser Printer. Pick-up and Delivery is available. Call Lena: 837-0183

Studied for an A...got a D? Join one of the many study skills workshops offered by Counselling and Student Life Services. For more information call 788-6600.

SPRINGBREAK '94 - Daytona or bust! Party at the world's most famous beach with CANADA'S only student travel company - BREAKAWAY TOURS (Reg 2422707). $209 + $60 bus for bus and hotel or U-drive for $89 + $40 bus - Call Chns 526-0776 or 564-0564.

Having trouble writing papers and essays? Have difficulty with grammar, spelling and/or organizing your thoughts clearly on paper? Want to improve your writing skills and raise your grades? Ask for Dorothy, B.A. English Language and Literature, Teaching ESL experience. 232-6635.

Legal problems? Landlord-tenant matters, small claims court, provincial offences (traffic court) & summary convictions. Call Jacquard Legal Services 247-1915.

INTERNATIONAL STUDENTS. DV-1 Greencard Program. Sponsored by the U.S. Immigration Dept. Greencards provide permanent resident status, in USA. Citizens of almost all countries are allowed to take part. Students, tourists, illegals may apply - wherever they live. Chance: 1 in 14. Esposito & Lomas, New Era Legal Services, 20231 Stagg St., Canoga Park, CA 91306, USA. Tel: (818)998-4425; (818)882-9681, Monday - Sunday: 8 a.m. - 11 p.m.

Essays and Theses - laser printed - $1.60 per page. Also available - resume writing, editing, writing tutoring, charts, graphics & tables. Fax & pick-up service can be arranged. Please call 721-8770.

Word Processing. Accuracy and Deadlines Guaranteed. Central Location 233-8874.

MESSAGES/MISCELLANEOUS

Why should YOUR student fees go to free parking and gold rings for CUSA Executive? Vote for BRENDA KENNEDY for CUSA PRESIDENT and she will end these extravagant perks.

Does anyone still believe in living larger than life? I don't own much except a lot of stories that in some way define my horizons. Anyone interested in exchanging small stories with great relevance please write to: Box Memory

We as students must let the Administration know what OUR needs are. Vote for BRENDA KENNEDY as CUSA PRESIDENT and she will STAND UP to Administration FOR YOUR RIGHTS.

Oh...what a story you have to tell! I must confess, I like you a lot. Thanks for hangin last Thursday... Hope to do it again soon. Dazed and Confused.

Feeling hungry? You can't learn on an empty stomach. Student poverty is a real problem. BRENDA KENNEDY, as CUSA PRESIDENT will ensure that a Food Bank is opened on campus.

COMMERCE STUDENTS - the Commerce Society will be holding a pub at Oliver's Thursday, February 3 from 8:00 till close.

STAND UP FOR YOUR RIGHTS! Including a safer campus, better OC Transpo service, more study space...let BRENDA KENNEDY know what you are concerned about at 236-8849. KENNEDY for CUSA PRESIDENT.

The Commerce Society Elections will be held February 8 & 10. Nomination forms can be picked up at 225 PA. Deadline for nominations is Friday, Feb. 4. For more info call 788-2600 ext 2708.

As Foot Patrol Coordinator, I have prayed to be very open to YOUR suggestions, concerns and ideas. Let me prove myself again - Vote for BRENDA KENNEDY for CUSA PRESIDENT.

MAN TO MAN

Gay psychology major seeking study buddy to discuss psychological issues from a gay perspective! An interest in light weightlifting also. Box Psych

MAN TO WOMAN

Semi-degenerate tall rider seeks female counterpart for crazy biking adventures we can lie about. Please include photo of bike. Box Bike.

To the girl in the yellow jacket reading Baudelaire on the #7, 8am, Jan. 26. Your smile blew me away. Meet for coffee? Answer here. Box Struck.

White, single, gentleman seeking classy, attractive, sensual, petite female who loves hot tubbing, jacuzzis, romantic dinners, movies, music, slow dancing, silk lingerie...for casual or intimate relationship. Box Romantic.

WOMAN TO MAN

Single, Jewish lady 38yrs, 162cm, attractive, sensitive, professional, wishes to meet single, professional, erudite man in his 40s with academic background; distinctive scholar or scientist for meaningful relationship (divorced should not apply). Write 55-725 Bernard St., Ottawa ON, K1K 3H7.

Sharing stew with Me Mom and Morgentaler

by David Hodges
Charlatan Staff

Me Mom and Morgentaler
Thunderdome
Jan. 28

Me Mom and Morgentaler. Oh man, how sweet it sounds. It's like somebody poured a jar of honey down my ear and now I've been sent to earth to spread the gospel of the Messiah. Yes, how sweet it is.

For a group that was originally intended to be just a lark at a year-end school party, this Montreal-based band has certainly transcended those days. Six years later, they continue to delight their ever-growing cult following with their unique mixture of punk and ska.

Upon meeting the band, I was instantly impressed with their generosity when they offered me a bowl of stew. Yes, these certainly were down-to-earth, decent boys.

Over the years, Me Mom and Morgentaler has gone through many changes, the most recent being the departure of singer Highwire Kim and drummer Sid Santiago. This is what Noah Green, accordionist and former keyboardist with Ottawa's Skatterbrains, believed was responsible for rumors spread in late 1993 concerning the band's demise. In order to dispel these rumors, the band placed an ad in the Montreal Mirror to assure their public they weren't true.

Now, while they have acquired a new drummer, they have yet to find a new female vocalist. Saxophonist John Boomshine Jordan describes the situation as a "need-women kind of scenario."

Still with the group are Jordan, Green, bassist Matthew Lipscombe, trumpet player Baltimore Bix, percussionist John Britton and guitarist/vocalist Ringmaster Gus.

Judging from their performance and the crowd's enthusiastic reaction, the band's live show hasn't suffered much from Kim's departure. While a substantial number of tracks from their first full-length album, Shiva Space Machine, featured Kim as vocalist, Me Mom and Morgentaler has easily overcome such adversity with some clever juggling of skills.

At their Jan. 28 show at the Thunderdome, Jordan sang Kim's high-pitched "oooooooooooooooooooooh" in "I Still Love You Eve." The way the veins on his head looked like they would explode at any given moment added to his provocative performance.

Perhaps the most colorful point of that night was when Gus pulled a woman out of the audience to sing the female vocals for "Laura," whose name, coincidentally enough, turned out to be Laura.

The creative tensions involved with having an eight-piece band is very much a credit to the success of Me Mom and Morgentaler, according to Jordan. "We all have different tastes in music, but are all open to each other's tastes. No one's trying to impose any styles on anyone else," says Jordan.

This type of mutual respect proved true when Green described Loverboy as "one of the most disappointing bands of the eighties," while Jordan disagreed, stating, "I liked 'Working For the Weekend.'"

Regardless of conflicting tastes, they still manage to be good friends.

While Me Mom and Morgentaler are best known for their high-impact stage shows, they are also a socially relevant group of individuals. When asked if they thought their negative comments about

ANDRE BELLEFEUILLE

This man is very tall.

Brian Mulrone (they called him a bastard) on their debut EP Clown, Heaven & Hell, might have led to the downfall of the Tories, Jordan commented, "I'd like to take credit for it personally." As far as Prime Minister Chrétien goes, Jordan figured he has at least a couple of years before Me Mom and Morgentaler starts insulting him.

Even when asked the truly cheesy question of what color best describes the passion of Me Mom and Morgentaler, Jordan brilliantly replied, "Fuchsia. A lot of people know the word, but a lot of people don't know what the color is."

Oh man, what a beautiful thing. □

ANDRE BELLEFEUILLE

Gus, John and Mr. Baltimore Bix, bellowing.

Beauty and power

by Stephanie Garrison
Charlatan Staff

An Evening with Mark Godden
Royal Winnipeg Ballet
National Arts Centre
Jan. 27 — Jan. 29

Modern ballet—or, more specifically, Mark Godden's brand of modern ballet—is powerful and beautiful.

Last week's Royal Winnipeg Ballet performance of some of Godden's work was a diverse sampling from one of Canada's more daring choreographers.

The four pieces—Angels in the Architecture, La Princesse et le Soldat, A Darkness Between Us and Dame aux Fruits—had no thematic connections, yet there was logic to the program.

Each was a specific creation for the Royal Winnipeg Ballet by Godden, the company's first-ever resident choreographer. Godden's incredible manipulation of the dancers, the fluidity of their movements and the apparent seamlessness of the choreography was evident in each piece.

Starkly disturbing best describes A Darkness Between Us, Godden's study of infidelity between four people. The only props were two exaggeratedly large boards, mounted at a 160 degree angle to the floor. Only halfway through the dance did the audience realize their significance, as the two couples mounted the boards and prepared for bed. This bird's eye view later showed the two illicit lovers leaving their sleeping partners for a desperate midnight tryst of their own.

A Darkness Between Us was moving because it refuses to moralize. It is not so much a condemnation of cheating as an observation of its tragic ramifications. The movements were both graceful and desperate, and allowed the audience to feel a measure of sympathy for the adulterous pair.

Godden immediately tempered this moody study with La Princesse et le Soldat, a comical pas de deux that won second prize for new choreography at the International Ballet Competition in Helsinki in 1991. Dancers Suzanne Rubio and Gino DiMarco were entertaining and spunky protagonists in this updated look at love.

Rubio's fiercely independent princess danced a myriad of playful steps slyly placed amidst the dance. Her foot stomping and punching movements were bizarre, yet strangely appropriate to her persona. Godden proved that even awkward, pedestrian moves have their place in ballet.

The other two ballets were enchanting as well. Angels in the Architecture was a graceful study of the devout Shaker lifestyle, set to music by Aaron Copland. The concluding piece, Dame aux Fruits, was a frisky romp complete with men in skirts and an abundance of plastic fruit props, which Godden says was inspired by the modern art of Picasso and his muses.

The evening was a fascinating mix of athleticism, grace and unconventionally beautiful choreography. Audience-friendly yet challenging, Godden's choreography has an uncompromising artistic vision which is attracting more fans all the time. □

This week: A Sparky Sighting!

by Stephanie Garrison
Charlatan Staff

Robin Farquhar—Renaissance Man? Yes, it's true. The man, who was spotted at the Jan. 27 performance of the Royal Winnipeg Ballet, has very good taste in high culture.

However, very few people have heard the rumor that Sparky was an accomplished ballet dancer himself in his younger days.

Henri Pirouette, an old dance instructor, describes Sparky as a student with "unique" gifts, who overcame the obstacles of an "interesting" physique and a "singular" sense of musical interpretation.

Dance critics agree that Sparky's two most memorable roles were the Prince in Sleeping Beauty and the Beast in Beauty and the Beast.

The reason Sparky has kept this aspect from his past a secret and dropped it from the "Other Activities" section of his resumé is shrouded in secrecy and conjecture. The most popular myth deals with an ornery dance critic, a bad review and a rank of 44th amongst other male dancers in Maclean's.

Sparky may just be a member of the audience now, but his cool demeanour and polite hand-clapping during the performance masked that latent dancer's spirit waiting to burst forth after years of repression.

After the performance, we hear he went backstage with his wife, perhaps to regale dancers with tales of his youth. □

The mutant offspring of classical music and the circus

by M.G. Comino
Charlatan Staff

Variété

National Arts Centre Theatre
Jan. 2 — Jan. 29

It's easy to think shows at the National Arts Centre are simply boring, high culture stuff. Those who have this idea should have seen Variété.

This hour-long production, staged by Montreal's Michel G. Barette, was simply a joy to see, involving classical music, clowns and other circus performers.

The fun began even before the performers took to the stage. A fake NAC guide went around sticking a tuque into people's faces, looking for its owner. Some people, as I did, mistook him for a real NAC guide. They asked him where their seats were, to which he shrugged and walked away.

Finally, the lights went down, and you could have gotten romantic, except you would have probably been distracted by the start of the "real" show. The circus was in town!

To start the show, zombie-like classical musicians, sporting pale makeup and walking like the living dead, clumsily got up on stage. They goofily started walking into their own instruments. This was definitely not a regular session of the NAC Orchestra. However, once they found their instruments, everything calmed down.

The eight circus artists then made their remarkable entrance. Their ranks consisted of one artistic cyclist (who doubled as a fire breather), one very flexible woman, a blade-eating man, two dancers, a juggler, a magician and one clown.

The cyclist impressed with his dexterity. He sent his bike into figure eights while standing on the bicycle seat. At another point, he took his bike by the handlebars and spun it around like a baton.

When it came her turn to perform, the very flexible woman entered on all fours, moving like a spider. Throughout her performance, she managed to contort her body into many pretzel-like shapes. It was one of the most incredible acts. One woman behind me kept mumbling, "Ouch," and commenting, perhaps jealously, "That's gross!"

The blade-eating man kept his attention focused throughout his act. But then, when your act consists of swallowing razor blades and then regurgitating them, concentration is of the utmost importance. To let the audience know these razors were real, he cut some playing cards. Then, he gargled and orally played with the blades. Inspirational, but you had to wonder how the parents in the audience would explain to the children in attendance that they shouldn't try this at home. This performer made me flinch the most.

Those bizarre classical musicians.

The clown, when he came on, had troubles with his tie. He was trying to perform an act juggling one stick with two others, but couldn't. His tie kept getting caught in the sticks. As it did, the tie grew longer, and before we knew it, this dear clown was entangled and engulfed by his tie. He also successfully climbed a ladder wearing skis.

After all the performers had shown off their talents, all hell broke loose. The artistic cyclist fell off his bike. The conductor stopped conducting and turned around to look at the cyclist. One of the two cha-cha dancers fell down. And so on. Suffice to say that after this, all the routines lost their perfection. It may be fun to watch feats of human daring, but it's even more fun to watch slapstick.

Variété was plotless, had limited dialogue and was very visual. No one performer hogged the spotlight.

At times, I was so engrossed by the circus performers, I forgot there was music playing. The music seemed important only as an audio backdrop.

There just weren't any negative points to this performance. Everything from the classical music to the choreography was perfect.

The audience as a whole seemed quite favorably responsive. The performance was convincing and each performer in this show had obvious talent.

If it happens to come around again, don't miss Variété. It's cute, humorous and upbeat. □

Faster than a speeding ticket.

A speeding ticket in the U.S. can cost you hundreds of dollars. Which could be the difference between a great spring break, and no spring break. But with Western Union, you can have money sent to you from Canada to one of over 18,000 U.S. locations in minutes. So when you need money fast, call Western Union. We're just the ticket.

In the U.S. call
1-800-325-6000

WESTERN UNION | MONEY TRANSFER

In Canada call
1-800-235-0000

The fastest way to send money.™

MUSHROOM EXPLOSION: FRAT-BOUND!

by Rob Willbond
Charlatan Staff

Mushroom Explosion, opening for the Skatterbrains
Oliver's
Jan. 27

Ever wonder what Sonic Youth was like before the band signed to Geffen Records?

The driving, distorted intensity of a Mushroom Explosion performance could be as close as one may come.

For a year Mushroom Explosion has been playing happy guitar stuff all around the local all-ages music scene, carrying the message that music is about people having a good time just being themselves.

These local folks, Rob Snasdell-Taylor (guitar, bass, vocals), Jamie Bryant (bass, drums, vocals), Shawn Hill (guitar, vocals), and Scott Terry (drums, vocals, guitar), showed up at Oliver's around 6 p.m. Realizing their sound check was not for some time, they set off in search of food with yours truly in tow.

For some this is a simple matter, no element of confusion involved. Yet Mushroom Explosion has that knack of turning the simplest chore into a game. This mission began by scouring the various vending machines outside Oliver's. After deciding that Bryant's purchase of a chocolate milk would not suffice as band nutrition, the Peppermill was the next destination.

"Spin magazine really sucks, make sure you put that in," was Hill's comment as the band consumed their food at the Peppermill. "Can you believe the crap they print in there? Maybe Perry Farrell owns it." The rest of the guys agreed, each voicing their opinions on what they least liked about the commercial alternative movement. The band, as you may have noted, has a tendency to go off on a tangent.

We did, despite these numerous asides, get around to discussing their group. "As a band," said Snasdell-Taylor in a more serious tone, "We prefer to be known more as artists than musicians."

"Because," added Hill, destroying the brief aura of seriousness, "we really can't play our instruments."

"Actually," Snasdell-Taylor continued, "we're most interested in fun."

Which is obvious by some of their other comments: about how they can't play their instruments and couldn't understand why they were even being interviewed.

As with most groups, every member has a different musical influence. "Each one of us is partial to their own favorite style," said Terry. "Rob is into Teenage Fanclub. Shawn likes U2, Jamie... well, Jamie likes disco, and I love Nine Inch Nails."

"Don't forget Thurston Moore and anything out of Halifax," added Bryant.

The discussion quickly moved to the subject of their impending performance. "I am kind of nervous," admitted Bryant. "I've never really played for this kind of crowd," referring to the beer-drinking university types that frequent Oliver's.

"I told a bunch of people to come," said Hill reassuringly. "There should be a good all-ages turnout."

On the topic of the Ottawa all-ages music scene, which has produced such bands as Furnaceface and Heaven Dog, they were in agreement. "I hear it's the best in the country," said Snasdell-Taylor. "It's so friendly and positive. Everybody knows each other, and everybody helps each other."

"Yeah," added Hill, "it's great with all the first-generation bands like Furnaceface helping out so much. Even tonight, the Skatterbrains are just great."

Although they're comfortable playing live, the experience of recording their just-released Who Cares? cassette left something to be desired. One side of the cassette was recorded and produced by Wet Records' Oliver Marsh. The other was mixed and recorded by themselves without the benefit of studio equipment.

"At first," said Hill, "we were like 'Wow, real recording!' So we worked with Ollie and Wet Records. Then we realized how much that sucked. We got a mixer and did the second side ourselves. It was just intense jamming. That's the way are going to do it from now on."

The band's sound check went well. They were really psyched and ready to play. Then the evil event occurred. Around 8 p.m., Oliver's management informed Mushroom Explosion that they had decided to cancel the all-ages aspect of the concert which they had been advertising on posters, claiming it was a frat night and kids couldn't come.

Living up to their beliefs in music for all ages, Mushroom Explosion chose to cut their set short that evening. The band couldn't believe the profit of a $7.25 pitcher night was worth more than continuing with the much advertised all-ages night.

Protesting against this for the 50 or so under-age music fans that showed up, Mushroom Explosion played only three songs, including one Bryant spontaneously made up. It was a very special full-distortion, mainly instrumental song, peppered with phrases like, "Frat guys!" and "Beer drinking!"

Although their short set was fair protest and funny to boot, there was much discontent in the crowd. More than once I heard stuff like, "Faggot kids, we oughta kick their asses," from certain males in the crowd. Real mature, boys.

It's too bad about all the animosity. An evening with Mushroom Explosion is definitely more fun than pounding back beer all night.

Mr. Shawn Hill: Oh, those bedroom eyes.

DEAN TOMLINSON

Mr. Rob Snasdell-Taylor, having fun.

DEAN TOMLINSON

Study on the French Riviera

Earn up to one full year transferable Canadian university credits on a Canadian campus near Nice.

The Université canadienne en France offers courses in English or French. No French language skills necessary. Three semesters: Fall (September to December); Winter (January to April); Spring (May to June, six weeks.) Federal and Provincial student aid available.

In Ontario phone 1-800-461-4030

Outside Ontario collect (705) 673-6513

Oui!

Please send more information!

Name _____

Address _____

City _____

Province _____

Postal Code _____

Telephone _____

For more information contact the Université canadienne en France, Laurentian University, Sudbury, Ontario P3E 2C6

LONG DAY IN THE UNIVERSE

THURSDAY, FEBRUARY 3 TO THURSDAY, FEBRUARY 10

Thursday, February 3

If you enjoy cheap and loud music, Zaphod's is the place to be tonight for a recital by loudfolks Resin Scraper and the Spiny Anteaters. Cover is a measly buck, GST presumably included.

Bleu, the first in Krzysztof Kieslowski's trilogy "inspired by the ideals of the French Revolution," according to one critic, is playing at the Bytowne at 7 p.m. this evening. It runs until Feb. 10 at various times.

There are more movies at the Museum of Civilization in Hull. Cinémathèque Canada presents Russian director Sergei Eisenstein's October at 7 p.m. Watch for more of Eisenstein's work later in the month. Admission is $4 for members and $6.50 for everyone else.

The Ad Hoc Gallery on York Street is presenting Photographs by Lorraine Gilbert today until Feb. 26, Wednesdays through Saturdays. Her subject matter? None other than tree planters and deforested land.

Friday, February 4

Today's the day of that Halt the Hike thing. Basically, it's a protest against the wacky and insane tuition hikes we'll be facing (again) this year.

So here's the deal on events stuff. From 12 p.m. until 3 p.m. in Rooster's, there'll be speakers and music courtesy of Heather Farrow, Fear and Loathing (two guys from the Freeway Band) and Mark Wilson and the Heavy Brothers. At 3 p.m., you can assemble in Porter Hall and then march through the tunnels to the admin building for the actual protest.

And what better to do after a solid day of protest than to unwind to some tunes? Return to Porter Hall at 5 p.m. for a free concert, featuring DJs, speakers and the civilly disobedient sounds of Jerry-Built, Belfast Cowboys, Electric Embryo, Fishtales and headliners Black Triangle.

Today's free lunch-time concert features the harp of Caroline Leonardelli and the flute of Claire Marchand. The fun starts at noon in Carleton's Alumni Theatre.

Inti-Ililmani, a band that's just huge in their native Chile, is performing at Centrepointe Theatre this evening at 8 p.m. Tickets are $24.

Ottawa's Toasted Westerns play their down-home music at Zaphod's this evening. Five dollars gets you in.

Saturday, February 5

Here's some loud Canadian music for you: Varga and Peace Colony at Zaphod's this evening. Five dollars gets you in.

Sunday, February 6

Wow! It's the seventh annual A Taste of Chocolate extravaganza! Six bucks gets you in to this chocolate-centric epic event from 12 to 5 p.m. at the Citadel Inn.

Monday, February 7

There's classic science fiction to be had at the Mayfair this evening. Tonight's double bill, starting at 7 p.m., features Allen and Aliens, the Rambo-goes-to-Mars sequel.

If you're in for live music, we've been informed that the Saddledogs are playing their original rock stuff every Monday night this month at the Downstairs Club.

Tuesday, February 8

This week's book tip, courtesy of Charlatan production manager Kevin McKay, is The Grapes of Wrath by John Steinbeck. Says McKay, "This Depression-era story takes us inside the Joad family; couldn't read it fast enough." He was going to say more, but he's behind in his reading. Life sure is tough for those English majors.

Molière's Tartuffe is being presented by the University of Ottawa Drama Guild tonight until Feb. 12 at 8 p.m. It's showing in the Academic Hall at the U of O. And, just in case you were wondering, it is being performed in English. Admission is $3 for students, $5 for senior citizens and $8 for everyone else.

There will be a symposium on the Global Refugee Crisis tonight at the Faculty Club in the Unicentre. It's free and starts at 6:30 p.m.

Wednesday, February 9

Valda Blundell, from Carleton's department of sociology and anthropology, is presenting a talk entitled The Cultural Politics of First Nation Powwows in Room 2017, Dunton Tower at 3:30 p.m. this afternoon.

On yer radio this eve at 9 p.m., In A Mellow Tone (CKCU 93.1 FM), hosted by Gaby Warren, features the music of Walt Dickerson.

Thursday, February 10

It's getting near the end of the week, so chances are you need a good snack. This week's Charlatan snack tip is the world famous Peanut Butter Pop™. To make this tasty treat, you need creamy peanut butter and a teaspoon. Scoop out a heaping spoonful of peanut butter. Eat. Serves one.

If you have an event you want to appear in this handy calendar, you can drop your announcement off at The Charlatan, Room 531 Unicentre during regular business hours or you can fax us at 788-4051. Announcements must be in by the Friday before publication.

SPRING BREAK PANAMA CITY BEACH, FLORIDA

Shell Island Party Cruise
650' Gulf Beach Frontage
2 Outdoor Swimming Pools
1 Indoor Heated Pool
Restaurant, 2 & 3 Room Suites

Beach Bonfire Parties
Tiki Beach Bar/Volleyball
Sailboats, Jetskis & Parasails
Karaoke Beach Party
Area Discount Coupons

SANDPIPER BEACON
17403 Front Beach Road
Panama City Beach, FL 32413
904-234-2154

RESERVATIONS 1-800-488-8828

FROM $104 PER WEEK PER PERSON 4 PERSON OCCUPANCY

HALT THE HIKE

FRIDAY FEB. 4

HALT THE HIKE

A DAY OF PROTEST AGAINST TUITION HIKES

Meadowlands Family Health Centre

Hog's Back Plaza
888 Meadowlands Drive East
corner of Prince of Wales Dr. and Meadowlands Dr.
(behind McDonald's)
Ottawa, Ontario K2C3R2
228-2882

Prince of Wales Drive
Colonel By Drive
U of O
Carleton U
Meadowlands Drive East
Hog's Back

Family Medicine
Adolescent Medicine
Obstetrics and Maternity Care

Pediatrics
Minor Surgery
Counselling Services

Meadowlands Family Health Centre

Nous Parlons Français

Open 7 days a week
Weekdays 8AM to 8PM
Weekends / Holidays 10AM to 6PM

With or without appointment

FREE!
NOON - 3pm Roosters
Heather Farrow
Fear and Loathing
Mark Wilson and the Heavy Brothers

FREE! 3-5pm
Porter Hall...
RALLY & PROTEST
5pm Porter Hall...
Jerry-Built
Belfast Cowboys
Electric Embryo
Fishtales
Black Triangle

CKCU FM 93.1

EUSA
CHARLATAN
COUNCIL OF UNDERGRADUATE STUDENTS

110 YORK ST., BYWARD 241-5455

HOULIHAN'S

"LADIES' NIGHT"

NO COVER CHARGE FOR WOMEN

Every Tuesday Night

15¢ WINGS

TUES. & WED.

4:00 - 11:00

GOOD FOOD CHEAP! * POOL TABLES * VIDEO GAMES
AIR HOCKEY * HUGE DANCE FLOOR

TWO FLOORS OF FUN * PARTY NIGHTS

Sun, Mon, Tue, & Thue

FREE POOL

12pm to 5pm DAILY

FULL Lunch Menu

D.J. Every Night

4 T.V.'S & 3 Big Screens

STUDENT
NIGHTS

Tuesdays & Wednesdays

BEVERAGE

99¢

DRAUGHT

Specials

96 George Street in the Byward Market
562-0433

ELECTIONS SUPPLEMENT

POLLING STATIONS:

Open 11 am to 9 pm

- Steacie/Herzberg
- Baker Lounge
- Res Commons
- Loeb
- Tunnel Junction
- MacKenzie
- St. Pat's

Bring your student card!

CARLETON UNIVERSITY
STUDENTS' ASSOCIATION

GENERAL ELECTIONS
1994

DO YOU CARE?

In the next 365 days, CUSA will spend over $2,500,000.00
YOU have the chance to decide who those people will be.

IMPROVE THIS STAT:

In South Africa, over 80% of the population doesn't vote because they are not allowed to.

At Carleton University, over 80% of the student body doesn't vote because they can't be bothered to.

GET OUT & VOTE!!

CUSA

General Elections

For more information,
contact James Rilett,
Chief Electoral Officer,
at 127D Unicentre.

FEB. 8, 9, 10

REFERENDUM QUESTION 1

Whereas: this year funding from the Carleton University Students' Association has allowed the University of Ottawa Community Legal Clinic, a student organization, to provide legal representation and advice to Carleton Students. Do you support the continuation of CUSA funding to continue these services?

REFERENDUM QUESTION 2

Do you support paying a $1.00 levy (per student) toward subsidizing the creation and maintenance of a Carleton Hockey Team which would join the college Hockey League?

BRING BACK THE HOCKEY RAVENS

VOTE "YES" TO THE REFERENDUM QUESTION 2 ON FEB 8,9,10

Win over Algonquin gives Carleton supporters hockey lobby power

Hockey club upsets NCAA agents

Carleton to study hockey plan

Ravens won't say 'never' with a new outside financing

Ex-Ravens want new club Group bidding for hockey team

RANT 'N RAVEN

Athletics reluctant to lend a hand

Hockey club holds own at Varsity tournament

Hockey club continues its winning ways

PRESIDENT 1 TO BE ELECTED

Lloyd BARRY

P
R
E
S
I
D
E N
T

In the upcoming elections, we will have an opportunity to take an active role in the decision-making process. You CAN choose a representative who will work on YOUR behalf.

Our Students' Association should confront the financial and social concerns unique to Carleton students. Issues such as greater CUSA accessibility, tuition hikes, quality of education, and improved campus safety need to be resolved with dedication and competence. Our Administration must be made aware of our interests.

As your choice for President, we can work together for a more effective Students' Association. Our partnership WILL bring about change for the better.

Lloyd Barry

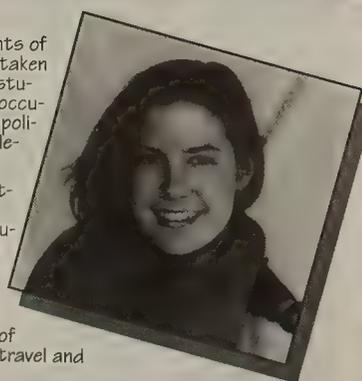

Stand UP For Your Rights

Over the years, the rights of students at Carleton have taken a back seat as successive student associations have preoccupied themselves with petty politics. CUSA has become irrelevant to many.

While CUSA waffles, cutbacks have decimated the quality of education and students have had little say in the process.

Teaching assistants, library acquisitions and lab equipment are cut instead of Administration conference travel and expense accounts.

On important issues such as curriculum, safety, cafeteria price increases and tuition hikes, the university has paid little more than lip service to students because CUSA has been unwilling to stand up to the administration.

Brenda Kennedy will take a stand on issues which concern you.

Brenda KENNEDY for CUSA PRESIDENT

PRESIDENT 1 TO BE ELECTED

Todd
McAllister

With experience on Foot Patrol, N.U.G., CUSA, and the University Senate I have fought for student issues. It is time that we elect a President who will respect the position as well as the views of the average student.

PRESIDENT

Blaine Silver

The aims of the Association are:

- a. to serve the needs of students,
- b. to represent the students of Carleton University to the University Administration, to the public, and public officials, to other centres of learning, and to other organizations."

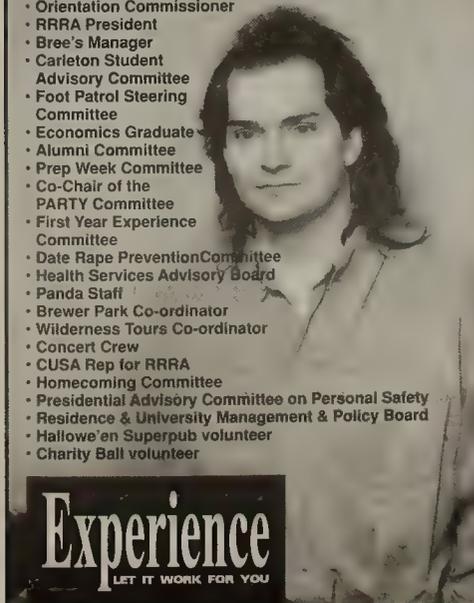

- CUSA constitution

PRESIDENT

When you're hiring your next president, know your candidates qualifications...

- Orientation Commissioner
- RRRR President
- Bree's Manager
- Carleton Student Advisory Committee
- Foot Patrol Steering Committee
- Economics Graduate
- Alumni Committee
- Prep Week Committee
- Co-Chair of the PARTY Committee
- First Year Experience Committee
- Date Rape Prevention Committee
- Health Services Advisory Board
- Panda Staff
- Brewer Park Co-ordinator
- Wilderness Tours Co-ordinator
- Concert Crew
- CUSA Rep for RRRR
- Homecoming Committee
- Presidential Advisory Committee on Personal Safety
- Residence & University Management & Policy Board
- Hallowe'en Superpub volunteer
- Charity Ball volunteer

Richard

Stanton
President

Experience
LET IT WORK FOR YOU

WHY SHOULD YOU VOTE?

The Carleton University Students' Association, Inc. is a democratic, non-profit organization, the purpose of which is to provide financial and administrative support to the interests and needs of Carleton University students. All Carleton students are automatically members of CUSA and have a say in how the Association is operated. Students can run for students' council positions during these annual elections and everyone is welcome to attend the regular council meetings held in Baker Lounge.

A portion of your student fees is allocated to the Students' Association, and CUSA's policies and projects have an effect on your Carleton University experience. CUSA council directs most of the social programming on campus and assumes an Administrative role as well, placing student representatives on the University Senate, the Board of Governors and on a number of University committees.

The CUSA President is responsible for the CUSA Executive, staff, and all activities conducted by the Association. The President is also the main spokesperson for the students. The CUSA Finance Commissioner is responsible for CUSA's financial activities and operations, overseeing the budget, signing all contracts on behalf of your Association and participating in long range planning to ensure that the Association experiences continued growth.

The people on these pages will be making decisions that directly affect your life at Carleton. You owe it to yourself to follow the debates, get to know where they stand, and make your vote count on February 8, 9 and 10.

VOTE
ROB
JAMMISON
FINANCE
COMMISSIONER

FINANCE COMMISSIONER
KISIELEWSKI, Robert

DEDICATED TO STUDENTS! Get out & vote Feb 8,9,10/94)

GOALS:

Corporate sponsorship for:
0% student fee increases
Unicentre mall
Grocery store
Cheaper prices on campus
Cut CUSA Executive perks
More funding for sports, societies, and safety

EXPERIENCE:

V.P. Economic Society
V.P. Association of Carleton Entrepreneurs
Exec. "No CFS Fee Increase" campaign
B.A. Law, Poli Sci '92, H.B.A. Law '95
Residence, Foot Patrol
Sigma Pi Alumni (3X Chairperson)

LOOK TOWARDS A BROADER HORIZON

DID YOU KNOW?

CUSA'S Budget totalled over 2 million dollars this year.

It's important to ensure YOUR money is spent wisely.

Experience:

- Completed 4 years of Business training, specializing in Accounting.
- VICE PRESIDENT RESIDENCE ASSOCIATION (R.R.R.A. 92-93)
- ASSISTANT GENERAL MANAGER (R.R.R.A. 91-92) Liquor Ops division
- 2 years service with private Accounting firm

MAKE YOUR MONEY WORK, Effectively & Economically.

VOTE
TREVOR MULZER
FOR FINANCE COMMISSIONER

W
E
N
D
Y

STEWART

PRACTICAL EXPERIENCE!

- | | |
|--|--|
|  Twice elected as CUSA |  Private Sector Financing |
|  Financial Review Committee Chair |  Economics Major |
|  Bar Management | |

IT'S YOUR MONEY, MAKE AN INFORMED CHOICE.

VOTE WENDY STEWART
FINANCE COMMISSIONER

ARTS REP 14 TO BE ELECTED

Remember, Council is the legislative authority of CUSA. The elected councillors' term will be from May 1, 1994 until April, 30 1995.

VOTE ON FEBRUARY 8, 9 AND 10!

Voting times will be 11:10 am until 9:10 pm each day.

Polling locations will be at:

Loeb Tunnel Entrance
Unicentre

Mackenzie Building

Tunnel Junction (near vending machines)

Tunnel Junction between Steacie and Herzberg Buildings

Residence Commons

St. Patrick's Building

For further information, please contact James Rilett, Chief Electoral Officer, at 127D Unicentre, 788-2600 ext.1648.

Michael BARBOUR

Loreto ESTAY

Looking Out For Your Money

BETTS
Colin

Vote for
Arts and Social Science
Rep. '94-'95

CARLETON PROUD

Re-elect

RYAN BUTT

ARTS AND SOCIAL SCIENCE REP.

Experienced
Understanding
Hard Working

VOTE
RYAN
BUTT!

Christian Dallaire

Before anything can be accomplished we need to know what YOU the voter wants and needs. This can only be achieved by hard work, dedication and a constant relational communication. This is imperative and I realize that there's a lot of work to be done and I'm willing to DO IT!" - C. Dallaire

Arts & Social Science rep

ELECT JUDY

DOMINICK

FOR ARTS & SOCIAL SCIENCES COUNCILOR

Re-elect

JOHN EDWARDS

ARTS/SOC. SCI.

He'll turn CUSA on its ear.

Loreto ESTAY

Michael BARBOUR

Looking Out For Your Money

Re-elect

TOM

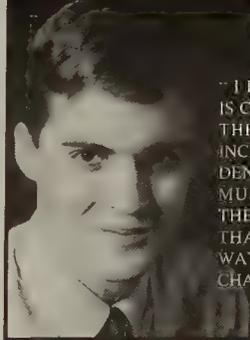

GOLEM

In 1993:

- Head Facilitator
- Long Range Planning Committee Chair
- NUG Representative - Law

VOTE for Experience and Dedication on your CUSA Council.

STEPHEN HUYCKE
ARTS & SOCIAL SCIENCES

"I BELIEVE THAT THE AVERAGE STUDENT IS CONCERNED WITH DOLLARS AND CENTS. THE PROBABILITY OF HIGH TUITION INCREASES WORRIES ANY CARLETON STUDENT. I BELIEVE THAT STUDENT COUNCIL MUST FIND NEW METHODS TO PAY FOR THE SERVICES THEY OFFER. IF ELECTED THAT'S WHAT I PLAN TO DO, FIND NEW WAYS OF PAYING FOR SERVICES WITHOUT CHARGING STUDENTS ANY MORE CASH."

PREPARING FOR THE 21ST CENTURY

JENKINS
Heather

Vote for
Arts and Social Science
Rep. '94-'95

CARLETON PROUD

BRIAN JONES

KEVIN LACEY

A NEW WAVE IN STUDENT POLITICS

ARTS AND SOCIAL SCIENCE

RYAN
LAM

ARTS AND SOCIAL SCIENCE REP

For ARTS / SOCIAL SCIENCES

Personal message:

In my two years at Carleton, my commitment to academics, campus safety and students' interest have been reflected in my involvement in New University Government (NUG), Foot Patrol and the Mass Communication Society.

For a STRONG VOICE in CUSA COUNCIL VOTE

for
PIERRE LEDUC

A vote for PIERRE LEDUC is a vote for continued strong commitments.

Stop the rhetoric.

Travis
Lindgren

ARTS & SOCIAL SCIENCES

DAVID MACDONALD

ELECT
EXPERIENCE
ABILITY INTEGRITY

COREY MULVIHILL

ARTS / SOCIAL SCIENCE REPRESENTATIVE

SCOTT PARE

ARTS & SOCIAL SCIENCE REP

*A Strong
Voice for Your Concerns*

VOTE FOR: JONATHAN POSTNER

Better CUSA-R.R.R.A.
Communication
Fix the C.F.S.
N.U.G.

Change
Lower Tuition
Improved
Academics

✓ REAY, Ian

Remember your
2 R's Reay & Reid

Safety
Sports Funding
Residence
Frosh

0% Student Fee Increases
Better Awareness of
Student Services
Change for Progress

✓ REID, Wendy

Safety
Sports Funding
Residence
Frosh

0% Student Fee Increases
Better Awareness of
Student Services
Change for Progress

✓ REID, Wendy

Remember your
2 R's Reay & Reid

Better CUSA-R.R.R.A.
Communication
Fix the C.F.S.
N.U.G.

Change
Lower Tuition Improved
Academics

✓ REAY, Ian

John
Wayne
ROSS

Continuing in the tradition set as Student Academic Action Bureau Coordinator;

Speaking out for Students' concerns

CHRIS SCHNURR

*No Student, regardless of sex, ethnicity, religion or sexuality should feel threatened at Carleton in any way. CUSA's integrity can be restored through a sound, open-minded fiscal policy and a responsive social agenda.
Partisan politics are for politicians, CUSA is for Carleton students.*

ARTS REP 14 TO BE ELECTED

Perry "Shaman Long Hair" Simpson (running mate: Sandy Wakeling)

5'11", Green Eyes, Brown Hair. Date Rape Prevention Educator 93-94.
Political Science III. Facilitator 93-94.
Peer Counsellor 92-93, 93-94. Rezzie 91-92, 92-93.

Shaman of the HILLPEOPLE.
Not a bad little dancer.

Interests: Acoustic guitar, skating, breakdancing, Elvis-impersonating & cartoons.

"Sandy and I want to make Carleton a more safe, more productive, and much more fun place for every student. We will do our best to make CUSA look mah-velous."

YOU DESERVE AN EXPERIENCED CUSA!

TWADDLE WILL:

- lobby for a student Food Bank on campus.
- propose a debate & referendum on CFS membership and fees
- lobby for a Human Rights Board composed of student rep's to advocate on behalf of students
- lobby for a Students of Colour Centre

RENÉE TWADDLE- WORKING FOR YOU!

TWADDLE

ARTS & SOCIAL SCIENCES REP

Sandy "The Sandman" Wakeling (running mate: Perry Simpson)

5'10", Blue Eyes, Brown Hair (the one on the right). Transitions Program Psychology III. Volunteer 93-94.

Date Rape Prevention Peer Educator 93-94. Facilitator 93-94.
Foot Patrol 91-93
Rezzie 3rd Stormont 91-92.

Interests: Harmonica, skiing, cartoons, windsurfing, haiku poetry.

"Perry and I will do our guaranteed best to ensure your needs are well represented. Together, we can make a difference, because CUSA doesn't have to exert vacuum pressure."

RYAN WARD

ARTS/SOCIAL SCIENCE REP

Prepare to be intellectually stimulated!!!

SHAUN VARDON

SCIENCE REP

There are 3 positions for science student representatives on CUSA council, but no candidates for 94/95. Positions as interim councillors will be available; for information on becoming an interim representative contact the Electoral Office, 127D Unicentre, 788-1648.

COMMERCE REP 3 POSITIONS

Brian Cornier has been acclaimed.

There is still one commerce position available; for information on becoming an interim representative contact the Electoral Office, 127D Unicentre, 788-1648

CONGRATULATIONS BRIAN!

Daniel Maloley has been acclaimed.

There is still one commerce position available; for information on becoming an interim representative contact the Electoral Office, 127D Unicentre, 788-1648

CONGRATULATIONS DANIEL!

ENGINEERING 3 POSITIONS

As the legends foretold, he appeared out of the arctic mist of Mackenzie field during the first fullmoon. Ominously, his attention turned towards the Unicentre, and all he gazed upon were taken with fear and dread. Trees wailed at his passing; the earth trembled under his foot. After a year hiatus, DOOM had returned to CUSA council, and his name was:

SNARL

Carl Hentschel
acclaimed as
CUSA Engineering Rep.

Be afraid mortals. Be very afraid.

Craig Taylor

has been acclaimed.

"Thanks for all your support!"

There is still one engineering position available.
for information on becoming an interim representative
contact the Electoral Office, 127D Unicentre, 788-1648.

CONGRATULATIONS CRAIG!

JOURNALISM REP

There is 1 position for a journalism student representative

on CUSA council, but no candidates for 94/95.

A position as interim councillor will be available;
for information on becoming an interim representative
contact the Electoral Office, 127D Unicentre, 788-1648.

ARCHITECTURE REP

Sheldon Baker

has been acclaimed.

CONGRATULATIONS SHELDON!

COMPUTER SCIENCE REP

There is 1 position for a computer science student representative

on CUSA council, but no candidates for 94/95.

A position as interim councillor will be available;
for information on becoming an interim representative
contact the Electoral Office, 127D Unicentre, 788-1648.

INDUSTRIAL DESIGN REP

There is 1 position for an industrial design student representative

on CUSA council, but no candidates for 94/95.

A position as interim councillor will be available;
for information on becoming an interim representative
contact the Electoral Office, 127D Unicentre, 788-1648.

SPECIAL STUDENT REP

There are 3 positions for special student representatives

on CUSA council, but no candidates for 94/95.

Positions as interim councillors will be available;
for information on becoming an interim representative
contact the Electoral Office, 127D Unicentre, 788-1648.

Remember, Council is the legislative authority of CUSA. The elected councillors' term will be from May 1, 1994 until April 30 1995.

VOTE ON FEBRUARY 8, 9 AND 10!

Voting times will be 11:10 am until 9:10 pm each day.

Polling locations will be at:

Loeb Tunnel Entrance

Residence Commons

Mackenzie Building

Tunnel Junction between Steacie and Herzberg Buildings

Unicentre

St. Patrick's Building

Tunnel Junction

For further information, please contact James Rilett, Chief Electoral Officer, at 127D Unicentre, 788-2600 ext.1648.

The Board of Governors is the highest governing body on Campus, with authority over the setting of the University budget, the level of tuition, University fundraising programmes, new buildings on campus, etc. There are only two undergrad student members of the Board. If you care about the University's responsibility to its students, follow the campaigns of the students on these pages, and VOTE!

The senate is the highest academic decision-making body at Carleton, and its decisions affect virtually every aspect of your academic life. It determines admissions and graduation requirements; it conducts exams; it grants degrees and diplomas; it awards scholarships, medals, and prizes. Eight undergrad and two graduate students are elected to sit on the Senate each year. Only NUG reps (New University Government) may run for these positions.

John

EDWARDS

- The charisma of a beach ball
- Duller than a year-old pencil
- Stiffer than plywood
- Drier than the Sahara

BORED OF GOVERNORS

Maime Silver

The Board of Governors is the highest governing body on campus. The Board has authority on setting the University budget, setting the level of tuition and deciding on new construction projects.

There are only two undergraduate students on the Board.

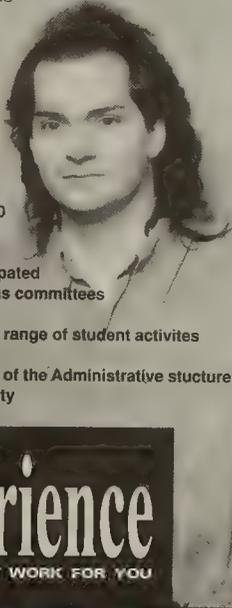

BOARD OF GOVERNORS

BOARD OF GOVERNORS 2 TO BE ELECTED

To be an effective representative on the Board of Governors, you need a candidate with an awareness of student issues and hands on administrative experience...

- Directly lobbied the Minister of Colleges and Universities
- supervised $200,000 Orientation budget
- productively participated in numerous campus committees
- co-ordinated a wide range of student activities
- in-depth knowledge of the Administrative structure of Carleton University

Richard

Stanton

Board of Governors

Experience

LET IT WORK FOR YOU

Vote

W
E
N
D
Y

STEWART

Your INFORMED and DEDICATED Voice

For BOARD of GOVERNORS

SOCIAL SCIENCE SENATE 2 TO BE ELECTED

RE-ELECT:

TRAVIS LINDGREN

FOR: SENATE

Elect

RYAN BUTT

SENATE-SOCIAL SCIENCE

A STRONG VOICE FOR STUDENTS IN THE FIGHT FOR A BETTER EDUCATION FOR ALL!

SENATE: SOCIAL SCIENCE

○ REAY, Ian

- ITV
- Accountability & Communication
- NO Academic Cutbacks

Make your voice count!!

Carleton University

KEEP THIS DOOR OPEN.

JOHN WELLS

Senate – Social Science

ARTS SENATE ARCHITECTURE/INDUSTRIAL DESIGN

There are 2 positions available for undergraduate arts student members of Carleton's Senate.

There is 1 position available for undergraduate architecture/industrial design student members of Carleton's Senate.

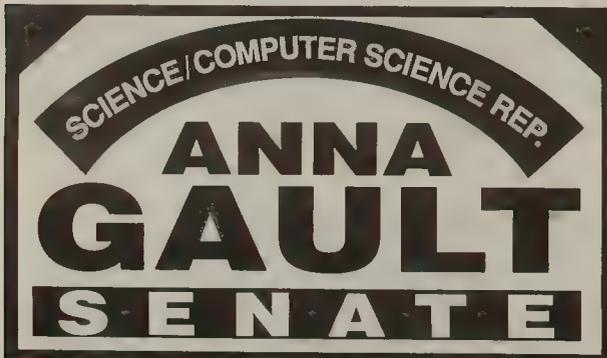

ENGINEERING SENATE 1 TO BE ELECTED

Senate Engineering
David
KRIZAN
Experience: •NUG Engineering Faculty Rep
•CUSA Engineering Councilor

SENTHOORAN SRIDAS

COMPUTER SCIENCE/SCIENCE

SCIENCE/COMPUTER SCIENCE REP.
ANNA
GAULT
SENATE

GRADUATE STUDIES & RESEARCH

There are 2 positions available for graduate student members of Carleton's Senate.

The 1994 CUSA General Elections Supplement was designed & produced by Stacy Fietz & Blair Griezic.

It was printed by Performance Printing Ltd. 65 Lorne St., Smiths Falls.

The 1994 Carleton University Students' Association General Election Supplement, produced on behalf of the Chief Electoral Officer by the CUSA Publications office, is a paid advertising insert in the February 3, 1994 edition of The Charlatan through the agreement and cooperation of Charlatan Publications, Inc. All candidates have been provided space in this publication, without exception, in accordance with the Consolidated Electoral Code, By Law VII of the Carleton University Students' Association, Inc. All candidates were formally notified of their right to have promotional material included in this publication. The CUSA Publications Office accepts no responsibility for any omission or errors; no omission or error which may appear in this publication shall be grounds for a constitutional appeal by any candidate or offended party. No portion of this publication may be reproduced or transmitted in any form or by any means, electronic, or mechanical, including photocopying and faxing, without the express, written permission of the Chief Electoral Officer and the Carleton University Student's Association.

© Copyright 1994 by Carleton University Student's Association, Inc. All Rights reserved.

t h e
CHARLATAN

CARLETON'S INDEPENDENT STUDENT NEWSPAPER

BLACK HOLOCAUST

NEVER

AGAIN

VOLUME 23

ISSUE 22

FEBRUARY 10

1994

3 FOR 1 OR 50 % OFF

Preston Optical

Bring in this ad
for an extra 10% OFF

EYEWEAR SALE

Buy any pair of prescription glasses at regular price and receive a second pair of glasses of equal or lesser value plus a pair of daily wear soft contact lenses absolutely FREE!!!

Combination of 2 or 3 prescriptions. May be used with friends or family members for the 3 for 1 sale.

FRAMES AND LENSES

Buy one pair of prescription glasses and receive 50% OFF on both your frame and lenses

230-0477

444 Preston St.

(2 BLOCKS FROM DOWS LAKE PAVILLION)

WHERE CAN YOU AND YOUR DATE EAT A GREAT DINNER...FOR LESS THAN $90!!!

FEBRUARY COUPON

Full Course Dinner
only

99¢

(max. value $13.50)

order any full course dinner at reg. price & receive a second dinner of equal or lesser value for 99¢

Not valid with any other offer. PST & GST extra (coupon valid from Feb. 1 - Feb. 28, 1994)

2446 Bank at Hunt Club
(Towngate Plaza)
736-6677
Reservations & Banquet
Facilities Available

THE NOODLE WORKS

Ottawa South's
Finest Sunday
Brunch 10:30-2:30

FULL 3 COURSE DINNER - Soup or Salad, Fresh Baked San Francisco Sourdough Bread, Entree Selection, Spumoni Ice Cream, Coffee or Tea

MARCH COUPON

Full Course Dinner
only

99¢

(max. value $13.50)

order any full course dinner at reg. price & receive a second dinner of equal or lesser value for 99¢

Not valid with any other offer. PST & GST extra. (coupon valid from March 1 - March 31, 1994)

HOMEMADE PASTA DISHES - VEAL - CHICKEN - MORE

SCHADILLAC

SALOON
Ottawa's Only
Authentic
Western Saloon

*Beverage Specials
from Monday to Wednesday*

TONIGHT
Thurs. Feb. 10
"Lucky Ron"
No Cover

Classic Rock and Roll Every Night

Come see us down
in the Byward Market

105 Murray St.
241-2233

SCHADILLAC RANCH

Boulet
Boots
starting at $169.00

The Lowest Prices
Guaranteed!
Convenient Location
in the Byward Market
99 Clarence St.
562-1320

HOME OF THE SOUTH END BLUES

TUCSON ROADHOUSE

Feb. 11/12
Spirit Brothers
from Montreal

COMING UP
Feb. 18/19
In City Dreams

2440 Bank Street (Bank at Huntclub) Ottawa
For Entertainment Information call 738-7586

Feb. 11/12
Paul James

COMING UP
Feb. 18/19
Jack DeKaiser

1541 Merivale Road, Ottawa
For Entertainment Information call 228-6666

GRAND CENTRAL

"The Mother of All Pizzas"
141 George St. 241-2727

SATURDAY & SUNDAY
Brunch 10AM to 3PM
Over 100 items to choose from $7.99
+taxes

introducing
STEAK

Dinner
$5.99
+taxes

EVENTS

Wed. February 2nd: Abannah M'Es & Carl Dixon
Thurs. Feb. 3rd: The Odds & Rymes with Orange
Thurs. Feb. 17th: Rail I.E.C. & Moist
Rock for the Ottawa Food Bank
Wed. March 2nd: TROOPER
Wed. March 16th: Colin James
Thurs. March 17th: Spirit of the West

ZAPHOD

BEEBLEBROX
FRESHNESS GUARANTEED

BINGO JET INTERNATIONAL
8 PM TUESDAYS

THURS. FEB. 10 (9PM) $1

CLAYMOUTH & FINGER

FRI. FEB. 11 (9PM) $6

+ The Morganfields

SAT. FEB. 12 (8PM)

10th EUGENE'S ANNIVERSARY PARTY

WED. FEB. 16 (9PM) $7

JUNKHOUSE
+ Zen Dingalow

MUSIC * BEVERAGES * ADVENTURE
27 YORK ST.

CUSA election flaw-ridden

by Derek DeCloet
Charlatan Staff

Poorly organized debates, questionable campaigning tactics and an obviously biased poll clerk who may have been left to mind a ballot box alone.

These are just some of the problems the Carleton University Students' Association has run into during its 1994 election campaign.

Some of the key concerns:

- There have been two all-candidate debates for all races, including president, finance commissioner, senate, board of governors and arts and social sciences representatives in Baker Lounge on Feb. 2 and in Rooster's on Feb. 3.

CUSA's constitution calls for at least four all-candidate debates. A Jan. 31 debate in the Fenn Lounge was cancelled because of booking problems.

"With the Fenn debate being cut, I don't know how many people in residence are aware of the CUSA election (issues)," says Tom Golem, a candidate for arts and social sciences.

Another arts debate, scheduled for Baker Lounge Feb. 7, was cancelled because nobody showed up to listen.

Two additional debates for president, finance commissioner and board of governors went ahead as scheduled in Rooster's Feb. 7. The presidential candidates debated on CKCU-FM Feb. 4.

- The debates have been poorly publicized and the only ones that have been well attended have been held in Rooster's, where large crowds usually gather anyway.

Even some of the candidates were in the dark about the debates. Todd McAllister, a candidate for president and board of governors, says he found out about one of the debates by accident. He showed up for a board of governors debate in Rooster's and was told there was also a presidential debate after the board debate. He says poor publicity has made the debates almost useless to students.

"I leads me to wonder how many students actually benefited from having the debates," he says.

- Several candidates have complained about shady campaign tactics of opponents. Richard Stanton was warned by chief electoral officer James Rilett about campaigning in Oliver's Feb. 2. It's against the constitution to campaign in a commercial place.

Stanton says he was there with friends and was simply answering questions from interested voters. "It wasn't like I was going around actively soliciting votes," he says.

McAllister alleges that one of Stanton's campaign workers, who is also working as a poll clerk, was left alone at her poll for half an hour during the first day of voting. A poll clerk is not allowed to take ballots if he or she is alone.

Rilett says he's looking into the matter, but no one has been fired and no candidates will be disciplined.

Rilett: trying to control CUSA's election chaos.

CHRIS RUTALE-SMITH

Presidential candidate Elaine Silver also complained that a Stanton pamphlet was clearly visible in finance commissioner René Faucher's office, making it look like a CUSA endorsement of Stanton.

- Rilett has been accused of applying the rules—like the one Stanton broke for campaigning in Oliver's—too liberally.

"There's been talk about candidates getting warnings for things that probably would have disqualified them in years past," says John Edwards, who's running for board of governors and arts representative.

- Then, there are the usual complaints about posters. Students say there are too many of them. Candidates complain that students or other candidates rip them down. But since few students have seen the debates, the posters are important to a candidate's image.

"Really, you're buying the electorate," says Kristine Haselsteiner, vice-president external and CEO in 1991-92. "The only way you can see a name over and over again in a multitude of posters is if you have the most artistic and the most flamboyant posters that really shocks you and stands out, and the only way to do it is if you have the money to back yourself up."

Though candidates have spending limits for posters and other election material, the amount of money they dish out is calculated by set guidelines of how much a poster should cost, not how much it actually costs.

For example, finance commissioner candidate Rob Jamieson's fancy blue and orange posters cost him about 50 cents a piece for 1,000 posters.

But CUSA calculates the posters at six cents each. That allows Jamieson to run a glossy campaign — he says he has spent over $1,200 — staying within the president and finance commissioner spending limit of $150.

"There's something wrong with a system like that," says Golem.

Stanton says he's spent $500 on his campaign, McAllister says he's spent $250 and presidential candidate Brenda Kennedy says she's spent $800.

The candidates have some ideas about how to prevent this annual wallpapering of Carleton. Silver says candidates should not be allowed to have professional printing done.

Stanton says posters should be limited to keep their numbers down. But he admits that until changes are made, "You get sucked into it. You have to cover the campus with posters (to compete)."

"We'll have to do something," says Rilett, who may ask CUSA to regulate the amount in real dollars candidates are allowed to spend on posters. "People think it looks silly and it does." □

Undergrad TAs confused about vote

by Ryan Nakashima
Charlatan Staff

With a strike vote set for Feb. 15-17, some undergraduate teaching assistants say they disagree with some of their union local's negotiating positions and aren't happy with its lack of communication.

"I didn't get anything (regarding the strike vote)," says Carmela Graziani, an undergraduate journalism teaching assistant.

She only found out about a Feb. 2 meeting between journalism, mass communications and social work teaching assistants to discuss the strike vote process when approached by a Charlatan reporter the next day.

Michel Roy, president of the Canadian Union of Public Employees Local 2323, says the February vote will give the union a mandate heading into the final mediation meeting March 7.

After mediation, the local's 1,200 members, including 200 to 300 undergraduates, will vote on whether to accept a final offer made by the university. If the local votes to strike and rejects the final university offer, it will be legally allowed to strike March 8.

The local is asking for a tuition freeze, a five per cent wage increase and an extra 10 paid hours each year. If accepted by the university, the tuition freeze would maintain a local member's tuition fees for the duration of their employment.

The university has offered the local no tuition freeze and no wage increase, according to Dave Van Dine, a member of the university administration negotiation team.

One local request is for undergraduate teaching assistants to be guaranteed two school terms of work instead of one. Graduate teaching assistants are guaranteed four terms of work.

Currently, undergraduate teaching assistants might not be re-hired in the second term if the professor wants to hire a different teaching assistant, says Roy, although he hasn't heard of this happening.

Some undergraduates say getting the guarantee is not worth striking over.

"As far as we're concerned, the contract with the university ends at the end of the term," says Chulaka Ailapperuma, a fourth-year computer science teaching assistant.

Robert Telka, another fourth-year computer science teaching assistant, says jobs in the second term should remain open to the best candidates, instead of being guaranteed to first-term teaching assistants.

Roy calls the undergraduates' stance frustrating.

"It's completely irrational to ask not to be protected. Even if you work at McDonald's, you don't have to apply for your job every year."

Ailapperuma and Telka also don't think a strike is warranted over local positions such as a tuition freeze or a five per cent salary increase.

"I'm not going to tell my professor, 'no, I'm not going to work for you any more,'" says Ailapperuma.

"(A strike) will hurt the university as a whole. Students suffer. Professors suffer," says Telka.

Most undergraduate teaching assistants in journalism, mass communication and social work missed their local meeting because they weren't told about it by their department's union representatives.

"There was only one undergrad TA at the (Feb. 2) meeting," says Carol Risebrough, a graduate student and teaching assistant in mass communications. The local says about 20 teaching assistants were there.

Departmental meetings were held Jan. 28 to Feb. 10 to update local members on the negotiating process and on issues relating to the strike vote, says Roy.

Roy says the local relies on informal departmental contacts to communicate with its teaching assistants.

Byron Chu, the journalism representative for the local and a graduate student, says "I don't even know who the undergrad TAs are."

Roy says it was Chu's job to contact the journalism local members, but Chu says he never received a memo to be delivered to teaching assistants' mailboxes. Roy says it's up to the contact people to write their own memos.

Chu adds he did tell those teaching assistants in his graduate school classes to attend the Feb. 2 meeting. □ on the cover	The cover was conceptualized by a collective of Black students at Carleton. They write: "When we say 'The Black Holocaust ... Never Again' we mean just that. We stand united to fight and overcome any means of oppression against us. In this belief we are building a brighter future."

	Cover Art By Malcolm Earle
	arts	23
	classifieds	18
	national	9
	news	3
	opinion	11
	science	8
	sports	19
	Black History Supplement	13

index

Memos question out-of-class conduct

by Jane Tattersall
Charlatan Staff

A memo from the Carleton University Students' Association to the university's departmental chairs and directors has sparked a debate over whether professors and students should socialize after class.

CUSA's director of services, Theresa Cowan, says she has received both positive and negative reaction since writing the Jan. 10 memo.

In the memo, Cowan expresses concern over the frequency with which Carleton professors socialize and attend parties with students.

She says this practice may be considered a means for professors to establish a better working relationship with their students, but writes "... this type of social activity creates a haven for harassment and coercion and gives students who participate the advantage of developing a comraderie (sic) with their instructor.

"This advantage results in the creation of an unlevel playing field for those who do not feel comfortable in such a situation, and those who cannot afford the luxury of a week-end party or after-class drinks."

Cowan says the tone of the memo is "constructive" and "conversation-stimulating."

"I think that what I was saying was 'Think about this, I mean, you're not being fair to all of your students. You know, it's really nice that you do this, and open your home to students, but think about what kind of playing field you are creating for students who can't do this sort of thing.'"

The memo was also circulated to the university's status of women office and the women's centre.

Jane Keeler, a counsellor and part-time human rights educator on campus, says she supports the memo because the issue has to be discussed and departments have to become more aware of it.

But Klaus Pohle, a Carleton journalism professor, has some concerns about the memo.

"We have to use our common sense here. I mean, there's appropriate socializing and there's inappropriate socializing, and as long as it doesn't interfere with making good judgments about people when it comes to grades, it (socializing) seems totally appropriate to me."

Pohle says the memo has had no effect on departments, but adds "I do agree that it is useful to remind people, but I think most of us are grown up enough and mature enough as adults to know how to behave and not to behave."

Cowan says people opposed to the memo have legitimate concerns.

"They're very sincere and they're very worried about being attacked, so rather than looking (at) whether these are real concerns that need to be sorted out, they go, 'How might it impinge on me?' and see it like that," says Cowan.

On Jan. 28 Cowan issued a second memo to clarify the first one.

"The memo was intended to stimulate discussion and to recognize some of the negative repercussions such invitations could have. It was not written to extinguish all instructor-student interaction, it was intended to remind instructors that they hold positions of power, and that this power should never be abused," writes Cowan in the second memo.

Student reaction to the controversy has been low-key, mostly because the memo was only sent out to academic departments. But students who know about the memo have conflicting views.

Trish Hurley, a fourth-year journalism student, says the memo goes too far.

"I've been to a professor's house for a party. Maybe with some professors students feel that their mark was dependent on it. I didn't feel that way with this particular professor," she says.

"I felt there was a little pressure to go but in no way was I uncomfortable about going. It was a nice way to see that your professors are human beings. It wasn't a big deal at all and I never saw it as one. I think this CUSA thing is ridiculous," she says.

Lisa Melo, a first-year political science and law major, says she hasn't been involved in any type of social activity with her professors, but says some of the people on her residence floor have.

"I think it is inappropriate because there has to be a certain degree of professionalism, and they are professionals."

"I agree with the letter that it (socializing) does cause favoritism and is unfair to students."

"If I didn't go (to a party) and some other students went and they spent the whole evening with the professor and got to know him well, that professor would remember those students more and I think it would definitely be biased." □

Student charged for starting fire in Unicentre

by Angie Gallop
Charlatan Staff

A Carleton student set fire to a bag of garbage and threw it in the Unicentre elevator on the third floor of the Unicentre the night of Jan. 26.

Daniel Thibeault, 23, has been charged with arson and endangering human life.

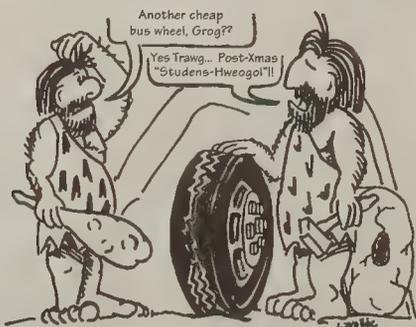

The Unicentre security guard on patrol that night, who wished to remain anonymous, says the garbage was paper-towel rubbish probably left near the elevator by the cleaners.

The student was apprehended and brought to campus security by a Unicentre cleaner. Unicentre security says there was only superficial damage to the elevator.

Len Boudreault, assistant director of the department of university safety, says there is no known motive behind the student's actions. □

VOYAGEUR RE-INVENTS THE WHEEL!

Another cheap bus wheel, Grog?
Yes Trawg... Post-Xmas "Students-Hweogol!"

"STUDENS-HWEOGOL"?? "Students' Wheels" to the uninitiated like TRAWG. Yes, looks like GROG has taken a turn for the worse and gone off to study Old English this term, or should we say Future English for him?! Anyway, for you the "studens", it means a good deal. Take advantage of GROG's post-Xmas deflationary, antiquarian stance and travel between Ottawa and Toronto at just $59.* return with Voyageur.

Grog's busy with his ancient manuscripts right through March 30th 1994. But you must return by that date!!

TORONTO - OTTAWA $59.*

238-5900

Voyageur

*CONDITIONS

You must be 25 years of age or less and present a valid 1993-94 fulltime studies Student ID card (cards issued in previous school years must be validated for '93-94) or a Registrar's Confirmation of Enrollment. No discount on one way fare available. Taxes as applicable are extra. All travel must be completed by March 29th, 1994.

The long hot summer just got very cool

1994 AUDITIONS

Okay, what did you do last summer? Did you go where no man has gone before? Did you drive a stock car? Did you perform for thousands of people? NOT! Well, there's always THIS Summer. You can do any of these things and get paid for it! It's just too cool.

Paramount Parks is holding auditions for the 1994 Summer Season at Paramount Canada's Wonderland. We need experienced technicians, singers, dancers, characters, actors, and variety performers of all types.

If you're over 16, call 905/832-7454, or write: Paramount Canada's Wonderland 9580 Janik Street, P.O. Box 624, Vaughan, Ontario L6A 1S6. Paramount Parks would like to turn your summer break into your big break!

Ottawa, Ontario
Tuesday, February 15
Holiday Inn, Ottawa Market Square
Laurier Room/McDonagh Room
12:00, Technicians, Characters, Escorts
12:00, Variety Performers
12:30, Singers, Actors
1:30, Dancers

Vaughan, Ontario
Saturday, February 12
Sunday, February 13
Paramount Canada's Wonderland
The Paramount Theatre
12:00, Technicians, Characters, Escorts
12:30, Variety Performers
12:30, Singers, Actors
2:30, Dancers

T.M. & Copyright © 1994 Paramount Parks Inc. All Rights Reserved.

Admin wants Unicentre store to butt out

by Naomi Bock
Charlatan Staff

Some Carleton administrators are trying to enforce a policy which prohibits the Unicentre store from selling cigarettes.

René Faucher, finance commissioner for the Carleton University Students' Association, says the store's profits would be "wiped out" without cigarettes.

But selling them at the store is a violation of a university policy which allows them to be sold only where they can be smoked, says Spruce Riordon, Carleton's vice-president of finance and administration.

"It's a method of reducing the sale of cigarettes," says Riordon.

When university administration decided on the policy in 1991, two letters were sent to CUSA about the policy and asking for comments, says Beverly Plato, manager of occupational health and safety for the university. Plato says CUSA never responded that year.

She says the policy was implemented in July 1992, but CUSA is still selling cigarettes at the store. After sending a third letter to CUSA last year, she turned the matter over to Riordon.

Riordon says restricting students' rights to buy tobacco is justifiable due to the "tremendous amount of research" on the health risks.

"It's a good idea to discourage smoking," says Riordon.

Faucher says the store would lose the profit it makes from cigarettes, which was $40,000 last year. The store sold $249,000 in tobacco products last year. Faucher says if the store loses this money, it might have to close, since the store came out with only $9,000 in net income

Unicentre store profits could be in jeopardy without smoke sales.

last year.

"If it's losing money, then we can't afford to run it," says Faucher.

Riordon says CUSA will simply have to use "a little bit of ingenuity" to make up for lost profits. He says the bookstore "has the same problem," because the policy has prohibited it from selling cigarettes as well.

But Katherine Main, Riordon's executive assistant, says CUSA complains that the Peppermill Express booth, which sells cigarettes and candy, takes revenue away from the students. Selling tobacco here is consistent with the university's policy because the Peppermill cafeteria has a smoking area.

The university takes a direct profit from cigarettes sold at the Peppermill Express, according to James Johnston, assistant director of food services and liquor operations at the department of housing and food services. He says Capital Foods is paid a fee to run the cafeteria and the cigarette and candy booth, but all costs and profits are absorbed by the university.

Kevin McGlynn, the Unicentre store manager, says the decision to ban tobacco sales in non-smoking areas breaks with the original contract between CUSA and the university, which allows the store to sell cigarettes. McGlynn says the store's contract hasn't been changed to reflect the policy yet.

He says cigarettes lure customers to the store. "We are kind of hidden in the back end of the hallway, and like most businesses, it's used to attract people."

Riordon says he's unsure of what administration will do if CUSA doesn't comply with the policy.

"We'll cross that bridge when we come to it," he says.

Discussions between CUSA and the university take place under the joint projects committee, which looks at campus commercial activities. Main, a committee member, says the university has "tried to be very firm" about its stance on smoking.

Main says the university will not enforce the policy itself.

"That doesn't make for good relationships," she says.

CUSA President Lucy Watson, says cigarette sales won't be the only sales lost if cigarettes aren't allowed at the store. "People who go in to buy cigarettes end up picking up other extra items," she says.

Although the rule would still allow CUSA to sell cigarettes in Rooster's and Oliver's, Faucher says those places are "not equipped for it."

Watson says the lines would be too long and identification would be harder to check.

Don McEown, executive assistant to Carleton's president, says the university has the right to impose rules on operations on its land.

"At the end of the day, the university has the legal right of an owner," he says.

Main says discussions have been slow because of the changing of the CUSA executive every year.

"Someone can agree to something, but two months later you have a new executive, and they're saying, 'We never agreed to this.'"

Administration and the CUSA executive say the matter is not a priority now, and don't expect a resolution before the end of the school year.

Campus patrol officer Gaston Taylor gets new job

by Brandie Weikle
Charlatan Staff

To the surprise of some students involved in campus safety, the department of university safety has hired an officer to tackle problems of personal safety and crime prevention on campus.

Gaston Taylor, a Carleton patrol officer for five years, started his new job as crime prevention and support services officer Feb. 2.

"He will be a contact point for the community to address various concerns, for instance, women's issues (and) personal safety issues," says Len Boudreault, the department's assistant director.

According to his job description, Taylor will communicate between the patrol officers and the Carleton community and recommend public safety and crime awareness programs. He will oversee the operation of alarm systems and the installation of any new surveillance equipment.

Carleton University Students' Association President Lucy Watson, who sits on the university's advisory committee on personal safety, says she was not informed of the department's plans. She says no one at CUSA was consulted about Taylor's hiring.

"We were not aware," says Watson. "We were not consulted or advised. I never received any information about it."

Carleton Women's Centre co-ordinator Renée Twaddle says she wasn't informed about Taylor's hiring either.

Taylor will also attend meetings of various committees on campus as a resource person on personal safety and will be involved in the training of Foot Patrol volunteers.

Foot Patrol co-ordinator Brenda Kennedy says she did not hear the department of university safety was in the process of hiring someone for this position, only that they were hoping to.

"If this person is going to be working closely with the Foot Patrol, which I'm sure he is, I would have like to have heard more," says Kennedy. "But I've met him and he seems nice. I'm sure he's the best person for the job."

Groups like the university's advisory committee on personal safety, the Foot Patrol and the Carleton Women's Centre were not consulted because it was an internal promotion, says Boudreault.

"The university has a collective agreement with the union that says if there is a person inside that is qualified, we have to give (the job) to that person," says

Boudreault.

If the department had been unable to fill the position from among existing staff members, he says a hiring board comprised of interested groups, including students, would have been put together.

Taylor "has extensive experience in crime prevention," says Boudreault. Taylor served with the Guyana Police for 10 years before coming to Canada. Boudreault says Taylor is qualified to mediate conflicts that relate to cultural misunderstandings.

"The position will certainly be a challenge for me," says Taylor. He says he will teach "common-sense" personal safety to help people make their own living environment a safer place to be.

TAYLOR cont'd on pg. 6.

VOYAGEZ MIEUX COVOITUREZ!

AUTOMOBILISTES PASSAGERS

MONTREAL $10*	QUEBEC $29
TORONTO $24	SHERBROOKE $25

VANCOUVER, FLORIDE & AUTRES...

- PRIX PAR PASSAGER
- $6 CARTE DE MEMBRE
- 15 BUREAUX A TRAVERS LE PAYS
- PIÈCES D'IDENTITÉ

238 DALHOUSIE

ALLO STOP 562-8248

TORONTO 323-0874 - MONTRÉAL 985-3032

A paid message from those of us within the Union who care (and from our own pockets):

CUPE 2323

VOTE AGAINST A STRIKE!

As you may or may not already know; negotiations between CUPE 2323 and Carleton University have broken down, and a STRIKE vote has been called by the Union for the 15th, 16th, and 17th of February, 1994.

We are being enticed by the Union representatives with promises of increased wages and/or a tuition freeze. We are fortunate to have a job, and were hired under conditions that we agreed with. Those conditions have not changed. In the event of a strike, the University will essentially be shut down. We will have no job, and will not get paid. The Union is not living in reality!

The Union is simply trying to get more bargaining power for their own cause. They will go on strike to reach this objective. Their demands are based upon a survey which one-fifth of the membership returned in 92/93. The Union is misrepresenting their members, leaving many of us without a voice.

REMEMBER THIS WHEN YOU GO VOTE!

GLB rep left out of CFS-O delegation

by Karolina Srulek
Charlatan Staff

A student representative from the Gay, Lesbian and Bisexual Centre was left off a conference delegation so another executive member from the Carleton University Students' Association could attend.

Holly White, a member of the centre, was excluded last-minute from the CUSA delegation going to the Canadian Federation of Students-Ontario conference Jan. 14-20 in Sault Ste. Marie after the centre was informed in December that a delegate could go.

The original delegation to the CFS-O conference was supposed to include a student with a disability, a gay, lesbian or bisexual student, CUSA director of academics Gary Anandasangaree and an aboriginal student, Tim O'loam, says CUSA president Lucy Watson.

Eventually Watson and vice-president external Kristine Haselsteiner added themselves to the delegation. Watson says no student with a disability could take time off school and White was excluded. Watson says CUSA budgeted to send only four delegates, who ended up being Watson, Haselsteiner, Anandasangaree and O'loam.

Watson called an "emergency executive meeting" on Jan. 9 to find room for Haselsteiner on the delegation. Watson says this was done because Haselsteiner felt strongly that she should attend to continue her work on various CFS-O campaigns.

"If I knew Holly was ready to go, it's something that would have been considered in the meeting," says Watson.

White says she heard she was not going to the conference on Jan. 12 through GLB centre co-ordinator Peter Nogalo — the day before the delegation left.

"I went into the centre and I said to Peter 'what the hell is going on, we're leaving tomorrow and I don't know any-

"If I knew Holly was ready to go, it's something that would have been considered in the meeting."

Lucy Watson, CUSA president thing'," says White. "So Peter made a couple of phone calls and told me I'm not going."

Haselsteiner says it is her job to attend such conferences. As vice-president external, she says she acts as a liaison between the national and provincial wings of CFS. Haselsteiner refused to comment further on the matter.

Haselsteiner's terms of reference, written by Watson, say she is to become chief delegate at CFS and CFS-O conferences in the absence of the president.

"It's not in her (Haselsteiner's) terms of reference to attend the meetings," says Watson, who says she went to the conference as both CFS-O women's commissioner and chief delegate.

"The president has always been chief delegate," says Watson. "I was always going as chief delegate. I don't relinquish that position. I can hold both positions."

The chief delegate holds the final vote on issues brought up at the conference.

"Lucy consulted us on the issues, but even when we were split on issues it was her who had the final decision," says O'loam.

Jamey Heath, a CUSA councillor, says Haselsteiner called him the first week of January, wanting to hold an emergency council meeting to discuss why she wasn't was going as women's commissioner, not as chief delegate.

"Lucy didn't want Kristine to go," says Edwards. "They have been having disagreements and they haven't been getting along."

When Watson was asked if she and Haselsteiner were not getting along, she answered "I don't conduct my business relations on a personal level."

Edwards also says he heard that Watson wanted Anandasangaree, not Haselsteiner, to be chief delegate if she wasn't.

"Kristine was prepared to raise shit — for obvious reasons," says Edwards.

White says she wasn't contacted by Watson by phone or in person.

"It's a case of phone tag," says Watson. "It's really too bad this happened."

White says there should have been a representative of the gay, lesbian and bisexual community at the conference. "The other universities saw the importance of having a GLB representative and the importance of covering those issues." □ going to the conference. Six names are normally needed to carry the power to call an emergency meeting.

"I don't know what happened between the request of the meeting and the eventual makeup of the delegation. All I can say is there was no meeting and Kristine went to Sault Ste. Marie," says Heath.

John Edwards, another CUSA councillor, says he heard from other councillors and service co-ordinators that Watson

TAYLOR cont'd from pg. 5

Taylor's position was introduced to Carleton when Mark Tinlin became director of university safety two years ago, says Boudreault.

The new position is "all part of the community-based policing that we're trying to introduce here," says Boudreault. Last fall, four university patrol officers received special constable status, giving them the power to arrest and press charges on campus. Since then, other patrol officers have been in training at the Ontario Police College in Aylmer.

Boudreault says Taylor will have a three-month training period to establish his duties, and then the department will either sign a contract with him or look for someone else. Taylor will take special constable training on top of his regular duties "when his turn comes up," says Boudreault. The patrol officers receive their training in order of seniority, he says. □

Spring broke?

If spring break suddenly leaves you broke, let Western Union come to your aid.

We can transfer money from Canada to the U.S. in a matter of minutes. And with 22,000 locations worldwide, there's no faster or more convenient way to send and receive money.

So if your spring break leaves you spring broke, let Western Union help you have some funds in the sun.

In the U.S. call
1-800-325-6000

WESTERN UNION | MONEY TRANSFER

In Canada call
1-800-235-0000

The fastest way to send money.™

Hey, don't vote until you read this

by Derek DeCloet and Brent Dowdall
Charlatan Staff

McAllister's dual identity

Presidential candidate Todd McAllister has an interesting political past.

He simultaneously held memberships for both the Progressive Conservatives and the Liberals and once worked as a volunteer in Liberal MP Mac Harb's office.

He says he's not actively involved in either party any more.

In fact, Frank, an Ottawa-based satirical magazine, reported last summer that McAllister was supposed to work on Harb's re-election campaign, but was turfed out when they found out about his Tory connections.

McAllister says that's completely false; he wasn't even in Ottawa last summer, and didn't find out about the article until he returned from his hometown of Brockville, Ont. □

Stanton's RRRRA deficit

When Richard Stanton was president of Rideau River Residence Association in 1990-91, the association ran up the second highest deficit of its history at $41,000.

Stanton blames it on the previous year's executive, which ran up the largest deficit in RRRRA history at $45,000 and, says Stanton, left him with bills to pay.

"When we came in the books were a real mess," he says. "We were stringent on our spending."

But he says it was tough to reduce the deficit because "there are a lot of fixed costs." □

Jamieson inspires Barry

Lloyd Barry says he wouldn't be a presidential candidate if it weren't for CUSA vice-president internal Rob Jamieson.

Barry says he went to talk to Jamieson in January to find out "what it takes to become president."

He says Jamieson told him it would be a waste of time for him to run because he had never been involved and wouldn't know how CUSA works.

"I didn't think there was a need to run until someone on the executive would tell someone not to run," Barry says. "Jamieson pissed me off."

Jamieson says he can't remember the conversation with Barry because he has talked to many students who were interested in running.

"I would never tell anyone not to run." Jamieson says he might have told Barry that he should attend council meetings or run for council or volunteer for CUSA before running for president.

"I probably would've said that," Jamieson says. "If he interpreted it that way, I'll find him and apologize."

Barry, officially a first-year economics student who has attended part-time for two years, says he wants to start a food bank and "incite more non-CUSA hacks to run for any CUSA positions."

He says he's "disgusted" by the amount of money candidates are spending on campaign materials. He says he's spent $18.

"I don't have a thousand bucks to waste on a neon poster war," he says. Whether he wins or not, he says he will get involved in trying to reform the electoral system. □

Here's your meal plan . . .

by Tricia Volpe
Charlatan Staff

Why is it mandatory for students living in residence to buy the meal plan?

You are sitting at the desk in your small room in Glengarry House. All is silent except for the muffled cries of your empty stomach. You try to ignore them, but they become unbearable.

Finally, you drag yourself to a place you dread, to a place you try to avoid at all costs, the residence dining hall. Only one thought enters your mind: Why is it mandatory for me to pay for food I don't want to eat?

People choose to live in residence for various reasons. They may be interested in meeting other people or may enjoy having easy access to university facilities. Eating at the cafeteria operated by Marriott, the company in charge of food services in residence, never seems to be at the top of the list.

The department of housing and food services at Carleton requires that all students who live in residence buy a meal plan for about $2,000 for the full eight months.

James Johnston, the department's assistant director of food services and liquor operations, says the department is supposed to provide accommodation and meals in the most economical way possible for people who choose to live in residence.

He says there must be "100-per-cent participation" of residents if meals are to be provided at a low cost. If some people choose to eat off-campus and others choose to use the dining halls, the cost per person would go up, he says. Less people would cost more to bring the same services onto campus.

Second-year sociology student

Res food, yum!

Sandi LeBlanc says she doesn't really think the food is "as bad as everyone makes it out to be," but if given a choice, she would rather have access to a kitchen.

Johnston says having kitchens in residences would be difficult. He says the buildings do not have the capacity to handle such large amounts of electricity or garbage.

Students can take action to improve the quality of their food. They can fill out complaint forms. The most effective way to make a change, however, is through direct contact with those in charge. If you do not like something, find a manager right away and tell him or her about it since 50 per cent of your residence fee goes to the meal plan.

If you have something to say, go right to the top and let the bosses at Marriott know. Send your letters to:

Marriott Corp. of Canada
3350 S. Service Rd.
Burlington, Ont.
L7N 3M6 □

CUPE 2323

TEACHING and RESEARCH ASSISTANTS UNION HAS CALLED A

STRIKE VOTE

General Membership Meeting

When: Tuesday
Feb. 15, 1994
11:00 a.m.

Where: PORTER HALL

Voting will commence at a General Membership Meeting where members will first discuss the bargaining situation.

Voting by secret ballot

Voting Stations

When:
February 15, 16, & 17

All voting stations will be open from 11:30 a.m. to 6:30 p.m.

Where:

Voting Stations will be located at tunnel level in Loeb and St. Patrick buildings and in the Unicentre, in front of Mike's Place on the second level.

Bring your student card

FOR FURTHER INFORMATION, CONTACT THE UNION OFFICE IN ROOM 510 UNICENTRE OR PHONE 788-7482

CUPE 2323 STRIKE VOTE FEB 15-17

TEACHING AND RESEARCH ASSISTANTS
VOTE YES BECAUSE...

In 1992, immediately after the last round of negotiations, the University grabbed back our pay increase by hiking post-residency graduate fees by 78%.

This time they want us to agree to a pay freeze while they hike tuition fees yet again.

This will constitute a WAGE ROLL-BACK.

TELL THE UNIVERSITY THAT WE WILL ACT TO DEFEND OUR STANDARD OF LIVING.

...YOU HAVE POWER.
USE IT.

Aphrodisiacs: How to boost your sex drive

by Pamela Paterson
Charlatan Staff

People with their hearts set on getting lucky this Valentine's Day shouldn't rely on aphrodisiacs, says an Ottawa sexologist.

"Different times in history, different places, different cultures—we've all tried things, but nothing has ever been demonstrated to be really a true aphrodisiac," says Margaret Jacobs.

She says aphrodisiacs will only work if the user thinks they will.

"If you think they are (effective), then you may perk up a little bit, but it's not because of what you're taking, whether it's eating more oysters or whatever," she says.

People eat, drink or smell various aphrodisiacs, which are supposed to appeal to the senses.

Anne Campbell's 1989 book The Opposite Sex, a guide to the differences between the sexes, lists some concoctions that might be better found in a witch's brew: ground reindeer antlers, ginseng root, rhinoceros horn, animal testes, and turtle eggs are some. Or there's "Come Fuck Me" oil, found in Ottawa's Occult Shop, on Bank Street.

Employee Michael McCord makes the oil from a combination of plant and animal products, including artificial whale semen, frankincense, myrrh, and peppermint.

"I have several people who buy it often," McCord says. "The best success has been with couples already together. I imagine that the success is probably 75 per cent psychological."

McCord says to apply the oil like a perfume, to "places appropriate to what you're looking for," such as in warm places like the heart, ankles, wrist, or close to the genitals. He says not to apply the oil directly on the genitals or it will sting.

More common aphrodisiacs include alcohol, musk perfumes, oysters, incense, chocolate and the scent of roses.

In love shops around town, Spanish fly may be the one loving hopefuls buy. Campbell says it's made from a chemical in dried green blister beetles called cantharides and put into a drink.

Jacobs says sex drives fluctuate depending on the amount of the hormone testosterone present in both males and females, while personal factors can play a stronger role.

"Personal situations—stress, fatigue, health, all these kinds of things—will affect how you feel. Sex drive is really multi-dimensional," Jacobs says.

David Bakish, associate professor of psychiatry at the University of Ottawa, says symptoms of depression, such as guilt, sadness, hopelessness and worthlessness, causes low sex levels.

"A lot of people who have decreased libido or sex drive have a decreased libido because they have mild chronic symptoms of depression. If you treat the mild chronic symptoms of depression, the libido comes back," he says. "We use antidepressants to treat the depression and then see what happens."

For people who still would like to try a floral aphrodisiac, one flowerstore owner advises choosing roses carefully, because some don't smell as sweet as others.

"Not all of them have scents and they all smell differently, depending on where they're from," says John Parsons, owner of Alta Vista Flowers.

Do some customers who buy roses get lucky? Parsons says people come back into the store to tell them of their success.

"You better believe it," Parsons says. "You bet they do."

But will you still respect me in the morning?

by Josée Bellemare
Charlatan Staff

Sex.

Intimate. Exciting. Spontaneous. Something great to do on Valentine's Day. Whether it's with your long-term partner or a quick one-night stand, the desire is unstoppable.

But is it better with the one you love? "It's better," says Bode George, a former engineering student from Carleton. "There's a feeling before, a feeling during, and a feeling after."

He says the day after a one-night stand, the only thing you wake up to is a stranger.

Richard Morgan, a second-year psychology student at Carleton, says there are advantages to both kinds of relationships.

"There is the element of danger and excitement with a one-night stand—someone you never met before," he says. "On the other hand, there is a long-term relationship with the joining of the souls through the physical aspect of sex."

Dan McIntyre, a psychology professor at Carleton, says to maintain a long-term relationship, the partners should incorporate novelty into the relationship. He suggests they go on vacation and expose themselves to new situations.

"It doesn't have to be with anybody else," McIntyre says.

Karen Ogston, a therapist specializing in individual, couple and family therapy in Ottawa, says long-term partners are more free to relax around a partner they are with for a long time.

"When you have a trusting long-term relationship, you learn more about yourself and you can explore more aspects of the relationship."

Jane Rogers, a therapist specializing in individual and couple therapy in Ottawa, says sex is a tool for getting to know someone better when a couple wants a long-term relationship and not just a one-night stand.

"You can discuss any anxieties you may have," she says. "It's a piece of a growing relationship entered into without haste."

David Nozick, an Ottawa therapist specializing in individual, couple and family therapy, says sex should not be dismissed as a physical urge.

"Sex is one of the ways of expressing love," he says. "Sex represents the coupling of two people. It is much more satisfying in a love relationship."

Michael Koor, a third-year Carleton student, says two people about to engage in a one-night stand should both have the same understanding of the relationship.

"Both parties have to agree that it's a one-night stand," he says. He says he likes one-night stands "because there's a variety. You're just testing the waters to see what you like."

"I think the reason why guys like it is the spontaneity factor," says Bill Brown, an Oliver's patron who is working full-time now but plans to go to university next year.

"I think one-night stands are okay, but not necessarily with AIDS going around," says Carmen Hudon, another Ottawa therapist specializing in individual and relationship therapy.

"I think people that are really hungry or in need would go to a one-night stand. It's not the same if you're committed to a relationship."

Hudon also says one-night stands may be appealing because there's no commitment to a long-term relationship. He says some people are scared of intimacy.

"One-night stands are not threatening because you're not committed to them," he says.

Ogston says sometimes during a long-term relationship, some people begin to feel less excited having sex with the same person.

"When something is new and novel, it's very stimulating and exciting," she says.

McIntyre says the emotional "rush" diminishes when having sex with the same person all the time.

"Any behavior repeated frequently, you become habituated to," he says. "The emotional rush gets smaller and smaller."

"They could rush out to try to find another person to turn them on again. People respond to novelty."

Maybe novelty will be found on Valentine's Day.

I scream, you scream, we all scream for...

by Pamela Paterson
Charlatan Staff

Cold and creamy ice cream melts delightfully on a warm chest or tummy.

If it doesn't, the problem may lie in a poor stabilizer system.

Though no one will admit to using them, foods such as ice cream and peanut butter can be used as sex foods. But for either to be used in love-making, they have to be made smooth and creamy.

Bob Hamilton, quality control manager at Beatrice Foods Inc. in Simcoe, Ont., says stabilizers in ice cream prevent water molecules from joining up with each other and keep water crystals from becoming large ice crystals in ice cream.

Normally oil and water don't mix, but stabilizers allow this mix to happen by joining the two together. Water attaches to one end of the stabilizer and fat attaches to the other end, therefore allowing them to mix. Examples of stabilizers include gelatin, an extract from seaweed called carrageenan, and carob bean.

"Large ice crystals in your ice cream will give you a very coarse texture. When the ice crystals melt, the body of the ice cream kind of falls away in your mouth and you would get what we call a weak texture," Hamilton says.

Stabilizers are added when ice cream is produced.

"(Stabilizers) will ultimately give you a nice, smooth, creamy mouth-feel to the product," Hamilton says.

Hamilton says you can tell a good ice cream by the way it melts. If it melts and looks like a "puddle of cream" then it's good quality. A bad ice cream is one where the ingredients separate when melting, Hamilton says.

"It gives you poor mouth-feel, poor impression, and certainly is an indicator that you've not got a very strong stabilizer."

Peanut butter can also be another attractive sex food.

"Peanut butter is one of my favorite sex foods because it takes a long time to put on. It takes even longer to lick off," says Edward Hendriks, a fourth-year computer science student.

It has a different process than ice cream to make it smooth and creamy. Unsexy peanuts are converted into peanut butter by a roasting and grinding process, says Marian Macdonald, manager of communications at Kraft General Foods Canada Inc. in Don Mills, Ont.

She says after roasting and grinding the peanuts, Kraft adds a small amount of vegetable oil to keep the peanut butter from separating.

Oxidation, where oxygen reacts with the peanut butter to decompose, may also get in the way of pleasing peanut butter sex. An open jar left on the shelf is exposed to air and can oxidize.

"I would say in three months you might think that it would taste a little different," Macdonald says.

She says peanut butter kept in the fridge can keep for up to six months. So, unless you use a lot of peanut butter in sex, it's best to keep opened peanut butter jars in the fridge.

NATIONAL AFFAIRS

Farquhar slams zero tolerance policy

by Jill Mahoney
Charlatan Staff

Carleton President Robin Farquhar has rejected a provincial government proposal that aims to achieve "zero tolerance" of harassment and discrimination at universities.

Farquhar says the proposal could be applied in such a way as to infringe on the university's autonomy and on academic freedom.

The proposal calls for universities to send in their existing policies dealing with harassment and discrimination by March 1. The Ontario Council on University Affairs, a government body, will then conduct a review of the policies' effectiveness.

The proposal includes a policy framework that universities must use to complete a review of their own policies by March 1.

But Farquhar says there is no role for the government in the issue of academic freedom because universities have demonstrated they take equity seriously. He says Carleton will send in its existing policies, but won't conduct a review of its policies according to the framework.

Farquhar says in a letter to the Ontario Council on University Affairs that Carleton won't participate in the review process until the university's concerns about the framework's implications.

Farquhar also says the proposal is damaging to the very forces it aims to protect.

"It gets people concerned about problems that can be mythical, but if people are scared or mad, then we run the risk of a backlash and the government's unnecessary intervention may well retard the very movement it's trying to accelerate," he says.

If implemented by a university, the policy framework would forbid speech and conduct that harasses or discriminates against a group or individual, or creates a negative environment on campus. People or groups would be protected on grounds that include race, ethnic origin, citizenship, sexual orientation, disability, family status and receipt of public assistance.

The policy framework would apply to all academic and non-academic staff, students, committee members and visitors. It would include incidents on and off campus, campus-related social events and conversations over the telephone. Penalties for misconduct would range from a verbal apology to dismissal or expulsion.

Some professors are angry, saying the proposal threatens free speech and will create a bad teaching environment.

On Feb. 4, four professors and two students presented a copy of a petition circulating among professors to the president's office. The petition urged Farquhar to reject the framework because they allege it will limit academic freedom and create a climate of fear in the classroom.

Nicholas Rowe, an assistant professor of economics, estimates the petition had about 100 signatures in only three days, even though "getting professors to sign things is like hurting cats."

Rowe says Farquhar's rejection of the proposal is a "semi-victory" because Farquhar is critical of the government's action on this issue. But Rowe says he would also "like to see him explicitly state he'd reject the framework because it would imperil academic freedom."

Farquhar: "risk of a backlash."

Farquhar did say he thinks there "is a fear that the government is somehow going to require universities to comply with regulations that will deprive us of our academic freedom and... I have no intention of doing any such thing."

But a spokesperson from the government says the proposal has been misunderstood.

Karen Wheeler, a senior policy advisor in the Ministry of Education and Training, says the policy is intended to assist universities in complying with the Ontario Human Rights Code.

"Some people thought they weren't keeping up with the law and they were questioning their internal procedures," she says.

But Wheeler says the policy was created to rid universities of violence and discrimination. "Universities should be safe places to work and study and should be as nearly as possible harassment-free."

Currently, Carleton has a sexual harassment policy and Farquhar says the university is working on one for racial harassment, which he says will be ready in about a year.

Professors like Rowe and Thomas Darby, a political science professor, say the proposal is so vague it will allow

CFS's future cloudy as referendums approach

by Michael Mainville
Charlatan Staff

The future of the Canadian Federation of Students could hang in the balance with the loss of some key members over the last year and more membership referendums to come in the next two months.

If more student associations decide to drop out, the federation "will have to look at the long-range health of the organization," says Jocelyn Charron, communications director for the CFS.

Since last February, 17 student organizations, including undergraduate and graduate associations, have voted on CFS fee increases and membership.

Four student associations have cancelled their memberships, one rejected the fee increase, four voted not to join the CFS and one voted to remain with it. The federation gained two new members and four others accepted fee increases. The results of the referendum for a $7 fee increase at Carleton were overturned, but Carleton remains a member.

The CFS is Canada's national post-secondary student lobby organization representing 71 student associations. It provides some student services like Travel Cuts and lobbies the government to improve the accessibility and quality of post-secondary education.

Last October, students at Trent University in Peterborough voted to remain members of the CFS. Derek Trevean, president of the Trent student union, says a fee increase was approved by between 65 and 75 per cent of students who voted.

"It is the most established and listened-to organization at the moment, and we need a student lobbying group," says Trevean.

He says while this is a difficult time for the CFS, the need for a national student lobby group will assure the future of the organization.

But Sharon Flood, vice-president of university affairs of the student association at the University of Waterloo, disagrees.

Flood says about 70 per cent of students who participated in a referendum last February voted to pull out of the CFS.

"Students felt they were not getting their money's worth," says Flood.

Flood says students disagree with many CFS policies, useless services and mixed-up priorities.

After dropping CFS membership last year, Waterloo's student union decided to join the Ontario Undergraduate Student Alliance, a new student lobby group which advocates higher tuition and automatic, income-contingent loans for undergraduate students.

The alliance was formed last year by a group of student councillors from Brock University and the University of Toronto. Its membership has grown to include student groups at Wilfrid Laurier University, Waterloo, Queen's University and the University of Western Ontario.

Flood says students at Waterloo feel OUSA will be able to better represent their lobbying interests.

"I think OUSA will become stronger, and that will take members away from the CFS," says Flood.

Naheed Nenshi, president of the University of Calgary's student union, says he doesn't see the effectiveness of the CFS.

"I don't think the students need a plethora of useless services and petty infighting which costs thousands of dollars a year," says Nenshi.

Students at U of C have repeatedly turned down membership in the CFS. In the last referendum, held in the spring of 1991, 918 students voted in favor of joining while 2,390 students voted against it.

Nenshi says students don't think the CFS is worth the amount of money they would pay and the services it provides could easily be replaced with services run by individual associations.

Nenshi says the CFS has lost touch with the needs of students and that "the demise of the CFS is imminent."

But Charron says while the CFS is facing difficulties now, the future of the organization is not in jeopardy.

Charron says while the loss of some important members over the last year is regrettable, it will not hurt the situation of the CFS.

"Lobbying will still remain a priority," says Charron. "Frankly I don't see us losing a large amount of members."

"Students are about to face tough times. . . . The organization becomes anyone who is offended by anything to be accused of harassment and potentially thrown out of university.

The framework states, "A complainant does not have to be a direct target to be adversely affected by a negative environment. It includes conduct or comment that creates and maintains an offensive, hostile, or intimidating climate for study or work."

Rowe says the proposal "seems to say most clearly that anything anyone says which might be offensive to anyone is considered harassment. If you've got a fuzzy boundary and we've got a zero tolerance policy for anyone who crosses it, then you've got to see this is ludicrous."

Rowe says the danger is not necessarily the framework, but the ways it could be interpreted and applied. He says although the government recommendation came down in October, the professors are only reacting now because they were unaware of the situation until a series of columns about the policy framework appeared in The Ottawa Citizen last month.

Some Carleton students have also started circulating a petition condemning the framework. Andrea Johnson, a fourth-year political science student who went with the professors to Farquhar's office, says she thinks it will affect intellectual freedom.

"We're worried about professors and students getting suspended for professing their views," she says.

Rowe says he thinks the number of professors and other people opposed to the proposal will cause the government to back off.

"I think we've got a very big watershed and we've crossed it. Once people have stood up and gone publicly against it, you can't put water back in the bottle." □

With files from Clayton Wood, Charlatan Staff

"I don't think the students need a plethora of useless services and petty infighting which costs thousands of dollars a year."

— Naheed Nenshi, U of C

The Charlatan in Co-operation with these local merchants
PRESENTS

9 FABULOUS VACATION GETAWAYS

YOU PICK YOUR DESTINATION

ATLANTIC BEACH

Sheraton Atlantic Beach Resort
4 Days / 3 Nights

LAKE PLACID

Lake Placid Hilton
3 Days / 2 Nights

HILTON HEAD ISLAND

Holiday Inn
4 Days / 3 Nights

Atlantis Beauty Spa

"The place for honouring the self"

Gift Certificate For
"A DAY AT THE SPA"

• Hydrotherapy • Swedish Massage • Facial • Manicure
• Pedicure • Make-up Application • Light Lunch
• Champagne (optional) • Shampoo/Blow Dry

• Esthetics • Ear & Nose Piercing • Waxing • Tanning
• Hair Extensions & Braiding • Gift Certificates For All Services

HAIR STYLING

730-8500

1183 Bank St. (at Grove Ave.) Ample Free Parking

Bring in this ad &
receive 10% off
any service
over $25

Dance Floor
D.J. Every Night

3 Big Screens
4 TVs & Satellite

MONDAYS

Men's Nite

GREAT SPECIALS

Trip for 2 Giveaway!!

FREE POOL Noon 'till nine

THURSDAYS

Ladies' Nite

GREAT SPECIALS

Trip for 2 Giveaway!!

FREE POOL Noon 'till ten

96 George St. 562-0433

Today, I'm gonna tell her I love her a dozen times

567-2600

Glebe
831 Bank St.
5th Ave. Court

729-7878

Hampton Park Plaza
Carling and Kirkwood

Remember Valentine's Day is February 14

Bring this coupon in before February 11 and receive a 10% discount

Wet & Wild Spas

"Ottawa's Largest Spa Rental Company"

Party Tub Rentals & Spas

Tanning, Massage Therapy & Hot Tubbing

417 Rideau Street

Ottawa, Ontario

K1N 5Y9

(613) 521-9453

(613) 789-4114

Call For Reservations

Bring in this ad for 10 1/2 hr. sessions - $40.00

GRAND CENTRAL

Monday, February 14

Valentine's Dinner
for two $19.95

Special Guest Sex Therapist to answer
all your questions

141 George St. 241-2727

Oliver's

Thursday Nights

Party Nights

Pitcher Specials

Promo-Prize

Giveaways Weekly

Saturday Nights

The Best in Live Bands

Coming Soon..

WILD & THE SPIRIT

Saturday, February 12th

an all-ages event

FREE SUNSHINE

ESCAPE THE COLD

A TOUCH OF SUN

2 Free Sessions

Tanning Studios

(an $18.00 value) with the purchase of 2 suntan sessions at regular prices. 1 per customer. Offer expires March 20, 1994.

A TOUCH OF SUN
723-0555
888 Meadowlands Dr.

A TOUCH OF SUN
238-0222
300 Slater St.

CALL US. IT'S A WARM IDEA.

Western & Aviation

Coats and Jackets.

Complete Indian Line Available

Western & Motorcycle

Boots. Boot Repair.

244 Elgin Street • Ottawa • K2P 1L9 • (613) 238-BOOT (2668)

Bring in this ad and receive a 10% discount on any purchase.

MYERS

Take a Test Drive at MYERS and be eligible to WIN one of two Vacation Packages!

Bring in This Ad and Enter to WIN!

CHECK OUT
GM'S
$750.00
CASH BACK
GRAD
PROGRAM!

Ask Mike or any one of our
Sales Consultants about our
Low Monthly Lease Payments
on CAVALIERs or GEOs!

Mike Smith
Class of 91
Sales Consultant

Draw to take place March 14/94

MYERS CHEV • OLDS • CADILLAC 1200 Baseline at Merivale

225-1260

EACH BUSINESS ON THIS PAGE WILL BE GIVING AWAY A FREE TRIP.

Trip packages include deluxe accommodations for two adults, complimentary first morning breakfast and daily green fees for two adults when in season. Children occupying the same room as their parents stay free. Transportation is not included. All trips are fully transferable but must be used on or before February 28, 1995. To be eligible fill out an entry ballot at one of the participating merchants on or before Tuesday March 22, 1994. The winning entries will have their names published in the Thursday March 24, 1994 edition of The Charlatan. Staff members and contributors to The Charlatan for the 1993/1994 publishing year are not eligible for this promotion.

Election reform needed now

Last week, we ran an editorial mocking all the CUSA election posters. It was just supposed to be a joke -- a bit of election-time fun. The editorial argued that the posters really decide who wins in the CUSA election. But, on my way to the ballot box, I realized that posters really were what I was depending on to make my decision.

There has been talk of reforming the poster system, from people like James Rilett, CUSA's chief electoral officer and the candidates themselves, which is good to hear.

When the candidates' main way of communicating with the electorate is through a piece of paper, they just don't have much room to describe their platforms in detail.

Reforming the system would probably also open it up to more people. The amount of money candidates feel they have to spend probably stops people from running. Most students probably couldn't afford to spend over $1,200 like Rob Jamieson or even the $250 Todd McAllister says he's spending.

First off, the number of posters each candidate is allowed should be limited, as well as the actual amount of money spent on them. Then, there should be specific posting areas and a limit on how many each candidate can post in any one place.

Right now, CUSA puts a spending limit on how much candidates can spend on things like posters, but does it in CUSA dollars. This is a weird system where posters are given an arbitrary value, according to factors like color and size. So, even if the real value of the poster is 30 cents, CUSA may say it's only worth 6 cents out of the candidate's election poster budget. This system does nothing to limit the amount of real money candidates spend. CUSA should come in-line with the rest of the country and start working in real money.

It would also be a good requirement for all candidates to be required to post a detailed position paper in the CUSA office for students to read. That way, candidates like McAllister who only put their smiling faces on their posters would have to explain themselves somewhere.

The system will probably never be perfect. But the amount of posters in elections and the amount that is spent on them is a place where real change can be made. It shouldn't take a lot of time or money to make the system fairer for everyone.

Next year, on my way to the ballot box, I'd like to know a bit more about the candidates than what they look like and how good they are at slogan writing. SK

FREEDOM IN SOUTH AFRICA, AS SEEN THROUGH THE PROLETARIAT'S EYE...

1992

1994

OPINION

Memo mess up – cryptic warnings will do no good

by Thom Pardoe
Thom Pardoe is a third-year anthropology and linguistics student at Carleton

Just say no.

No, ma'am or sir, I will not engage in decidedly inappropriate behavior with you because you are a professor and I am taking your class. Going out for a drink after class will create an atmosphere in which you could take advantage of my poor, benighted and vulnerable soul for cheap, tawdry academic discussions and free beer. Lucy save us!

Superficially, of course, out-of-class socializing could be defended as a harmless attempt to develop out-of-class relationships between students and instructors.

But we know better!

I think it would be in our own best interests if we all went home and took a cold shower (separately) and wore hair shirts in the morning, because, of course, none of us, professor and student alike, can control our own impulses.

Well, at least according to Theresa Cowan, director of services for the Carleton University Students' Association, none of us can.

Cowan is the author of a memo dated Jan. 10 to "All chairs/directors" titled "Inappropriate instructor behavior," which asks professors not to give "social invitations to students before final grades for a course have been issued." The memo wags the finger of reprobation at evil, predatory faculty members, who are lurking in pubs, just waiting to abuse their power and their students.

Cowan's memo does make some good points. Yes, there is the potential for abuse of power when students and faculty develop out-of-class relationships, especially when there is alcohol involved. And yes, there is the potential for the creation of an "uneven playing field" for students who don't feel comfortable speaking with professors over a coffee or a beer, or who can't afford it.

But find me a university somewhere in North America that doesn't encourage both faculty and students to develop collegial relations. Find me one university that hasn't admitted you can't prevent faculty and students from developing friendships.

Cowan falls flat on her face on two counts. One, she tars all faculty with the same brush and places the burden of responsibility on them and not equally on faculty and students. (Because, of course, no student would ever buy round after round of drinks for a professor, only to fail the class and then complain to CUSA. God, no, that's only a rumor.)

Two, the memo sounds like something Cowan just decided to write, for no particular reason. There's no mention of a specific incident or incidents. Maybe she just walked into Mike's Place one day and was aghast at the wanton disregard for propriety.

If there was a genuine incident, then the university and CUSA needs to deal with it in an open manner.

Overgeneralizing only creates an atmosphere of mistrust and hampers education.

The tone of the memo suggests that a student was sexually harassed by a professor. Well, if it happened, then say so. Don't mess around with cryptic warnings about "inappropriate instructor behavior." Surely there is more CUSA could do for students than just whine about students going out for a drink with their teachers.

A lot of students develop close working relationships and even friendships with professors and not all of them get good grades. Many more students do not develop close relationships with their instructors and a lot of them get really good grades.

In one of my classes, a student and the teaching assistant have developed a friendship. When it came time to grade the mid-term for the class, the teaching assistant graded the exam, but let the professor review the marking to make sure it was done properly.

Professors and teaching assistants have to deal with ethical questions like this all the time. I think they are, for the most part, able to cope without the CUSA executive telling them how to conduct themselves.

Apart from the gleeful cackling over the numerous spelling and grammatical errors, the memo has caused little real concern among faculty members. After all, CUSA has no real authority. Cowan would have been better off either dealing with specific issues or just minding her own business. □

HUMOR

Baldness, Bugs Bunny and boxing

malleable fleshy skull when the two were caving in on the carrot patch.

Maybe that's why the majority of Mr. Clean commercials are targeted towards women. Women are supposed to be blinded by lust when they catch the glare of the super-stud's fabulous forehead, and day."

My, what a Neet idea.

Another thing I do is compare my present hair to my past hair by looking at old photos. I'll find one where my head is full of hair. "Aha, look," I'll say to anyone who'll listen, "I AM losing my hair. Just look at how much I have here."

"But, dear," my mom will say, "everybody had hair in the '70s."

I contemplate the cause of my thinning hair and impending baldness. I spend time tracing my family tree, looking for relatives who were bald. I do DNA samples, all to find out why. Why me? My parents weren't Sinead O'Connor or Yul Brynner. I'm not ready for Custer's Last Strand! Why me?!

Actually, one advantage to being bald is it allows you to be hippy in some situations. If someone starts a fight with you and asks, "You wanna shiner?", you can say, "Got one already, thanks." Of course, you might receive an even more severe pummeling for that line.

But there is really nothing you can do about baldness. It's part of nature, and part of growing older. You just hope the hair stays on as long as it can.

In the end, it's nothing to lose your hair over.

Get it? "Lose your hair?" It's a joke. This whole piece is about losing your hair, right? And I just made a joke with the words "Losing your hair."

Next week: a review of Stephen King's Thinner. □ go on a kitchen-cleaning binge.

But, back to me.

I spend days in front of the mirror, wondering how I'm going to go. Will the waves in my hair end up looking like Moses parted them? Or will someone perform clear-cut logging: thinner, thinner, and before you know it, Clayoquot Sound.

Maybe I'll end up buying up hair-regain formulas. "Hi, I'm not only a Hair Club member, I'm a dope who spends $1,000 a week on this curls-congregating concoction, which will cause my hair to fall out if forget to take it even just one

by Boryslav Kit
Charlatan Staff

Let me tell you a little secret. I'm losing my hair.

Oh, I may be all tressed up and ready to go right now, but believe it. One day soon, my strands will be swinging to Phil Collins's "Both Sides of the Story" and eventually to "Shiny, Happy People."

How many shiny, happy, bald people do you know? Not too many, I'll wager.

The first thing some guys think about when they think they're losing their hair is, "My God! How are we going to meet any more women?" I mean, you don't see too many chrome-domes with women hanging off them, do you?

Forget about the person you're going out with now — what about the future? Without hair, there's a good chance you'll soon be block-ed out of your present relationship. Maybe you should just get married right now.

So, if you see some guy with hair in Oliver's desperately offering women lollops, you know he's in fear of reaching Kokojaksian dimensions.

I've heard though, that some people find a bald head sensual and erotic. Hmm. Maybe that could explain why Bugs Bunny was attracted to Elmer Fudd, supposedly his enemy. Bugs wears skirts or wedding dresses whenever he had a run-in with Elmer Fudd. Fudd's lack of fuzz brought out the wantonness and lasciviousness in Bugs who wanted to ply Elmer's soft,

LETTERS

OC Transpo rocks

Editor:

This is in response to Blayne Haggart's "commentary," ("OC Transpo should take its own hike," The Charlatan, Jan. 27, 1994) on journalism intern Mary Ellen Collins's article in The Citizen.

Haggart's commentary seems to take offence at any positive comments being aimed at OC Transpo. Sending an out-of-towner who is unfamiliar with the region on the buses to see how easy it is to get around is a good test of any transit system. And quite frankly, it was interesting to read Collins's article in The Citizen on Jan. 16.

Haggart says, "The service is generally lousy," and he's entitled to his opinion. We at OC Transpo are very interested in knowing people's opinions of our service and that's why we engage the Carleton University Survey Centre to conduct annual attitude surveys.

Results show that 74 per cent of respondents believe it is reasonable to stand during rush hours. Only 5 per cent of respondents thought that service got worse over the last year and 63 per cent believe the bus routes are well planned.

The picture is definitely not as bleak as Haggart would like his readers to think. Perhaps Haggart could provide some constructive criticism and we together with the students and the administration could work at further improvements.

For a person like Haggart who lives in Orleans and travels to a destination such as Carleton, all forms of transportation will pose some challenges. For Haggart's trip to Orleans, he may wish to try Route 118 to Billings Bridge and transfer to Transitway routes 96 or 97 which will get him to Route 95 at Hurdman. This will take him to his Orleans connections.

As for Dunton Tower, the only recent incident I can recall is when we were told by the university to detour away from that area because of a broken water main. Our transit supervisors did their best to try to alert students.

I hope Haggart's views do not reflect those of The Charlatan's editorial board and that there will be no embargo on balanced coverage of OC Transpo or any other public service.

Oxana Sawka

OC Transpo

Director of public relations

Don't waste time, just get job done!

Editor:

I would like to address the advertisement purchased by CUSA in the Jan. 27 edition of The Charlatan.

The ad is about the Dedicated Access Fund, which draws approximately $50,000 collectively from all Carleton students each year, to be managed by a committee to improve accessibility for disabled students on campus. In the ad, it is asked of all students to decide which proposed accessibility changes to campus are most important and should be undertaken first.

I understand that the idea of the advertisement is to make students feel important, by allowing them to decide the changes, but I have news for CUSA and the access fund committee. I am an able-bodied student and how the hell would I know what needs to be changed?

Shouldn't the access fund committee consult students who use and need these services, and who know what services are most important, instead of people who haven't given it a second thought?

Carleton has been mislabelling itself since the 1950s as "accessible" and still has a far way to go before it can live up to its accessible billing. I have a message for CUSA and the access fund committee -- don't try to be politically correct. Just get the changes made, so these students can have improved mobility on campus, sooner.

Rob Kisielowski
Law IV

Watching the ITV blizzard

Editor:

With regards to the ITV channel relocation from 15 to 53, it is apparent that the local cable companies perceive the viewing audience of the Ottawa-Carleton region as being a modern bastion of intellectualism.

When I telephoned Maclean Hunter Cable TV last week to inquire as to the necessity of affecting such a change in the middle of the term, I was informed that accommodation had to be made for a "new" cable service.

The reason that the "new" service could not possibly be implemented on Channel 53 becomes painfully obvious upon tuning in -- this channel resembles the blizzard that may found on the weather channel.

An educational channel should be as clear as possible in order that viewers may read written information and observe the professor's actions.

The clearly received Channel 15 is now graced by the same service which simultaneously appears on Channel 34 -- the hourly TV programming guide and repeated Movie Network advertisements.

Beam me up, Scotty!

Mel Thompson
Psychology I

The magic continues!
More letters on pg. 18

the CHARLATAN CARLETON'S INDEPENDENT STUDENT NEWSPAPER
February 10, 1994
VOLUME 23 NUMBER 22
Editor-in-Chief	Mya Garrison
Production Manager	Kevin McKay
Business Manager	Jill Perry
NEWS
Editors	Mario Carlucci Brent Dowdall
Contributors	Naomi Bock Angie Gallop Ryan Nakashima Karolina Srutek Jane Tattersall Tricia Volpe Brandie Weikle
Volunteer Co-ordinator	Johanna Ciszewski
NATIONAL AFFAIRS
Editor	Arn Keeling
Contributors	Jill Mahoney Michael Mainville Clayton Wood
FEATURES
Editor	Andrea Smith
Supplement Co-ordinator	Colin James
Contributors	Elizabeth Adefarakan Kim Brunhuber Adrian Harewood Mayma Massicot N.A. Pierre Nicole Plata Sophie Pottinger John Kirkham Pamela Paterson Josée Bellmare
SPORTS
Editor	Steven Vesely
Contributors	Bram S. Aaron Mark Cotgrave Richard G.D. Scott Kevin Restivo Ryan Ward
ARTS
Editor	Blayne Haggart
Contributors	Joe Bernard Alex Bustos Karin Jordan Sarah Richards Rick Harp Shamir Kanji Rob Willbond
OP/ED
Editor	Sheila Keenan
Contributors	Boryslav Kit Thom Pardee
VISUALS
Photo Editor	Tim O'Connor
Photo Assistant	Andre Bellefeuille
Contributors	Joanne Capuani Chris Nuttall-Smith Shawn Scallan Richard G.D. Scott John Steinbachs David Hodges Mike Rappaport Joel Kenneth Grant Sarah Abernethy John Price Shingirayi Sebata
Graphics Co-ordinators
Graphics Assistant	John Price
Contributors
Shingirayi Sebata
Cover	Malcolm Earle
The Charlatan's photos are produced using the Carleton University Students' Association Photo Service
PRODUCTION
Production Assistant	Kim Alf
Contributors	Bram S. Aaron Kaleem Khan Jill Mahoney Richard G.D. Scott Karolina Srutek Brandie Weikle Tanya Workman
CIRCULATION 14,000
Circulation	Dave Carpenter Joellen Walshe
ADVERTISING 788-3580
Ad Manager	Karen Richardson
The Charlatan, Carleton University's weekly newsmagazine, is an editorially and financially autonomous journal, published weekly during the fall and winter term and monthly during the summer. Charlatan Publications Incorporated, (Ottawa, Ontario, a non-profit corporation registered under the Canadian Corporations Act, is the publisher of The Charlatan. Editorial content is the sole responsibility of editorial staff members, but may not reflect the beliefs of its members. Contents are copyright © 1994. Nothing may be duplicated in any way without the prior written permission of the Editor-in-Chief. All rights reserved. ISSN 0915-1859. Subscriptions are available at a cost of $40 for individuals and $52 for institutions (includes GST). National advertising for The Charlatan is handled through Canadian University Press Media Services (Campus Plus), 73 Richmond St. W., 4th Floor, Toronto, Ontario, M5H 1Z4, (416) 481-7283. The Charlatan Room 531 Unkentre Carleton University Ottawa, Ontario K1S 5B6 Telephone: (613) 788-6680 E-mail address charlatan@carleton.ca

A LOOK AT AFRICAN HISTORY MONTH

Colin James
James is a third-year mass communications student at...

... history, heritage, culture and rights of people on this planet are too important for their developments, contributions and offerings to be ignored and disrespected. People around the world of African descent have been enslaved, raped and colonized. Today they find themselves suffering under the yokes of economic colonialism, racial discrimination, and police brutality — some basic elements of white supremacy that brought many Africans to the Western hemisphere in the first place.

... as tragic as the brutality of white supremacy's historical pillaging and rape of Black people, has been its product — the legacy of a slave mentality in the psyche and mind of those African survivors. Black history and heritage has been destroyed, damaged and distorted by white supremacy, to the point where some of us no longer know our native languages or original names.

... what is my African history, in its legacy of culture and ethnicity? What is the original conception my ancestors and of the creator?

... those of the African Diaspora — the dispersion of African descendants throughout the world — are struggling to find our true self-value, and of what value we are to each other as African descendants.

... with the theft of our history and identity came the internalized self-hatred produced in the chasms created by the machinations of white supremacy. Because of this, it is no wonder that Black people are at present physically the number one killers of Black people. The destruction of consciousness led to the birth of a people with a pinpointed past that many of them are now trying to reclaim.

... 1926, an African-American man named Carter G. Woodson called attention to the manifold contributions of Black people to world history and civilization with the creation and observance of Negro History Week.

This was held every year starting on the second Sunday in February, during the week which included the birthdays of President Abraham Lincoln and African-American slavery-abolitionist Frederick Douglass. The creation of Negro History Week helped fight against the lies told by the white supremacist world establishment that Black people had no history. These lies attempted to white-out the proud history of African people.

In 1753, European philosopher David Hume wrote in Essays and Treatises on Several Subjects that Black people are "naturally inferior to the white. There never was a civilized nation of any other complexion than white." In Hume's version of history, Egypt, one of the great civilizations of Africa, was not considered to have been created by Black African people. But in the book Herodotus Histories, Hume could have read otherwise. In Chapter 104, the Greek historian writes of the Egyptians: "... My own conjectures were founded first in the fact that they are black-skinned and have woolly hair." Count Volney, a renowned European academic and historian, also echoes Herodotus when he wrote of Egypt in his book Ruins of Empire: "... we have the strongest reason to believe that the county neighboring the tropic was the cradle of the sciences, and... the first learned nation was a nation of Blacks."

It shouldn't even be necessary to quote white historians saying that the ancient Egyptians were Black; one has only to look at Egyptian hieroglyphs and see that Egyptians had dark brown skin, full lips, with black afros and braids. These facts have been white-washed by white society. Even the original names have been changed. In ancient times, the Egyptians called their land Kemet (pronounced Khamit or Kemit), which means land of the Black people, and called themselves Khamites. Egypt was only one of many great civilizations of Africa, and I would be remiss in not mentioning the ancient kingdoms of the Shona and Zulu peoples in Southern Africa, the nation of the Zanj city states in Eastern Africa, the kingdom of Axum in Ethiopia, the kingdom of Nubia-Kush which gave birth to Egypt, the kingdoms of Ghana, Mali and Songhay in Western Africa. The Moors of Northern Africa civilized the Iberian peninsula, bringing its advanced mathematics, science and architecture to a Europe which hadn't even begun to shuffle out of the so-called "Dark Ages." To this day

Carter G. Woodson

we all use Arabic numerals. But no one ever teaches us about our history — African History — in this manner, even though there are many books written in strict observance, heavy research, using documented proof as reliable as any Western historians', perhaps more so. This is information that many of us of African descent, like Dr. Carter Woodson, have had to find for ourselves.

The tradition of Negro History Week started in 1926 and has since evolved to embrace the whole month of February, and is now known as Black History Month, African History Month, African Heritage or African Liberation Month.

But like many celebrated traditions, Black History Month is now threatened with being commercialized and commodified. One only has to look at the advertisements using African kings and queens in Ebony magazine by Budweiser and other corporations to realize that these same advertisements are not featured in Vogue or Time. These pictures of African civilization and royalty are just ads, pictures for profit. They are not widely acknowledged or appreciated facts. They are no threat to white lies or to the white supremacist establishment.

What is worse is when we as Black people begin to commercialize this event ourselves. African History Month should not be narrowed down to or promoted as sound bites and clichés in advertisements. For example, flyers promoting dances during the month of February should avoid calling dances "Black History Thang(s)" if their sole purpose is monetary profit. Quotations such as the one by the great Black Pan-Africanist Marcus Mosiah Garvey, that "a people without the knowledge of their past, history, origins, and culture is like a tree without roots," should not be used as to draw a crowd. What will be next, a "By Any Means Necessary" dance? African History Month should not be sold.

As Black people, as African people, let us celebrate, but also concentrate and meditate on who we are and where we're going as a people, and as individuals. *

TWO YEARS AND 56 HITS LATER

N.A. Pierre
Pierre is a student at Carleton and Algonquin College. His contributions to The Charlantan include a tribute to Miles Davis in November 1991.

... "Once we have the knowledge of self as people we can be free, and no devil can enter the boundaries..." -- Freestyle flowship, hip-hop artists

... April 29 will mark the second anniversary of the Los Angeles Rebellion, two days of unrest sparked by the acquittal of four police officers who were videotaped backing the Olde English Brew out of the bar owned by Rodney King.

... Today, as then, we of the Black nation (Africans, African-Caribbean-Canadians, African-Americans, African-Europeans, etc.) are wondering: What's next?

... We are a people who have seen on prime-time television, in the symbolic decision of the jurors, what amounts to a passive attitude towards overt, violent racism. We have seen in Los Angeles the explosive anger of our pent-up frustration and rage, which have been simmering in impoverished inner-city and township souls for centuries.

... Perhaps you, a Black man or woman sitting at home watching the bungled explanations of the jurors on CNN, or listening to some of your white co-workers tell you "Well, we didn't really see the first 30 seconds of the incident, did we? Maybe he really did deserve it..." -- perhaps you felt like blowing up some buildings yourself.

... Maybe things improved or regressed since 1992? Maybe we should stop being so much pessimistic and squeamish. I mean, haven't been any other publicized incidents of errant police vs. minority citizens lately, right? Well, except for the acquittal here in Ottawa of the cop who mistook Vincent Gardner's guitar for a gun and shot him, or those two cops in Toronto who shot a fleeing suspect in the back, or those other couple of cops in Detroit who ripped a man's scalp right off his head with their billy clubs, or that beaten cab driver in Quebec, or... okay, I mean, there haven't been any really notable police-related incidents lately. You know, the kind that incites a young brother to set fire to a city bank or anything like that...

Maybe this affirmative action thing is just the antidote we Black folk need to finally garner some respect from minority-weary employers and white counterparts. After having been dragged from our homeland(s), beaten and sold, having our Black women used to pump out baby slaves like Preg-O-Matics, and being made to serve Earl Grey tea to our "generous massahs," it's the least the government can do.

Never mind that government neglect in inner-cities across the continent has some of us in a state of hopelessness and constant war with each other because we can't touch the system effectively. Affirmative action — finally, racism that works in our favor. I mean, come on; stuff's, like, too easy, y'knowmsayin'? All we gotta do is check off the little box at the bottom of the application that says "Visible Minority," ignore the enraged stare of the white guy being turned away from the desk, and it's a shoo-in to that OPP position. And look, they're hiring so many of us. My only question is, what happens when they've hired "enough" Black people?

But, hey, on a whole, at least white popular culture has sure been refining its view of Black people over the past decade or so. We're no longer just threatening, sinister, jive-talkin', pimp-rollin', alleyway-lurkin', "strange accent"-speakin', knife-totin' muggers on the make. Now we can also play basketball, have colorful names, rap cool stuff like "Whoomp! There It Is!" and even start a T-shirt business or two.

And the best part is, we're just so damn cool. Not only does everyone wanna be like Mike, they wanna be Black like me, too. See? Check out the way some of these white suburbanite kids try to model themselves after us, especially us rappers, our deified figures. (We're role models, man! Straight up!) Don't they just look so cute in their Karl Kani outfits, slung low, listening to their Onyx tape or whatever... go ahead, ask 'em. Some of them will even tell ya that smokin' blunts and sippin' 40s of beer while stashin' their .45 pistols is all about the Black experience. Yeah, these kids understand. They're "down."

Of course, I say all of this with an ironic, frustrated snicker. There is, as yet, no answer to whether we are better off since the last fire in 1992 Los Angeles was extinguished. The attitude of our society, circa 1994, has equal parts improving forces and stagnating forces, the old guard of thought countering advances from newer winds of social change. Like my man Speech said, it's a state of arrested development. The net effect will have to be measured later. So let's put all the crazy confetti and fireworks in the closet for now.

Times are getting crazy. It's time we got a handle on what's really going on, instead of accepting/offering feeble excuses. It's time to know the ledge, for real, tho'.

Knowledge, people. It's all about knowledge. Knowledge of the social, governmental and economic systems which are pervasive throughout every aspect of our lives. Knowledge of the weaknesses of these systems, why they exist, and how they affect us.

Knowledge and understanding of human nature in order to realize just why people of different races often act towards each other the way they do. And, Black people, it takes knowledge of ourselves, our culture, our responsibilities and our potential to assert our presence in the world, no matter where we live. We once were the proud kings and queens of Earth, ruling the planet with knowledge that had historical figures, from Aristotle to Socrates, as our eager students. Let's not forget or be fooled.

It's time to realize that whether one is dark- or light-skinned, born in North America or in Africa or in the Caribbean or in Europe, whether one is "affluent" or "middle class" or "below the poverty line," a Crip or a Blood, a Christian or a Muslim or a Rasta, a Black man or a Black woman, we are all part of the same struggle for our identity and self-redetermination.

We as a people are, slowly but surely, stirring to this consciousness; however, it shouldn't take 56 hits to the body in 82 seconds to wake us up. *

(clockwise from left): Elizabeth Adefarakan, Pacquette, Nicole Plata, Malcom Earle, Pottinger, Missing: Kim Brunhuber, Adrian, Shingirayi Sabetta, and Colin James.

The Court

the same level as the ignorant bigots who scrawl phrases like "Monkeys go back to Africa" weekly on the elevator wall in my building. I sincerely hope no one else follows my example. Because if enough good people do nothing . . .

The basketball court at St. Anthony's was already hot in May. It seemed even hotter than it had last May when Garfield pulled a knife on Courtney, or the summer before that, when the police came almost every Sunday to take names. Ali did not think about the knives or the police or the heat. He was new and didn't know a lot of things about the way people were here, or the way they got sometimes, especially when it was hot. Ali was playing with a basketball by himself on the court at St. Anthony's, and thinking about the Eid Celebration, which was two weeks away. He came to the court early because he wanted to be alone, and also because he wanted desperately to get out of his house. The living-room window was broken and someone might throw another firecracker through the opening. The window had been smashed with a brick. Ali's mother had called the building superintendent and he said he'd fix it when he had the time. Eight days later, it was still broken.

TIM O'CONNOR

these days," he said, and walked to the court at St. Anthony's. He didn't plan to come home until five, when his mother usually came back. Ali missed the basket and blamed the sun, which was higher now. His feet hurt a little because his shoes were tight, but he didn't mind much because it was a nice day and he was alone. He wore shiny, black dress shoes, which pinched when he ran and he slipped sometimes because they were smooth underneath. He was careful not to slip too often because he didn't want to wear a hole in them. If he did, his mother would scold him because it was his only pair of shoes. Ali often asked his mother to buy him shoes for basketball, but she would explain patiently that she couldn't afford them because she hadn't found a job yet. She was in the city's Immigrant Job Training Program. They taught her computer skills. "Why do they teach me computer skills?" she asked her son every night when she came home, "when I'm not going to get a job doing computers? Why can't they teach me something so I can work?" But Ali's mother went back to her classes night after night because she said it was the only way.

The shoes were hurting Ali a little more, and he stopped shooting and sat down on the picnic table which was beside the court, and looked around. It was a small court, roughly paved, between the church parking lot and a small field where people from the apartment buildings surrounding the church walked their dogs when it was nice weather. The court was pitted with small holes. There was one big hole which had snapped a little boy's ankle last year. The players complained, but the hole was never fixed. The lines on the court had been yellow once, but they had melted into the sandy grey court. There was a free-throw line at each end which no one could see any more.

The rims of both baskets were bent, and only the one by the parking lot had mesh. The mesh was made of steel, which would gleam like barbed wire if it was hot enough. A week ago, Willy, a tall Haitian, had ripped two of his fingers badly on the mesh and needed stitches, after he tried to dunk.

The church's board of directors had the nylon mesh replaced with steel and the rims raised an extra foot four years ago, after the poor kids from the new apartment buildings next to the field started playing there and fighting with the Sunday school children and ripping down the mesh and bending the rims. But the kids who could jump and were tall enough dunked, and one mesh was still missing, and both rims were bent. There was always talk of ripping up the court and building a new parking lot, but the church's board of directors could never quite justify the cost of having the baskets taken out and the court repaved just to add 10 parking spaces or so, although the vote was always close.

Ali sat on the picnic table watching the court. His shoes were lying in the grass. Then he lay on his back and watched the clouds floating slowly across the sky. He grew drowsy. Much later, he woke to the sounds of a bouncing ball. He looked up and discovered the court was no longer empty. First came the handful of rich white kids who still played at the court on Sundays. They were very white, except when they got red, and wore Boston Celtics or Indiana Pacers or sometimes Detroit Pistons shirts and shorts, and were usually good shooters, and were always picked last. They didn't look at Ali, who was still on the picnic table, because to them he wasn't really black, and not really white looking at.

The Haitians were next to come. They spoke French and Patois amongst themselves, but most of them spoke English and some of them were very good. Then came the Jamaicans. They still owned the court on the weekends. They came from the apartments at one o'clock in the afternoon and called "I got game." Eventually everyone let them have game, except other Jamaicans or some of the scrappier Haitians, and sometimes there were fights. Most of the Jamaicans knew and respected each other, and they rarely fought amongst themselves except Toughy, who fought everyone. Ali was bored of watching the court from the picnic table. He slipped on his shoes and walked on to the court. He felt a little self-conscious because of his shiny shoes, but he thought if he was careful not to slip, the others might not notice. He started shooting at the basket with the fewest players. Eventually two teams said they wanted to play a full-court game and they told Ali to move. Ali didn't want to move, and didn't understand why he had to. He told them so. "Move or we'll run you over," said one. "Can I play with you guys?" asked Ali. "Hell no. We got five. Get your own team," said another, pointing to a group of three young Somalis who were sitting on the grass outside the court and talking loudly amongst themselves. Ali approached them. Their hair was shaved fashionably short, and they wore bright, ill-fitting baseball caps and shirts that said Georgetown, and Air Jordan. Ali noticed their basketball shoes, which were new.

Ali asked them in Somali if they wanted to make a team together. "We got more guys coming," one of them said, in English. Ali walked back on to the court, picked up his ball and started shooting again. Then someone grabbed Ali and spun him around. "Move your Smellian ass off the motherfucking court," said Toughy. Toughy was short, not very big, but strong.

Ali was not daunted. "Fuck you, bitch," he said, trying to pronounce the phrase as he had heard it used so many times on TV. Toughy hit Ali once, and Ali was kneeling, blood flowing from his nose. "Who the fuck are you? You're a Smellian. You come here and think you can take over the court with all your friends there." Toughy paused for emphasis. "You're a fucking big-hair, skinny-ass, smelly, fucking-ugly-as-hell Smellian."

The other players crowded around Toughy and Ali because they knew Toughy had a knife in his backpack. The court was getting hotter.

"You guys come here and try to be black. This ain't your fucking court. Get off the court or I'll kick your ugly fucking ass back to Smellia." He tried to kick Ali, but three of his friends held him back because they thought that it wasn't a fair fight after all. Toughy kept yelling as his friends pushed him to the other end of the court. "You can't even speak English. You can't play worth shit. You don't even got shoosooooo!"

Ali got up slowly, his face flushed. He looked at the Somalis who were sitting on the grass, but they looked away. Ali picked up his ball and walked off the court, holding his nose, which was still bleeding a little. Someone threw a dime at him and shouted at him to buy some shoes. He could hear Toughy laughing. When he got to the edge of the park, he looked back. The others had started their game.

He wanted to explain that he just wanted to play, that he didn't want to go home because the security guard with the dog might still be around and the window wasn't fixed and someone might yell something and throw another firecracker. He turned around and started walking home. And he remembered that in two weeks it would be the Eid Celebration and maybe his mother would have found a job and then he could get new shoes, and then everything would be all right.

by Kim Brunhuber

Kim Brunhuber is a third-year journalism student at Carleton.

Some people might ask why this story for Black History Month puts Black people instead of whites on trial in this "court." Black History Month is not just about celebrating the richness of our splendid heritage. It is not just about reveling in our Blackness. It is not just about pointing out the injustices perpetrated by whites. Black History Month is also a time to re-examine our individual roles as members of a large, diverse community. The African Diaspora encompasses people of all nations and cultures, and it is vital that our community accepts all people of African origin, their culture, and their history, and not just the Africa that happens to be in vogue, the hip-hop on Much Music, the blackness that's on T-shirts. I have seen the same brothers and sisters who profess their love for "Africa" turn around and diss certain Africans just because they don't fit a particular definition created by the popular media. When you're out with friends, family, wherever, don't support the ignorance that is levelled so quickly and so off-handedly at Blacks of different origins. In this story, Ali is reduced to a victim, which is unfortunate, and Toughy is powerful but culturally intolerant. Life is not as simple as this. But I do know an Ali, and what is even worse, I also know a Toughy. In fact, many of us, including myself, may all have a Toughy inside of us. One of the saddest moments of my short life happened a few years ago in an elevator. The building superintendent said to me in passing that the building was being overrun by "Somalians." I, in my ignorance, nodded dumbly. We got off the elevator together, and went our separate ways. I wish that I had had the courage to say something. By saying nothing I put myself on

THE DESTRUCTIVE HANDS OF RACISM

Those hands that stole us from the MOTHERLAND to a strange world unknown
 Those hands that branded us and called us their property; their niggers
 Those hands that CASTRATED our men, LYNCHED our men, and KILLED our men Those hands that tore unborn babies out of our women's stomachs, RAPED our women, and WHIPPED our women.
 Those hands that SOLD our children away one by one, never to SEE them again,
 Those hands that twisted our minds into thinking our noses too flat, our lips too thick, our hair too kinky, our skin too black
 Those fatal hands that encourage our disunity.
 Those destructive hands that keep, keeping us down
 BEAUTIFUL BLACK PEOPLE SAY "NO MORE!!"
 Destroy those deadly hands by LOVING YOURSELVES
 Destroy those fatal hands by DOING FOR YOURSELVES Destroy those destructive hands by DOING FOR EACH OTHER

-- by Elizabeth Adefarakan

Her large brown eyes looked up to my face
 The tears streamed down at a steady pace
 She sat in my lap; we were hand in hand
 As I told her the story of where Black lives began.

I could not deny her the right to know
 The trials that her ancestors did undergo
 She asked me about the African sky,
 And how our people were put to die

I told her about how people were found
 With whips and chains their legs were bound
 They were beaten and fully aware of pain
 They screamed for their loved ones but only in vain

They were slaves to the white man in this new land
 They were reduced to children under the pale hand
 Hope of freedom made them struggle to survive
 With oppression and death they barely kept alive

My little girl listened as I told of our past
 But the end did not come when we said: free at last
 The struggle continues there's a long way to go
 Our ancestors' blood we will forever know .

-- by Nicole Plata

FW. De Klerk Is A Criminal

Mr. De Klerk

You are a murderer, liar, scoundrel and a cheat.
 You can't fool us with your cameo smiles, your pearly white teeth,
 You won't trick us with your Nobel Peace Prizes and Man of the Years,
 We know the racist that lives beneath those sheets.

De Klerk, you think we stupid?

You think we foolie?

You think we forget Sharpeville and Boipatong?
 You think we forget Robbin Island and Biko, and Bantu Education, and Police Dogs, and Incarceration?
 You think we forget divide and rule?
 You think we forget your shrapnel, your whips and your chains?
 You think we forget the gutter and your spili?
 Man, you think we forget the HATE?
 You think we forget slavery?
 You think we forget the struggle?
 Let me tell you something. We nah goin to forgive and we nah goin to forget.

De Klerk, you think you lucky, huh?

You think you some prodigal son?

You think you smart my boy?

Well let me tell you something brother
 The revolution just done begun!

-- by Adrian Harewood

What is Black?

A word often used in negative form.
 BLACK death, BLACK sheep, BLACK market,
 Describing Pain. Describing Wrong.

The BLACK in my eyes,
 A sight of gentleness and purity,
 A BLACK pearl in the ocean,
 A syrabol of rare beauty.

BLACK civilization from which all others derive,
 A thought to be proud of.
 One to admire. A guide to aspire.

BLACK. The true color.
 Of oil as it flows.
 Giving life, solving needs,
 To a population that grows.

Then BLACK is the color.
 We cannot resist,
 When day turns to night
 Sweet slumber insists.

-- by Angelique Benois

WHY

WHY DO YOU BRING UPON ME ALL THIS HURT AND PAIN?
 MAKING MY LIFE AND CONTRIBUTION SEEM UNIMPORTANT AND IN VAIN?
 YOU HAVE SAID SO MANY DEGRADING THINGS TO MY FACE, TOO VERY OFTEN I'VE BEEN CALLED A WASTE OF A RACE.
 SOMETIMES IT'S NOT WHAT YOU SAY, BUT IT'S THE LITTLE THINGS THAT YOU DO.
 TO TRY AND MAKE ME INFERIOR TO YOU.
 YOU CONSTANTLY FOLLOW ME AROUND YOUR STORE
 THINKING THAT I'M GOING TO PLUNDER SOMETHING AND WALK OUT THE DOOR
 I HAVE EVER SO OFTEN BEEN REFUSED CREDIT
 BECAUSE YOU LOOK AT ME AND JUDGE ME BY THE COLOR OF MY SKIN
 AND MADE ME AN ASSET TO YOUR TEAM'S VICTORY.
 TELL ME, WHEN WILL THIS ALL STOP?
 WHEN CAN I, WITH NO OBSTACLE RISE TO THE TOP?
 I HAVE COME A VERY LONG WAY FROM EMANCIPATION TO REVOLUTION, I JUST CAN'T UNDERSTAND WHY DO YOU KEEP ON STANDING IN MY WAY
 SO PLEASE ALLOW ME TO BREATHE, LIVE IN PEACE AND RELAXATION, AND NOT BEING SCARED THAT MY NEXT JOB INTERVIEW WILL BE BASED ON MY RACE AND NOT MY QUALIFICATION
 I URGE YOU TO GIVE IN AND MAKE LIFE EASY
 FOR EACH AND EVERY ONE AND FOR SURE THERE WILL BE UNITY.

-- by Mayana Massicot

CORRECTION AND CLARIFICATION

In the Jan. 20 feature article in The Charlatan, Carleton Women's Centre co-ordinator Renée Twaddle was quoted as saying: "Mark Tinlin and others are thinking of excuses not to use the cameras instead of their job to improve safety." She did not. Twaddle was also taken out of context, as she had emphasized the improvements made to the tunnels in several interviews.

THE HORN OF AFRICA RESTAURANT

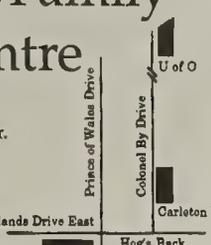

Telephone: (613) 789-0025
364 Rideau Street, Ottawa, Ontario K1N 5Y8

-15% off by presenting this coupon
-Group reservations (10 or more people) receive a special discount

Meadowlands Family Health Centre

Hog's Back Plaza
888 Meadowlands Drive East
corner of Prince of Wales Dr. and Meadowlands Dr.
(behind McDonald's)
Ottawa, Ontario K2C3R2
228-2882

Family Medicine Pediatrics
Adolescent Medicine Minor Surgery
Obstetrics and Maternity Care Counselling Services

Nous Parlons Français

Open 7 days a week With or without appointment
Weekdays 8AM to 8PM
Weekends / Holidays 10AM to 6PM

ATTENTION STUDENTS!

GET OFF THE BENCH AND INTO THE BAR!

Take the time out from the books & make the move to the SUNNYSIDE SPORTS BAR! Come and shoot some pool or catch the game on the big T.V. screen...

Great hang out for any university club, team or society...

MON & TUES: WING NIGHTS
WED: HALF PRICE LARGE PITCHER
THURS: PITCHER NIGHT
You never know when CAPTAIN SUNNYSIDE might show up?!

WE ARE EASY TO FIND

1077 BANK

(corner of Sunnyside & Bank)
telephone #: 730-5748

The Lion's Den CARIBBEAN CUISINE

* homemade juices * curries
* baked goods * stewed dishes
* vegetarian dishes * jerk

238-6149

Citywide Delivery
(some restrictions apply)

Free Delivery on Campus

399A Catherine (& Percy) Ottawa

Calls Us About Our Entertainment Calendar And Our Catering Services

Carleton University Students' Association

Presenting...

bglad bisexual, gay & lesbian awareness days

A week of events to celebrate the Gay, Lesbian and Bisexual Community at Carleton University

For more info, call 788-2600 ext. 1860

Monday, February 14

PINK TRIANGLE DAY
in memory of those who died in the Holocaust FILM SCREENING - "DESIRE" a chronology of Nazi treatment of gays - GLB Centre, 127A Unicentre, 2:00 pm

Tuesday, February 15

SPEAKER - GENDER MOSIAC
the speaker from this support group for transgender people will address issues and answer questions related to this topic - GLB Centre, 127A Unicentre, 2:30 pm

THE GREAT POSTER DEBATE

a forum regarding the GLB Centre's "Who are you Bashing?" campaign - Baker's Lounge, 4th floor Unicentre, 4:30 pm

ACTIVISM IN THE 90's

a panel discussion hosted by OPIRG Carleton - 254 Herzberg, 7:30 to 9:30 pm

Wednesday, February 16

BLUE JEANS DAY

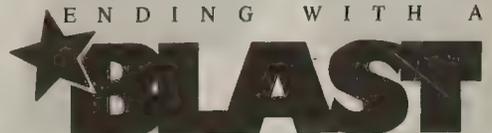

wear your blue jeans to show your support for gay, lesbian and bisexual rights SPEAKER - GARY KINSMAN on "THE FRUIT MACHINE" a presentation about the purge of gays and lesbians from the Civil Service in the 1950's and 60's - 3165 Mackenzie, 2:00 pm FILM SCREENING - "THE WORD IS OUT" a pre-AIDS era documentary of gays and lesbians - 509A Dunton, 6:00 to 9:00 pm

Thursday, February 17

SPEAKER - BECKI ROSS
on Women Street Workers during the 1950's and 60's - 281 Tory, 2:00 pm
FILM SCREENING - "THANK GOD I'M A LESBIAN"
308 Paterson Hall, 6:00 to 9:00 pm

Friday, February 18

BROWN BAG LUNCH WORKSHOP
an Anti-Homophobia workshop to be held in the GLB Centre, 127A Unicentre, 12:00 pm
BGLAD BLAST DANCE PARTY - Oliver's, 9:00 pm to 1:00 am (see right for more information)

OLIVER'S • FRIDAY, FEBRUARY 18, 1994 • 9 PM

The biggest, queerest party BGLAD has ever seen! We're taking over Oliver's bar and filling it to the limit from 9:00 pm onwards. You're invited to bcool, blappy, bfrec, bsafe, bwild, byourself, baware, bproud, bthere and BGLAD! Body painting offered. Body piercing by Roger Monahan.

MORE LETTERS

Frats, minors and ska fans are mad

Editor:

I am writing you in regards to the show at Oliver's on Jan. 27.

I was disappointed to find that the advertised all-ages show featuring the Skatterbrains turned into such a complete fiasco, thanks to the manager of Oliver's.

Upon arrival at the Unicentre, I noticed about 50 under-aged kids sitting in the lobby with long faces because the show was pronounced to be only for people 19 years and older at the last minute. Being past 19, I had no difficulty in getting into the pub.

Unfortunately, once I had gotten to the stage, my night was ruined by the crowd of sneering, jeering and beering fratboys, who persisted in heckling the band for their entire set. It soon became clear that the Skatterbrains didn't wish to play for these beer-swilling boozers any more than they wished to listen to the band, thus making it a futile effort for us ska fans to enjoy the music.

Congratulations Oliver's, due to your unscrupulous deed, you have managed to piss off -- 1) the all-ages crowd 2) the bands 3) the patrons at Oliver's and 4) the fans who attended the show. Shame on you.

Unless amends are made, I will not set foot in Oliver's again and furthermore will urge others to boycott any upcoming shows playing there, including Wild T and the Spirit on Feb. 12.

Mike Schopf
Stittsville

End ALL violence

Editor:

Paula Peter-Dennis's article "Can women abuse other women?" The Charlatan, Feb. 3, 1994, was a courageous step toward public awareness. Some women are rapists and we must not ignore their victims. Women, men, children, the elderly -- everybody can be victims of violence.

Peter-Dennis wrote of her "... fear that speaking out may be met with denial. . . ." I understand about this as I published my experience as a battered husband last term ("Why can't men be victims?" The Charlatan, Oct. 28, 1993).

Sometimes people worry that open discussion about violent women will distract attention from violence against women.

But why? Working to eradicate all violence does not trivialize the horrible tragedy of violence against women. Besides, isn't the real issue whether or not violence is acceptable behavior? Cruelty is never acceptable. Let's end all violence. Let's break the silence!

Those wishing to learn more about lesbian sexual assault can refer to the following three journals -- Brand and Kidd "Frequency of physical aggression in heterosexual and female homosexual dyads," in Psychological Reports, 1986; Lie et al. "Lesbians in currently aggressive relationships," in Violence and Victims, 1991; Waterman et al. "Sexual coercion in gay male and lesbian relationships," in The Journal of Sex Research, 1989.

David P. Bezeau
Women's Studies/Religion II

Christopher's
Monday - Wednesday
is
KEG PARTY NIGHT
$5.99 Pitchers

Thursday - Friday
is
BOTTLE BLADDER BUSTER NIGHT
$1.99 Bottled Beer

ALSO FEATURING:
20¢ Wings
Mon. - Wed.
1/2 Price Pizza
Thurs. - Fri.
$2.50 Shooters
Mon. - Fri. night

680 Brookfield Rd.
at Riverside
Ottawa, Ont.
S21-9234

All Specials After 5 pm - Food Specials Eat In Only - Until March 31st

The Un Classifieds

Replies for boxes: PICH1, SSS, PSYCH, TUTOR
Please come to 531 Unicentre for responses.

TEARFUL GOODBYES

JORDANIA: Watching you leave us is like watching a news file get deleted on a Wednesday afternoon you deal with it, but fuck it's hard to fill that space. The airwaves will never sound the same. We're rooting for you from down the hall, o multi-media goddess. Love and adotta gratitude from each and every Charlahack.

FOR SALE/RENT

Roommate Wanted Immediately: Spacious, furnished 2-bedroom apartment in Glebe to share. At Bronson & Fifth - 5 minute walk to campus, bus at door. Mature, quiet, non-smoker only. Large closets, storage, laundry in building. Carpeted, unurnished bedroom. Shared bathroom, kitchen & livingroom facilities. Use of TV and microwave $350/month inclusive. 251-5923, leave message or box 722 Charlatan.

2 Rooms for Rent: Available March 1st and May 1st, $250/month + hydro (heat included); parking available; 4 bdrm townhouse (corner of Fisher/Meadowlands); Call 228-7317 (Marice) or 225-8257 (Teresa). Leave a message.

Room for rent in 3 bedroom house. $260 includes heat. Close to Carleton. Super cool roommates. Available immediately. Call Dan @ 236-2173.

For sublet: 1 bedroom in a 2 bedroom duplex, beside Brewer Park. 2 min walk to school. $450 mo. Immediate or March 1. 730-0874.

SKIING: BEAUTIFUL CHALET for rent in the Laurentians at Mont Tremblant. 1,2,3,4 bedroom units. Fireplaces. Fully equipped. Also deluxe 2 bedroom condo at Pinetown Village. Hot tub, fireplace. Fully equipped Call 832-3947. All available off season for great get togethers.

HUGE APARTMENT TO RENT - LOTS OF PRIVACY. 7 rooms, 2 levels, loft bedroom, newly renovated bathroom and kitchen; study, storage room, wall to wall carpeting. Available immediately. $440 inclusive for 1 roommate or 2 roommates, $295 each. Upper year/grad student preferred. Contact Rob 237-3621.

LOST & FOUND

Lost: Dark green scarf w/white print (lost in Roosters) and small mint green Esprit bag (lost at Athletics). If you $ to have them back! Reply box HELP

Lost - black Finder Binder, on 4th floor Southern Hall.

Contains important notes for two classes and essay work. Please call Pat at 730-8443.

Found: Sunglasses. Last November... in ladies wash-room (Paterson Bldg.). They are here at the Charlatan office. Describe? Box Sunglasses

WANTED / JOBS

HELP! Die-hard Pink Floyd fan didn't know about sold-out shows! Ticket holders who have any to sell, please respond! I will pay generously. (Preferably T.O. or Montreal) Box: Crazy Diamond.

Strictly for the Hardcore! 4th year Anth. student wanting to talk to serious ravers about the rave experience. For thesis paper. Contact Joel: 230-0710

SUMMER JOBS: Pripstein's Camp (Laurentians) hiring instructors: Kayaking, Waterskiing (OWSA certified), Pottery, Beadmaking/Jewellery, Gymnastics, Swim (RC/RLSS inst. & Nationals), Canoeing, Judo (black belt), Drama (musicals), Photography, Keyboardist. Send resume 5253 Decarie #333, Montreal H3W 3C3.

EARN FREE TRIPS AND CASH! Breakaway Tours is looking for motivated students, organizations & clubs to promote Spring Break Tours to Panama City Beach, Daytona & Cancun! Leader in student tours for the past 11 years, we are looking for the best reps to promote our Tours. BEST COMMISSION STRUCTURE AVAILABLE, so call today! CALL 1-800-465-4257. Member of the BBB. CALL AND COMPARE US TO ANYONE!!

Earn up to $700 weekly from home! Rush SASE to Clarin, 2407A - 515 St Laurent Blvd., Ottawa, Ont K1K 3X5

SERVICES / AVAILABLE

NCAA: GEORGETOWN HOVAYS AT SYRACUSE ORANGEMEN, Sunday, March 6. Package includes return transportation, ticket, service charges. Adult $65, 16 and under $55. Call Marc 728-1808.

JITSU. Enjoyable training which provides effective defence for men and women. Techniques suitable for law enforcement. Sun 5pm - 7pm, Wed 4pm - 6pm. Combative Room. New members always welcome. Contact: Derry 523-1507.

Is your Fraternity, Sorority, Society or Club having a party? I'm the field representative from FBM Distillery Co. Ltd. I can provide prices and more. Call Dan at 733-8410.

TRANSFORMING THE MIND 6 evenings of depth psychology and meditation offering effective methods for reducing & preventing stress, with Kelsang Tharchin, Buddhist monk and psychologist. Please contact: 231-7316

Free hair cut or colour and highlights at cost of product. Done by apprentices in the professional atmosphere of The Parlour Hair Salon. 232 St. Patrick's St. For an appointment call Carlos at 241-6929. Please mention

this ad.

INTRODUCING BUDDHIST MEDITATION A 15 evening course providing a basic understanding and meditative experiences of the Stages of the Path to Enlightenment (Lam Rim), with Kelsang Tharchin, Buddhist monk and psychologist.

20% student discount on pet-sitting services during study week. I provide loving and reliable care for cats, birds, small animals in your own home. Cat 'N' Caboodle, 235-3648.

Word processing. Accurate, professional, prompt, economical. Reports, essays, term papers, transcripts, theses. Reasonable editing provided and grammar corrected free. 731-9534.

Daytona Beach from $99 - Howard Johnson Party Complex - Panama City Beach from $159 - Ocean Front Properties Cancun Mexico from $559 - Ocean Front Hotel 1 Quebec City skiing from $239. BOOK NOW - SPACE LIMITED! Visa, Mastercard, American Express. Call BREAKAWAY TOURS 1-800-465-4257 (Ont. Reg #2422707)

Earn $500 - $1000 weekly stuffing envelopes. For details - RUSH $1.00 with SASE to: GROUP FIVE, 57 Greentree Drive, Suite 307, Dover, DE 19901.

WORD PROCESSING - Fast, Accurate, Professional Word Processing, Essays, Reports, Theses, Resumes, Flyers, Laser Printer. Pick-up and Delivery is available. Call Lena. 837-0183

SPRINGBREAK '94 - Daytona or bust! Party at the world's most famous beach with Canada's only student travel company - BREAKAWAY TOURS (Reg 2422707). $209 + $60 bus for bus and hotel or U-drive for $89 + $40 bus. Call Chris 526-0776 or 564-0564.

Legal problems? Landlord-tenant matters, small claims court, provincial offences (traffic court) & summary convictions. Call Jacques Real Services 247-1915.

INTERNATIONAL STUDENTS: DV-1 Greencard Program. Sponsored by the U.S. Immigration Dept. Greencards provide permanent resident status, in USA. Citizens of almost all countries are allowed to take part. Students, tourists, illegals may apply - wherever they live. Chance: 1 in 14. Eq Info & Bkms; New Era Legal Services, 20231 Stagg St, Canoga Park, CA 91306, USA. Tel: (818)998-4425; (818)882-9681, Monday - Sunday: 8 a.m. - 11p.m.

Essays and Theses - laser printed - $1.60 per page. Also available - resume editing, editing, writing tutoring, charts, graphics & tables. Fax & pick-up service can be arranged. Please call 721-8770.

Word Processing. Accuracy and Deadlines Guaranteed. Central Location. 233-6874.

MESSAGES/MISCELLANEOUS

Dearest Steph, knowing you has been a dream and living with you confirms my deepest feelings. I love you. Will you marry me? Marty.

Get CUSA out of jeopardy! Re-elect JOHN EDWARDS for Arts Rep.

A man got ~~wax~~ too close on the crowded #1 OC Transpo bus on Thursday night. I thought, "Am I imagining things?" I was all alone until you asked, "Excuse me, is this man bothering you?" How on earth you noticed my concern, I don't know. I can't thank you enough.

Catch the B.C. Spirit. Vote JOHN EDWARDS for Board of Governors.

Happy birthday Cindy C. Sorry I can't make it chez you, maybe you can stop chez my workplace and see the Hendrix wannabe. Do it doggy style! Luv Carolyn. JOHN EDWARDS is running for re-election. Deal with it CUSA!

Attention Commerce Students. We have extended the deadline for election nominations till Thursday, Feb. 17 @ 10:00p.m. Elections will now take place on March 1 and March 3. Questions? Call 788-2600 ext. 2708.

These ads must be getting annoying by now. JOHN EDWARDS for BOG.

The Commerce Society is selling tickets for the Business Banquet and grad party in 225 Paterson. The executive hates me. Re-elect JOHN EDWARDS for Arts Rep.

To Dave and Mike. If a pic is worth a 1000 words, you guys have written's block. From Jacques and Lucien. Here's another repetitive message for JOHN EDWARDS for BOG.

MAN TO WOMAN

Semi-degenerate trail rider seeks female counterpart for crazy biking adventures we can lie about. Please include photo of bike. Box Bkic

To the girl in the yellow jacket reading Baudelaire on the #7. Sat, Jan. 28. Your smile blew me away. Meet for coffee? Answer here. Box Bluck

White, single, gentleman seeking classy, attractive, sensual, petite female who loves hot tubbing, jacuzzis, romantic dinners, movies, music, slow dancing, silk lingerie... for casual or intimate relationship. Box Romantic.

WOMAN TO MAN

Single, attractive, 21 yr old female with warm heart and quick smile, possessing a great personality and warped sense of humour, is looking for a man interested in a relationship. He must want romance and like long walks, biking, music and pool. To be eligible he should be tall, possess a warm heart and similar interests. Box Adorable.

Women bring back bronze

Ravens persevere in longest game ever

by Richard G.D. Scott
Charlatan Staff

It took not one, not two, but three overtime periods to decide whether or not the Carleton women's waterpolo team was good enough for a bronze medal. They were.

Carleton beat the University of McMaster Marauders 16-14 in the longest game in Ontario Women's Interuniversity Athletic Association waterpolo history, to take home a bronze medal from the Feb. 4-6 championships in St. Catharines.

"We played with a lot of heart," said driver Kari Maeland. "I think our bronze-medal game was a lot more exciting than the gold-medal game. No one's disappointed with what happened."

Carleton 16 McMaster 14

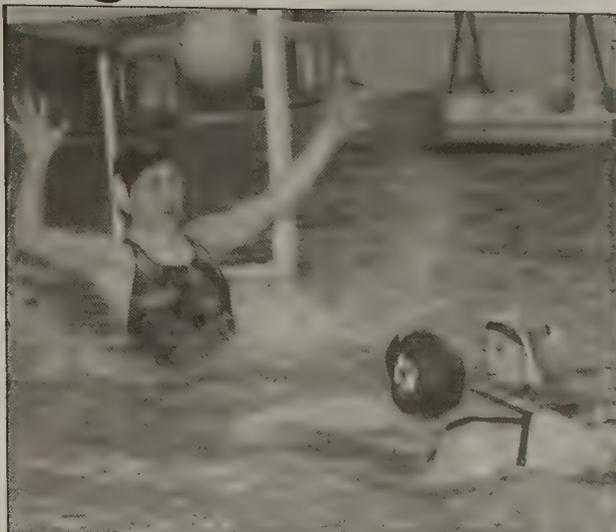

The Ravens, 7-1 in the regular season, failed to qualify for the gold-medal game in the five-team playoff tournament after upset losses to McMaster (5-4) and Queen's University (7-2).

Carleton did beat the eventual playoff champions Toronto (6-2) and host Brock (10-4) in round-robin action, but it wasn't enough to gain them a spot in the gold-medal game.

"We (were) looking beyond the McMaster and Queen's games to the Toronto game," said coach Steve Baird. "We wanted to win the gold medal but didn't do it."

With the score tied at four against McMaster in the first round, Marauder goaltender Erika Dutz scored on a long bomb with one second left to play to shock the Raven team.

"The McMaster loss was a disaster.

Steph Burgess scores her second of six goals in Carleton's bronze-medal win.

(Against Queen's), we had a lot more opportunities, but the score didn't reflect it," said Baird.

After rebounding to defeat Toronto and Brock in round-robin play, the Ravens geared themselves up for a bronze-medal rematch against McMaster.

And after 24 minutes of regular play and 18 minutes of overtime, the Ravens proved why they were the league's best team during the regular season, pulling out the 16-14 win.

"It was the most exciting game I've been involved in as a coach," said Baird.

After Raven driver Stephanie Burgess opened the scoring with her first of six goals, the score swayed back and forth before McMaster tied the game at eight in the final minute of the fourth quarter to force the game into overtime.

Trailing 12-11 with three seconds left in the second overtime period, driver Anne Stacey redirected a pass by driver J.J. Goldhar to send the game into a third overtime period, where the Ravens bore down for the win.

"It was an awfully long struggle as we used only six players (and a goaltender) in overtime," said Baird.

Carleton is the only team to win a medal every year since the OWIAA waterpolo's inception in 1987, with seven medals in seven years. Toronto won the gold medal this year, defeating Queen's 4-3 in the final. □

Solid results leave skiers optimistic

by Ryan Ward
Charlatan Staff

Only two weeks separate the men's and women's nordic ski teams from the provincial championships — and both are eagerly waiting for that time to pass.

That's because both teams posted solid results — 15 top-20 finishes — at the National Capital District Interdivisional Feb. 5-6 in Deep River, Ont., in the skiing season's last qualifying event prior to the provincial championships.

Raven skier Wayne Dustin topped all Carleton results with a first-place finish in the 15-kilometre classic race and a second-place result in the 10-kilometre freestyle among 30 competitors from nine universities across the province including Guelph, Western, Ottawa, Toronto, Waterloo and McMaster.

"Saturday I was feeling good," said Dustin. "I was pretty confident I would win because I'm a strong classic skier."

Raven veteran Chris Webb also had a good weekend, finishing 10th in the classic race and eighth in the freestyle.

"I felt good this weekend. This year we haven't had a lot of races due to cancellations, so there's still room to finish top-five at (the championships)," said Webb, commenting on his chances at the upcoming championships on Feb. 19-20.

Other notable results on the men's side include Mike Cooper who placed 15th in the classic race and 17th in the freestyle, Frank Ferrari who placed 11th in the freestyle and Scott Diamond who finished 18th in the classic race.

On the women's side, veteran racer Kirsten Davis posted the top Raven result placing fifth in both the classic and freestyle races among racing fields of 10 and 13 respectively.

"I did pretty well this weekend," said Davis. "Right now I'm on pace with last year and should do as well."

Teammate Erin Long placed sixth in the classic race and eighth in the freestyle, while Catherine Mulvihill finished eighth in the classic and sixth in the freestyle. □

Fencers foiled at playoff qualifying tourney

by Bram S. Aaron
Charlatan Staff

In the words of fencing coach James Ireland, it was probably the "worst performance we've ever done."

Fencing at the east division sectionals of the Ontario Universities and Ontario Women's Interuniversity athletic associations Feb. 5-6 in Kingston, the Ravens qualified only one individual and one team for the upcoming provincial championships at Carleton Feb. 19-20.

"It was a really lousy weekend. It was a weekend they want to forget," said Ireland. "It was the worst result men's-wise in six years."

Nevertheless, fencer Simon Pianarosa tied for first in the men's sabre to qualify.

The women's foil team — composed of fencers Donna Switzer, Liliana Piazza, Tammy Duquette and Natalie Remedios — also placed first to qualify.

"It went great for us. We did better than expected," said squad captain Piazza, who also said colds the night before the competition made them fence harder. "That made us work even harder."

The sectional, held at Royal Military College in Kingston, featured individual and team round-robin elimination competition among the universities of Ottawa, Queen's, Carleton and RMC in five fencing classes.

After having conditionally qualified seven fencers in individual competition for the provincial championships at the last sectional Jan. 22-23, Ireland said he was disappointed the men's and women's teams were unable to capitalize on their chances at this meet.

Last year, seven fencers qualified for individual events. The women's foil and epee teams qualified for the provincial championships as did the men's foil and sabre teams.

Looking ahead to the championships, Ireland said he was confident his entries would do well.

"We're gonna win. They're gonna fight like they did last weekend," he said.

Pianarosa agreed. "I just hope I'm in top shape in two weeks. Because if I am, the other schools should be worried." □

RANT 'N' RAVEN

NBA tipoff in jeopardy

by Steven Vesely
Charlatan Staff

What do the initials NBA stand for? That depends. To basketball aficionados it stands for the National Basketball Association. But if the Ontario government ran the NBA, it would stand for No Brains at All.

That's because unless the provincial government starts using its little grey cells soon, it will most assuredly wind up losing the professional basketball franchise the association recently awarded to the city of Toronto last November.

Besides the standard provisions, like a franchise fee and building an arena, the association also demanded that NBA games be taken off the province's sports lottery — in accordance with the league's strongly enforced anti-gambling stance.

Oh-oh. Problem.

The Pro-Line Sports Select lottery generated over $210 million in sales last year with about 10 percent of those sales coming from NBA games. The bulk of that money went to charities, but the province itself received a quarter, about $50 million, which was funnelled into government service programs.

Naturally the province wasn't overly thrilled with the idea of dropping a $5-million take from its basketball ticket.

And that's led to an impasse of sorts with the NBA flatly opposed to betting on its game and the province unwilling to give up the revenues garnered from NBA action on its Pro-Line game.

Making matters even more urgent, the league wants to settle the issue as soon as possible and has a set a Feb. 13 deadline — the date of the NBA All-Star game — as the latest it would allow plans for the '95-'96 tip-off to proceed. If the situation isn't resolved by then, NBA officials have warned the province to kiss pro basketball goodbye.

The No Brains at All government, of course, believes that's a bluff. After all, how could the NBA possibly pass up a jewel of a city like Toronto?

Easily. Certainly the NBA can envision a profitable operation in Toronto, but it doesn't desperately need to expand into Canada. Its telecasts are seen here. Its merchandise is sold here. For the league, Toronto is a remote and barren outpost whose only true value is as part of some visionary international basketball scheme.

The province, on the other hand, needs the NBA more than it's letting on. A pro sport franchise, as every city knows, means jobs. Constructing an arena. Operating the building. Merchandise. Tourism and other spin-offs.

One economic study prepared by city suggested tax revenues of up to $81 million to all three levels of government in the team's first year of operation and $31 million in the year thereafter.

Other NBA proponents argue it's likely the tax revenues generated by an expansion team would more than make up for the losses of dropping basketball from the sports lottery.

Sounds reasonable. Too bad the government doesn't see it that way. But then again, no brains will do that to you. □

Raven Records

OWIAA WATERPOLO East Division

Gold Medal Game
Toronto 4 Queen's 3

Bronze Medal Game
Carleton 16 McMaster 14 3OT

OWIAA VOLLEYBALL East Division

	W	L	T	F	A	PTS
York	6	1	0	19	5	12
Ottawa	5	2	0	16	9	10
Toronto	5	2	0	19	7	10
Queen's	5	4	0	16	14	10
Ryerson	1	6	0	3	18	2
Carleton	7	0	1	21	0	0

OWIAA BASKETBALL East Division

	W	L	T	F	A	PTS
Laurentian	8	0	0	624	373	16
Toronto	7	1	0	551	375	14
Ottawa	5	3	0	542	475	10
Queen's	3	3	0	387	372	6
York	3	4	0	398	441	6
Ryerson	1	8	0	456	609	2
Carleton	0	8	0	310	623	0

OWIAA Athlete of the Week

Toronto student Rekha Trembath is the OWIAA athlete of the week.

After leading the Toronto Varsity Blues to a 4-3 gold-medal win over the Queen's Golden Gaels in the water polo championships, Rekha was named the tournament MVP as well as being named to the league's all-star team.

OCAA BASKETBALL East Division

	W	L	T	F	A	PTS
Laurentian	8	0	0	678	620	16
Ryerson	6	3	0	770	692	12
York	4	3	0	556	561	8
Toronto	4	4	0	595	608	8
Carleton	2	6	0	639	676	4
Ottawa	2	6	0	602	648	4
Queen's	1	5	0	443	478	2

OCAA BASKETBALL East Scoring Leaders

	FG	AT	FT	AT	AVE
Beason	116	206	59	81	35.0
Charles	80	153	79	101	30.1
Smart	50	112	41	54	26.7
Swords	64	142	29	45	22.5
Fischer	64	112	41	50	21.1

OCAA BASKETBALL East Rebound Leaders

	G	RBS	AVE
A. Beason - Ryrsn	9	109	12.1
T. Charles - Crl	8	84	10.5
C. Fischer - Lrtn	8	74	9.3
C. Porter - Ott	8	66	8.3
D. Reid - Ott	8	61	7.6

OCAA Athlete of the Week

Centre Joey St. Aubin of the Ottawa Gee-Gees hockey club is the OCAA athlete of the week. St. Aubin scored three goals in a 4-1 win over Queen's and added another hat trick along with two assists in a 7-1 win over RMC as the Gee-Gees improved to 14-5-2.

Raven playoff hopes dim with losses

75 points by Charles not enough to pace the Ravens to victory

by Kevin Restivo
Charlatan Staff

Talk about rubbing salt in the wound. The Carleton men's basketball team extended its losing streak to six games last week, falling 85-80 to the University of Ottawa Gee-Gees on Feb. 1 and 96-89 to the Laurentian Voyageurs Feb. 4.

The Ravens' latest losses drop their record in the east division of the Ontario Universities Athletic Association to 2-6. Tied for fifth place with the Ottawa Gee-Gees, the Ravens are now four points behind Toronto for the last playoff spot in the OUA.

Ottawa 85 Carleton 80
Laurentian 96 Carleton 89

Early on in the game against Ottawa, Carleton stayed close despite turnovers and poor shooting, taking advantage of the slower pace set by the Gee-Gees.

It was only when Ottawa switched to a more aggressive one-on-one type defence that Carleton fell behind.

The Ravens trailed 36-29 at halftime. The second half was an up-and-down affair which saw the pace quicken and the intensity heighten.

Ottawa threatened to blow the game open a number of times, but fourth-year forward Taffe Charles personified Carleton's performance with his scrappy play and timely scoring.

The Ravens surged to a 60-59 lead with about 8:30 left on a basket by third-year guard Luca Diaconescu. But Carleton then faltered badly down the stretch as Ottawa went on a 9-2 run over two minutes putting the game out of reach.

"We weren't happy with our execution in the first half," said third-year Raven guard Jeff Robins, "our defensive intensity was better in the second half, but it just didn't work out for us."

Raven head coach Paul Armstrong expanded on this assessment.

"Down the stretch, I think, it was just a matter that they were a little tougher mentally," he said. "They just finished."

Charles led Carleton with 31 points, while Jamie Marquardt and Reagh Vidito each chipped in with 15 apiece.

Though the results were the same, Carleton played a much tougher game against the first-place Voyageurs.

The Voyageurs ran up a 52-37 halftime lead largely on the strength of eight three-pointers and a tenacious full-court press.

But Carleton turned the tables in the second half, breaking the press effectively and mounting a 15-2 run of their own to get themselves back in the game.

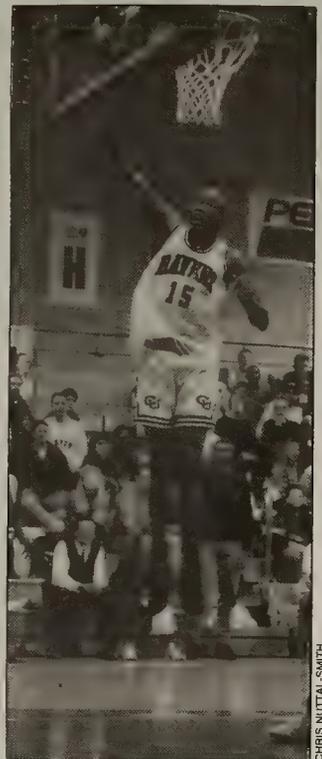

The Ravens even managed to take a brief 77-76 lead — their first of the game — when Charles hit two free throws with 7:37 left in the game.

But Laurentian guard Shawn Swords broke the Ravens' back shortly thereafter, scoring on a three-pointer despite having second-year Raven guard Andrew Smith draped all over him.

"I can't believe he hit that shot," said Smith. "I had a hand right in his face."

Carleton's inability to score down the stretch cost them dearly once again.

"It's like a broken record," said Smith. "We just don't execute down the stretch. ... I think a lot of it has to be experience." Charles once again paced Carleton with a game-high of 44 points. □

Charles nets a basket against Ottawa.

CHRIS NUTTAL-SMITH

The Ceremonial Guard

This summer, participate in the colourful Changing the Guard Ceremony on Parliament Hill. You will be paid from May 11 to August 30, 1994, while learning basic military techniques with a group of dynamic young men and women.

Join the Reserve and enjoy summer employment with a difference.

For more information, contact:

The Governor General's Foot Guards
Cartier Square Drill Hall
Ottawa, Ontario
K1A 0K2 (613) 995-4020 (Collect)

The Reserve: Rewarding part-time employment

Ian, full-time student and member of the Ceremonial Guard during the summer months.

Canada

CANADIAN ARMED FORCES

REGULAR AND RESERVE

Raven Rumblings

QUOTE OF THE WEEK

"Everyone sits and burrows themselves in these rowing machines over the winter and then come out of the woodwork in the spring all ready to row."

Rowing coach John Ossowski on the importance of indoor winter training as a method of preparing for spring races.

ALL-STARS

Three members of the Carleton water polo team were named to the Ontario Women's Interuniversity Athletic Association water polo all-star team after this past weekend's championships.

Ravens Steph Burgess, Jen Hampton and Anne Stacey were so honored, as was coach Steve Baird who was named Coach of the Year.

SAILING AWAY TO FRANCE

The Carleton sailing club is making plans to race in France this spring.

Commodore Cressida Robson says the club has submitted an application to the Course Croisiere d'Edhe, a university in Les Sables, France, and expects to receive an invitation to race in the world's largest intercollegiate regatta next week.

Carleton will be the only Canadian entry at the April 16-23 regatta which should attract over 200 crews from around the world, says Robson.

TALK ABOUT FAITH

When Laurentian's Stacey Hann went to the free-throw line with 14:52 remaining in their Feb. 5 game against the Ravens, the irrepressible Rodney the Raven tried to taunt her by holding up a sign that said "No pressure." No kidding, Rodney. The Lady Vees had almost a 40-point lead at the time and were well on their way to an easy 82-28 win over the winless Ravens.

Friday, Feb. 11.

BASKETBALL — The 0-8 women's basketball team hosts the 7-1 Toronto Varsity Blues in a 6 p.m. match at the Ravens' Nest. The 2-6 men's team follows with an 8 p.m. game.

Saturday, Feb. 12.

BASKETBALL — The women's basketball team hosts their last home game of the year when they tip off against the Queen's Golden Gaels in a 6 p.m. match at the Ravens' Nest tonight. The men's team follows with an 8 p.m. match.

SWIMMING — The women's swim team travels to Guelph to take part in the OWIAA championships today. This weekend's competition is the last chance for members of the women's team to qualify for the national championships to be held March 11-13 in Victoria, B.C.

VOLLEYBALL — The 0-7 women's volleyball team hosts the 6-1, first-place York Yeowomen in an 11 a.m. match at the Ravens' Nest today.

Following that game, they'll be back on the court in an 3 p.m. afternoon contest against the 1-6 Ryerson Lady Rams.

Sunday, Feb. 13.

SWIMMING — The OWIAA swim championships in Guelph continue.

VOLLEYBALL — The women's volleyball team ends its season in a 2 p.m. home match against the University of Toronto Varsity Blues. □

Women's losing skid reaches eight

by Derek DeCloet
Charlatan Staff

If the Carleton women's basketball team was a Prairie wheat field, it would be the kind that's cracked and dusty enough to scare a farmer.

Ottawa 77 Carleton 41
Laurentian 82 Carleton 28

The drought has been that bad.

The hapless Ravens fell to 0-8 after a 77-41 loss to Ottawa on Feb. 1 and an 82-28 defeat to Laurentian on Feb. 5.

With four games left, the Ravens are now virtually assured of missing the playoffs for the fifth time in Marg Jones' five-year tenure as head coach.

Against the Lady Voyageurs, the Ravens' anemic offence produced one of the ugliest statistics ever seen on a basketball court. They took 15 shots from the field and only scored on one.

"I think if our percentage increased, as far as shooting goes, we might have a shot at winning some games," said Raven assistant coach Frank Carpentier, in what might be the understatement of the year. "The bottom line is we're outmatched (in height) on each player."

The average height of the Lady Vees' starting five players was around six feet.

CHRIS NUTTAL-SMITH

Ottawa's defence stifled the Ravens.

The Ravens' starters were about four inches shorter, on average.

"We knew we were going to come out on top," said Voyageur guard Carolyn Swords, who had 15 first-half points — eight more than the entire Carleton team.

Laurentian coach Peter Ennis admitted it was hard to get his team motivated for such a weak opponent.

"I'd be lying if I said 'No, it wasn't,'" he said. "Carleton played hard. At least it keeps the kids' minds sharp."

Clearly, the Ravens had no illusions they could beat the undefeated Voyageurs.

"You're not going out to win," said Raven guard Cindy Krenosky. "You're going out to play well for yourself." Sarah Smith led Carleton with 11 points.

The game against the Gee-Gees, while more evenly matched, was a sloppy one. The two teams combined for 55 turnovers — 33 by Carleton, including 13 by rookie guard Gillian Roseway.

"I wasn't pleased at all, at either end of the floor, with what we were doing today," said Gee-Gee coach Wanda Pilon.

Again, the Ravens started slowly. It took them over seven minutes to score a point. By that time, Ottawa had already jumped out to an 11-point lead, thanks to a flurry of Raven turnovers.

"Our defensive pressure was good full-court and that's what got us the lead," said Ottawa assistant coach Rod Lee.

But Carleton recovered and nearly matched the Ravens basket-for-basket the rest of the half, before faltering again in the second half.

Ottawa guard Fabienne Perrin led all scorers with 21 points. Roseway had 16 for Carleton. □

Rowing first at Indoor Championships

by Mark Cotgrave and Stevan Vesely
Charlatan Staff

The Carleton rowing club posted middle-of-the-road results at the Canadian Indoor Rowing Championships at Upper Canada College in Toronto on Feb. 6.

Raven Josée Paquette finished with the top Carleton result, placing third among 32 in a time of 9:59 in the women's lightweight class.

With the top-three finish, Paquette advanced to an open final composed of the top-16 lightweight women finishers among the different class categories and placed third in that race in a time of 10:02.

"It was a good showing," said head coach John Ossowski. "She only started rowing in May of last year and she came third in both."

Teammate Nicole Lebon placed eighth in the lightweight class race in a time of 10:15.

Rowing club vice-president Vicki Schouten placed 14th among 18 competitors in the heavyweight women's class in a time of 10:10.

"We expected some pretty tough competition," said Schouten. "And we did fairly well with some middle-of-the-road results."

"It was nice because we got to see what we'll be up against in the spring and the fall," she added.

On the men's side, Trevor MacKay placed 10th among 32 in a time of 8:34 in the men's lightweight class, while rowing club president Rob Bennett placed 17th among 32 in a time of 8:47 in the men's heavyweight class.

"There was a lot more competition among the men's events. They still did well but there's a lot of depth there," said Ossowski.

Carleton's five-member team entry at the championships marked the first time the university has ever had an official presence at the indoor championships — largely at the insistence of coach Ossowski who feels the exposure is necessary for the development of the team.

"There's quite a few people who have national team potential here and any kind of exposure like that is good for them." □

Ossowski said the indoor event was important as a training tool for the spring season.

"It means a lot," he said. "Everyone sits and burrows themselves in these rowing machines over the winter and then come out of the woodwork in the spring all ready to row."

The rowing club's next major meet will be the Ontario Indoor Rowing Championships in St. Catharines on March 6. □

Charlatan Hockey Pool

Here are the point leaders in the Charlatan Hockey Pool. Points were tabulated as of Tue. Feb. 8, 1994. Regular season leaders can only win the dinner prize once.

BAXTER'S
1344 Bank Street
(at Riverside)
738-3323

1 Patrick Soden	572
2 Anjali Varma	560
3 R. De Vecchi	556
4 Vicki Mavraganis	556
5 Jeff Parker	555
6 Jeff Pavkev	555
7 Jason Beifuss	549
8 Tyler Vaillant	549
9 Joseph Kurikose	547
10 Alex Varki	547

Congratulations to Jason Beifuss who wins this week's dinner prize. Former winner Jeff Pavkev can also pick up his $25 dinner certificate for Baxter's restaurant at The Charlatan. (Italicized names are all former winners.)

Charlatan Sports Trivia

Answer the following question correctly and become eligible to win a $25 dinner for two at Schadillac's Saloon.

Which NHL goaltender holds the record for the best ever GAA?

Congratulations to Rob Rothstein who knew Kevin Stevens is the only NHL player to rack up over 100 points and 200 penalty minutes in the same season.

1. Place your answer, name and phone number on a piece of paper and submit it to The Charlatan sports editor, room 531 Uniceentre. The recipient of the prize will be determined by a supervised draw of all correct answers.

2. All answers must be received by Tuesday, Feb. 15, 1994. The winner should come up to the office for the prize on any Monday or Tuesday.

3. Contestants may submit only one entry per week.

4. Charlatan staff members and their families are not eligible to participate.

Answer:

Name:

Phone:

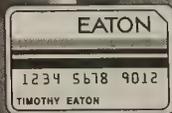

*Stay cool.
Stay loose.*

$69⁹⁹

Levi's 535 Red Tab loose Eurofit jeans.
Waists 30 to 34, 36 and 38 in legs 32
and 34. (171) 49.99
Levi's Red Tab jean jacket.
S., M., L., XL. (171) 69.99
Levi's Red Tab white cotton denim shirt.
S., M., L., XL. (171) 44.99

$49⁹⁹

EATON'S
Goods Satisfact Refunded

Inti-Illimani: musical ambassadors

by Alex Bustos
Charlatan Staff

Inti-Illimani
Centrepointe Theatre
Feb. 8

Playing over 30 wind, percussion, and string instruments, Inti-Illimani blended jazz, flamenco, classical, Caribbean and popular over traditional Andes music in front of a crowd of over 1,000 at Centrepointe Theatre.

The band's name comes from a Native South American dialect called Ayмара: Inti, meaning sun; Illimani, a mountain near La Paz, Bolivia.

The group was formed in 1967 when its members were university students in Chile. After the military coup in September 1973 that overthrew the government of Salvador Allende, Inti-Illimani were forced into exile in Europe for 15 years. When civilian rule was restored in 1988, they returned to Chile.

Playing music from their new recording Andada, their 20th album, the group enthralled the audience, which gave the band two standing ovations. Their powerful mix of rhythms and strong sense of fusion demonstrated the group's immense talent.

The desire to blend musical styles is a result of the group's philosophy.

"A diverse world is much more interesting than a homogenous one," says Horacio Duran, the violinist of the group who also plays the cuatro, charango, percussion and sings back up vocals.

This diversity is evident in the instruments the group plays: the cuatro, a four-string instrument of Venezuelan and Colombian origin that looks like a small guitar; the charango, a five-string instrument mounted over the shell of an armadillo from the Andes; the hammered dulcimer, a Middle Eastern instrument the band started using during their exile; and the zampona, a flute instrument.

Their desire to play with others has led Inti-Illimani to share the stage with musicians like Peter Gabriel, Tracy Chapman, Bruce Springsteen, Sting and world-renowned flamenco guitarist Paco Pena.

The group has attained a huge following in Chile, where they have played to crowds as large as 130,000. Their music has evolved over the years by incorporating different sounds and rhythms.

When the group formed in the late sixties, Chile, like the rest of Latin America, was undergoing intense political and social change. Together with other musicians and musical groups, Inti-Illimani created a movement known as Nuevo Cancion (New Song). This movement was created out of a desire to "express (music) in a language that was more our own," explains Duran.

When the presidential elections of 1970 were called, a coalition of left-wing political parties called the Unidad Popular, led by Allende, was formed. Like many Chilean artists at the time, Inti-Illimani advocated the Unidad Popular platform through their music. Of the songs that they sang at the time, their most popular was "El Pueblo Unido Jamas Sera Vencido" ("The People United Shall Never Be Defeated.")

When asked how the group has changed over the last two decades, Duran responded, "It's another time (in Chile). Some songs are still sung while others are not. However, we have not changed our desire to fight for justice."

Another Inti-Illimani fellow.

During the concert Jorge Coulon, the musical composer of the group, told the audience that in the universities one can study English, French or German, but aboriginal languages, which in many regions of Latin America are spoken by the majority of the population, are not taught.

Duran says their music holds consistent themes: the fight to defend aboriginals like the Mapuche in Chile; a desire for society to coexist with nature; and the realization of social justice in Latin America.

As the concert drew to an end, Coulon said musicians are like diplomats because they have to see similarities between cultures in order to bring people together. Like diplomats, Inti-Illimani uses the fusion of different kinds of music to bring people closer together.

As ambassadors, Inti-Illimani created a sense of harmony between themselves and the audience by broadening the musical horizon of the people present. □

Several Inti-Illimani types on stage at Centrepointe Theatre.

The Charlatan Education Corner

And for all you skiing fanatics...

by Sarah Richards
Charlatan Staff

If you don't have the means to invest over $1,000 in downhill skis, boots, bindings, poles and the flamboyant ski suits that are now a necessity before hitting the slopes, an alternative exists.

For one measly buck, you can visit the Canadian Ski Museum.

Tucked away on the second floor of a building on Sussex Drive, this one-room display chronicles the evolution of one of Canada's most popular winter pastimes: skiing.

It has the usual things found in any museum: creepy display mannequins, signs that say "DO NOT TOUCH," the interactive video display that doesn't work and that funny stale-wood smell.

It also has black and white photos that will transport you back to the time when skiing was the hip new sport of a young country. If you think looking good on the slopes was merely an extravagant '80s thing, you'll be surprised when you see the picture of the 1936 Canadian men's Olympic ski team. They skied in knickers, dress shirts, V-necks, suit jackets and ties. And for you ladies out there, you skied in nothing less than a full-length dress.

One highlight of the museum is the personal attention you get from the museum staff. After all, it's not exactly the Museum of Civilization. During my 90-minute visit, only one other couple showed up.

You might want to ask the helpful staff about "dope." It's the term given to the secret waxes used to grease skis: beeswax, pine tar and politically incorrect whale oil.

The recession has given the museum itself an aura of antiquity. On one of the heavily draped window sills is perched a lifeless old television with a note taped to the monitor, "There is currently no video available."

The museum nearly closed last year due to a shortage in funding, which comes from membership, government grants and merchandise. And to make things worse, someone broke in the evening of Jan. 26 and stole their only computer and printer. Thankfully, no skis were stolen.

Maybe that's because they're not exactly this year's models. It was a bit hard to believe a note on a pair of skis that quotes Canadian ski legend Steve Podborski, "These are the fastest skis in the world." When you look at Podborski's six-year-old skis and think of the high-tech skis used by today's professional skiers, it makes you wonder.

The old photos also show how much things have changed over the years—some for better, others for worse. Crazy Canuck Ken Read no longer sports that bouffant hair and polyester Adidas track top that he did in the early '80s—thank God—but there's also a depressing photo of a ski jumper sailing through the sky in Sarajevo, where the 1984 Winter Olympics were held.

As you venture into the office and makeshift storage room, it becomes obvious how badly it needs a bigger location. Stacks of wood and metal skis are piled in the room, along with an equal amount of old, worn ski boots ready to be put on display. It reminded me of the picture of the mounds of shoes the Nazis confiscated from the victims of the Holocaust.

The office walls are also covered in old black and white skiing photos, many dating back to the early 1900s. Underneath the photos are shelves of skiing books just waiting to be opened to allow that musty sent of stale glue out, available for that skiing essay your prof may have assigned you. Chances are you won't have to wait in line. □

The Canadian Ski Museum is located at 475A Sussex Drive and is open May 1 through Sept. 30 from 11 a.m. to 4 p.m., Tuesday to Sunday and Oct. 1 through April 30 from noon to 4 p.m., also Tuesday to Sunday.

This week:

Our Favorite Aphrodisiacs

1. Green M&Ms
2. Lychees
3. Beer and hairspray at Oliver's
4. Jujubes
5. Cucumbers
6. Hazelnut-Vanilla Coffee at Rooster's
7. "Sweet Jane," by Cowboy Junkies
8. The Manx Pub
9. Mangos
10. Music by Cracker

Imaginative, artistic film will leave you breathless

by Naomi Bock
Charlatan Staff

Baraka
Directed by Ron Fricke

No plot. No dialogue. Don't miss this incredible film.

Baraka is two hours of breathtaking images—a collage of human existence. Shot all over the world, the film features beautiful scenery interspersed with scenes from diverse cultures, religions and monuments, set to subtly powerful music.

As the camera zooms in on holy men and beggars, crowded Japanese subways and Indonesian ghettos, you are left to absorb a detailed and moving photo album of a journey through time and identity. It makes no judgments; it only reveals the varied ways in which we live and the varied things that we hold meaningful.

If you're thinking this is some weird-ass, boring artsy film, remember the appeal of a picture book. The images of this film transport you to places, people and rituals you will probably never see anywhere else.

The opening shot is high in some mountain range. A solemn baboon sits silent and blinking in a mountain pool, like a little old man with hidden wisdom behind his crinkled face.

The tragedy in some scenes is haunting. A young Filipino prostitute stares at the camera, no expression showing from beneath her heavy makeup, the neon lights of a bar flashing behind her. A beggar child sits exhausted against a stone wall, reaching out his tiny hand like a numb zombie.

On the other extreme of the human experience, joy is expressed through Native peoples' dances and laughing children, the vivid colors of aboriginal body paint and ecstatic African celebrations with dancers who seem to jump into the sky.

The editing is clever, melding overcrowded big-city streets shots with conveyor belts of mass-produced baby chicks.

Occasionally the transitions are jarring. You are often confused about where you are, feeling like a blindfolded tourist dropped into a different place every minute. Without the explanation of narrative, the mystery of many locations and cultures will leave you frustrated at the taunting limitations of the film's keyhole view of the world.

But mystery is the theme: a respect for the ancient, sacred and unexplained that often is ignored or mocked in our modern world.

One scene in Asia emphasizes this. A shrouded holy man walks with aching slowness down a city street. He places one foot exactly in front of the other, still touching, while he waves an incense holder on a chain with measured rhythm like a pendulum. As the camera focuses on his rag-wrapped feet, you see the other pedestrians' feet hurrying by in their impatient heels and loafers. The holy man is oblivious to the pace around him.

Indeed, the pace of the modern world, with its factories and repetition, is shown as a robotic nightmare. Again and again, we see a factory worker screw in components to computer circuit-boards until you want to scream, "Stop! Don't show me another one!"

The purity and power of nature is exposed with brilliant elapsed-time photography. Gigantic desert rocks stand through dawn and blazing sun and starry nights that last an instant, the clouds and stars moving super-fast overhead, a glimpse of the eternity of nature.

The music, which varies throughout this film, fits each scene so perfectly you don't even notice it.

Baraka will stun you, leaving you with the disturbed awareness of how little we as individuals have seen of this world, and how much less we can comprehend it all. □

If you'd like a booklet about Jack Daniel's Whiskey, write us here in Lynchburg, Tennessee 37352, U.S.A.

TALK TO AN OLDTIMER in Lynchburg, Tennessee and you'll probably hear a story about Jack Daniel's.

Our townsmen love to tell how Jack Daniel settled here in 1866. And how Lem Motlow and seven generations of Lynchburg whiskey makers never had reason to leave — nor to alter our founder's original methods. That's why today's Jack Daniel's has the same smooth taste as it did back then. Which, to a Jack Daniel's drinker, is the nicest part of the story.

JACK DANIEL'S TENNESSEE WHISKEY

Bite: New Montreal sounds

by Jane Tattersall
Charlatan Staff

Bite, headlining Pop In the Name of Love
Fenn Lounge
Feb. 11

A year and a half ago, Bite joined the ranks of all-female bands like Jale, Cub and the Welfare Starlets emerging across Canada.

Bite, however, is a little different. Songs like "Slime," about being whistled and accosted by men on the street, present a strong female perspective that is a little less forgiving than some of their counterparts.

Bite was formed in August 1992 by four Montreal women (Cecil: vocals, Denise: bass, Nancy: drums, Julie: guitar) who didn't know each other very well, but who all wanted to start a band. At the beginning, the band was just supposed to be a fun side project. "When we started, we really just wanted to learn how to play instruments," says Nancy. "It seemed like the best way was to learn to play songs and try and write songs."

Denise, playing the bass.

Bite started doing live shows a month later. Denise's husband John was in a band playing a show at Concordia University. Nancy recalls, "John's band was playing at the pub at Concordia University, and they were like, 'So, do you guys want play, haha?' and we were like, 'Okay, sure.' We had eight songs or something, and so we went and played with them and the very next night we played with Beat Happening.

"That was incredible because we were really terrified. Everyone's heard of Beat Happening. It turned out really well. The gig just sort of fell into our lap because the promoter knew us and what we were doing."

After playing a few more shows, Bite recorded their cassette Because Girls Would Love to Have a Friend to Dance With on a local independent label. Nancy admits they then started take themselves more seriously. "I think it was when we started playing shows and people liked us, we realized 'Wow, it isn't just us having fun. Other people are having fun watching us, so let's see what we can do.'"

After realizing that their hobby was turning into more than just a pastime, the band went on the road and played a few shows out-of-province. Last summer, they travelled East.

"We played with Sloan in Montreal, so we hooked up with Peter Rowan, who was their manager at that time. We played with Hardship Post in Halifax. And they are very big there so it was an instant crowd. Even in Halifax, though, people had heard of us because we had sent a lot out through Peter to distribute to record stores and college radio, which totally helped us a lot."

One thing Bite has had to deal with is the perception of girl bands as something of a novelty, which has translated into a mixed blessing for the band.

"I think there might be a certain resentment because we are getting a lot of publicity and attention, and a lot of it is based on the fact that we are all women doing this," Nancy says. "But I don't think we'd still be getting this much attention a year and a half later if there wasn't some quality to our music."

More recently, Bite has released a brand new seven-inch single and are also in the midst of changing their lineup. Cecil has just left the band to focus on her work in film production. Nancy admits this is something that's very hard to deal with.

"It's like breaking up with someone. It's not necessarily bitter; we're all friends. It's just hard at first. It wasn't like a huge fight. It was the obvious decision."

Bite's plans for the future include a tour across Canada and a probable release of an album in the fall. In the meantime, Nancy says they haven't approached any major labels.

"We have so much more to learn and ways we could improve. What we'd really like to do is put out as many seven-inch singles as we can. It's a great way to get your name spread around and it's a lot of fun. More people are getting back into vinyl now. We're going to send some packages out to smaller labels and then wait and see." □

Big Sugar's Gordie Johnson does the blues

by Joe Bernard
Charlatan Staff

For all intents and purposes, guitarist and vocalist Gordie Johnson is Big Sugar.

During the first song of an encore at their amazing show last month at the Penguin, Johnson decided he wanted to perform one of the songs by himself. He didn't ask his bandmates — he informed them.

Personnel-wise, Big Sugar has been a sea of change. The only constants are Johnson, the band's cool clothes and a sound that surpasses their impeccable threads, proving that they aren't there just to look pretty. Otherwise, the band members are pretty much rotating all the time.

Coolguy Gordie Johnson.

Dressing for success has paid off in a tangible way for Johnson. Hugo Boss, the très chic clothier, signed him to an exclusive deal to market their wares, both on stage and off.

Explaining the continual changes, Johnson cites his continual need to explore new musical territory and the fact that the band is from Toronto.

"Being based in Toronto, there are so many national acts and recording acts going through the city all the time," says Johnson. "So our bass player — one week he's playing with me, the next he's playing with Murray McLaughlin..."

Big Sugar has built a strong reputation for showcasing various styles. This creates problems for people who want to label the band, but does not really concern Johnson. "Eventually, it depends what the record label wants to call it. If they just want to call it rock that's fine. If they want to call it blues, that's fine too. It is all of those things. We'll still do the odd jazz standard now and again because we love that stuff.

"I hope they label it something, (because) it's easier for them to channel it to the consumer... you might as well call it whatever has the biggest section in the record store," he remarks with a laugh.

The title of Big Sugar's latest release, Five Hundred Pounds, summarizes the band's sound, both live and on the CD. Although the album has a fresh sound, Johnson admits the sound has its origins in the early part of this century's Mississippi Delta blues style.

"I try and trace a line from what I'm hearing now to where it's coming from," says Johnson. "I like to hear Led Zeppelin and Jimi Hendrix, but I probably enjoy them better now, knowing what their references are."

Run DMC blazes through Fenn

by Shamir Kanji
Charlatan Staff

Run DMC
Fenn Lounge
Feb. 3

Even a lame opening act and temperamental equipment couldn't ruin this show.

The first group of local unknowns only got through one complete song before they had to stop because there was too much feedback.

The show was also marred by the second act, a local rap group called Clarence Gruff, whose lead singer pointed a toy gun into the crowd while the DJ filled the air with sounds of gunfire. The vocalist pointed the gun at one female audience member. After that, she (as well as the rest of the crowd) watched the rest of his set in a state of shock.

As if this wasn't bad enough, the group refused to get off the stage when their time was up, even though they were 10 minutes late starting. The group finally got their way, singing their last two songs. The lead vocalist then threw his mike down and they left.

All this was forgotten when Run DMC

(DJ Run, DMC and Jam Master Jay, a.k.a. Joseph Simmons, Darryl McDaniels and Jason Mizell) arrived on the stage. Simply put, mayhem erupted in Fenn Lounge.

Run DMC whipped what had been a passive crowd into a frenzy. With classic hits such as "You be illin," "Party People," "My Adidas," "Run's House," and new songs from their current CD, Down with the King, the whole aura of the show turned around.

During "Run's House," all the members of Run DMC donned their old gangster hats and chains from the days of Raising Hell and Tougher than Leather, which brought an ovation from the 700-plus crowd. Harder hits like "Ooh Watch Gonna Do" got the crowd involved when DJ Run and DMC pointed their mikes to the crowd so they could sing along.

If there was one complaint it was that their set, at barely 45 minutes, was too short.

Backstage, the band attributed their longevity to staying close to their roots. "Unlike other acts, we don't need dancers... there are no gimmicks — everything is live," said Jam Master Jay.

Clarence Gruff, with their gimmicks and lame attitudes, could learn something from these guys. □

Unfortunately, when musicians who are not familiar with the blues genre try and play it, they all too frequently end up simplifying the music. They miss, or play through, the innuendo present in the lyrics and the music. Big Sugar is not one of these bands.

The blues, notes Johnson, can be listened to on several different levels. "It seems simple. On the surface it looks pretty straight up. But you can dig; you can peel away many layers. You can always find some regional references, sexual, or whatever. There's a lot of options there with the blues. And if people don't get it right away, that's fine. If people never get it, it's also fine. 'Cause they (the songs) still mean something at face value."

In concert Big Sugar's sound is reminiscent of early Zeppelin, when Zeppelin used to routinely beat the hell out of the blues. The similarities mainly emerge from the fact that when it comes to influences, both bands are drinking from the same well.

Big Sugar blends various "references," without sounding contrived. Their sound, especially live, melds into a cohesive, frenetic, tour de force.

What is obvious when they perform is that these slicksters know their shit and love to play. Big Sugar digs deep into the blues, and at the same time, pushes it a little further. Johnson is so well versed as a guitar player and versatile as a vocalist, that what is old becomes new again. His playing is a union of lifelong experience and young man angst.

Their show is not for the faint of heart. These hipsters are loud. Big Sugar hit it, and they hit it hard, repeatedly. Whether the band is delving into a surfer tune, interludes of ska/reggae, or a blues standard, they are able to combine the various songs and styles so that the participant is jamming to the sweetness that is Big Sugar. □

It's a Skydigger love-in!

by Rick Harp and Karin Jordan
Charlatan Staff

Skydiggers and Black Boot Trio
Creeque Alley
Feb. 4 — Feb. 5

Aside from the Andy Maize wannabees in the front (although, when you get right down to it, who doesn't want to be a Skydigger?), last Saturday's show at Creeque Alley was, from the perspective of two Digger-aficionados like us, flawless.

The only disappointing thing about the whole night was that the first incredibly tight set was in fact the only set of the night.

But every one of the about a dozen songs they played was incredible. The songs they chose covered everything from their earliest album to as-of-yet unreleased material, which gives die-hard fans like us hope that our favorite band will soon be releasing a fourth album.

They started off the night with the fan favorite, "Slow Burning Fire." This raunchy song set the tone for the rest of their set. Throughout the rest of the show, the band never let up. Their blend of folksy, counterfied rock kept butts shaking and pelvises tilting. Guitarist Josh Finlayson took the mike for a foot-stomping version of "Mystery Train" that had the whole house singing along.

Lead singer Maize kept between-song chit-chat to a minimum, but he seemed to have been quite taken by Winterlude, which he mentioned several times. Go figure.

The show had all of us who were dancing in front of the small stage sweating like pigs. The Diggers never let us down, playing a mostly fast set, with only a couple of slow songs — "I'm Wondering," off their latest album Just Over this Mountain, as well as their hit (much overplayed but still great) "I Will Give You Everything," off their debut, self-titled album.

Creeque Alley was packed with fans who seemed to know the words to virtually every tune the boys belted out. A welcome addition to the band is the new drummer, Ottawa's own Peter von Althen, of Fun for Malakoi fame.

The show opened with a short but intense set from Ottawa band Black Boot Trio. Judging from their performance, their new CD Pony Ride ought to take them places.

It's hard to say anything bad about a band like the Skydiggers, who are neither pretentious (Tea Party, anyone?) nor trendy.

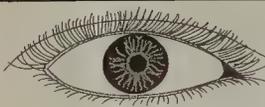

If you haven't yet experienced a Diggers show, get your ass down to one the next time they're in Ottawa. We guarantee you won't regret it. □

Our hero, Andy Maize.

Counting Crows & CRACKER
THU FEB 17TH DOORS AT 7PM PORTER HALL, CARLETON UNIVERSITY
TICKETS AT TICKETMASTER RES.: 755-1111, RECORDS ON WHEELS, SHAKE RECORDS AND UNICENTRE STORE.

TRIBE & CALLED
QUESTA
DEZASUL
SUN MARCH 6TH DOORS AT 8 PM
PORTER HALL CARLETON UNIVERSITY
ON SALE FRI. FEB. 11TH $2.99
TICKETS $25.00 (GST INC) AT TICKETMASTER RES.: 755-1111, RECORDS ON WHEELS, SHAKE RECORDS, BIRDMAN AND UNICENTRE STORE.

A & E INSIGHT

Remembering the spirit of the real underground

by Rob Willbond
Charlatan Staff

"Corporate rock sucks!" is the rallying cry of all independent bands, from Fugazi on down.

However, it is not news that the bands who utter this slogan are increasingly joining the ranks of major-label musicians. A million examples come to mind: Green Day and Bad Religion, to name but two.

Another fine example is Pearl Jam, whose latest album, Vs. sold close to 1 million in its first week of release and was, incidentally, named Album of the Year in the Charlatan year-end poll. Even people who derided the first Pearl Jam record credited Vs. with giving the Jam boys a chance to employ an even rawer grunge sound.

In reality, bands like Pearl Jam have more in common with Janet Jackson than with Fugazi. Did you stop to think about what will happen to these great individuals when the record companies realize they are no longer financially fine? Best guesses may see them off into the land of potential comebacks. That's the place where M.C. Hammer, Vanilla Ice and the New Kids on the Block live. Remember, these bands were once also number one in the corporate kingdom.

A few Pearl Jam fans will be sad when this event takes place. The rest probably will not notice. After all, the music industry will have sold us the next big thing by then, clothing included. Be careful, trend-seekers. In order to maximize coolness, you don't want to stop crowd surfing and burn your flannel flag of individuality until this happens.

This realization of how shallow this alternative trend is will probably tick some folks off. Too bad. Imagine how people involved in the real underground felt when the music industry realized alternative music was an untapped goldmine. Gone is the flagrant use of the distortion pedal by Dinosaur Jr. (now Warner's acoustic Neil Young wannabe), the political social lessons of Bad Religion (working for Warner Brothers), and the innate cuteness of Green Day (now supporting corporate punk for salary).

These bands were once accessible.

None of this Eddie Vedder behind a 10-foot barrier stuff. It was about music. Music for expression, art and people. The real path of individuality. One that you get to choose.

I often hear passionate Pearl Jam fans, well drugged by the media of course, saying how close Vedder is to the fans. How his favorite band is Fugazi. How they are doing no more videos because they think the media is crap and want to bring out their message their own way.

Will the public fall for such a marketing scheme? Probably. If Vedder was a true believer in what Fugazi had to say, would he be working for Sony? They make stereos and televisions, they create nice things to sell us, but they're not anti-media, anti-establishment or anything that a band like Fugazi stands for.

If Pearl Jam wants to hold a position similar to Fugazi, they have to earn it. That's the way the real underground works. Living communication between a band and audience cannot be bought and sold.

The lesson is merely to recognize the way the music industry manipulates public opinion, causing people to buy into whatever it is selling. Of course, if your only use for music is to provide entertainment, then corporate rock is the thing for you. Not only will you be fooled into thinking everything is dandy, but you even get to feel like you are supporting a cause! They even provide a snappy image or label to aid you in selecting a social group. Be a punker! Be a grunger! Buy the outfit!

Corporate rock is not all bad. It just takes time to distill the hard-working bands from the created, to realize what it is you are buying. If your true goal is to appreciate music for what it is, take a look at the real underground — your local bands or any bands that haven't been packaged for consumption. It's there for you and you don't need Perry "Lollapalooza" Farrell to sell you access to it.

This music is about real people, the real world. It shares common goals and creates a real sense of community that two-dimensional major-label figureheads like Janet Jackson cannot. □

CUPE 2323 STRIKE VOTE FEB 15-17

TEACHING AND RESEARCH ASSISTANTS:

VOTE YES BECAUSE...

The University administration thinks that the TA and RA union is weak.

They expect we will not defend ourselves when asked to cough up from our already empty pockets.

TELL THE UNIVERSITY THAT THEY ARE MISTAKEN.

GIVE OUR NEGOTIATING TEAM THE MANDATE TO DEFEND OUR INTERESTS.

...YOU HAVE POWER. USE IT.

Teacher train in Australia or Britain

Graduate Qualifications in Education
Primary and Secondary that will allow you to teach in Ontario

3 - or 4 - year graduates may apply
Information may be obtained by contacting

K.O.M. CONSULTANTS

P.O. BOX 60524
Mountain Plaza Postal Outlet
Hamilton, ONT
L9C 7N7

Telephone or Facsimile 905 318 8200

LONG DAY IN THE UNIVERSE

THURSDAY, FEBRUARY 10 TO THURSDAY, FEBRUARY 17

Thursday, February 10

Age of Innocence at 9:15.

drinking crowd.

Chomsky and the Media will make you think about the media (That's us! -ed.) and their effect on society. It's showing at the Mayfair at 7 p.m.

At Zaphod's this evening, it's another concert in the Cha Cha's Playpen series, featuring the angry sounds of local bands Claymouth and Finger. Cover is a mere loonie.

Saturday, February 12

It's yet another pre-Valentine's Day fest at the Pit. The Belfast Cowboys are playing rock/country stuff along with acoustic artist Nedza Perry. Cover is a mere four bucks. (You know, for my money, the Pit's just about the most romantic place in town. It's all those gargoyle heads, you know. -ed.)

It's a night of Brazilian music in Room 100, St. Pat's. If you show up at 8 p.m., you'll hear Silvia Berddo on alto sax, flute and vocals, and Rafael Bastos on acoustic guitar. It's being presented by Carleton's school for studies in art and culture and the university committee on cultural activities. And hey, it's free.

The Mahones, that Kingston-based Celtic outfit, is playing the Penguin tonight. Cover is seven bucks.

At Zaphod's tonight, starting at 8 p.m., Eugene Haslam, co-owner of this fine establishment, is celebrating 10 years in the Ottawa music scene. Playing tonight it's Dog Day Afternoon. There'll also be a lotta taped music and some of Eugene's home videos. (Eugene at the Grand Canyon? -ed.) There's no cover.

Sunday, February 13

There's loads of stuff going on for Black History Month including a Hair Braiding and Barbering Demonstration. It's described as a "presentation of beautiful, age-old African styles and techniques and their significance in Africa and the diaspora." Hmmm... hair as socially relevant. It takes place at J'nikira Resource Centre at 333 Besserer St. Admission is $2 for adults and $1 for kids.

Those wacky loud guitar folks, Spiny Anteaters and Resin Scraper, are playing two pre-Valentine's Day shows this evening at the Pit. The first show at 7 p.m. is all-ages; the second, from 9:30 p.m. until closing time, will be for the

Monday, February 14

Valentine's Day. Lock yourself in your darkened room. Convince yourself that today is a false holiday foisted upon us by an uncaring society bent on perpetuating the myth that you must procreate to be complete. Fail. Go downstairs and watch A Clockwork Orange.

The Bytowne's Romantic Weekend comes to a close today with a 7 p.m. showing of Truly, Madly, Deeply and Maurice at 9:20 p.m. (What? No Van Damme movies? -ed.)

Even the Mayfair's getting into the spirit of the day, showing Casablanca and Strictly Ballroom, starting at 7 p.m.

Tuesday, February 15

As part of Black History Month, the Bytowne is presenting Bopha, a film about apartheid and its evils. It's showing tonight at 6:45 p.m.

It's a little known fact that before he came to Carleton, Charlatan production manager Kevin McKay was a third-line centre for the Hartford Whalers. He played the '85-'86 season as an enforcer on the checking line, but he was injured by a puck to the skull and just couldn't get back into the game.

Bear this in mind as he recommends The Game, a non-fiction work by Montreal Canadiens' goalie great Ken Dryden, as his pick of the week. Says the Whalers' veteran, "Ignore the books written by rookies and pay attention to Dryden. With a career behind him, he provides a knowing perspective for the reader."

Wednesday, February 16

Sonny Rollins is profiled by Bernard Stepien on In A Mellow Tone (CKKU 93.1 FM) at 9 p.m.

Finally, an interesting documentary: Manufacturing Consent: Noam

Thursday, February 17

They wowed the crowds opening for Soul Asylum back in November and now they're back to do it again. I speak, of course, of Cracker. Yessiree, they're playing tonight at Porter Hall. Opening act, San Francisco's Counting Crows. Tickets, $17.50. Doors open at 7 p.m.

And, at the Penguin, $10 will get you in to see the Bourbon Tabernacle Choir.

But before you head out, get something to eat. This week's Charlatan snack tip is the Infamous Bread Pizza™. Take a piece of white bread and smother it with Bar-B-Q Sauce. Chop up a raw hot dog or tofu weenie and scatter the pieces on the bread. Cover the whole thing with processed cheese slices. Put in the oven for 10 minutes at 325 C. Eat. Serves one.

If you have an event you want to appear in this handy calendar, you can drop your announcement off at The Charlatan, Room 531 Unicentre during regular business hours or you can fax us at 788-4051. Announcements must be in by the Friday before publication.

Friday, February 11

For some free, olde-time music, head on down to Carleton's Alumni Theatre at noon. The Elizabethan Consort will be playing their old English instruments: recorders, a gemshorn, a lute and... well, you get the idea.

Classical guitarist Andrew Mah is playing the Glebe St. James Church at 8:30 p.m. as part of the Ottawa Guitar Society's 25th anniversary season. Tickets are available at the door. They cost $10 for students, members and seniors, $15 for everyone else.

In the tasteless names department: the Geography Society is holding their Big Heart-On Pub this evening. With a name like that, you just know it's gonna be at Oliver's. Cover is two bucks for members and three for non-members.

The Headstones and the Morganfields play Zaphod's tonight. Cover is $6.

Valentine's Day may be a few hours away, but the fun starts tonight in Fenn Lounge in Carleton's Res Commons at 7 p.m. Pop! In the Name of Love features a star-studded lineup of bands playing happy, loud guitar music, including Montreal's Bite, future fratboys Mushroom Explosion, Trip Hammer, Nevergreen and Chuck Wagon. And that's just the main stage. On the side stage, it's Wandering Lucy, Ewen Todd's Ratboy and Darwin from Lockjaw. Cover is $7 at the door.

More Valentine's Day mushy stuff from the Bytowne as it begins what it calls its Romantic Weekend. Showing tonight is Casablanca at 7 p.m., followed by The

Hey Kids!

It's The Charlatan's seventh annual Short Story and Poetry Contest! The top three winners will be published in The Charlatan's Upcoming Literary Supplement! Plus, there'll be some great prizes! There's lots to know, so here are the rules:

1. The contest is open to all Carleton University students, full and part-time, as well as Carleton University employees. However, no editorial employee of The Charlatan may submit an entry.
2. Entries MUST be postmarked or delivered to The Charlatan (Room 531 Unicentre, Carleton University, K1S 5B6) no later than 11 p.m. Sunday, March 6, 1994 in order to be eligible. Winners will be contacted by telephone.
3. There are no requirements for content, but stories and poems must be original, unpublished works. Poems and stories previously submitted or printed in The Charlatan this year may be re-submitted to the contest.
4. Submissions MUST be typewritten and double-spaced and not more than 1,500 words.
5. No pseudonyms will be accepted. All entries must include the author's name, address, telephone number and status at Carleton.
6. Entrants must agree to allow The Charlatan to publish their submissions, names and photographs.
7. Once an entry has been received, no changes to the original will be accepted.
8. Manuscripts will not be returned.
9. The judges' decision are final (judges to be announced).
10. Copyright remains with the author.

"Cough up that piece of fish!" yells Michael (Ben Bolden) to Jackie (Jennifer Boyle) as David (Alan Neal) practices his form. Just in time for Valentine's Day, it's the latest Sock 'n' Buskin play! Talking Dirty is described as a "satirical farce about our preoccupation with the subject of sex." The play runs Feb. 9-12 and Feb. 16-19 at the Alumni Theatre at 8:30 p.m. Tickets are $5 in advance at the usual outlets for students, $10 at every other time for everyone else.

WITH THIS COUPON
BUY 10 WINGS
 GET 5 MORE &
DON'T GIVE A CLUCK

MONDAYS

THAT'S SICK!
BUY 10 WINGS
 FOR 2 BUCKS
 20¢ EACH
 GET 5 MORE FREE
 AFTER 5:00 MONDAYS

★ ALSO ON MONDAYS ★
RICKARD'S RED
 DRAUGHT BEER

BY THE PITCHER $8.12 PLUS TAX

The Royal Oak
 TRADITIONAL BRITISH PUB & RESTAURANT

318 BANK ST. 161 LAURIER AVE. E.

236-0190 230-9223

*PER EXPRES FEBRUARY 28, 1994

ONE COUPON PER CUSTOMER

APPLE SADDLERY

The Largest Western Boot Store in Canada.
 INNES ROAD JUST EAST OF THE 417 (NEAR THE PRICE CLUB)

Portraits now[®]

Bayshore The Official

Graduation Photographer for
 Carleton University
 Student Association, Inc. 1993/94

Why PORTRAITS NOW?

- No Sitting Fee on Campus!
- Previews Back Next Day!
- Choice of Backgrounds!
- Satisfaction Guaranteed!

ATTENTION 1993/94 GRADUATES

Portraits Now - Bayshore has been chosen by CUSA Inc. as the Official Photographer for Carleton University 1993/1994 Graduates.

DON'T MISS OUT! Make your appointment to get your Graduation Portraits from Portraits Now - Bayshore by calling 596-1501 or visit our studio across from Porter Hall.

2nd Semester Session starts February 28, 1994
 across from Porter Hall

Portraits now Bayshore 596-1501
 100 Bayshore Dr., Nepean Ont., K2B 8C1

FREE POOL

12pm to 5pm DAILY

FULL Lunch Menu

D.J. Every Night

4 T.V.'S & 3 Big Screens

96 George Street in the Byward Market
 562-0433

STUDENT

NIGHTS

Tuesdays & Wednesdays

BEVERAGE

99¢

DRAUGHT

Specials

CHARLÄTAN

CARLETON'S INDEPENDENT STUDENT NEWSPAPER
VOLUME 23 ISSUE 23 FEBRUARY 17 1994

3 FOR 1 OR
50 % OFF

*Preston
Optical*

444 Preston St.
(2 BLOCKS FROM DOWS LAKE PAVILION)
230-0477

EYEWEAR SALE

Buy any pair of prescription glasses at regular price and receive a second pair of glasses of equal or lesser value plus a pair of daily wear soft contact lenses absolutely FREE!!!

Combination of 2 or 3 prescriptions. May be used with friends or family members for the 3 for 1 sale.

FRAMES AND LENSES

Buy one pair of prescription glasses and receive 50% OFF on both your frame and lenses

Bring in this ad for an extra 10% OFF

SALOON
Ottawa's Only
Authentic
Western Saloon

Beverage Specials from Monday to Wednesday

TONIGHT

Thurs. Feb. 17

"Lucky Ron"

No Cover

*Classic Rock and Roll
Every Night*

Come see us down
in the Byward Market
105 Murray St.
241-2233

WHERE CAN YOU AND YOUR DATE EAT A GREAT DINNER...FOR LESS THAN $90!!!

FEBRUARY COUPON

Full Course Dinner
only

99¢

(max. value $13.50)

order any full course dinner at reg. price & receive a second dinner of equal or lesser value for 99¢

Not valid with any other offer. P.S.T. & G.S.T. extra (coupon valid from Feb. 1 - Feb. 28, 1994)

2446 Bank at Hunt club
(Towngate Plaza)
736-6677
Reservations & Banquet
Facilities Available

The NOODLE WORKS

Ottawa South's
Finest Sunday
Brunch 10:30-2:30

FULL 3 COURSE DINNER - Soup or Salad, Fresh Baked San Francisco Sourdough Bread, Entrée Selection, Spumoni Ice Cream, Coffee or Tea

MARCH COUPON

Full Course Dinner
only

99¢

(max. value $13.50)

order any full course dinner at reg. price & receive a second dinner of equal or lesser value for 99¢

Not valid with any other offer. P.S.T. & G.S.T. extra (coupon valid from March 1 - March 31, 1994)

HOMEMADE PASTA DISHES • VEAL • CHICKEN • BEEF

HOME OF THE SOUTH END BLUES

TUCSON
ROADHOUSE

Feb. 18/19
In City Dreams

COMING UP

Feb. 25/26
Guilty

240 Bank Street (Bank at Huntclub) Ottawa
For Entertainment information call 739-7596

Tucson's
West

Feb. 17
Mumbo Jumbo
Voodoo Combo

Feb. 18/19
Jack DeKaiser

COMING UP

Feb. 24/25/26
The Bird

1541 Merivale Road, Ottawa
For Entertainment information call 228-6666

GRAND
CENTRAL

"The Mother of All Pizzas"
141 George St. 241-2727

SATURDAY & SUNDAY
Brunch 10AM to 3PM

Over 100 items to choose from $7.99

+taxes

introducing

STEAK

Dinner

$5.99
+taxes

EVENTS

Wed. February 2nd: Alannah Myles & Carl Dixon

Thurs. Feb. 3rd: The Odds & Rymes with Orange

Thurs. Feb. 17th: Roll T.E.C. & Moist

Rock for the Ottawa Food Bank

Wed. March 2nd: TROOPER

Wed. March 16th: Colin James

Thurs. March 17th: Spirit of the West

ZAPHOD
BEEBLEBROX

ELEVEN DRAUGHT BEERS

BINGO JET
INTERNATIONAL
9PM TUESDAYS

WED. FEB. 16 (9PM) $7

THURS. FEB 17 (9PM) $1

FRI. FEB 18 (9PM) $5

SAT. FEB 19 (9PM) $6

MUSIC • BEVERAGES • ADVENTURE
27 YORK ST.

SCHADILLAC RANCH

BOULET

99 Clarence St.
562-1320

Stanton, Stewart start reign

by Tanya Workman
Charlatan Staff

Out with the old and in with the new. A president-elect who says he will start a co-op student placement service and a finance commissioner-elect who says she will try to open a campus grocery store are among the winners in the Carleton University Students' Association election.

The initial results from the election, held Feb. 8-10, were announced Feb. 11. They peg turnout at almost 2,900, about 15 per cent of the undergraduate student population. Last year, about 2,500 undergraduates voted in the election.

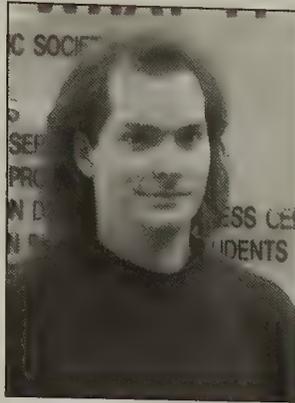

President-elect Richard Stanton defeated runner-up Brenda Kennedy by 37 votes. Todd McAllister placed third, 48 votes behind Kennedy.

Stanton received 824 votes; Kennedy, 787; McAllister, 739.

The job of finance commissioner went to CUSA financial review committee chair Wendy Stewart, who beat this year's vice-president internal Rob Jamieson by 126 votes. Stewart received 1,060 votes; Jamieson received 934 votes. Trevor Mulzer, the other candidate for the position, received 613 votes.

"Everyone did their best," says Stanton. "It was just a hard race."

Stanton also won one of two undergraduate student positions on the board of governors, Carleton's highest decision-making body. McAllister won the other position.

JOANNE CAPUANI

Stanton and Stewart: New kids on the CUSA block

Kennedy, co-ordinator of the Foot Patrol, says she is upset with the results, since they were so close.

"Todd and Richard were running very similar campaigns, and mine was completely different," she says.

Kennedy says the difference was they were looking for more corporate sponsorship, while her campaign dealt with opening up the association to more students. She cited the example of the space left on her campaign posters for people to write in suggestions.

McAllister says he thought it would be a close race for president between himself and Stanton because they had similar ideas, such as attracting corporate sponsorship to increase revenue and services.

McAllister says he plans to fight for getting corporate sponsorship of campus services as a member of the board of governors, an issue he included in his presidential platform.

"I might not be president, but I can still get the job done," says McAllister. "A lot of the things I wanted to deal with as CUSA president I can do on the board of governors."

The two other presidential candidates were further behind. Elaine Silver received 232 votes, while Lloyd Barry got 108, 25 votes less than the number of spoiled ballots for president. Silver, a third-time presidential candidate, ran for re-election on the board of governors, but lost.

In the next year, Stanton says he plans to start a CUSA-run internship program with local businesses so students can gain work experience before they graduate. He says he will create a position of director of human resources on the CUSA executive to contact employers and help them get involved in plan. He says he would like to get about 500 students placed in the program in the fall term.

"I think there's definite potential for it," he says.

Stewart says she will try to negotiate with Loblaw's and IGA to get a grocery store on campus, possibly for the first floor or fourth floor of the Unicentre. She doesn't want to invest any CUSA money in the venture.

"If we give them kind of a monopoly then maybe they'll come at no cost to students," says Stewart, although any initiative will have to be passed by administration.

Stanton says he and Stewart will meet

ELECTION cont'd on p. 5

Challenges mount after CUSA election

by Josée Bellemare
Charlatan Staff

Defeated candidates and others involved in the recent Carleton University Students' Association election have been tight-lipped about challenges to its constitutionality.

The content of the challenges will remain confidential until the constitutional board has ruled on their validity, says James Rilett, CUSA's chief electoral officer. Rilett says six complaints had been given to him as of Feb. 16.

Rilett says the contents have to remain confidential, "so the people (on the constitutional board) coming into it can have an unbiased opinion."

The constitutional board is made up of three CUSA councillors and two students who are not councillors. The board members, who will rule on the challenges, have not been determined yet.

The board has the power to rule on whether any action of the association, including the election, followed the CUSA constitution. If the board finds the election unconstitutional, some or all of the election could be thrown out.

The board must rule on a challenge within 14 days of when the challenge is filed. The constitution says all submissions are confidential until the decision is announced, but does not say whether those making challenges have to keep them confidential. The CUSA council chair must announce that a challenge has been made at the next meeting of this year's council Feb. 17.

Peter Nogalo, the co-ordinator of the Gay, Lesbian and Bisexual Centre, says he has given a notice to Rilett that he intends to challenge the presidential election.

Nogalo, a supporter of Brenda Kennedy for president, says he thinks the chances of the board overturning the presidential election are "excellent."

"The board has a history of making judicious decisions and I can't see under any circumstances how they would uphold the presidential election," he says.

In December, the board threw out the November referendum which would have increased student fees to the Candian Federation of Students.

Nogalo says he is challenging the election because of "several things, including things reported in The Charlatan last week." The Charlatan reported Feb. 10 that Stanton had received a warning for campaigning in Oliver's, which is against CUSA's electoral code. The Charlatan also reported complaints about a Stanton worker who was a poll clerk and was left alone at a polling station. A poll clerk is not allowed to take ballots when alone.

Elaine Silver, a three-time presidential candidate, says she is launching a challenge against the elections, but neither she nor anyone else will not disclose any information about it.

Kennedy, who finished second in the presidential campaign, says the whole election was "problematic."

"Myself and others had problems well before the elections were in," she says, although she wouldn't give any details.

Kennedy says a constitutional challenge of the results was made on her behalf, but she would not say who filed it. She says she didn't want to file the challenge herself because "I just don't have the energy." Nogalo says he consulted with Kennedy before he filed his challenge.

City police charge man

by Angie Gallop
Charlatan Staff

Ottawa Police have charged a man in connection with a series of incidents occurring on the Route 7 OC Transpo bus on Jan. 27.

Alaa Farrag, 34, has been charged with two counts of indecent assault.

At about 2 p.m. on the Route 7 bus to Carleton, a man pushed himself on a woman who was standing in the aisle because there were no available seats and started to rub himself against her.

He continued although she tried to push him away.

After she found a seat, the woman witnessed him do the same thing to another woman. The woman reported the incident to campus security and a safety poster was released describing the assault. It also described the man as having a dark complexion, dark hair and a thin build with a scraggly beard and checkered hat.

Another woman approached campus security and said a man fitting the exact description, on the same route at about the same time on Feb. 2, rubbed himself up against her.

A third woman phoned The Charlatan on Feb. 8 and reported that she too was assaulted by a similar man. □

on the cover
Cover Photo By Bill Cooper
A little drummer girl plays at school in Shanghai. A sample from Bill Cooper's "China in Contrast" photo exhibit at MacOdrum Library from March 1 to 21.

arts	17
classifieds	20
national	7
news	3
opinion	9
science	8
Black History Supplement	11

index

What's Dr. Farquhar up to, anyway?

by Blayne Haggart
Charlatan Staff

Carleton President Dr. Robin Farquhar has seen the light.

The problem with universities is that they are failing the "increasingly expected (task) to prepare our students for productive work of a kind that will contribute to the economic prosperity and global competitiveness of our nation," he notes in an article adapted from his opening remarks at a 1993 conference of the Conference Board of Canada's Quality Network for Universities.

The article, entitled "Learning from CHEF's beehives," appeared in this month's University Affairs, published by the Association of Universities and Colleges of Canada.

In this exhausting, admin-speak-filled epic, Farquhar tells us about his experience with working groups ("beehives") from the Corporate Higher Education Forum, "a group of chief executives from major Canadian companies and universities, established more than a decade ago to co-operatively pursue issues of mutual interests." Farquhar is on CHEF's board of directors.

Judging from this article, Farquhar believes there must be a fundamental reassessment of the university's role in society.

In the article, Farquhar speaks of how important research is, but "the most significant mandate universities are perceived to perform is that of education," as well as adding to the social and economic development of our "human resources."

He goes on to say "there is a widespread feeling, whether fully justified or not, that we are undervaluing that function in the priorities we reflect through our allocation of resources, reward structures, and foci of attention."

He also notes that "many of us believed (a dozen years ago) that the role of university research was to discover and transmit knowledge, and that what was to be done in applying it was the responsibility of other more commercially oriented entities," but that this wasn't happening "because other entities did not view it as their mandate to search through our research findings and see what use could be made of them in the real world."

He says businesses don't see it as their role to sift through basic research to get the information and knowledge they need, so universities "must assume the major responsibility for technology transfer."

The idea that universities must become more practically oriented (read: shamelessly market their "product"), even in the arts and social sciences, is omnipresent throughout Farquhar's speech. To do so, we must ask for the help of "agencies which can perform certain aspects of the function better than we can — notably community colleges and employers."

This line of logic is strange, to say the least. First, you don't change something on the basis of someone else's perceptions. Farquhar allows for the possibility that these conclusions are wrong, but he then goes on to say that even if they are wrong, we should act on them anyway, because the perceptions exist.

It would also be more reasonable to READ MY LIPS!

NO CORPORATE SPONSORS!! NOW I'D LIKE YOU TO MEET A GOOD FRIEND OF MINE! SAY HELLO RON!

suggest that we leave these "functions" to the agencies who are admittedly more suited to them. Technical education should be left to technical schools; job training should be left to employers. But this opinion is justifiable only if you believe universities are more than glorified community colleges. Wow: colleges engaged in practical training and employers offering on-the-job training directly related to the positions offered. What a concept.

If universities are truly in need of such help, we should be questioning the existence of universities. A logical extension of Farquhar's line of reasoning would state that universities are redundant and should either be scrapped as obsolete human resource factories or changed into very expensive technical schools.

So in adapting to the corporate mode of doing things, Farquhar writes, universities must do "fewer things better" and pursue "dramatic internal downsizing through restructuring . . . rationalization, and "total quality management," (shurly an oxymoron!).

After all these changes, universities would be mere appendages of the marketplace: churning out graduates ready to move on to the employers who have helped design their programs. This is probably okay for people whose only use for a degree is to get a well-paying job. While we all want this, there are still a few people who think that English, music and philosophy courses, to name but three, are not a waste of time. Sure, the chances of using Plato's Theory of the Forms when you're installing a computer network are pretty slim, but to say that misses the point.

Having said all this, Farquhar's arguments are not exactly a surprise when you consider whom he represents. Throughout the article, Farquhar uses the language and logic of economists.

Likewise, his conclusions are nothing new or surprising. The economic mind has great trouble justifying costs or exercises that do not yield immediate practical, concrete results. The bottom line is whatever is yielded by cost-benefit analysis.

This is why basic research is frowned upon and practical, commercially oriented research commended. This is why

FARQUHAR cont'd on pg. 5

Corrections, apologies

Last week, The Charlatan reported on a fire that was started in the Unicentre.

We reported that Daniel Thibeault was charged with arson and endangering human life, because of incorrect information given to us by the department of university safety.

In fact, Thibeault, an employee of Empire Maintenance — the company which cleans the Unicentre, was instrumental in apprehending the alleged culprit.

Carleton student Stanislav Zapaticky, 23, was charged with arson and endangering human life.

We apologize for any inconvenience caused to Thibeault. □

In a story last week on the Canadian Federation of Students-Ontario conference ("GLB rep left out of CFS-O delegation"), The Charlatan incorrectly spelled the last name of student Tim O'loan as O'loom. Our apologies. □

Northwestern College of Chiropractic

is now accepting applications for its next three entering classes.
(September 1994, January 1995, April 1995)

General requirements at time of entry include:

- Approx. 2-3 years of college in a life or health science degree program.
- A minimum G.P.A. of 2.5. A more competitive G.P.A. is favored.
- A personal interest in a career as a primary care physician.

Northwestern offers:

- A professional school of 500 students with student faculty ratio of 12:1.
- A well-rounded education in Basic and Clinical Sciences, Diagnosis, X-ray, and Chiropractic.
- Full accreditation by North Central Association of Colleges and Schools and the Council on Chiropractic Education.

Call: 1-800-888-4777 or
Write: Director of Admissions
2501 West 84th Street, Minneapolis, MN 55431

EUROPE

PAY YOUR SUMMER HOLIDAY IN FULL BEFORE MARCH 31ST AND

SAVE!!

Ottawa to Paris
from $438*

Ottawa to London
from $479*

For more information on these and other European Cities, Call or Drop In!

*Add Tax of $40 for London and $44 for Paris

One Stewart Street
Suite 203
Ottawa, Ontario
(613) 238-8222

1st Level Unicentre
Carleton University
Ottawa, Ontario
(613) 238-5493

TRAVEL CUTS
Canadian Universities Travel Service Limited

Going Your Way!

Campus Tidbits

JSU members angry at lack of event posters

by Caron Watt
Charlatan Staff

The co-director of the Jewish Students' Union says the Carleton University Students' Association was slow to help it advertise one of the club's events.

Dan Wolfish says the club submitted 17 posters to CUSA on Jan. 20 to advertise its events for Shoah Week, an event organized to raise awareness about the Holocaust held Jan. 31-Feb. 4.

Club members became upset when they didn't see posters up by Jan. 25, when the event was six days away, says Wolfish. CUSA takes responsibility for putting up sponsored clubs' posters if they submit them to CUSA.

Wolfish says the posters weren't very effective because they didn't appear until the weekend before the event, after some JSU members and CUSA vice-president Kristine Haselsteiner posted some up.

"Considering very few people are here on Fridays, Saturdays and Sundays, that was upsetting," Wolfish says. "In general, we are very disappointed in CUSA because CUSA has seemed to be uncaring and too busy worrying about their own power trips to help anyone else."

The lack of posterage could have affected turnout for Shoah Week, says Wolfish, since posters are the main way the club advertises.

He says CUSA President Lucy Watson told JSU members that the posters had been put up by Jan. 25, but may have been torn down.

"(Watson) told us that they were put up all over campus," says Wolfish. "We really doubted they (the posters) went up."

Watson says CUSA staff assured her the posters had been posted by Jan. 25.

"I believe the staff when they say they posted them. There's absolutely no reason why they wouldn't have," says Watson.

Shoah Week was also sponsored by the Gay, Lesbian and Bisexual Centre. Peter Nogalo, co-ordinator of the Centre, says he didn't notice how the posterage was done and had no complaints with it.

Wolfish says the posters should have been put up in the glass cases around the tunnels so they couldn't be ripped down.

"We don't give iron-clad guarantees as to where (posters) will be posted, regardless of what the poster content is," says Watson. "Once they're posted we have no way of monitoring what stays up on the board."

No posters were up on Jan. 31, because they were covered with candidate posters for the CUSA elections, says Wolfish. He says the Shoah Week posters were either not visible or had been torn down when candidates put up election posters. □

ELECTION RESULTS

CARLETON UNIVERSITY STUDENTS' ASSOCIATION

(Winners are in bold)

President

Richard Stanton 822
Brenda Kennedy 786
Todd McAllister 739
Elaine Silver 232
Lloyd Barry 108

Finance Commissioner

Wendy Stewart 1060
Rob Jamieson 934
Trevor Mulzer 613

Board of Governors

Todd McAllister 1187
Richard Stanton 1121
Elaine Silver 780
Wendy Stewart 727
John Edwards 475

Social Sciences Senate

Travis Lindgren 538
Ian Reay 432
John Wells 355
Ryan Butt 237

Arts and Social Sciences

Heather Jenkins 844
Wendy Reid 804
Christian Dallaire 693
Travis Lindgren 665
Ian Reay 645
John Edwards 631
Sandy Wakeling 626

Tom Golem 599
Ryan Ward 523
Abdulle Jabril 516
Colin Betts 507
Pierre Leduc 506
Perry Simpson 494
Corey Mulvihill 449
Kevin Lacey 430
Ryan Butt 390
Loreto Estay 370
Brian Jones 367
Jonathan Postner 355
John Wayne Ross 345
Michael Barbour 315
Chris Schnurr 291
Stephen Huycke 289
David MacDonald 286
Scott Paré 264
Shaun Vardon 231

Referendum #1

Continue Funding for Ottawa Community Legal Clinic:

Yes: 2202

No: 627

Referendum #2

Funding for Carleton hockey team:

Yes: 1905

No: 897

RIDEAU RIVER RESIDENCE ASSOCIATION

President Vice-President
John Woods \ Jamey Heath 326
Michelle Ball \ Liz Smith 187
Matt Skinner \ Chris Schimmel 88
Richard Kemp \ Chris Crowell 80

ELECTION cont'd from pg. 3

this week to discuss plans for hiring next year's CUSA executive. He says he doesn't have any specific councillors in mind for any of the jobs.

"I haven't shut anyone out yet. I want to look at what their ideas are first."

Jamieson, who was defeated by Stewart for finance commissioner, says she had more people out campaigning for her than he did.

"Wendy had about 10 people on every corner handing (campaign flyers) out," he says.

"I thought I was the best candidate for the job," says Jamieson.

Christian Dallaire, Tom Golem and John Edwards were re-elected to CUSA council as arts and social sciences representatives. Five councillors ran for re-election. □

With files from Josée Bellmare and Chns Nuttall-Smith

FARQUHAR cont'd from pg. 4

courses like philosophy and English literature don't make the grade. This is why the fine arts program at the University of Ottawa was the first to get hit under the "social contract" cuts.

Farquhar also says universities must change because "those whom we serve through our education function" say universities must change. Following the argument of the rest of his article, it's plain to see "those whom we serve" is big business. Needless to say, asking the university to serve students would be a little too much to ask for.

Universities are not just technical training grounds. At their best, universities should teach us about ourselves, our society and the world in all its social, environmental and technological complexity. This is something that, unfortunately, Carleton's president has forgotten. □

people of COLOR

THE PEOPLE OF COLOR CAUCUS AT THE SCHOOL OF JOURNALISM IS SPONSORING A CONTEST OPEN TO ALL CARLETON STUDENTS WHO ARE PEOPLE OF OF COLOR. ENTRIES IN TWO CATEGORIES WILL BE ACCEPTED.

SHORT FICTION/POETRY: STUDENTS FROM ANY DEPARTMENT AT CARLETON MAY SUBMIT A SHORT STORY OR OEM NOT EXCEEDING 1,000 WORDS IN LENGTH. ENTRIES MUST BE SUBMITTED BY 9AM MARCH 7. THERE WILL BE A $200 FIRST PRIZE.

NEWS AND CURRENT AFFAIRS: STUDENTS FROM ALL DEPARTMENTS AT CARLETON MAY SUBMIT A NEWS AND CURRENT AFFAIRS STORY FROM 150 TO 1,000 WORDS IN LENGTH BY 9AM MARCH 7. THERE WILL BE A $200 FIRST PRIZE.

THE WINNER OF EACH CATEGORY WILL BE PUBLISHED IN THE CHARLATAN.

PLEASE INCLUDE YOUR NAME, STUDENT NUMBER AND TELEPHONE NUMBER WITH YOUR SUBMISSION. ENTRIES SHOULD BE DROPPED OFF AT THE CHARLATAN OFFICE, 531 UNICENTRE, 788-6680.

DRIVERS
PASSENGERS

TAKE OR OFFER A RIDE!

MONTREAL $10*	QUEBEC $29
TORONTO $24	SHERBROOKE $25

VANCOUVER, FLORIDA & OTHERS...

- *PRICES PER PASSENGER
- $6 FOR MEMBERSHIP
- 15 OFFICES
- I.D. REQUIRED

238 DALHOUSIE
562-8248

TORONTO 323-0874 — MONTREAL 985-3032

ALLO STOP

BAXTER'S

SECOND FLOOR
BAR & GRILL

MONDAYS & SATURDAYS PARTY NITES

$2.50

- WINGS
- ZUCCHINI
- NACHOS
- CAESAR SALAD
- ESCARGOT
- ONION RINGS

5 PM - CLOSE

TUESDAY NIGHTS SENATORS

Chicken Ticket GIVE AWAY
Chicken Wing .19¢ ea.

WEDNESDAYS

1/2 PRICE FOOD

5 P.M. - 11 P.M.

THURSDAY NIGHT

"A Carleton Tradition"
Chicken Wings 19¢ ea.

UPCOMING PROMOTIONS

Thursday, February 24
Budweiser Promo
Scratch and Win
Free Prizes

1344 Bank Street
(at Riverside)
738-3323

Love's new ritual

FOR YOUR LIFE STYLE - Available in Vibrato-Ribbed - Ultra Sensitive - Extra Strength - Assorted Colors - Variety Pack - 10 - Micro - Quality Product From ANSELL®

PONTIAC SUNBIRD LE SPORT COUPE

Fly the coupe!

PONTIAC SUNBIRD LE SPORT COUPE

- Standard 4-wheel anti-lock brakes
- Air conditioning
- AM/FM stereo cassette

Plus much more • rear spoiler • power automatic door locks • tinted glass • reclining front bucket seats • 24-hour Roadside Assistance^{††}

With your choice of two ways to take off.

The Performance you expect.
Priced Right!

SmartLease

$189

per month over 36 months*
THE FIRST PAYMENT'S ON US!
Or special offer for graduates

$750

bonus from your Pontiac Dealer

PONTIAC
Performance
TEAM

*Offers apply to the 1994 Pontiac Sunbird LE Coupe on a 36-month lease for $189 per month equipped as described. A minimum down payment of $1,493 and $300 security deposit is required. Some mileage conditions apply. Freight $595. License, insurance and taxes not included. Offers apply to 1994 new or demonstrator models. Dealer order or trade may be necessary. Dealer may lease for less. Offers apply to qualified retail customers only. These offers may not be combined or used with any other offer. See Dealer for details. Available to any person who has proof that they graduated or will graduate from a recognized post secondary institution during the period September 1, 1991 through August 31, 1994. Graduate program may not be combined or used with any other offer. First month Smart Lease payment will be waived for qualified purchasers. Minimum down payment applies. Some charges may apply. See Dealer for details.

U of O visual arts program in jeopardy

by Ian McLeod
Charlatan Staff

A student action committee says the visual arts department at the University of Ottawa has been "unfairly targeted" by funding cutbacks announced by the school earlier this month.

Carlos Bazan, dean of the faculty of arts, announced Feb. 2 that $250,000 will be cut from the visual arts program as part of a three-year plan to slash about $3.1 million in funding to departments in the faculty of arts.

Janet Murchison, a second-year visual arts student, says it is unfair that over 30 per cent of the $826,000 slash to the faculty of arts budget for 1994-95 is being foisted on the visual arts program at the university.

The result of the cuts, says a committee of students formed to protest the cuts to the program, will be reduced enrolment in the studio programs. The Visual Arts Action Committee says it fears the eventual collapse of the program due to its shrinking budget.

Murchison, one of the students on the committee, says an ongoing mail and fax campaign has brought a great deal of response from both the arts and academic communities. As well, a quickly organized protest held on Feb. 7 brought out several hundred students to demonstrate against what has been called the gutting of the department.

Students protest cuts Feb. 7; sign of the times (inset).

Murchison says students were not adequately consulted before the announcement of the funding reduction.

But according to Bazan, budget cuts to the visual arts department are not as damaging as the student committee claims. He says the faculty of arts has not targeted the visual arts department unfairly in its cuts.

About 300 students are currently enrolled in the visual arts department. The department provides the only bilingual visual arts program in Ontario. The committee says if it is cut, Franco-Ontarian culture will be threatened.

Bazan says because of consistent underfunding of universities and the provincial government's financial crisis, visual arts "will have to face the challenge (of budget constraints) through attrition."

Zero tolerance debate premature: law dean

by Jill Mahoney
Charlatan Staff

The dean of common law at the University of Ottawa says Ontario professors have been overreacting prematurely to the province's framework for eliminating racism and discrimination at universities.

Don McRae says it's too early to judge the legal consequences of the framework, known as the zero tolerance policy, because it needs to be better defined.

The framework is a set of guidelines universities must use to complete a review of their own policies on harassment and discrimination by March 1. The government will then conduct a review of the policies' effectiveness.

If implemented by a university, the policy framework would forbid speech and conduct that harasses or discriminates against a group or individual, or creates a negative environment on campus. People would be protected on grounds that include race, ethnic origin, citizenship, sexual orientation, disability, family status and receipt of public assistance.

It would apply to all academic and non-academic staff, students and visitors. Penalties for misconduct would range from a verbal apology to dismissal or expulsion.

McRae says the issue of academic freedom, which concerns professors, should be tackled by individual universities when they use the framework to put policies in place. He says all the framework demands is that universities develop their own anti-discrimination policies.

"You have to be much more specific in putting guidelines together, and then look at legitimate educational practices and freedom of ideas in universities," he says.

Professors at Carleton have been pressuring the administration to reject the framework by circulating a petition which says the proposal "would severely curtail academic and personal freedom." Last week, Carleton University President Robin Farquhar decided not to participate in the review process besides submitting Carleton's existing policies.

The rector of the University of Ottawa made a similar decision, but says he will also set up an internal task force to look at the issue of discrimination.

McRae says because the proposal lacks specific examples of discrimination or harassment, it is impossible to tell if it could be used, for instance, to ban books or limit professors' topics of discussion.

There are two sides to the issue of discrimination at universities, he says.

"I suppose there are certain ideas people have difficulties with that must be discussed. That's part of the educational process. But on the other hand, gratuitous remarks have no place in the classroom."

But he says universities who don't have policies on discrimination should look to the framework to develop them.

"To the extent we are asking people to comply with what are generally accepted human rights standards, then I have no problem," says McRae.

Gary Anandasangaree, director of academics for the Carleton University Students' Association, agrees universities need anti-discrimination policies and says the framework will allow for a better atmosphere in classrooms.

"What it will do, should do, is allow for a classroom that is free from discussion that makes people feel uncomfortable," he says.

Lisa Grünwald, a second-year journalism student, says some kind of anti-discrimination policy is necessary, but doubts the framework would change the way professors teach.

"If they're already 'ignorant' to whether they're insulting students or being racist, they may not pay attention to the code of ethics," she says.

She says the framework could affect TA groups more than lectures because there is generally more discussion in groups and therefore more of a chance to offend people.

But Grünwald says the framework needs more clarification.

"If they're having a policy to rid the world of racism, it should be very well-defined."

Carleton has a sexual harassment policy and is working on a racism policy.

But Anandasangaree says the framework would inspire a policy with an expanded definition of discrimination and "broaden the avenues" to deal with complaints.

"This is pressuring us a little more to get something together because, as it is, we don't have a broad harassment policy in place."

He also says it will ensure all universities have guidelines. "There are many universities that have very little in the way of harassment policies. There are some that have much more than Carleton. This will make an even playing field for universities."

Anandasangaree says a lot of people have "really overreacted" to the proposed framework, saying "ludicrous" things.

But Tom Darby, associate professor of

The department will lose two faculty members through retirement at the end of this year and those positions will not be filled.

In addition, says Bazan, one and a half support staff positions will be cut, as well as one-third of the part-time teaching budget. This will be the bulk of the cutting done to the visual arts department, other than some smaller future cuts to operational budgets.

The cuts to the visual arts program mean admissions to all three honors-level programs have been "indefinitely suspended." The remaining program, which will continue to accept 50 new students per year—30 English, 20 French—is a three-year, non-technical program which offers only two in-studio classes.

Murchison says the student action committee is willing to accept funding cuts which are proportionate to cuts in other arts departments.

Bazan says the faculty of arts' cuts will "affect different departments at different times," and there will be equivalent cuts across the other 14 departments in the faculty of arts over the next three years.

The next year will have the lowest level of cutbacks of the three years. For 1995-96, projected cuts total some $938,000 and the following year, a whopping $1.3 million will be cut.

political science, says the framework "looks like it was written by a bunch of disturbed children."

He says other universities, including Western, Queen's and McMaster, are also circulating petitions. Professors at Trent University in Peterborough have already circulated a petition similar to Carleton's, which has received support from 40 per cent of Trent faculty.

Darby says if the framework is followed, the consequences would be "awful because it would be a serious curtailment of academic freedom and personal freedom."

He says the framework would keep students from learning.

"If you're just there to be coddled, then why bother?"

Two more losses for the CFS

by Ryan Ward
Charlatan Staff

In two referendums this month, students have sent the Canadian Federation of Students a clear message: "No!"

At Acadia University in Wolfville, N.S., students voted in a referendum Jan. 17-Feb. 2 to reject a proposed CFS membership fee increase.

At Vancouver Community College's Langara campus in B.C., students rejected their membership in the CFS in a referendum held Feb. 8-10.

"The students have spoken," said Todd Barker, president of the Acadia Students' Union. "There is this disillusionment in the school about CFS being an Ontario-dominated organization and the students did not want to pay any more."

The member schools of the CFS have been holding referendums during the past year to approve fee increases or to decide on membership. The referendum defeat at Langara brings the number of schools who have left the CFS in the last year to five.

Acadia is the second school since last February to reject a fee increase. The Acadia referendum asked students to approve a fee increase of $6 per student from $4 annually.

About 1,150 people, or 35 per cent of eligible student voters, came out to vote and, when all the ballots were counted, there were 752 No votes and 692 Yes votes.

Barker says students want more value for their money before fees go up. He says there wasn't a No or Yes campaign for the referendum, but promotion was done by the student union to get the word out about the referendum.

At Langara, the referendum campaign was bitterly fought with posters from both the pro-CFS and anti-CFS sides accusing the opposition of lying.

During the referendum, 1,158 students (19.5 per cent of the 5,950 registered voters) marched to the polls and voted. By the time the ballots were counted, the No side won with a tally of 583 to 561.

Laraine Bone, a candidate for the chairperson of Langara Students' Union, says the voices telling students to vote against CFS membership were those of Langara students and that students trusted them over those of strangers from the CFS.

In the next two months, there are five more referendums on membership scheduled and seven member schools will consider fee increases.

U of A dentistry program drilled Administration denies huge government funding cuts the reason

by Ryan Nakashima
Charlatan Staff

The University of Alberta is planning to eliminate the province's only dentistry school after 1997-98, as it expects a $53-million cut in its provincial education grant over the next three years.

The proposal, along with 15 other proposed departmental cuts and mergers, must be passed by two administrative bodies, the general faculties council and the board of governors, by the end of March, says Sandra Halme, a public affairs officer for the U of A.

Norman Wood, the dean of dentistry, says dropping the province's only dentistry school is ridiculous.

"We think it's ridiculous that a province of our size and resources should have to go to other provinces to get their education," he says.

Wood says Alberta has a population two to three times greater than Saskatchewan and Manitoba, which only have dentistry schools in community colleges. Wood says there is a demand for dentists in Alberta, especially in rural areas.

Administration at the U of A estimates $4 million would be saved by dropping the faculty of dentistry.

Last Nov. 24, Alberta Education Minister Halvar Johnson announced in a press release plans to reduce government funding to education by five per cent this year. This first round of cuts are planned to take effect April 1.

This year's cuts are part of an overall plan to cut government spending by 20 per cent in all areas over three years, about $300 million in total.

According to the government's press release, the April 1 deadline was set so that universities, school boards and their staff unions could decide for themselves what areas to cut. The government also encouraged education administrators to cut the five per cent from employees' salaries and benefits.

Wood also says the University of Calgary, which is facing similar cuts from the province, is not cutting major programs.

"At the University of Calgary, there's just a little bit of belt tightening all over the place," says Wood. "They're not cutting faculties."

The U of A's administrative newspaper, Folio, gave two main reasons for cutting the faculty of dentistry: the operating cost per student was higher than other faculties and it was not a leading research faculty.

Folio says the dentistry program cost $16,900 per student in 1992-93. This compares to $5,000 for arts programs, $6,300 for science programs, $12,600 for medicine programs, and a university-wide average of $6,100.

Wood says the dentistry program is more expensive because the university must fund its own outpatient dental hospital for students to work in.

But while Wood agrees dentistry costs more per student to run than many other programs, he says an emphasis on research is unfounded.

"Do we want a dentistry school that can do a good research paper, or do we want a school that can do good dentistry?"

Halme says the university's restructuring is not in response to the expected cutbacks in provincial funding, but is an ongoing process to keep the university functioning. She says the plans for cuts and mergers began in 1991.

"We're one of the few universities in the country to have a plan for our future," she says.

Halme says the university plans to compensate for the reduced government grants through other measures, such as wage reductions and early retirement incentives. □

Cuts and mergers at U of A

Other cost-saving measures proposed at the University of Alberta include:

- beginning in 1995, changing the bachelor of education program to a two-year program, so students who have completed two years of an arts and science degree may get a bachelor of education in two years. Further enrolment would be suspended. In 1996, U of A will create a one-year, intensive education program for arts and science graduates. The university estimates this would save $5 million from a normal four-year program.

As well, the university would merge some departments in order to save $1 million over the next three years, including:

- to merge the departments of Germanic languages, East Asian studies, Slavic and East European studies, and Romance languages into a department of modern languages.
- to create a department of biological sciences by merging the departments of botany, zoology, entomology, genetics and microbiology.
- to merge the departments of mathematics with statistics and applied probability. □

VIEWPOINT

Jobs, anyone?

by Joe Bernard
Charlatan Staff

Despite Prime Minister Jean Chrétien's pledge during the election campaign last fall that jobs would be the first priority of any government he formed, it appears that employment may take a backseat to reduction of the deficit, at least in the interim.

Finance Minister Paul Martin will be tabling the new Liberal government's budget next Tuesday, Feb. 22, in the House of Commons.

But while maintaining a verbal commitment to job creation, Martin is finding it difficult to put any bite into his bark, because of an overhanging federal debt in excess of half a trillion dollars (that's 11 zeros!). The federal deficit for the fiscal year ending in March is expected to ring in at about $45 billion.

In its Feb. 7 edition, Maclean's reported that Martin emerged from a pre-budget consultation in Toronto with what he felt was a distinct mandate.

"The direction is clear," the minister stated. "People believe that job creation is crucial. They understand the absolute necessity to clean up the nation's finances. This will not be a budget of bliss."

It appears the government may be shying away from its main election platform of job creation and using the miserable state of the financial books as its scapegoat.

While on the election trail last October, Chrétien was evasive about how he would accomplish the formidable task of creating jobs without increasing the largest debt per capita in the world.

The new government has maintained that, as well as cutting government expenditures and increasing government tax revenue, the key to sustained deficit reduction is getting individuals off welfare and among the taxpaying public.

But recently, the focus has remained primarily on government cuts and increased tax revenue from middle-class and high-income earners. The government appears to be hoping its infrastructure program, aimed primarily at improving sewers, highways and buildings, will buy it some time on coming through on its promise to create new jobs.

While post-secondary students do not appear to have been targeted directly — little has been mentioned about the Canada Student Loans program, for instance — the federal government has sent mixed signals concerning cuts to government funding to the provinces, who are responsible for education.

During a televised "town-hall" meeting after the October election, the PM vowed that the government's transfer payments to the provinces would not be reduced. But Martin, appearing to contradict Chrétien, has consistently maintained that everything is on the table.

Transfer payments, that is the total cash and tax points paid directly to the provinces and municipalities, currently total about $40 billion, or 20 per cent of the total federal government budget for 1993-94, according to a ministry of finance spokesperson.

These payments are key to the provincial government's funding for post-secondary education and health care.

Many questions remain, among them, whether the cuts to government expenditures will amount to a manure of government programs and services or a broad-based slash.

But the most important question for those relying on the government to stick to its promises is whether its number one pledge — jobs, jobs, jobs — is still in fact its number one priority. □

C.U.S.A. Positions Now Available for the 1994 - 1995 Term:

- Director of Community Affairs (1)
- Director of External Affairs (1)
- Associate Director of Human Resources (1)
- Orientation Commissioner (1)

Job Descriptions and Terms of Reference available in the C.U.S.A. Office (Room 401 Unicentre) as of Friday February 18/1994.

Applications for these positions will be due Friday March 4/1994 by 12:00 p.m. in the C.U.S.A. Office.

Applications for Orientation Head Facilitators for the upcoming fall program will be available Monday February 28/1994 in the C.U.S.A. Office.

All positions are open to any undergraduate student of Carleton University. C.U.S.A. is an equal opportunity employer.

Students: news to the media

You are reading a student newspaper. So it's no wonder that you hear gripes about how students are affected by various bits of news, be it provincial legislation or bus fare.

But would you read much about these same issues in the "mainstream" media? Don't think so.

If it weren't for student papers, no one would address various issues from the student perspective. The national media don't concern itself with students and neither do the newspapers in a city where there are two universities and two colleges.

For the mainstream media, newsmakers are powerful, middle-aged people, so news stories usually only reflect their concerns.

After seeing editorials in the Ottawa Citizen by columnist Peter Calamai, professors at Carleton began circulating petitions opposing a policy framework from the Ontario government. The framework aims to revise the existing policies at universities and colleges to provide uniform guidelines for what constitutes harassment and discrimination and how incidents may be punished.

The Canadian media have been overflowing with coverage of the professors' outrage over the policy framework. The media have jumped all over the issue of how the policy will affect professors and "academic freedom," whatever that is.

They quote professors who say the framework could be used to ban Shakespeare and Nietzsche from classrooms and professors who say universities may become useless bastions of blandness.

Since this brouhaha erupted, national media attention has been turned to the plight of our poor, tenured friends in their ivory tower. Funny how, four months after the policy framework was released, it took a Citizen editorial column about academic freedom and some upset professors to make the framework "newsworthy."

Why has the media, from CTV to the Globe and Mail, chosen to ignore that not only professors, but students, non-academic staff and even visitors to the university would be governed by a revised harassment and discrimination policy?

Well, if you are powerful, professional and middle-class and your "rights" are being stepped on by the evil government, your problems are a public concern simply because they are what is called "news" by the media. It's easy for the public and the politicians to dismiss students' problems if they never hear about them in the news.

And meanwhile, as the superficial debate over the policy framework rages, students are facing what could be the dismantling of our accessible post-secondary education system. In the fair province of Ontario, the dark cloud of mammoth tuition fee increases and spiraling debt has hung over students for most of the year.

One sobering reminder of how the mainstream media has failed to report the urgency of students' predicament is that even when students mobilize to protest their situation, they are studiously ignored by the media.

On Feb. 4, Carleton students held a day-long protest against the impending tuition hikes, attracting hundreds of university and high-school students. Yet the phones at The Charlatan rang off the hook all day with local and national media people, too lazy to do their own research, demanding to know more about the zero tolerance policy framework.

Of course, tuition increases are not a new story. In fact, students have been circulating petitions against the proposed increase since almost the beginning of the school year. But has anybody paid attention?

The doubly sickening thing is that without the pressure of big-media attention, the government will be more than happy to continue ignoring students' pleas.

But you can bet your next student loan payment that the folks at Queen's Park are listening hard to the concerns of the professors who have been given space in major newspapers and on radio and television shows to whine about their "rights."

AK & JM

The Charlatan welcomes all letters and opinion pieces. Letters should not be more than 250 words and opinion pieces not more than 700 words. Pieces may be edited for length or clarity. The deadline is Tuesday at noon. Include your name, signature, faculty, year and PHONE NUMBER or your letter won't be published. Phone numbers are for verification only and won't be published. Send to: The Charlatan, Room 531 Unicentre, Carleton University, 1125 Colonel By Drive, Ottawa, Ont. K1S 5B6.

OPINION

Looking for truth in govt. policy

In October 1993, the Ontario Ministry of Education and Training released a policy framework entitled "Framework regarding prevention of harassment and discrimination in Ontario universities." The policy, known as the zero tolerance policy, has since been the subject of much debate because some say it would impinge on academic freedom. In these articles, two professors debate the meaning and implications of the policy framework.

by Shirley Mills

Shirley Mills is the president of the Carleton University Academic Staff Association, the academic staff union. She is also a professor of math and statistics.

Recently, there has been much discussion on campuses and in the media concerning the intent of a document entitled "Framework regarding prevention of harassment and discrimination in Ontario universities."

Editorials in the Ottawa Citizen and the Globe and Mail have expressed concerns related to statements in this document. Petitions calling for the rejection of this "framework" are circulating on several university campuses.

The first sentence of the document reads, "The government of Ontario has adopted a policy of zero tolerance of harassment and discrimination at Ontario's universities." Immediately this raises the spectre of government intervention in university affairs; of infringement of fundamental rights as well as academic rights; of frivolous and vexatious complaints proliferating.

As Carleton President Robin Farquhar and I stated in our joint letter to the Citizen, Jan. 29, 1994, "Universities would never accept this type of intrusion . . . which violates our basic mission to seek truth and knowledge through teaching and research unfettered by government or private interests."

But, let me set the record straight. First, some writers have left the erroneous impression that the framework will be law effective March 1, 1994. This is not the case. The document uses the word "should," not "shall." Nothing in the framework is legally able to override university policies.

To legislate this for all universities would require changes to each of the acts that define the relationship between each university and the government. This has not been done, nor is it anticipated. Academics are able to teach the same things after March 1 as before March 1, provided that what they currently teach does not contravene the law.

Second, there is no requirement to meet "zero tolerance." The document states the "The government intends the framework to be used by institutions to review and assess their existing policies and make any needed changes . . . Institutions are free to develop other ways of achieving the intent of the policy which best reflects their local environments."

Was this an attempt to intrude upon the autonomy of universities? To impede freedom of inquiry, to limit freedom of speech, to infringe upon academic freedom?

No, as indicated by Dave Cooke, the minister of education and training, in a letter to the Citizen, Feb. 11,

MILLS cont'd on page 10.

by Nicholas Rowe

Nicholas Rowe is an economics professor at Carleton and helped start a petition against the policy framework.

The current climate of censorship and self-censorship in universities is already bad, but the Ontario Ministry of Education and Training "Framework regarding prevention of harassment and discrimination in Ontario universities" would make it much worse.

Anything you do or say which might reasonably be known to be offensive to some person on the grounds of "race, ancestry, place of origin, color, ethnic origin (including language, dialect, or accent), citizenship, creed, sex, sexual orientation, disability, age (18-65), marital status, family status, the receipt of public assistance, record of provincial offenses or pardoned federal offences," is by definition harassment.

So, if anybody says anything you disagree with, don't waste time trying to think up arguments to show why what was said is false. Instead, simply put on your most indignant and outraged voice and claim to be offended. Your opponent will now face public humiliation, and suffer penalties ranging from offering you an apology to being fired.

And in case you think this is a great way to get back at obnoxious professors, remember it applies to everyone on campus. Be careful what you write on an exam, or your professor or teaching assistant may charge you with harassment.

Once all groups learn this technique, that some have already mastered, many will be silenced, including those who first developed the art of taking offence. What feminists say can be deeply offensive to some men, for instance. Teaching and learning, hard enough now, will be impossible in such a climate. University education would become the ritual recitation of an official ideology, like the compulsory classes in Marxism-Leninism in communist countries.

Don't take my word for this. Read the document for yourself. It's reprinted in This Week at Carleton, Feb. 10. Nearly everyone would agree that we need some rules to prevent, for instance, professors openly expressing Nazi beliefs and covering their office walls with swastikas. Nazism promotes hatred against certain social groups, and has caused millions of people to be murdered this century.

But how consistent are we in deciding which beliefs are legitimate and which must be censored? Many professors (and students) are Marxists, and openly express their Marxist beliefs.

Yet Marxism can also be accused of promoting hatred

ROWE cont'd on page 10.

the
CHARLATAN
CARLETON'S INDEPENDENT STUDENT NEWSPAPER

February 17, 1994
VOLUME 23 NUMBER 23

Editor-in-Chief Mo Gannon
Production Manager Kevin McKay
Business Manager Jill Perry

NEWS
Editors Mario Carlucci
Brent Dowdall
Contributors José Bellemare
Blayne Haggart
Caron Watt
Angie Gallop
Chris Nuttall-Smith
Tanya Workman
Volunteer Co-ordinator Johanna Ciszewski

NATIONAL AFFAIRS
Editor Arn Keeling
Contributors Joe Bernard
Jill Mahoney
Ian McLeod
Ryan Nakashima
Ryan Ward

FEATURES
Editor Andrea Smith
Supplement Co-ordinator Colin James
Contributors Selwyn Benois
Shane Book
Gifty Gyimah
Colin James
Lisa Marshall
Kishma Paquette
Dawolu Akintola Saul

SPORTS
Editor Steven Vesely
Contributors Bill Labonte
Kevin Restivo
Sarah Richards
David Sali
Jay Tharayil

ARTS
Editor Blayne Haggart
Contributors Joe Bernard
Sussana Forieri
Arn Keeling
Greg Owens

OP/ED
Editor Sheila Keenan
Contributors Arn Keeling
Jill Mahoney
Shirley Mills
Nicholas Rowe

VISUALS
Photo Editor Tim O'Connor
Photo Assistant Andre Bellefeuille
Contributors Joanne Capuani
Bill Cooper
Chris Nuttall-Smith
Dean Tomlinson

Graphics Co-ordinators David Hodges
Mike Rappaport
Graphics Assistant Joel Kenneth Grant
Contributors Jennifer Davies
Sheila Keenan

Cover Bill Cooper

The Charlatan's photos are produced using the Carleton University Students' Association Photo Service

PRODUCTION
Production Assistant Kim Alf
Contributors Bram S. Aaron
Dave Carpenter
Michael Mainville
Jill Perry
Richard G.D. Scott
Jane Tattersall

CIRCULATION 14,000
Circulation Dave Carpenter
Joellen Walshe

ADVERTISING 788-3580
Ad Manager Karen Richardson

The Charlatan, Carleton University's weekly student newspaper, is an editorially and financially autonomous journal published weekly during the fall and winter term and monthly during the summer. Charlatan Publications Incorporated, Ottawa, Ontario, a non-profit corporation registered under the Canadian Corporations Act, is the publisher of The Charlatan. Editorial content is the sole responsibility of editorial staff members, but may not reflect the beliefs of its members. Contents are copyright © 1994. Nothing may be duplicated in any way without the prior written permission of the Editor-in-Chief. All Rights Reserved. ISSN 0315-1855. Subscriptions are available at a cost of $40 for individuals and $52 for institutions. Includes GST. National advertising for The Charlatan is handled through Canadian University Press Media Services (Campus Plus), 73 Richmond St. W., 4th Floor, Ontario, M5H 1Z4; phone: (416) 481-7283. The Board of Directors of Charlatan Publications Inc. is: Chairperson Ken Drever, Treasurer Mark Lafreniere, Secretary Yvonne Potter, Directors Warren Kinsella, Anna Gibbons, Dave Hodges, Fouad Kannan, Adam Martin and Mo Gannon. The Charlatan Room 531 Unicentre Carleton University, Ottawa, Ontario K1S 5S6 Telephone: (613) 788-6680. Email: charlatan@carleton.ca

MILLS cont'd from page 9.

"The framework was designed for the use by universities to review and assess their existing policies and procedures. It was meant to provide a model for universities to compare their own policies and help them to meet their legal responsibilities to provide a harassment-free workplace and to follow the Ontario Human Rights Code. The framework is not legislation . . . the government recognizes that universities are legally autonomous bodies and we have no intention of changing this relationship."

It is always a worthwhile exercise to debate what a university is -- to reaffirm university autonomy, academic freedom, freedom of speech and freedom of in-

ROWE cont'd from page 9.

against certain social groups, and Marxist regimes have murdered many more tens of millions of people this century than have Nazi regimes. Why should Nazism be banned from campus and Marxism be permitted free expression?

Try the following experiment in your own classes: Take something written by a radical feminist, cross out the word "men" whenever it appears, and substitute the word "blacks" or "Jews." Would the result be judged offensive?

These examples show that there is little underlying logic to justify the distinction between what is currently judged to be offensive and what is currently judged to be legitimate opinion. There is only fashion and convention. But truth may not always be fashionable or conventional.

We already have an official "human rights educator" at Carleton, who likens her job to putting out fires. This is the metaphor of the political commissar. True educators see themselves as lighting and tending the fires of learning.

Both faculty and students at Carleton are signing petitions against the framework, following the lead of Trent University. The rebellion is spreading to other Ontario universities. We have strong and broad support. Feminists and socialists forums for intelligent minds to pursue inquiry, disputation, research and learning. There is no requirement that the theories and concepts academics propose be palatable -- there is only a requirement that we search for truth.

In a joint letter to the Citizen, Jan. 29, Farquhar and I wrote: "The real issue is not so much what ideas are discussed and explored, but rather how these ideas are presented to challenging and widely divergent audiences in a climate that respects their distinctiveness and stimulates debate."

One would hope that the result of an educated society would be a more tolerant society. □ realize that their rights are equally vulnerable to this censorship. And they don't want the right wing to capture this issue and get all the credit for defending academic freedom.

The ministry is already back-pedaling, recognizing the autonomy of universities, and saying the framework is purely voluntary. But, a similar framework has been imposed on colleges, since they are not autonomous.

We must nail the ministry hard, so that it never dares try this again. Then we must reclaim our freedom in our own academy and in our own minds. □

LETTERS

Student screwed by bank

Editor:

I have had nothing but frustration in dealing with the bank on campus. I wondered how a bank could stay in business when it treats its customers with so little respect. Then when I went to a downtown branch of the same bank, I discovered that they don't treat valued customers that way, just students.

When I take cheques to the branch on campus to deposit, they place at least a five- and sometimes a 10-day hold on them before the funds are released. Once, in an emergency I begged them to make an exception to the rule. They said it was policy everywhere and exceptions were impossible.

I recently discovered that there is a branch of this same bank in the bottom of a fancy office building (Barrister House), near my house. The first time I was ever in this branch I sought to deposit a variety of personal cheques, most with different last names than my own and from other provinces.

The teller politely deposited all the funds into my account on the spot. I was shocked, but played it cool. I asked him if there would be any holds on the funds. He was surprised by the question and gave me a look which implied that those rules don't apply to a customer like me, i.e. a customer who would have an office in this building.

I learned an important lesson about the real world that day -- if you're a student, you can bank on getting shit on.

Blake Howe
Law III

Remembering David

Editor:

On Tuesday morning, Feb. 8, 1994, at 2 a.m., David Bruce Elver, a Carleton third-year sociology student passed away from the complications of a brain tumor. Before enrolling at Carleton in 1989, Dave worked at a variety of jobs, among them installing and selling windows. David was well-known at Carleton, as he worked as a student consultant in the computer lounges and installing hardware for Carleton Computing and Communications in the summer of 1992.

After developing his computer skills at Carleton, he signed a contract with the Canadian Council of Social Development, managing their computer network on a part-time basis.

In September of 1993, he was diagnosed with a brain tumor. The side effects of the treatments made it difficult for David to continue his studies and he did not enrol that fall, although he did continue to work part-time at CCSD.

David was well-liked at Carleton for he was always very helpful, and this was not confined to his role as student consultant. He loved to laugh and chat, especially over wine and dinner. A memorial was held for him on Friday, Feb. 11, 1993 at All Saint's Anglican Church on Richmond Road and was attended by over 200 hundred people. David will be missed by all who knew him.

Peter Urmetzer
MA Sociology II

Voting full of holes

Editor:

There I was, on my way to a voting station located in the tunnel. Yes sir, I voted for my president, social science rep and board of governors rep.

The ballots were exchanged for my student identification card, my name was crossed off a student body print-out and I voted. All went well, or so I thought.

The next day, while in semi-deep conversation with friends, I questioned them as to whether or not they had voted. All replied no, their reason being because our ID cards were defaced. I objected and said that was totally absurd. Nothing of the sort had happened to mine. Boy, was I wrong.

When I took out my ID to prove my friends wrong, I succeeded only in proving myself wrong. In my hand, I held my ID which now had a hole punched through the bottom left side of my picture. I could see through my ID card!

Who wants an ID card with a hole in it? Not me! And after a quick survey of the people around me, let's just say the feelings were mutual.

People wonder why the voting rate is so low. I've just given you one reason.

Come September, I'll just pay the replacement price and get myself a new identification card because, well, the one I now have has a hole in it. There are other ways to keep track of who has or hasn't voted . . . ever hear of permanent markers?

Narena Khemlall
Law I

Scattering the blame

Editor:

Regarding "Mushroom Explosion: frat bound," The Charlatan, Feb. 3, 1994, specifically the paragraphs in the article pertaining to the cancellation of the all-ages aspect of the evening.

It was reported that the concert on Thursday, Jan. 24 was advertised as an all-ages event by Oliver's. In fact, promotion of the concert was managed by the Skatterbrains and Oliver's management had no part in the advertising of the venue or the fact that it was advertised as an all-ages show.

In order for an all-ages show to take place, a certain amount of preparation and organization needs to be implemented and this cannot be done in a "spur of the moment" manner. So, actually, the idea that the management cancelled the all-ages part of the show was wrongly reported, as the show was never to be all-ages in the first place!

It was unfortunate that the confusion occurred, but we were sympathetic to the group of under-age people and offered some restitution by inviting them back to any all-ages show in Oliver's as our guests.

The management of Oliver's does, however, wish that they had been given the opportunity to tell their side of the story in the original article and not through a letter to the editor.

Randy Fitzpatrick
Supervisor, Oliver's

YANKEE BLACKNESS AND THE AFRICAN DIASPORA

by Shane Book
Shane Book is a member of the Shades of Blackness program and hosts a program called Black Spirituality on CVCU.

Spike Lee's latest film. George Foreman's latest fight. Jesse Jackson preaches. Louis Farrakhan teaches. Malcolm X looms larger in life than in death.

Images of Black men on America's nightly news hit like a sledge hammer. Hustlers, pimps, dope dealers: TV roles for more than few.

We get it all, even up in Canada. Sometimes the shots sound so real on TV, you swear they came from your backyard. These sounds and images from the cultural behemoth to the south are branded into our minds, repetition after repetition. By the time we are old enough to speak we know what it is to be Black. The accent, the strut: "Wuzzup Nigga?"

America is the cultural hegemony of NOW. It follows that in the African Diaspora, the market forces of Black America have forcibly marketed Yankee Blackness as the benchmark of African culture worldwide. The job of selling BLACK has been done so well that even white kids are buying.

Hip hop fashion reigns in high schools in Sudbury, and the commodity can be consumed by white kids without any of the ensuing side-effects of political disempowerment. Translated: The gangsta can loudly swear at his "bitch" while riding OC Transpo back to his "hood" in Barrhaven. If middle-class white kids can be sold the gansta' image and all the nihilism that comes with it, then you can be sure that market penetration is more than skin deep.

The exportation of African American culture has been done so slowly and stealthily as to overtake and fool even the sharpest minds. This is more than profit. It is a question of consciousness. Recently, two people were overheard lamenting the lack of statistical data on the numbers of Black university students in Canada. To compensate for this deficiency, it was suggested that statistics from Ebony magazine, the most mainstream periodical in Black America, could be used. It took a full moment before the ridiculousness of that suggestion was realized and the reality of location struck home.

Buddhists speak of those who live on the enlightened path as living in the here and now. Too often African Canadians are caught living for tomorrow — waiting to go to the promised land: America. Many of us dream of travelling to that big Atlanta in the sky, where the streets are paved with gold — and Black, of course. But what about the task at hand? The dirty job of living right here?

For many African Canadians who seek a spiritual return to the mother Africa, the issue is unity, African unity, in the struggle for Black liberation. It is not popular to separate Blackness along cultural/national lines — and rightly so. Surely then, Black America's leadership serves as a unifier among African people everywhere.

But not absolutely, and not without cost. Given a cursory glance, Black America is a beacon of hope for an end to the divisiveness that plagues the community. But sober reflection reveals the manifestation of a new world order which is growing in tandem with white America's global policing duties. Led by African Americans, a re-ordering of the Black world is taking place. This is problematic. Any kind of world order needs enforcement, and African Americans are subtly and overtly the enforcers. Jesse Jackson can fly in to the world's hot spots and advocate a peaceful resolution with a recipe for American-style democracy. Arsenio Hall quietly slips his American values in to our cultural vocabulary, and by osmosis, we absorb them.

Those who say this questioning of African American cultural imperialism is some sort of treason against the global Black community, look to the phenomena known as "Fear of Self." You know what I'm speaking of. A little cross-border encounter with Black people — large groups of them, and the fear is often sensed but never spoken. It is a crawling case of nervousness that sneaks up on you. The antidote may be a quick glance behind, or locking the car doors — do you check your purse when you see a large group of African American people on the street? What's the matter brother, watching too much TV? Whatever you call this feeling, the explanation is clear and the result is just plain sad.

This is no rallying call for insular navel-gazing amongst African Canadians. To concentrate solely on the ground beneath our feet would only obscure the road ahead. The point is only to take stock of the situation as it exists in this country. The problems of racism carry a commonality of oppression, but there are a different set of parameters, subtle at times but different still, in the Canadian case.

A balance must certainly lie somewhere between a child who grows up in Moose Jaw speaking authentic Brooklynesse and the jingoistic collector of CBC memorabilia.

Acknowledgement of where we're at is an acknowledgement of who we are, and that's positive. *

TURN THE OTHER CHEEK? I DON'T THINK SO.

by Kishna Pacquette
Kishna Pacquette is a first-year psychology student at Carleton.

All Blacks living in our omni-white society have experienced racial discrimination at many points in their lives. Most of us experience it almost everyday.

It's obvious. If you're Black then you will be stereotyped and discriminated against. But it surprises me how other Black people deal with cases of discrimination. I've seen some bow their heads in shame, or some turn the other cheek.

As for myself, my Black skin is too beautiful to be ashamed of, my African pride too strong to allow my head to bow.

You say that you agree? But what do you do when prejudice slaps you in the face?

Let me posit a situation:

You walk in to a shopping mall when you hear discriminating remarks being bellowed through the corridors. You look around to find out who the ass is, but everyone looks the same: suspicious and white.

You carry on with your business, feeling helpless and a little more than annoyed when you hear the same voice making racist remarks again. A middle-aged Black woman passes you by and keeps walking. You hear the angry shouts again.

Now you are able to view the man behind the voice.

An elderly man, a white man, standing in front of a booth in the middle of the mall, hands raised, speaking of "white power" — pig power.

You are angry, but what do you do? You can keep walking like many other Black people in the mall must have done before you, or you can put an end to this racial discrimination. The solution seems obvious now. Do something to protect the rights of your brothers and sisters. But what happens to some of you who say this when these situations arise?

This example is not a fabrication. This was an experience I had last summer in my own home town. It was a hot Friday afternoon and I was trying to enjoy my early dismissal from work, when racism reared its ugly head. The man doing the shouting was standing in front of a booth, which had a sign asking for donations to help cure Multiple Sclerosis. He had four others inside the booth who were egging him on. The man would shout out his racial remarks whenever he saw a Black person.

Completely sickened and infuriated, I walked to a pay phone and dialled our friendly regional police department. A not-so-friendly operator listened impatiently and switched me over to the "appropriate" department. I explained what had happened and the officer quickly brushed me off, saying it was not the police's problem but that of mall security. My case to them seemed minor, but I didn't think phoning the police was a drastic measure. I asked a woman in one of the stores to phone mall security for me. As I waited outside the store the man started making remarks again. I stuck around until after the security guard had spoken to the wicked man and his friends, just to make sure security wouldn't put my complaint aside for a doughnut and coffee. The racists were ordered to leave.

That evening I explained to a friend what had happened to me. She told me I was courageous and gave me a pat on the back. She could understand why her praise wasn't necessary. I felt that should have done more. If anything I should have confronted the man.

When I asked her what she would have done she couldn't give me a direct answer. I realized she would have turned the other cheek like the rest of the Black people who had walked through the mall, not only that day, but during the two preceding days the man had been there.

Another friend listened to my experience and just couldn't believe it had happened. He quickly changed the subject. I realized that he too would have turned the other cheek.

To me, being Black does not mean being meek. We were the first kings and queens to exist. We need not bow to anyone.

As we celebrate Black History Month, think about what being Black means to you. But don't stop there. Think about what you can do to preserve your heritage all year long. *

BAKU: The Journey

by Dawolu Akintola Saul

Dawolu Akintola Saul (a.k.a. Olu) is a third-year arts student with the French department at Carleton.

As the title suggests, this is the story of a journey, not only of a man but of a people; a race. Although this is just a fictional account, it is important to know where you come from if you are to see where you are going.

For my Brothers and Sisters; I encourage you to explore your history, and enjoy your culture.

The day was hot and although the air was heavy with moisture, the rain still had not come. The wind blew little dust devils among the now-dying brush.

Baku stood alone on the plain staring relentlessly up at the sun. He had worshipped Gorro the sun god ever since he was a young boy. Baku had looked to him for protection, guidance and his everyday needs. Not once had he been disappointed.

The ebony giant turned and strode back towards his village, leaving only his footprints behind. He was Baku, the second son of Kano and the most skilled and respected hunter in the tribe, without mention an awesome warrior. There was nothing unusual about his physique. All the men and women were muscular from the life they led on the plains; but Baku, because of his immense size, commanded attention.

He was a very calm and studious man for one of his tribe. When taking lessons from the elders as a boy, he would always ask the most questions, irritating the other boys and even the teachers. Baku had just entered the gates of the village. From his facial expression one could tell he was deep in thought. He settled down in his hut to watch Gorro make his final stride across the sky. Baku had watched Gorro's descent intensely, always wondering where the great god made his resting place.

Baku was planning the journey of his life. The time had come. Tomorrow he would start on his pilgrimage. As he lay down upon his sleeping mat, all he could think of were the tales of his journey that would be told.

The next morning before Gorro rose to make his sweep of the sky, Baku was already gathering his things. By the time Gorro reached his peak, the village was behind Baku and only the unknown lay ahead.

Baku knew his course, and with Gorro leading the way he was sure he would come to his resting place before the moon rose. Baku walked on and on, the dust stinging his eyes and Gorro's mighty heat beating upon his back. This endless self-torture continued for a moon and a half, but Baku had no intention of turning back. He would journey until he found his god or he would die trying.

Two moons went by, and Baku, wind-burnt, suffering with sunstroke, and delirious, was screaming obscenities at the sky. His eyes pointed upward and his arms waving wildly, he did not see the scorpion until it had bitten him on the heel. Obscenities pouring from his mouth, he stumbled onward.

Under a great tree, Baku watched in agony as Gorro again descended from the sky. The scorpion bite was causing him great pain, his body felt like it was on fire and his veins ran not with blood but with liquid heat. Water he had so painstakingly reserved was now being sweated out on to the parched ground. He tossed and turned, talking in the tongue of his forefathers. As the night cooled, his fever abated. He slept an untroubled sleep.

Baku lay under the tree for days, fed by the great owls of the plains. Once again, Gorro was providing for him. He would soon resume his journey.

Baku set out again the next day, and there was something in the air he had never sensed before. It was the smell of the great Atlantic Ocean. By the end of that day he had reached its shore. He gazed in awe and knew he had arrived. As he watched, Gorro slipped beneath the waves to once again rest his great head. Baku took out his sacred rock, said a prayer of thanks, and walked forward to meet his creator.

Baku had lived all his life on the plain. He had never learned the art of swimming. Without hesitation he went into the water. He bent to drink, but spat out the salty brine. Thinking nothing of it, he ventured forward. The water was at his chest and rising, but he was a man of faith, and did not doubt that his god would protect him.

The ground dropped away without warning and, caught by surprise, Baku called out silently to his god but was not answered. The weight of the pouch secured at his waist pulled him under. His lungs screamed for air, and his temples throbbed. His life ebbed from his body, and his mind went back to his village.

The sea became calm and he was once again in his hut looking up at the sky, but Gorro was nowhere to be found. He eased himself on to his sleeping mat, laid back, and took a deep breath. He breathed in the blackness which enveloped him. Baku had fulfilled his dream by meeting his creator, but he could never enter the realm of the mighty Gorro.

August 28, 1963, a hush falls over a sea of swaying bodies. A man steps to the podium, unknown to everyone. He bears a striking resemblance to a warrior long since dead. Baku's seed has reached the far shore and once again, the ebony giant stands among his people, but now a different journey has been started. He raises his hand in recognition. Upon commanding their attention he exclaims: "I HAVE A DREAM."

What Love Does For Me; A Black Spiritual

Love — My Love — My Angel
illuminates my dreams, hopes and desires.
A flickering that is the beginning of fire.
An illumination that is the light at the end of the tunnel.
A light that is a beacon — beckoning me towards hope.
Hope that strengthens my love, my life,
my belief in liberty, my belief in God.
Hope that sustains my faith that one day we will all be free.
Hope that encourages my dreams, desires,
aspirations and goals to make them reality . . .
Hope that flushes away my daily nightmares . . .

Nightmares experienced every single day!
Nightmares of suffering everyday, struggling every day!
BEING asked "May I help you?" everyday!
HEARING of Black-on-Black violence everyday!
SEEING babies having babies everyday!
FEELING the legacy of slavery everyday!
SEEING fathers walking out on families everyday!
GETTING C+'s in school everyday!
HEARING of brothers killing brothers everyday!
HEARING of police brutality everyday!
WISHING that people would just grow up everyday!
KNOWING that my sisters are being abused and assaulted — verbally, physically, mentally, spiritually and sexually every day —
EVERY SINGLE DAY!

You LOVE sustain my faith.
Faith that washes away my manifold nightmares. No not white — white as snow.
But clean — fresh — a new feeling that rejuvenates, recuperates, and resuscitates SPIRIT.
Taking SPIRIT from the depths of Hell towards the great dimensions of Heaven.

You LOVE inspire me to strive, struggle and overcome as our ancestors did and still do you — LOVE encourage my inquisitiveness to keep questioning
my Spirit to keep stirring my consciousness — Rising to lift up our children . . .
Lifting our people toward Heaven and never forsaking our true Zion.

Forever and ever, our life becomes everlasting and our Love endless . . .

Amen.

by Colin James

WHAT IS "BLACK?"

by Gifty Gyimah
Gifty Gyimah is a first-year law student at Carleton

Quite often I hear terms like "white-washed" and "Uncle Tom," or phrases like "She's trying to be black," "He thinks he's black," and "It's a black thing" used by black people. I have also found myself using these same terms and expressions now and then.

But what do these expressions mean, and what do people really mean when they say them? I interviewed a number of black Carleton students, both male and female, to find out.

The first question I asked was "What is a black person?" Many of the students couldn't even answer the question.

One student said a black person is a person who "initiates strength and power in the black community," while another said "I don't think of people as black or white, I consider people to be Nubian." The majority said there is more to being black than one's skin color.

"Just being skin-color black doesn't mean a damn thing really... it starts as a skin color, but really it's a state of mind," said one student.

Another student added it is "not the color of your skin that makes you black. It's your awareness of your culture, where you came from and where you are going."

The popular response was summed up by a student who explained that, "there's two parts to being a black person... you must be of African descent, that's the physical... and then there's also the mental — you must think black. There are certain things that are black characteristics and these things must be obvious within this person."

Defining what a black person is leads to a definition of what "blackness" is. The concept of blackness is an abstract one, and cannot be fully understood just by explaining it. This became apparent in the responses of black students.

A second-year student said "blackness can't be dictionary-defined. It's more than a feeling... It's a spirit and aura." If this is so, blackness cannot be taught or imitated. Blackness comes first from being a black person, and then through experience and environment. The experience involves the struggle and suffering of black people. The environment includes black culture, the reinforcement of black identity and self-love as a black person.

One student mentioned this when he said blackness is "loving yourself and loving your people just for being black." But what then is a black person who does not love himself or herself and black people as black people? This is where the idea of a "white-washed" black person, or "Uncle Tom," comes in to play.

Not all agreed that there is any such thing as being "white-washed."

Another student said, "I don't think that there is any such thing as a white-washed black person or an Uncle Tom because black people can be whoever they want to be." She concluded, "Being white-washed is no crime. It's a stupid stereotype which I think should be eliminated from the world because it limits black people (from) doing well."

One student said someone who is white-washed is "someone who disrespects their blackness." Another described them as "someone who has no sense of identity and/or does things that are destructive to his or her community."

Another student said one who is white-washed is "someone (who) is more interested in maybe gaining acceptance or approval in the eyes of other people than their black brothers or sisters." She felt that they "see non-black races as better than themselves (because) they have no sense of self-worth."

How then, can one who is biologically and, in most cases, obviously black, achieve a sense of blackness when they are labelled as white-washed?

We need to determine what makes something black, and why. Before we can make sense out of it, we need to re-evaluate ourselves and our attitudes toward our black brothers and sisters. It is an issue we need to resolve, for if we do not we will remain divided as black people.

We should realize that terms like "white-washed" and "Uncle Tom" and phrases like "he's trying to be black," and "it's a black thing," are not just expressions. They are labels and categorizations. There is much more to being black than speech or clothing. If everyone realizes and accepts this, there will not be any more need to use such labels. ✱

READING

In keeping with Black History Month, the following list was researched and prepared by Lisa Marshall, a Carleton employee and graduate student. It accompanies an exhibit of books dealing with Black history, which is in MacOdrum Library throughout February. The books with call-numbers in their listing are available at MacOdrum Library.

✱ Bearden, J. and L.J. Shadd Butler, The Life and Times of Mary Shadd Cary, 1977. (LA2325.C34B4)

✱ Brand, D. No Burden to Carry: Narratives of Black Working Women in Ontario, 1920s-1950s, 1991. (FC2346.9.B6C59)

✱ Carter, V. and L. The Black Canadians: Their History and Contributions, 1988. (FC106.B55T85(1975))

✱ Clairmount D. and D. Magill, Africville: The Life and Death of a Canadian Black Community, 1987. (FC2346.9.B6C59)

✱ Grant J.N. The Immigration and Settlement of Black Refugees of the War of 1812 in Nova Scotia and New Brunswick, 1990.

✱ Hill, D. The Freedom Seekers: Blacks in Early Canada, 1981. (FC106.B55H55)

✱ Hill, L. Trials and Triumphs: The Story of African Canadians, 1992.

✱ Homby, J. Black Islanders: Prince Edward Island's Historical Black Community, 1991.

✱ Reindeau, R. An Enduring Heritage: Black Contributions to Early Ontario, 1984.

✱ Ruck, C.W. Canada's Black Battalion, 1987.

✱ Talbot, C. Growing Up Black in Canada, 1984.

Thinking About Life For My Children

An open womb.

A piercing, pitiful cry echoes through the still of the night; breaking the tension and bringing happy smiles to the lips of those who are anxiously waiting.

Normal or abnormal;

Boy or Girl;

there is no going back now; Welcome to our world.

Oh Child!

You whose facial expressions show such love and innocence;

I ponder on this reflection.

Would you retain peace and value love as the treasure of your life?

Or would you join the uncertain crowd who dwell in envy, hate and strife?

Love/hate, hate/love, confused by the teachings of society.

Would you have the needed strength to direct your destiny?

Beautiful child of the universe;

I cannot help but think of you as a creative wonder, Serving as a reminder to those who question the thought of some unknown superior.

Stay sweet my child, although countless problems you will find, continue to be gentle and kind.

In your journey through life there are dangerous courses, but the goodness within you will outweigh evil forces; treasure this precious virtue from which all others started. At the end of your journey, with contentment you will recall, they were smiling then, why are they crying now?

by Selwyn Benois

Selwyn Benois is the father of Carleton student Angelique Benois.

PLACEMENT & Career Services

Check the posting boards at
the Placement Centre for
more job listings.

Programs and services of interest to undergraduates, graduating students, as well as alumni.

508 Unicentre • 788-6611
February 17, 1994

ON-CAMPUS RECRUITING

Permanent full-time positions are directed towards graduating students (available May '94). Dates, unless specified, refer to deadlines.

To find out the types of positions, how to apply and where to find more information on the companies, please contact the office.

Official Language Monitor Program

Feb. 18, Mail Direct
All Disciplines
Positions: Part-Time & Full-Time Language Monitors

T.W. Austin

Feb. 18, 12 noon
Commerce, Economics
Positions: Financial Counsellors

Andyne Computing Ltd.

Mar. 4, Mail Direct
Computer Science, Electrical Engineering, Computer Systems Engineering
Positions: Various

Cognos

Mar. 4, 12 noon
Computer Science, Electrical Eng. Comp. Systems Engineering
Positions: Software Engineer

Digital Equipment of Canada Ltd.

Mar. 4, Mail Direct
Computer Science, Engineering, Business
Position: Sales Trainee

Nortak Software Ltd.

Mar. 7, 12 noon
Computer Science, Comp. Systems Engineering, Commerce-MIS
Positions: Programmer, programmer/Analyst

Communications Security Establishment

May 1, Mail Direct
All Disciplines
Positions: Languages Related

SUMMER EMPLOYMENT

For more information on the types of positions and application procedures consult the summer job board.

City of Ottawa

Jan. 28-May 27, Mail Direct
All Disciplines
Positions: Various

The Senate of Canada East Block Tour Guide Program 1994

Feb. 18, Mail Direct
All Disciplines-Bilingual Imperative
Positions: Tour Guides

Parks of the St. Lawrence

Feb. 23, Mail Direct
All Disciplines
Positions: Various

Ontario Geological Survey

Feb. 25, Mail Direct
Geoscience
Positions: Various

Department of National Revenue Customs & Excise (Sarnia)

Feb. 28, Mail Direct
All Disciplines
Positions: Student Customs Officers

City of Gloucester

Feb. 28, Mail Direct
All Disciplines
Position: Counsellor

COSEP-Career Oriented Summer Student Employment Program

Ottawa-Hull Region Only
Feb. 28, Mail Direct
Administration, Arts, Pure Sciences, Applied Sciences, Socio-Economics
Positions: Career-Related Summer Jobs in Federal Government

Algonquin Park Visitor Services

Feb. 28, Mail Direct
Various Disciplines
Positions: Park Naturalist, Museum Technician

Canadian National Exhibition

Feb. 28, Mail Direct
All Disciplines
Position: Assistant Publicist

RA Centre *

Mar. 1, (First Deadline)
Apply in Person
All Disciplines
Positions: Camp Supervisors, Camp Counsellors, Equipment Technicians

Deep River Science Academy

Mar. 1, Mail Direct
Science, Engineering, Commerce
Positions: Tutors/Research Assistants, Administration

Canada Employment Centre for Students

Mar. 4, Mail Direct
All Disciplines
Positions: Summer Employment Officer (SEO)

Northern Telecom/Bell Northern Research

Mar. 4, 12 noon
Electrical Eng., Computer Eng., Computer Science, System Design
Positions: Various

Ottawa Carleton Wildlife Centre

Mar. 4, Mail Direct
All Disciplines
Positions: Wildlife Interns

Ontario Sports Centre

Mar. 4, Mail Direct
All Disciplines
Position: Supervisor

The Ottawa Riverboat Company

Mar. 11, Mail Direct
All Disciplines
Position: Ticket Sales Supervisor

Girl Guides of Canada-Mapleway Area

Mar. 12, Mail Direct
Positions: Various

Hamilton YWCA East End Sports School

Mar. 18, Mail Direct
All Disciplines
Positions: Instructor/Counsellor
Please note this position is in Hamilton Ontario.

Marsaryk Fellowship Program

Mar. 18, Mail Direct
Eastern European, Political Science, NPSIA, EASL
Positions: Teaching English in Czech Republic

Sandy Hill Community Centre

Mar. 31, Mail Direct
All Disciplines
Positions: Child Counsellors, Youth Counsellors

Bark Lake

ASAP, Mail Direct
All Disciplines
Positions: Area Technicians

Environmental Youth Corps

ASAP, Mail Direct
All Disciplines
Positions: Various

Student BBQ Services

ASAP, Mail Direct
All Disciplines
Position: Manager

SWAP-Student Work Abroad Program

ASAP, Mail Direct
All Disciplines
Positions: See SWAP brochure for participating countries

PAINTERS/HOME CARE

Action Window Cleaning

ASAP, Mail Direct
Positions: Area Managers

Creative Outdoor Lighting

ASAP, Mail Direct
All Disciplines
Positions: Outlet Manager

Metropro

ASAP, Mail Direct
Positions: Franchise Owner

Student Sprinkler Services

ASAP, Mail Direct
Positions: Branch Manager

Student Works Painting

ASAP, Placement Centre
Positions: Managers

Varsity Painters

ASAP, Call First

White Shark Window Cleaning

ASAP, Mail Direct
Positions: Area Managers

TREE PLANTING

Bruin Reforestation Ltd.

Changed to Feb. 18, 12 noon

TAWA Enterprises Ltd.

Apr. 1, Mail Direct

Evergreen Forestry Services

ASAP, Mail Direct

Outland/New Forest

ASAP, Mail Direct

Broland Enterprises Inc.

ASAP, Mail Direct

SUMMER CAMPS

Omagaki Wilderness Centre

Feb. 21, Mail Direct

Deka Services Association

Mar. 1, Mail Direct

The following camps are accepting applications ASAP to be mailed direct.

Camp Awakening

Camp Brebeuf

Camp MaroMac

Pripstein's Camp

Project D.A.R.E.

Ontario Camping Association

Sagitawa Christian Camps

Camp Tamakwa

Camp Walden

YMCA-YWCA of Ottawa-

Carleton

YMCA Camp Pinecrest

LODGES/RESORTS

Viamede Resort (Peterborough)

Apr. 1, Mail Direct

All Disciplines

Positions: Various

Waterton-Glacier International Peace Park/Prince of Wales Hotel (Alberta)

Apr. 29, Mail Direct

All Disciplines

Positions: Various

Aspen Village Inn (Alberta)

ASAP, Mail Direct

Positions: Various

River Run (Beachburg)

ASAP, Mail Direct

All Disciplines

Double figures good and bad

Roseway nets season high of 20 but Ravens lose 10th straight

by Jay Tharayil
Charlatan Staff

If the Carleton women's basketball season was a book, its main plot would be losing.

The Ravens' record in the Ontario Women's Interuniversity Athletic Association dropped to 0-10 after an 81-44 loss to the University of Toronto Blues Feb. 11 and an 82-40 defeat to the Queen's Golden Gaels Feb. 12.

Toronto 81 Carleton 44
Queen's 82 Carleton 40

The lone bright spot for the Ravens was the play of guard Gillian Roseway, who scored a Raven-season high of 20 points against Toronto and 16 more against Queens.

Despite raising her season average to 7.8 points per game, Roseway said she's tired of losing.

"I'm feeling frustrated. We're a young team, but still, it's tough to take not winning."

Against Toronto, the Ravens' inability to solve the Blues' full-court pressure created turnovers — an abysmal total of 38 — many leading to easy Toronto scores.

Raven head coach Marg Jones said her team's high turnover rate was partially due to the inexperience of Kaeli Yuzefowich at the point-guard position.

"We have a first-year point guard. Basketball is a game of experience, so until the experience kicks in, you have a tough time," said Jones.

Even though her team blew out Carleton, Toronto coach Michelle Belanger said the Ravens have potential.

"I've been coaching at U of T for 13

Raven guard Gillian Roseway takes a shot with three Gaels draped all over her.

years, and this is the most talented team I've seen Carleton have," said Belanger. "They have all the ingredients there. They just need a little seasoning to make them better."

Unfortunately, the Ravens were still green against Queens.

Carleton committed 21 turnovers against the Golden Gaels and didn't score until 14:40 of the first half, at which point Queen's already led 15-0.

The Ravens were never a serious threat.

Coach Jones wouldn't comment afterwards but assistant coach Stacey Kronwald said even though the team is losing, he remains positive.

"We're not building for the immediate future. We're building for next year and the years after that," said Kronwald.

Kronwald said the Ravens showed improvement this week, and he's expecting better results in the Ravens' final two games of the year against York and Ryerson Feb. 18-19.

"I think we have a good chance at winning two this weekend. If they (Carleton) play like they did this weekend, we'll match up well with them."

The Ravens had their closest games of the year with these two teams in January, losing 61-44 to Ryerson and 77-46 to York. □

Playoff hopes end with pair of losses

by Kevin Restivo
Charlatan Staff

Turn out the lights — the party's over.

The Carleton men's basketball team had its playoff hopes dashed and its losing streak extended to eight games, losing two thrillers to the University of Toronto and Queen's Feb. 11-12 by the scores of 70-65 and 88-78.

Toronto 70 Carleton 65
Queen's 88 Carleton 78

Against the Toronto Varsity Blues, the Ravens continually fought the shot clock as their poor inside game forced them to take many tough perimeter shots.

Toronto took advantage of the Ravens' tentative defensive play and poor shooting, opening up a 43-28 halftime lead.

Then, trailing by 19 early in the second half, the Ravens improved their defence and mounted a 25-4 run behind the enthusiastic play of the rarely used first-year forward Glen Lynch and the three-point shooting of ever-improving first-year swingman Reagh Vidito.

"The defence really got us going," said head coach Paul Armstrong. "It helped us hit our shots and get that run going."

The run gave the Ravens a brief 56-54 lead. From there, the two teams saw-sawed back and forth.

Unfortunately for Carleton, Vidito missed a game-tying three-pointer with five seconds left to seal the game for Toronto.

"I had a hand in my face," said a dejected Vidito, "but it felt good. I'd like to be able to shoot that one over."

In their second match against the 1-8 Queen's Golden Gaels, both Carleton and Queen's showed that despite their poor records, they were still ready to fight for a win — literally.

The game was competitive throughout, as neither team could open up a lead of more than five points throughout regulation time.

Then, with one second left on the clock, fourth-year forward Taffe Charles did his best Michael Jordan imitation, nailing a shot while falling back with two Golden Gaels draped all over him. This tied the game at 73 and forced overtime.

"I really just tried to aim for the net basically," said Charles. "I just got lucky and got a friendly roll."

Unfortunately for the Ravens, their hopes for a win and a playoff berth were officially dashed in the overtime period as the Golden Gaels dominated throughout, pulling out a 10-point win. □

Swimmers tune up at provincial meet

by Steven Vesely
Charlatan Staff

The Carleton women's swim team placed 12th among 15 universities at the Ontario Women's Interuniversity Athletic Association swim championships in Guelph Feb. 12-13.

Second-year veteran Erica Kotler posted the Ravens' best result placing second in the 200-metre breast-stroke in a time of 2:41, third in 100-metre breast-stroke in a time of 1:14.5 and fourth in the 50-metre breast-stroke in 0:34.5.

"It's pretty much what I expected," said Kotler, commenting on her results. "There's some national team members here and the competition can be pretty stiff. If you come to a meet and you're not used to the calibre of competition, it can awe you."

Brigitte Davidson also swam well, placing fifth in the 200-metre backstroke in a time of 2:25 and posting 13th-place results in the 400-metre individual medley and freestyle.

"I rested a bit," said Davidson, who tapered down in preparation for the upcoming national championships March 11-13 in Victoria.

Both Kotler and Davidson will represent Carleton at the championships because in races earlier this year, Kotler qualified in the both the 100- and 200-metre breast-stroke, while Davidson qualified in the 200-metre backstroke.

Women's coach Jitka Kotler, Erica's mother, is cautiously optimistic about their chances of top-eight finals.

"Brigitte could final this year because backstroke events are not as heavily represented," said Kotler. "Erica will have a harder time because the Quebec swimmers are very good breast-strokers. Both will likely place top 16 but it will be difficult for them to place top eight."

Last year, the women's swim team placed ninth at the OWIAA championships. Coach Kotler said she's pleased with this year's 12th-place result when considering nine of the 11 team members are newcomers. □

Olympic moments

by David Sali

Last year's sport editor emeritus Olavdör Sali was pleased to provide us with these erratic musings about the Winter Olympics.

Ah, majestic Norway. Television just doesn't do it justice, you know. What a great place to hold an Olympics...

Take the opening ceremonies last Saturday. You couldn't have asked for a better day for a parade. The landscape was blanketed with snow, the sky shimmered with indescribable shade of blue at twilight, and Olympic president Juan Antonio Samaranch looked positively radiant in the light of the television cameras.

There he was, looking very angelic in his gleaming white designer parka, issuing a plea for peace in war-torn Sarajevo, the site of the 1984 Winter Games. "Drop your guns," he urged the battling Serbs and Croats.

No word yet on a reply. Maybe there was a problem with the satellite feed to Bosnia.

Then, of course, there's those unconfirmed reports that Tonya Harding is now thinking of suing the International Olympic Committee, claiming her rights were violated because her bodyguard was not allowed any practice swings.

But I digress. One of the first nations in the parade, after the Greeks, of course, was American Samoa. Apparently they had one participant who was a bobsleighter.

All I know is, if I have a choice between training for the bobsleigh in Calgary and training in American Samoa, I know where I'm going. Mind you, I worry about skin cancer. But you do what you have to do.

I'm still trying to figure out how the U.S. marched before Canada. Last time I checked, "C" still came before "U," but not in the IOC's alphabet, I guess. My guess is CBS executives lobbied for the change so they could cut to basketball faster. What, Poland's not important any more?

It was good to see Canada's finest back in the traditional red and white after those mauve outfits they wore last time in Albertville. Listen, we're not here to be fashion plates, we're here to take home the hardware, the way it should be.

The first couple days of competition were interesting, too. I was watching the Canada-Italy hockey game and saw a vaguely familiar face on the Italian side. Then the guy scores and I find out it's Gates Orlando, formerly of the NHL, only he's now an Italian called Gateano. And, hell, all this time I thought Bill Stewart was dead.

Then, just the other day, a colleague of mine figured it all looked like so much fun he came up with a sure-fire plan to get in the '98 Winter Games in Sydney.

It's so simple, it's ingenious. Just move to some Caribbean island for a year or so, take up citizenship and become a luger. It'd be just like going on a ride at the exhibition, plus it's one of the first events, so it's all over right away and you've got two more weeks to enjoy the scenery and, er, culture.

There you go — all the status that comes with being an Olympian in return for a little effort. It'd be a sacrifice, sure, but hey, that's what the Olympics are all about, right? □

Raven Records

OWIAA VOLLEYBALL East Division

	W	L	T	F	A	PTS
York	9	1	0	28	5	18
Toronto	8	2	0	28	8	16
Ottawa	6	4	0	20	15	12
Queen's	5	5	0	16	17	10
Ryerson	1	9	0	4	27	2
Carleton	1	9	0	4	28	0

OWIAA BASKETBALL East Division

	W	L	T	F	A	PTS
Laurentn	10	0	0	801	567	20
Toronto	9	1	0	707	480	18
Ottawa	6	4	0	681	616	12
Queen's	5	4	0	614	559	10
York	3	6	0	508	592	6
Ryerson	1	9	0	492	698	2
Carleton	0	10	0	394	788	0

OWIAA Athlete of the Week

Laurentian student Nancy Sweetnam is the OWIAA athlete of the week.

Sweetnam was named swimmer of the year at the OWIAA swim championships after she won three gold medals for the Laurentian Lady Veas swim team and broke OWIAA records in the 200-metre individual medley, the 200-metre breast-stroke and the 400-metre individual medley.

OCAA BASKETBALL East Division

	W	L	T	F	A	PTS
Laurentn	9	1	0	838	774	18
Ryerson	7	3	0	851	765	14
Toronto	6	4	0	741	735	12
York	5	4	0	712	713	10
Ottawa	3	7	0	756	794	6
Queen's	2	7	0	666	731	4
Carleton	2	8	0	782	844	4

OCAA BASKETBALL East Scoring Leaders

	FG	AT	FT	AT	AVE
Beason	125	229	62	87	33.6
Charles	101	194	107	131	31.1
Smart	76	169	54	74	25.4
Swords	80	186	37	54	22.7
Fischer	78	148	47	58	20.3

OCAA BASKETBALL East Rebound Leaders

	G	RBS	AVE
T. Charles - CrI	10	121	12.1
A. Beason - Ryr	10	117	11.7
C. Fischer - Lrntn	10	87	8.7
D. Reid - Ott	10	82	8.2
C. Porter - Ott	10	81	8.1

OCAA Athlete of the Week

Alan Nolet of the McMaster Macraiders gymnastics team is the OCAA athlete of the week.

Nolet won all six events plus the all-round individual title at the OCAA gymnastics championships this past weekend in Toronto while leading McMaster to the team championship.

Club may sail away to France

by Steven Vesely
Charlatan Staff

The Carleton sailing club is launching plans to race in France this spring.

The club submitted a proposal to the Course Croisiere d'Edhec in Northern France on Feb. 12 to race in the CCE's annual sailing regatta.

As the only Canadian applicant, Carleton is specifically hoping to be selected to race in the International Whirlpool Challenge April 15-24 in Les Sables d'Olonne.

"We really want to put in intercollegiate sailing in Canada back on the map," says skipper Dave Nurse. "Other universities are in the process of organizing teams and we want them to know what's possible. Secondly, we want to represent Carleton, Ottawa and the country. That's really important."

A graduate business university in northern France, Edhec has hosted the CCE since 1968 and watched it evolve into Europe's largest student sailing regatta, attracting sailors from around the world.

The sailing club is planning on sending a seven-member crew to the regatta on a preliminary budget of $22,475, says club president Cressida Robson.

Fundraising and sponsorship efforts with companies like Air France, Anchor Yacht Sales and Beneteau Canada have already raised enough funds to cover travel costs to France.

If the club's application to the prestigious, 12-crew Whirlpool Challenge is accepted, the CCE will sponsor the Carleton entry and provide the crew with a boat and assistance while they're in France. If their application is not accepted, the club will have to arrange for a boat on their own.

"The number one obstacle is to find a suitable boat to race in France," says Nurse.

The club is currently soliciting Beneteau Canada and Beneteau USA to provide a suitable yacht for them in France. If that's not possible, the club has already tentatively reserved a Beneteau 41s5 through the Moorings' charter base in Le Crouesty, Brittany.

The club expects to have its application accepted and confirmed by mid-March.

Ryerson revenge sweet for volley Ravens

by Sarah Richards
Charlatan Staff

If the Ryerson Lady Rams volleyball team were a sweet, they'd be of the licorice All Sorts kind.

You open the bag only to discover it contains mostly stale, lousy licorice and only a few fresh, blue-speckled candies.

Aside from two blue-speckled players, Ryerson was about as lousy as it gets, losing 3-1 (15-9, 9-15, 15-13, 15-12) to the Carleton Ravens on Feb. 12.

"Basically they had two or three good hitters, and the others were so-so," said Raven middle Darlene Gallant.

It was a busy weekend for the Ravens, who also lost 3-0 (15-8, 15-5, 15-9) to the 3-0 in a Nov. 19 game and Carleton was looking for revenge.

"We knew we could beat them if we played like we could play," said middle Cheryl MacDonald.

While the first set was shaky for both sides, the Ravens pulled themselves together to take an early lead in the match by winning the first set.

After that, they were never really threatened by the Rams, who lacked experience and skill.

While Ryerson players June Charles and Tai So provided some blazing near-vertical kills, the team itself was inconsistent, fielding one player who missed three of her four serves. Incredibly, they were underhand.

"It was surprising actually," said MacDonald. "At a university level, you'd expect it at least to be an overhand serve.

The Ravens lost 3-2 to McMaster earlier this year.

Definitely a shock."

Raven coach Peter Biasone said he was fairly satisfied with the result, ranking his team's play on a scale of one to 10. He was particularly impressed with their play in the fourth set.

"At 10-10, we didn't make another mistake in the match," said Biasone. "At the moment, we seemed to pick it up. Nothing hit the floor."

Spiro Papatathanasakis, head coach of the Rams, said his team tried to capitalize on Carleton's short players by hitting the ball over their heads.

But poor setting and an improved Carleton team hampered his squad.

"I think (Carleton's) coach has done a good job. They're a lot more solid than they were when we played them because we beat them in three straight (sets)," said Papatathanasakis.

ATTENTION BROTHAS AND SISTAS!
The Carleton Caribbean Community is proud to present...
WINDSOR'S SPORTS WEEKEND
Prices for Hotel & Car
For members: $45.00 ($25 deposit) Non-members: $55.00 ($30.00 deposit)
Deposits can be made March 1-10 in Baker's Lounge. Full payment is due March 11
For reservations or information call 567-5870 or 780-3051. P.S. "Just Reach"

Meadowlands Family Health Centre
Hog's Back Plaza
888 Meadowlands Drive East
corner of Prince of Wales Dr. and Meadowlands Dr.
(behind McDonald's)
Ottawa, Ontario K2C 3R2
228-2882

Family Medicine Pediatrics
Adolescent Medicine Minor Surgery
Obstetrics and Maternity Care Counselling Services

Nous Parlons Français
Open 7 days a week With or without appointment
Weekdays 8AM to 8PM
Weekends / Holidays 10AM to 6PM

Est. 1977

DARLENE SCOLARIDES
Hair Shops...

SHAMPOO CUT & STYLE
$12
SPECIAL Requests pay extra

PERMS
$45
SPECIAL Requests pay extra

...For men and women

• 232-1763 •
248 Bank Street
BETWEEN USGAR & COOPER • PARKING ON COOPER

Raven Rumblings

QUOTE OF THE WEEK

"I've been coaching at U of T for 13 years, and this is the most talented team I've seen Carleton have. They have all the ingredients there. They just need a little seasoning to make them better."

Toronto women's basketball coach Michelle Belanger after her Blues beat Carleton 81-44 on Feb. 11.

ACADEMIC ALL-CANADIANS

Congratulations to assistant volleyball coach Marilyn Johnson, men's basketball player Luca Diaconescu, women's soccer player Sarah Richards and women's swimmer Anne Le Guen, who were named academic all-Canadians for 1992-93 at halftime during the men's basketball game against Toronto on Feb. 11. All four maintaining an 80 per cent average while playing varsity sports last year.

SPARKY SIGHTING

Robin "Sparky" Farquhar, our esteemed university president, was sighted at the Feb. 11 men's basketball game handing out the above awards at a halftime ceremony.

His wardrobe included a pin-striped suit and maroon cravat with a post-modern pattern. His glasses were tucked neatly into his breast pocket.

Sparky seemed enthusiastically comatose lounging in the bleachers as he watched the Ravens lose 70-65 to the Toronto Blues.

CORRECTION

Our apologies to men's nordic skier Scott Dymond, whose name we've been regularly misspelling as Diamond. Hey, at least we were consistent.

CALENDAR

Friday Feb. 18.

BASKETBALL — The O-10 Carleton women's basketball team is in Toronto to take on the 3-6 York Yeowomen in a 6 p.m. match. The 2-8 men's team follows with an 8 p.m. game against the 5-4 York Yeomen.

Saturday Feb. 19.

BASKETBALL — The women's basketball team ends its season tipping off against the Ryerson Lady Rams in a 6 p.m. match. The men's team also ends its season with an 8 p.m. game against the Ryerson Rams.

FENCING — The men's and women's provincial fencing championships run from 9 a.m. 'till 5 p.m. today at the Ravens' Nest.

SKIING — The men's and women's nordic ski provincial championships take place in Duntroon, Ont. Classic-style races will run today.

SWIMMING — The Ontario Universities Athletic Association swim championships begin today in Toronto. This will be the last chance the Ravens men have of qualifying for the national championships March 11-13.

Sunday Feb. 20.

FENCING — The provincial fencing championships continue all day at the Ravens' Nest.

SKIING — The men's and women's freestyle races take place today at the nordic ski provincial championships.

SWIMMING — The OUAA swim championships continue today in Toronto. □

Referendum victory just a start Hockey club still needs athletics approval

by Bill Labonte
Charlatan Staff

Last week students voted in favor of financially supporting the Carleton hockey club's entry into a college league.

The vote, 1,905 to 897 in favor of a $1 levy per full-time student means the club will receive about $19,000 from the student body to fund a team in the Ontario College Athletic Association's hockey league.

Judging from the results, it appears the hockey club had an easy time canvassing support for the Carleton University Students' Association referendum on that hockey goal.

Now the hard work begins.

— First, the club must submit an application to the OCAA by March 8 with the support of Carleton's athletics department and two other college hockey programs.

— Second, the nitty-gritty details of administration must be resolved.

— Finally, a meeting of the university's board of governors must approve the financial levy in April.

Of these obstacles, gaining the support of the athletics department will likely be the most difficult, says the hockey club's general manager Paul Correy.

Varsity hockey was cut in 1975 because of a lack of funding. Six years ago a group of alumni calling themselves the Bald Ravens revived hockey as a club team in the city's Senior R.A. League.

Since then, the alumni have made three separate proposals to the athletics director Keith Harris, trying to revive varsity hockey.

Each of these proposals has stopped at Harris's door, says CUSA finance commissioner René Faucher, who initially proposed the referendum idea to the hockey club.

"He doesn't want to pay for or be responsible for hockey," says Faucher. "Otherwise he would have found money for hockey long ago. His $4-million budget can be rearranged. Three million comes directly from student athletic fees."

Correy agrees.

and help in the coaching and administration of the team.

Athletics director Harris has not yet spoken with the club or made any decision regarding its future, but he points out administrative and financial hassles as his main concerns regarding the supervision of a team.

"We would have to delegate someone to look after hockey, someone who is already overtaxed with work," he says.

"... athletics has not been very helpful. I just hope they have a change of heart and they don't drag their feet to spite us."

Hockey club GM Paul Correy

"CUSA has supported us since 1988, but athletics has not been very helpful. I just hope they have a change of heart and they don't drag their feet to spite us."

With CUSA's assistance, the hockey club submitted a proposal to Carleton University President Robin Farquhar earlier this week asking for official support from administration, says Correy.

"Everything's sort of up in the air," he says. "That's why we're asking the president to handle it."

Officials at Algonquin College and St. Lawrence College have already told Correy they will sponsor Carleton's application.

Correy says he hopes official university support will convince the athletics department to sponsor the application

"Eventually costs increase. Even if they meet estimates with student money, there are always unexpected expenses. The hockey team will require an administrator who is full-time. What if there is an emergency? You need someone to look after things."

Correy says these obstacles can be overcome.

The Bald Ravens already raise funds of about $5,000 every year to maintain a team in the city league and would be willing to assist in administration, he says.

"We can look after some stuff like assisting in getting exhibition games and looking after recruiting," he says. "We see a limited amount of administrative work from their part." □

Charlatan Hockey Pool

Here are the point leaders in the Charlatan Hockey Pool.
Points were tabulated as of Tue. Feb. 15, 1994.
Regular season leaders can only win the dinner prize once.

BAXTER'S

1344 Bank Street
(at Riverside)
738-3323

Congratulations to Tyler Vaillant who wins this week's dinner prize. Come and pick up your $25 dinner certificate for Baxter's restaurant at The Charlatan. (Italicized names are all former winners.)

Charlatan Sports Trivia

Answer the following question correctly and become eligible to win a $25 dinner for two at Schadillac's Saloon.

How many medals did Canada win at the 1992 Winter Olympics in Albertville?

Congratulations to Todd Butler who knew George Hainsworth is the NHL goaltender who holds the record for the best ever GAA in a single season.

Answer:

Name:

Phone:

Ottawa's Meanest wings

only 25¢ each.
at

McGinnis
LANDING
Restaurant

every night after 9:00pm.

Monday: 2 for 1 beef fajitas
Tuesday: 20¢ wings
1896 Prince of Wales Dr.
723-2096
bus route 175

The Charlatan in Co-operation with these local merchants
PRESENTS

9 FABULOUS VACATION GETAWAYS

YOU PICK YOUR DESTINATION

ATLANTIC BEACH

Sheraton Atlantic Beach Resort
4 Days / 3 Nights

LAKE PLACID

Lake Placid Hilton
3 Days / 2 Nights

HILTON HEAD ISLAND

Holiday Inn
4 Days / 3 Nights

Atlantis Beauty Spa

"The place for honouring the self"

Gift Certificate For
"A DAY AT THE SPA"

Hydrotherapy • Swedish Massage • Facial • Manicure
• Pedicure • Make-up Application • Light Lunch
• Champagne (optional) • Shampoo/Blow Dry

• Esthetics • Ear & Nose Piercing • Waxing • Tanning
• Hair Extensions & Braiding • Gift Certificates For All Services

• HAIR STYLING

730-8500

1183 Bank St. (at Grove Ave.) Ample Free Parking

Bring in this ad &
receive 10% off
any service
over $25

Dance Floor
D.J. Every Night

3 Big Screens
4 TVs & Satellite

MONDAYS

Men's Nite
GREAT SPECIALS

Trip for 2 Giveaway!!
FREE POOL Noon 'till nine

THURSDAYS

Ladies' Nite
GREAT SPECIALS

Trip for 2 Giveaway!!
FREE POOL Noon 'till ten

96 George St. 562-0433

Today, I'm gonna tell her I love her a dozen times

567-2600

Glebe
831 Bank St.
5th Ave. Court

729-7878

Hampton Park Plaza
Carling and Kirkwood

Bring this coupon in before February 11 and receive a 10% discount

Wet & Wild Spas

"Ottawa's Largest Spa Rental Company"

Party Tub Rentals & Spas

Tanning, Massage Therapy & Hot Tubbing

417 Rideau Street
Ottawa, Ontario
K1N 5Y9

(613) 521-9453
(613) 789-4114

Call For Reservations

Bring in this ad for 10 1/2 hr. sessions - $40.00

GRAND CENTRAL

Monday, February 21

Rail T.E.C and Moist

Rock For The Ottawa Food Bank

141 George St. 241-2727

Oliver's

Thursday Nights

Party Nights

Pitcher Specials

Promo-Prize

Giveaways Weekly

Friday March 4

Oliver's Presents:

OLIVER'S BRINGS THE BEACH
BACK FROM FLORIDA

Come Dance On Our Sand Filled

Dance Floor

TON O'PRIZES

FREE SUNSHINE

ESCAPE THE COLD

A TOUCH OF SUN

Tanning Studios

2 Free Sessions

(an $18.00 value) with the purchase of 2 suntan sessions at regular prices. 1 per customer. Offer expires March 20, 1994.

A TOUCH OF SUN
723-0555
888 Meadowlands Dr.

A TOUCH OF SUN
238-0222
300 Slater St.

CALL US. IT'S A WARM IDEA.

Western & Aviation
Coats and Jackets.

Complete Indian Line Available

Western & Motorcycle
Boots. Boot Repair.

244 Elgin Street • Ottawa • K2P 1L9 • (613) 238-BOOT (2668)

Bring in this ad and receive a 10% discount on any purchase.

MYERS

SINCE 1943

Take a Test Drive at MYERS and be eligible to WIN one of two Vacation Packages!

Bring in This Ad and Enter to WIN!

CHECK OUT
GM'S
$750.00
CASH BACK
GRAB
PROGRAM!

Ask Mike or any one of our
Sales Consultants about our
Low Monthly Lease Payments
on CAVALIERS or GEOs!

Mike Smith
Class of 91
Sales Consultant

Draw to take place March 14/94

MYERS CHEV • OLDS • CADILLAC 1200 Baseline at Merivale

225-1260

EACH BUSINESS ON THIS PAGE WILL
BE GIVING AWAY A FREE TRIP.

Trip packages include deluxe accommodations for two adults, complimentary first morning breakfast and daily green fees for two adults when in season. Children occupying the same room as their parents stay free. Transportation is not included. All trips are fully transferable but must be used on or before February 28, 1995. To be eligible fill out an entry ballot at one of the participating merchants on or before Tuesday March 22, 1994. The winning entries will have their names published in the Thursday March 24, 1994 edition of The Charlatan. Staff members and contributors to The Charlatan for the 1993/1994 publishing year are not eligible for this promotion.

Making the most of your influences

by Arn Keeling
Charlatan Staff

Cracker, with Counting Crows
Porter Hall
Feb. 17

Strange. Weird.

These are words that come up often in conversations with and stories about Cracker.

And why not? After all, this is a band whose most popular new song from its latest CD Kerosene Hat seems to be track #69, "Eurotrash Girl," and has penned lyrics like "Sometimes I wish I were Catholic/I don't know why..."

Yet Cracker, for all of the band's irreverence and musical uniqueness, is enjoying success. Which for Cracker guitarist Johnny Hickman is, well, "weird."

"It's all a little intimidating," says Hickman. "I see Cracker as a little too weird for mass appeal."

Despite an intense touring schedule over the two years of Cracker's existence, Hickman says the band still enjoys playing live, whether it be to 100 or 1,000 people.

"Dave and I feel we've stayed pretty focused," he says.

The Dave of whom he speaks is vocalist and guitarist David Lowery of Camper van Beethoven fame and the second half of the band's Hickman/Lowery creative core. It is largely Lowery's bizarrely evocative lyrics that has given Cracker its, um, strange personality.

The other members of Cracker's current lineup, which has changed somewhat over the last two years because of the toll of extensive touring, include former Poi Dog Pondering bassist Bruce Hughes and former Pixies drummer David Lovering.

Hickman says the newer members are fitting in well with the Cracker feel and are contributing creatively to the band. But the majority of the songwriting and musical direction emanates from Lowery and Hickman.

The two grew up together in rural California and since reuniting as Cracker,

Hickman says, they have drawn on the experiences of their white-trash youth.

"We decided not to edit out any of the influences we had when we were young," he says. "Subsequently, I think we're a lot stranger than some of the so-called alternative bands."

These white-trash roots are reflected in the diversity of backgrounds found in Cracker tunes. While catchy guitar riffs and quirky lyrics are staples, Hickman says variety is the main ingredient in the Cracker musical mix.

"We're influenced from music from all over the world, but we come out with a very American sound," he says. "I like it when different people take different kinds of American music and make it their own."

Hickman brings country and folk sensibilities to the band's essentially underground sound. In fact, Hickman spent some time writing country songs and playing with the likes of Willie Nelson at Farm Aid benefit concerts.

"I didn't actually pursue country outright until a couple of years before David and I got together," says Hickman, who played punk during his California youth.

Now, as "thirty-whatevers," the fusion of country, youthful punk, and mature, bluesy rock has created a band whose appeal seems to bridge the genre gap from alternative to mainstream music.

The band's members are "thirty-whatevers" and not "thirty-somethings," says Hickman, because "thirty-somethings are people who are age-appropriate in their behavior."

This is something Cracker would not be accused of being, with a first-album anthem, "Teen Angst (What the World Needs Now)," reflecting the irreverence and cynicism of disaffected youth.

Not to mention their off-center live shows. Davey Faragher, their old bassist, was renowned for his choice in ladies' eveningwear that he wore on stage. Strange, huh?

Hickman says they also keep their shows fresh by varying their song length and order.

JAMES MCGROSTIE

Cracker guitarist Johnny Hickman, enjoying his music just a bit too much.

"We don't really have a set list," says Hickman. "It's a very spontaneous band."

The fans love it, he says, but not knowing what will happen next "drives lighting guys crazy."

With the band's growing popularity, Cracker now has the opportunity to try out other musical directions. Hickman says he and Lowery have opened a re-recording studio in Virginia called Sound of Music and are hoping to do production work for some smaller acts. He says they may also stop in at a studio to cut an EP within the next year.

Until then, says Hickman, Cracker's goal on its strange, weird musical journey is simple:

"Keep movin'."

Stupid, mindless entertainment...

by Greg Owens
Charlatan Staff

Ace Ventura: Pet Detective
Directed by Tom Shadyac

Any film that has comeos by former top heavyweight boxer Randall "Tex" Cobb and death metal band Cannibal Corpse can't be too bad.

Ace Ventura is pretty much what I expected it to be: stupid, mindless entertainment from the demented mind of Canadian comedian Jim Carrey.

The film is pretty much an hour and a half of Carrey's facial tics, jerky movements and strange noises. Carrey's Ace Ventura is not unlike his Fire Marshal Bill from television's In Living Color.

As for the plot: well, something is wrong in the state of Florida. Snowball the dolphin, the field-goal-kicking mascot for the Miami Dolphins, has been kidnapped. So Dolphins management hires pet detective extraordinaire Ace Ventura to rescue the dolphin. Ace has a special bond with animals; he's a demented Dr. Dooolittle. He uses his talent to serve and protect pets from ne'er-do-wells.

Ace Ventura borrows many references from various television shows and movies. You can bet the Mission Impossible theme has never been used like they use it here.

This is obviously a vehicle for Carrey to expand his career from television to motion pictures. Carrey has said in past interviews that he wants to move on to bigger and better things. As his television show In Living Color is becoming as unfunny as Saturday Night Live, this not a bad idea.

In this film, Carrey is oddly reminiscent of early Robin Williams, rivalling Williams's verbal patter with his machine-gun slapstick. His talking asshole routine brings the art of acting to new plateau.

The other cast members just sit back and allow Carrey to run rampant on the screen. None of the other actors have the ability to upstage Carrey. Tone Loc, Courtney Cox and Sean Young are basically filler. If you need actors to blend into the background, these three are it.

Ace Ventura is not a great film. The supporting characters and plot were all so weak, this film will probably end up on many critics' worst list, but I enjoyed it. If you like Carrey, then you will probably enjoy Ace Ventura. If you think Carrey is that unfunny white guy on In Living Color, then you should avoid Ace Ventura like the plague.

This week:

10 Ways of Getting Around Quicker Than Using OC Transpo

1. A wheelless rickshaw
2. Skating on the canal (in July)
3. A car that runs on good intentions
4. A luge
5. Yogic flying
6. A chinchilla sled team
7. Chickenback riding
8. Cartwheelin'
9. The power of love
10. Pushing an OC Transpo bus

Faster than a speeding ticket.

A speeding ticket in the U.S. can cost you hundreds of dollars. Which could be the difference between a great spring break, and no spring break. But with Western Union, you can have money sent to you from Canada to one of over 18,000 U.S. locations in minutes. So when you need money fast, call Western Union. We're just the ticket.

In the U.S. call
1-800-325-6000

WESTERN UNION | MONEY TRANSFER

In Canada call
1-800-235-0000

The fastest way to send money.™

The UnClassifieds

Replies for boxes: PICHI, SSS, PSYCH, TUTOR
Please come to 531 Uncentre for responses.

FOR SALE/RENT

Notebook 386SX25, 65MB Hard disk, 1.44 floppy, mouse, VGA Backlit LCD, carry case, battery, power pack, and internal fax 1 modem. Mint condition. $1250 or best offer. Please call Damita at 729-5597 or E-mail ea672@FreeNet.Carleton.ca

BassGuitar - Black Ibanez EX-Series - good condition, but missing one tuning peg. Comes with Heavy Metal effects pedal. Asking $350/negotiable. Call Mark at 230-9983 - evenings.

Apartment to share in the GLEBE! Close to everything. 1 bedroom to rent in 2-bedroom apt. Huge kitchen and back deck. Female grad or mature, upper-year student only. Non-smoker. $370/month, including HEAT and PARKING! Available March 1/94. Call 569-0875.

Roommate Wanted Immediately: Spacious, furnished 2-bedroom apartment in Glebe to share. At Bronson & Fifth - 5 minute walk to campus, bus at door. Mature, quiet, non-smoker only. Large closets, storage, laundry bathroom, kitchen & livingroom facilities. Shared TV and microwave. $350/month inclusive. 231-5923, leave message or box 722 Charlatan.

Room for rent in 3 bedroom house. $260 includes heat. Close to Carleton. Super cool roommates. Available immediately. Call Dan @ 236-2173.

SKIING: BEAUTIFUL CHALET for rent in the Laurentians at Mont Tremblant, 1,2,3,4 bedroom units. Fireplace. Fully equipped. Also deluxe 2-bedroom condo at Pinotau Village. Hot tub, fireplace. Fully equipped. Call 832-3947. All available off season for great get togethers.

LOST & FOUND & STOLEN

Stolen: one pair of NIKE Air Hurrache, size 11, white with red and black trim. Stolen on Tuesday Feb 15 around 1:00 pm off of the canal at Carleton. Reward for safe return. Ineed them very badly for competition and I'm not joking. No questions asked, so please call Dave at: 788-2600 ext. 1242 daytime or 224-6744 evenings.

Found: Personal alarm, outside Uncentre, approx. 3 weeks ago. Phone 236-6912. Leave name, number and identify.

WANTED / JOBS

SHORT STORY WRITERS Short stories wanted for new publication. Mystery, suspense, romance, science fiction etc. New authors & illustrators welcome. 592-2776

HELPI Die-hard Pink Floyd fan didn't know about sold-out shows! Ticket holders who have any to sell, please respond! I will pay generously. (Preferably T.O. or Montreal) Box: Crazy Diamond.

SUMMER JOBS: Pripstein's Camp (Laurentians) hiring instructors: Kayaking, Waterskiing (OWSA certified), Pottery, Beadmaking/Jewellery, Gymnastics, Swim (RC/RLSS inst. & Nationals), Canoeing, Judo (black belt), Drama (musicals), Photography, Keyboardist. Send resume 5253 Decarie #333, Montreal H3W 3C3

Earn up to $700 weekly from home! Rush SASE to Clasin, 2407A - 515 St Laurent Blvd., Ottawa, Ont K1K 3K5

SERVICES / AVAILABLE

No plans for SPRING BREAK? Why not attend a Workshop? Increase your chances of obtaining a JOB by learning effective resume writing, interviewing skills and much more. Call 596-4374 for details.

TRANSFORMING THE MIND 8:30pm. Depth psychology and meditation offering methods for reducing & preventing stress, with Kelsang Tharchin, Buddhist monk and psychologist.

INTRODUCING BUDDHIST MEDITATION 8:00pm. A course providing a basic understanding and meditative experience of the Stages of the Path to Enlightenment (Lam Rim), with Kelsang Tharchin, Buddhist monk and psychologist. NRC (National Research Council) Room 3001, 100 Sussex Drive, Ott. Suggested donation $10 per evening. ($2 students). Contact Dave: 228-8305.

George Legal Consulting Affordable Paralegal Representation in Small Claims, Summary and Provincial Offences, Landlord and Tenant, Regulatory Matters, phone 24 hours. 788-6384.

EID formal party. Hosted by Pakistan Student Association of McMaster U. All proceeds go to Kashmir Relief Fund. $22/ticket. Includes transportation to Hamilton, accommodation, dinner, live music, speaker from Kashmir Council. Saturday, March 19. For more information, call (416) 769-3685 or (613) 733-8011.

NCAA: GEORGETOWN HOYAS AT SYRACUSE ORANGEMEN, Sunday, March 6. Package includes return transportation, ticket, service charges. Adult $65, 18 and under $55. Call Marc 728-1808

JITSU. Enjoyable training which provides effective defence for men and women. Techniques suitable for law enforcement. Sun 5pm - 7pm, Wed 4pm - 6pm. Combatives Room. New members always welcome. Contact: Dery 523-1507.

Is your Fraternity, Sorority, Society or Club having a party? I'm the field representative from FBM Distillery Co. Ltd. I can provide prizes and more. Call Dan at 733-8410.

20% student discount on pet-sitting services during study week. I provide loving and reliable care for cats, birds, small animals in your own home. Cat N/Caboodle, 235-3648.

Word processing. Accurate, professional, prompt, economical. Reports, essays, term papers, transcripts, theses. Reasonable editing provided and grammar corrected free. 731-9534.

Daytona Beach from $99 - Howard Johnson Party Complex! Panama City Beach from $139 - Ocean Front Properties! Cancun Mexico from $559 - Ocean Front Hotel! Quebec City skiing from $239. BOOK NOW - SPACE LIMITED! Visa, Mastercard, American Express. Call BREAKAWAY TOURS 1-800-465-4257 (Ont. reg#2422707)

WORD PROCESSING - Fast, Accurate, Professional Word Processing. Essays, Reports, Theses, Resumes, Flyers. Laser Printer. Pick-up and Delivery is available. Call Lena: 837-0183

SPRINGBREAK '94 - Daytona or bust! Party at the world's most famous beach with Canada's only student travel company - BREAKAWAY TOURS (Reg 2422707). $209 + $60 tax for bus and hotel or U-drive for $89 + $40 tax. Call Chris 526-0776 or 584-0564.

Legal problems? Landlord-tenant matters, small claims court, provincial offences (traffic court) & summary convictions. Call Jacquard Legal Services 247-1915.

INTERNATIONAL STUDENTS: DV-1 Greencard Program. Sponsored by the U.S. Immigration Dept. Greencards provide permanent residential status. In USA. Citizens of almost all countries are allowed to take part. Students, tourists, illegals may apply - wherever they live. Chance: 1 in 14. For info & forms: New Era Legal Services, 20231 Slegg St., Canoga Park, CA 91306, USA. Tel: (818)989-4425; (818)882-9881, Monday - Sunday: 8 a.m. - 11p.m.

Essays and Theses - laser printed - $1.60 per page. Also available - resume writing, editing, writing tutoring, charts, graphics & tables. Fax & pick-up service can be arranged. Please call 721-8770.

Word Processing. Accuracy and Deadlines Guaranteed. Central Location. 233-8874.

MESSAGES/MISCELLANEOUS

Witnesses Needed: Anyone who witnessed an incident between myself and an Empire janitor on Mon., Jan. 31 around 6-6:30pm, where he assaulted me with his tunnel-cart. The intersection where the tunnel breaks off going to Academics and Administration Bldg. I was wearing a striped touque, and sparks at the time. Please, I need to support my position. I know there were 4 people who agreed to help me out! Please call 247-9637 and ask for Kfoas.

Commerce Students - The Commerce Society will be sponsoring a volleyball tournament March 18. For more info drop by 225 PA or call 788-2600 ext.2708.

We would like to thank all who voted for and supported us in the recent CUSA elections. We will continue to work hard to maintain your support in '94 & '95. Sincerely, Colin Betts & Heather Jenkins.

Attention Commerce Students. We have extended the deadline for election nominations till Thursday, Feb. 17 @ 10.00p.m. Elections will now take place on March 1 and March 3. Questions? Call 788-2600 ext. 2708.

The Commerce Society is selling tickets for the Business Banquet and gradparty in 225 Paterson.

MAN TO WOMAN

To my SECRET ADMIRER: Thanks for the rose, but who are you? Give me a clue, a sign perhaps. Do I know you? Should I? - IAN.

Youthful looking economist with a washed car, nice toenails and a big heart has a lot to offer the right girl. Seeking a tall, beautiful, leggy engineer with a crooked eyebrow and an unfaithful streak and who answers to the name Podgoy. Good communication skills and monogamy a must. Max. of one D+ on transcripts. Vida es demasiado oorta estar sini. Box Chimi

Male, 24, looking for a friend to keep company on X-country ski trails. In the get air-borne on a toboggan, to go hike in the enchanted forest of life, and still capable of pondering deeper enigmas. Box Happy.

Hi. 3rd yr student looking for some nice, slim, attractive lady friends for casual dating. Just friends for now, but who knows what can happen? I'm 26, 6'5", 213 lbs, fit and a happy go lucky guy. I have a ready smile and I'm probably the nicest guy you'll ever meet (so I've been told). So if you would like to throw the dice and take a chance on me, you won't be sorry...starting as friends. Box Dice.

Tall, dark-haired 22 yr old is looking for a female who enjoys classical music, movies and just spending time together. Reply box LOOKING 20 yr old, 5'10" with med build who enjoys all types of music and all sports, looking for an attractive woman 18-22 to have fun with. If you enjoy dancing or just sitting at home with a classic movie, reply box Classic.

Attractive, athletic, clinically insane male, 20 yrs old, seeks hyperactive woman 19-22 for a rambunctious good time. Expect the unexpected. Reply box Picky-chio.

WOMAN TO MAN

Single, attractive, 21 yr old female with warm heart and quick smile, possessing a great personality and warped sense of humour, is looking for a man interested in a relationship. He must want romances and like long walks, biking, music and pool. To be eligible he should be tall, possess a warm heart and similar interests. Box Adorable.

Just looking for love in all the wrong places

by Neil Herland
Charlatan Staff

Talking Dirty
Sock 'N' Buskin
Alumni Theatre
Feb. 9-12, Feb. 16-19

re you lovesick? Are you love hungry? Not getting any?

If you answered yes to any of these, then look no further than this latest Sock 'N' Buskin production. Just in time for Valentine's Day is this play about you-know-what.

The play follows the amorous interests of five young adults, all looking for love. In the style of Three's Company, the play draws its humor from below the belt and makes little use of the head.

The calibre of the acting varies. Jennifer Boyle as the bimbo-ish Jackie and Kirsten Endemann as the feisty Karen are of particular strength. Alan Neal in the role of David, though, looks too young to be married for eight years with three kids.

In many instances, the performers come across as young actors pretending to be older and sophisticated. There is barely a moment in the first half of the show when there isn't an actor daintily casting a wine glass in the air and speaking with a hand in their pocket, while delivering lines like "You're a great raconteur."

Director Paul Griffin has created some amusing moments, including a humorous re-creation of sex between David and Karen, à la When Harry Met Sally.

Griffin also chose to localize the play by replacing the original geographic references with Ottawa terms. Jackie, for instance, says she works at Indigo. This works for a while, but eventually the novelty wears thin and the Ottawa references become as annoying as those rock stars who patronizingly make references to local names.

The set, designed by Stacy Fietz, resembles an apartment living-room outfitted with IKEA furniture and generally serves its purpose. I had difficulty, though, with the placement of the two hallway exits, side by side. Better blocking combinations might have been achieved had the two doors been placed farther apart.

The other problem I had with the set was its color scheme. The main walls were sponge-spotted with pink pastel paint, while the trim was royal blue. The end product resembled more a Polka Dot Door set than a bachelor's apartment.

Designer Danielle Ohrt's costumes were appropriate, with the exception of David's casual wear. Consisting of an old-style grey vest and dark slacks, his outfit would have looked more appropriate on Motel the Tailor from Fiddler On the Roof than on a casually dressed '90s guy.

The play tries to end on a morally righteous note, but by drawing most of its appeal from the cheap sex jokes, it's ultimate message is somehow lost in the dirty talk.

One of the play's greatest weaknesses stems from its dated script. The play was written in the days before AIDS, in the heyday of the sexual revolution. Today this play is offensive; only yesterday it was considered cute. It was a time when gay jokes were funny, one-night stands were glamorized and women were seen as prey.

These ideas resonate in the script, and at least for me, somehow undermined the moral of the play. While the play's ending does deliver a deserving lesson to the characters, it only comes as an afterthought to almost two hours of thoughtless sexual action.

Talking Dirty is a little flaky, a bit cheesy, maybe even wishy washy. Theatre doesn't always have to be deep. Often it's just there to entertain. Depending on your idea of entertainment, this play just might tantalize your crass desires.

And remember, if Talking Dirty just isn't adequate for you and your Valentine, there's always the real thing. □

DEAN TOMLINSON

Bite may have just lost their lead singer, but their brief, aggressive set at the Pop! In the Name of Love show (Fri., Feb. 11) proved their sound hasn't suffered. Their show was highlighted by a cover of the Subhumans' classic "Slave To My Dick." Here, Bite guitarist Julie keeps an eye on her instrument while bassist Denise blisses out. □

ANDRE BELLEFLEUILLE

She's 24 and on her way up in the world... what have you done with your life?
Singer Ani DiFranco, from Buffalo, NY, at Carleton's Alumni Theatre Sun., Feb. 13 playing a mean guitar. □

TRIBE & CALLED
X PRESS
LIVE IN THE CITY
DE LA SOL
SUN MARCH 6TH
DOORS AT 8 PM
PORTER HALL
CARLETON UNIVERSITY
TICKETS $25.00 (GST INC) AT TICKETMASTER RES: 756-1111, RECORDS ON WHEELS
SHAKE RECORDS, BIRDMAN AND UNICENTRE STORE.

CUSA President Elect Richard Stanton and Finance Commissioner Elect Wendy Stewart invite any interested members of the Association to the first meeting of the newly elected CUSA Council of the 1994-1995 term. This is your opportunity to meet and address the CUSA Shadow Council which will officially be taking office as of May 1/1994.

The meeting will take place in Baker's Lounge in the Unicentre starting, at 5:30 p.m., Thursday February 17/1994.

"NOBODY PARTIES LIKE THE IRISH"

IRISH PUB & RESTAURANT

NO COVER 10¢ WINGS 15¢ SHRIMP
IMPORTED DRAFTS

LARGE PATIO DAILY SPECIALS
DART BOARDS SATELLITE TV

LIVE "IRISH" ENTERTAINMENT
EVERY WED., THURS., FRI. AND SAT. 9 P.M.

GOOD FUN GOOD FOOD GREAT BEER
67 CLARENCE STREET, BYWARD, MARKET, 562-0674

Dealing with the reality of their surroundings

by Joe Bernard
Charlatan Staff

Tool, with Failure
Porter Hall
Feb. 22

After Mötley Crüe and Guns N' Roses rose to the heights of the pop music industry, many Hollywood-based bands attempted to cash in on the attention by imitating their predecessors.

When the focus shifted to Seattle in the early nineties, so to did many of the bands.

With the emergence of gut-wrenchers Tool, the pendulum may swing back to Hollywood. Other than geography, however, this band shares little in common with the aforementioned glam rockers.

Tool's drummer, Danny Carey, while not singling out any bands in particular, has no patience for groups of this sort, describing them as "shit of the earth. Not the type of bands that even inspire people or make them think."

Tool was formed in 1990, when Carey and bassist Paul D'Amour joined guitarist Adam Jones and vocalist Maynard James Keenan. Carey explains, "I met Adam through Tom Morello of Rage (Against the Machine). And I was living beside Maynard. I never auditioned for them (Keenan and Jones). I felt kinda sorry for them, because they would invite people over to play, and they wouldn't show up, so I'd fill in."

One of the unifying forces in the band is the philosophy/religion known as Lachrymology, founded in the 1940s by Ronald P. Vincent. Lachrymology translates literally to "the study of crying." The basic tenet, evident in the band's music, is that the greatest road to advancement is through pain — emotional and physical. Hence the band's name.

"We wanted the band," says Carey, "to be a 'tool' to learn and gain from."

Although the members of Tool are all influenced by Lachrymology to varying degrees, Carey stresses, in his own laid-back manner, that the band is not a cult.

"I don't want followers," he says. "I just want people to relate to us. We want to be a catalyst for a different reaction; we don't want to be the focus. The only reason why we're all still doing this is because it's therapeutic."

Regardless, Tool is becoming the focus of a growing audience.

Various reasons account for their success, not the least of which are the band's two releases, 1992's Opiate EP, and their debut full-length disk, 1993's Undertow, which is emotional, unrelenting and raw.

What separates Tool's sound from the rest of the pack is that a naked vulnerability surfaces through the violence and aggressiveness. Their songs are the sort which reveal how precious and frightening human emotions are when stripped of any facade.

The band has also benefited from an innovative and somewhat disturbing video for the song "Sober." The biggest break the band may have received, however, was being signed to last year's Lollapalooza tour. Initially, Tool was performing on the second stage, but with the growing buzz surrounding the band, they were moved to the main stage midway through the tour.

Those wacky Tool guys.

Carey says he enjoyed the interaction with the other bands Lollapalooza provided. While he says both stages had their merits, he appreciated the fans who checked them out on the second stage, "because you know they made an effort to get there. They had to miss another act to see us — you knew you were always competing with another act."

As for Tool's seemingly growing exposure, Carey is nonchalant and not so sure of its continuance. "I expect the next album will pare down our following even more. The songs are heavier and deeper. For this one (Undertow), some people who were into Opiate didn't necessarily follow us to Undertow: guys with mustaches, driving Cameros, yelling, 'Rock and roll!'"

If the attention thrust on the band does grow to, say, Nirvana proportions, Carey expects the band to carry on. "We do our thing. Nothing's really changed for us other than the fact that we can do our music all the time now, as opposed to wasting our time giving somebody 40 hours."

The themes covered in Tool's songs may give the impression that the band members are a suicidal group of psychopaths. Not so, says Carey.

"We all have a sense of humor. We just see the world as a strange and violent place, especially living in L.A., and we try and deal with it."

Chapterhouse
Blood Music
Dedicated/Arista

Chapterhouse's latest release couldn't have been titled better.

The music is alternately pulsing and mellow. Following bands like Blur and Ride, it offers almost nothing new so far as British pop is concerned.

What Chapterhouse does have that sets them apart from their British compatriots is a strong dance rhythm and a sound that doesn't stay the same from one song to another.

"We Are The Beautiful (Spookys Ugly

As Sin Mix)" resembles techno, complete with drum machines and all, while "She's A Vision" highlights the band's classic pop.

This dance style doesn't drag down the band's sound. It simply means you might recognize one of their songs blaring from a dance-club speaker. For the fans, there are enough classic-sounding Chapterhouse tracks like "There's Still Life" and "Summer's Gone" to keep them satisfied.

You can pop this cassette or CD into your player and relax to the throbbing vibrations.

Sussana Forieri

RESIDENCE ACCOMMODATION

Residence rooms are currently available for men in their first year of studies!

If you are a full time student and would like the convenience of living on campus, please visit or call the Department of Housing and Food Services, 261 Stormont House, 788-5612.

Hey Kids!

It's The Charlatan's seventh annual Short Story and Poetry Contest! The top three winners will be published in The Charlatan's Upcoming Literary Supplement! Plus, there'll be some great prizes! There's lots to know, so here are the rules:

1. The contest is open to all Carleton University students, full and part-time, as well as Carleton University employees. However, no editorial employee of The Charlatan may submit an entry.
2. Entries MUST be postmarked or delivered to The Charlatan (Room 531 Unicentre, Carleton University, K1S 5B6) no later than 11 p.m. Sunday, March 5, 1994 in order to be eligible. Winners will be contacted by telephone.
3. There are no requirements for content, but stories and poems must be original, unpublished works. Poems and stories previously submitted or printed in The Charlatan this year may be re-submitted to the contest.
4. Submissions MUST be typewritten and double-spaced and not more than 1,500 words.
5. No pseudonyms will be accepted. All entries must include the author's name, address, telephone number and status at Carleton.
6. Entrants must agree to allow The Charlatan to publish their submissions, names and photographs.
7. Once an entry has been received, no changes to the original will be accepted.
8. Manuscripts will not be returned.
9. The judges' decision are final (judges to be announced).
10. Copyright remains with the author.

LONG DAY IN THE UNIVERSE

THURSDAY, FEBRUARY 17 TO SUNDAY, FEBRUARY 27

Thursday, February 17

At Zaphod's, local bands Schneider and Rebo are playing. Cover's only a buck.

Oliver's is having an alternative music night tonight, with loud music and Tool giveaways (stuff like tickets and CDs). No cover. Should be fun.

It may not be the concert of the decade, but it's a good one. Cracker and Counting Crows play Carleton's Porter Hall at 7 p.m. tonight. Admission is $17.50.

If you're just too cool (or poor) to go see Cracker, the Bourbon Tabernacle Choir is at the Penguin. Cover is $10.

You know, there's just too much going on tonight. Grand Central is showcasing Toronto's feel-good Rail T.E.C. and Vancouver's Moist. Sit back and take them all in. For one glorious evening, Ottawa resembles a major city.

Friday, February 18

Today's free noon-time concert in Carleton's Alumni Theatre features pianist David Piper accompanying soprano Gloria Jean Nagy.

What wonderous things come out of Peterborough. In this case, it's Robert Atyeo, a folkish type who has appeared at the Mariposa folk festival. Tonight and tomorrow he's playing Rasputin's. The fun starts both nights at 8:30 p.m. and cover's $6. Should be a blast.

At the Pit tonight it's Almonte's favorite sons Generic, with opening act Seventh Child from Carleton Place. The show starts at 7:15 p.m. It's all-ages. Cover is $5 at the door.

Saturday, February 19

Stay at home with your radio! As part of the ongoing celebration of Black History Month, CKCU (93.1 FM) is presenting Shades of Blackness from 12 p.m. until 2 a.m. Expect music, call-in shows and an examination of issues like slavery, the situation in South Africa and the Black family.

A group of folks called the Band of Confusion is playing the Sunnyside Sports Bar this evening. There's no cover. And that's all we know.

Les Ballets Jazz de Montreal, a dance troupe that mixes classical ballet and modern dance, performs at the highly priced Centrepointe Theatre at 8 p.m. this evening. Tickets are $29.50 and $22.50.

Pigfarm, featuring ex-members of the Doughboys and the Lost Dakotas, play yet another show in Ottawa. Tonight they're at the Pit.

Sunday, February 20

Cool band Redd Kross, who opened for the Doughboys back in October, play the Penguin tonight. Local punk types Resin Scraper open the show, which starts at 9 p.m. Tickets are a very reasonable $9.50 through the Penguin, Ticketmaster and the usual independent outlets.

Thira, a Winnipeg-based chamber music sextet, plays the Museum of Nature (You know, the castle museum... ed.) at 8 p.m. Tickets are $8 for students and seniors, $10 for adults and they're available at the door.

Monday, February 21

The curiously titled Reading Week begins. In the spirit of Reading Week, Charlatan production manager Kevin McKay suggests you read a book. His suggestion? Animal Farm, by George Orwell. Says McKay, "I know you read it in Grade 11, but it's well worth a re-reading." Yeah, like you don't have anything better to do.

If you don't feel like reading Animal Farm, head down to Montreal. That's where the Wonder Stuff, those wacky Brits, are playing. They're at Club Soda at 8:30 p.m. this evening. Opening for them is Chapterhouse. Tickets are $12.50.

In the mood for something ultra-violent? A Clockwork Orange is playing at the Bytowne this evening at 9:15 p.m. Did you know it's banned in England?

Some of the finest Canadian cinema ever produced is showing tonight at the Mayfair, starting at 7 p.m. Of course, we speak of Roadkill and Highway 61.

Tuesday, February 22

Tool. Porter Hall. 8 p.m. Opening act, California's Failure. $14 in advance, $16 at the door. Read the story, page 22.

Wednesday, February 23

One of the most boring and pointless films in recent memory, The Double Life of Veronique, is playing this evening at 7 p.m. at the Bytowne. I don't know, it's won some awards, maybe you'll like it.

The Old Sod Society presents the Irish band Four Men and A Dog, who combine traditional Irish music with jazz, R & B and country influences. They're playing at the Notre Dame High School at 8:30 p.m. Tickets are $14 for members of the Old Sod Society and $16 for everyone else.

Thursday, February 24

More stuff for Black History Month! Starting at 7 p.m. tonight at the Bytowne, there are two Canadian documentaries: Zarico, a film about the music of Black francophone culture from southwestern Louisiana; and Oliver Jones in Africa, which features the Canadian jazz pianist in concert in Nigeria.

Brother Cane plays the Penguin tonight at 9 p.m. Tickets are $10 in advance, $13 at the door. What do they sound like? Well, they opened for Robert Plant, if that helps any.

And, once again, at the Mayfair at 7:05 p.m., it's the Rocky Horror Picture Show.

Fresh from their success at the megafabulous Pop! In the Name of Love festival, Ewen Todd's Ratboy and Wandering Lucy are playing Zaphod's tonight. Since it's a Thursday show, cover is a mere dollar.

Friday, February 25

This week's Charlatan snack tip is a simple one: Toasted Marshmallows™. Get a marshmallow and a pointy stick. Start a fire with your Psych text. Put marshmallow on end of stick and roast it (the marshmallow, not the stick), being careful not to torch it. Serves one.

Saturday, February 26

As part of Black History Month, Black History Ottawa is having its Annual Dinner and Dance in Room 200, West Block, Parliament Hill. On the evening's agenda: a lecture on the Black family by MP Jean Augustine, dancers, cocktails, dinner and dancing (of course). Tickets for the dance are $7 at the door. Tickets for the whole event are $40 for adults, $75 for couples and $25 for us starving students. For more info, call Maxine Ifill at 241-0669.

Sunday, February 27

What better way to wind up Reading Week than with a lecture entitled Sunken Ships of Bikini Atoll: Archaeology of the Atomic Bomb by maritime historian James P. Delgado. It's being held at 2 p.m. in the theatre of the Canadian Museum of Civilization. Admission is $5 for students and seniors, $7 for everyone else.

If underwater stuff isn't your cup of tea, chances are you'll be at Dianne Ferguson's organ concert at the Chapel of the Bruyère Convent at the corner of Bruyère and Sussex. Tickets are $8 for students and seniors and $12 for everyone else.

If you have an event you want to appear in this handy calendar, you can drop your announcement off at The Charlatan, Room 531 Unicentre during regular business hours or you can fax us at 788-4051. Announcements must be in by the Friday before publication.

Have a good break.

The Charlatan will not be publishing during reading week, however, our office will still be open. Our next issue will be coming out March 3, 1994.

CUSA INC.

Publications Co-ordinator
(contract position - unionized)
Carleton University Students' Association

Terms of employment: April 1, 1994 - March 31, 1995; 35 hours per week (8:30 a.m. - 4:30 p.m.); $10.50 per hour plus four percent vacation pay; Supervisor: Administrative Director, CUSA Inc.

Responsibilities include: the production of camera-ready artwork, by deadline, for CUSA publications and promotional material when required, including but not limited to: Student Handbook, Housing Guide, Orientation posters, pamphlets and office material for CUSA areas (i.e. business cards, forms).

Qualifications: applicants should be familiar with Macintosh hardware and have a thorough knowledge of Pagemaker, Freehand, and Microsoft Word. The ideal candidate should also possess some layout and paste-up experience.

Letters of application, resumes, and samples of work should be addressed to: Linda Stewart, Administrative Director, Carleton University Students' Association Inc., 401 University Centre, 1125 Colonel By Drive, Ottawa, Ontario K1S 5B6.

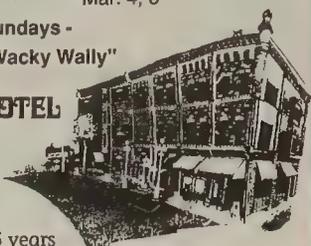

No telephone inquiries please. Selected applicants will be contacted and interviews will take place the week of March 21, 1994. Closing date for receipt of applications: Friday, March 4, 1994 at 4:00 p.m. Carleton University is an equal opportunity employer.

Join us for Great Food, Refreshment and Entertainment
 4 Large Screen TV's
 TSN and Satellite Dish for the best in sports
 Breakfast Menu served Saturday and Sunday til 4 pm
 Saturday and Tuesday - Wing Nights
 Live Entertainment Friday, Saturday and Sundays
 No Cover

White Wyne	Feb. 18, 19
Dayton & Eric	Feb. 25, 26
Once Again	Mar. 4, 6
Wednesdays and Sundays - Karaoke with "Wacky Wally"

SOMERSET HOUSE HOTEL

In the heart of the city for 95 years
 A great, inexpensive spot for visiting friends
 352 Somerset St. W., at Bank
 Telephone 233-7762

APPLE SADDLERY
 The Largest Western Boot Store in Canada.
 INNES ROAD JUST EAST OF THE 417 (NEAR THE PRICE CLUB)

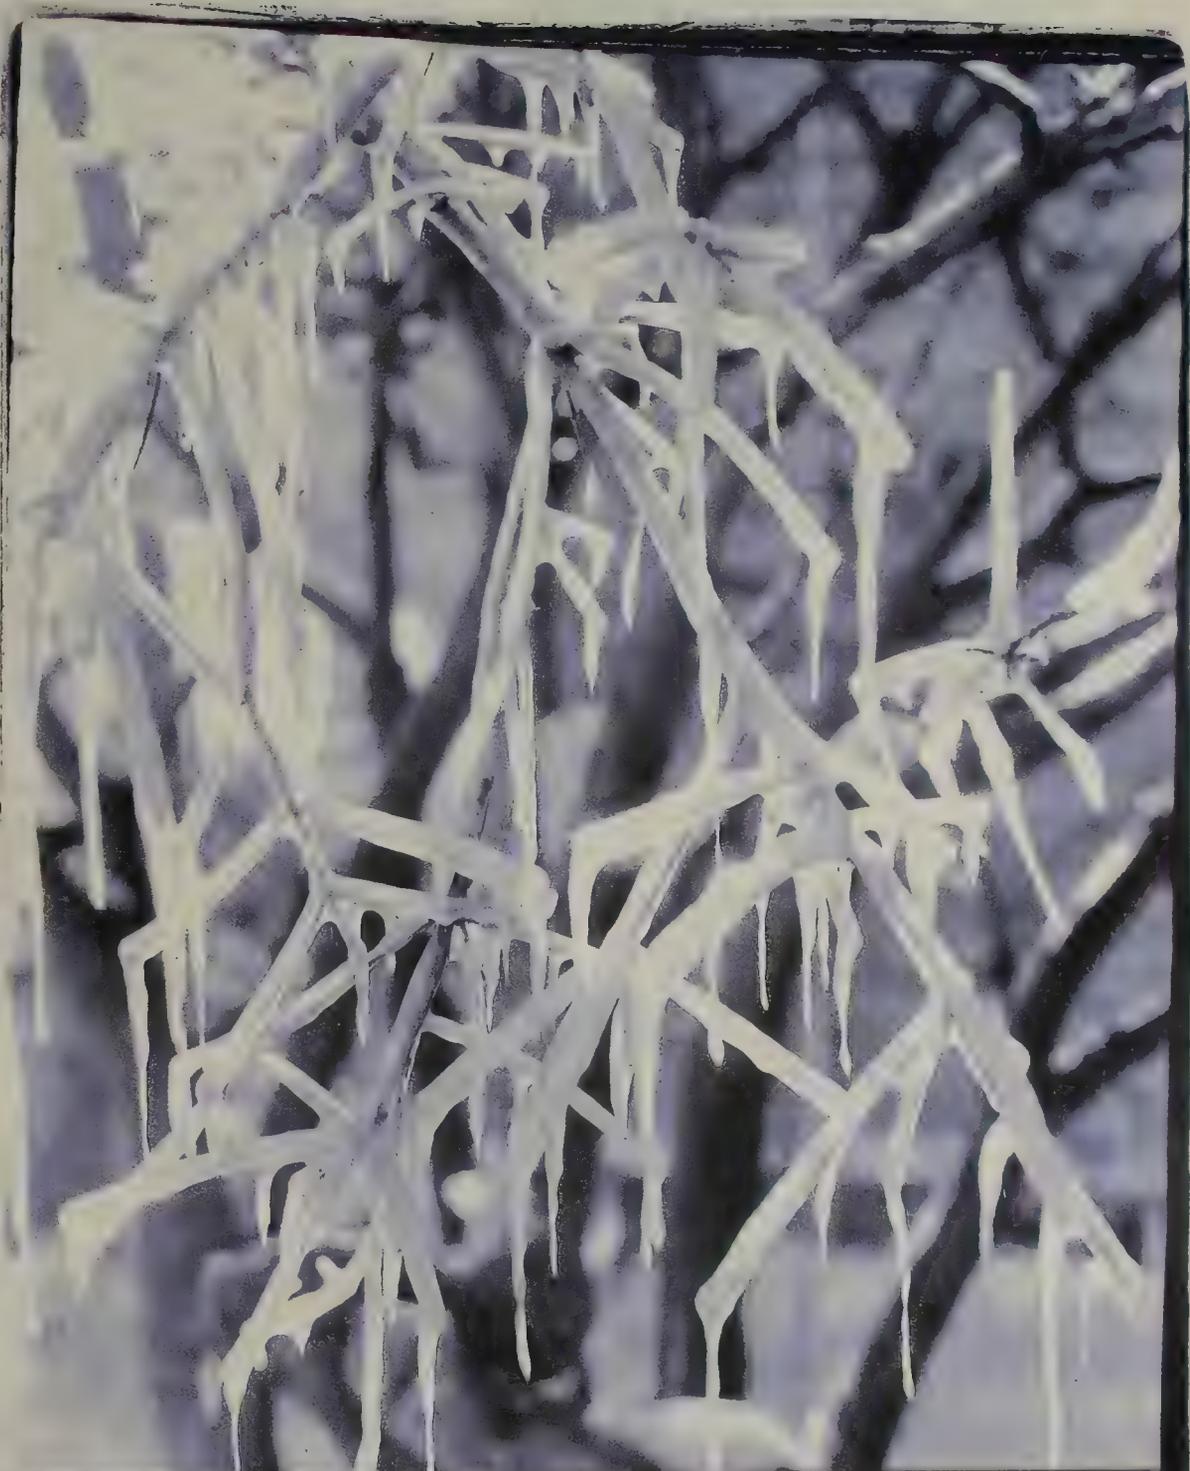

FREE POOL
 12pm to 5pm DAILY
 FULL Lunch Menu
 D.J. Every Night
 4 T.V.'S & 3 Big Screens

96 George Street in the Byward Market
562-0433

STUDENT NIGHTS
 Tuesdays & Wednesdays

BEVERAGE
99¢
 DRAUGHT
Specials

t h e
CHARLATAN

CARLETON'S INDEPENDENT STUDENT NEWSPAPER

VOLUME 23

ISSUE 24

MARCH 3

1994

3 FOR 1 OR
50% OFF

*Preston
Optical*

444 Preston St.
(2 BLOCKS FROM DOWS LAKE PAVILION)
230-0477

EYEWEAR SALE

Buy any pair of prescription glasses at regular price and receive a second pair of glasses of equal or lesser value plus a pair of daily wear soft contact lenses absolutely FREE!!!

Combination of 2 or 3 prescriptions. May be used with friends or family members for the 3 for 1 sale.

FRAMES AND LENSES

Buy one pair of prescription glasses and receive 50% OFF on both your frame and lenses

Bring in this ad for an extra 10% OFF

DRIVERS

TAKE OR OFFER
A RIDE!

PASSENGERS

MONTREAL $10*

QUEBEC $29

TORONTO $24

SHERBROOKE $25

VANCOUVER, FLORIDA & OTHERS...

- *PRICES PER PASSENGER
- $6 FOR MEMBERSHIP
- 15 OFFICES
- I.D. REQUIRED

238 DALHOUSIE
562-8248

ALLO STOP

TORONTO 323-0874 — MONTREAL 985-3032

OFF CAMPUS

Custom Clothing

Clearance Sale
NOW ON

Custom Printing, Embroidery & Applique on T-Shirts, Caps, Sweats, Fleece & Jackets
Specializing in university & college styles including the "Greek Community"

Att. Res Students!

Take advantage of our clearance on white shirts and order your floor shirts now

371 Dalhousie St.
tel 562-4833 fax 562-4834

SCHADILLAC

SALOON

Ottawa's Only
Authentic
Western Saloon

Beverage Specials from Monday to Wednesday

TONIGHT

Thurs. Mar. 3

"Lucky Ron"

No Cover

Classic Rock and Roll
Every Night

Come see us down
in the Byward Market
105 Murray St.
241-2233

HOME OF THE SOUTH END BLUES

TUCSON
ROADHOUSE

Mar. 3
Jack Dekeyzer

CD Release Party

COMING UP

Mar. 10/11/12
The Bird

Mar. 17/18/19
Tony D.

2440 Bank Street (Bank at Huntclub) Ottawa
For Entertainment information call 738-7586

Tucson's
West

Mar. 3
Mighty Popo

COMING UP

Mar. 4/5
Wang Dang Doodle

Mar. 8
Radio Kings

1541 Merivale Road, Ottawa
For Entertainment information call 228-6666

GRAND
CENTRAL

"The Mother of All Pizzas"

141 George St. 241-2727

SATURDAY & SUNDAY
Brunch 10AM to 3PM

Over 100 items to choose from $8.99

+taxes

introducing
STEAK

Dinner

Includes
baked potato or fries,
regular salad &
garlic bread

$5.99
+taxes

EVENTS

Wednesday, March 2nd: Trooper
Wednesday, March 16th: Colin James
Thursday, March 17th: Spirit of the West

ZAPHOD

FOR FUN & FROLIC

THURS. MAR 3 (9PM) $1

THE INBREDS
WITH ELECTRIC EMBRYO

WHAT THE FK IT'S ONLY A BUCK

FRI. MAR 4 (9PM) $5

WILD
STRAWBERRIES

+ Nothingheads

SAT. MAR 5 (8PM) $5

benefit
FRIENDS OF THE EARTH
LES AMIS DE LA TERRE

STONE SOUL PICNIC •
SUZIE VINNICK •
KUT DIAMOND

WED. MAR 9 (9PM) $5

CHUO fm PRESENTS
HIGH KINGS

70 PARTS

BINGO JET
INTERNATIONAL

9PM TUESDAYS

MUSIC • BEVERAGES • ADVENTURE

27 YORK ST.

SCHADILLAC RANCH

BOULET

99 Clarence St.
562-1320

TA vote brings strike closer

by Ryan Nakashima
Charlatan Staff

Teaching, research assistants and sessional lecturers voted to give their union local the option to strike after March 10 if the final round of negotiations with the university on March 7 fail.

Of the 780 members who voted Feb. 15-17, 478 voted yes and 298 voted no, with four spoiled ballots. There are about 1,200 teaching and research assistants and student sessional lecturers in the union local.

If the members vote to reject the university's final proposals at a March 10 general meeting, they could strike.

The effect of a strike on the university could be "drastic," says Michel Roy, president of the Canadian Union of Public Employees Local 2323.

"Tutorial groups will not be offered. Courses with sessional lecturers will not be offered," says Roy. "Marking, supervising of laboratories will not be done. And generally speaking, with a picket line at the entrances to the university, it will be time-consuming to get on campus."

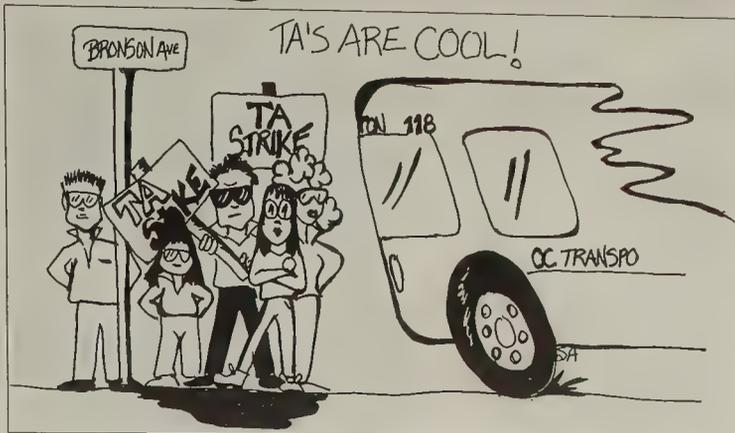

A strike would include teaching assistants, research assistants and sessional lecturers in every faculty.

Because more than 60 per cent of members who voted favored a strike, all members of the of the bargaining unit must strike by law.

Sessional lecturers and research assistants who are not students are not included.

Roy says the issue is tuition. "A wage freeze must be accompanied by a tuition freeze," he says.

Roy says at a conciliation meeting in January the "university wouldn't discuss anything that was most important to us." He says the local made concessions on monetary proposals, such as getting dental, vision and child-care benefits for members.

David Van Dine, the head of the university's negotiating team, was hesitant to say if the university was able to move on its position on increased wages or benefits.

"We are constrained with the financial situation and what the government is doing. The university is in a tight financial situation. Within that context, we're certainly going to try our best to get an agreement," says Van Dine.

Van Dine says the university is willing to negotiate on issues such as holding mid-term meetings with teaching and research assistants to discuss their work-

Both parties will enter mediation March 7 and present proposals. A mediator from the Ontario Ministry of Labor will attempt to expand the common ground between the two dissenting proposals and come to a settlement.

"This time negotiators will continue the mediation process for as long as it takes to reach a settlement," says Van Dine. "If necessary, it will go on into the night."

"What we need to see primarily is a move on tuition," Roy says. "(Our) negotiating team is willing . . . to modify and compromise . . . but we need to see movement. That is, and has always been, the bottom line."

Roy says he doesn't expect a long mediation session if the university's position remains the same.

But some teaching and research assistants are pessimistic about the chance for a settlement.

"I don't think they want to give in on this one. I think the administration is going to basically table the same position that they did before," says Wilson Lee, a masters research assistant in journalism.

"If it's the same, I would vote not to ratify it and go on strike."

Edward Osei-Kawbwo, a sessional lecturer in political science, says he's happy the teaching and research assistants and sessionals voted to strike. He says no one is happy to leave their students and classes. "Students will lose. No one is happy about walking out on them."

Osei-Kawbwo says the "university has to talk to us in good faith."

He says university officials have been saying they don't want to talk about giving more money to union members, but that they are considering tuition increases at the same time.

Rob Telka, an undergraduate computer science teaching assistant who voted not to strike, is not optimistic that the university will budge in its position. He warned of the damaging effects a strike would have on the university.

"It's going to hurt a lot of the university as a whole. It depends a lot on the TAs. And it's going to bring the computer science school to a halt." □

Prof warns students they might lose year

by Brent Dowdall
Charlatan Staff

A Carleton professor told his first-year class March 1 that a teaching assistants' strike might cause students in his class or other classes to not get their final grades or their credits.

Philosophy professor Marvin Glass says he was trying to inform the students in his first-year Contemporary Moral, Ethical and Religious Issues class that a strike would probably affect them. He says he wasn't trying to scare students.

"Most students hadn't heard about it and they thought it wouldn't affect them," he says. "I was just trying to inform them."

Negotiations for a new contract between the university and the union local representing Carleton's teaching, research assistants and sessional lecturers broke off in January. The local voted in February to strike after March 10, pending a vote on a final offer from the university.

Gabriella Papic, a first-year psychology student in the class, says she and many of her classmates are concerned about losing their credits.

"Everyone was upset with the fact that they could lose their year," she says. "Will I get my credit? That's all I care about, but no one seems to know."

The Ontario Labor Relations Act prevents employers from bringing in any workers who are not already employed by the university to do the job of a striking worker.

David Van Dine, the head of the university's negotiating team, says the university will "make every effort to ensure that courses are concluded."

Van Dine says there is nothing in the terms of the labor relations act to prevent professors from doing the work of a teaching assistant.

But he wouldn't guarantee that students would get final marks or courses would be completed by the end of the term.

Glass says his class does not have a final exam, but there is a mark for participation in TA groups worth about 30 to 35 per cent of the final mark.

He says even if he is allowed to take over the teaching of TA groups by Ontario labor law, he can't be in two places at once. Some of his TA groups run simultaneously.

Glass says the possibility of changing the method of grading the course would require unanimous consent by all stu-

PROFESSOR cont. on pg. 6.

Hate stickers litter campus

by Tanya Workman
Charlatan Staff

Stickers advocating white supremacy and hatred toward gays, people of color and Jewish people were found posted across campus Feb. 20 after 12 a.m.

The stickers featured slogans like "AIDS kills fags dead," "End World Hunger - Nuke Somalia" and "Smash the ZOG (Zionist Occupied Government)."

"That sort of hatred on campus is very scary," says Peter Nogalo, co-ordinator of the Gay, Lesbian and Bisexual Centre. "It shows that hate groups are in Ottawa and perhaps even on campus."

The department of university safety was alerted and members of the Carleton Foot Patrol, who found the stickers, took them down.

Len Boudreault, assistant director of university safety, says security officers and employees from buildings and grounds services also took stickers down after they received one complaint. There have been no complaints since.

Foot Patrol co-ordinator Brenda Kennedy says it appears the stickers were put up rather quickly, between 11:30 p.m. and midnight that evening. She is able to pinpoint the time because a CKCU employee found a sticker on the door upon returning to the station half an hour after leaving.

Kennedy says the stickers were found on Malcolm X and Pink Triangle posters. They were also found in the tunnels, Porter Hall, the Herzberg Building and on the office doors of OPIRG, CKCU, CUSA, The Charlatan and the Gay, Lesbian and Bisexual Centre.

"It was obviously well-organized," says Kennedy. "They knew the spots to hit on campus . . . and they did it in a sweep in half an hour." □

on the cover

Spring thaw? Tell that to this ice-encrusted tree found by our ice-encrusted photo guy over the reading break. Suitably artsy photo, n'est-ce pas?

arts	33
First Nations supplement	15
national	9
news	3
opinion	13
sports	29
unclassifieds	12

index

Money: the way to climb CUSA ladder

Electoral system is "one dollar, one vote"

by Brent Dowdall and Andrea Smith
Charlatan Staff

That elections for the Carleton University Students' Association are elitist, cut-throat contests should come as no shock to anyone.

Last month's CUSA election probably rammed this realization home, as many people have begun talking about the need for reforming the electoral system.

Like starving piranhas in a bathtub, candidates engage in an electoral feeding frenzy for the biggest chunk of the CUSA cash cow, where democracy and fairness are often for losers.

Sean Copeland has had a long history of piranha management. Aside from being CUSA's former vice-president community relations, publications officer and council chair between 1989 and 1993, he managed the winning presidential campaigns from 1990 to 1993.

Copeland says while the CUSA constitution stipulates a spending limit of $150 for posters, banners and other election materials, most of the winning candidates spent about 10 times that amount.

The chief electoral officer appraises the value of a candidate's posters based on size, number of colors used and the quality of paper. Each type of poster is given an arbitrary value, no matter what it really costs.

For president and finance commissioner, each candidate is permitted $50 worth of posters to be stamped and put up around campus. Fifty dollars is permitted for pamphlets and $50 for other materials. The candidates are reimbursed half of their expenses within their spending limits after the election.

Copeland says the elections favor candidates with the most money. He says this happens within the provisions of CUSA's electoral code under the supervision of the chief electoral officer, the person who is supposed to ensure fairness in the election process.

"I think the CEOs have always known that the spending has been hundreds of dollars over the limit," Copeland says. "But as long as your activities fit within the constraints of the fake budget numbers they give you, as long as you manage to play the game as it's been set up, then it gives the illusion of everybody having the same amount of cash. That's what the CEOs want."

But according to CUSA finance commissioner René Faucher, Copeland is just upset because he wasn't invited back this year to give the election orientation workshop, which he has done in past years and received a consulting fee. Copeland says that's not why he's upset.

Faucher says the election system works the way it is.

"Critics of the system would say 'well, you're not reflecting the actual cost of running a campaign, but on the other hand, there's no way you ever will, says Faucher. "That way we control the amount that everyone puts out and that's what they're doing. You really have no other alternative."

But this year's candidates disagree. "The system is supposed to be one person, one vote, but it's one dollar, one vote," says Pierre Leduc, an arts and social sciences councillor-elect.

"I think it's completely out of hand," he says. "I think it's disgusting that people would spend that kind of money and I wish people would realize that they're

Pity those poor trees.

CHRIS NUTTALL/SMITH

"It's an investment in a $22,000 position," he says.

Even current CUSA President Lucy Watson admits she spent $500 on her campaign last year. Despite Watson's candid estimate, Copeland, who printed her posters, says he didn't charge Watson for the time the presses were running or the layout and design work.

Copeland says he did it to "establish goodwill" with CUSA. He estimates that if he had charged Watson for the printing cost, it would have cost $1,000 more.

Kristine Haselsteiner, chief electoral officer in 1991-92 and now vice-president external, says the system doesn't work and is "very elitist." She says candidates can essentially buy the election. "Only if you have a lot of money can you run for president and finance commissioner," says Haselsteiner. "With president and FC candidates those who want to win are going into the really artistic, alluring, grabbing-type poster."

Haselsteiner says the CEO doesn't take into account the cost of a poster's design, while the difference in cost between professionally designed and printed posters and home-made, photocopied posters is enormous.

For example, she says, the CEO doesn't discriminate between a professionally painted banner which may cost as much as $150 and one painted by candidates or their supporters, although the visual impact is obvious. According to the CUSA elections code, they are equivalent.

Haselsteiner says $1,500 is a probable amount candidates spend on their campaigns, adding the winning presidential candidates in recent years had extremely flashy posters.

This year's CEO James Rilett says to control campaign spending he looked into making all of the candidates use the same graphics services, such as the CUSA graphic services, but decided it would be unfair.

"There's always a certain amount of trust in something like this," says Rilett. "If somebody's determined enough, no matter how strict you make the rules, just being manipulated by these fancy, flashy posters."

Board of governor's rep Todd McAllister says he spent a frugal $250, president-elect Richard Stanton says he coughed up $500, Brenda Kennedy weighs in at a paltry $800 and finance commissioner hopeful Rob Jamieson spent a futile $1,200.

Rob Kisieleski dropped out of race for finance commissioner three days into the campaign, saying the expense was too great. He says he spent $350 on posters in the first three days and was "sunk" by their poor quality.

"I expected an expense of $400 maximum," he says. "Nothing as ridiculous as $800, $1,000, $1,200."

Former presidential candidate Mike Tattersall says he spent $450 in 1992 and $950 in 1993.

Ottawa's
Meanest
wings

only 25¢ each.
at

McGinnis
LANDING
Restaurant

every night after 9:00pm.

Monday: 2 for 1 beef fajitas
Tuesday: 20¢ wings
1896 Prince of Wales Dr.
723-2096
bus route 175

German Expressionism in the Sixties.

Anti-establishment. Experimental. Apt words to describe The Second Heimat. Join us for this epic 26-hour, 13-part journey through a turbulent decade, as seen through the eyes of German director Edgar Reitz. Presented by Jan Rubes. Cable 2 in most areas.

The Second Heimat. tvo Starting March 3 at 9 p.m.
TELEVISION that MATTERS.

ELECTION cont'd on pg. 6

Students nix zero tolerance

by Jill Mahoney
Charlatan Staff

A tremendous furore has erupted over the provincial government's attempt to introduce a policy framework on harassment and discrimination for Ontario's universities and colleges.

The Charlatan asked students for their opinions on the zero tolerance policy. Although many students said they weren't completely familiar with the policy framework, they answered the following question after a brief explanation:

"Do you think the zero tolerance policy is necessary to help eliminate harassment and discrimination in the classroom?"

I guess with zero tolerance, you take the excitement out of the classroom. Really, when you get right down to it, people have to be free to express their opinions. I'm not saying the teachers should have free reign to say what they want, but there should be some mid-point between the two.

Wayne Sproule, Psychology III

I think in engineering there's already a strict policy. I haven't ever been offended by anything anyone has said. If it's going to be a policy (the government's) going to promote, I think it's a good idea because people have to be told specifically.

Sarah Cosgrove, Engineering II

I think it's a little too much, I really do. I still think from what I've heard that it's really not all that necessary. A lot of professors are trying to be politically correct.

Veep Mistry, Engineering II

PHOTOS BY MARK LAMB

Accessible parking spaces to be built in spring at athletics

by Ryan Nakashima
Charlatan Staff

Two disabled parking spots lost after the construction of the new day-care centre near the athletics building won't be replaced until spring, says Phil Gore, Carleton's assistant director of ancillaries for administrative services.

Two new disabled parking spaces on the Bronson Avenue side of the athletics building will replace the two disabled spots.

The area used for the two spots is now occupied by 16 spots reserved for the day care centre, built earlier this year.

Gore says another two spaces with parking meters or for service vehicles may also be built.

Raven Road, which leads to athletics around the soccer field, may be widened to make space for the new spots, he says, adding it's not yet clear how wide it would have to be. Any construction for the new spots will have to wait until spring when there's noice on the ground, Gore says. Plans and cost estimates have yet to be finished.

Until the spots are replaced, those with disabled parking passes will have to use Parking Lot 5 between athletics and Bronson Avenue. This is further away from the accessible tunnel entrance to the athletics building, says Dean Mellway, the co-ordinator of physical disability programs for the Paul Menton Centre. Mellway says he supports the plan.

Athletics director Keith Harris says although the proposed new spaces are a step in the right direction, it's too bad a solution for the rest of the winter could not be found.

"If there's a snowstorm, it makes it

New day-care is reason for less accessible parking.

JOANNE CAPLANI

difficult even for able-bodied people (to get to athletics from either parking lot)."

Margot Henderson, co-ordinator of the day-care centre, says a traffic study by the university and another by the centre showed 16 spots were necessary for access to the centre.

She says this number of spots is the minimum required for parents coming to pick up or drop off the centre's 57 toddlers — without causing a waiting line for parking lot traffic. □

Portraits now
Bayshore The Official

Graduation Photographer for
Carleton University
Student Association, Inc. 1993/94

Why
PORTRAITS NOW?

- No Sitting Fee on Campus!
- Previews Back Next Day!
- Choice of Backgrounds!
- Satisfaction Guaranteed!

ATTENTION 1993/94 GRADUATES

Portraits Now - Bayshore has been chosen by CUSA Inc. as the Official Photographer for Carleton University 1993/1994 Graduates.

DON'T MISS OUT! Make your appointment to get your Graduation Portraits from Portraits Now - Bayshore by calling 596-1501 or visit our studio across from Porter Hall.

2nd Semester Session starts February 28, 1994
across from Porter Hall

Portraits now Bayshore 596-1501
100 Bayshore Dr., Nepean Ont., K2B 8C1

APPLE SADDLERY
The Largest Western Boot Store in Canada.
INNES ROAD JUST EAST OF THE 417 (NEAR THE PRICE CLUB)

Why is the Oasis cafeteria serving Pizza Hut pizza?

by Ryan Ward
Charlatan Staff

Marriott Food Services, the sole provider of food in residence, has negotiated an agreement with Pizza Hut.

"The contract allows Marriott Food Services to serve Pizza Hut pizza in any of its establishments," says Oasis general manager Laurie McGoldrick.

Jim Johnston, assistant director of Carleton's department of housing and food services, says he believes there is a market for pizza sales in the Oasis cafeteria.

Bert Grimard, director of Marriott Food Services, says an agreement was reached in September to begin pizza sales Feb. 6.

Pizza Hut and Marriott do not set the prices on the pizza in the Oasis.

"We do not have a franchise licence to set prices," says Grimard, adding it is up to the university to determine prices.

Housing and food services decides all food and beverage prices and pays Marriott Foods and Capital Foods a fee to provide their services.

"The university incurs all costs including vandalism and destruction of utensils and pays the companies for their services," Johnston says.

According to Johnston, the profit from the pizza sales and any other money generated from Marriott Foods and Capital Foods goes back into the university.

The process to bring any food company on campus besides Marriott or Capital Foods has to take place through negotiations with housing and food services.

Last year, René Faucher, finance commissioner of the Carleton University Student's Association, tried to get Domino's Pizza in Oliver's Pub, but failed.

Johnston says CUSA is supposed to negotiate with housing and foods to bring an organization like Domino's on to campus and that Faucher never did this.

"CUSA is out of their jurisdiction trying to bring Domino's on campus (themselves)," says Johnston. "It is like The Charlatan negotiating a deal for administration. It just doesn't happen."

Faucher was out of town and could not be reached for comment. □

ELECTION cont'd from pg. 4

they can always find loopholes."

But Haselsteiner says a model for election reform could be found at the University of Ottawa. She says the presidential candidates there have to provide the receipts as to how they spend the $300 in real dollars within their allotted campaign budget.

"It might be a system to look at because they haven't become nearly as competitive as we are. The style of posters are very simplistic," says Haselsteiner, adding that ideally posters should be "completely outlawed."

"I don't think we have to waste that much paper," she says.

She also says Elections Carleton should start working in real dollars "because really that's what individuals are paying."

Christina Craft, president of the Wilfrid Laurier Student Union in 1992-93, agrees that it's a waste. Now a master of journalism student at Carleton, Craft says she has never seen campaigns as extravagant as those in this year's CUSA election.

"I spent $80 to $100," she says. "I was disgusted by the color separation posters. It's a waste of money. It's a rich man's game here," she says. □

With files from Blayne Haggart

PROFESSOR cont'd from pg. 3

dents in the course.

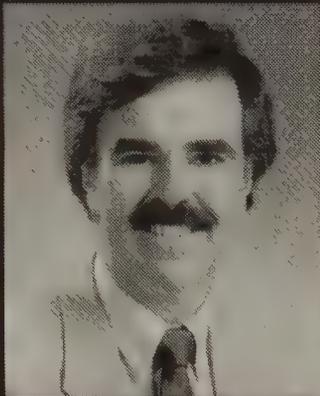

Papic says she's angry that no one seems to know how a strike will affect their course.

She says Glass "wanted us to get off our butts and find out what's going on."

She says she contacted the Carleton University Students' Association office, the office of the Canadian Union of Public Employees Local 2323, and university president Robin Farquhar's office to find out how a strike would affect her, without much success.

Glass says he doubts many other professors have made similar announcements to their class, but he thinks they should. □

EXPECT MORE FROM YOUR MORNING

CBO Morning

With John Lacharity
Weekdays 6 to 9 am

Every morning radio show gives you weather, traffic and sports. But if you expect more - more thought, more insight, more information - you'll find it on CBO Morning.

CBC  Radio 91.5

GO PUBLIC.

Dollars for Scholars

Last year, the CMHC Scholarship Program attracted 172 applicants and awarded 27 new scholarships. Those are pretty good odds: about one in six.

Since its inception in 1947, the program has given out almost $27.3 million to 2,495 Canadian students. The current annual maximum is $14,154 per student.

Like most scholarship programs, the one administered by Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation (CMHC) looks for top students. More specifically, CMHC scholarships are given only to full-time Canadian students working on a university Master's degree related to housing.

The possibilities for graduate studies in housing are much broader than one might initially think. Awards go to students in such varied disciplines as engineering, environment, business and public administration, social and behavioural science, architecture, economics, law, planning, and history.

Leslie Coates, who in 1993 completed her Master's degree in Landscape Architecture at the University of Guelph, was one of 25 winners in the 1992 competition. She says, "Winning a CMHC scholarship allowed me to expand the scope of what I could do. It gives you a tremendous sense of confidence." The extra time to make contacts in the housing industry afforded by the CMHC scholarship has paid off for Leslie. Her thesis received positive comments in a Globe and Mail column and spawned a lengthier recent article in a widely read journal published by the Canadian Urban Institute.

Ms. Coates was "very impressed" with the aims of the CMHC Scholarship Program. "It's Canada's primary source of financial support for the training of professionals in housing and community planning. It's definitely needed."

If you or someone you know would like to apply for a CMHC scholarship, forms can be picked up now at either the Graduate Studies or Student Awards office. But hurry. Students must submit completed applications to the university they wish to attend by March 25, 1994.

Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation awards scholarships of up to $14,154 for graduate studies in housing.

Canada

FREE FREE FREE

Income Tax Seminar & Consultations

SEMINAR

Tues., March 15, 2:00 pm - 4:30 pm

Room 424 Unicentre

given by Dr. Ann Clarke-Okah, School of Business

Seminar will be video taped for viewing:

March 16 - 18 at 1:00 pm

International Student Centre, Room 302 Unicentre

INDIVIDUAL CONSULTATION

Please register in advance at the Mature & Part-time Students' Lounge, Room 314 Unicentre, phone ext. 2754. Consultations are in Room 507 Unicentre

Consultations are available in 20-minute time slots, from:

Mon, March 21	10:00 to 17:00
Tues, March 22	13:00 to 21:00
Wed, March 23	10:00 to 14:00
Thurs, March 24	13:00 to 19:00
Fri, March 25	10:00 to 15:00

Sponsored by the Graduate Students' Association, the Mature & Part-time Students' Centre, the International Students' Centre, and the School of Business.

GSA ELECTIONS

Thursday, March 10 & Friday, March 11

Election of GSA President, VP Internal, VP Finance, VP External & grad reps on Board of Governors and Senate

Polling Stations

will be located at:

- 1. Mike's Place
(2nd Level Unicentre)
10:00 am - 8:00 pm
- 2. Renfrew Residence
(1st floor tunnel junction)
11:00 - 2:00 pm
- 3. Loeb Building
(2nd floor tunnel junction) noon - 4:00 pm

All Candidates' Meetings

Monday, March 7 7:30 pm

Mike's Place

Wednesday, March 9 7:30 pm

Renfrew Residence

Do You Want Dental Insurance?

Make your view known!!!

DENTAL REFERENDUM

✓ VOTE ✓

You could Win one of five $1,000 grand prizes

IN THE
Kraft Dinner*
CAMPUS CONNECTION
Recipe Contest.

CALL 1-800-26-KRAFT

AND

To save time while studying I make my delicious "Speedy Tuna Dinner". While the KD's cooking I put 1 cup of frozen peas in a colander. Then I put the boiling water from the noodles over the peas to thaw. Add in 1 can of tuna, the peas & some Italian seasonings to your KD and voila! Try it with new White Cheddar too!

Ima Keener - Noodle U

GIVE a recipe!
You might be a grand prize winner!

"The first 300 qualifying recipe entrants will receive a FREE case of New KRAFT* White Cheddar Macaroni & Cheese!"

There will be one winner selected for each of these 5 categories:

1. Best Mealtime Recipe
2. Best Snacktime Recipe
3. Best Recipe (by an individual)
4. Best Recipe (by a group)
5. "Healthiest" Recipe

Remember, delicious, easy-to-make recipes and creative recordings get extra marks!

5. Each of the first 300 eligible entrants will receive 1 case (24 packages) of KRAFT White Cheddar Macaroni & Cheese with an approximate retail value of $24.00. One grand prize of $1,000 will be awarded for the best recipe selected in each of the 5 categories.
6. Selected recipe entrants and winners of the early bird prizes will be required to sign a standard declaration and release form to confirm compliance with the official rules and regulations, and

Joe Kool - Cheddar College

Making "Jamin' Joe's Chili Beef Dinner" takes no time. I cook 1/2 lb. of ground beef in a frying pan and add it to a pot of KD along with 1 cup of stewed tomatoes and 1 tsp chili powder. The hotter the better! Try that new Kraft Cheese & Tomato flavour for extra tomato taste!

RULES and Regs

1. To enter and qualify for this contest call the KRAFT DINNER "Campus Connection" Recipe Contest hotline at 1-800-26-KRAFT and record your recipe. Include your name, address and telephone number and identify the category in which you are entering (see below). If your entry is in the group category include names of all individuals (max 5) to share equally in distribution of any prize money.
2. In order to be eligible for judging, recipes must use a KRAFT Macaroni & Cheese product as the main ingredient. Recipes previously published by Kraft General Foods Canada Inc (KGFC) or other recognized sources will be disqualified.
3. No purchase is necessary. Enter as often as you wish, but entries must be received no later than March 31, 1994, the CONTEST CLOSING DATE. Only one recipe per telephone call will be accepted. A recipe may be entered only into one category. Subsequent entry of the same recipe in another category will not be considered.
4. From all eligible entries received on or before the CONTEST CLOSING DATE, 20 recipes from each category will be selected at random by an independent selection organization on April 5, 1994. These selected recipes will be evaluated by the KRAFT Kitchens who will select 1 (one) best recipe in each of 5 categories: Best Mealtime Recipe, Best Snacktime Recipe, Best Recipe by an individual, Best Recipe by a group and "Healthiest" recipe.

acceptance of the prize as awarded. This contest is only open to residents of Canada who are currently enrolled in a recognized Canadian university, college or other post-secondary educational institution. Employees of KGFC, its affiliated companies, advertising and promotional agencies, and the independent judging organization, and all persons residing in their respective households, are ineligible.

7. All decisions of the judges are final. The chances of winning will depend on the number of eligible entries and the quality of recipes received. This contest is subject to all applicable federal, provincial and municipal laws. Only one grand prize per person or group will be awarded.
8. All recorded entries become the property of KGFC, 95 Mainfield Drive, Don Mills, Ontario, M3B 3L6, and no correspondence will be entered into except with the selected finalists who will be notified by mail or telephone. By entering this contest, entrants consent to the use of photographs and/or recipes, without compensation, in future publicity and/or publication carried out by KGFC in connection with this contest.
9. KGFC, with the consent of the Régie des alcools, des courses et des jeux (Québec), reserves the right to cancel or suspend this contest in the event of any printing or administrative error. Quebec residents may submit any litigation respecting the conduct of this contest and the awarding of any prizes to the Régie des alcools, des courses et des jeux.

CALL and GET a recipe!
Listen to what other students are making with KRAFT DINNER!
1-800-26-KRAFT

*Registered Trade-mark of Kraft General Foods Canada Inc.

Liberals' first budget freezes funds and squeezes students

BUDGET cont'd from page 9.

Hunt.

He says the provincial government had every intention of raising tuition before the federal budget was ever released and that by doing so, they are contradicting fundamental party policies.

Gillis says the problem of higher tuition fees will be felt not only in Ontario, but across the entire country.

"It (the federal budget) is going to mean the spiral of tuition fees is going to continue," says Gillis. "We see the quality of education being attacked."

The budget did not address the future of the Canada Student Loans program. The maximum weekly allowance of $105 has not increased since 1984, despite the rising cost of living and increasing tuition fees.

MP Chris Axworthy, NDP critic for training and youth, says the federal budget poses grave dangers for the future of post-secondary education.

"I think it's incredibly short-sighted," says Axworthy. "It won't improve the situation."

Axworthy says problems facing post-secondary education cannot be solved without more funding to the provinces. He says barriers such as student unemployment, inadequate loan programs and tuition hikes are making Canada's colleges and universities less accessible.

"Students are being squeezed three different ways," says Axworthy.

Gillis says the new federal government has missed an opportunity to show

it is serious about the future of Canadian education.

He says the CFS will participate in social security reform talks being held this year by the Ministry of Human Resources Development, where the problems of education funding and student loans will be addressed.

"You can be sure that we will be actively participating in the social policy review to remind the government that accessibility to post-secondary education has to be a greater priority." □

Ching Suen, Ph.D.
Professor of
Computer Science

Didier Guillevic
Ph.D student in Computer
Science

"My professor's computer will decipher the biggest puzzle of all. Your doctor's handwriting."

Think about it. A computer programme that can read handwriting using human thinking patterns. It is the brainchild of Dr. Ching Suen, founder and director of Concordia's Centre for Pattern Recognition and Machine Intelligence (a member of the IRIS Group, one of Canada's 15 Networks of Centres of Excellence). This breakthrough is the result of what Dr. Suen describes as "close cooperation within one of the most sophisticated research teams in the world." Recipient of more than $2.5 million in grants, including $1.3 million from Bell, Dr. Suen also wins praise from students like Didier Guillevic, a native of Brittany, who says: "I learned of Dr. Suen's work while completing my Master's in France, Germany and England. He was widely recognized as the leading authority in his field. That's why I chose Concordia for my Doctorate."

And there are other valid reasons Concordia is the right university for so many people: more than 160 undergraduate and graduate programmes with strong reputations in business studies, communications, psychology, fine arts and engineering; a college system offering a personalized approach to education; a friendly atmosphere with professors who are known for their accessibility; a remarkable choice of programmes on a full- and part-time basis; and two campuses with a student body truly representative of Montréal's diverse population.

When you consider that Concordia is also known for being in touch with the real world, you can be assured that what you learn here will go far out there.

1455 de Maisonneuve Blvd. W.
Montreal

Real education for the real world

Graduate programmes offered at Concordia:

- Accountancy
- Administration
- Adult Education
- Advanced Music Performance
- Applied Linguistics
- Aerospace
- Art Education
- Art History
- Art Therapy
- Biology
- Building Studies
- Bus. Administration (Airline & Aviation) (Executive MBA)
- Chemistry
- Child Study
- Civil Engineering
- Communication
- Computer Science
- Economics
- Ecotoxicology
- Educational Studies
- Educ. Technology
- Elect. & Computer Eng.
- English
- History
- Humanities
- Instit. Admin.
- Instruct. Tech.
- Journalism
- Judaic Studies
- Mathematics
- Stats & Actuality
- Mech. Eng.
- Philosophy
- Physics
- Psychology
- Public Policy & Public Admin.
- Religion
- Sociology
- Sports Admin.
- Studio Arts
- Teaching of Math.
- Theology, Rel. & Phil. Studies
- Traduction

For information, please call (514) 848-3800.

or write to:
School of Graduate Studies
Concordia University
1455 de Maisonneuve Blvd.
West, Montréal (Quebec)
H3G 1M8

So you think you'll get a job this summer. . .

by Brandie Weikle
Charlatan Staff

Students will have to be organized and creative in their search for summertime work this year, says Ian Miller, coordinator of Carleton's Placement and Career Services.

The state of the economy is bound to create "a tight market for students again this summer" when it comes to finding employment, says Miller.

The youth unemployment rate has been rising for the past three summers, according to statistics compiled by the Ontario Liberal Party. About 20 per cent of students were without work last summer, two per cent worse than the previous year.

Doug Drew, an analyst for Statistics Canada, says although the unemployment rate has increased over the past few summers, there is no real way of telling in advance what the rate will be for this summer.

However, says Drew, this January, 13.8 per cent of students seeking work were unemployed. This is up from last January, when the unemployment rate was 12.6 per cent.

Miller made a few suggestions for surviving the competition for a job.

"Students should be doing everything they can to get an edge as soon as possible. That means getting a decent resume together (and) developing a network of people to allow them to make the contacts they need," says Miller.

Some places students can seek summer employment are:

1. PLACEMENT AND CAREER SERVICES

Carleton students and graduates can make use of the placement centre on the fifth floor of the Unicentre. The centre serves mostly undergraduate students looking for some way to fund their next year of university, says Miller.

He says the centre posts job listings of all kinds, part-time and full-time. But the centre only carries listings from employers that contact the centre.

Available jobs range from sales posiguages.

2. EMPLOYMENT AGENCIES

Placement agencies also refer people to jobs, says Miller. People seeking work apply to the agency, which is paid by an employer to hire and pay workers.

Miller says it is important first to make a good impression on the agency because they will hire out the people they feel have a strong work ethic.

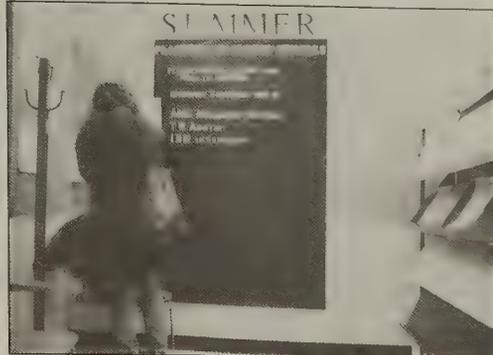

Big companies go to employment agencies to save themselves the hassle of searching for employees, says Miller. The placements are mostly temporary, ranging from a few days to a few years, but agencies will try to provide contracts for workers that agencies find reliable.

Today's Temporary is an agency that primarily hires out to government departments. Employee Roxane Fournier says the jobs the agency assigns can be as short as a day or as long as four years.

Fournier says the length of assignments depends on the contract but also the skills. Today's Temporary generally seeks bilingual employees.

Handyman is an agency which hires workers out to do jobs like moving, construction, working in warehouses, flagging and loading, says Rene Trudel, who dispatches workers to jobs.

The job prospects this summer may be as bleak as ever.

tions to child-care, office jobs to general labor and recreation jobs like camp counsellors and directors.

Full-time jobs window-cleaning, tree-planting and camp-counselling posted in the office for outnumber those for career-related jobs. There are, however, a large number of part-time jobs for academics in the fields of science, math and engineering, for research and tutoring positions.

Students wishing to make their jobs searches easier in the future should consider picking up a French course next year. Many positions in the Ottawa area require bilingualism or competent knowledge of both French and English lan-

They have a lot of jobs for students in the summertime, says Trudel. Although he would not name the companies he hires to, he says they are mostly construction, moving and road-building companies.

Trudel says usually at the end of each month all the workers at the agency are hired out.

3. CITY OF OTTAWA

A booklet listing all jobs for the City of Ottawa is available at city hall at 111 Sussex Dr.

Jobs range from office clerks to engineering assistants, says Mike Seguin, a recruitment program officer for the city.

Last summer, the city hired just over 700 people, which was less than the previous summer when they employed 810 summer workers, says Seguin.

The city hires students for various positions like landscaping, camp-directing, counselling and life-guarding.

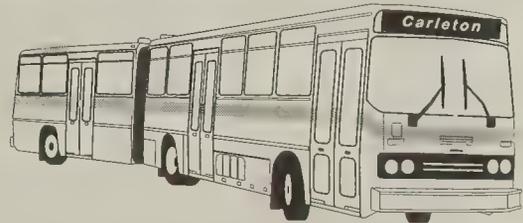

For those looking for more career-specific experience, the city sponsors a co-operative program for work periods of three to six months, says Seguin.

These jobs are very specific and geared to what students are studying in their program, he says. Some examples of fields that have co-operative placements with the city are environmental studies, computers, economic development and accounting.

Students do not apply directly to the city for this kind of work, says Seguin. Instead, work terms are set up through the school. Information may be obtained at the university faculties or posted at universities' placement centres, says Seguin.

Most deadlines have passed for recreational jobs like camp-counselling, but there will be deadlines for other city jobs throughout March. □

INVITATION TO FACULTY, STAFF AND STUDENTS

YOUR BUS SERVICE TODAY

OC Transpo planners are reviewing bus service on campus in preparation for recommendations they will be making to the Ottawa-Carleton Regional Transit Commission in May.

If you have any observations, ideas or suggestions to improve bus service to campus, please call our special answering machine at 741-6903, send us a fax at 741-7359 by March 15 or drop off your written comments to Christine Haselsteiner at the CUSA office.

OC Transpo planners will be at a special meeting hosted by OC Transpo Commissioner Jim Watson, at 2:00 p.m. on March 8, in Unicentre Room 424.

Some 100 extra daily bus trips serve Carleton University campus this academic year as a result of consultations with students and the administration.

Extra buses were added to relieve crowding on route 7, route 118 service was increased and extended to weekends and peak only, route 19 began to serve the campus. Combined, these routes provide 363 trips on a weekday.

All day route 4 and peak period routes 41, 44 and 46 continue to travel along Bronson Avenue. To detour route 4 into the campus would mean bringing 1,600 people out of their way daily and would cost up to $300,000 annually.

OC Transpo

Hey Kids!

You've only a few more days to enter The Charlatan's seventh annual Short Story and Poetry Contest! The top three winners will be published in The Charlatan's Upcoming Literary Supplement! Plus, there'll be some great prizes, which will be announced next week! There's lots to know, so here are the rules:

1. The contest is open to all Carleton University students, full and part-time, as well as Carleton University employees. However, no editorial employee of The Charlatan may submit an entry.
2. Entries MUST be postmarked or delivered to The Charlatan (Room 531 Unicentre, Carleton University, K1S 5B6) no later than 11 p.m. Sunday, March 6, 1994 in order to be eligible. Winners will be contacted by telephone.
3. There are no requirements for content, but stories and poems must be original, unpublished works. Poems and stories previously submitted or printed in The Charlatan this year may be re-submitted to the contest.
4. Submissions MUST be typewritten and double-spaced and not more than 1,500 words.
5. No pseudonyms will be accepted. All entries must include the author's name, address, telephone number and status at Carleton.
6. Entrants must agree to allow The Charlatan to publish their submissions, names and photographs.
7. Once an entry has been received, no changes to the original will be accepted.
8. Manuscripts will not be returned.
9. The judges' decision are final (judges to be announced next issue).
10. Copyright remains with the author.

Remember, the deadline is 11 p.m., Sunday, March 6, so get those submissions in! (Just slide them under the door if there's nobody home.)

The UnClassifieds

Replies in STRUCK, PACHI, ADORABLE, SSS, DICE, please come to 531 Unicentre for responses.

FOR SALE/RENT

Roommate Wanted Immediately: Spacious, furnished 2-bedroom apartment in Glebe to share. At Bronson & Fifth - 5 minute walk to campus, bus at door. Mature, quiet, non-smoker only. Large closets, storage, laundry in building. Carpeted, unfurnished bedroom. Shared bathroom, kitchen & livingroom facilities. Use of TV and microwave. $350/month inclusive. 231-5923, leave message or box 722 Charlatan.

LOST & FOUND & STOLEN

Found on Feb. 16/94 in 2nd floor Loeb men's room: 1 political science 47.100C brown binder and textbook "Carleton Politics in Canada". Pre-publication package. Contact Trevor at 238-6783.

Stolen: one pair of NIKE Air Huarache, size 11, white with red and black trim. Stolen on Tuesday Feb 15 around 1:00 pm off of the canal at Carleton. Reward for safe return. I need them very badly for competition and I'm not joking. No questions asked, so please call Dave at 788-2600 ext. 1242 daytime or 224-6744 evenings.

Found: Personal alarm, outside Unicentre. Phone 236-6912. Leave name, number and identity.

Want a chance to win $1,000? Why not enter the KRAFT Dinner recipe contest? Call 1-800-26-KRAFT for details or see the full page ad appearing in this newspaper!

WANTED / JOBS

Can't see the forest because there are no trees? Greenpeace is looking for activists to educate & fundraise on environmental & peace issues. Mon.-Fri. 2-10 pm. $220. wk + bonus. Call Lisa 562-1004.

WANTED - Tutor for graduate record exam (GRA) particularly math logic & quantitative sections. Reply ASAP. Exam date April 9/94. Call 741-1853.

ARGH HELP! I want to rent an apartment in Ottawa South/Sunnyside area. Do you have one or know of one to rent? Jennifer, 565-0391.

Painters & crew chiefs needed for summer work. Experience pref. but not necessary. All work is for Toronto area. Call Alex 521-5062.

HELP! Die-hard Pink Floyd fan didn't know about sold-out shows! Ticket holders who have any to sell, please respond! I will pay generously. (Preferably T.O. or Montreal) Box: Crazy Diamond.

SUMMER JOBS: Pripstein's Camp (Laurentians) hiring instructors: Kayaking, Waterskiing (OWSA certified), Pottery, Beadmaking/Jewellery, Gymnastics, Canoeing, Judo (black belt), Drama (musicals), Photography, Keyboardist. Send resume 5253 Decarie #333, Montreal H3W 3C3.

Earn up to $700 weekly from home! Rush SASE to Asian, 2407A - 515 St Laurent Blvd., Ottawa, Ont K1K 3X5

SERVICES / AVAILABLE

Studied for an A...got a D? Join one of the many study skills workshops offered by Counselling and Student Life Services. For more information call 788-8600.

McMaster's Pakistani S.A. hosting dinner party/music/speaker night on March 19. Tickets $10.00, rides will be arranged & free accommodation. Proceeds go to Kashmir Relief. P.S.A. from other universities also attending. For more info call 733-8011.

INCREASE ENERGY / BURN FAT - What if there was a product that...does all this plus: reduces cravings, reshapes your body, promotes the growth of muscle tissue. For free info call 235-1542.

VANCOUVER - $200 each. One way by recognized airline - 256-0717.

Sign up now for the four week Essay Writing and Exam Preparation Workshop. It starts Monday March 7 from 6:00 to 8:00 pm. Limited space available. Call Counselling and Student Life Services at 788-8600.

TRANSFORMING THE MIND 6:30pm. Depth psychology and meditation offering methods for reducing & preventing stress, with Kelsang Tharchin, Buddhist monk and psychologist.

INTRODUCING BUDDHIST MEDITATION 8:00pm. A course providing a basic understanding and meditative experience of the Stages of the Path to Enlightenment (Lam Rim), with Kelsang Tharchin, Buddhist monk and psychologist. NRC (National Research Council) Room 3001, 100 Sussex Drive, Ott. Suggested donation $10 per evening. ($2 students). Contact Dave: 228-8305.

Goudga Legal Consulting Affordable Paralegal Representation in Small Claims, Summary and Provincial Offences, Landlord and Tenant, Regulatory Matters, phone 24 hours, 786-6384.

EID formal party. Hosted by Pakistan Student Association of McMaster U. All proceeds go to Kashmir Relief Fund. $22/ticket. Includes transportation to Hamilton, accommodation, dinner, live music, speaker from Kashmir Hotel. Saturday, March 19. For more information, call (416) 789-3585 or (613) 733-8011.

JITSU. Enjoyable training which provides effective defence for men and women. Techniques suitable for law enforcement. Sun 5pm - 7pm, Wed 4pm - 6pm. Combatives Room. New members always welcome. Contact: Dery 523-1507.

Word processing. Accurate, professional, prompt, economical. Reports, essays, term papers, transcripts, theses. Reasonable editing provided and grammar corrected free. 731-9534.

Daytona Beach from $99 - Howard Johnson Party Complex! Panama City Beach from $139 - Ocean Front Properties! Cancun Mexico from $559 - Ocean Front Hotel! Quebec City skiing from $239. BOOK NOW - SPACE LIMITED!! Visa, Mastercard, American Express. Call BREAKAWAY TOURS 1-800-465-4257 (Ont. reg#2422707)

Legal problems? Landlord-tenant matters, small claims court, provincial offences (traffic court) & summary convictions. Call Jacquard Legal Services 247-1915.

Essays and Theses - laser printed - $1.60 per page. Also available - resume writing, editing, writing tutoring, charts, graphics & tables. Fax & pick-up service can be arranged. Please call 721-8770.

Word Processing. Accuracy and Deadlines Guaranteed. Central Location. 233-8874.

MESSAGES/MISCELLANEOUS

Andro Casbo if you are still at Carleton please call 738-8391 (family friend).

Witnesses Needed: Anyone who witnessed an incident between myself and an Empire janitor on Mon., Jan. 31 around 6-8:30 pm, where he assaulted me with his tunnel-cart. The intersection where the tunnel breaks off going to Academics and Administration Bldg. I was wearing a striped toque, and a parka at the time. Please, I need to support my position. I know there were 4 people who agreed to help me out! Please call 247-9637 and ask for KAOs.

Commerce Students - The Commerce Society will be sponsoring a volleyball tournament March 18. For more info drop by 225 PA or call 788-2600 ext.2708.

MAN TO WOMAN

If you look Robin Williams, Eddie VanHalen, a vampire, Eric Clapton, and a Victorian gentleman and mused them all together into one man...you would find someone much like me. Sound intriguing? Reply Box Ladyhawk 192 P.J.L: We "me" the three of you between 6:30 & 7:30 pm on Feb 27, on Hwy 16. If you want to meet formally pls reply Box Windowsurfer & Co.

To my SECRET ADMIRER: Thanks for the rose, but who are you? Give me a clue, a sign perhaps. Do I know you? Should I? - IAN.

Male, 24, looking for a friend to keep company on X-country ski trails, to get air-borne on a toboggan, to go hike in the enchanted forest of life, and still capable of pondering deeper enigmas. Box Happy.

Hi. 3rd yr student looking for some nice, slim, attractive lady friends for casual dating. Just friends for now, but who knows what can happen? I'm 26, 6'5", 213 lbs, fit and a happy go lucky guy. I have a ready smile and I'm probably the nicest guy you'll ever meet (so I've been told). So if you would like to throw the dice and take a chance on me, you won't be sorry...starting as friends. Box Dice.

WOMAN TO MAN

To Tim, in my 18.334 ITV class your smile is irresistible. Meet me for coffee. Respond to Box Say Yes.

Desperately searching for Gavin and Jeff from Premier Pool and Spa in Miss. I've heard sooooo much about you. Just trying to meet you!!!! Box Whatever.

The Charlatan assumes no liability for the content or reply to any unclassified advertisement. The advertiser assumes complete liability for the content of, and all replies to, any advertisement and for any claims made against the Charlatan as a result thereof. The advertiser agrees to indemnify and hold this publication, Charlatan Publication Inc. and its employees harmless for all costs, expenses, liabilities and damages resulting from the publication placed by the advertiser, its agents, or any reply to such advertisement. The Charlatan reserves the right to revise, restrict or cancel any advertisement or change the category in which the ad is placed.

Nothing to fear from rats that hide in the night

To the snivelling rodents who put homophobic and racist stickers up on campus on Feb. 20 -- well, you have what you wanted from your little ploy -- publicity.

But you have also shown your fear by your actions. Of course, any demonstration of hatred like this is scary. That there are racist and homophobic people in society and at Carleton is not a surprise.

As a white woman, I cannot say what it would be like for a gay, lesbian, or bisexual person or a person of color to see material like this. But I know it scares me that not only do people in the Carleton community still think like this, but they are also willing to act on their beliefs.

This is not the first time such activity has gone on at Carleton.

For example, in January a "Challenge homophobia" poster on the students' association window was spit on. It pictured two men kissing.

Last year, complaints were made about homophobic graffiti scratched into the walls of the bathroom stalls of a men's washroom in the Uniceentre. Apparently some of it had been there for over a year without being painted over.

When given these examples and the many others there are of racist and homophobic action at Carleton, I find it easy to fall into despair that there is no hope of a society that is truly equitable for every person.

However, I refuse to give into this despair or give into the rats who try to play on it. Yes, there is much that is wrong with society and it is taking much too long for it to change.

Changes need to be made on so many levels. For example, reforming the institutions that perpetuate systemic racism and homophobia, like universities where Western thought is privileged, or a justice system that fails to recognize the rights of same-sex couples. The hardest change to make will be in people's minds.

There are changes being made, no matter how tenaciously the rats insist on clinging to irrational beliefs.

I grew up in a Catholic household and attended Catholic high school, where I was taught the contradictory lesson that "Homosexuals are born that way, but they aren't supposed to have sex because it's not natural and they can't get married." I know that I have had my belief system challenged and changed totally at Carleton, both through the people I know and the classes I take.

This shows that Carleton can foster an atmosphere for the individual that promotes questioning and reforming the status quo, but as shown by the sticker incident, it isn't doing it well enough or fast enough.

So beware rats, change is happening. You will never have the chance to wield the same hateful power your ancestors did. It may take a long time before systemic racism and homophobia are rooted out of our institutions, but it has started happening.

There will be a lot of hurt, pain and struggle before this fundamental change in society is complete, but it is getting closer.

Crawl back into your holes, rats. Your day is done. SK

MICHEL ROY, CUPE 2323 PRESIDENT. FIRST CARLETON, THEN..?

OPINION

Buthelezi: whose side is he on?

by Jon Nzakamulilo
Jon Nzakamulilo is an economics student at Carleton.

Chief Gatsha Buthelezi, leader of the Inkatha Freedom Party, has turned out to be one of the most controversial Black politicians in South Africa. While preaching non-violence, he heads the Inkatha Freedom Party, which has been widely accused of using violence against its opponents.

Buthelezi, also the chief minister of the Kwazulu "homeland," has presented himself as a leading opponent of apartheid, but has opposed the struggle led by the African National Congress and its allies.

When calls for sanctions against South Africa were being made in the 1980s, Buthelezi toured Western capitals seeking new investment in South Africa and received red-carpet treatment from then United States president Ronald Reagan.

To understand what has led him to this double agenda — trying to represent his people, Black Africans, while at the same time working within structures created by apartheid — one has to examine government apartheid policies over Black South Africa.

With the passing of the Native Affairs Act in 1920, Black South Africans, if not needed in the white areas, were forced to live in overcrowded and often barren "homelands." Eighty per cent of Black South Africa's population lived on only 13 per cent of the land.

These reserves were for Black Africans not needed in the "white" economy — namely widows, retired people and the unemployed.

As recently as 1980, about one-third of Black Africans still lived on these "homelands." Officially, these "homelands" were ruled by traditional chiefs, men appointed and paid by the South African government.

In 1951, the government set about reinforcing separate political institutions for Black South Africans with the passing of the Bantu Authorities Act, extending more powers to homeland leaders. Born into a prominent family which traditionally supplied prime ministers to the Zulu kings, Buthelezi was brought into the institution of chieftaincy in 1953.

The passing of the Bantu Authorities Act aroused considerable resistance from peasants under the leadership of the African National Congress, not only in Zululand but throughout the rural areas of Transkei, Sekhukhuneland, Zeerust and other places. However, this resistance was ultimately squashed by the military might of the apartheid state. Hundreds were detained and found guilty, while not an insignificant number were sentenced to death and executed.

By the early 1970s, Buthelezi began to exhibit his double agenda even more clearly when he criticized the government policy of the homelands, while at the same time was elected head of the Zululand Territorial Authority in 1970, and the Kwazulu Legislative Assembly in 1972.

He also refused nominal independence for the Kwazulu homeland while ruling using powers given to him by structures born from the womb of apartheid.

Continuing his double agenda through to 1994, Buthelezi and the Inkatha Freedom Party joined the Freedom Alliance, an alliance of homeland leaders of Bophutatswana and Kwazulu, along with white right-wing groups. The alliance has threatened to not only boycott the coming elections on April 27-29, but also threatened the use of violence to preserve their power and privileges enjoyed during the apartheid years.

In recent months the South African government and the African National Congress have made constitutional concessions in attempts to have the Freedom Alliance join the coming elections.

All these efforts are aimed at, firstly, having free and fair elections involving all South Africans, of all races, and secondly, to stop the Freedom Alliance's credible threats of violence.

On the weekend of Feb. 19, 1994, in Natal alone, 42 people were killed in political violence. The worst incident claimed 16 African National Congress voter education workers, 12 of whom were teenagers.

It is probably likely that Buthelezi has always hated the apartheid system and the oppression of Blacks in South Africa, but his problem stems from the fact that his political roots lie in the system that oppresses his own people. This system paid him for his services in the "homelands."

While claiming to be involved in the national struggle for the liberation of the Black people, at the same time he consolidated his governance of the Kwazulu "homeland," with its original objective to act as a reservoir for white South African industry.

As long as he is associated with the apartheid system, his ultimate mode of political conduct will be determined by that system.

Amandla Ngawethuli

More than money, TAs want education

the CHARLATAN
CARLETON'S INDEPENDENT STUDENT NEWSPAPER

March 3, 1994
VOLUME 23 NUMBER 24

Editor-in-Chief Mo Gannon
Production Manager Kevin McKay
Business Manager Jill Perry

NEWS
Editors Brent Dowdall, Angie Gallop, Blayne Haggart, Ryan Nakashima, Ryan Ward
Contributors Jill Mahoney, Andrea Smith, Tanya Workman
Volunteer Co-ordinator Johanna Ciszewski

NATIONAL AFFAIRS
Editor Arn Keeling
Contributors Sara-Lynne Levine, Brandie Weikle

FEATURES
Editor Andrea Smith
Supplement Contributors Rick Harp, Dean Jarviver, Sheela Keenan, Michael Kirby, Billie Danika Littlechild, Jill Mahoney, Roberta Stout

SPORTS
Editor Steven Vesely
Contributors Shannon Fraser, Jay Tharayil, Kevin Restivo, Ryan Ward

ARTS
Editor Blayne Haggart
Contributors Suzanne Andrew, Christopher Bell, Joe Bernard, Dave Carpenter, Angie Gallop, Karin Jordan, Jill Mahoney, Charnead Schella, Adam Seddon, Sean Silcock

OP/ED
Editor Shella Keenan
Contributors Bob Lawson, Jon Nzakamulilo

VISUALS
Photo Editor Tim O'Connor
Photo Assistant Andre Bellefeuille
Contributors Alex Bodnar, Dean Janvier, Richard Head, Erin Long, Gregor Madden, James McCrostie, Chris Nuttall-Smith, Dean Tomlinson, Steven Vesely
Graphics Co-ordinators David Hodges, Mike Rappaport
Graphics Assistant Joel Kenneth Grant
Contributors Sarah Abernethy, Frank Campbell, Ken Drever

Cover Tim O'Connor

The Charlatan's photos are produced using the Carleton University Students' Association Photo Service

PRODUCTION
Production Assistant Kim Alf
Contributors José Belmonte, Jill Mahoney, Karolina Srutek, Caron Watt, Stephanie Garrison, Audrey Simbot, Ryan Ward, Brandie Weikle

CIRCULATION 14,000
Circulation Dave Carpenter, Joellen Walshe

ADVERTISING 788-3580
Ad Manager Karen Richardson

The Charlatan, Carleton University's weekly student newspaper, is an editorially and financially autonomous journal, published weekly during the fall and winter terms and monthly during the summer. Charlatan Publications Incorporated, Ottawa, Ontario, a non-profit corporation registered under the Canadian Corporations Act, is the publisher of The Charlatan. Editorial content is the sole responsibility of editorial staff members, but may not reflect the beliefs of its members. Contents are copyright © 1994. Nothing may be duplicated in any way without the prior written permission of the Editor-in-Chief. All Rights Reserved. ISSN 0315-1859. Subscriptions are available at a cost of $40 for individuals and $52 for institutions. Includes GST. National advertising for The Charlatan is handled through Canadian University Press Media Services (Campus Plus), 73 Richmond St. W., 4th Floor, Ontario, M5H 1Z4; phone: (416) 481-7283. The Board of Directors of Charlatan Publications Inc. is: Chairperson: Ken Drever, Treasurer: Mark Lefevrier, Secretary: Yvonne Potter, Directors: Warren Kinsetta, Anna Gibbons, Dave Hodges, Fouad Kannan, Adam Mann and Mo Gannon. The Charlatan Room 531 University Centre Carleton University Ottawa, Ontario K1S 5B6 Telephone: (613) 788-6680 E-mail: charlatan@carleton.ca

by Bob Lawson

Bob Lawson is a doctoral student in political science and a teaching assistant at Carleton.

On Feb. 17, the teaching and research assistant union CUPE 2323 voted to strike, if necessary.

The local has been without a contract since last August. During several rounds of negotiations, the university administration has refused to discuss any issues related to money, including a tuition freeze for local members. However, this conflict is not simply about money.

While at first glance the situation may appear to be symptomatic of the broader crisis of underfunding in Ontario post-secondary education, there is much more at stake.

Administration is changing the nature of education at Carleton forever, while hiding behind the argument that there is no money for wage settlements for teaching and research assistants and student sessionals. Yet the university is projecting a budget surplus for this year and for the next two years!

Even if we accept the logic of fiscal conservatism, there are few excuses for the leadership deficit facing Carleton University.

The very highly paid senior managers of this university are using very little imagination in dealing with the financial difficulties they claim are facing Carleton.

Instead of looking for imaginative solutions, funding cuts are being directly translated into tuition increases for students. We deserve a more creative solution to the problem than this.

The administration's strategy is clear. They are seeking even more students at even higher tuition rates. This approach should not be confused with making Carleton accessible to more students. Tuition at Carleton for undergraduate students has increased by 21 per cent over the past three years and by a similar amount for graduate students. According to Maclean's, Carleton now has the fourth highest tuition rates in Canada.

If the current administration's vision of the future is realized, the university that was once "Open for excellence" will only be open for profits at the expense of even more overcrowded classrooms and an increasingly impoverished student population. It does not have to be this way.

The struggle of the Carleton teaching and research assistants and student sessionals is about much more than money. We have already endured wage rollbacks because of increased tuition over the past three years, which has reduced our earnings to below 1984 level. We are willing to accept a wage freeze if the administration is willing to freeze tuition rates for local members. This is a reasonable and responsible proposal which the administration has consistently rejected.

Beyond monetary issues, we have been seeking restrictions on the sizes of seminars and labs led by teaching assistants, as well as other changes to our contract which would improve our ability to deliver high quality education to undergraduate students.

We have also been very active in supporting undergraduate opposition to tuition increases. The administration's opposition to these efforts is understandable, since we are proposing an alternative vision of education at Carleton which they have clearly rejected.

Under the social contract, the university was to solicit input from employees as to how money could be saved. The university administration has not really engaged in this discussion. Now it's time to do this, instead of taking the easy way out and rolling back wages through tuition increases.

Our vision of Carleton's future is one in which the quality of education takes clear precedence over profits. This is a vision in which the well-paid managers of Carleton must work hard to find imaginative and effective ways to deliver high quality, reasonably priced education -- at least as hard as we must now work to pay rising tuition costs. □

LETTERS

Pavkev, where are you?

Editor:

This letter is with regards to The Charlatan hockey pool. For several months now, my friends and I have noticed in the top ten listings the names Jeff Parker and Jeff Pavkev. Every single week they have the exact same amount of total points. The names are incredibly similar -- just substitute the R's in Parker for V's and VOILA! You have Pavkev!

This leads one to believe that this man may have actually have entered twice, under different names in order to claim the $25 meal prize more than once. It is interesting to note that on both occasions in which a "Jeff" has won, he took some time to collect his prize.

Maybe he was spacing out the time between collecting his prizes so his name would go unnoticed, or allowing time to disguise himself with facial hair. One does not know, but it seems suspicious that two people with remarkably similar names would choose the exact same players.

I suggest that someone at The Charlatan check the files to see if they are indeed two separate persons with confirmed home phone numbers and students ID numbers that are different.

If this is some sort of a con, I feel that both entries should be deleted and three prizes should be given out in one week in order to even things out.

Also, where the hell am I in the playoff pool? I haven't been in the top ten since November!

Paul Donovan
English I

Paul, we suggest you immediately check this week's hockey pool to see where the hell you are. Surprise! P.S. There is no Jeff Pavkev to our knowledge and he never came to pick up his prize. We think it's our spelling error. The r's kinda looked like v's ya know? -- ed.

LETTERS cont'd on page 27

Expand the horizon of your success in business with Humber's

One-year Post-Graduate Programs in Marketing Management

Canadian Securities Profile

Information Systems Profile

- Unique program offering the accredited Canadian Securities course and Canadian Securities certificate.
- Only post-graduate program sponsored by the Canadian Securities Institute in eastern Canada.
- A program offering a combination of marketing, Canadian securities and financial planning training.
- The only post-graduate program that combines information systems and marketing training.
- Unique program provides the practical training to meet the requirements of the information systems industry.
- Provides entry into an industry with almost unlimited growth potential.

To qualify, you need a three-year university degree, college diploma, or five years related experience. For information systems you also need basic computer literacy.

Call (416) 675-5000, or 1-800-268-4867, for information

Delivering World Class Business Education

FIRST NATIONS SUPPLEMENT

NOBLE NOT SAVAGE NOT VANISHING NOT LAZY NOT DRUNK NOT YOU. HALF PART MIXED FULL BLOODED: HOW WHITE ARE YOU? HALF PART MIXED FULL BLOODED: HOW

I AM: NOT NOBLE NOT SAVAGE NOT VANISHING NOT LAZY NOT DRUNK NOT YOU. I AM: NOT

WHITE ARE YOU? HALF PART MIXED FULL BLOODED: HOW WHITE ARE YOU? HALF PART MIXED FULL BLOODED: HOW

WHITE ARE YOU? HALF PART MIXED FULL BLOODED: HOW WHITE ARE YOU?

These photos were taken by Dean Janvier at a POW-WOW SOCIAL EVENT held Feb. 19, at the CURVE LAKE INDIAN RESERVE. It was part of the Trent University ELDERS' AND TRADITIONAL PEOPLES GATHERING in Peterborough.

At the event traditional singers gather around a large drum and they all sing together traditional songs to honor the Creator, the earth, the people, and all life. The Elders pray for everyone and everyone is welcome to join in and dance.

Photos (clockwise from top): a boy traditional dancer is getting his headgear adjusted by his father; A young man traditional dancer is presented with a gift from an elder; He shows his new gift; Women dancers in fancy shawl outfits (front) and jingle dress (far right).

The drawing used on the cover is a detail from a German woodcut called "The People and Island Which Have Been Discovered," dated around 1505.

The unknown artist depicts Indian life according to the widely-circulated descriptions of Italian navigator Amerigo Vespucci, whose sensational and vivid embellishments of life in the "New World" were printed around 1504.

In drawing on Vespucci's erroneous account of life in the "New World," the artist emphasizes cannibalism, sex and scanty feather dress. Not having seen his subjects, the artist erroneously gives them beards.

— taken from The White Man's Indian, by Robert F. Berkhofer Jr.

The photo used on the cover is of Catherine Adams of the Gwa'sala'Nakwaxda'xw Tribe in British Columbia.

The photograph was taken by David Neel as part of an exhibit called Our Chiefs and Elders. Neel took photos of 55 leaders in First Nations communities in the province.

— cover design by Rick Harp and Karin Jordan

Innu women fight for Nitassinan

by Jill Mahoney

Charlatan Staff

She told me I had my culture and no one could take it away from me. But that's not the way it is for her. The government has robbed her of what she cares for most — her land.

Elizabeth Penashue, an Innu elder, travelled with Philamena Vollant and Marsha Hurley to Ottawa from their reserves in Labrador, Nfld., and Quebec.

The three women were on a two-week speaking tour across Eastern Canada. They spoke at Carleton on Feb. 17 to a group of 18 people and showed the National Film Board film, Hunters and Bombers, which deals with low-level flying in their area.

The women are trying to get the government to stop low-level flight testing of NATO jets from Germany, the Netherlands and Britain. Practice bombing takes place over Nitassinan, the traditional Innu lands in eastern Quebec and Labrador, where 10,000 people live off the land from April to September every year.

Penashue said the testing, which amounts to about 8,000 flights a year, has affected the lives of the Innu. She said the noise from the jets scare the children. It also prevents water fowl's eggs from hatching, and leads caribou, the primary source of Innu sustenance, to migrate using different routes, bypassing the Innu's settlements.

"People used to live happily and peacefully before this testing was done and they never used to worry about anything," said Penashue.

The women seemed uncomfortable during their presentation, shifting in their chairs and wringing their hands. But they told their story and answered the group's questions.

Penashue and Vollant don't understand

English, so they relied on the youngest, 33-year-old Hurley, who interpreted the questions into the Innu language and their answers for the audience.

Penashue said the microphone in front of her was artificial. She said it was foreign to her, distinct from her past when parents didn't worry about their children. But now she uses the microphone because she said she is worried about her grandchildren's future in the land that has been hers forever.

Marsha Hurley, Philamena Vollant and Elizabeth Penashue.

"If the trees and the rivers and the lakes are destroyed, what's left for our children to use to practise their way of life?" she asked.

The women explained that before the low-level flying started about 12 years ago over Nitassinan, it took place in Europe. When people in Europe complained that they didn't like what was going on, the Canadian government let foreign governments use the land in Nitassinan to build bombing ranges.

"Why should we tolerate this kind of treatment when other people in Europe don't want it in their backyards?" said Penashue.

"We have never given up that land. It's just like taking something that doesn't belong to you. That's how we are looking at it," said Hurley.

"There is a lot of stuff being destroyed, trees being knocked down by these dummy bombs... there will be nothing left for us to use," said Penashue. Part of the testing process involves dropping dummy bombs on Innu land.

The noise from the jets is loud. "You can hear it in your whole body. There's ringing in your ears," she said.

She said their calls for action to the government have been ignored.

"Innu people have been protesting for so many years, but it's like it's fallen on deaf ears."

A military representative in the NFB film defends the testing, saying, "We don't use the land, we fly over it."

But Penashue disagrees. "We use the land for hunting, but it's almost like they're looking at it like no one's living there, like it's nobody's land."

"It's almost like the Innu are providing the land to train and kill people. They use the land to train for war, but this is not what we would like to see because we don't want to see other people killing one another," said Penashue.

Hurley went to prison for two months and Penashue was arrested when they started protesting low-level flight testing. The documentary features scenes of the Innu storming the different countries' bases, shouting "No NATO!"

"It wasn't easy to be arrested, but you must do what's right. We know what we were doing was right," said Penashue. "If you love your land, you'll do anything to protect it." ■

Algonquin chief faces loggers and SQ

by Bill Barnwell

Bill Barnwell is a First Nations affairs reporter with CKCU-FM.

The chief of the Algonquins of Barriere Lake, Que., was arrested last month under circumstances the Algonquins call in a press release "efforts to discredit the chief and the community."

Jean-Maurice Matchewan was arrested Jan. 19 on charges of assault stemming from an alleged assault on a woman from the Rapid Lake Reserve on Dec. 31. The reserve is one of two Algonquin communities in the area, about 200 kilometres north of Ottawa in Quebec.

Chief Matchewan and some members of the band council are calling his arrest an attempt to seek revenge against all First Nations in the province by the Sureté du Quebec, the result of lingering hostilities after the Oka crisis.

"In the past, we have been denouncing the tactics used by the SQ, and they didn't really like that," says Michel Thusky, a spokesperson for the Algonquins of Barriere Lake. According to Thusky, the provincial police force's tactics for dealing with First Nations have not changed since the resistance at Oka.

"It is evident that it (Matchewan's arrest) is some sort of revenge and attempt to divide our community," says Thusky.

He says they band doesn't like they way the whole case has been handled, and that the Sureté du Quebec are making a bigger deal of it than they normally would.

A court order now bars Matchewan from returning to his community. It comes at a time when logging negotiations with the provincial and federal governments are set to resume, and Matchewan's leadership is crucial as a representative of the community.

The community in general is trying to put an end clearcut logging at La Verendrye Wildlife Reserve, much of it being on the traditional lands of the Algonquins of Barriere Lake.

The Algonquins entered into a trilateral agreement with the governments of Canada and Quebec in August 1991, in the hopes of developing a resource management plan for the region that would protect wildlife and the Algonquin peoples' traditional way of life.

A press release issued by the Algonquins of Barriere Lake says the plan would involve the managing of natural resources responsibly, and would not destroy the natural environment like the current method of clearcutting.

Since the signing of the trilateral agreement, there has been much media coverage of a number of road blocks and confrontations with the Quebec police force. A strong publicity campaign has also been the Algonquins' main form of resistance.

"We're not against logging, as long as it's done in accordance with the agreement that was signed and as long as it doesn't threaten the Algonquins' traditional way of life," says Russell Diabo, a lawyer for the Algonquins.

Under the trilateral agreement signed in 1991, a logging ban was to be in effect while negotiations over an integrated resource management plan continued. In August 1992, after a number of disagreements about the terms of the agreement, including items such as how close to cut near lakes and rivers, the Algonquins and the Quebec government agreed to appoint Justice Rejean Paul as a mediator to the conflict.

His report was released in September 1992; he writes that under the trilateral agreement, "the government of Quebec had failed to fulfil its part of the agreement and had failed to complete a number of environmental, economic and cultural studies of the area."

The Quebec cabinet immediately suspended the trilateral agreement and ignored Paul's report, saying in a press release, that "all logging is done on the basis of sustainable growth."

Currently, loggers are permitted to cut as close as 20 metres from lakes and rivers in the La Verendrye Wildlife Reserve. The Algonquins want this increased to 60 metres, in order to preserve wildlife habitat.

In the wake of the decision to veto the original trilateral agreement, negotiations between the province, the federal government and the Algonquins are pending, but as of yet no specific date has been set.

As Matchewan was leaving his lawyer's office on Jan. 19, three police cars and six officers blocked his car and the arrest was made. According to a statement by Matchewan on Jan. 24, within minutes of the arrest, Sureté du Quebec public relations officers had notified the media.

According to the testimony of inspector/investigator Alain Hebert, Matchewan's lawyer, André Gauthier, informed the police in a phone call that Matchewan intended to evade them and not turn himself in.

However, in an affidavit obtained from Thusky, Gauthier states that he never told the police this, and that Matchewan was in fact on his way to meet with the police when he was arrested.

According to a public relations officer in the Hull detachment of the Sureté du Quebec, a publicity ban forbids the police force from making any further comments on the case.

On Jan. 28, Matchewan announced his offer of resignation as chief of the Algonquins of Barriere Lake. In a Jan. 24 press release, he writes: "If the community decides to accept my resignation, that is fine with me. I have been chief for 14 years. In that time, I have taken a lot of abuse — fighting with logging companies and the SQ."

Currently, the community is considering whether to accept Matchewan's resignation. ■

by Roberta Stout and friends

Tansi' — this is the word I would use as a greeting in my language. I am a Plains Cree from Kehewin, re-named Long Lake Cree Nation reservation. Although I am called Roberta, my "real" (or rather Cree) name is Okisikoskweo. This is my third year at Carleton. Presently I am studying Latin America under the interdisciplinary studies program.

The following list of words is helpful in understanding a conversation between hip Native people. These have been defined through interviews with various knowledgeable Native linguists. These terms are commonly used during idle intertribal chit chat. Let's just say this is our personalized Indian Lingo. I would like to thank all those who gave their input to this glossary.

APPLE /AH-pull/ n. & adj. 1 red on the outside, white on the inside. 2 a person of Native ancestry with little affiliation with Native community, not interested in Native history or culture, who follows the dominant society. 3 a white-washed Native, has the skin color but not the spirituality. 4 a white Indian. 5 a person who has replaced traditional values with materialism and greed; a person using their Native ancestry to get them ahead.

BANNOCK /BAH-knock/ n. 1 Indian version of bread.

BORN AGAIN (see WANNA-BE) /BORN-AH-gain/ n. & adj. 1 a Native person trying to become a traditional person overnight. 2 "one day I woke up and I realized that I was an Indian." 3 re-finding your roots. 4 being lost to what you are and then finding your true identity.

CITY INDIAN /SIT-ee IN-dee-in/ n. 1 a person of Native descent growing up or living within an urban centre. 2 a Native person who has assumed the ideology of city life.

INDIAN TIME /IN-dee-in TIME/ n. 1 the real time. 2 a strict sense of non-punctuality. 3 when you get there; when things should be. 4 being late. 5 taking your time. 6 going with the natural flow of the day. 7 there is no need for time.

INTERTRIBAL /IN-tur TRY-bul/ adj. 1 encompassing all the nations.

POWOW /POW-wow/ n. 1 Native peoples from all over coming to one place to celebrate their culture through singing, dancing and drumming. 2 a gathering of spirits. 3 a traditional intertribal gathering. 4 a place to have a good time; where you go to snag (see SNAG).

POWOW TRAIL /POW-wow TRAYL/ n. 1 a year-long string of powwows located in different areas of North America, usually followed by die-hard drummers and dancers.

THE REZ /THE REZ/ n. 1 the reservation.

SNAG /SNAG/ v. 1 to obtain the one you desire after using all of your Indian moves; to catch a person or get caught. 2 like going to a bar to pick someone up, only you're at a powwow. 3 "shwing." 4 when you get to talk to the person you've been eyeing. 5 to blanket cuddle.

TEEPEE CRAWLING /TEE-pee CRAW-ling/ v. 1 being promiscuous; sleeping with more than one person in one night. 2 creeping into someone else's tent. 3 "alright, I love teepee crawling." 4 sneaking around, trying to snag after dark.

UNCLE TOMAHAWK /UN-cuhl TOM-uh-HAWK/ n. & adj. 1 a sell-out.

WANNA-BE (see BORN AGAIN) /WAN-nuh BEE/ n. & adj. 1 hippies from the wanna-be tribe. 2 "My mother's brother's sister's aunt's great-great-grandmother was a Cherokee, therefore I'm an Indian." 3 somebody who discovers they have 1/64th Indian in them and starts to wear moccasins around the house. 4 a cheap imitation.

A Summer Course at
McGill University
Montreal, Canada

Why Not!

We welcome visiting students

Increase your options
Lighten your course load
Enrich your program

Discover Quebec and
"la francophonie"
Experience multicultural
Montreal
Enjoy the summer festivals

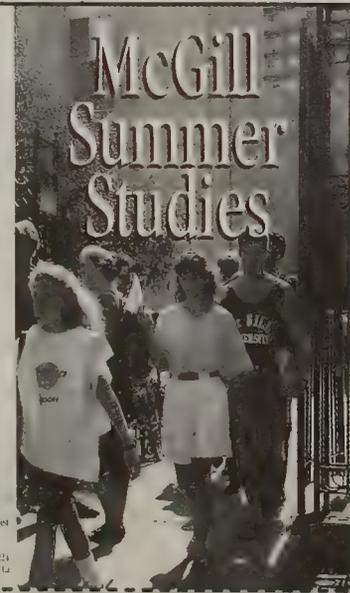

It's all here for you!

McGill Summer Studies
offers a full range of university level courses.
An intensive four-week summer course carries
3 academic credits.

Registration opens
March 8, 1994

McGILL SUMMER STUDIES
McGill Campus • 550 Sherbrooke St. West
• Near 568 • 4th Floor • Montreal
Quebec, Canada • H3A 1B9
Tel: (514) 398-5212 Fax: (514) 398-5224
E-Mail: Summer@McGill.Stu.Mcgill.Ca

McGill
Summer
Studies

Please send me	Name _____
1994 Summer Studies,	Address _____ and information	City _____ Province/State _____
on summer	Postal/Zip Code _____ Tel. () _____
accommodation in	University/Acadge _____ Area of interest _____
McGill University
Residences

START TRAINING AS A PROFESSIONAL JOURNALIST THIS FALL...

Algonquin College offers you high level hands-on training to prepare you for a satisfying career as a writer, reporter, and researcher.

Our two-year diploma program will train you in print journalism including newspaper editing, research, photojournalism, desktop publishing, copywriting, layout, journalism law, radio and television. The focus for work in the second year is Algonquin's award-winning college newspaper The Algonquin Times, where your skills in generating story ideas, writing, editing and layout will be used to produce this community newspaper.

As a graduate, you may pursue employment as a reporter for daily or weekly newspapers, magazines or trade publications, or as a reporter or researcher for radio or television.

University graduates may be admitted directly into second year, provided they score high grades on the English diagnostic and Journalism-Print admission tests.

You can receive more information on this program by contacting Admissions at 727-0002, who would be happy to put you in touch with the Program Coordinator. Or join a Liaison officer for a tour of the Woodroffe campus, 1385 Woodroffe Avenue, Nepean. Tours take place every Monday, leaving the main entrance promptly at 10:00 am and 2:00 pm.

▶▶▶▶▶
Algonquin WORKS

ALGONQUIN

okay, so what are you?

some kind of japanesesome kind of chinese where are you from im from blah blah
i
you know right next to blah yeah so what are you doing in this country called cana dawa sit any trouble for you to get in i hear immigration has been rather tight his years some spook told me this is native indian a boriginal a borigine first na tions in indigenous land who are they you certainly dont see a whole lot of them a round where are your parents from mine are from blah blah blah

ii
arent you that guy from whats it called ohhh you know help me out here that group that indian rock group whats it ohhh you know its what you people listen to on you r reserved land your reservethat brings me to another topic ohhh cash in that s the group cash in which one of them there reserves are you from many ways

iii
shit ive never been as messed up as i am right now yow what tribes are you from kid w hen i was your age we used to drive a around in my brothers kick ass black comanch e you wanna sipok fine its your loss any ways when when we go thome we would eat a stycustard all day are you listening to med id you hear what is said

iv
ohhh you people are sooo cute with your little traditions and all you know my ol ders insist in a yaht in a in any case about two years back she went to one of you s people spowwwwows and she brought me back a bracelet toooh its so pretty its on e of those authentic navah bracelets its beaded its green and blue do you wanna see i till wear it for you tomorrow

those who need not listen should never listen

never

what you can do is ex/per/i ence read learn soak up ac/knowledge
ex/per/i ence
then support
convince sustain convince fund

convince maintain what you know

convincing yourself will give you con/fi/dence

convince until you see four directions each leading to a same destination

convince that neo-immigrunt
who calls himself vince

convince especially those who know not even how to spell
"convince"

convince them what it means to you to us

convince until your mouth spits out the right words your own words not just of those who have convinced you

convince yourself you know the terminology

convince until you shout out:
what about the brown?
what about the brown?
until you scream out:
rita joe (in ecstasy) until you empty out your all until you . . .

convince yourself

convince yourself
until that time
when you will not only feel convinced but are convinced that you can convince poetry by namowan michael kirby

Gerald McMaster is a curator, an artist and a student. His works have been displayed around the world. In 1992, he was the co-curator of Indigena, an exhibition of the works of contemporary Native artists held at the Museum of Civilization. He is currently on leave from his post as curator of contemporary Indian art at the museum to complete his master's degree in anthropology at Carleton University. He spoke with Karin Jordan and Andrea Smith of The Charlatan about his work as an artist and his latest installation, Savage Graces.

Savage Graces was first displayed at the University of British Columbia Museum of Anthropology in 1992. It was on display at Arts Court in Ottawa from Jan. 13 to Feb. 27. It will continue to tour across Canada through 1995. Another collection of his works, niya nêhiyaw: Crossfires of Identity, was on display at the Carleton University Art Gallery from Jan. 3 to Feb. 13.

Charlatan: I've heard you talk a lot about your role as an artist, and you've mentioned that you feel the artist is a person who has a foot in two worlds. Can you explain what that means, especially for yourself, and then elaborate on what you're supposed to do as a person with a foot in two worlds?

Gerald McMaster: Well, I think that the artist occupies at least two spaces, if not more. That's probably what I was getting towards — the idea that the artist is situated between different communities, and is never really stable. This is how I see contemporary artists today. They have to be in different situations at different times. It's not necessarily between two communities or two worlds, but I think it's the idea of seeing from different perspectives.

I think that the opportunity for the artist to see different possibilities at the same time, to me, comes out of this idea of being in two spaces, perhaps at the same time. Or being on the line, on the border of something and looking different ways all the times. That's what has been important for me particularly as an artist. I think that we all have to discover who we are at some point in our life, where we know or try and discover who we are. And in discovering, we're always making that relationship.

I think as a contemporary artist, I try to see myself in a relation, and what it's to. Well, that relation for me is to the Native community, and to the non-Native community — whatever that community happens to be. And the idea there is that I'm able to see both sides. I am, as an artist and an individual, on a border. I am the border and I can see both sides. And to me this is a strategic position to be in. And I think it's a strategy for all artists. But it takes a lot of soul-searching and a lot of experience to discover your identity as an artist.

Charlatan: So the strategy, it can't just be self-discovery then. What is the other strategy? Or is there another strategy?

GM: Oh yes, there are other strategies. But one, as I say, is to try to discover your identity as an artist. And for me it was important to understand what community I was responsive to, and what community I was responsible to. Because I felt that, at the point I'm at today, I cannot create works that are specific to the Native community. Maybe there is a point. But there are certain types of work that I don't think can be produced by me at this point.

I guess I should explain what the strategy is. For instance, in this exhibition (Savage Graces), I thought that I could do something as an artist who is situated between these two different cultures. As a contemporary Western artist and in the practices of being that artist, there are strategic ways in which you express yourself or use art. And through this exhibition, I tried to do that.

I've explained elsewhere that I saw I could use my work as a mirror, as a looking glass. Where on the one hand it becomes a reflective surface on which society can look at stereotypes — stereotypes that have been imposed upon others. In this case, I was saying "here are the stereotypes about Indians." And they come from outside the Native community. So if you reflect that in interesting and ironic ways back to the community, maybe they might catch themselves looking or using that language. So by putting up a mirror, it reflects back. And if the mirror is put up by an indigenous artist, then coming from that position, that voice might make people think a little differently. Now if I was someone else, it would be a different voice altogether, a different mirror.

At the same time, while I'm putting up this mirror as it were, the Native communities can look into this looking glass into the society. Or society can look through into the looking glass and see all the contradictions and conflicts and tensions regarding these issues. So this mirror, or looking glass, works as a reflective surface, but one to go into and beyond the surface into that garden beyond the glass, or beyond the window frame.

So that's the strategy I'm employing. I think that as a contemporary artistic practice, that's where I'm at today. And that's how I was using this exhibition. And that's how I see myself as a contemporary artist.

Charlatan: Through this strategy and this looking glass, what do you think that you've learned? And what do you think that people who've also come to see the exhibit have learned? It's tough to generalize, because everybody comes to see the exhibit. But if there's one commonality, what would that be?

GM: Well, as I say, I think that contemporary artists are constantly looking at the world. And looking at it through their lenses. And we make objects, and those objects are representations, and so people coming to see this exhibition will see those representations. And obviously, through their experiences, through their education, through their cultural experiences, they will be able to see these images in very, very different ways. Some will not see anything wrong, and others will.

In this exhibition there were Native peoples who came through and saw nothing wrong with some of the images. Whereas other Native peoples said "There's stuff terribly wrong here." So again, we have to look at experiences, and how people think, and what kind of education or backgrounds they have. That's part of the work of a contemporary artist. Other people will disagree with me. But for me, this is how I operate, this is my practice.

Charlatan: I'm wondering how recent it is that a space like this that you're operating in, where you can question identity and representation and turn "history" on its head, has existed? How recent is it that a space like that has been opened for a contemporary artist like you? I get the feeling it's been a pretty gradual process.

GM: I think that it's part of the shift in general in society — what we could think of as a condition of the times. This strategy or approach would not have worked 30 years ago, but it happens that the physical as well as the intellectual spaces have changed and have allowed those opportunities for people like me to engage in a political aesthetic. And I think if I can open this space by articulating the questions and the issues, then that's part of the strategy.

Charlatan: Articulating it to who? You have many different audiences that you have to translate for.

GM: Well, in terms of the art spaces, you have to articulate to the people who run institutions [laughs]. The people running a space have to understand, have to be open to these possibilities. But if they don't, they're going to look away and look at something else.

Charlatan: You seem to have a pretty extensive collection of imagery of Native peoples, and also things that have been deposited in the cultural amnesty bin, which is part of this exhibit (part of Savage Graces is a clear plastic bin in which visitors to the exhibit have deposited stereotypical imagery which they own, or have seen, of Native peoples — everything ranging from toys to newspaper articles). What are your plans to make something constructive out of this destructive imagery?

GM: What I'd like to do, and what the exhibition has done, is transform spaces. This exhibition (Savage Graces) started out in a museum of anthropology . . . in a way I believe the exhibit transformed that space for several months when it was on display, because people thought that this should operate in an art gallery. When I brought it here (to Arts Court), the reverse was true, so that the objects began to work in people's mind to the point where they said, "This should be in a museum." So in both instances, the spaces and barriers were breaking down, and the objects spoke in different ways and the representations pushed at the barriers of people's thinking.

It's just all these strange objects, as you've seen, on display. And they come from all over. They come from the commercial sector through bumper stickers, through salt shakers, through the food industry. The images come from the publishing industry, through stories. They come from the scientific industry, from the artistic industry — these images come from everywhere. And it seems that these different directions have constructed "the Indian" in some way.

What I'm interested in, in collecting these objects, is whether you can categorize them or break down the way these representations are made. So the interest there for me is in the potential for study. The potential that we can look at, and start to think in very serious terms about what these representations are saying, but at the same time ask how we construct where they're coming from. What's the discourse of these representations? So the idea is to gather all this material together. There's so much out there, but this is a beginning. And I'd like to see something develop from that. I'd like to see this collection amassed and not just put somewhere in storage, but more actively researched. I think that for students and for kids, it's an area that's very rich for study. You can go back in history for many, many years, and the material's out there. It's just not being studied in the same way. So I think this group of objects can create an archival base for academic research. I want to place them somewhere where they will be a centre of debate and research on representations of Aboriginal peoples. □

PLACEMENT & Career Services

Check the posting boards at
the Placement Centre for
more job listings.

Programs and services of interest to undergraduates, graduating students, as well as alumni.

508 Unicentre • 788-6611
March 3, 1994

ON-CAMPUS RECRUITING

Permanent full-time positions are directed towards graduating students (available May '94). Dates, unless specified, refer to deadlines.

To find out the types of positions, how to apply and where to find more information on the companies, please contact the office.

Andyne Computing Ltd.
Mar. 4, Mail Direct
Comp. Science, Electrical Eng.,
Computer Systems Engineering
Positions: Various

Cognos
Mar. 4, 12 noon
Computer Science, Electrical Engineering, Comp. Systems Eng.
Positions: Software Engineer

Digital Equipment of Canada Ltd.
Mar. 4, 12 noon
Comp. Science, Eng., Business
Position: Sales Trainee

Crosskeys Systems Corporation
Mar. 7, 12 noon
Comp. Science, Computer Sys. Eng.
Electrical Engineering
Position: Network Management Software Designer

Newbridge Networks
Mar. 7, 12 noon
Computer Science, Computer Sys.
Eng., Electrical Engineering
Position: Hardware Design

Nortak Software Ltd.
Mar. 7, 12 noon
Comp. Science, Computer Systems
Engineering, Commerce-MIS
Positions: Programmer, Programmer/Analyst

Dominion Automobile Association
Mar. 18, 12 noon
All Disciplines
Position: Management Trainee

Mead Johnson
Mar. 18, 12 noon
Commerce - Marketing
Position: Product Manager

Communications Security
Establishment
May 1, Mail Direct
All Disciplines
Positions: Languages Related

Solidarity Eastern Europe
May 27, Mail Direct
English, Linguistics
*Position: Overseas Language
Teacher*

FULL TIME EMPLOYMENT

Please visit Placement & Career Services for more full and part time employment opportunities.

Labrador East Integrated School Board
Mar. 4, Mail Direct
All Disciplines
Positions: Teachers

SUMMER EMPLOYMENT

For more information on the types of positions and application procedures consult the summer job board.

Canada Employment Centre for Students
Mar. 4, Mail Direct
All Disciplines
Positions: Summer Employment Officer (SEO)

Michele Heights Recreation
Association
Mar. 4, Mail Direct
All Disciplines
Positions: Camp Coordinator

National Capital Commission
Mar. 4, Mail Direct
All Disciplines
Positions: Tourism Information Officers

Northern Telecom/Bell Northern Research
Mar. 4, 12 noon
Electrical Eng., Computer Eng.,
Computer Science, System Design
Positions: Various

Ottawa Carleton Wildlife Centre
Mar. 4, Mail Direct
All Disciplines
Positions: Wildlife Interns

Ontario Sports Centre
Mar. 4, Mail Direct
All Disciplines
Position: Supervisor

City of Ottawa - Environmental Management Branch
Mar. 11, Mail Direct
Biology, Physical Science, Environmental Engineering
*Positions: Research/Project
Assistant, Field Assistant*

The Ottawa Riverboat Company
Mar. 11, Mail Direct
All Disciplines
Position: Ticket Sales Supervisor

Girl Guides of Canada-Mapleway
Mar. 12, Mail Direct
Positions: Various

The Premium Beer Company Inc.
Mar. 14, Mail Direct
All Disciplines
*Positions: Moosehead Summer
Merchandise*

Banff Lifts Ltd.
Sulphur Mountain Alberta
Mar. 18, Mail Direct
All Disciplines
Positions: Various

Hunt Club Riverside Community
Centre
Mar. 18, Mail Direct
All Disciplines
Positions: Various

Hamilton YWCA East End Sports
School
Mar. 18, Mail Direct
All Disciplines
*Positions: Instructor/Counsellor
Please note this position is in Hamilton Ontario.*

Marsaryk Fellowship Program
Mar. 18, Mail Direct
Eastern European, Political Science,
NPSIA, EASL
Positions: Teaching English in Czech Republic

The Governor General's Foot Guards
Mar. 31, Mail Direct
All Disciplines
Positions: Ceremonial Guards

Pepsi-Cola Canada Beverages
ASAP, Mail Direct
All Disciplines
Positions: Delivery Drivers

Sandy Hill Community Centre
Mar. 31, Mail Direct
All Disciplines
Positions: Child Counsellors, Youth Counsellors

Environmental Youth Corps
ASAP, Mail Direct
All Disciplines
Positions: Various

Canadian Museum of Civilization
ASAP, Mail Direct
Canadian History, Native Studies,
Social Sciences
Positions: Animator

The District Municipality of Muskoka
Water Quality Monitoring Program
ASAP, Mail Direct
Environmental Engineering,
Biology
Positions: Technical Assistant I

Student BBQ Services
ASAP, Mail Direct
All Disciplines
Position: Manager

Support Services Mississauga
ASAP, Mail Direct
All Disciplines
Positions: Various

Totten Sims Hubicki Associates
ASAP, Mail Direct
Civil Engineering
Position: Inspection Team

PAINTERS/HOME CARE

The following home care companies are accepting applications to be mailed direct. Please consult the summer job board for positions and deadline dates.

Abacadabra Landscapers
Action Window Cleaning
Creative Outdoor Lighting
Metropro
Student Sprinkler Services
Student Works Painting
Varsity Painters
White Shark Window Cleaning

TREE PLANTING

The following tree planting companies are accepting applications to be mailed direct. Please consult the summer job board for deadline dates and for more information.

Bugbusters
TAWA Enterprises Ltd.
Evergreen Forestry Services
Outland/New Forest
R&D Treeplanting
Tree Line Reforestation
Broland Enterprises Inc.

SUMMER CAMPS

The following camps are accepting applications ASAP to be mailed direct.

Camp Awakening
Camp Brebeuf
Camp MaroMac
Bark Lake
Exer-Clean Launderers Ltd.
J.P. Brothers Food Management
Lundy's Canadian Wilderness
Camp
Pripstein's Camp
Project C.A.N.O.E.
Project D.A.R.E.
Ontario Camping Association
Sagitawa Christian Camps
Camp Tamakwa
Camp Walden
YMCA-YWCA of Ottawa-
Carleton
YMCA Camp Pinecrest

LODGES/RESORTS

Viamede Resort (Peterborough)
Apr. 1, Mail Direct
Positions: Various

Waterton-Glacier International
Peace Park/Prince of Wales Hotel
Apr. 29, Mail Direct
Positions: Various

Aspen Village Inn (Alberta)
ASAP, Mail Direct
Positions: Various

River Run (Beachburg)
ASAP, Mail Direct
Positions: Various

Masks Hung

Hollywood Indian music roams the kitchen
Mom fanning the smoke as it escapes

Church bells begin to cry
Rain slaps gently on the house's window
Dog asleep by the wood stove

Record skips once and then again
A new beat rises above the morning

A truck goes rattling by
It vanishes in the mist
Its rattle still heard

Mom tastes her rabbit stew
Dumplings bob up and down
Thick liquid bubbles
Ladle dipped and scooped
Into an old wooden bowl

Sister awakes to this aroma
She has fallen down
Fallen off that Indian wagon
Mom stares and wonders at her
Shuffling feet to cold toilet

Running boy shoots out of the hall
His uncombed hair standing at attention
He touches mom and she smiles weakly to him
His bowl before him as he tastes the rabbit
He is finished even before the bowl has cooled

Out of the door and down the disappearing road
Worn-out shoes kicking up wet dirt

Rattling truck coming back
Mist closes around running boy
His hair standing at attention

Sister out and sitting by the stove
Old dog staring at her
Trying to remember who she was Mom drying dishes
Old dog resting for another day

Another truck goes attacking the dirt
Wheels turning centuries into minutes

Mom crying in the other room
Rain slapping against the one window
Sister licking at the neck of her bottle.

by Joseph A. Dandurand

Joseph Dandurand is a poet and a playwright, and a Salish-Nooksack Indian from Fort Langely Band No.6. His poetry has been published in the En'Owkin Journal of First North American People, and he has a chapbook of poetry called the Upside-down Raven. He is at present completing an internship in museology at the Museum of Civilization in Hull.

Honour My Pleasure

hot july day with the wind asleep over at willy's house do old men sleep telling stories of fish gone by salmon who got away and to this day swim the mighty fraser their tales are long tasty yet no man

white or native
shall take them in their net

no man

they swim carefully in the muddy waters of the mountain's blood
they come to speak and to spread the word they meet and dance their egg dance over and over does the drum beat to the swishing of their tails backs arch and eject their hope into the stones
the salmon stop quietly
no more singing or drumming only the silence of the current tossing their lifeless form across rocks now milky white the rocks turn red as the salmon go to sleep

dreams of old men telling stories of how the big one got away old men wishing they had that salmon for supper old men drinking and dancing around a circle of stones

by Joseph A. Dandurand

he is apt not to even notice the coincidence of the elbow ummm excuse me (nudge nudge)
you errrr are in my way
there are two of us in this elevator give me some space besides man you stink ahhh
can you get your friend to take off that hat it's really starting to get in the way come on buddy
give me some room
elbow elevator in my way elbow sucks elbow blocking elbow stench crowd elbow line-up elbow honey elbow having been the only anishnawbe in a room packed shoulder to shoulder with tricksters my elbows have come in handy having been stuck
at your dinner party with your friends sitting next to her you talk about how the tnepnrevog naidanac topics that are hardly worth wasting our precious breath discussing i use my elbow
to get her attention (pretty clever eh?)
now that i have got her glance
i motion
we get up
and occupy our voices with more heartfelt ideas poem by namowan michael kirby

Australian Indigenous youth ambassador

by Dean Janvier

Dean Janvier is a first-year journalism student at Carleton.

Greg Phillips lives in Mount Isa, Australia, and is about to get a degree in Aboriginal studies and government, but he is no ordinary 20-year-old.

He is also a travelling ambassador for his Indigenous people, the Wanyee Aborigine Nation in Australia, having travelled in Canada and the U.S. to talk with Aboriginal youth.

Phillips arrived in Canada on Jan. 13 and toured the James Bay Cree schools in northern Quebec for a month. He gave workshops to students on the experience of his own people and on his vision for Aboriginal people around the world. He returned to Australia at the end of February.

Phillips only had three weeks to prepare before he arrived in Canada. Phillips said, "When I got on the plane, I didn't really know why I was coming, but I felt that I was meant to come. It felt right."

He said he felt very honored when the James Bay Cree school board asked him to come to Canada because one of the elders requested it after hearing him speak at two world Indigenous conferences last year in Australia.

In James Bay, Phillips talked with the students about the challenges Aboriginal youth in Australia are facing. He said he tried to inspire them to become aware of what they can do to help themselves and their own people. He was at the Peterborough Elders Gathering Feb. 18-20, where he talked to me about his trip.

Phillips said the problems for Australia's Aboriginal peoples are staggering. He said they have a high infant mortality rate, a high imprisonment rate, poor health, high unemployment, and a serious lack of running water, sewage treatment and adequate housing.

Phillips said he realizes political issues are important for his people, but sees problems with relying only on the political approach to problem solving.

"Land rights has been a key political issue for our people for many, many years. It's the political issue around which our people rally. I wouldn't say that it brings unity to Aboriginal people, because there's still a lot of identity problems," he said.

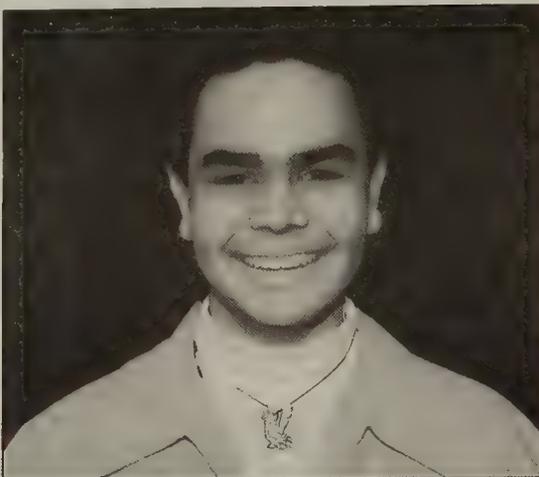

"I could talk about all those things, the statistics, but there's something I've been taught; we have a much greater thing that we can talk about and that is our spirituality."

According to Phillips, Indigenous peoples have to reclaim their traditional culture and values in order to become strong again. Phillips referred to this as a "healing process." He said it is a slow process and will require much time, effort and determination.

He said he believes the key to the healing process is for youth to learn from their traditional elders the languages, stories, ceremonies and traditions of their people.

This, according to Phillips, will help rebuild their societies in a way that will allow Indigenous peoples to retain their unique cultural identities while living in the modern world. Also, it will help to find new ways to solve modern problems.

Phillips said he draws strength from his elders, his faith in Wonjeena and his mother, Mona. He said, "I'm very thankful to Wonjeena. Wonjeena is what we call the Creator. . . I'm very thankful to Wonjeena for giving me at least some opportunities to face my own issues."

He believes that in order to have a real impact, he must be a role model himself and deal with his own issues. He said it is very hard to try and be a good role model, especially when his friends are tempting him to drink with them. When they ask him why he doesn't, he says, "Because to me drinking is like standing on my people's neck and telling them to get up."

Another problem he sees among his people is they are stuck blaming others for their problems. He said he feels a lot of frustration at times, especially when he attends community meetings and hears a people complaining about no education, high unemployment and loss of land rights, who then go home and "bash their wives or abuse their kids."

He also has compassion for these people and recognizes them for what they have experienced in their lives. "In many ways the generation before us is the one that has taken much of the real hard, killing pain, the wounding of the spirit . . . with the mission school systems, with the taking of the kids away and putting them into white homes in the city to work as maids and garden hands . . . as slaves you might as well say."

Because the older generation is suffering from the effects of all that abuse, he said he thinks the Aboriginal youth in Australia have to play a lead role in rebuilding their communities.

"They have to be the ones that stand up and say 'I don't want to see my auntie getting bashed any more' or 'I don't want any more of my friends to feel they have nothing in life and commit suicide.'"

That is why Phillips travels and speaks with young people. He said he knows Indigenous peoples from all over the world share many of the same problems in their communities. By sharing his experiences, he said he hopes he will inspire other youths to make a contribution to their community. He said he hopes they will become empowered by hearing his message.

Coming to Canada and living with the James Bay Cree people for a month has also helped Phillips. "Every time I spoke I learned something new about my own family history, some deep hurt or something I should think more about," he said.

This trip to Canada was very special for Phillips because he said he sees it as a way to give back something from his people to Aboriginal peoples in Canada.

"Indigenous peoples are coming back into the light. We've hit rock bottom. It's going to be very slow, but the healing has started. Much of my and my mother's awareness has come from Native Canadian peoples. So for that we have much to thank you for," he said.

Phillips had one final message for anyone who reads this:

"Don't be afraid of what's inside because we all have the answers inside us, everyone. It's just up to us to let our spirit awaken again."

Turn your education into a Profession with Humber's

Human Resource Management program

for University Graduates

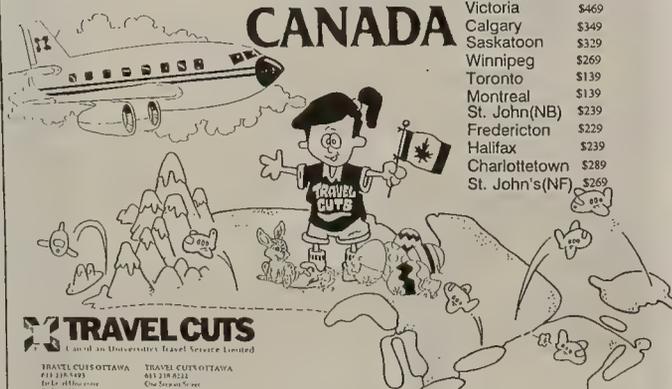

Improve your opportunities for interesting and rewarding employment by joining Humber's Human Resource Management program.

- Program is only one year in length. (starting September)
- You will receive practical experience in a workplace field practice.
- You must have a University Degree or a College Diploma to qualify.
- Successful completion will lead to professional designation (CHRP) from the Human Resources Professionals Association of Ontario (HRPAO).

call (416) 675-3000 today

STUDENT FARES within CANADA

TO:	RETURN from
Vancouver	$359
Victoria	$469
Calgary	$349
Saskatoon	$329
Winnipeg	$269
Toronto	$139
Montreal	$139
St. John(NB)	$239
Fredericton	$229
Halifax	$239
Charlottetown	$289
St. John's(NF)	$269

TRAVEL CUTS

Travel Cuts is a division of the Canadian Federation of Students Limited
 TRAVEL CUTS OTTAWA 416-238-5499
 416-238-5499
 416-238-5499
 416-238-5499
 TRAVEL CUTS OTTAWA 416-238-5499
 416-238-5499
 416-238-5499
 416-238-5499

The travel company of the Canadian Federation of Students

by Roberta Stout

Roberta Stout is a third-year Latin American studies student at Carleton.

I consider myself to be one of Canada's growing byproduct of colonialism. I am a representative member of what has become this country's mixed-heritage population.

My mother is a "full-blooded" Plains Cree from northern Alberta, and my father is of German and British descent. This has left me wavering somewhere in between.

I became an "Indian" at the age of 13. Actually, let me phrase this correctly. I have always been a Native person, yet became legally so in June, 1985 when Bill C-31 became federal law.

Bill C-31 amended Section 12(1)(b) of the Indian Act of 1867. Before this amendment, any Native woman who married a non-Native man lost her status as an Aboriginal person, as would their children.

This section of the Indian Act was extremely sexist, as a Native man marrying a non-Native woman retained his status. Adding to this was another nauseating complication — the non-Native woman, upon marrying a Native man, then "became" a Native woman. Go figure. This is how the government of Canada created "instant Indians." Yet this blatant sexism was ignored for over 100 years.

I still remember the day in the summer of 1985 when I was issued my very first and very pink Indian Status card from the Department of Indian and Northern Affairs. Upon receiving my card, my identification changed from Roberta Stout to a six-digit number.

Along with this branding came an assortment of so-called benefits such as provincial tax exemption, post-secondary education funding (a monthly allowance for Native students, as well as getting tuition paid) and pharmaceutical privileges (the federal government pays for prescriptions for all status card holders). Any of these "benefits" may be cut from the federal agenda any day.

The auspicious event of "re-assuming" who I had always been in the first place really had little effect on me. It is only in the past several years that I have come to a realization of the ludicrous nature of the whole Indian Act. What baffles me more is that the government of Canada continues to impose this detrimental document on a group of people — the First Nations of this land.

For my mother, regaining her rightful status as an Aboriginal woman created mixed emo-charged with trespassing. In other words, she now had fewer rights as a Native-born woman than that of an "instant Indian" woman.

When this section of the Indian Act was enacted in 1985, it is thought by many that the sexual discrimination in the act as a whole was also erased. This is not true. I am a Bill C-31 baby, which makes me a "half-breed" in the eyes of the government, or a Section 6(2) person under the Indian Act.

In contrast, the offspring of a Native man and a non-Native woman are seen as "full-blooded" Native or a Section 6(1)(b) person under the Indian Act. This is despite the fact that in both cases the offspring have exactly the same genetic makeup — one Native and one non-Native parent.

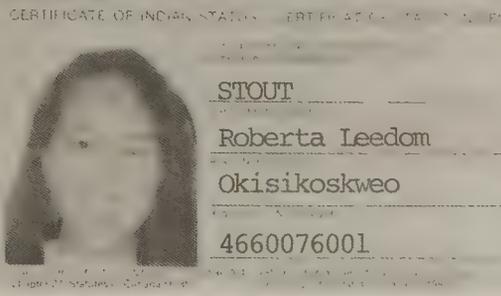

The Act can be further criticized when one looks at how our next generation of offspring will be classified. If I, a Bill C-31 baby, have a child with a non-Native man, my child will be considered non-Native in the eyes of the Indian Act. I must have a child with a recognized Section 6(2) man in order for that child to retain Native status.

However, if a Section 6(1)(b) person has a child with a non-Native person, their child would still be considered Native under the Indian Act. I hope that you are as baffled as I am.

It is clear that my generation of Native young people are still being discriminated against under the very outdated Indian Act.

Bill C-31 changed the lives of many Native peoples across this country. What is important to realize is that any system that attempts to dictate the identity of a group of people is both patronizing and detrimental. This is how I would define the Indian Act.

Status card holder 189195 has nothing more to say.

tions. Anger was the first thing that came to her mind. How could she have been stripped of her identity in the first place? For the preceding 16 years of my mother's life, she had been denied the basic human right of her Cree identity.

The day she married my father was the day she became another "white" citizen of Canada. In addition, if my mother had decided to divorce my father, she would remain "white." If she had decided to move back to the reserve where she had spent 18 years of her life, she could have been

MARCH BREAK DAYCARE

March 7 - 18, 1994

8:00 a.m. - 6:00 p.m.

This service is free and is co-sponsored by the Mature & Part-time Students' Centre and CUSA. Places still available. Registration accepted on March 7 - 8.

Please sign up at the Mature & Part-time Students' Centre

MR. SUB & The Sports Network
ENTER
THE GREAT CANADIAN PLAYOFF PARTY
CONTEST

THERE WILL BE FOUR WEEKLY DRAWS FOR HOCKEY JERSEYS, SWEAT SHIRTS AND TOTE BAGS PLUS HOCKEY T-SHIRTS WILL BE GIVEN AWAY DAILY.

THE CONTEST RUNS FROM MARCH 4 TO MARCH 31, 1994.

ONLY AT THE FOLLOWING LOCATION:
MR. SUB, 2ND LEVEL UNIVERSITY CENTRE, CARLETON UNIVERSITY

The Charlatan in Co-operation with these local merchants
PRESENTS

9 FABULOUS VACATION GETAWAYS

YOU PICK YOUR DESTINATION

ATLANTIC BEACH

Sheraton Atlantic Beach Resort
4 Days / 3 Nights

LAKE PLACID

Lake Placid Hilton
3 Days / 2 Nights

HILTON HEAD ISLAND

Holiday Inn
4 Days / 3 Nights

Atlantis Beauty Spa

"The place for honouring the self"

Gift Certificate For
"A DAY AT THE SPA"

• Hydrotherapy • Swedish Massage • Facial • Manicure
• Pedicure • Make-up Application • Light Lunch
• Champagne (optional) • Shampoo/Blow Dry

• Esthetics • Ear & Nose Piercing • Waxing • Tanning
• Hair Extensions & Braiding • Gift Certificates For All Services

• HAIR STYLING

730-8500

1183 Bank St. (at Grove Ave.) Ample Free Parking

Bring in this ad &
receive 10% off
any service
over $25

Dance Floor
D.J. Every Night

3 Big Screens
4 TVs & Satellite

MONDAYS

THURSDAYS

Men's Nite

Ladies' Nite

GREAT SPECIALS

GREAT SPECIALS

Trip for 2 Giveaway!!

Trip for 2 Giveaway!!

FREE POOL Noon 'till nine FREE POOL Noon 'till ten

96 George St. 562-0433

Today, I'm gonna tell her I love her a dozen times

567-2600

Glebe
831 Bank St.
5th Ave. Court

729-7878

Hampton Park Plaza
Carling and Kirkwood

Bring in this coupon and receive a 10% discount

*Wet & Wild
Spas*

"Ottawa's Largest Spa Rental Company"

Party Tub Rentals & Spas

Tanning, Massage Therapy & Hot Tubbing

417 Rideau Street
Ottawa, Ontario
K1N 5Y9

(613) 521-9453
(613) 789-4114

Call For Reservations

Bring in this ad for 10 1/2 hr. sessions - $40.00

GRAND CENTRAL

Coming Soon

Wednesday, March 2 Colin James
Thursday, March 17 Spirit of the West

141 George St. 241-2727

Oliver's

Thursday Nights

Party Nights

Fitcher Specials

Promo-Prize

Giveaways Weekly

Friday March 4

Oliver's Presents:
OLIVER'S BRINGS THE BEACH
BACK FROM FLORIDA

Come Dance On Our Sand Filled

Dance Floor

TON O'PRIZES

FREE SUNSHINE

ESCAPE THE COLD

A TOUCH OF SUN

Tanning Studios

2 Free Sessions

(an $18.00 value) with the purchase of 2 suntan sessions at regular prices. 1 per customer. Offer expires March 20, 1994.

A TOUCH OF SUN
723-0555
888 Meadowlands Dr.

A TOUCH OF SUN
236-0222
300 Slater St.

CALL US. IT'S A WARM IDEA.

Western & Aviation
Coats and Jackets.

Complete Indian Line Available

Western & Motorcycle
Boots. Boot Repair.

244 Elgin Street • Ottawa • K2P 1L9 • (613) 238-BOOT (2668)

Bring in this ad and receive a 10% discount on any purchase.

Take a Test Drive at MYERS and be eligible to WIN one of two Vacation Packages!

Bring in This Ad and Enter to WIN!

CHECK OUT
GM'S
$750.00
CASH BACK
GRAD
PROGRAM!

Ask Mike or any one of our
Sales Consultants about our
Low Monthly Lease Payments
on CAVALIERS or GEOs!

Mike Smith
Class of 91
Sales Consultant

Draw to take place March 19/94

MYERS CHEV • OLDS • CADILLAC 1200 Baseline at Merivale

225-1260

EACH BUSINESS ON THIS PAGE WILL BE GIVING AWAY A FREE TRIP.

Trip packages include deluxe accommodations for two adults, complimentary first morning breakfast and daily green fees for two adults when in season. Children occupying the same room as their parents stay free. Transportation is not included. All trips are fully transferable but must be used on or before February 28, 1995. To be eligible fill out an entry ballot at one of the participating merchants on or before Tuesday March 22, 1994. The winning entries will have their names published in the Thursday March 24, 1994 edition of The Charlatan. Staff members and contributors to The Charlatan for the 1993/1994 publishing year are not eligible for this promotion.

Just who is this paper for?

Editor:
On Feb. 8, 1994, a friend of mine, David Bruce Elver, who was also a student at Carleton, died. Since he was a member of the Carleton community, I felt it was important that other members of this community were informed of his untimely passing.

I subsequently approached The Charlatan and provided them with a short obituary and a photograph, stressing several times the importance of including David's picture, as many people who knew him would only recognize him by sight and not name.

On Thursday, Feb. 17 the paper appeared, with the obituary appearing in the "Letters" section but, much to my chagrin, without picture.

Looking through this particular issue I wondered about the relevance of some other pictures: e.g. another vacuous cartoon of President Farquhar, a replication of the picture on the front page, etc. . . .

The incompetency of our student newspaper is further illustrated by the fact that it missed the story about the twins separated at birth and reunited here at Carleton. This event was deemed newsworthy enough to be covered by the CBC and picked up by CNN, but not The Charlatan.

The Charlatan's failure to pick up this story is not surprising. It parallels the exclusion of David's picture and a proper obituary. The reason this story was ignored it appears, is that involved Carleton students.

Second, it involved relatively straightforward facts and therefore provided little opportunity for The Charlatan to indulge in the kind of mental masturbation commonly used to castigate our president, OC Transpo, records, movies and the mainstream press.

On the front page of The Charlatan we are reminded weekly that we are reading "Carleton's independent student newspaper," making one wonder what it is independent of — the administration, advertisers, reality or its student population. Being a regular reader, may I suggest that this independence coincides closer with the latter.

Peter Urmetzer
MA Sociology II

Speak up before it's too late

Editor:
I'm a first-year student here at Carleton University. I receive student loans, I'm part of the Ontario Work Study Program and have a part-time job outside of school.

I know the feeling of desperation of not being able to make ends meet. It kills me to hear that the government has the nerve to raise tuition. But, I guess that's old news to most of us.

As of now, tuition takes about 40 per cent of my total income. I'm sure there are others in my situation. But, from the looks of it, most people seem pretty passive to the fact that we may have to pay up to 50 per cent more tuition.

No one is saying we all have to rally or protest. But, take two minutes out of your time to make your voice heard, make a phone call, write a letter. Just don't let them shaft us with this tuition hike, because they will do it.

Remember the GST? Most said nothing when they proposed to implement it, but we all cried when it was implemented. Most of us are under the poverty limit as it is. We cannot afford to pay any more, and we have to give the government and everyone else that message.

Those of you collecting student loans or people who cannot afford these high tuition hikes, remember that most of the people who want to implement these tuition hikes can afford them. We cannot!! Make it clear that university is not only for the rich, but for all who treasure the opportunity for a better future.

Armando Maio
Arts I

Prof's should put up or shut up

Editor:
It was with great interest that I followed the letter-writing feud in The Charlatan last term between Gary Anandasangaree and Jon Pammatt, the head of the political science department. Anandasangaree's position was that the department was too "Eurocentric."

Paradoxically, many of the lily-white professors within Pammatt's department share Anandasangaree's concern. These self-hating professors routinely pontificate to their students about the injustices perpetuated by "white hegemony" within Canadian society, not the least of which is the supposed lack of systemic and institutional racial minority representation.

I would suggest to Pammatt and his "progressive" ilk on staff that if these white professors are seriously interested in correcting past injustices, they should immediately hand in their resignations and insist they be replaced exclusively by racial minority professors. What better way to show their commitment towards having the department adequately reflect the university's diverse environment?

Pammatt and his "progressive" stable of professors should for once practise what they routinely preach to their students in class. In other words, put up or shut up!

Steve Dumas
Political Science IV

Education not only for wealthy

Editor:
Within a month, the provincial government will make it clear just how much they intend to increase tuition. In the current recession, students find it harder than ever to pay for an education. Why then do fees not go down?

Instead, they are likely to increase at a rate many times the rate of inflation, simply because the NDP government refuses to shift the burden where it belongs on to the thousands of profitable corporations which pay no taxes at all.

If we are to prevent post-secondary education from becoming exclusively for the wealthy, it is crucial to organize a student movement that is capable of beating the fee hikes, not just protesting them. The "Halt the Hike" protest of Feb. 4 was not, unfortunately, the start of such a movement. It was not used to sign up active students and draw them into building further events.

More importantly, the graduate students, including many teaching assistants of CUPE Local 2323, were having their monthly council meeting, amazingly inside the very room that the demonstration targeted.

It is ironic that graduate students were prevented from attending, as they have been some of the most vocal and active opponents of tuition hikes. One of the demands of the TA union has been an immediate tuition freeze for its members and they have demonstrated a willingness to fight for it. If they go on strike, they must have the support of everyone who opposes fee hikes.

Brian Donnelly
Arts IV
Carleton International
Socialists Club

VOTERS LIST FOR CHARLATAN ELECTION 1994/95

It's that time of year again — time to pass on the torch to a fresh buncha editors. Anyone can run. Anyone who has 4 credits in the masthead this year can vote for editor-in-chief, op/ed editor and board of directors staff reps. Anyone with 4 credits who has contributed once to a section can vote for that editor.

Voting for the editor-in-chief will take place Monday, March 21 and Tuesday, March 22 in Ombuds Services, Room 511 Unicentre, between 9 a.m. and 4:30 p.m. (closed 12-1 p.m.). Voting for the section editors and board reps will take place Monday, March 28 and Tuesday, March 29, same place, same times.

Candidates for editor-in-chief will be speaking at the staff meeting on Thursday, March 17 at 5:30 p.m. Candidates for section editors will do the same on Thursday, March 24, at 5:30 p.m. If you have any questions about your eligibility to vote, or want to run for a position, don't hesitate to call Mo Gannon at 788-6680.

VOTERS AS OF MARCH 3, 1994

EDITOR-IN-CHIEF, OP/ED EDITOR, BOARD OF DIRECTORS REPS
Aaron, Bram
Abernethy, Sarah
Ali, Kim
Bartolf, David
Bellefeuille, Andre
Bellemare, José
Bernard, Joe
Bichat, Gladys
Bock, Naomi
Bodnar, Alex
Brethour, Pat
Brzozowski, Anna
Bustos, Alex
Caffrey, Ron
Campbell, Frank
Capuani, Joanne
Carlucci, Mario
Carpenter, Dave
Ciszewski, Johanna
Comino, M.G.
Cooper, Bill
Currie, Lisa
Davies, Jennifer
DeCloet, Derek
Dobrenski, Steve
D'Orazio, Franco
Dowdall, Brent
Drever, Ken
Duncan, Todd
Edwards, Drew
Follett, Amanda
Forieri, Susanna
Fraser, Shannon
Gallop, Angie

Gannon, Mo
Garrison, Stephanie
Grant, Joel
Kenneth
Haggart, Blayne
Haley, Susie
Hodges, David
Jafri, Ali
Jordan, Karin
Keeling, Arn
Keenan, Sheila
Khan, Kalem
Labonte, Bill
Levine, Sara-Lynne
Mahoney, Jill
Mainville, Michael
Mealiffe, Derrick
McKay, Kevin
McKenzie, Jodi
McLeod, Ian
Nakashima, Ryan
Nuttall-Smith, Chris
O'Connor, Tim
Oza, Prema
Pangalos, Anthony
Paterson, Pamela
Perry, Jill
Peters, Mike
Poots, Trina
Power, Gavin
Pryor, Tim
Rappaport, Mike
Restivo, Kevin
Richards, Sarah
Richardson, Karen
Scallen, Shawn
Scott, Richard G.D.
Shigetomi, Cindy
Shurme, Matt
Silcoff, Sean
Slimto, Audrey
Skinner, Matt
Smith, Andrea
Strutek, Karolina

Steinbachs, John
Tattersall, Jane
Tharayil, Jay
Tomlinson, Dean
Vesely, Steven
Ward, Ryan
Watt, Caron
Weikle, Brandie
Wiebe, Andrea
Willbond, Rob
Wood, Clayton
Workman, Tanya
Zelinsky, Tonya

Skinner, Matt
Smith, Andrea
Strutek, Karolina
Steinbachs, John
Tattersall, Jane
Vesely, Steven
Ward, Ryan
Watt, Caron
Weikle, Brandie
Wiebe, Andrea
Wood, Clayton
Workman, Tanya
Zelinsky, Tonya

Pryor, Tim
Scott, Richard G.D.
Skinner, Matt
Smith, Andrea
Strutek, Karolina
Steinbachs, John
Vesely, Steven
Ward, Ryan
Watt, Caron
Weikle, Brandie
Wiebe, Andrea
Wood, Clayton
Workman, Tanya
Zelinsky, Tonya

Ward, Ryan
SPORTS
Aaron, Bram
Bellemare, José
Carlucci, Mario
DeCloet, Derek
Dowdall, Brent
Fraser, Shannon
Gannon, Mo
Haggart, Blayne
Keeling, Arn
Keenan, Sheila
Labonte, Bill
O'Connor, Tim
Oza, Prema
Pangalos, Anthony
Peters, Mike
Power, Gavin
Pryor, Tim
Seddon, Adam
Silcoff, Sean
Smith, Andrea
Smith, Andrea
Strutek, Karolina
Steinbachs, John
Tattersall, Jane
Vesely, Steven
Ward, Ryan

Gannon, Mo
Garrison, Stephanie
Haggart, Blayne
Haley, Susie
Hodges, David
Jafri, Ali
Jordan, Karin
Keeling, Arn
Keenan, Sheila
Khan, Kalem
Mahoney, Jill
McLeod, Ian
Nuttall-Smith, Chris
O'Connor, Tim
Oza, Prema
Pangalos, Anthony
Peters, Mike
Power, Gavin
Pryor, Tim
Seddon, Adam
Silcoff, Sean
Smith, Andrea
Smith, Andrea
Strutek, Karolina
Steinbachs, John
Tattersall, Jane
Vesely, Steven
Ward, Ryan
Willbond, Rob

Duncan, Todd
Follett, Amanda
Gallop, Angie
Gannon, Mo
Haggart, Blayne
Keeling, Arn
Keenan, Sheila
Nakashima, Ryan
Nuttall-Smith, Chris
Scallen, Shawn
Scott, Richard G.D.
Smith, Andrea
Steinbachs, John
Tomlinson, Dean
Vesely, Steven

NEWS

Bartolf, David
Bellemare, José
Bock, Naomi
Bustos, Alex
Carlucci, Mario
DeCloet, Derek
D'Orazio, Franco
Dowdall, Brent
Edwards, Drew
Gallop, Angie
Gannon, Mo
Haggart, Blayne
Haley, Susie
Hodges, David
Jordan, Karin
Keeling, Arn
Keenan, Sheila
Mainville, Michael
McKenzie, Jodi
McLeod, Ian
Nakashima, Ryan
Nuttall-Smith, Chris
O'Connor, Tim
Oza, Prema
Pangalos, Anthony
Peters, Mike
Silcoff, Sean

NATIONAL

Aaron, Bram
Bartolf, David
Bellemare, José
Bernard, Joe
Brethour, Pat
Bustos, Alex
Carlucci, Mario
DeCloet, Derek
D'Orazio, Franco
Dowdall, Brent
Gallop, Angie
Gannon, Mo
Haggart, Blayne
Haley, Susie
Jordan, Karin
Keeling, Arn
Keenan, Sheila
Levine, Sara-Lynne
Mahoney, Jill
Mainville, Michael
McKenzie, Jodi
McLeod, Ian
Nakashima, Ryan
O'Connor, Tim
Oza, Prema
Pangalos, Anthony

FEATURES

Bellemare, José
Bock, Naomi
Caffrey, Rori
Carlucci, Mario
DeCloet, Derek
Dobrenski, Steve
D'Orazio, Franco
Dowdall, Brent
Gallop, Angie
Gannon, Mo
Garrison, Stephanie
Haggart, Blayne
Hodges, David
Jordan, Karin
Keeling, Arn
Keenan, Sheila
Mahoney, Jill
Mainville, Michael
McLeod, Ian
O'Connor, Tim
Power, Gavin
Pryor, Tim
Rappaport, Mike
Seddon, Adam
Silcoff, Sean
Smith, Andrea
Vesely, Steven

ARTS

Aaron, Bram
Bartolf, David
Bellemare, José
Bernard, Joe
Bock, Naomi
Bustos, Alex
Caffrey, Rori
Carlucci, Mario
Carpenter, Dave
Ciszewski, Johanna
Comino, M.G.
DeCloet, Derek
D'Orazio, Franco
Dowdall, Brent
Edwards, Drew
Forieri, Susanna

PHOTO

Bellefeuille, Andre
Bodnar, Alex
Brethour, Pat
Brzozowski, Anna
Capuani, Joanne
Carlucci, Mario
Ciszewski, Johanna
Cooper, Bill
Currie, Lisa
Davies, Jennifer
Dobrenski, Steve
Dowdall, Brent

ONE CREDIT LEFT TO VOTE

Andrew, Suzanne
Clements, Rob
Craft, Christina
Crosbie, Vanessa
Docking, David
Goodman, Sarah
Herland, Neil
Izzard, Suzanne
James, Colin
Johnson, Doug
Kirinchak, Stephanka
Kirkham, John
Klaus, Alex
Lamb, Mark
Manchak, Renata
McLennan, Rob
McCrosbie, James
Orol, Ron
Owens, Greg
Price, John
Reid, Chris
Richardson, Michael
Sane, Ean
Stansfield, James

SUMMER SESSION 1994

A selection of day and evening courses in arts, social sciences, science, and computer science, at the undergraduate and graduate levels.

its courses in Metro Ottawa on cable channel 53 or at a distance by videocassette.

Specialized Summer Schools in Criminal Justice and Social Policy, and Political Economy.

For a copy of the 1994 Summer Supplement, write to the School of Continuing Education, Room 302, Robertson Hall, Carleton University, 1125 Colonel By Drive, Ottawa, Ontario K1S 5B6.

Telephone: (613) 788-3500

CARLETON STUDENTS: ARE YOU:

Interested in how the Carleton Administration manages a $150 million operating budget?

Interested in the Carleton Administration's views on tuition increases?

Interested in the Carleton Administration outlining their view on the current and projected financial circumstances for Carleton?

CARLETON UNIVERSITY STUDENTS' ASSOCIATION

Invites all students to participate in:

An OPEN FORUM on these issues with Carleton President Robin Farquhar, Vice-President Les Copley and Vice-President Spruce Riordon.

TUESDAY, MARCH 8, 1994.
12:30 p.m. - BAKER LOUNGE -
4th FLOOR UNICENTRE BUILDING

Lots Of Opportunity For Students To Directly Participate!
GET INVOLVED - SHOW UP - TAKE PART!!!!

LUNCH
MUNCH

DINNER

Join us for Great Food, Refreshment and Entertainment
4 Large Screen TV's

TSN and Satellite Dish for the best in sports
Breakfast Menu served Saturday and Sunday til 4 pm

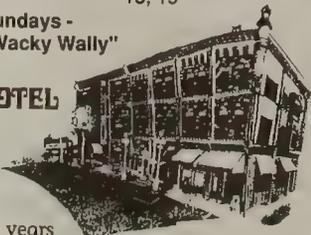

Saturday and Tuesday - Wing Nights

Live Entertainment Friday, Saturday and Sundays
No Cover

Once Again	Mar. 4, 5
Tango Pirates	Mar. 11, 12
Club F	Mar. 17 St. Pats, 18, 19

Wednesdays and Sundays -
Karaoke with "Wacky Wally"

SOMERSET HOUSE HOTEL

In the heart of the city for 95 years
A great, inexpensive spot for visiting friends
352 Somerset St. W., at Bank
Telephone 233-7762

An Important Message from Health Services

Ontario doctors are also covered by the Social Contract and are expected to reduce services. This provincial mandate requires physicians to take unpaid days off work.

The Ontario Medical Association is asking physicians to select a week in March to close down. This is a hectic time in the university school year.

Health Services will not close down but will reduce services during the weeks of March 7th and March 14th. This decision respects social contract needs and maintains our responsibility and commitment towards student health.

Our ability to handle routine visits may be limited but urgent care will be maintained. We anticipate your understanding and cooperation in this matter. We all share a responsibility in addressing these social contract concerns.

HEALTH SERVICES, Room 600
UNICENTRE, 788-6674

9:00 a.m. - 6:00 p.m. Monday - Thursday

9:00 a.m. - 5:00 p.m. Fridays

BY APPOINTMENT OR WALK-IN

Medal wins for Nordic teams

Men take silver. Women take silver. Medal streak grows.

by Ryan Ward
Charlatan Staff

Nothing ever works out the way you imagine it.

Take the men's and women's nordic ski teams for instance.

This was the year the men's team was finally going to break its four-year string of second-place finishes and win gold. This was the year the perennially strong women's team was going to fall out of the medal standings after losing core veterans from last year.

Funny how it didn't work out that way.

Nordic Men	Nordic Women
Lakehead 70	Nipissing 106
Carleton 89	Carleton 108
Queen's 97	Queen's 126

Instead, for the fifth year in a row, the men's nordic ski team placed second at the Ontario Universities Athletic Association finals, held this year in Duntroon, Ont., Feb. 19-20.

As for the women, they shocked the competition, pulling out an unexpected second-place finish at the Ontario Women's Interuniversity Athletic Association finals also in Duntroon at the same time.

The medal streaks then, continue.

"We've won silver every year since I came to Carleton," said veteran skier Frank Ferrari. "It's frustrating, but it could be a lot worse."

The men's team, led by skiers Wayne Dustin, Chris Webb and Ferrari, battled the universities of Lakehead and Queen's all weekend before settling for silver.

"We were battling it out for the overall lead against Queen's," said nordic ski coach Mark Rabb, commenting on the three-way fight. "Then on Sunday we broke away from Queen's, but watched Lakehead walk away with the title."

Dustin led men's the team, winning both the 10-kilometre classic race and the 15-kilometre freestyle race among a field of 67 skiers.

"I love to race and push hard no matter how small the race," said Dustin. "I mentally stay pretty calm and that is why I tend to race consistently."

Webb placed 11th in the classic race and seventh in the freestyle.

Other top performances included Ferrari, who finished seventh in the classic and 17th in the freestyle, as well as Nordic skier Wayne Dustin led the men with two first place finishes. Erin Long (inset) paced the women with two top-ten results.

Scott Dymond who placed 20th and 23rd respectively.

While a top result was expected of the men, no such expectations were placed on the women's team, who were rebuilding this year after losing key veterans like Miriam Tyson and Ailsa Eyvindson.

Nevertheless, the women, led by Kirsten Davis, Erin Long and Catherine Mulvihill, surprised everyone by placing second.

"It was incredibly shocking what the women did," said coach Rabb. "At the beginning of the season, I didn't see the women finishing second."

Davis placed fifth in the five-kilometre classic race and 12th in the 10-kilometre freestyle. Teammate Long finished ninth in the classic and seventh in the freestyle race, while Mulvihill placed 17th and 11th respectively.

Rookie Gayle Barnett also raced well, posting her best finish of the season after

Year	Men	Women
1994	Silver	Silver
1993	Silver	Gold
1992	Silver	Silver
1991	Silver	Gold
1990	Silver	Bronze

placing 23rd in the classic race and 15th in the freestyle.

Afterwards, all the women agreed their win was the result of team co-operation.

"It was a combined effort which gave us the overall result we did," said Mulvihill. □

PHOTOS BY CHRIS LONG

RANT 'N' RAVEN

What's wrong with overtime?

by Ryan Ward
Charlatan Staff

Final score: Sweden 3, Canada 2. Err, uh, I mean Peter Forsberg 1, Paul Kariya 0.

That's what the real score should have read after Forsberg of Sweden ended an excruciatingly tense Olympic gold-medal hockey game between Canada and Sweden by scoring on the seventh shot of a shootout after the game and overtime ended in a 2-2 tie.

Because Sweden the team didn't win the gold medal. Forsberg the individual did.

And as a result, both Canada and Sweden got burned of the opportunity to win or lose the game fair and square — by a crapshoot.

Why a shootout? If the International Olympic Committee was trying to save time, why didn't it just end the game after the overtime period and give them both gold medals?

If time wasn't a factor, why didn't they let the teams decide the outcome in a continuous overtime?

If they actually thought this was going to improve the game, they were wrong.

A shootout to decide a gold medal is no way to decide anything.

It's like eliminating extra innings in Game 7 of the World Series in favor of a home-run hitting contest to decide a champion.

And the shootout formula becomes even more unbearable when one considers the quality of hockey played by the two teams.

Canada trailed 1-0 for most of the game and would have been down by many more but for the outstanding goaltending of netminder Corey Hirsch, who frustrated the Swedes time and time again, particularly in the second period when he stopped 16 shots to keep Canada close.

Rallying in the third, Canada scored twice to take a lead, which they maintained until less than two minutes remained in the game.

Then Canadian defenceman Brad Werenka hooked Sweden's Mats Naslund to the ice, taking a crucial penalty.

Within 30 seconds, Sweden's Magnus Svensson tipped a screen shot from the point to tie the game at two.

The game ended and 10 minutes of overtime accomplished nothing. The shootout ensued.

It was exciting, yes. Nerve-racking, definitely. Fair, absolutely not.

In fairness, a shootout doesn't compare in any way to overtime periods.

It ignores that most basic fact that hockey is a team game played by six skaters who must depend on each other. It ignores the necessity of co-operation and rewards luck and individual skill instead.

As a result, both teams were forced to sit and watch a one-on-one display of luck decide a gold medal. The outstanding play of both teams was ignored.

That's no way to decide a hockey game. □

Home not too sweet for Raven fencers

by Shannon Fraser
Charlatan Staff

Two Raven entries were foiled at the provincial fencing championships Feb. 19-20 at Carleton.

The Carleton women's foil team placed third in its class, while Simon Pianarosa, the only individual fencer to qualify from Carleton, placed 10th in the sabre.

"They were all just a little under the weather, but I think that overall they did pretty well," said coach James Ireland.

The women's foil team, comprised of captain Lilianna Piazze, Donna Switzer, Tammy Duquette and Natalie Remedios, entered the championships as favorites after placing first in the Ontario Women's Interuniversity Athletic Association's east division fencing sectionals.

They placed third in the provincials after two close losses to Queen's and Toronto, who finished first and second. Ireland was pleased nevertheless.

"That's the top performance of a women's foil team since I've been here — which is six years," he said.

Last year the women's foil team placed fourth at the provincial finals.

In the men's individual competition, Pianarosa entered the tournament standing fourth in the east division of the Ontario Universities Athletic Association, but finished 10th after re-injuring his hip muscle three days before the finals.

"I pulled a Browning," he said.

Ireland was disappointed.

"I don't blame the kid for not being happy. He had high aspirations and it's unfortunate injury just got in the way of those aspirations. Hopefully next year, no injuries, he'll show people what would have happened."

Despite the poorer showing this year, Ireland said he's upbeat about next year.

"I think they wanted to do better... but, hey, next year. The whole team is pretty well intact and hopefully we'll win." □

Raven Donna Switzer lost to Silvia Pascual of Queen's in foil action.

STEVENESSELY

Raven Records

QUOTE OF THE WEEK

"I pulled a Browning."
Men's fencer Simon Pianarosa may have coined a new phrase with this comment after he injured a hip muscle prior to the provincial finals on Feb. 19-20 and placed a disappointing fourth in the individual sabre class.

OWIAA VOLLEYBALL East Division Final Standings

	W	L	T	F	A	PTS
York	9	1	0	28	5	18
Toronto	8	2	0	28	8	16
Ottawa	6	4	0	20	15	12
Queen's	5	5	0	16	17	10
Ryerson	1	9	0	4	27	2
Carleton	1	9	0	4	28	0

OWIAA BASKETBALL East Division Final Standings

	W	L	T	F	A	PTS
Laurent	12	0	0	929	576	24
Toronto	10	2	0	856	596	20
Ottawa	7	5	0	803	720	14
Queen's	6	6	0	788	769	12
York	5	7	0	696	752	10
Ryerson	2	10	0	606	803	4
Carleton	0	12	0	469	9310

OWIAA Athlete of the Week

Western student Michelle Vesprini is the OWIAA athlete of the week.

Vesprini scored 59 points in season ending wins over Windsor and Brock last week. She ends up as the league's leading scorer with an average of 22.4 points per game.

OAAA BASKETBALL East Division Final Standings

	W	L	T	F	A	PTS
Laurent	10	2	0	024	950	20
Ryerson	9	3	0	023	923	18
Toronto	8	4	0	902	880	16
York	6	6	0	923	948	12
Ottawa	4	8	0	927	959	8
Queen's	3	9	0	904	969	6
Carleton	2	10	0	912	9864

OAAA BASKETBALL East Scoring Leaders Final Standings

	FG	AT	FT	AT	AVE
Beason	149	277	77	113	33.4
Charles	106	220	122	147	28.0
Smart	101	220	81	109	26.3
Swords	93	217	43	66	22.2
Fischer	96	190	61	73	21.1

OAAA BASKETBALL East Rebound Leaders Final Standings

	G	RBS	AVE
A. Beason - Ryr	12	137	11.4
T. Charles - Crl	12	137	10.4
C. Fischer - Lrmtn	12	106	8.8
C. Porter - Ott	12	100	8.3
D. Reid - Ott	12	90	7.5

OAAA Athlete of the Week

Djordje Ljubicic of the York Yeomen volleyball team is the OAAA athlete of the week.

Ljubicic guided the Yeomen to the OAAA volleyball title defeating McMaster 3-1 in the gold medal match.

Rookie team swims to personal bests

Raven Andrew Smith qualifies at last chance meet

by Steven Vesely
Charlatan Staff

It took a little longer than he expected, but Carleton swimmer Andrew Smith did what he had set out to do at the beginning of the year.

Smith qualified for the Canadian Interuniversity Athletic Union swim championships in Victoria, B.C., to be held March 11-13, at a last-chance swim meet against the University of Ottawa on Feb. 22 in the 100-metre butterfly.

Earlier in the week, Smith had narrowly missed qualifying for the championships in his best event, the 200-metre individual medley, at the Ontario Universities Athletic Association swim championships in Toronto on Feb. 19-20.

"It's an individual type of thing. You can't have a best meet every time and you can't have a best time every time either," said Smith. "Lots of people had a chance at qualifying, but didn't quite make it. I'm just glad I came through."

Most male swimmers train to peak at the provincial finals, so when none of them qualified it was a bitter pill for some to swallow, said men's coach Brian Johnson.

"They did well. Almost universally they posted personal bests," said Johnson. "The only disappointment was that no one qualified for the CIAU's."

The Carleton men's swim team placed 10th among 15 universities at the OAAA championships, with Smith leading the way, placing fourth in the 200-metre individual medley, fifth in the 100-metre freestyle and sixth in the 200-metre freestyle.

Other noteworthy results were posted by swimmers Peter Andersen and Blair Christie, who placed among the top 16 in their events.

Andrew Smith is training daily in preparation for the upcoming national finals.

Last year the Ravens qualified two men — Smith and Don Burton — for the finals at the provincial championships, where the team placed eighth among 14 squads.

Johnson said despite not having any swimmers qualify at the provincial finals, he was still pleased with this year's results, particularly since five of the 10-member squad are first-year swimmers.

"In retrospect, I was disappointed because the standard by which the program is judged is by how many swimmers qualified for the nationals," he said. "But looking at the overall performance, personal bests and placings, it was a successful season."

But the real story of the weekend was Smith's narrow miss at qualifying in the 200-metre individual medley. In the morning heats, Smith posted a time of 2:09.17 — just 7-100ths off the qualifying time of 2:09.10.

"That's what I swam in the morning so I thought I wouldn't have any problem qualifying in the final. But I was wrong."

After three 200-metre races throughout the day, Smith had nothing left to give in his individual medley final.

"My splits for each 50-metre lap were just slightly slower than normal. I was tired," he said.

That left the Ottawa meet as his last chance at qualifying for a third straight year and he didn't disappoint. □

The Ceremonial Guard

This summer, participate in the colourful Changing the Guard Ceremony on Parliament Hill. You will be paid from May 11 to August 30, 1994, while learning basic military techniques with a group of dynamic young men and women.

Join the Reserve and enjoy summer employment with a difference.

For more information, contact:

The Governor General's Foot Guards
Cartier Square Drill Hall
Ottawa, Ontario
K1A 0K2 (613) 995-4020 (Collect)

The Reserve: Rewarding part-time employment

Ian, full-time student and member of the Ceremonial Guard during the summer months.

Buddies are building blocks of the future

Raven rookies are the core to success of men's basketball program

by Kevin Restivo
Charlatan Staff

They are from opposite ends of the country, one from Sherwood, P.E.I., the other from Burnaby, B.C.

One listens to the pulsating beat of rap groups like Leaders of the New School, while the other is a hard-core '70s retro man who adores the tunes of Bruce Springsteen.

There are differences, yes. But make no mistake about it — they are also best of friends.

Who are they? Guards Reagh Vidito and Andrew Smith of the Carleton men's basketball team: the lanky, streaky scorer from the East and the stocky, all-around athlete from the West.

Look past the barrier of superficial differences and it's easy to see just exactly why these newcomers to the Ontario Universities Athletic Association basketball scene have forged such a close friendship.

Both have had to endure the growing pains a team goes through when it is as young as the Ravens, who played this season with nine rookies.

Their inexperience showed, as the Ravens ended their season two weeks ago last in the east division of the Ontario Universities Athletic Association basketball league with a record of 2-10.

Rebuilding will take time, and both Smith and Vidito will likely be an essential part of the core of the team for a number of years to come. However, both still remain humble about their roles.

"We have a great group of rookies who all contribute. It's not just Reagh and I," says Smith.

Before their arrival at Carleton, Vidito's and Smith's academic careers ran similar paths. Vidito entered the year with 7.5 credits from the University of Prince Edward Island, while Smith completed a year at Vancouver Community College.

Both played on excellent high-school teams, but were always the underlings on talent-laden teams and thus neither of the two were heavily recruited by Carleton or any other school.

Vidito has always known he wanted to play university basketball, but wasn't always sure he was capable of it. He felt he had to prove to himself he could play at that level.

Smith, on the other hand, had pretty much written off his chances of playing anything other than high-school basketball, mainly because of his proficiency on the rugby field.

Although Smith's all-around athletic ability allowed him to play on both of British Columbia's rugby and basketball teams throughout high school, scheduling forced him to give one up. He decided to pursue rugby.

Nonetheless, their passion for the game led them to Carleton and it's obvious they're happy to be here playing the game they love.

"Without basketball, we wouldn't have been able to meet each other," says Vidito.

Both Smith and Vidito readily admit they're going to have to increase their leadership role in the years to come with the imminent departure of leading scorer and team leader Taffe Charles.

"Reagh and I as well as the rest of the team will have to pick up the team when it's down," says Smith.

But for now, their roles on the team are well-defined. They have learned to accept they are simply cogs in a wheel, just like any other player on the team.

That both players know their niche is clear in their choice of NBA players they identify with.

Reggie Miller of the Indiana Pacers

(Smith is the leader)
"who will step up in the years to come and take over (the leadership role)."

-Reagh Vidito

Smith (23) and Vidito (31) have been bright spots on a struggling Raven squad this year.

"(Vidito is)
Mr. Automatic with the sweetest shot on the team."

- Andrew Smith

gives his team consistent three-point shooting and solid minutes on both ends of the floor. Like Miller, Vidito gives the Ravens a big time spark with his three-point shooting. He'd love to get the same amount of floor time as a player like Miller, but admits it has taken him time to become a more complete player like his idol.

By contrast, Smith likens his style of play to Scott Skiles of the Orlando Magic. Like Skiles, Smith is on the floor consistently throughout the game and is probably invisible to the average fan because of his limited offensive role. But for a head coach like Paul Armstrong, he is a dream, an extension of the coach on the playing floor because of his instincts.

Like Skiles, Smith is the glue that bonds the team together, the player that brings all the intangibles like diving for balls and in-your-face defence to the team.

To Smith, Vidito is "Mr. Automatic with the sweetest shot on the team." Meanwhile, Vidito believes Smith is "the leader who will step up in the years to come and take over (the leadership role)."

Though their playing styles are quite different, both say the other is a definite contender for the OUAA east Rookie of the Year award, despite each other's protests.

All these experiences have provided them a short but lasting friendship. A friendship and bond they hope to build on leading the men's basketball program back to prominence. □

A ACCEPTABLE ALTERNATIVE MINI STORAGE

A ACCEPTABLE ALTERNATIVE MINI STORAGE
Hume Trading Company Limited
MINI STORAGE SPACE

Going home for the summer? Need safe, clean, secure storage for your desk, furniture and personal items? From $20.00 per month. 4863 Bank St. Call 822-7666. Lowest rates in the region since 1963.

Meadowlands Family Health Centre

Hog's Back Plaza
888 Meadowlands Drive East
corner of Prince of Wales Dr. and Meadowlands Dr.
(behind McDonald's)
Ottawa, Ontario K2C3R2
228-2882

Family Medicine
Adolescent Medicine
Obstetrics and Maternity Care

Pediatrics
Minor Surgery
Counselling Services

Nous Parlons Français

Open 7 days a week
Weekdays 8AM to 8PM
Weekends / Holidays 10AM to 6PM

With or without appointment

Prince of Wales Drive
Colonel By Drive
Hog's Back
Meadowlands Family Health Centre
Carleton U

Women's season ends...

by Jay Tharayil
Charlatan Staff

Last year, the women's basketball team salvaged its pride by winning two of its last five games, posting a dubious best record of 2-10 in 10 years.

This year's women's team found itself in a similar situation a few weeks back, but couldn't improve on or even duplicate that feat.

The Ravens ended their season winless at 0-12, after losing 64-30 to the York Yeomen on Feb. 18 and 79-45 to the Ryerson Lady Rams on Feb. 19. The losses left the Ravens last in the east division of the Ontario Women's Interuniversity Athletic Association.

Forward Sara Smith led Carleton with 11 points against York, while rookie guard Gillian Roseway was the top Raven with 14 points against Ryerson.

While many problems like poor shooting contributed to the losses, the Ravens had major difficulty hanging on to the ball, committing 65 turnovers over the weekend — 39 against York and 26 more against Ryerson.

Roseway said the Ravens played better than they had in the past.

"We improved but we didn't come together. We still have a long way to go," she said.

...men's season over too

by Kevin Restivo
Charlatan Staff

If the Carleton men's basketball team's season was an Olympic sport, it would be downhill skiing.

The Ravens season ended in a vertical drop in Toronto Feb. 18-19, with two losses to the playoff-bound York Yeomen and the Ryerson Rams by the scores of 70-58 and 82-72.

The losses mean the team finished the season on a 10-game losing skid, alone in seventh place in the east division of the Ontario Universities Athletic Association with a record of 2-10.

By comparison, last year's Ravens also came in last, but finished with a 3-9 record.

The losses left the team somewhat frustrated, especially with the referees in both contests.

"That was the worst officiating we've had all year," said rookie Raven guard Andrew Smith.

It was so bad that fourth-year forward Taffe Charles was ejected from the game with York for arguing with the referees. Although the team picked up its game, it wasn't enough.

"It was really nice to see that everybody stepped up their game without Taffe," said Smith.

Head coach Paul Armstrong said not having Charles in the second half hurt. Brian Smith was the top scorer for the Ravens this game with 23 points.

Against Ryerson, Carleton's rebounding was a key factor.

"We were out-rebounded 36-23 . . . that's normally an area we cover pretty well for a team our size, but we let it go against them," said Armstrong.

Despite the losses, Smith said the team is disappointed the season is over.

"I wish we could keep going," he said. "I think everyone would like to see our season continue because I think we were really just starting to gel."

Charlatan Hockey Pool

Here are the point leaders in the Charlatan Hockey Pool. Points were tabulated as of Tue. Mar. 1, 1994. Regular season leaders can only win the dinner prize once.

BAXTER'S

1344 Bank Street
(at Riverside)
738-3323

1	Patrick Soden	667
2	R. De Vecchi	654
3	Anjali Varma	651
4	Tyler Vaillant	645
5	Vicki Mavraganis	644
6	Joseph Kurkose	644
7	Alex Varki	644
8	R. Daggupaty	642
9	Jeff Parker	640
10	Paul Donovan	640

Congratulations to Paul Donovan who wins this week's dinner prize. Paul can come and pick up his $25 dinner certificates for Baxter's restaurant at The Charlatan. (Italicized names are all former winners.) By the way Paul, thanks for the note. Turns out Jeff Pevkev never collected the prize because he doesn't exist.

Charlatan Sports Trivia

1. Place your answer, name and phone number on a piece of paper and submit it to The Charlatan sports editor, room 531 Unicentre. The recipient of the prize will be determined by a supervised draw of all correct answers.

2. All answers must be received by Tuesday, March 8, 1994. The winner should come up to the office for the prize on any Monday or Tuesday.

3. Contestants may submit only one entry per week.

4. Charlatan staff members and their families are not eligible to participate.

Answer the following question correctly and become eligible to win a $25 dinner for two at Schadillac's Saloon.

Name the NHL goalie who has recorded more assists than any other in his career?

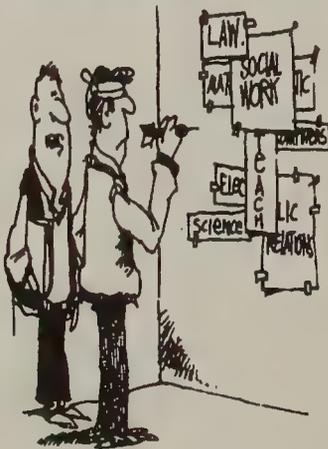

Answer:

Name:

Phone:

Congratulations to Ed Kieser who knew Canada won seven medals at the 1992 Winter Olympics in Albertville.

MAJORS DECLARATION FAIR

if you

- haven't chosen your major yet,
- are thinking of changing majors, or
- don't know where you are headed,

THIS IS THE EVENT FOR YOU!

come and

- COMPLETE your Declaration of Major / Change of Major Application
- CONSULT with undergraduate advisors from all departments
- ANSWER your questions regarding OSAP

'DECIDED TO FINALIZE YOUR PLANS, YEAH?'

WEDNESDAY MARCH 9, 1994

PORTER HALL 11 am - 2:30 pm

Co-sponsored by CUSA and Counselling and Student Life Services

Waxing philosophic with Counting Crows

by Charmead Schella
Charlatan Staff

Counting Crows, opening for Cracker
Porter Hall
Feb. 17

When you think of the flimsiness of anything you may hang on to in life, you might as well be counting crows."

Geez, pretty deep, huh? For Adam Duritz, lead singer and songwriter of this San Francisco-based outfit, this saying has not only provided a catchy band name, it has molded his outlook on life.

Commenting on the general tone of the Crows' debut release, August and Everything After, Duritz says it reflects "the horrible fear that leads to this ambivalence between want and need and loss and gain."

Though the lyrical message of the album may be one of loneliness or of isolation in a world-too-big, the band itself is as hip as they get. Duritz and company — Matt Malley (bass, guitar), Charlie Gillingham (piano, organ, accordion), Steve Bowman (drums) and David Bryson (guitar) — have found their own musical niche. Starting out on the Geffen label has been pretty beneficial to their brief career. T-Bone Burnett, who has worked with REM, produced August and Everything After. After having recently covered Van Morrison's butt by filling in for him at the Rock and Roll Hall of Fame black tie extravaganza, they are continually being compared to him and his style of music.

Though their collective musical sound is faintly reminiscent of REM with a bit of Tragically Hip thrown in for good measure, Duritz can't help but place the face of Eddie Vedder in my unassuming mind, whilst he croons "Perfect Blue Buildings."

Of all the comparisons being made between the Crows and bands like REM and Van Morrison, Duritz says, "Yeah, I've probably heard of them (the bands)." This outfit is not lacking in confidence.

Duritz's childhood plays a large part in his songwriting. His father was in the American military all through Duritz's childhood and teenage years, which led to a lot of moving around the country. "It was strange for us to be in one state for more than two or three years," he says. "And so I'm a sort of a displaced person. These songs (on August and Everything After) are about the rootlessness in America."

The album is laced with this sense of rootlessness, though in some songs the cynicism and bitterness of lost love and dreams is more prevalent than in others. On "Round Here," Duritz sings, "I walk in the air between the rain, through myself and back again. Where? I don't know..." This snippet gives one a pretty good idea of what this album's about.

As for the album title, Duritz says, "I was born in August. Everything after is my life."

Oh.

Though the album's songs are heavy with a sense of loneliness, it isn't really as depressing as it sounds. "Mr. Jones," the first single from the album, is fairly light, hip and singable. It might provoke one to shake one's booty just a little bit. Duritz explains the song is actually a true-story-turned-song-and-hey-it-just-could-work idea.

Before Duritz formed Counting Crows, he and a friend were sitting in a bar in Berkeley, Calif., with the friend's visiting father, Mr. Jones. Mr. Jones, a famous mandolin player in Spain, was trying unsuccessfully to score with a flamenco dancer.

Duritz says the intended irony of the song is that in Spain, Mr. Jones could have had anything or anybody he wanted. In the United States where he is unknown, he was unable to get even the time of day from a flamenco dancer.

Though he finds comfort in the writing and composing process, Duritz says there is no other place he and Counting Crows would rather be than on a stage, playing for those who can dig their sound.

This was obvious by their Ottawa performance. Duritz's voice was a bit hoarse due to what he calls "the fucking dry air in airplanes and hotels," but he sounded as rad he does on CD.

The show was predominantly mellow,

Adam Duritz: totally rad.

RICHARD HEAD

with the exception of their renditions of "Mr. Jones" and "Murder of One." The tranquility was enjoyed by a large majority of the crowd.

They blew the room away. Away to where?

To where the Crows fly, of course. □

Fiddles, megaphones and hardly any abuse

by Blayne Haggart
Charlatan Staff

The Wonder Stuff, with Chapterhouse
Feb. 21
Club Soda, Montreal

With any Stuffies show, the question isn't if they will put on a good set or not; it's how long it will take lead vocalist Miles Hunt to insult the audience.

This night, the notoriously abusive Hunt seemed in remarkably good spirits. The only disparaging remark that Hunt uttered all night was when he thanked the "Montreal Sit-Down Association" for showing up.

"Give yourselves a hand; no other cunt will," he remarked in typical Huntian fashion.

It should be pointed out that a large part of the crowd was not part of said association. The dance floor crowd didn't stop moving all night.

Perhaps his (relative) good cheer had something to do with the bottle and a half of wine he consumed on stage.

Opening act Chapterhouse probably had more cause to complain, getting only sporadic movement out of the crowd. Their brand of wall-of-noise guitars backed by a lazy backbeat may be great for the CD player, but it tries the patience after an hour of watching them live. There just wasn't enough variety to make it interesting.

Variety is not a problem for The Wonder Stuff. The Birmingham-based lads have gone from being a two-guitar indie Britpop band to a festival headliner that toys with fiddles, pianos, mandolins and megaphones, all while maintaining a loyal following.

Throughout their 90-minute set, they spun through old and new material, concentrating on songs from their latest disc, Construction for the Modern Idiot. Although they had a bit of a lacklustre opener in "Change Every Light Bulb," they were right on track after that, continuing with a rousing rendition of "Cabin Fever."

Particularly good was their acoustic take on "Piece of Sky," off of their second album Hup.

Even though the crowd on the dance floor was enjoying things, the band itself didn't start to loosen up until the first encore. Hunt actually smiled as the band moved into Construction's "A Great Drinker" and then to the countryish "Golden Green" off Hup.

The band hit all the right notes. Hunt's sneering vocals were perfect and the band's other members were suitably up for the event.

Most worthy of mention is Martin Bell. Hunt may be the focal point of the band, but Bell's fiddle and accordion (among other instruments) liven up what might otherwise be just another guitar band.

However solid their show was, they didn't play any material off their seminal first album, The Eight Legged Groove Machine. This wasn't surprising, as they have said many times that they are sick to death of playing their old songs. To compensate, they did play "A Song Without An End," which is available on U.S.

imports of Groove Machine.

It didn't really matter, because, live at least, their new material is as good as their old stuff, and the dance floor crowd loved every minute of it. By not getting involved, the Montreal Sit-Down Association really missed out. □

Miles Hunt, putting on an almost abuse-free show.

JAMES McRODTE

This week: Our favorite breakfast cereals

1. Life Cereal ("He likes it!")
2. Trix ("Silly rabbit, Trix are for kids!")
3. Honey Nut Cheerios ("It's a honey of an O.")
4. Alpen (The taste of Germany.)
5. Chocolate Frosted Sugar Bombs (Calvin's favorite)
6. Ghostbuster's Cereal (Mmmm... ectoplasm-y!)
7. Wayne Gretzky's Pro Stars (Eat like a superstar AND get a sugar rush!)
8. Count Chocula (a bad '70s cereal)
9. Oatmeal (Eat it you little creeps, it's good for you)
10. Frosted Lucky Charms ("They're magically delicious.")

Luscious Jackson: Pick of '94.How to wake up roomates

Luscious Jackson
In Search of Manny EP
 Grand Royal/Capitol

And the truth in advertising award goes to . . . Luscious Jackson.

Sorry, but it's true. Luscious Jackson combine jazzy horns, cool acoustic guitars and a mesmerizing beat with sultry vocals into a mix that can only be described as, well, luscious.

Although they're friends of the Beastie Boys, whose Grand Royal label released this treat, their music has more in common with a Tribe Called Quest than the Boys.

This is laid-back hip hop to mellow out with; it's music that hits you with a million velvet hammers. And it hasn't left my tape deck in two weeks.

My only regret is that it's only six songs long. I could easily digest something 10 times that long and only half as good.

Luscious Jackson: no home should be without one.

Blayne Haggart

Monster Voodoo Machine
State Voodoo/State Control
 Independent

What can be said about Monster Voodoo Machine? They are the second loudest bunch of guys I've heard this week. The loudest were my roommates yelling, "Turn it down!"

State Voodoo/State Control contains nine tracks, all worthy of mention. Although I was impressed with "Get On With It (Buck Naked Mix)," I thought if I played this song in reverse, I would hear satanic messages. Unfortunately, you can't do that with a tape deck.

Who are these guys and where do they come from? I don't know, but from the sound they produce, I feel they would be a great band to see live. Their music is pure energy rolled up in a sound that is definitely not for romantic nights by the fire with that special someone.

If you're in the mood for aggressive rock and roll, these are just the bunch of guys to fill your prescription. Monster Voodoo Machine is ready to rock.

Christopher Bell

PONTIAC SUNBIRD LE SPORT COUPE

Fly the coupe!

PONTIAC SUNBIRD LE SPORT COUPE

• Standard 4-wheel anti-lock brakes

• Air conditioning

• AM/FM stereo cassette

Plus much more • rear spoiler • power automatic door locks • tinted glass • reclining front bucket seats • 24-hour Roadside Assistance††

With your choice of two ways to take off.

The Performance you expect. Priced Right!

SmartLease

$189

per month over 36 months*
 THE FIRST PAYMENT'S ON US!
 Or special offer for graduates

$750

bonus from your Pontiac Dealer

PONTIAC
Performance
 TEAM

*Offers apply to the 1994 Pontiac Sunbird LE Coupe on a 36 month lease for $189 per month (excluding taxes and license). A minimum down payment of $1,499 and $300 security deposit is required. Some mileage conditions apply. ††See dealer for details. Ava lable to any person who has proof that they graduated or will graduate from a recognized post-secondary institution during the period September 1, 1993 through August 31, 1994. Graduate program may not be combined or used with any other offer. First month Smart Lease payment will be waived for qualified purchasers. Minimum down payment applies. ††Some charges may apply. See Dealer for details.

The band that invented electronic music

by Dave Carpenter
Tangerine Dream Obsessor

You may have heard of Tangerine Dream referred to as one of those "flaky New Age bands," or perhaps you've noticed their movie soundtracks.

If the name doesn't ring a bell, it could be because their music is as far from the mainstream as it can get. Their sound is not something that is easily summed up, though. They have been described by music retailers and distributors with terms like "Progressive Rock," "New Age," "Electronic" and "Avant Garde." Lumping the music of Tangerine Dream into one category is difficult, because it has been through several phases since its inception in 1967. Even music from the same year can be very different.

The band's first five albums reflect the vision of band founder Edgar Froese, also a trained artist and sculptor. Froese once studied with Salvador Dali who, according to Froese, had a "devastating effect" on him.

Tangerine Dream was the result of Froese's desire to create a sound that pushed the limits of contemporary music. The album Electronic Meditation (1970) is a prime example of this phase of the band: tape-recorded samples, electric guitar, cello and a Doors-style organ. One track includes spoken verse played backward over synthesizer sounds.

In 1973, Atem was chosen by BBC Radio One's John Peel as his "Import of the Year" choice. It consists mostly of tribal-type drumming with synthesizer, although one track has yells and screams run through an echo delay. Then in 1974, Phaedra reached the UK Top 10 without a tour and hardly any airplay. It sounds the most like a drug trip of any of their stuff, complete with timeless, pulsating synthesizers and the like.

Ironically, the resulting tour had the band playing churches and cathedrals. After playing a chaotic concert at Reims Cathedral in France with 6,000 people crammed into a building designed for 2,000, the Pope declared the event a sacrilege and barred the band from ever playing again in a Catholic church. He even called for the cathedral to be re-consecrated.

Oh, horrors.

Movie producer William Friedkin (The Exorcist) heard the band play in Germany and let them score the soundtrack to his 1976 film Sorcerer. According to Friedkin, they "captured every nuance of the movie ... although they (had) not to (that) date seen the film." Many soundtracks have since followed, notably Firestarter (1984), Legend (1985) and Miracle Mile (1989).

By about 1977, the group had moved on from the free-form style of earlier releases to produce a more melodic sound, sometimes dreamy and pensive, often intense and powerful. This stage of the band was marked by the departure of Peter Bauman, now a well-established solo artist.

For a brief period leading to the release of Cyclone (1978), Tangerine Dream experimented with vocals, with Steve Jolliffe in this role. This was met with mixed success. Consequently, the band did not try this again until 1986's Tyger.

Their most notable release of the period from 1979 to 1984 is 1980's Pergamon, a live concert recorded at the Palast Das Republique concert hall in East Berlin. This was actually the first performance of a Western band in East Germany, with tickets selling as high as $50 on the black market.

Several soundtracks, tours and albums followed. By this time, in 1986, Johannes Schmoelling had left the band and was replaced by Paul Haslinger. The other main member, Christophe Franke, was to leave in 1988, and currently scores films and shows like the new sci-fi series Babylon Five.

For the next few years after 1988, the Dream's music had a decidedly "pop" sound to it, as many of the albums were composed and mastered on Atari computer systems. Needing to fill the space Haslinger left when he departed in 1992, Froese recruited his son, Jerome into the band. At this point, the band consisted of Froese, his son and two others. This lineup has survived into the present day.

A North American tour was then put together, with two supporting musicians filling out the group for the live performances. This tour was captured on the album 220 Volt Live (which includes a cover of Jimi Hendrix's "Purple Haze") and the videotape Three Phase Live (both released in 1993).

Tangerine Dream has been churning out albums since 1970 and is still going strong. Their material includes about 25 studio albums, seven live concert albums, at least 20 soundtracks and 7 compilations. And that's only what I've come across.

Their influences come from a broad range of musical genres, but they have always been innovative in their music and even their equipment. Being an electronic band in the seventies, an age where synthesizers were obscure and generally despised, they had to engineer and design many of their own instruments.

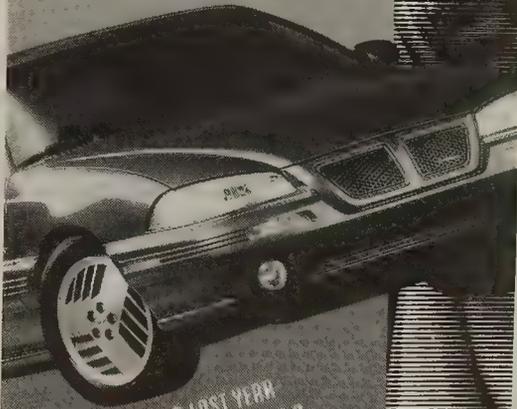

It's not surprising that many artists and bands (Duran Duran to name one of the lesser lights) have looked to them when incorporating electronic music into their material — Tangerine Dream all but created the industry. □

IN A CLASS BY ITSELF

1991 - 1994
GRADUATES
1994 GENERAL MOTORS GRADUATE PROGRAM

GET YOUR $750*
REBATE

ON THE PURCHASE OR LEASE OF ANY GM CAR,
LIGHT TRUCK
OR VAN

IF YOU'RE IN YOUR LAST YEAR
AT COLLEGE OR UNIVERSITY OR A
RECENT GRADUATE, CHECK OUT THIS
ONCE-IN-A-LIFETIME OPPORTUNITY
FROM GENERAL MOTORS

Or Call 1-800-GM-DRIVE

OFFER DOES NOT APPLY TO SATURN VEHICLES
DISTRIBUTED BY GENERAL MOTORS
THE $750 REBATE INCLUDES GST

DISCOGRAPHY

Rose Chronicles

Shiver
Netzwerk

In high school, did you ever wonder what was the point of annually dissecting frogs in science class, when you knew exactly what you would find inside?

Or, upon opening the little critters, did you ever feel the unexplainable excitement of seeing those wonderful life-giving organs inside?

I got the same feelings of wonder and excitement listening to Shiver. This album sounds experimental, but it's more an amalgamation of other previously proven experiments. In other words, they're fiddling with forms that have been perfected by other bands.

Right from the opening song "Dwelling," we see how closely one can mimic the spaced-out effects and peddle-ridden guitar work of the Cure and other eighties-inspired alternative British bands.

Kristy Thirsk's vocals are nothing short of angelic, but she too seems closely inspired by another major influence — her Netzwerk sister Sarah McLachlan.

Just like the tingly excitement of spotting those tiny vital organs in the formaldehyde-soaked frogs, you get an exuberant thrill from listening to Shiver. Not because of its originality, but because of a certain je ne sais quoi.

You hear the subtle yet throbbing arrangements in "Glide" and "Brick and Glue" and you get that familiar wonderment of déjà vu. This record is a good listen despite its lack of originality.

The only other problems you might have with this release are with the songwriting's periodic slips into tackiness. For example, in "Dwelling" we are asked and told, "Did you know your body is just a cavern for your soul? Souls will drift, the aimlessly adrift dwell on shores."

Funny, I don't remember finding any souls in the frogs I dissected. But maybe I just wasn't looking in the right place.

Mario Carlucci

Dead Reckoning

Time's Time
Independent

The release of Time's Time should give Dead Reckoning enough time to really get its shit together.

The band's debut is good, but it walks so close to the edge of greatness that the failure to connect left me slightly disappointed.

The song structures of this Newfoundland trio — bassist Tim Norman, guitarist Mike Kelly and drummer Perry Murphy — are solid. They haven't just slapped titles around a few riffs and pretended they've written songs, although, being a hard-rock fan, I see nothing especially wrong with this approach.

Dead Reckoning has a good sense of melody. Lyrically, the band paints interesting pictures, with the interest resting primarily in the songs' ambiguity. At the core of most songs are Norman's beautifully expressive and raspy (do NOT read Bryan Adams or Rod Stewart here) vocals. At its best, Norman's voice is reminiscent of the Waterboys' Mike Scott.

Most of the songs are downright catchy without sounding poppy or lightweight. Dead Reckoning's problem is that it doesn't come across sounding like a very tight unit. Exacerbating the weakness is some poor production. The disc is left . . .

"How you say? Without — the edge."

The end result is that too often Dead Reckoning ends up underwhelming this listener, which is frustrating, because it feels so close to ecstasy.

Time's Time is a nice suit, but the wrinkles in the shirt ruin the look.

Joe Bernard

US3

Hand on the Torch
Blue Note/Capitol Records

A common complaint levelled at rap artists is that they rob from the graveyard of classic hits, haphazardly throwing together snippets of songs to create "illegitimate" new tunes.

Blue Note, a legendary jazz factory that now bills itself as "the world's most sampled jazz label," has turned the tables on this criticism by sponsoring a rap album that draws freely from its catalogue.

The result is that the jazz samples receive top billing over the raps, upping the ante in the jazz-rap fusion movement that has grown in recent years.

While it is a pleasure to hear the familiar sounds of Herbie Hancock and Thelonious Monk forming the backdrop, the rap side doesn't hold up its end of the bargain. Perhaps because the patchwork of jazz samples is so exceptional, the fairly standard and uninspired raps are a letdown.

However, I suspect the purpose of Hand on the Torch is not so much to broaden rap's appeal as it is to sell old jazz albums to a new generation of fans. Blue Note has recently re-released most of its catalogue, and any one of those decades-old albums prove to be a far superior choice to the US3 album.

In fact, the people at Blue Note can claim at least one convert. After listening to Hand on the Torch, I picked up three other Blue Note albums, which I am happy to recommend: The Best of Herbie Hancock (which features "Cantaloupe Island," sampled on US3's "Cantaloupe (Flip Fantasia)"), The Best of Donald Byrd (a collection from 1970s jazz-funk fusionists the Blackbyrds) and Blue Break Beats (an absolute must for all acid jazz fans).

Sean Silcoff

Swervedriver

Mezcal Head
A&M

Swervedriver's second full-length album, is a dramatic improvement over their strong debut, Raise.

This latest release further defines Swervedriver's unique sound and demonstrates a dramatic maturing in their song-writing.

They could, in the simplest of terms, be described as Britain's answer to Sonic Youth. However, to simplify Swervedriver and Sonic Youth to such an analogy would be unfair to both bands.

Both bands have a keen fondness for heavy distortion and guitar feedback, Sonic Youth preferring raucousness, Swervedriver preferring some melody. Strong production values further help to capture Swervedriver's raw energy.

Musically, this album is diverse. Songs range from the heavy guitar riff of "Duel" to the more melodic-sounding "Girl On A Motorbike." The track "You Find It Everywhere" has a very pop-like sound to it. Several of the songs are rather lengthy and hypnotic sounding, like "Duess" and "Last Train to Satansville." These tracks show Swervedriver at its best.

The mix is heavily layered. You can often hear something new every time you listen to the album. The result is something that doesn't easily bore you.

Adam Seddon

One Dove

Morning Dove White
Polygram

This music is sensual, the kind that lingers in your nocturnal consciousness.

One Dove is far from a quick and dirty fix. The band offers a mélange of music that may take a while to get into.

But once you do, this sultry music seizes you with its diverse sounds, ranging from funky, wailing vocals to disturbed bagpipes.

The wistful lyrics combine with the rest of this sonic fantasy world to produce a lustful nineties' pop album.

There is quite a bit of repetition on this album. Out of 11 tracks, there are three different versions of one song and two of another. Yet somehow this is part of the lingering and strangely comfortable effect of Morning Dove White.

One Dove offers you its world through music. It's a gradual process, but once the music takes hold of you, it's mesmerizing. Morning Dove White is a long, tense and eerie experience.

Jill Mahoney

Lisa Lisa

LL 77
Pendulum/ERG

Lisa Lisa, formerly of Lisa Lisa and Cult Jam, has re-emerged on the scene. This 25-year-old beauty from Hell's Kitchen, N.Y.C., has left the Cult Jam in search of a new beginning — and all for the better.

When first handed this tape, I thought that this wouldn't be the type of stuff I'd like. As it turns out, I found LL 77 to be highly enjoyable. The energetic dance sounds are easy on your ears. Although there is still a driving bass beat, it is accompanied by some outrageous guitar licks.

Lisa Lisa's "Skip To My Lu" is a prime example of the talent we heard in 1985 with "Wonder If I Take You Home."

If you're into the dance scene, you're no stranger to Lisa Lisa. All I can say is two thumbs up.

Christopher Bell

Various Artists

Dead On the Road
Raw Energy

Twenty-seven bands. Three chords each. Must be a punk rock compilation thing.

Well, it's loud and aggressive and all the songs sound pretty much the same (lo-fi and bellowed). The whole thing seems to be Raw Energy's tribute to punk, complete with scribbled, illegible liner notes.

Band-wise, this album features talent from across the country, with some witty tracks courtesy of Montreal's Ripcord and Sault Ste. Marie's Spigots. There are also some sub-par efforts, most notably from Vancouver's Brand New Unit, from whom I've heard better.

This is an okay album that does a good job of being representative of the entire country and not just Toronto. However, it is by no means innovative.

Blayne Haggart

Love's new ritual

FOR YOUR LIFE STYLE: Lubricated - Lubricated with Spermicide - Form Fitting - Vibra-Ribbed - Ultra Sensitive - Extra Strength - Assorted Colors - Variety Pack - Tuxedo Black - Mint Scented

A QUALITY PRODUCT FROM ANSELL®

"There are comics in this book that made me blow snot"

by Karin Jordan
Charlatan Staff

What is This Thing Called Sex?
Cartoons by Women
Edited by Roz Warren
Crossing Press
170 pages
$12.95

When I was growing up, I used to hate comic books.

All those anatomically incorrect male superheroes with their angular, bulging thigh muscles, chiselled faces and fists of titanium. I just couldn't relate.

And the women in those comic books — oh, the women.

Why was it that they usually had oversized breasts (no back problems here), Barbie-doll lacquered hair (no surprise, since most of the artists were men), wore costumes I'd use as dental floss and always were in need of rescuing by a male superhero?

I thought I'd never find comic books I'd be able to get into. Then I discovered female comic artists. This book is a good collection of works by women.

I think what I like best about this book is its realistic approach to sex and relationships — no bulging thighs or lacquered hair here, girls.

There are comics in this book that made me blow snot. I was laughing so hard. A good example of laugh-inducing humor is Nicole Hollander's work. Her sardonic cartoon character Sylvia pokes fun at both sex and relationships between men and women.

In one strip, Sylvia, typing in her bathtub, asks you to test your R.I.Q. (Relationship Intelligence Quotient). The only question in the quiz is: "The best place to discuss your sexual dissatisfaction with your partner is:

- (1) in the bedroom
- (2) in a car, travelling at high speed
- (3) in a crowded elevator."

Another excellent artist in this book is Alison Bechdel, whose syndicated comic strip Dykes to Watch Out For appears in papers across North America, such as the local gay and lesbian magazine Go Info.

There are also healthy doses of cheese in this book. American artist Nina Paley's series about AIDS, which tries to poke fun at the fear surrounding it, comes off as self-righteous, rather than challenging preconceived notions about how people catch the AIDS virus.

A sample of Andrea Natalie's work.

Rina Piccolo's one-liner strips, similar in style to Gary Larson's The Far Side, are pretty tired and lacking in wit.

But on the whole, the book is a good mix of straight, dyke and bi humor. Warren has done a similar job with the collections Women's Glib and Women's Glibber, which are anthologies of written and drawn humor by women.

One artist she passed over in collecting comics for this book is Montreal artist Julie Doucet. Her surrealist style is found in her comic books Dirty Plotte, published by Drawn and Quarterly out of Montreal.

Doucet's work would have been a welcome addition to this collection. For example, her strip "The First Time," in Dirty Plotte Number 7, tells the story of Doucet's first sexual encounter. Doucet does it with a creepy older hippie-type guy she meets in a park who invites her back to his place to "see his paintings." Isn't that the oldest line in the book.

As the old guy is on top of her, he says "Believe me, that's not what I had in mind." After the deed is done, Doucet thinks, "Is that it? I didn't really feel anything." Sound familiar, girls?

Warren's collection does include American artist Roberta Gregory, whose comic series Naughty Bits includes the hilarious character Bitchy Bitch.

Expect to find Warren's collections in most bookstores. Don't expect to find works by Gregory or Doucet in Ottawa (although Silver Snail does have a collection of the best of Drawn and Quarterly). A good place to find their stuff is a comic store called The Beguiling in Toronto. □

The Balkan Express: Relating to a war half a world away

by Angie Gallop
Charlatan Staff

The Balkan Express: Fragments
From the Other Side of War
By Slavenka Drakuli
W.W. Norton & Company
146 pages
$25.99

Four years ago I travelled to Zagreb. I didn't really see much.

The landscape was beautiful, the housing was poorer than in Canada, people were friendly but spoke a different language. Aside from that, there was nothing so unusual that set people there apart from me.

When the war first broke out in the former Yugoslavia and Zagreb was in the news, I read the newspapers trying to piece together what little I had seen with the dramatic stories in print.

I tried to figure out why the reality there was so different from reality here.

I could not relate. Reading only made me feel more and more detached.

I soon stopped.

When I picked up The Balkan Express as required reading for a course, I was not optimistic. I thought it would be just another impersonal encounter with another impartial journalist trying to explain a complicated historic war which I still don't completely understand.

But the book was nothing I expected, because author Slavenka Drakuli, who has written for magazines like the New Republic, does not talk politics or focus on the bodies and the blood. Instead, she allows the reader glimpses into her own life, telling about her feelings, insecurities and prejudices in a very honest and human manner.

When she leaves her home in Zagreb, Croatia, to escape the war and stay with a friend in Slovenia, she runs into a local university professor while on a walk. He asks her where she is from. When she tells him, he immediately accuses her of living off the state as a refugee.

Drakuli describes her reaction to this situation:

"I think I have never experienced such a terrible urge to distinguish myself from others, to show this man that I was an individual with a name and not an anonymous exile stealing his money," she writes.

Through this event she discovers in herself the attitude that many of us in the Western world use to deny the horror that goes on in other, far-away places.

Through her conversations and observations, we realize along with her that we do not share the same reality of those who suffer daily from the war, but that we could just as easily be in their position.

She uses ordinary objects as symbols to show how the reality of people living in a war zone changes dramatically from a reality of privileges to a reality of survival.

When she visits Sisak, Croatia, a small town she describes as the starting point of the front line, she notices nine blue salt cellars on the otherwise empty shelves in a store whose windows have been shattered.

She says the salt cellars show the true picture of the devastation. "There is not a single person in the village who would buy or even steal the salt cellars, not a single soul who could have any use whatsoever for the salt cellars," she writes.

The details of the devastation are revealed in an interview with a 19-year-old boy who frankly describes the killing he has seen and done. She describes her nausea at realizing that this boy was talking to her just as her own son would if he had gone to war.

Although Drakuli does not directly experience the pain of loss or death, she discovers how close she is to it. She shows us how we are no different from the people whose suffering we watch and read about daily.

While in the bathtub she examines her own body and these feelings come out as, "The feet, the nails, the hands. I knew all of them belonged to me, that it was me, but my perception of my own body was no longer the same... I felt my own terrible fragility and impotence."

The chilling part of this book is that the reaction and emotion that Drakuli shows is one the reader can relate to. She shares the very same privileges as we do, yet she is close to a reality which we deny we can ever share. □

TORONTO
MONTESSORI INSTITUTE

Established in 1971

Toronto Montessori Institute is now accepting applications for the 1994-1995 Teacher-Training Course.

This course leads to a Diploma to teach 3 to 6 and 6 to 12 year olds, applying Montessori educational theory and methodology.

Prerequisite: Undergraduate Degree.

Course duration: August 2, 1994 - June 30, 1995.

Enrolment is limited. For further information, please call Pam Debbo, Registrar, at (905) 889-6882.

Course is accredited by the Montessori Accreditation Council for Teacher Education (MACTE).

TORONTO MONTESSORI INSTITUTE 8569 Bayview Avenue,
Richmond Hill, Ontario L4B 3M7

University of New Brunswick
Faculty of Education
BEd Program

IF YOU WANT TO BECOME A TEACHER
APPLY BY MARCH 31, 1994

A new BEd program offers the benefits of an undergraduate degree.
This degree program is designed to provide a solid foundation in both Canadian and American schools.

1. BEd, N.B.A.S. (1994-1995)
2. BEd, N.B.A.S. (1995-1996)

BEd GRADUATES

1. BEd, N.B.A.S. (1994-1995)
2. BEd, N.B.A.S. (1995-1996)

→ All students receive experience supported by cooperative classroom teaching.

→ Extensive on-the-job experience provided by placements in 100+ schools in the province.

→ Students attend faculty with array of specialties.

Application as subject on:

Registrar's Office
University of New Brunswick
P.O. Box 4490
Fredericton, NB Canada E3B 5A3
Telephone: 506-533-6344
Fax: 506-533-0916

Moist: A band just like all the others

by Suzanne Andrew
Charlatan Staff

Moist, opening for Rail T.E.C.
Grand Central
Feb. 17

Moist is a generic band. With a raw sound, depressing lyrics, and angst in all the appropriate places, the Vancouver-based Moist succeeds in capturing bits of energy of other '90s bands.

They're Cracker on a sluggish day, Pearl Jam minus the attitude, and Fishbone without flair. There's even some excessive keyboard schlock left over from the '80s thrown into this banal stew.

Moist is not a bad band, it's just that there's nothing terribly original about it. It's good music to listen to if you're not really listening.

Their CD Silver, a recent indie release, is energetic but falls into repetition because of bland mixing and familiar melodies. Most of the songs on the CD are aggressive—the band tends to shy away from sentimental ballads.

Moist does, however, have some interesting things to say. "Break Her Down" is a perplexing ode about violent characters they've seen on the news. Although lead singer David Usher usually writes the songs, keyboardist Kevin Young wrote these lyrics, which he describes as an "amalgamation... an accurate portrait of a criminal." The band members stress that the song is not meant to glorify any of this stuff—they just wanted to address the issue of violence in some way.

Bassist Jeff Pearce says he had to explain the song to his mom and his girlfriend whom he labels as "ardent feminists." It seems as though the band was trying to create a little controversy with this song, but really doesn't want to upset anybody after all.

Their fairly tame live performance sounded just about the same as they do on their CD. Usher did the long-hair-flicking, body-writhing and typical lead singer microphone-cord antics. Guitarist Mark Makowy did the jumping and flopping around on stage. Young fumbled about in fits behind his keyboard in an attempt to dance. It was all ordinary band fare.

As is the custom in music interviews, the band members said stuff like, "There's always little bits of ourselves thrown into our music," and described their music as "a little bit loaded but kind of fun."

But the band members themselves are really open, really friendly. They're not boring people: Young is into science fiction, Makowy craves watching episodes of Seinfeld, and drummer Paul Wilcox is a dead ringer for Popeye.

The band members have musical talent. What they need to do now is pull more of themselves into their music to create something unique.

Moist has just signed a deal with EMI Music Publishing Canada. This means the band is still independent, but will get development help from EMI in exchange for royalties from their songwriting.

"We are our own record company essentially, so it gives us a little more freedom to do our own thing," says Wilcox. "It's a low-risk venture for EMI, but will give us a little respectability, some advice and financial support."

The band hopes to get a real record deal very soon. Meanwhile, they're out and about performing across North America and promoting Silver on what they call their "perma-tour."

Wilcox was the last of the five band members to give up his Vancouver apartment in exchange for life on the road. He moved his stuff out at Christmas time because he was never there.

"We've been touring for about five or six months now... There's no hiatus in sight and that's the way we like it." □

DEAN TOMLINSON

Moist in action: just one more stop on the "perma-tour."

If you have an event you want to appear in the Long Day In The Universe calendar, you can drop your announcement off at The Charlatan, Room 531 Unicentre during regular business hours or you can fax us at 788-4051. Announcements must be in by the Friday before publication.

THE OASIS

1ST Floor, Commons
Residence Building

Personal Pan Pizza

Pepperoni 2.59 SAVE
Vegetarian 2.79 OR buy a 4 pack
Supreme 2.99 for 9.99

Hours

Monday - Friday
7:30 - 1:00 am
Sunday 8:00 pm - 12:00 am

NOW OPEN FRIDAY UNTIL 1:00 AM

Pizza Hut[®]

NOW OPEN

Enjoy Great Tasting Pizza Hut[®]
Personal Pan Pizza[®]
Without the Wait!

The Oasis
1st Floor level, residence
Commons Building

LONG DAY IN THE UNIVERSE

THURSDAY, MARCH 3 TO THURSDAY, MARCH 10

Thursday, March 3

those razor blades at home.

Amelia!, a play about Amelia Earhart, is playing at the NAC Theatre tonight until March 19 at 7:30 p.m. (Finally! Citizen columnist Susan Riley, who complained last week that 8 p.m. is just too late to start a show, has one that's early enough to go to -ed.)

Sock 'n' Buskin's latest studio production is The Lover. It's a titulating tale of a dysfunctional relationship. It's playing today and Friday at 2 p.m. and 6 p.m. and Saturday at 7 p.m. in the drama studio located in the Athletics building.

It's bound to be a laugh fest this afternoon in Room 518 in Southam Hall. Charles Freedman, the deputy governor of the Bank of Canada, will be discussing "Monetary Policy in Canada" at 4:30 p.m.

Ottawa's Dancing Wu Li Masters, who describe themselves as "equal parts prog-rock and punk" (Uh-oh! -ed.) are having a CD release party tonight at the Arts Court Theatre at 8 p.m. Cover is a mere $5.

It's Thursday and that can only mean it's time for Cha Cha's Playpen at Zaphod's. Tonight's dollar-for-cover show features the fine, fine music of Kingston's Inbreds and Ottawa's Electric Embryo.

Friday, March 4

Today's Friday lunch-time concert features violinist David Thies-Thompson and pianist Sandra Webster. As always, it's free and it happens in Carleton's Alumni Theatre.

The Ad-Hoc Committee on Bosnia-ercegovina is presenting a couple of talks this evening. Christopher Mitchens, a columnist with The Nation and Vanity Fair, will be speaking on "Why Bosnia Matters" and Harvard University's Andras Riedlmayer will be speaking on "Cultural Genocide in Bosnia." takes place at Carleton's Bell Theatre and admission is a suggested $2 donation for students, $5 for others. It starts at 8 p.m.

It's the beginning of two great evenings at Porter Hall. Tonight, the fun sets under way at 8 p.m. with Fishbone and Green Apple Quickstep (note: ohazard is not playing. Your tickets are rong.). Tickets are $15 in advance (nicentre Store, Ticketmaster) and $18 the door.

If you're into something a little reaper, check out Toronto's Wild Strawberries at Zaphod's, of whom we've heard good things. Opening for em is Ottawa's Nothingheads. Cover $5.

At 9:20 p.m. tonight, the Bytowne is emiering The Best of The International Tournee of Animation. If you miss it, don't worry. It's showing at various times until March 10.

Pink Floyd: The Wall is playing at 10 p.m. at the Mayfair. Kids: leave

Saturday, March 5

Kosmic. Architecture building. Tonight. Expect an acid jazz room, a rave room and an ambient rave room. Vitamin Team from Montreal, Ottawa's DJ Todd and Detroit's Motomassa will be spinning the tunes. As for live music, there'll be Whethermen Groove Tube, NC-17, Rail T.E.C. and Speed of Light, among others. Pit aficionados will be happy to know that the Hammerheads will be there along with Trevor and Funk Factory. Tickets are $20 and are available in Baker Lounge, the Unicentre Store, Ab-stentions and the architecture building.

De La Soul and A Tribe Called Quest. Not a bad double bill. Not at all. They're playing tonight at Porter Hall at 9 p.m. Too bad tickets are $25.

Sunday, March 6

Edward Earle, senior curator at the California Museum of Photography, will be giving a talk at the Canadian Museum of Contemporary Photography. His subject will be "New Technologies, New Communities: Art at the End of the Millennium." Admission is $5 and the talk gets under way at 2 p.m.

The McGill Percussion Ensemble is playing at the Canadian Museum of Nature this evening at 8 p.m. Tickets are $8 for students and seniors, $10 for all other folks.

Looking for something to do with your afternoon that will damage your eardrums? Look no further! At 5 Arlington Ave., it's a self-described "punk rock show" featuring Chicago's Mob Action, Toronto's Blowhard and Ottawa bands Union of Uranus and Hoax. The fun starts at 3:30 p.m. and tickets are $5 at the door.

Monday, March 7

The Mayfair continues to present fine cult movies on Mondays. This evening's choices are the Mel Gibson epics Mad Max and its sequel, The Road Warrior, starting at 7 p.m.

Tuesday, March 8

Charlatan production manager Kevin McKay is back from Reading Week and he's feeling better than ever. During the break, he managed to come up with yet another reading tip. To start off the month, McKay recommends James M. Cain's Double Indemnity. Says the tireless McKay, "Love leads an insurance man astray in a quest for money in this mystery. But I'm not gonna tell you folks the ending."

More cult films at the Mayfair tonight. At 7 p.m. you can catch the '70s nostalgia trip Dazed and Confused, directed by Richard Linklater, the same fellow who was responsible for the stream of consciousness film Slacker, which, coincidentally, is being shown at 9 p.m.

Andy Jones, formerly of the Newfoundland land comedy group CODCO, performs a solo comedy fest at the NAC Studio at 8 p.m. tonight through March 19. It's called Still Alive.

Skeete is profiling a variety of female jazz singers in honor of International Women's Day on March 8.

Wednesday, March 9

Costa Rican dance-theatre company Diquis Tiquis is performing a mix of "martial arts and theatre" tonight until March 12 at the NAC Atelier. Tickets are $12.50 and the shows start at 8 p.m.

On your radio dial at 93.1 FM at 9 p.m., In A Mellow Tone host Charles

Thursday, March 10

If you're hungry, you may want to consider this handy Charlatan snack tip. You know, when most people make chocolate chip cookies, they usually heat the dough in the oven. With Yummy Cookie Food™, you won't have to wait until it's cooked to get satisfaction. Just grab any chocolate chip cookie recipe and skip the last step. Serves five.

ANDRÉ BELLEFLEUR

A NEW COMEDY FROM THE DIRECTOR OF "BACKDRAFT" AND "PARENTHOOD"

MICHAEL KEATON GLENN CLOSE MARISA TOMEI RANDY QU Aid ROBERT DUVALL

A behind-the-lines look at work, marriage and other forms of combat.

THE PAPER
An everyday adventure.

UNION ENTERTAINMENT PRESENTS A BRIAN GRAZER PRODUCTION "THE PAPER" A RANDY NEWMAN FILM STARRING MICHAEL KEATON, GLENN CLOSE, MARISA TOMEI, RANDY QU Aid, AND ROBERT DUVALL. COSTUME DESIGNER: JILL HALL. EXECUTIVE PRODUCERS: DANIEL VELLEROS AND DAVID ARZOFF. PRODUCED BY BRIAN GRAZER AND FREDERICK ZOLLO. WRITTEN BY DAVID ARZOFF AND STEPHEN KOPPEL. DIRECTED BY RANDY NEWMAN. CASTING BY FRON HOWARD. MUSIC BY JAMES NEWTON HOWARD. EDITOR: JAMES H. HANCOCK. EXECUTIVE PRODUCERS: JAMES HANCOCK AND JAMES HANCOCK. A UNIVERSAL PICTURE PRESENTATION.

MOVIE PASS GIVEAWAY - the first 20 people to come up to The Charlatan office on Friday morning (after 10 am) who can correctly answer the trivia question will win passes for the screening of THE PAPER, to be held Wednesday, March 9. (ask for Jill, as she has the passes)
TRIVIA QUESTION: Name one other movie about the media.

110 YORK ST., BYWARD 241-5455

HOULIHAN'S

"LADIES' NIGHT"

NO COVER CHARGE FOR WOMEN

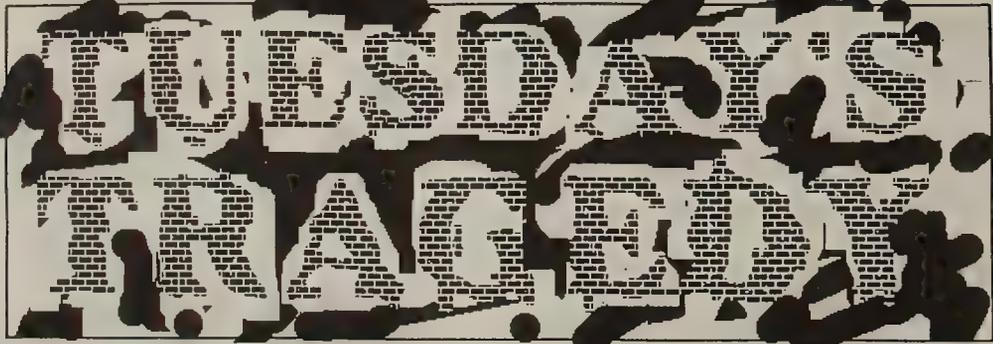

Every Tuesday Night

15¢ WINGS TUES. & WED.
4:00 - 11:00

GOOD FOOD CHEAP! * POOL TABLES * VIDEO GAMES
AIR HOCKEY * HUGE DANCE FLOOR

TWO FLOORS OF FUN * PARTY NIGHTS

Sun, Mon, Tues, & Thurs

featuring the musical shapes of CHUO-FM's Scott (DJ Bungle) Kennedy

EVERY TUESDAY
NITE

AT

CACHET CLUB

96 GEORGE STREET, BYWARD MARKET
(ABOVE SWISS CHALET)

POOL: $5/HOUR PER TABLE ☆☆☆☆ $2 DOLLAR TUESDAYS ACCEPT NO SUBSTITUTES!

the CHARLATAN

CARLETON'S INDEPENDENT STUDENT NEWSPAPER

VOLUME 23

ISSUE 25

MARCH 10

1994

3 FOR 1 OR
50 % OFF

*Preston
Optical*

444 Preston St.
(2 BLOCKS FROM DOWS LAKE PAVILION)
230-0477

EYEWEAR SALE

Buy any pair of prescription glasses at regular price and receive a second pair of glasses of equal or lesser value plus a pair of daily wear soft contact lenses absolutely FREE!!!

Combination of 2 or 3 prescriptions. May be used with friends or family members for the 3 for 1 sale.

FRAMES AND LENSES

Buy one pair of prescription glasses and receive 50% OFF on both your frame and lenses

Bring in this ad
for an extra 10% OFF

Meadowlands Family Health Centre

Hog's Back Plaza
888 Meadowlands Drive East
corner of Prince of Wales Dr. and Meadowlands Dr.
(behind McDonald's)
Ottawa, Ontario K2C3R2
228-2882

Family Medicine Pediatrics
Adolescent Medicine Minor Surgery
Obstetrics and Maternity Care Counselling Services

Nous Parlons Français

Open 7 days a week With or without appointment
Weekdays 8AM to 8PM
Weekends / Holidays 10AM to 6PM

Est. 1977

DARLENE SCOUTARIDES

Hair Shops...

• 232-1763 •

248 Bank Street

BETWEEN LISGAR & COOPER • PARKING ON COOPER

SALOON
Ottawa's Only
Authentic
Western Saloon

Beverage Specials from Monday to Wednesday

TONIGHT

Thurs. Mar. 10

"Lucky Ron"

No Cover

*Classic Rock and Roll
Every Night*

Come see us down
in the Byward Market
105 Murray St.
241-2233

HOME OF THE SOUTH END BLUES

TUCSON
ROADHOUSE

Mar. 10, 11, 12
The Bird
Mar. 17, 18, 19
Tony D.

2440 Bank Street (Bank at Huntclub) Ottawa
For Entertainment information call 738-7586

Mar. 10
Hurricanes
Mar. 11, 12
Danforth Dragons

1541 Merivale Road, Ottawa
For Entertainment information call 228-6666

GRAND
CENTRAL

"The Mother of All Pizzas"
141 George St. 241-2727

SATURDAY & SUNDAY
Brunch 10AM to 3PM
Over 100 items to choose from $8.99
-taxes

introducing
STEAK

Dinner
Includes
baked potato or fries,
regular salad &
garlic bread

$5.99
+taxes

 EVENTS
Wednesday, March 2nd: Trooper
Wednesday, March 16th: Colin James
Thursday, March 17th: Split of the West

ZAPHOD
BEEBLEBROX

LIFE, THE UNIVERSE AND EVERYTHING

WED. MAR 9 (9PM) $5

CHUO fm PRESENTS
HIGH KINGS
70 PARTS

THURS. MAR 10 (9PM) $1

SONIC LOUNGE LIZARD
WITH KNOCKING BOOTS
WHAT THE FK IT'S ONLY A BUCK

FRI MAR 11 (9PM) $8

LYNN MILES
+ The Story

SAT. MAR 12 (9PM) $5

LIQUID BONE DANCE
+ The KILLJOYS

BINGO JET
INTERNATIONAL
9PM TUESDAYS

MUSIC + BEVERAGES + ADVENTURE
27 YORK ST.

SCHADILLAC RANCH

BOULET

99 Clarence St.
562-1320

CUPE 2323 ON STRIKE TRAIL

by Ryan Nakashima
Charlatan Staff

Nine hours of negotiation March 7 left the union local of Carleton's teaching, research assistants and sessional lecturers still in disagreement with university administration over their collective agreement.

The university's final offer to CUPE Local 2323 includes a five-hour-per-year increase in work assignments, starting Sept. 1, for graduate members of the local.

David Van Dine, the head of administration's negotiating team, says the increase in work assignments would amount to a two-per-cent increase in salaries.

The local will vote on whether or not to accept the university's final proposal after a general meeting March 10 at 11 a.m. in Porter Hall. The polls will close at 6 p.m.

Local president Michel Roy says if the members vote to reject the proposal, he expects picket lines will form around the entrance to the university at Bronson and Sunnyside avenues by March 11.

Roy says the local's executive will not recommend that its members accept administration's offer, which does not include a tuition freeze for local members.

"On our part, we did a great deal of manipulation (of our proposal) to attempt to come to a settlement," says Roy.

He says the university made some

Strike supporters show their support by driving through picket lines.

concessions, but there was nothing for the undergraduate local members in the offer.

"(They offered) no undergraduate priority, no undergraduate wage increase, no undergraduate five-hour extension. Nothing for undergraduates in their offer."

Roy adds the two-per-cent increase in the salaries "is not a wage increase — it's a work increase."

After the 10th day of a possible strike, picketers who have marched for eight hours in the first week would get $30-a-day strike pay from the CUPE national office, which has a Canadian membership of about 400,000.

"The good thing about a strike vote in a large national union, like CUPE, is that if things deteriorate to that point then it becomes the affair of a whole lot of individuals across the country, not just the 1,200 members that work here in Local 2323's bargaining unit," says Roy.

"We're already getting lots of support from Local 2424 on campus, the support staff association."

Graduate teaching assistants, research assistants and sessional lecturers make $24.89 per hour plus four-per-cent vacation pay.

This amounts to $6,471 per school year for graduate TAs with 260 hours of work per year. They cannot hold another job if it pushes their hours past 260 hours per year.

Most undergraduates work 130 hours per year at $13.59 per hour plus four-per-cent vacation pay. That amounts to $1,766.70 per year, but they can work any number of hours at other jobs.

Van Dine says in the event of a strike, the university will do its best to ensure courses are completed.

Nothing in the Ontario Labor Relations Act prevents professors from marking assignments or carrying out other duties performed by assistants, he says. But he adds it is illegal to compel any other bargaining unit to do so.

This means the university could not compel professors to take over the jobs of the their teaching, research assistants or sessional lecturers.

He says specific plans for course completion in the event of a strike will have to be worked out on a "case-by-case basis."

"It may be possible to deliver our obligations to students without having all of the work of a TA performed," says Van Dine.

The mediation took place in offices at the By Ward Market Holiday Inn from 10 a.m. to 7 p.m.

The teams were in separate rooms,

STRIKE cont'd on pg. 4.

Admin on money hot seat

by Brandie Weikle
Charlatan Staff

Carleton's finances — the good, the bad and the ugly — were laid out in Baker Lounge March 8.

University President Robin Farquhar, vice-president of finance and administration Spruce Riordon, and vice-president academic Les Copley discussed the state of Carleton's finances to a crowd of about 50 students.

Strangely enough, however, no one in attendance questioned the panel about possible tuition increases.

Yes, there were questions on other topics, ranging from corporate sponsorship to lack of funding for the faculty of arts.

But no one asked Farquhar where he stands on tuition increases, which is surprising since he sits on the Council of Ontario Universities.

Last August, the council put out a discussion paper on tuition-fee reform which concluded that tuition fees must rise in order to avoid the "financial deterioration" of Ontario universities.

At the meeting, Riordon presented a series of charts and graphs on an overhead projector explaining, or perhaps excusing, Carleton's financial situation.

These visual aids attributed Carleton's financial woes to external factors, such as provincial funding cuts. Riordon pointed out that provincial funding for Ontario universities is the eighth lowest in Canada, although he didn't mention there are more universities in Ontario than in any other province.

"If we can't keep up with Newfoundland, then we're not doing what we might," said Riordon.

He said despite the lack of provincial funding, tuition increases over the last 10 years for Ontario universities have been smaller than in other provinces.

As far as a budget goes for the coming fiscal year (that's accountantese for "starting in May"), the university doesn't have one yet. Riordon said the university has "scenarios," but until they find out what Carleton will receive in grants from the government and then determine what tuition fees will be, the budget cannot be set. Still, Riordon said he hopes next year's budget will be set for April.

The 1993-1994 operating budget looks like this:

Revenue:	(in $ millions)
Government grant	100
Tuition fees	45
Other	5
Expenses:
Salaries	113
Specific Utilities	23
Departmental operation	13

It did alarm some people in the audience that the salaries of the administrative, academic and support staff take up 75 per cent of the university budget.

Farquhar was asked by Brian Edgecombe, the business agent of Canadian Union of Public Employees Local 2323, about salaries for senior administrators.

He asked if the university needs 30 academic administrators such as deans and school directors who make on average $91,900 each a year, and 100 senior staff in administrative departments, such as the business and personnel offices, who make an average of $65,265.

Edgecombe said later he got the information because the university was required to release specific information requested by campus unions as part of the social contract, which the provincial government brought in to reduce public sector expenses last summer.

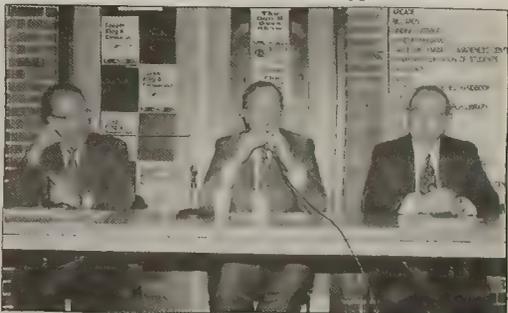

Farquhar invited the TAs to come up to his office at a later date and see the breakdown of every position in administration, but would neither confirm nor deny the salary figures.

Edgecombe said later that more than $9.3 million is spent on these 130 senior administrative positions. He said these administrators don't contribute directly to giving students their education.

"That seems like an awful lot of money and an awful lot of people, and we just have to know what they're doing," he said. Riordon said that since March 1993 the university has been informed that they will have $9.9 million less to operate in the next fiscal year. Riordon said this is the result of the social contract, government cuts and new taxes. This translates into $600 per student in cuts. Riordon said the administration has chosen to run a small deficit the past few years to avoid cutting programs or take more money from students. The 1992-93 deficit was $1.9 million. Carleton's debt is now $3.6 million.

SID YOUNG

However, he said that the university will be hoping to either break even or operate with a surplus budget in order to improve its finances this year.

Riordon said he is considering options for managing the funding cuts — to increase income with tuition fees or private sector sponsorship, or to decrease costs with savings programs and faculty and staff salary reductions. □

on the cover

Cover Photo By
TIM O'CONNOR

KOSMIC: THE BEST DAMN NON-ALCOHOLIC EVENT THIS SIDE OF ST. PAT'S. FOOD'S GREAT TOO!
SEE PAGE 32.

arts	23
feature	16
international	11
national	9
news	3
opinion	13
sports	19
unclassifieds	21

index

Grad students to acclaim a new executive by Mario Carlucci and Andrea Wiebe

Charlatan Staff

No contest: Two tiny words to describe this year's Graduate Students' Association election.

All positions in the GSA executive will be filled by acclamation, and graduate students will vote either for or against the candidates, says Dean Novak, the GSA's chief electoral officer.

"If 50 per cent of the people give them a 'no' vote, the nominations will be reopened," says Novak.

Running for acclamation are Oliver Harte, for vice-president finance, Glenn Edwards for vice-president external, Roman Meyerovich for vice-president internal and David Hubka for president.

There will also be a referendum question on whether or not graduate students want to subsidize a dental plan.

Both Hubka and Harte are on the present GSA executive.

Hubka was elected vice-president external in a fall byelection when Barb Rose left her position to pursue a co-op placement for her master's of public administration degree. Harte took over as vice-president internal from Guy Vadish in February, when he left to do the same as Rose.

The Fab Four: Roman Meyerovich, Oliver Harte, David Hubka and Glenn Edwards

Hubka says he believes that few people are running in the GSA elections because there are few opposing interests.

"It's more or less a show of confidence. Generally I would be concerned about it if I didn't think it was a show of support by the students," says Hubka.

Kristin Russel, a first-year master's of public administration student, had intended on running for vice-president external but withdrew. She says she withdrew because she's taking a co-op placement this summer.

Russel says if she wanted to renew the placement in the fall, she would be not allowed to be vice-president external as well because executives cannot do more than one term of co-op work.

She says many graduate students don't have time to take on an executive position.

"It's often hard to do a full-course load when you're doing this at the same time, and so there's a lot of sacrifices that have to go along with the position," says Russel.

But Vanessa Cook, a graduate student in political science, says it is unfortunate that there are no women who will be holding positions in the GSA.

"It's a shame" there is no competition for GSA positions this year, which is "indicative of the lack of cohesion in the graduate community," says Cook.

Harte says that filling the GSA positions by acclamation is not necessarily negative.

"I'd prefer to think that it's because students don't feel threatened by what they see on the horizon of student politics."

He says this is "simply a validation of the system."

Don Bisch, a first-year master's of journalism student, says he's not sure who is running in the election.

"There's been very little as far as advertising," he says.

Polling will take place in Mike's Place, Renfrew House and the Loeb Building March 10-11. □

TAs and admin bracing to take the strike plunge

STRIKE cont'd from pg. 3

exchanging proposals through the Ontario Ministry of Labor's mediator, Fred Long. The teams met face to face about three or four times, says Van Dine.

There was movement on both sides. In the morning, the union local demanded a tuition freeze for all its members, but by the final exchange, it requested only to keep post-residency graduate fees frozen at 50 per cent of residency fees.

A master's or doctoral student pays a residency fee of about $2,300 per year while taking courses required for his or her degree.

Currently, he or she would only pay half of that while researching a thesis in the last year of a master's program or last few years of a doctoral program. This is called a post-residency fee.

"The university was not prepared to agree to a proposal that would restrict its flexibility on tuition fees for these students," says Van Dine.

Van Dine says, however, that the university moved enough on its monetary position to be considered "substantial."

The teams agreed on non-monetary proposals guaranteeing mid-term meetings between supervisors and assistants to discuss work loads.

They also agreed to provide meetings before the work term begins so assistants and sessional lecturers could request which courses they would like to be assigned. □

BAXTER'S
SECOND FLOOR
BAR & GRILL
MONDAYS & SATURDAYS
PARTY NITES
$250

- WINGS
- NACHOS
- ESCARGOT
- ZUCCHINI
- CAESAR SALAD
- ONION RINGS

5 PM - CLOSE

TUESDAY NIGHTS
SENATORS
Hockey Ticket GIVE AWAY
Chicken Wing .19¢ ea.

WEDNESDAYS
1/2 PRICE FOOD
5 P.M. - 11 P.M.

THURSDAY NIGHT
"A Carleton Tradition"
Chicken Wings 19¢ ea.

UPCOMING PROMOTIONS

Thursday, March 17
St. Patrick's Day Bash
Great Giveaways

1344 Bank Street
(at Riverside)
738-3323

The Ceremonial Guard

This summer, participate in the colourful Changing the Guard Ceremony on Parliament Hill. You will be paid from May 11 to August 30, 1994, while learning basic military techniques with a group of dynamic young men and women.

Join the Reserve and enjoy summer employment with a difference.

For more information, contact:
The Governor General's Foot Guards
Cartier Square Drill Hall
Ottawa, Ontario
K1A 0K2 (613) 995-4020 (Collect)

The Reserve:
Rewarding
part-time employment

Ian, full-time student and member of the Ceremonial Guard during the summer months.

CANADIAN ARMED FORCES

REGULAR AND RESERVE

CUSA election tossed: here we go again

by Caron Watt
Charlatan Staff

The Carleton University Students' Association election has been thrown out because the CUSA constitution was violated during the campaign.

CUSA's constitutional board released its unanimous decision to overturn the February election results at a CUSA council meeting March 6, after reviewing eight election complaints and challenges.

CUSA council voted 8-7 with five abstentions March 6 to overturn the decision of the constitutional board. But a motion to overturn the board's decision requires a five-ninths majority of council, or 19 councillors out of 34, to vote in favor of it.

After the issue was brought up again at an emergency meeting March 8, council voted 12-9 with four abstentions to overturn it. The necessary majority was not obtained.

The decision means the election has to take place all over again. Referendums on funding for a Carleton hockey team and the University of Ottawa Community Legal Clinic will have to be re-done. Student positions on the senate and board of governors will also have to be voted on again.

For the next election, nominations open March 11, campaigning begins March 22 and polling begins March 29.

Finance commissioner René Faucher says another election will cost about $8,500.

The board overturned the general election because it ruled electoral bylaws were broken after a challenge from three-time presidential candidate Elaine Silver.

In her challenge, she said she wanted

"to see that the entire election and its results be rejected and that a new election take place."

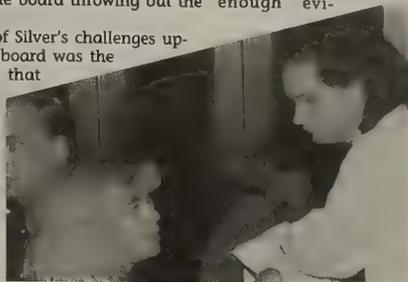

The CUSA constitution states there are to be a total of four all-candidates debates scheduled, but Silver's complaint says only two were held. Board member Theresa Cowan says this was a major reason for the board throwing out the results.

Another of Silver's challenges upheld by the board was the requirement that each poll booth post a sign informing students of voting locations across campus. This requirement was not met, according to the board's decision.

Another challenge from Silver was upheld. Two polling clerks are required at all times at each polling booth, according to the constitution. Silver claimed this wasn't the case. Witnesses came before the constitutional board to testify that individual polling clerks were seen alone at poll booths.

Silver submitted other challenges not upheld by the board. One states presidential candidate Richard Stanton's campaign was "riddled with unfair advantages that many of the other candidates did not have. He also clearly violated the procedures of campaigning on a number of occasions."

Stanton received a written warning from chief electoral officer James Rilett after campaigning in Oliver's pub in the Unicentre Feb. 2. According to the CUSA constitution, candidates are not allowed to solicit votes in commercial areas on campus. This challenge was not accepted by the board because there was a sn't dence. Another charge against Stanton's campaign came from Peter Nogalo, Brenda Kennedy's presidential campaign manager. Stanton's printed campaign pamphlets soliciting a position on the board of governors included information on his presidential platform.

Stewart and Stanton: back on the campaign trail.

Nogalo challenged these as unconstitutional, because if they had been included in Stanton's presidential budget, he would have exceeded the $150 spending limit and therefore been disqualified.

But this challenge was thrown out by the board as well because Rilett wrote a letter to the board which said he was at fault for allowing Stanton's pamphlets to be distributed. Rilett wrote that Stanton should not be disqualified for his mistake.

But Rilett himself challenged finance commissioner candidate Wendy Stewart's final campaign budget. Stewart submitted a final campaign budget which showed she spent $151.30, over the $150 limit. Rilett wrote in a memo to council chair Elaine Flis that Stewart should be disqualified but deferred a decision to the board.

The board turned down this challenge because it was discovered that Stewart had made a mathematical error in her budget and was actually not over budget.

The board "would like to caution Ms. Stewart to be more careful in the future because such mistakes in the position of finance commissioner can have drastic consequences for the student body," reads the board's ruling.

Despite the second chance for some candidates, several are choosing not to run again in the upcoming election.

Several candidates will not be running in the upcoming CUSA election, among them former presidential candidate Todd McAllister and newly elected arts representative Heather Jenkins, who got the most votes in the arts and social sciences election.

"I have fifty bucks left in my bank account," says McAllister.

He says he can't afford to lose his year because of the time he will have to put into another election.

McAllister says he blames CUSA for the election recall.

"The association didn't run the election properly," he says.

Rilett submitted his letter of resignation from the position of CEO at the March 8 council meeting, saying he was fed up with the process.

"They really have to tighten up the electoral rules. What we have are people interpreting the rules one way and others interpreting them differently." □

FREE FREE FREE

Income Tax Seminar & Consultations

SEMINAR

Tues., March 15, 2:00 pm - 4:30 pm

Room 424 Unicentre

given by Prof. Ann Clarke-Okah, School of Business

Seminar will be video taped for viewing:

March 16 - 18 at 1:00 pm

International Student Centre, Room 302 Unicentre

INDIVIDUAL CONSULTATION

Please register in advance at the Mature & Part-time Students' Lounge, Room 314 Unicentre. phone ext. 2754. Consultations are in Room 507 Unicentre.

Consultations are available in 20-minute time slots, from:
Mon, March 21	10:00 to 17:00
Tues, March 22	10:00 to 14:00
Wed, March 23	13:00 to 21:00
Thurs, March 24	13:00 to 19:00
Fri, March 25	10:00 to 15:00

Sponsored by the Graduate Students' Association, the Sch. of Business, and the CUSA funded services of CAMPS and Int. Stud. Centre.

APPLE SADDLERY

The Largest Western Boot Store in Canada.

INNES ROAD JUST EAST OF THE 417 (NEAR THE PRICE CLUB)

EATON'S

Request "Rock" jeans.
100% cotton old stonewash denim. Relaxed fit. Boot cut.
69.99

"Sub-Culture" henley T-shirt.
100% cotton. 7 colours.
15.99

Nak long-sleeve denim shirt.
(We cut off the sleeves because we like the way it looks. But hey, it's up to you.)
100% cotton.
34.99

EATON'S
Goods Satisfactory or Money Refunded

the
CHARLATAN
CARLETON'S INDEPENDENT STUDENT NEWSPAPER

There are 5 positions open for the
CHARLATAN PUBLICATIONS INC.
BOARD OF DIRECTORS.

The Board consists of 5 members whose primary purpose is to oversee the business matters of The Charlatan. The Board has no control over editorial policies. For more information contact Mo Gannon or Jill Perry at the Charlatan office Room 531 Unicentre, or call 788-6680 on or before March 17.

7th

the charlatan's annual short story
& poetry contest

DEADLINE EXTENSION for short story portion of the contest. NEW DEADLINE for short stories is MONDAY, MARCH 14, 1994.

prizes and judges will be announced next week.

MR. SUB™ & TSN™
The Sports Network
ENTER
THE GREAT CANADIAN PLAYOFF PARTY
CONTEST

THERE WILL BE FOUR WEEKLY DRAWS FOR HOCKEY JERSEYS, SWEAT SHIRTS AND TOTE BAGS
PLUS HOCKEY T-SHIRTS WILL BE GIVEN AWAY DAILY.

THE CONTEST RUNS FROM MARCH 4 TO MARCH 31, 1994.
ONLY AT THE FOLLOWING LOCATION:
MR. SUB, 2ND LEVEL UNIVERSITY CENTRE,
CARLETON UNIVERSITY

Opinions mixed on strike

Compiled by Ryan Ward
Charlatan Staff

Carleton's sessional lecturers and teaching and research assistants will vote March 10 on whether they should go on strike.

The Charlatan asked students, teaching assistants and professors what they know about the strike and how they think it will affect them.

"What kind of education are we getting here? I take the hat off to (the TAs') convictions, but don't drag the students into it."

Kevin Lacey, first-year political science student

"Students should be angry and ask for their tuition back. Our fight is (the students') fight."

Bob Lawson, graduate student, political science teaching assistant

"Besides from posters, I haven't heard much about the possible strike. I kind of wish I knew more."

Jason MacDonald, first-year journalism student

"It will be kind of cool to miss labs but our grades would suffer, and this is not good."

Brad Cheer, first-year science student

"They are not being very public with the negotiations. Other than the union and administration, no one seems to know what's going on."

Jon Alexander, political science professor

"We pay for TAs to help us when we don't understand something. It is not up to us. It is up to the goddamn administration."

Hélène Piérard, second-year environmental-science student

"At the beginning of the semester each professor signs a form delegating the marking scheme for the course. The only way to alter this is to have a unanimous class vote (on changing the marking scheme) or it could not be changed. With classes of 400 students this is quite unlikely."

Shirley Mills, president of the Carleton University Academic Staff Association on how classes may be affected by the strike.

"The TAs don't want the students to be left alone during exams so the strike is a hard decision to do."

Shirley Anne Off, graduate teaching assistant, mass communications

WORK IN BRITAIN THIS SUMMER

For more information, please contact:

TRAVEL CUTS
The Travel Company Of The Canadian Federation of Students

First Level Unicentre, Carleton 238-5493

A Summer Course at
McGill University
Montreal, Canada

Why Not!
We welcome visiting students

Increase your options
Lighten your course load
Enrich your program

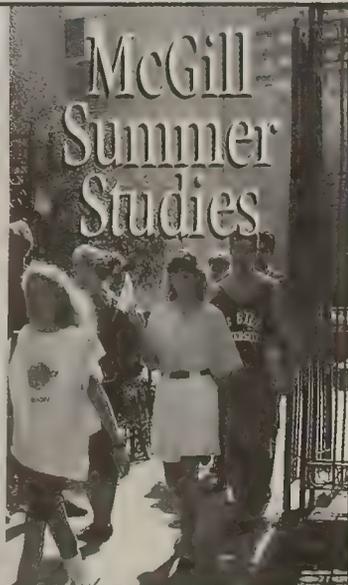

Discover Quebec and
"la francophonie"
Experience multicultural Montreal
Enjoy the summer festivals

It's all here for you!

McGill Summer Studies offers a full range of university level courses
An intensive four-week summer course carries 3 academic credits

Registration opens
March 8, 1994

MC GILL SUMMER STUDIES
McGill University • 3801 University St. • 4th Fl.
3801 Ave. • West Tower • Montreal
Quebec, Canada • H3A 2B4
Tel: (514) 398-5212 Fax: (514) 398-5211
E-Mail: summer-studies@mcgill.ca

Please send me
1994 Summer Studies and information on summer accommodation in
McGill University
Residences

Name _____
Address _____
City _____ Province/State _____
Postal/Zip Code _____ Tel. (____) _____
University College _____ Area of Interest _____

CUSA throws intelligence out with election

by Brent Dowdall
Charlatan Staff

Ah, chaos!
Nobody does it better than the council of the Carleton University Students' Association, who threw out its recent election March 6.

Now there were some damned good reasons to throw it out, but it means those five zillion posters were all for naught, and we'll have to do the whole stupid thing over again.

There are some moments in life a person will always remember. The moment that CUSA's constitutional board handed down its decision is one of those. The collective thud of jaws hitting the floor and eyes bugging out were some of those once-in-a-lifetime sights and sounds.

"I'm going to be sick," said (one-time) councillor-elect Pierre Leduc.

... both sides kept this sham going for four hours, with shameful attempts by members of both factions to score cheap political points on each other.

An eerie silence gripped the Baker Lounge table as councillors and assembled guests listened to board chair Cindy Frazer read the ruling. President-elect Richard Stanton, finance commissioner-elect Wendy Stewart and several newly elected councillors looked like someone had taken away their new Christmas puppies.

The challenge which overturned the election was filed by three-time presidential loser Elaine Silver (which could mean CUSA's version of the Buffalo Bills has finally won the Super Bowl).

Council got to debate and vote upon whether to accept the ruling and order new elections, or overturn the board and keep the election results.

In the ensuing fight to overturn the board's decision, the strongest supporter was Troy Ross, who just happened to be Stanton's campaign manager. (Surely a coincidence.)

As the proxy for arts rep Bryan Jones, Ross first insisted that Stanton and Stewart had not been given a copy of the challenges made against them in advance as the constitution requires.

Frazer and board member Theresa Cowan said the challenges were actually filed against Rilett, the CEO, and not against Stanton or Stewart.

Unfortunately, the board had to disappear for a few minutes to do some editing in their decision. See, they'd actually written that the challenges were against Stanton, so they had to rewrite their decision so as to remove any references to challenges against Stanton or Stewart. Otherwise it would have been yet another constitutional violation.

When the circus resumed after the ruling had been edited, debate began on a motion to overturn the board's ruling and let the election stand.

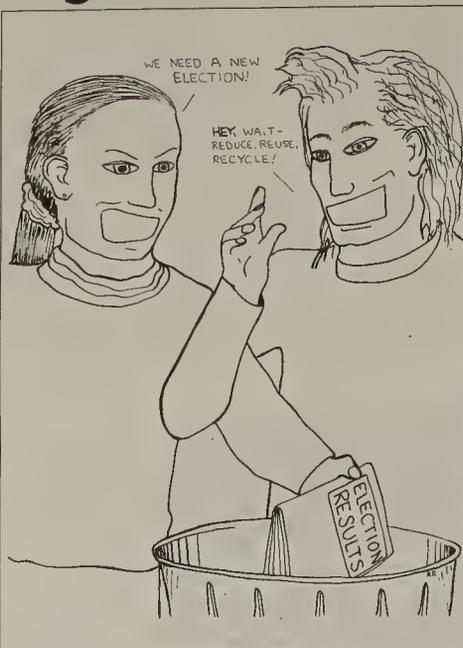

After beginning his speech with a totally irrelevant quote from Winston Churchill, Ross suggested that a flawed election was okay.

"Democracy is flawed. Constitutions are flawed. In my opinion, the decisions of the constitutional board are flawed." Apparently, logic is flawed as well.

President Lucy Watson, who sure can hold a grudge, said she was disgusted at how councillors such as arts rep Renée Gallant and arts rep Tom Golem voted to throw out the referendum on the fee hike for the Canadian Federation of Students last fall but now wanted to keep the election.

"I can't believe the arguments I'm hearing because they're exactly the same arguments I put forward about the referendum that was overturned last term," she said. "And I find it very ironic that the people who fought against my arguments are now sitting here throwing the same arguments back in my face."

No argument here. They both should have been thrown out.

As for the second council meeting March 8, perhaps the less said about this farce of democracy, the better.

The "don't throw out the elections" forces, led by finance commissioner René Faucher, Gallant, Golem and Ross, packed the audience with people (mostly newly elected councillors and campaign hacks) to clap and cheer whenever someone on their side made a point. They also branded their petition they'd been circulating for two days which they said had 1,500 names on it.

The "throw out the elections" side, led by arts proxy Derek Zeisman and journalism rep James Heath, meanwhile, had their own gallery to cheer them on.

Half an hour into the meeting, it was obvious that there simply wasn't the 19 councillors needed to overturn the ruling.

But both sides kept this sham going for four hours, with shameful attempts by members of both factions to score cheap political points on each other, worse than I've ever seen at council.

Maybe it was the bright lights of the television cameras from all the j-schoolers, but this disgrace made the Parliamentary Question Period look civilized. Thank God no one had weapons.

Faucher, showing more interest in council than he has all year, worked himself into a frenzy while arguing that the results should be kept. It drew him a standing ovation. Surely his friendship with Stanton had nothing to do with his passionate performance.

Arts rep John Edwards, serving as the council chair for the second consecutive meeting, certainly picked appropriate attire when he wore his black and white referee's jersey. A zebra in a zoo.

"The member will shut the fuck up," he yelled at one point at student Ian Reilly. Edwards could have used such a phrase innumerable times to any number of people.

Such as Heath and Rilett. Heath had moved a motion March 6 to have Rilett replaced before the new election, but the motion was not considered.

Rilett said he wasn't informed about that meeting. Obviously, he learned about it and had some things to say at the next one.

The two yelled at each other throughout the debate and then befitting the madness of the scene, Rilett called him a "jerk" and generally heckled Heath while the councillor made his speech.

More attacks were launched at the March 6 meeting. Golem began the circus with an attack on each executive member. In order, he accused Watson and Faucher of being away from the job too much.

He said director of academics Gary Anandasangare had worked up a number of "mental health days" and should take some time off. He criticized director of services Theresa Cowan of violating her terms of reference by writing two memos trying to discourage socializing between professors and students. Then he accused vice-president internal Rob Jamieson of not paying employees or having meeting agendas ready on time.

Finally, he said vice-president external Kristine Haselsteiner works hard, "but not much has been done there."

"I'm not going to address Tom's concerns because I think if you wanted those to be constructive you could have approached us in a less hostile environment or in a less confrontational manner," responded Watson.

Presumably other universities or the Cayman Islands are less hostile environments. Oh, and Lucy, it's hard to approach people when you're not in town.

The final bomb came March 8 after the vote on the board's ruling, when Rilett submitted his letter of resignation.

"I only regret making the mistake of assuming that I was dealing with adults," his letter reads.

Kinda sums up CUSA pretty well. □

Fun Farquhar Fact: Sparky and Spruce kicking Olympic butt!

by David Bartolf
Charlatan Staff

During reading week, while most of you went south to work on your skin cancer or went home so mom could work on your laundry, Carleton's premier jock hit the country that looks like it was drawn by a cartographer with the shakes for some Olympic action.

Ever the man of action, here is just a small sample of Sparkomatic's itinerary to pass the time in Lillehammer, when he and Spruce weren't kicking ass in the luge heats:

- hitting those padded walls at 45 km/hour in every short-track event on television

- filling out Richard Stanton's name on cards asking for free Rogaine samples
- looking, with the teams from Israel and American Samoa, for a fourth for bridge, since Eddie "The Eagle" Edwards wasn't around this year

SPARKY: GOIN' FOR THE OLYMPIC GOLD!

- discussing baseball's designated hitter rule with Tonya Harding
- yelling to the person sitting next to him "It isn't real hockey; Patrick Roy isn't in net," whenever an opposing team scored on Team Canada

- drinking lots of coffee to write his name in the snow, if you know what I mean

- trading brownie recipes with Hillory Clinton

- trading hash brownie recipes with Bill Clinton

- asking the ticket agents "Whaddya mean my Mastercard is no good?"

- annoying the natives with his "Have you driven a fjord lately?" joke

- discussing the use of Pert shampoo with Josée Chouinard ("Shampoo, rinse repeat", but, my God, it never lets you break free of the cycle!")

- one word: yodelling

- a second word: streaking,

- telling the American athletes that, yes, Canada is the country where ice was born, but, no, he does not know their particular cousin in Toronto

- negotiating a deal to say "je vais aller au EuroDisney" for when he won the gold.

TIM O'CONNOR

Favoritism rampant in regional COSEP

by Brandie Weikle
Charlatan Staff

Federal government summer employment programs for students in the Ottawa area are riddled with favoritism and unfair hiring practices, according to an internal audit.

The Public Service Commission of Canada conducted a review in 1992 of summer employment programs which found that the students landing jobs were those who were recommended by relatives or friends in the civil service.

The commission's report found that 77.5 per cent of positions in the national capital region were filled by students returning to their jobs or by referrals from within the civil service.

It says that hiring for both the Career-Oriented Summer Employment Program (COSEP) and the Non-Career-Oriented Summer Employment Program (Non-COSEP) is a "paper-burdened process, to be gone around, rather than a help in reaching operational objectives."

"As a result, the Public Service Commission is taking back management of the programs in 1995," says Andy Rapoch, a communications advisor for the commission.

The COSEP program, administered by Human Resources Development Canada, provides government jobs for students that will advance them in the direction of a career path they'd like to follow.

Students apply to their local COSEP office every year by the end of February, which then forwards their names to the government departments where positions exist for which they are qualified.

Non-COSEP positions are temporary jobs for the government which are not career-related.

Until the commission takes over the hiring, it has set new guidelines for departments hiring summer students, says Yvan Clermont, a communications officer for the youth directorate of Human Resources Development.

As a result of the report, this year all interested students must send an application to the COSEP hiring centre and no students can be hired on recommendation.

Also, non-COSEP jobs must all be advertised in placement centres and COSEP jobs from other parts of Canada must be advertised outside their local areas, says Clermont.

Clermont says this summer, students will not be able to come back to the same position without reapplying.

Rapoch says exceptions to the new guidelines will only be made in cases where the student is on a clear career path and significant investment has been made in training the individual for a certain position.

Marc Cuerrier, who is in charge of COSEP positions at Statistics Canada, says the commission's new regulations will not affect the way his department hires COSEP students.

"We were clean when they audited over here and they found nothing wrong," says Cuerrier.

He says sometimes students who have worked in Statistics Canada before are rehired, but the department never hires people on the basis of references from people they know in the civil service.

"We send a request to COSEP, who sends a list of students that made the qualifications. There is no favoritism here," says Cuerrier.

Ian Miller, director of Carleton's Placement and Career Services centre, says in a job program as large as COSEP, some occurrences of favoritism are inevitable.

"I've heard stories where a minister, deputy minister, or a high-level civil servant request that their son or daughter be considered first," says Miller.

Favoritism has been a problem in the COSEP program before, says Kristine Haselsteiner, vice-president external of Carleton University Students' Association.

"I once worked at a summer employment centre and we always advised that it was easier to get a job if you knew someone," says Haselsteiner.

"It was a situation of complete favoritism. Students without much experience who didn't know anyone didn't have much of a chance," she says.

Haselsteiner says the changes to the hiring sound like an improvement.

The Public Services Commission is a branch of the federal government which observes the public service to make sure that it is "non-partisan and representative of Canadian society."

The commission completed its report in May 1993, but it was only made public after it was obtained by the Canadian Press news service last month under the Access to Information Act. □

New smoking ban may affect universities

by Karolina Srutek
Charlatan Staff

An Ottawa Liberal MPP wants an amendment to exempt universities and colleges from proposed provincial government legislation which would prohibit smoking on campuses, including residences and bars.

age to purchase cigarettes to 19-year-olds from 18 and would require picture identification for the purchase of cigarettes.

"What we want to avoid is where the bill deals with people who already smoke," says McGuinty.

"There are students on campus who teria. Separate ventilation systems is one of them.

But Sheri Boyd, the supervisor of Rooster's Coffeehouse at Carleton, says the ventilation systems at Rooster's and Oliver's don't meet the new code of ventilation systems proposed by the government.

The government sent Boyd a letter saying it would require that ventilation systems discharge the smoke outside, whereas the ones at Oliver's and Rooster's vent the smoke through an interior system.

"We would lose a lot of revenue. They (students) come in here instead of the library," says Boyd.

Some students say they think the legislation banning smoking in all indoor areas is a bad idea.

"We come in here to smoke and have a drink. They are going to lose a lot of money from us," says Susan Kim, a second-year sociology-anthropology student. "They depend on us."

"The wheels of democracy are falling off and there is no auto club big enough to fix it," says first-year arts student David Dunn. "Anything that impedes the freedom of an individual on any level is wrong."

Caterina Colantuoni, a fourth-year sociology student who smokes, says attitudes towards smoking have changed a lot since she came to Carleton.

"Five years ago, I could walk to my classroom with a cigarette." □

This may soon be the only place you can smoke at Carleton: outside.

Dalton McGuinty, a member of the government committee reviewing Bill 119, says people at universities and colleges should be exempt from the bill.

Bill 119 is called an "Act to Prevent the Provision of Tobacco to Young Persons and to Regulate its Sale and Use by Others." Section 9 of the bill would prohibit people from smoking tobacco in retail establishments, public transit shelters, public schools, private vocational schools and post-secondary educational institutions.

If the bill is passed by the legislature, it will apply to the campuses of all universities and colleges, including residences, offices and bars.

The bill has gone through first and second readings and it's presently being reviewed clause by clause by a legislative committee. The committee will suggest improvements, then the bill will go through a third and final reading in the legislature sometime this spring.

"Let the students and faculties make their own rules," says McGuinty. He says universities are already regulated by city bylaws and by policies drawn up by student councils.

Bill 119 would also increase the legal age to purchase cigarettes to 19-year-olds from 18 and would require picture identification for the purchase of cigarettes. . . . Let's just focus on the people who haven't started."

McGuinty says the bill as it currently reads would discriminate against people at universities and colleges. For instance, he says, it is unreasonable to impose rules governing smoking in university residences when there are no such rules for apartment buildings.

David Sterritt, Carleton's director of housing and food services, says there are 1,660 spaces for students in residence and 700 of them are available for students who are permitted to smoke in their rooms.

Blaise Kunopaski, a first-year student in Lanark residence, says he would be willing to smoke outside, but he thinks students would be offended if the ban goes through.

McGuinty says there are two exceptions to Section 9 as it stands that would allow smoking on campuses.

First, it wouldn't prohibit smoking outdoors and second, smoking would be permitted in designated areas, for which the government would create specific cri-

Cooke blocks Brock Oh, the irony!

by John Steinbachs
Charlatan Staff

Ontario Education Minister Dave Cooke has threatened to block a move by Brock University in St. Catharines to raise tuition for its bachelor of education program to $10,000 per year.

On March 5, Brock's board of trustees, the university's highest governing body, approved a proposal which will increase tuition by $7,700 for some spots in the program next year.

Brock currently offers 350 government-subsidized spots in the one-year program, open to students who have finished three years of university.

The university will add an additional 50 spots, but the cost of these spots will be $10,000 each. Tuition for the subsidized positions is currently $2,300.

John Shalagan, communications officer for the Ministry of Education, says Cooke announced that if Brock's plan goes ahead, the ministry will withhold the same amount of money from the university's grant as it raises in new tuition money.

Brock has already accepted applications for the fall, says Grant Dobson, Brock's executive director for external relations. But he says no one will be accepted for the new spots until Brock officials meet with Cooke in the upcoming weeks to discuss the ministry's position.

Shalagan says Cooke also said Brock's administrators didn't see the implications of his plan.

"Other universities and other programs may do the same as Brock," says Shalagan.

Shalagan says Cooke also voiced his concern at the creation of an elite system in university education, whereby those with money have a better chance at an education.

The Brock board voted in the proposal to provide a "Canadian option" for students in search of a teaching certificate, says Dobson.

Dobson says because of the limited spots in the education program, students who are qualified but are not accepted end up going to the United States to attain a diploma.

"There they pay $12,000 to $14,000," says Dobson.

This move by Brock makes the program "more accessible," says Dobson, because students are leaving the country to attain the degrees already.

But Tom Attard, the vice-president of student services for Brock University Students Union, disagrees with Dobson.

Attard says students who have the educational qualifications for the extra 50 places but not the cash to pay the

BROCK cont'd on page 10.

College grads may soon be returnable

by Sara-Lynne Levine
Charlatan Staff

Just like some companies on late-night television, some Canadian community colleges will soon provide a money-back guarantee with their degrees.

Beginning this spring, Durham College in Oshawa, Ont., will offer 12-month guarantees with its graduates when they finish school.

With the guarantee, Durham graduates who enter the workforce in the next year can be sent back to the school for free, voluntary re-training if employers are unhappy with their skills.

There are 4,000 students at Durham College and over 1,100 grads will be guaranteed when they graduate in June.

The guarantee covers all departments from technology to arts to health and science, says Shari Lovelock, president of the students' association at Durham College.

The Nova Scotia Ministry of Education wants to implement a similar program for all of its community colleges as part of a restructuring plan.

The program would guarantee the competency of community-college graduates, says Donna MacDonald, communications officer for the ministry.

"Graduates should have a certain skill level when they graduate and if they don't meet that competency level, then employers can send the students back and we will provide additional training," says MacDonald. She says the minister hopes to have a program in place by 1995.

"This is something we are working towards", says MacDonald. "This is a program where we would have competency-based standards."

MacDonald says the ministry is looking at which programs produce graduates with measurable skills that could come with a guarantee.

There are 18 English-language community colleges in Nova Scotia and six French campuses, which serve about 8,000 full-time students.

In Durham so far, the idea for the program has met with a positive response.

"We are putting faith in our students and faith in the education of our students," says Lovelock. "When we told our students, (about the guarantee) they couldn't believe the college was willing to stand behind their students. They were dumbfounded."

There has been a similar response in Nova Scotia, says MacDonald.

"The students we interviewed think it is a positive idea," says MacDonald. "I haven't heard any negative response. The idea is great for grads. It gives students a leg up, because the employers don't have to take the students' word."

She says employers would be encouraged to hire graduates from community colleges with the guarantee because they will be expected to have the necessary job skills.

Does this turn students into commodities? MacDonald thinks not. "Any company that is proud of that product should guarantee that product," says MacDonald. "The commodity is the training we are providing, not the student."

Lovelock agrees. "It's the college saying we believe in our grads. It's a win-win situation for the students and the school."

Algonquin College in Ottawa has no plans to create a student guarantee, says Robin Dorrell, the college's director of marketing and public affairs. Dorrell says the college is "familiar with the program," but is not looking into it.

So far, there are no plans to provide a guarantee to Carleton students.

Don McEown, executive assistant to Carleton's president, says universities could not offer guarantees because university programs are not specifically designed for vocational skills training.

"I don't know of anyone who has proposed the idea here," says McEown. "University education is not just solely for gaining employment. It is education, not vocation." □

Gov't loans pilot project has few takers

by Arn Keeling and G. Bruce Rolston

TORONTO (CUP) — A pilot project begun last November for a new student loan system has had almost no takers, Ontario government officials admit.

The project is supposed to test an income-contingent loan system, where students will pay back their loans according to the amount they earn after graduation.

If the project is successful, some student representatives say the income-contingent loans could be used to make students pay for a larger share of their education.

The pilot program was supposed to give out 1,000 loans this year to students at Ontario universities. It offered $2,500 to any student who was deemed not eligible for normal Ontario Student Assistance Plan loans. Students in their final year of undergraduate studies and who did not qualify under OSAP's assessment of financial need were invited to participate.

But as of last week, no more than a few dozen students had received one of the over 150 loans of $2,500 each set aside for students at Toronto's three universities.

"I don't think it'll tell us much at all," says Jamie MacKay, an Ontario Ministry of Education spokesperson.

Student loan officers at universities across the province did not receive information on the program until it was announced last November.

"I would say the majority of students would have figured out how to finance their education (by November), especially those in fourth year," says Karen Takenaka, student aid manager for Ryerson Polytechnic University, which has no students who have received income-contingent loans.

Unlike regular student loans, income-contingent loans collect interest from the day a student borrows the money. The difference between the new loans and regular assistance is that if a student's income after graduation does not reach a certain level, part or all of the loan is forgiven.

Carleton may have one of the largest groups of students participating in the project, according to Carol Fleck, director of student awards. She says 19 students at Carleton are participating in the project, out of 39 spaces allotted to the university in the pilot project.

Fleck says the higher rate of participation at Carleton may be because Carleton was able to quickly identify those students who were eligible.

Unlike most other Ontario universities, Carleton keeps detailed statistics of students who apply for and receive student loans, as well as those who don't qualify.

The university was thus able to inform students who qualified for the pilot project before they found other means of support.

Fleck also says the project would have been more successful if it didn't restrict the loans to students in their final year.

"If it were offered in the second year of a program, we'd have more students who don't qualify under the needs assessment (for OSAP)."

As far as what the education ministry will do with the meagre data being collected by the pilot project, Fleck says both the university and the ministry are unsure.

The University of Toronto's financial aid manager, David Sidebottom, also criticizes the timing of the start of the program. He says he had identified only 140 students at U of T who would even qualify for the loans. □ increased tuition will be turned away.

BROCK cont'd from page 10.

The board is "setting a dangerous precedent," says Attard.

Attard says he understands the program has been faced with cutbacks and enrolment is limited, but he doesn't agree with the way Brock is dealing with it.

He says he's worried this system of opening enrolment for a huge fee "may grow and work its way into the entire system." □

By now, you've probably realized there's more to life than school. And that a job is only as good as the career it builds. We can help. We can give you the skills and financial knowledge to become an accounting professional: a Certified General Accountant. Our CGA program of studies can lead to better opportunities in business, government and public practice. If you're ready to make even more of yourself, call (613) 232-5363, or write to us at 222 Queen Street, Suite 302, Ottawa K1P 5V9.

We're accounting for the future in Ontario

Certified General Accountants Association of Ontario

CRUISE JOBS

Students Needed!
Earn up to $2,000+ per month working for Cruise Ships or Land-Tour Companies. World Travel (Hawaii, Mexico, the Caribbean, etc.). Summer and Full-Time employment available. No experience necessary. For more information call:

Cruise Employment Services
(206)634-0468 ext.C4006

SMALL DORM ROOMS: A Chinese student at the Beijing Institute of Fine Arts finally has some time alone. Eight students often live in rooms seven metres by four metres wide.

by Bill Cooper
Charlatan Staff

CHINA IN CONTRAST

For students in China, the events of June 1989 are far behind them.

That was when students and residents of Beijing clashed with the People's Liberation Army in Tiananmen Square. The army's massacre of protesters there still provokes emotion for many.

Several books on the events of Tiananmen estimate 3,000 to 5,000 protesters were killed. According to Voices From Tiananmen Square, the Chinese government estimated fewer than 400 deaths. It is unclear who is correct.

Despite the immense suffering in the name of reform, the priorities for many Chinese students have changed.

Conversations in the crowded dormitories of Beijing universities no longer revolve around democracy and demonstrations, but rather jobs.

As an exchange student, I lived in a student dormitory while in China, and conducted about 35 interviews with students, graduates and faculty of about 12 universities, including Beijing University, People's University, and the University of International Business and Economics, where I stayed.

The sentiments I encountered were not those of grand calls for the ideal of democracy.

Rather, students expressed aspirations of a getting a high-paying job and having the opportunity to travel.

There is a predominant determination to learn English, get a job with a trade company and live the life of the successful businessperson.

"I think business is no interesting, but there is good salary and maybe some travelling," says Shang Jinsong, a UIBE graduate in business.

Bill Cooper, a fourth-year journalism student at Carleton, went on an exchange to the University of International Business and Economics in Beijing last year.

This institution, situated in the northeast corner of Beijing, hosts about 70 foreign students a year from around the world. Each year one of those students is selected from Carleton.

Carleton International, a university office that sponsors students and faculty on academic exchanges, keeps in contact with foreign universities and sponsored Cooper's trip.

While in China, Cooper conducted research and interviews which dealt with the "post-Tiananmen" mood of Chinese university students for an honors research project.

Carleton's MacOdrum Library is presently hosting a photographic exhibit of Cooper's work, on display until March 21, 1994.

One piece was recently selected for publication in the Best of College Photography Annual 1994 magazine, put out by Nikon and Photographers' Forum. Following the display at Carleton, the exhibit will move to the University of Ottawa. □

While some would like to see increased political accountability and some form of political reform, for now, most would readily agree to improved living conditions.

In the universities I visited, as many as eight students live in dormitory rooms about seven metres long and four metres wide.

Indeed, many students say that it was concerns such as dormitory conditions and for women to have access to universities that drove them to the 1989 protest in Tiananmen Square.

The banners for democracy they marched under seemed to symbolize their inability to amalgamate a multitude of very basic concerns and express them to a Western media hungry for grandiose statements.

One pressing concern is that women still face barriers to enter Chinese universities.

"In my class there is 30 student, only six are girl . . . I think it is because of Chinese society, not because of us," says Dan Wen, a female graduate of the Central Institute of Fine Arts in Beijing.

In science- or business-oriented universities such as UIBE, entrance policies have a set ratio of as many as four men to one woman. It will not be exceeded.

While Dan Wen and many like her believe that there are many political improvements to be made in China, their aspirations for a successful career have replaced the 1989 spirit of protest.

And unlike Dan Wen, who is able to take solace in her art, many see a well-paid career as the best vehicle to a better lifestyle in China.

This aura of change is not unique to student life in China. It is almost tangible everywhere one looks. Private enterprise has sprung up in every corner and private wealth, for some, has grown immensely.

The country's gross national product has increased by 12 per cent over the last four years, according to The Economist. Inflation in 1993 hovered at 23 per cent.

Yet the China of old is still a feature of every land or cityscape.

China is now, more than ever, a country of contrast. Color televisions are transported on horse-drawn wagons from warehouses to department stores, and the traditional black steel bikes of Beijing swarm around an ever-growing armada of Mercedes-Benz sedans.

Ornate sweeping temple roofs, adorned with bright gold figurines, rise above rickety grey-tiled roofs, housing what is often three generations of one family below.

Pothole-ridden, earthen side streets, smelling of backed-up sewers and outdoor toilets, open up on to huge, tree-lined boulevards.

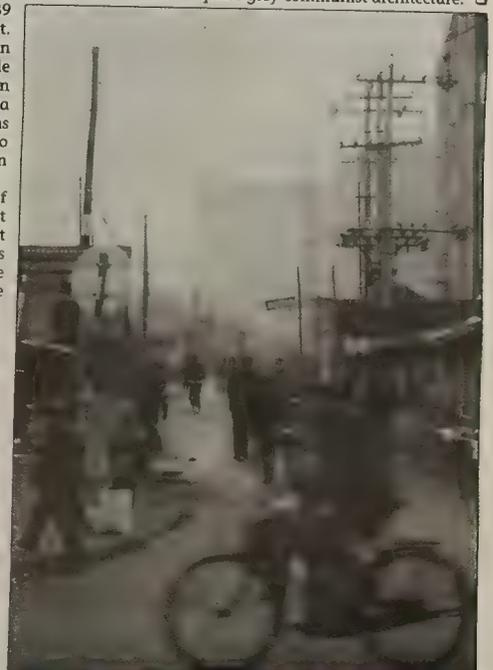

Contemporary Western fascination with China surely finds its source in these pictures of contrast.

The Chinese and their adaptability to these changes provides no end of curious sights. It is a seemingly endless population of about 1.3 billion making this adaption.

Some are tall, some are short, some dress in silk shirts, business suits and skirts, and some dress in the traditional blue Mao Tse-tung suits designed for the proletariat masses. All of them stream amongst garish ancient temples and square grey communist architecture. □

LEFT: Dan Wen (on the right), a graduate of the Beijing Institute of Fine Arts, visits with a former roommate who still has to graduate.

RIGHT: Chengde, a small town about 300 km northeast of Beijing bustles with traditional black steel bicycles.

International Students Kick

by Tracy Hitchcock
Charlatan Staff

You could have gotten your fortune told. Or tried manto, a yogurt and beef dish from Afghanistan.

You could have heard speakers on the political situation in Bosnia. Or listened to flamenco musicians at the Peppermill.

These were some of the activities offered March 1-7 during Carleton's annual International Students Week, organized by the International Students' Centre.

Ehab Shanti, co-ordinator of the centre, says the week is a way for any student to learn about other cultures. Shanti says the week also helps international students feel more comfortable by meeting other students of the same nationality.

"A lot of international students face loneliness," Shanti says. Displays were set up in Baker Lounge March 1-4 by student organizations like the Persian Students' Association and the Baha'i Club.

Nelofer Pazira worked at the table set up by the Afghanistan Students' Association. She wore a long, dark blue cotton dress, embroidered on the sleeves, hem and front, which she says is typical of what women wear in north central Afghanistan.

Pazira says International Students' Week educates people.

"In the media, people only hear a few minutes about the political situation (in Afghanistan). Here, they can learn about the culture."

Pazira says when she came to Canada three years ago, she experienced culture shock. She didn't speak any English, and schools were very different from those in Afghanistan.

"But if you open up and go out, you meet people and begin to have fun."

Pazira, a first-year journalism student, says she has friends of many different nationalities.

"I love to learn about other cultures, and people that are different from me."

Two students offered to tell fortunes to entice students to visit their Taiwanese Students' Association display. They also translated names into Chinese characters.

Haris Ceric was at a table set up by the Ottawa Ad-Hoc Committee on Bosnia-Herzegovina. Ceric was in Sarajevo when war broke out in April 1992, and escaped the city shortly after.

He says International Students' Week is important because it helps people break down stereotypes.

"People will ask, 'If you're Muslim, how come you're white?'" Ceric says, adding it's important to make people aware of what's going on in Bosnia, "even though they're bored with it."

Ceric says the week helps Canadian students learn about other cultures by meeting people instead of just reading books.

A cultural show, which topped off the week, was held at the Peppermill cafeteria March 5. About 100 people came to watch performers from several different countries.

Members of the Pro-Palestine Students' Association hopped, spun, clapped, stomped and shouted to Palestinian music. The men wore white shirts, black vests and black boots. The women wore bright red dresses and maroon headscarves.

A performance by Iranian students honored women in Iranian rice fields. The dancers shook sifting baskets in their performance.

Flamenco musicians, the Bahai Club, an Egyptian belly-dancer and a choir group from Madagascar also performed.

Allison Vazu, one of two student performers with the choir group of four, says their music is a combination of Asian and African music. She says the event was great because it gave people a chance to experience what other cultures are all about.

Shanti says a $10 international dinner after the show raised $600. The money will go towards an emergency loan fund for international students, administered by Carleton's foreign student advisor's office, a university office that works closely with the centre. □

With files from Judith Pereira

Thursday, March 10

In the last few days of International Women's Week, Dr. Valerie Hume of the United Nations Development Fund for Women will speak on "Issues Facing Third World Women" in Baker Lounge at 12 p.m.

Friday, March 11

A talk on "Muslim Women: Issues and Images" for International Women's Week will take place at 10:30 a.m. in Baker Lounge.

Later in the day, catch the National Film Board's No Time to Stop: Immigrant Women in Canada in Room 308 Unicentre at 3 p.m.

Saturday, March 12

Brazilian percussionist Nana Vasconcelo will give a solo concert at the National Gallery of Canada at 8 p.m. Vasconcelo has worked with Paul Simon on Rhythm of the Saints, and plays the berimbau, the tabla and other percussion instruments. Tickets are $15 in advance and $18 at the door.

The Hispanic Society and the Spanish Cultural Centre will host Gran Fiesta '94 at 622 Montreal Rd. at 8 p.m. Tickets are $5 in advance and $7 at the door, and can be bought at Info Carleton and the 14th floor of Dunton Tower.

Anjali, a performer of Indian dance, will host a performance of dance, music, poetry and images called "Visions of the Feminine/Tagone's Mother Earth" at the Alumni Theatre at Carleton University at 8 p.m. Tickets are available at Info Carleton and cost $12 for adults, $8 for students, seniors and the unemployed.

Sunday, March 13

The Young Poets of Ottawa present "Say it Poetically, Say it Black," at 2 p.m. at the SAW Gallery, 67 Nicholas St. A $3 donation is appreciated.

The One World Film Festival will present over 40 international independently produced films around Ottawa March 13-20 at a package price of $30. The films will be shown at the Alumni Auditorium at the University of Ottawa, the Bytowne Cinema and the SAW Gallery.

Hey you!
The Charlatan is recyclable.

Help keep us printing trash, recycle your paper.

IS THAT THE PEPPERMILL? Palestinian students stomp, clap, and dance in the Peppermill March 5

Humber can help you

Turn your Education into a Career

Humber College is offering a great selection of special programs designed specifically for University and College graduates.

Often referred to as "Practical Graduate School", these programs are short, (we recognize your previous level of education) so you can get right down to some practical training that includes contact with Business and Industry professionals.

Multiply your career potential by combining the strength of your University background with the practical education for which Humber College has become known.

- Marketing Management
- Radio Broadcasting
- International Telecommunications
- Public Relations
- Journalism
- Recreation Leadership
- Human Resources Management
- International Marketing (Latin America and Asia Pacific)
- Early Childhood Education (Special Needs)
- Media Copywriting

Out of town? call 1-800-268-4867 Local calls (416) 675-5000

Admin. screws us all in labor dispute

No one will be happy if the teaching assistants, research assistants and student sessional lecturers go on strike.

But if they do go on strike, it's because they've been forced to by administration.

After looking at the university's final offer on March 7, the executive of CUPE Local 2323 is recommending to members that they reject it. There will be a meeting on Thursday, March 10, when local members will vote on whether or not to accept administration's offer. If they vote to reject it, they will be in a legal position to strike.

Administrators, like David Van Dine, the university's head negotiator, are giving no clear guarantees about what will happen with courses in the event of a lengthy strike. This is breeding fear among students about the fate of their academic year and getting them to turn against the union local.

But think about who makes up CUPE Local 2323. Every member of the local is a student.

If students end up blaming the TAs, RAs and student sessional lecturers for the effects of a strike, they'll be too busy to figure out who the real enemy is. Administration would rather have us fighting each other than them.

The TAs, RAs and student sessional lecturers are not the problem.

Throughout the months of negotiations, it has become apparent that the union local has done all the compromising. They've conceded on many of their demands, from wage increases to dental and child-care benefits for members.

University negotiators have continued to throw their hands in the air, squawking, "There's no money."

Although the union negotiators were willing to take a wage freeze if it went with a corresponding tuition freeze, the university negotiators refused to consider this.

Van Dine was quoted in the Ottawa Sun saying, "Why should they get a tuition freeze when other students don't?" As if this is some kind of unfair request on the part of the union local.

But you can see the local's logic. After getting a three-per-cent salary increase for 1992/93 in its last collective agreement, the university hiked graduate students' post-residency tuition fees by 78 per cent. It's only reasonable that the local executive doesn't want their members wages eroded by tuition hikes again.

The result of a strike could have a dramatic impact on future relations between administration and students. You may not be a teaching assistant now, but you might want the opportunity later.

If the union local can win improvements in pay, tuition, working conditions and other factors, this will directly benefit you in the future. It could also finally force the university to deal with students as people and not merely as an endless stream of revenue.

However, if administration members succeed with their divide-and-conquer tactics, it leaves the door open for them to continue their blatant disregard for student concerns, whether you're a unionized TA or a first-year student.

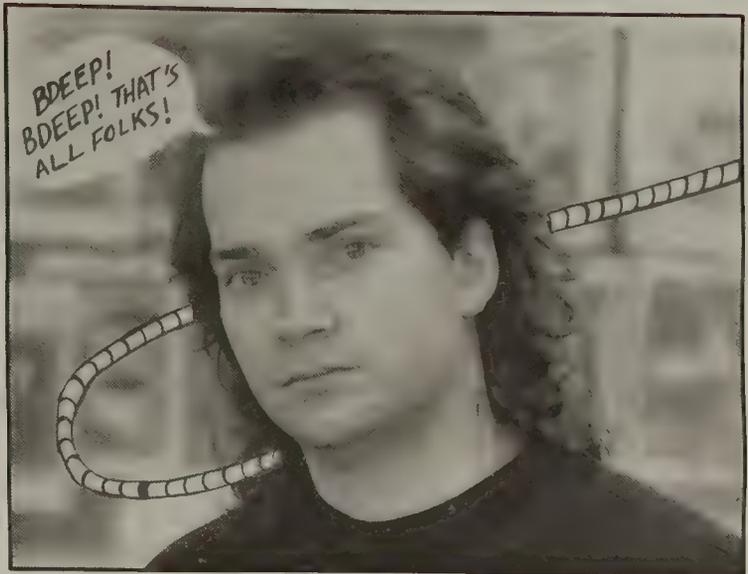

As students, remember — you're not powerless. If administration can't settle its labor disputes fairly and there is a strike, ask administration for your money back. When we paid our tuition this year, it was with the expectation that we would have TAs to help us and our professors. If the university fails to provide the education we were paid for, we should get our money back.

As Maclean's has already proven, nothing scares the administration more than bad press.

The TAs, RAs and student sessional lecturers are not the enemy. They're fighting for more than fair wages. Their fight for a fair deal represents the failure of those in power at the university to recognize that student concerns are important enough to be taken seriously.

Whether or not a strike takes place, the TAs, RAs and sessional lecturers deserve your support.

BD, MP & SG

OPINION

It's a Seinfeld kind of world

by David Bartolf
Charlatan Staff and Master of His Domain

"Have you ever noticed that people are starting to talk like Seinfeld?" -- Mario Carlucci, Charlatan news editor

As soon as you finish reading this, run out behind your house. Look for the alien space pod. You know, the kind you were warned about in Invasion of the Body Snatchers.

But these pods are filled with a greater threat — videotapes of Seinfeld.

A friend clued me in to this insidious conspiracy masterminded by the American television network, National Brain Control. The conspiracy — to turn the world into Seinfeld-imitating robots.

I was seated in McDonald's with her, her boyfriend and another friend. I sipped on a damn fine cup of coffee. We talked about everything and nothing in particular: work, traffic, bad waiters, the NBA salary cap, e-mailed love letters, hairlines, the best way to serve eggs, and the level of shit Douglas Coupland is full of.

I began playing with my cup, blowing into it, much like something a character on Seinfeld would do. It created the low whistling hum an old-fashioned stubby beer bottle would have had.

I commented on the Seinfeld-like quality of our conversation — one woman and three men, all friends, spending more time talking than eating and my screwing around with the coffee cup.

I told them of my conversation with a complete stranger at the Shopper's Drug Mart earlier that evening. I overheard him talking about an episode in which George had a job interview to be a bra salesman. We both said George's catch-phrase from the episode, "Two cups in front, two hooks in back; it's amazing." The stranger and I then harmonized, "What a great show." We were living in one world under the United Colors of Jerry.

I smugly concluded my story, punctuating with one last whistle-hum on the cup, "It's a Seinfeld-kinda world."

My friend responded with a "Tsk" of bland disgust. "Seinfeld has taken over the minds of all my friends," she said. "The smart ones and the dumb ones."

The roof and skies above us opened. Light from the heavens shone down. The voice of the wisdom of God had spoken through my friend. Seinfeld-ness was not a goal to be admired, or sought after.

She was right. The worst premise of Invasion of the Body Snatchers had become reality. The world sleeps, unaware of the indoctrination inflicted on it. Our lives are imitating art, or at least the facsimile of art, television.

On Seinfeld, each main character fits a major Jungian archetype. Viewers identify so strongly with the characters that we yearn to be them and we begin to imitate them.

George is the trickster, too smart for his own good. Kramer is the lover and the shaman. Elaine is the anima, the female part of the male psyche. And Jerry is the warrior. He depicts the philosopher-ruler — the observer and actor — within every man, the virile king of his domain.

Even more sinister is the circular style of the stories, implying sophistication, admittedly greater than most other alternatives on the tube, but that ain't saying much.

The plots are wheels turning within wheels. Elaine misses an opportunity to sleep with John Kennedy Jr., who beds Nancy, "the virgin," who Jerry had been wooing. The only good drive Kramer makes while whacking golf balls into the Atlantic lodges one into the blow hole of a whale. George, pretending to be a marine biologist to impress a woman, plucks it out.

Seinfeld encourages a weird, uniform mindset. We all play with coffee cups, or the like, and synopsise the same vapid Seinfeld show from the night before. But our lives shouldn't be a 22-minute sitcom.

I am beyond help. Last night I was up at 2 a.m., watching it on tape. I fast-forwarded through the commercials, stopping at the exact spot each segment started. This practised, flawless efficiency, like that of an addict spiking his vein without tapping his arm, frightened me.

Dear reader, there may be hope for you. Heed my warning, destroy the mind-displacing Seinfeld videotape pods before it's too late.

You don't believe me? Think. Why is it called programming? □

the CHARLATAN
CARLETON'S INDEPENDENT STUDENT NEWSPAPER
UNPLUGGED #6
MARCH 10, 1994

VOLUME 23 NUMBER 25
EDITOR-IN-CHIEF MO GANNON
PRODUCTION MANAGER KEVIN MCKAY
BUSINESS MANAGER JILL PERRY
NEWS EDITORS:
MARIO CARLUCCI & BRENT DOWDALL
C.O.N.T.R.I.B.U.T.O.R.S
DAVID BARTOLF RYAN WARD
RYAN NAKASHIMA CARON WATT
BRANDIE WEIKLE ANDREA WIEBE

NATIONAL AFFAIRS:
EDITOR: ARN KEELING
CONTRIBUTORS: SARA-LYNNIE LEVINE
KAROLINA SRUTEK BRANDIE WEIKLE
AND LAST OF ALL JOHN STEINBACHS

FEATURES:
EDITOR: ANDREA SMITH
CONTRIBUTORS: COLIN JAMES
'NOT THE ROCK STAR'!!

SPORTS:
EDITOR: STEVEN VESELY
CONTRIBUTORS: RYAN WARD
DEREK DECLIET SARAH RICHARDS
BILL LABONTE SATAN

INTERNATIONAL AFFAIRS:
EDITORS: ANGIE GALLOP (FEMALE)
RYAN NAKASHIMA (MALE)
CONTRIBUTORS: BILL COOPER
TRACY HITCHCOCK (AS IN ALFRED)

OP/ED: (WHAT THE HELL IS THIS)
EDITOR: SHEILA KEENAN
CONTRIBUTORS: BRENT DOWDALL
DAVE BARTOLF MIKE PETERS
STEPHANIE GARRISON ... AND MANY OTHERS (YOU KNOW WHO YOU ARE?)

ARTS:
EDITOR: BLAYNE HAGGART
CONTRIBUTORS: KEVIN MCKAY
ADAM SEDDON SUZANNE ANDREW
JOANNE CAPUANI NAOMI BOCK
DAVID BARTOLF DAVE HODGES

PHOTO: CLICK!!
EDITORS: TIM & ANDRE
CONTRIBUTORS: DEAN TOMLINSON
BILL COOPER DAN WEIXL
STEVE VESELY GREGOR MADDEN
AMANDA FOLLETTE SID YOUNIS

GRAPHICS: ME & FRIENDS
PRODUCTION:
Assistant! KIM AIF CONTRIBUTORS
AUDREY SIMTOB GLADYS BIKHAT
CHRISTINE GOUGH TANYA WORKMAN
KALEEM KHAN MIKE MAINVILLE
COLIN JAMES RYAN WARD

ADVERTISING: 788-3580
KAREN RICHARDSON
CIRCULATION: 14,000
DAVE CARPENTER JOELLEN WALSH
THE CHARLATAN
CONTENTS ARE COPYRIGHT
© 1994

Mindless movie

Editor:
Re: "Stupid, mindless entertainment,"
The Charlatan, Feb. 17, 1994.
Poor you. Not a funny bone in your body, huh? Are you so hard up for blood, guts and tears in a movie that you don't understand good ol' fashioned slapstick, spontaneous humor when it hits you?

In case you hadn't noticed in the trailers for Ace Ventura, everyone is "insane," and behaves "mindlessly." The whole point of the movie was not to have a serious plot.

What's wrong with Jim Carrey showing his stuff in a movie venue? Is he the first comedian/actor from a television show to do so? Will he be the last?

Urging people not to see a film which is quite harmless and very funny shows me that you have no sense of propriety.
For every 10 shoot 'em up movies out on the market, how many light-hearted productions can we look forward to? Maybe one. And this one's a hit!

If you've been living under some hole and have never seen In Living Color or never heard of Carrey and his hilarious antics, maybe you don't deserve to be tickled by his wit.

Grow up! Not everyone needs to hear gunfire and see blood splattered on the screen to be entertained.

Have a nice day!

Carolyn Christine Tingleish
English II

Dirty shoes for democracy

Editor:
Re: "Voting full of holes," The Charla- tan, Feb. 17, 1994.

It is a sad state of affairs when a conscious decision to forfeit a vote is based on the aesthetics of a student ID card. I would like to think that Carleton students, or anyone for that matter, would be more concerned with the issues that face students than a millimetre hole in their student card. I realize that CUSA will not have a major impact on our lives;
however, they do have an impact on the years spent at Carleton.

This attitude brings me back to my elementary days when kids would get a new pair of running shoes and have to stay out of the playground for fear of getting them dirty. I'm not quite sure what these students plan to do with their ID cards. Possibly the person at the library may be offended by a defaced card.

Better yet, why doesn't CUSA offer a free wall frame so students can hang their ID card next to their diploma over the mantel?

In case you are wondering, I was not eligible to vote this election. I have, however, voted in the past three and have the holes to prove it.

Shannon Pickering
Secretary, Psychology Dept.

Memo mess up

Editor:
As a Carleton alumnus, I'm usually glad when Carleton receives national publicity for its efforts. The recent article in The Globe and Mail concerning Theresa Cowan's memos, however, is an exception to this rule. (See "Memos question out-of-class conduct," The Charlatan, Feb. 10, 1994, for more information —ed.)

These memos may have started as a harmless attempt "to stimulate discussion" about professor-student interactions. Unfortunately, they did not come across that way, either in The Globe or upon reading their full text. Instead of looking for ways to improve things together, Cowan implicitly accuses professors of creating a threatening, discriminatory and potentially harassing atmosphere for their students.

Instead of constructive discussion, her tone is that of accusation and command.
And who are the targets of such hostility?
Why, those very professors most disposed to go the extra mile for their students.

This kind of zero-tolerance approach helps no one, students least of all. The opportunities for informal contact with my professors were an integral part of my learning experience at Carleton.

If Cowan is concerned about alcohol, the solution is simple. Those students who wish to have a drink, will. Those who can't or don't want to, don't have to. This seemed to work quite well at the events I attended and without any "help" from CUSA either.

As for the "uneven playing field" argument, let me see if I have this straight —since some students will choose not to take advantage of such opportunities, those who would choose to do so must be deprived of them. How unfortunate. How counter-productive. How typical.

Does Cowan have a point? One or two, perhaps. Should she have chosen a more constructive way of making them?
Absolutely. Carleton students deserve better from their supposed representatives.

Joe Katzman
BA '91

Look out Ricky

Editor:
Now that the political dust has settled at Carleton, I would like to address a few issues which did not come up during the presidential campaign. On Richard Stanton's campaign pamphlets, under his "wish list", he states: "Examine the problems of transportation to Carleton and the possibility of commuter trains to Carleton campus."

I have 3 questions for him —How does he propose to do this? How will he get the funding? And how did he whip up this idiotic idea?

The sheer absurdity of this is nothing but a blatant attempt to win votes and to gloss his campaign over. Just last month, his over-anxious gang of baseball-capped go-getters were kissing our behinds for a lousy vote and now that he has won, these same go-getters wouldn't give you the time of day.

Incidentally, I am also very relieved to find out that his so-called "qualifications" include "Charity ball volunteer,"
"Panda staff," and that he actually "directly lobbied the minister of colleges and universities." These are just a couple of disasters to name a few, including spelling.

This letter is by no means meant to belittle Richard Stanton or support one of his rivals. It is merely food for thought for all Carleton students who voted in this facade of a popularity contest. It is clear that the candidates with the most hair, and not brains, won.

P.S. We students will be keeping an eye on you Ricky.

Katie Strzalka
Arts I

The Charlatan welcomes all letters and opinion pieces. Letters should not be more than 250 words and opinion pieces not more than 700 words. Pieces may be edited for length or clarity. The deadline is Tuesday at noon. Include your name, signature, faculty, year and phone number or your letter won't be published. Phone numbers are for verification only. Send to: The Charlatan, Room 531 Unicentre, Carleton University, 1125 Colonel By Drive, Ottawa,
Ont. K1S 5B6. ☐

Expand the horizon of your success in business with Humber's

One-year Post-Graduate Programs in International Marketing

Latin American Profile

- The only business program in Ontario that offers Spanish language instruction and Latin American culture.
- Instructors with extensive business and Latin American experience.
- Optional residential programs in Mexico on completion.

Asia Pacific Profile

- The only business program in Ontario that offers Japanese and Mandarin culture and language instruction.
- Instructors with extensive business and Asian experience.
- Optional cooperative experience with companies in Asia.

To qualify, you need a three-year university degree, college diploma, or five years equivalent work experience.

Call (416) 675-5000, or 1-800-268-4867, for information

Delivering World Class Business Education

The Charlatan in Co-operation with these local merchants
PRESENTS

9 FABULOUS VACATION GETAWAYS

YOU PICK YOUR DESTINATION

ATLANTIC BEACH

Sheraton Atlantic Beach Resort
4 Days / 3 Nights

LAKE PLACID

Lake Placid Hilton
3 Days / 2 Nights

HILTON HEAD ISLAND

Holiday Inn
4 Days / 3 Nights

Atlantis Beauty Spa

The place for honouring the self

Acrylic Nails
by Tracey
10% off 1st set

• Esthetics • Ear & Nose Piercing • Waxing • Tanning
• Hair Extensions & Braiding • Gift Certificates For All Services
• HAIR STYLING

730-8500

1183 Bank St. (at Grove Ave.) Ample Free Parking

Bring in this ad &
receive 10% off
any service
over $25

Dance Floor
D.J. Every Night

3 Big Screens
4 TVs & Satellite

MONDAYS

Men's Nite

GREAT SPECIALS

Trip for 2 Giveaway!!

FREE POOL Noon 'till nine

THURSDAYS

Ladies' Nite

GREAT SPECIALS

Trip for 2 Giveaway!!

FREE POOL Noon 'till ten

96 George St. 562-0433

Today, I'm gonna tell her I love her a dozen times

567-2600

Glebe
831 Bank St.
5th Ave. Court

729-7878

Hampton Park Plaza
Carling and Kirkwood

Bring in this coupon and receive a 10% discount

Wet & Wild Spas

Hot Tubbing • Tanning Massage • Therapy

SUPER SPECIAL

ONE DAY ONLY

Tuesday, March 15, 1994

10 - 30 min. Sessions Only

417 Rideau Street at Chapel

$30.00

Tax Included

GRAND CENTRAL

Coming Soon

Wednesday, March 16 Colin James
Thursday, March 17 Spirit of the West

141 George St. 241-2727

FREE SUNSHINE

ESCAPE THE COLD

A TOUCH OF SUN

Tanning Studios

2 Free Sessions

(an $18.00 value) with the purchase of 2 suntan sessions at regular prices. 1 per customer. Offer expires March 20, 1994.

A TOUCH OF SUN
723-0555
888 Meadowlands Dr.

A TOUCH OF SUN
238-0222
300 Slater St.

CALL US. IT'S A WARM IDEA.

Thursday Nights
Party Nights
Pitcher Specials
Promo-Prize
Giveaways Weekly

Friday March 11

HIP

HOP

PARTY

Western & Aviation
Coats and Jackets.

Complete Indian Line Available

Western & Motorcycle
Boots. Boot Repair.

244 Elgin Street • Ottawa • K2P 1L9 • (613) 238-BOOT (2668)

Bring in this ad and receive a 10% discount on any purchase.

MYERS

SINCE 1943

Take a Test Drive at MYERS and be eligible to WIN one of two Vacation Packages!

Bring in This Ad and Enter to WIN!

CHECK OUT
GM'S
$750.00
CASH BACK
GRAB
PROGRAM!

Ask Mike or any one of our
Sales Consultants about our
Low Monthly Lease Payments
on CAVALIERS or GEOs!

Mike Smith
Class of 91
Sales Consultant

Draw to take place March 19/94

MYERS CHEV • OLDS • CADILLAC 1200 Baseline at Merivale

225-1260

EACH BUSINESS ON THIS PAGE WILL BE GIVING AWAY A FREE TRIP.

Trip packages include deluxe accommodations for two adults, complimentary first morning breakfast and daily green fees for two adults when in season. Children occupying the same room as their parents stay free. Transportation is not included. All trips are fully transferable but must be used on or before February 28, 1995. To be eligible fill out an entry ballot at one of the participating merchants on or before Tuesday March 22, 1994. The winning entries will have their names published in the Thursday March 24, 1994 edition of The Charlatan. Staff members and contributors to The Charlatan for the 1993/1994 publishing year are not eligible for this promotion.

by Colin James

Charlatan Staff

In May of 1977, 12 women came together to work on a short play for a cultural festival in celebration of workers' struggles in Jamaica.

The women decided to stay together as a volunteer women's organization to explore and promote their Caribbean culture, as well as confront issues of social importance, such as violence against women, teenage pregnancy, housing, and the economic policies of the Jamaican government. This was the birth of Jamaica's SISTREN Theatre Collective.

During a drama-workshop tour in Canada last November, I was able to speak to three SISTREN members: Afolá Shade, Rebecca Knowles, and Myrtle Rose.

This interview with the SISTREN Theatre Collective is important for the period of International Women's Week because it provides a forum for a women's group active on local, regional and international levels to voice their opinions and introduce their work dealing with women and the problems that face their communities.

The patois of Jamaica has been used and spelled phonetically to illustrate SISTREN's messages as accurately as possible in their own words.

The Charlatan: "How did SISTREN start?"

Shade: "In da seventies . . . da atmosphere was der for individuals to come out in terms of Blackness, in terms of radical change, because der was democratic socialism. So at dat time grassroots organizations like SISTREN emerged. We wanted a voice as women, because women didn't have a voice in terms of sayin' what are der problems, and how dey want der problems to be addressed. So we chose t'eatre 'round about dat time.

We were invited to take part in a workers' week concert, and da response was good. We put on a production on how women suffer; it was a garment factory dat brought out a lot of da issues dat affect women: sexual harassment, bad working conditions, dat kind of t'ing. And it was well received because da viewers were saying dat it was the first time dat dey were seeing such a real serious piece of theatre; because, dey say, some of da problems that should be in people's bedroom on stage. Dey could see demselves and reflect der problems. So it wasn't just t'eatre to laugh and just for da humor, but t'eatre dat reflect their lives. And dat's how we started and dat's how we've been working since.

We use a lot of our own testimony, because I believe my story is your story. So we use a lot of real personal testimony. Even if it's not personal to us, it's personal because we know it's happened to a particular sister, to a particular woman.

Charlatan: May I have you all introduce yourselves and explain what you each do in SISTREN?

Rebecca Knowles: I'm Rebecca Knowles. I'm a teacher/actress. I've been involved in t'eatre for 16 years. I also do workshops and popular education.

Myrtle Rose: I'm Myrtle Rose. I've been working with SISTREN for the past 16 years. I'm a teacher/actress, and I work with the workshop team.

SISTREN (clockwise from top): Rebecca Knowles, Afolá Shade, and Myrtle Rose

Afolá Shade: My name is Afolá Shade and I'm a popular t'eatre animator and an actress.

Charlatan: What are the different activities that SISTREN does, and how do they involve the community to address certain issues?

Knowles: Now what SISTREN does is we have a textile area that we do as an income-generating program, because that is one of da t'ings dat da funders demand dat we do, some form of income-generating. We do T-shirts, wall hangings, cushions, draperies and so on. We do workshops. We also address problems dat affect da teenagers, mostly Grade 11 — doze who are leavin' school.

We address t'ings like teenage pregnancy, peer pressure, and da problems between parents and teachers and parents and students. We also work in da community. We do community development by working wit' other community groups and addressing da problems dat affect dem. We work on problems dat affect group building and leadership within the organizations.

Shade: The t'ing is, you name deh issue and SISTREN will put forward what you want to say in drama.

There were a group of university intellectuals did some research on some farming techniques. They wanted to let farmers know about cross fertilization and insemination and all kind o' shun, shun, shun, where you have to have your Oxford dictionary. And when dey brought out da farmers most of dem sleep because all dem big words just fly over dem head. Da old blackboard and teacher t'ing dey can't take.

Knowles: And most of dem farmers can'ny read.

Shade: So in the end now dem nah communicate. So (the university intellectuals)

call
o n SISTREN,
and say:
"Bwoy come and see. Take da material, dis is what we want them to know." So we say: "Okay, want dem to know about insemination? Well, some of the sperm where our cows get come as far as Mexico or so."
Yes, well, we just say it as it is: "Well Mr. Joe, when we say insemination — your cow, what your cow's name? Bessy? All right, when Bessy mate with Joey, right, dat mean insemination."

So dat man would immediately say: "What da ya mean say . . . ?"

And him studyin' and studyin' what ya call insemination.

So I say: "Yes, but it have a big name because Bessy and Joey nah do it together.
Dem goin' to inject da sperm into Bessy."

So 'im say: "But no! Dat goin' to rob Bessy of her pleasure! I like when de two of dem do it together."

So you see you start de communication and den dey are clear. A next time again we did a project where da parents were taught how ta

COLIN JAMES

Afolá
SIST duc wo
Ott

take care of der chil'ren better, dee "Better Parenting Techniques." Day did fancy research and come back wit findings and blah, blah, blah. Women did not understand not'in. So when we take da material and put da stuff together wit role plays and so, it become quite clear.

So da 'ting is, you name da issue, and SISTREN will supply da method and technique to pass on da information. We work wit' researchers, intellectuals, average-ordinary-grassroots women, you't, you name it.

Rose: I find dee women understand more, right, or dee people who listen, dem understand more. Because at times you have people who come out wit' big words, and dem nah really break it down in order for people to understand.

Shade: You're speakin' der language.

Knowles: I 'tink you use your own personal experience to address der problem. Because sometime you find some people are shy to come out wit' da problem affecting dem, so if you start using your own experience and own problem to motivate dem first . . . Da lecturers, dey go expectin' people to speak. It nah goin' happen.

Shade: Our t'eatre is about change all right. It is not t'eatre to get a belly full of laugh and leave. It's about change.

Even if you portray certain images and so on, it's humorous because sometimes, even though the issue is serious, we laugh because we're nervous, and we're so ashamed we just laugh. It's not really because you find it funny. But da t'ing is, after de laughter, so what. We would put across: "dis woman was beaten, dis woman was raped, but we can do somet'ing about it as community — as women." So our t'eatre is about change. So when you come to see a SISTREN production it's goin' to be heavy, it's goin' to be political.

COLIN JAMES

Charlatan: What are a few of the major issues that you tackle that affect Jamaica and the rest of the Caribbean?

Shade: We tackle how da IMF (International Monetary Fund) policies affect women in Jamaica. And right now we are here in Canada to see da comparison. Okay, we are in Jamaica, a T'ird World country and you are here in Canada. Canada is maybe a T'ird World country too, but it is a European country. (We're here to say): "How do IMF policies affect you? It affects us this way."

'Dat is part of da workshop dat we doin.' In terms of women and sexuality and how da media portray women, we do a lot of work around dat.

Charlatan: What do you see as the major forces that keep communities in the Caribbean, and Black people in general, down?

Shade: Cultural penetration. Americanization, and all dem soap opera and just dee invasion of name brand' and certain way ah we fi look, and the violence dat portrayed in certain movies. Me see dat have a lot o' impact on da you't and also adults.

Charlatan: What have the policies of the IMF and World Bank contributed to the Caribbean?

Rose: Contributed to da society? To da Caribbean? Pressure! When you look at people going to university, who leave high school when you leave high school. . . . Dey say free education where dat no mention again. Going to university is dis whole bag o' money. Dat means nuff community poor people can't 'tink 'bout go to university again. Ah just rich people pickney (children) go university now.

Knowles: T'ings like health. Da social service cut (so) you can't go to da hospital any more. You have to pay for every'ing. You can't buy drugs. There's not'ing any more in terms of health' for poor people.

Rose: Even da hospital dat we used to use as public hospital, where you used to go and nah have ta pay a fee. Now you have fi pay a dally fee, you have fi carry your own linen, you have ta carry every'ing, you have ta carry you' food — da government have no money.

Knowles: Even da hospitals where dey have babies . . . you have only one day. You have it (the baby) today and leave tomorrow. You leave da hospital as sick as you go in.

Shade: Free market economy causing a lot of da problem' all right. "Structural adjustment" is one of da policy dat dee government is trying to deal wit' (under) dee IMF. So we take dee IMF money, now we have all dis money to pay back. Dee United States says "Okay, dis is a structural adjustment policy for you to pay back dee debt." So in order to do dat now wit' da structural adjustment program come liberalization and free marketization and all of dat. And when da market open up, you find dat everybody sell dem t'ings for different costs. Like rent. Dee apartment dat you pay a t'ousand dollars, a next landlord might rent it for two t'ousand dollars. So it's an open market. People just do what 'dem like.

So da consumer jus' get knock.

Knowles: I 'tink all doze t'ings affect de community growth and (cause) violence wit' in de community — you't and unemployment and cutbacks in terms of d'ose factories closing down. No work is created for you't so dem live on da street and dey turn to drugs and violent killings. I 'tink da IMF have all fault to be blamed in terms of da community and in da T'ird World.

Charlatan: What social change would you like to see through your continuing work as part of SISTREN?

Shade: I would like da women to be more aware of how problems affect dem, because dat is one of our primary goals — awareness. If you don't know how da problem' affectin' you, you can do not'ing about it. And after awareness, some kind of action. Even if it not no blatin' go out der and make a noise, take action for yourself.

Knowles: What we want to say is dee women feel dee pressure more because dey are called da breadwinners so to speak. In terms of da prices of t'ings, especially food stuffs and so on. If women start to come out — t'ings as school fee and uniforms for children — if doze women, or we as women, come out and join and say "we nah buy de t'ing," or "we nah do dee t'ing," and force some action, den I 'tink we will get some form of a reaction. And dis is what we would like to see. We would like to educate women in our country fi say "We not buyin' it; commeeal dat gone up so dat (it is) too expensive to feed your children to streng'en dem. We need women to come together more and to understand what is happening in our society and start to stand up to it.

Shade: I strongly believe dat no man is an island and dat each of us need each odder. Here in Canada, now, I want da sisters to know dat if you're having problems you're not alone. A next sister have da same problem too. So to internalize problems and to it take for oneself alone causes a lot of stress. So da t'ing is don't stress out. Share da problem's because many odder women share dee same problems too. As soon as you spread it out you realize dat you're not alone and dat we need to be unified den . . . together we can make an impact.

Knowles: And I 'tink dat especially how da domestic workers from the Caribbean here work in Canada have to unite together and stand up for der rights strongly. There was a young woman dat we meet who was working for four months, and during dis four months she was asking for her salary, an she nah receive her salary. When she insist' for it, she was fired. Why leave your country to come here to make all kind of sacrifices when you can stay in your country and gw'on build it up?

Rose: Build it up is one (thing), but at da odder end dey (women) leaving from one country goin' to another country for better for themselves and dem children. But how do dey see it? Leaving Jamaica, Barbados or St. Vincent — and have to put up wit' all kind of t'ings in order to achieve, while you could do it der in your country still. Women, in general, sit down too long I feel, take too much from governments and so on. Dem nah want to make noise and go out der and march, and make government see what dem do no really go well wit' you or wit' dee rest of women.

Shade: Women need to use their skills and resource' better. A lot of us feel da best t'ing is to be employed. A lot of us have certain skills where we can use and be self-employed. You're goin' start off small at first, but little little last long. Plenty o' women believe dat okay, "every Friday (I) have a salary." If you check it out a lot of resourceful people leave Jamaica and come to countries like dis. You have nurses, teachers . . . you could maybe start a little day-care centre. Den der are jobs dat dem wouldn't do in Jamaica dat dem come here and do . . . sometimes we sell we soul. You goin' to get more money for it, yes. But man, husband, (and) employers abuse you, pickney spit 'pon you, an you say: "Ah goin to bear it just for da money." No! We sell we soul too much and sell we moral principles. I feel a lot of us so skilful and talented dat if we look into it — jus' forget about dee regular every Friday pay — and just look to see what resources we have and can share.

First Nations Survey Results

We received 22 completed surveys and one angry letter in response to our First Nations survey. Here are the correct answers.

1. Were you aware that 1993 was the United Nations' Year of Indigenous Peoples?

Yes: 16
No: 6

2. If so, how were you made aware of the situation of the Indigenous peoples of Canada and elsewhere?

Comments and number of times mentioned:

- * High-school assignment/class readings/Canadian Studies: 4
- * Television programs: 6
- * Posters, media, movies, books: 5
- * Advertising: 1
- * Personal experience, living with a Native person: 2
- * Work with a multicultural youth council: 1

* National Film Board film Kahnesetake: 270 Years of Resistance: 1

- * Campus debates/events: 1
- * No comment: 5

3. Do you agree that Native peoples living in Canada should be granted self-government?

Yes: 20
No: 2

Comments:

- * They deserve their rights!
- * No, but I believe they should play an active role in the Canadian government.
- * Yes, but it does not have to be granted. It is an inherent right.

* Our (Western) forms of government have brought little else but disharmony to (Native) communities. It's time to try something different.

* Within a framework that keeps Canada as one country.

4. Did you know that Native peoples living in Canada only got the vote in 1960?

Yes: 12
No: 10

5. Did you know that before 1985, when Bill C-31 was passed, any Native woman married to a non-Native man lost her "Indian status," and was automatically considered non-Native by the Canadian government?

Yes: 16
No: 6

6. Are you aware of the services offered at Carleton for Native students or non-Native students wishing to know more of Native students, such as the Centre for Aboriginal Education Research and Culture?

Yes: 13
No: 9

7. How, if at all, have you been made aware of the Native student body at Carleton?

Comments and number of times mentioned:

- * CAERC (Centre for Aboriginal Education Research and Culture): 2
- * Personal interest/experience: 8
- * Concerts: 1
- * The Charlatan, Native events/films, class: 3
- * Is there one?: 1
- * We have not/I haven't: 7

8. Are you familiar with the Carleton First Nations club?

Yes: 4
No: 18

9. True or false: Native peoples all speak the same language.

True: 0
False: 22

False. According to The Canadian World Almanac 1990 there are over 50 different languages spoken by Native peoples in Canada.

10. Native peoples are all from the same cultural group.

True: 1
False: 20
No response: 1

False. There are many different and diverse cultural groups of Native peoples within Canada and throughout the Americas.

11. Native peoples living in Canada are more susceptible to becoming alcoholics than non-Native peoples.

True: 9
False: 10
Other responses: 3

False. There is no genetic predisposition for Native peoples to become alcoholics.

12. The majority of Native peoples living in Canada live on reserves.

True: 5
False: 16
Don't know: 1

True. According to 1988 statistics from The Canadian World Almanac 1990, there are 242,837 "status" Native people living on-reserve and 147,424 "status" Native people living off-reserve in Canada. These statistics do not take into account the many Native people who are not recognized by the federal government.

13. What is your idea of what an Aboriginal person should look like?

- (a) long black hair, brown skin and animal skin garments: 0
- (b) dark hair, dark skin, and Levi's: 6
- (c) just another dude or dudette in Levi's: 10

Other responses: 6

Today, stereotypes of how an Aboriginal person should look still exist. The answer which the survey authors hoped people would choose is (c). It is important to realize that one cannot judge a person on their appearance — or push labels on them.

14. Métis people:

- (a) have been here since the beginning of time: 2
 - (b) have been around only since European contact: 17
 - (c) don't exist: 0
 - Other responses: 3
- The correct answer is (b).

15. Pemmican is made up of:

- (a) flour, water and salt: 1
 - (b) moosemeat, potatoes and corn: 4
 - (c) dried meat, dried berries and animal fat: 12
 - Don't know: 5
- The correct answer is (c). Pemmican is made up of dried meat, berries and animal fat, plus some other ingredients.

16. What percentage of federal prisoners do Native peoples living in Canada comprise?

(a) 10%: 4
(b) 25%: 14
(c) 60%: 4

The correct answer is (a). According to the John Howard Society, "status" Native people make up about 10 per cent of federal prisoners in Canada. This is disproportionate as "status" Native people make up about 2 per cent of Canada's population.

17. How many reservations exist in Canada today?

(a) 50: 1
(b) 150: 6
(c) 500: 10
(d) over 2000: 5

The correct answer is (d). There are 2,231 reservations in Canada.

Thanks to all those who took the time to fill out the survey. Congratulations to Carie Svojanovski who wins a copy of Tool's CD Undertow after a random draw of entrants. Please come on up to Room 531 Unicentre to pick up your prize.

Survey composed and compiled by Dean Janvier, Karin Jordan, Rick Harp, Billie Danika Littlechild, Andrea Smith and Roberta Stout.

CHARLATAN ELECTIONS FOR 1994/95

It's that time of year again — time to pass on the torch to a fresh buncha editors. Anyone can run. Anyone who has 4 credits in the masthead this year can vote for editor-in-chief, op/ed editor and board of directors staff reps. Anyone with 4 credits who has contributed once to a section can vote for that editor. Voting for the editor-in-chief will take place Monday, March 21 and Tuesday, March 22 in Ombuds Services, Room 511 Unicentre, between 9 a.m. and 4:30 p.m. (closed 12-1 p.m.). Voting for the section editors and board reps will take place Monday, March 28 and Tuesday, March 29, same place, same times. Candidates for editor-in-chief will be speaking at the staff meeting on Thursday, March 17 at 5:30 p.m. Candidates for section editors will do the same on Thursday, March 24, at 5:30 p.m.

If you have any questions about your eligibility to vote, or want to run for a position, don't hesitate to call Mo Gannon at 788-6680.

AS OF MARCH 3, 1994 (WITH CORRECTIONS)

EDITOR-IN CHIEF, OP/ED EDITOR, BOARD OF DIRECTORS REPS	Herland, Neil Hodges, David Jafri, Ali Jordan, Karin Keeling, Am Keenan, Sheila Khan, Kalem Labonte, Bill Lamb, Mark Levine, Sara-Lynne Mahoney, Jill Mainville, Michael Mealliffe, Derrick McCrosbie, James Bodnar, Alex McKay, Kevin McKenzie, Jodi McLeod, Ian Nakashima, Ryan Nuttall-Smith, Chris O'Connor, Tim Oza, Prema Pangalos, Anthony Paterson, Pamela Perry, Jill Petara, Mike Power, Gavin Pryor, Tim Rappaport, Mike Restivo, Kevin Richardson, Sarah Richardson, Karan Scallen, Shawn Scott, Richard G.D. Shigetomi, Cindy Shurrie, Matt Silcoff, Sean Simbott, Audrey Skinner, Matt Smith, André Srutek, Karolina Steinbachs, John Tattersall, Jane Tharsyll, Jay	Tomlinson, Dean Vesely, Steven Ward, Ryan Watt, Caron Welkie, Brandie Wiebe, Andrea Willbont, Brent Wood, Clayton Workman, Tanya Zelinsky, Tonya	Aaron, Bram Bartoli, David Bellemare, José Bock, Naomi Bustos, Alex Carlucci, Mario DeCioet, Derek D'Orazio, Franco Dowdall, Brent Edwards, Drew Gallop, Angie Gannon, Mo Haggart, Blayne Haley, Susie Hodges, David Jordan, Karin Keeling, Am Keenan, Sheila Mahoney, Jill Mainville, Michael McKenzie, Jodi McLeod, Ian Nakashima, Ryan Nuttall-Smith, Chris O'Connor, Tim Oza, Prema Pangalos, Anthony Peters, Mike Silcoff, Sean Skinner, Matt Smith, Andrea	Srutek, Karolina Steinbachs, John Tattersall, Jane Vesely, Steven Ward, Ryan Watt, Caron Welkie, Brandie Wiebe, Andrea Wood, Clayton Workman, Tanya Zelinsky, Tonya	Scott, Richard G.D. Skinner, Matt Smith, Andrea Srutek, Karolina Steinbachs, John Vesely, Steven Ward, Ryan Welkie, Brandie Wood, Clayton Workman, Tanya Zelinsky, Tonya	SPORTS Aaron, Bram Bellemare, José Carlucci, Mario DeCioet, Derek Dowdall, Brent Fraser, Shannon Gannon, Mo Haggart, Blayne Keenan, Sheila Labonte, Bill O'Connor, Tim Restivo, Kevin Richards, Sarah Scott, Richard G.D. Shurrie, Matt Smith, Andrea Tharsyll, Jay Vesely, Steven Ward, Ryan	Garrison, Stephanie Haggart, Blayne Haley, Susie Herland, Neil Hodges, David Jafri, Ali Jordan, Karin Keeling, Am Keenan, Sheila Khan, Kalem Mahoney, Jill McLeod, Ian Nuttall-Smith, Chris O'Connor, Tim Oza, Prema Pangalos, Anthony Peters, Mike Power, Gavin Pryor, Adam Seddon, Adam Silcoff, Sean Smith, Andrea Srutek, Karolina Steinbachs, John Tattersall, Jane Vesely, Steven Ward, Ryan Willbont, Brent	Follett, Amanda Gallop, Angie Gannon, Mo Haggart, Blayne Keeling, Am Keenan, Sheila Lamb, Mark McCrosbie, James Nakashima, Ryan Nuttall-Smith, Chris Scallen, Shawn Scott, Richard G.D. Smith, Andrea Steinbachs, John Tomlinson, Dean Vesely, Steven
NEWS	NATIONAL	FEATURES	ARTS AND ENTERTAINMENT	PHOTO
Bartoli, David Bellemare, José Bock, Naomi Bustos, Alex Carlucci, Mario DeCioet, Derek D'Orazio, Franco Dowdall, Brent Edwards, Drew Gallop, Angie Gannon, Mo Haggart, Blayne Haley, Susie Hodges, David Jordan, Karin Keeling, Am Keenan, Sheila Mahoney, Jill Mainville, Michael McKenzie, Jodi McLeod, Ian Nakashima, Ryan Nuttall-Smith, Chris O'Connor, Tim Oza, Prema Pangalos, Anthony Peters, Mike Silcoff, Sean Skinner, Matt Smith, Andrea	Aaron, Bram Bartoli, David Bellemare, José Bock, Naomi Caffrey, Rory Carlucci, Mario DeCioet, Derek Dobrenski, Steve Gallop, Angie Gannon, Mo Garrison, Stephanie Haggart, Blayne Hodges, David Jordan, Karin Keeling, Am Keenan, Sheila Mahoney, Jill Mainville, Michael McLeod, Ian McLeod, Ian Nakashima, Ryan O'Connor, Tim Oza, Prema Pangalos, Anthony Pryor, Tim	Bellemare, José Bock, Naomi Caffrey, Rory Carlucci, Mario DeCioet, Derek Dobrenski, Steve D'Orazio, Franco Dowdall, Brent Gallop, Angie Gannon, Mo Garrison, Stephanie Haggart, Blayne Hodges, David Jordan, Karin Keeling, Am Keenan, Sheila Mahoney, Jill Mainville, Michael McLeod, Ian McLeod, Ian Nakashima, Ryan O'Connor, Tim Power, Gavin Pryor, Tim Rappaport, Mike Seddon, Adam Silcoff, Sean Smith, Andrea Vesely, Steven Ward, Ryan	Aaron, Bram Bartoli, David Bellemare, José Bock, Naomi Bustos, Alex Caffrey, Rory Carlucci, Mario Carpenter, Dave Ciszewski, Johanna Comino, M.G. Cooper, Bill Currie, Lisa Davies, Jennifer DeCioet, Derek Dobrenski, Steve D'Orazio, Franco Dowdall, Brent Drever, Ken Duncan, Todd Edwards, Drew Follett, Amanda Forrest, Susanna Fraser, Shannon Gallop, Angie Gannon, Mo Garrison, Stephanie Grant, Joel Kenneth Haggart, Blayne Haley, Susie	Bellefeuille, Andre Bodnar, Alex Brethour, Pat Brozowski, Anna Capuan, Joanne Carlucci, Mario Ciszewski, Johanna Comino, M.G. Cooper, Bill Currie, Lisa Davies, Jennifer Dobrenski, Steve Dowdall, Brent Duncan, Todd
ONE CONTRIBUTION LEFT TO VOTE	ONE CONTRIBUTION LEFT TO VOTE	ONE CONTRIBUTION LEFT TO VOTE	ONE CONTRIBUTION LEFT TO VOTE	ONE CONTRIBUTION LEFT TO VOTE
Andrew, Suzanne Clements, Rob Critt, Christina Croable, Vanessa Docking, David Goodman, Sarah Izzard, Suzanne Jama, Colin Johnson, Doug Kinchison, Stephanie Kirkham, John Klaus, Alex Manchak, Renata McLennan, Rob Orol, Ron Owens, Greg Price, John Reid, Chris Richardson, Michael Sane, Ian Stansfield, James	Andrew, Suzanne Clements, Rob Critt, Christina Croable, Vanessa Docking, David Goodman, Sarah Izzard, Suzanne Jama, Colin Johnson, Doug Kinchison, Stephanie Kirkham, John Klaus, Alex Manchak, Renata McLennan, Rob Orol, Ron Owens, Greg Price, John Reid, Chris Richardson, Michael Sane, Ian Stansfield, James	Andrew, Suzanne Clements, Rob Critt, Christina Croable, Vanessa Docking, David Goodman, Sarah Izzard, Suzanne Jama, Colin Johnson, Doug Kinchison, Stephanie Kirkham, John Klaus, Alex Manchak, Renata McLennan, Rob Orol, Ron Owens, Greg Price, John Reid, Chris Richardson, Michael Sane, Ian Stansfield, James	Andrew, Suzanne Clements, Rob Critt, Christina Croable, Vanessa Docking, David Goodman, Sarah Izzard, Suzanne Jama, Colin Johnson, Doug Kinchison, Stephanie Kirkham, John Klaus, Alex Manchak, Renata McLennan, Rob Orol, Ron Owens, Greg Price, John Reid, Chris Richardson, Michael Sane, Ian Stansfield, James	Andrew, Suzanne Clements, Rob Critt, Christina Croable, Vanessa Docking, David Goodman, Sarah Izzard, Suzanne Jama, Colin Johnson, Doug Kinchison, Stephanie Kirkham, John Klaus, Alex Manchak, Renata McLennan, Rob Orol, Ron Owens, Greg Price, John Reid, Chris Richardson, Michael Sane, Ian Stansfield, James

Board strikes hockey committee

Finances, administration and gender parity to be discussed

by Bill Labonte
Charlatan Staff

An athletics board subcommittee was struck to look at the issues involved in the department of athletics taking over the administration of the hockey club at a special board meeting March 4.

Meanwhile, the department's director Keith Harris has asked the Ontario Colleges Athletic Association to extend its March 8 deadline for new hockey club applications to its 1994-95 season while the sub-committee studies three issues: money, gender parity and administration.

— Money: Both Algonquin and St. Lawrence Colleges run their hockey teams on modest budgets below $20,000. General manager Paul Correy of the hockey club has said Carleton could do the same.

"Our budget is a realistic and feasible budget based on figures provided from other schools," Correy said after the meeting.

Harris, on the other hand, said he thinks that number is low. He feels a first-year cost of about $36,000 is more accurate.

"I can assure you, that in my experience, a hockey program will cost more than this ($36,000) in time," Harris told the board. "So the reason I'm not enthusiastic — and you know it, you can all feel it — is that I'm saying, 'Hell, this means if we accept this and take on the responsibility of doing this right, it's going to cost a lot more in time.'"

— Gender parity: The department of athletics has a gender parity policy of equal funding and team representation. The addition of hockey as a varsity sport would change that.

"It (would) mean that somehow we've got to find an equivalent amount of money to fund a comparable program equivalent for the women's side or make some cuts on the men's side," said Harris.

Coach George Brown said the alumni have already proposed to coach a women's club team if there is enough interest among the student population in order to maintain representative gender parity.

— Administration: A third thorny issue revolves around the amount of time and staff it would take to oversee the operation of the club. Harris said his staff is stretched to limit and can't handle an increased workload. Money would have to be spent on more staff.

"It's at the point where we can't ask them to . . . take on the responsibility. That's why I've plugged in these additional costs," said Harris.

Brown, who wasn't officially invited to address the board but came to present the club's case, disagreed. He pointed to the strong support from alumni, who currently volunteer their time running the club and would be more than willing to handle administrative duties and coaching. □

Electoral Limbo

Late on the evening of March 8, the overturning of the hockey club's referendum results was ratified by CUSA council.

This means a new referendum on the question of funding the hockey club will be held along with new elections March 29-31.

Which has left the club in a kind of limbo. Will the athletics board subcommittee currently looking into the hockey matter still meet or will it dissolve?

At press time, CUSA finance commissioner René Faucher was saying the subcommittee would still be meeting despite the referendum results being overturned. □

Volleyball team: what went wrong?

Veteran leadership and experience key ingredients missing

by Sarah Richards
Charlatan Staff

The desire to move on. Nixon felt it about Vietnam. Jordan felt it about the NBA. The women's volleyball team feels it about their 1994 season.

"I think we just had to go through it to learn it on our own," says left-side Cheryl MacDonald, reflecting on the Ravens' season, in which the team posted a 1-9 record and placed fifth out of six teams in the Ontario Women's Interuniversity Athletic Association.

After last year's best-ever 5-5 record, third-place divisional result and fourth-place overall finish in OWIAA action, this year's drop was a disappointment.

What happened?

The 1994 Ravens lost almost all their veteran players — nine of 11 — and in particular they suffered the loss of perennial all-star setter Marilyn Johnston, who played out her fifth year of varsity eligibility but returned this year as assistant coach to head coach Peter Biasone.

Even the two veterans on the team, Carolyn Haddock and Karolina Srutek, were only second-year players with just a year's experience.

This year's rookie team also succumbed to "personnel changes," when some players — notably second-year middle Carolyn

Raven Sylvie Coutu was one of many newcomers to the volleyball team.

Haddock — left the team.

"At the beginning of the year, I thought we had a really good team," says Laurie Malone, this year's setter. "But because of people having other priorities and whatnot, they couldn't continue on with

VOLLEY cont. on pg. 20

RANT 'N' RAVEN

A case of just desserts?

by Steven Vesely
Charlatan Staff

Considering the case of the Carleton hockey club and their never-ending quest for varsity status, one might beg to ask — whatever happened to the rules?

The normal route by which a club team gains varsity status is by approaching the athletics board and applying for it.

A budget is presented. Issues like coaching and administration are discussed. The board considers the request within the framework of existing athletic programs and available funds, then it makes a decision.

That's the route the women's waterpolo team took in 1988 when they successfully convinced the board to fund women's waterpolo as a varsity sport instead of the low-profile varsity synchronized swimming team.

Other club teams like curling, tennis and hockey have also tried to lobby athletics in the same way during the past decade, but without success.

Some clubs accept it this way. Others — like the hockey club — don't.

Varsity hockey was cut in 1975 because of a lack of funding. Six years ago, a group of alumni calling themselves the Bald Ravens revived hockey as a club team in the city's Senior R.A. League.

After their original varsity request was denied in 1988, the alumni made two more separate proposals to the department of athletics trying to revive varsity hockey.

Both attempts failed.

So this year the hockey club tried something new. Something unprecedented. They broke the rules.

Sick and tired of lobbying athletics to no avail, the Bald Ravens asked the Carleton University Students' Association to run a referendum asking students if they would be in favor of a $1 levy per full-time student towards funding a hockey team in the Ontario Colleges Athletic Association.

CUSA did. Students voted. And the hockey club won the referendum by a vote of 1,905 to 897.

An emergency meeting of the athletics board was called to discuss the matter because the hockey club has a March 8 deadline to submit an official, university-sponsored application to the OCAA.

As one might imagine, it was a tense meeting, with some board members none to pleased by this gun at their heads forcing them to make a quick and hasty decision on whether or not to sponsor the club's application.

By going to the students and winning their referendum, the hockey club raised a pledge of about $18,500 from students and proved there was student support for hockey on campus.

But they skirted around the athletics board and broke the rules of how varsity status is obtained.

Perhaps, then, with the news that the CUSA election has been overturned — and the referendum results as well — maybe the hockey club is only getting its just desserts. □

Raven Rumblings

QUOTE OF THE WEEK

"I can assure you, that in my experience, a hockey program will cost more than ($36,000) in time. So the reason I'm not enthusiastic — and you know it, you can all feel it — is that I'm saying, 'Hell, this means if we accept this and take on the responsibility of doing this right, it's going to cost a lot more in time.'"

Athletics director Keith Harris addressed the athletics board on March 4 and raised this financial concern about the possibility of athletics taking over the administration of the hockey club.

ROWING RESULTS

About 15 members of the men's and women's rowing teams participated in the Ontario Indoor Rowing Championships at Ridley College in St. Catharines, Ont., on March 6.

Rower Josée Paquette placed third among 10 in a time of 9:59 in the women's lightweight class over a distance of 2,500 metres.

Teammate Nicole Lebon placed sixth in a time 10:13.

Four other rowers — Rob Bennett, Scott Hayes, Rachel Fallows and Vicki Schouten — finished among the top 15 in their respective classes.

OCAA ALL-STAR

Men's basketball star Taffe Charles was named to the Ontario Universities Athletic Association's east division all-star team.

Charles was second in the country in scoring, averaging 28.0 points per game. Charles was also second in the OCAA east in rebounding, averaging 10.4 rebounds per game.

OCAA BASKETBALL Final Scoring Leaders

A. Beason	Ryerson	33.4
T. Charles	Carleton	28.0
D. Smart	Queen's	26.3
S. Swords	Laurentian	22.2
C. Fischer	Laurentian	21.1
C. Swantee	Toronto	18.0
C. Porter	Ottawa	17.3
D. Reid	Ottawa	17.1
B. Hann	Laurentian	16.7
W. Hall	York	16.3

OCAA BASKETBALL Final Rebounding Leaders

A. Beason	Ryerson	11.4
T. Charles	Carleton	10.4
C. Fischer	Laurentian	8.8
C. Porter	Ottawa	8.3
D. Reid	Ottawa	7.5

OCAA

Athlete of the Week

Anthony Biggar of the University of Toronto track and field team is the OCAA athlete of the week. Biggar won gold in the 600- and 1,000-metre events and took home two silvers as a member of the Blues relay team.

CALENDAR

SWIMMING — Three Ravens will be taking part in the Canadian Interuniversity Athletic Union swim championships in Victoria, B.C., over the March 11-13 weekend.

Swimmers Erica Kotler, Brigitte Davidson and Andrew Smith qualified for the national championships in meets earlier this year.

Skier Dustin' away the competition

Ex-Olympian Wayne Dustin silent leader on nordic team

by Ryan Ward
Charlatan Staff

Every so often, along comes an athlete who thoroughly dominates a sport. Wayne Gretzky in hockey. Steffi Graf in tennis. Miguel Indurain in cycling.

Carleton, too, has its own such dominating winner — Wayne Dustin of the men's nordic ski team.

His list of achievements reads like an honor roll:

- three-time world junior champion in 1981, '82 and '84
- two-time world nordic champion in 1984 and 1992
- two Olympic appearances in 1988 and 1992
- numerous victories on the national nordic ski circuit in Canada

Make no mistake about it, Dustin is a winner. A silent, competitive skier with a determined-but-effortless stride.

"Wayne is a silent leader," says Carleton nordic ski coach Mark Rabb. "He's like a rock. Really steady. He just knows how to win."

Roommate Al Pilcher remembers Dustin's winning ways when the two were teammates on the national squad back in the mid-eighties.

"When I was moving up in the ranks, (Dustin) was God. In fact, he was beyond God," says Pilcher. "He was second in Canada behind Pierre Harvey and there were times when Harvey was looking over his shoulder."

Roommate Al Pilcher remembers Dustin's winning ways when the two were teammates on the national squad back in the mid-eighties.

"When I was moving up in the ranks, (Dustin) was God. In fact, he was beyond God," says Pilcher. "He was second in Canada behind Pierre Harvey and there were times when Harvey was looking over his shoulder."

"(He's) a skier who's on autopilot. He knows what to do and always does it."

— Women's nordic ski team member Gail Barnett

As a six-year-old nordic wonder growing up in a ski-happy family in Sault Ste. Marie, it wasn't often there were people in Dustin's line of vision.

"My parents were always pretty active in supporting me by driving me to races and stuff," says Dustin.

With strong family support and an older brother as a skiing role model, it's no wonder Dustin loves the sport.

"He loves to race. He loves to train," says Pilcher. "He's been doing it all his life."

Since those heady days of Olympic competition, Dustin has slightly reduced his time skiing and concentrated more on his studies.

The 28-year-old skier graduated with a BA from Waterloo last year and is now in his first-year of Carleton's electrical engineering program.

Not surprisingly, he's doing well.

"He has a high tempo which gives him the edge among other competitors."

— Men's nordic ski team veteran Chris Webb.

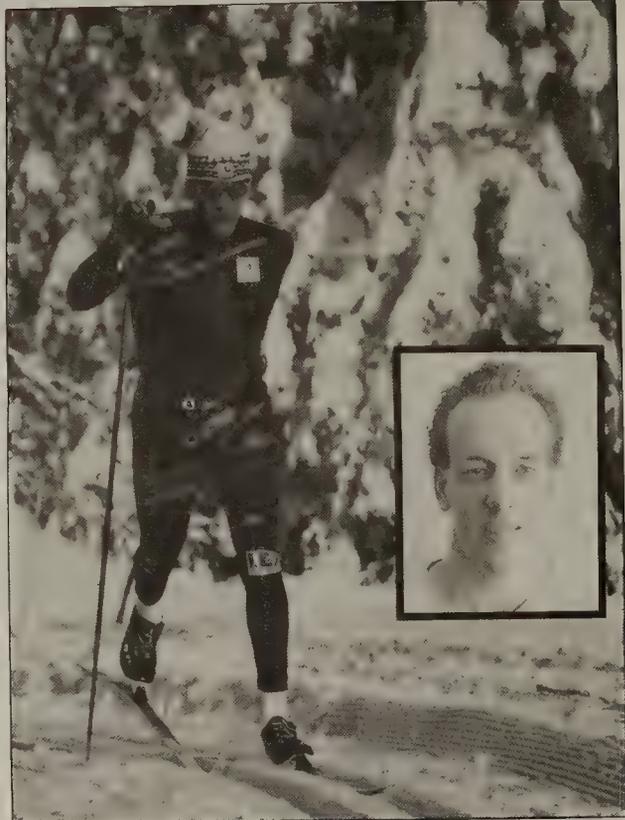

VOLLEY cont. from pg. 19.

our team. That sort of cut us down a bit."

The loss of those key veterans resulted in a relative decline in things like consistency, game strategy and playoff experience. It was indeed a back-to-the-basics learning year for the team.

"Skill-wise, we got down to the basics," says Srutek. "Team unity, we got that down pat. We got all the little things out of the way, so next year we can concentrate more on our game."

Getting the "little things" out of the way included getting rid of any notions that university volleyball is the same as

In six OCAA races this year, Dustin finished first in five of them.

"Last semester Wayne had an A+ in all of his classes except one," says nordic teammate and roommate Frank Ferrari. "The ability to work for 30 hours at school and still have time to train as much as he does is incredible."

And it has paid off. In six races on the Ontario Universities Athletic Association skiing circuit this season, Dustin finished first in all but one of the races he entered. In the one race he lost, he placed second. Such authority has shocked even some of the more veteran members of the team.

"I've been to 11 (provincial final) races and won eight metals," says Ferrari. "But I've never seen anyone as dominant as Wayne."

Not that he's complaining. Dustin's work ethic was a big motivator to members of the men's and women's nordic ski teams — both of whom took home silver medals at this year's provincial championships last month.

Experience was another plus. Minute details like adjusting techniques and waxes to suit weather conditions were areas where Dustin excels.

that played in high school. Not so. "(University volleyball) is a lot faster, and it's more skillful... than high school," says Raven Susan Edgecomb.

That's something the women weren't entirely prepared for. As a result, skills development was a large part of the team's training schedule. Moreover, some of the Raven rookies say they were a bit surprised at the competitiveness of the OWIAA.

"I don't think we were used to the level of competition," says MacDonald. "Not that we had never played competitive volleyball before, but at a university level... nobody gives up. It doesn't matter how far down the other team is."

How good was he?

Provincial Championships
Dunroon, Ont. Feb. 19-20.
15-km Classic First
10-km Freestyle First

NCD Interdivisional
Deep River, Ont. Feb. 5-6.
15-km Classic First
10-km Freestyle Second

SOD Interdivisional
Dunroon, Ont. Jan. 22-23.
30-km Classic First
10-km Freestyle First

"There's only a few skiers in Canada who know as much as he knows," says Pilcher. "The mental and technical aspects of the game can make the difference in nordic skiing. A small aspect like moving your skis properly could be the difference between first and 50th."

Knowing the difference is why Dustin's consistently first and not 50th. □

This probably wasn't news to head coach Peter Biasone, who has been coaching the women's varsity team for six years. Srutek says Biasone's patience with the rookie team was appreciated.

"He had a hell of a year because from coaching a team last year that had over 10 years of volleyball experience to coaching a team that has right-out-of-high-school experience — he's had to hold his breath a lot of times," she said.

As for next year?
"Once we develop some consistency, I think we'll be able to do a lot better," says Malone. "Hopefully we'll make it to the (playoffs)."

Here's hoping. □

Charlatan Hockey Pool

Here are the point leaders in the Charlatan Hockey Pool.
Points were tabulated as of Tue. March 1, 1994.
Regular season leaders can only win the dinner prize once.

BAXTER'S

1344 Bank Street
(at Riverside)
738-3323

Our main production computer crashed this past week so we were unable to update the hockey pool standings and pick this week's winner. Assuming we can boot the system for next week, we'll award two dinner certificates next week.

Charlatan Sports Trivia

Answer the following question correctly and become eligible to win a $25 dinner for two at Schadillac's Saloon.

Name the last New York Islander to win the Hart Trophy awarded to the NHL's Most Valuable Player.

Congratulations to Jeff Coates who knew Mike Palmateer, is the NHL goaltender who with 23 assists, has recorded more than any other in his career. Sorry folks, it ain't Grant Fuhr.

1. Place your answer, name and phone number on this entry and submit it to The Charlatan sports editor, room 531 Unicentre. The recipient of the prize will be determined by a supervised draw of all correct answers.
2. All answers must be received by Tuesday, March 15, 1994. The winner should come up to the office for the prize on any Monday or Tuesday.
3. Contestants may submit only one entry per week.
4. Charlatan staff members and their families are not eligible to participate.

Answer:

Name:

Phone:

The Charlatan... Unplugged

The Charlatan's production computers crashed due to a power failure Tuesday night, sending half this week's pages to computer heaven and sinking us in to some deep doo - doo.

We want to thank, with every bit of energy we have left, all the people who helped us get this one out.

Special gratitude goes to our computer god Dave Carpenter, who valiantly tried to salvage our system with his nifty silver tool box.

We'd also like to thank Klaus Pohle, Centretown News and the journalism school a million times over for loaning us their computers in our time of need.

The

Un Classifieds

Replies are in for boxes Whatever, Baudelaire, Ladyhawke, Crazy Diamond, N.Y., Looking, Ladyhawke, P.I.C.H.I., Happy, SSS. You can pick them up in Rm 531, Unicentre.

FOR RENT

Spacious, 2-bedroom apartment in Glebe to share. At Bronson & Fifth - 5 minute walk to campus, bus at door. Mature, quiet, non-smoker only. Walk-in closets, storage, laundry in bldg. Carpeted, unfurnished bedroom. $350/mth + 1/2 hydro and phone. Heat, water, cable included. 231-5923 or box 722.

Room for rent - $265 (heat incl.) plus hydro - at Florence and Kent. 3 bdrms. Available immediately. 236-2173 (leave msg.)

LOST & FOUND

HELP! I'm the Yankees hat that was abducted from Oliver's before Spring Break by that nasty low-life. Please rescue me by replying to Box NY.

Scarf found in Southam Theatre A on Wed, Mar. 2. Reply box Scarf

WANTED/JOBS

The Nomads Rugby Club of Toronto is seeking players for its women's side for this summer. For more information, please contact Nomads Hotline at (416) 466-3061.

FEMALE VOCALIST sought by guitarist/songwriter to release and eventually record original songs. Influences might include Maria McKee, Victoria Williams, Sarah McLachlan, Bruce Cockburn. Not a job offer; just an invitation for now. Box Vocal.

Photographer needed for a Marketing Company during the 1994 Orientation week, Sept. 6-10. Excellent pay, fun and good experience. Call Anton (519) 439-2300.

Can't see the forest because there are no trees? Greenpeace is looking for activists to educate & fundraise on environmental & peace issues. Mon-Fri. 2-10pm. $220 wk + bonus. Call Lise 562-1004.

SUMMER JOBS: Pripstein's Camp (Laurentians) hiring instructors: Kayaking, Waterskiing (OWSA certified), Pottery, Beadmaking/Jewellery, Gymnastics, Canoeing, Judo (black belt), Drama (musicals), Photography, Keyboardist. Send resume 5253 Decarie #333, Montreal H3W 3C3.

Earn up to $700 weekly from home! Rush SASE to Clasin, 2407A - 515 St. Laurent Blvd, Ottawa, Ontario, K1K 3X5

SERVICES/AVAILABLE

Writing/Editing - Resumes/Letters/Etc. At prices students can afford. Half-hour free consultation. Laser Printing. Tel/Fax: (613) 728-9565.

POTTERY CLASSES: hand-building + wheel-throwing, starting March 22 or 23 (7:30pm-9:30pm). Next session starts May 17 or 18. INSTRUCTOR: Debra Ducharme, full-time production potter and sculptor, 15 yrs experience. LOCATION: private studio, walking distance from Carleton. COST: $75 incl. materials + class time for 6 wk session. Limit 6 per class. Pre-registration: 730-0394.

SCHOOLRINGS - order and get your ring by graduation. Jostens will be at the Bookstore March 17 & 18 from 10am-5pm.

Serious Money for Serious People! Will teach you to build an explosive home-based business now! Kiss student loans goodbye! Earn substantial income all year! Send resume, PO Box 537, STN B, Ottawa, K1P 5P6.

Stressed? Confused? Don't know where to turn for help? Come to a safe place and talk to non-judgemental peers. Maybe we can help. No appointment necessary. The Peer Counselling Centre 788-2755. Counselling line 788-3581.

Word Processing: Quality Work in Term Papers, Theses, Essays, Resumes, Cover Letters and Class Overheads. Free Pickup/Delivery to Carleton U Campus. Competitive Rates. For More Information Phone Deepak @ 736-9652. (After 5pm Please.)

Business Opportunity: Students looking for serious opportunity to earn money or start your own student business, be your own boss, without high entry fees. No get rich quick scheme, 828-4104.

INCREASE ENERGY/BURN FAT - What if there was a product that...does all this plus: reduces cravings, reshapes your body, promotes the growth of muscle tissue. For free info call 235-1542.

Introducing Buddhist Meditation 8:00pm. A course providing a basic understanding and meditative experience of the Stages of the Path to Enlightenment (Lam Rim), with Kelsang Tharchin, Buddhist monk and psychologist. NRC (National Research Council) Room 3001, 100 Sussex Dr., Ottawa. Suggested donation $10/ evening ($2 students). Contact Dave: 228-8305.

Goudas Legal Consulting: Affordable Paralegal Representation in Small Claims, Summary and Provincial Offences, Landlord and Tenant, Regulatory Matters. Phone 24 hours, 786-6384.

Word Processing. Accurate, professional, prompt, economical. Reports, essays, term papers, transcripts, the-ses. Reasonable editing provided and spelling corrected free. 731-9534.

Legal problems?? Landlord-tenant matters, small claims court, provincial offences (traffic court) & summary convictions. Call Jaouard Legal Services 247-1915.

Essays and Theses - laser printed - $1.60/page. Also, resume writing, editing, writing tutoring, charts, graphics & tables. Fax & pickup service can be arranged. Please call 721-8770.

Word processing. Accuracy and Deadlines. Guaranteed. Central Location. 233-8874.

MISCELLANEOUS/EVENTS

Speaking about Current Indigenous Issues: The Honourable Ethel Blondin-Andrew, Secretary of State for Training and Industry. Monday, March 14, 1994. Loeb B149, 6-7pm.

Andre Csabo, if you are still at Carleton please call 736-8391 (family friendly).

COMMERCE STUDENTS - The Commerce Society will be sponsoring a volleyball tournament March 18. For more info drop by 225 PA or call 788-2600 ext. 2708.

MAN TO WOMAN

Dear Ise and Shannon, I've loved the two of you for most of my real life. I only wish you could return my love. All at once if possible. I may sound desperate but I'm only hopelessly in love with both of you. Rosas are red, violets are blue, my eyes light up when I see the two of you. Signed: Guess Who!

Dear Dow and Fawley, not a day goes by that I don't walk by your house on Sunnyside on my way to school. You are the most beautiful pair I have ever seen, if you know what I mean. Watch for me Tuesday and Thursday at noon. I will wave. Lots to Love.

Where are you? You caught the #7 bus on March 6 at 6:05pm. You were wearing green jeans. I was wearing a leather jacket and a red/black plaid shirt. Please write back soon. Box 7777.

Thumper, the non-anniversary is coming - happy second. So glad you stopped to pick flowers in my garden. Now only roses grow, blooming just for you. Love Cuddles.

Are you looking for a big, star-studded, muscle-bound, cuddle football bear? For an elegant evening, call Ryan at 733-5269.

SWM wishes to exchange anonymous erotic letters with eclectic, articulate female - no strings - Box XXX.

Attractive, 22-year-old seeks someone to romance. I am athletic, humorous and easy-going. If you are seriously trying to find someone, I'd be glad to meet you. All replies answered, serious replies please. Box Find.

192 PUL: "We met" the 3 of you between 6:30-7:30pm on Feb. 27 on Hwy 16. If you want to meet formally pls reply Box Windowsurfer.

WOMAN TO MAN

To the intelligent, articulate young man who telephoned the CFRA Talk Show on Tuesday, Mar. 1. You were once at Waterloo and disliked the experience because all anyone talked about was beer. You also stated that you had not found many people to talk to at Carleton for similar reasons. I have the same problem. Meet for coffee? Box Plato.

Looking for Steve. You are a second yr. law student who lives on Lees Ave. You met a girl with red curly hair named Sandy from Guelph at Stony Mondays on Fri. 18. We got separated at the end of the night. Interested in meeting up again? I will be in Ottawa Thurs., Mar. 24. Call me in Guelph if you are interested, (519) 836-7867

Hi. Single, 19-year-old female looking for a sensitive, fun loving, romantic guy interested in a relationship. Must have a good sense of humour, enjoy long walks, movies or just spending time together. Reply Box Sensitive.

To Tim in my 18.334 TV class, your smile is irresistible. Meet me for coffee. Respond to Box Say Yes.

Want a chance to win $1,000?

Why not enter the

KRAFT Dinner

recipe contest?

Call 1-800-26-KRAFT

for details or see the full page ad appearing in this newspaper!

The Charlatan assumes no responsibility for the content or reply to any unclassified advertisement. The advertiser assumes complete liability for the content of, and all replies to, any advertisement and for any claims made against the Charlatan as a result thereof. The advertiser agrees to indemnify and hold this publication, Charlatan Publication Inc., and its employees harmless for all costs, expenses, liabilities and damages resulting from the publication placed by the advertiser, its agents, or any reply to such advertisement. The Charlatan reserves the right to revise, restrict or cancel any advertisement or change the category in which the ad is placed.

You could Win one of five $1,000 grand prizes

IN THE
Kraft Dinner^{*}
CAMPUS CONNECTION
Recipe Contest.

CALL 1-800-26-KRAFT

AND

To save time while studying I make my delicious "Speedy Tuna Dinner". While the KD's cooking I put 1 cup of frozen peas in a colander. Then I put the boiling water from the noodles over the peas to thaw. Add in 1 can of tuna, the peas & some Italian seasonings to your KD and voila! Try it with new White Cheddar too!

Ima Keener - Noodle U

GIVE a recipe!
You might be a grand prize winner!

"The first 300 qualifying recipe entrants will receive a FREE case of New KRAFT White Cheddar Macaroni & Cheese!"

There will be one winner selected for each of these 5 categories:

1. Best Mealtime Recipe
2. Best Snacktime Recipe
3. Best Recipe (by an individual)
4. Best Recipe (by a group)
5. "Healthiest" Recipe

Remember, delicious, easy-to-make recipes and creative recordings get extra marks!

5. Each of the first 300 eligible entrants will receive 1 case (24 packages) of KRAFT White Cheddar Macaroni & Cheese with an approximate retail value of $24.00. One grand prize of $1,000 will be awarded for the best recipe selected in each of the 5 categories.
6. Selected recipe entrants and winners of the early bird prizes will be required to sign a standard declaration and release form to confirm compliance with the official rules and regulations, and

Joe Kool - Cheddar College

Making "Jammin' Joe's Chili Beef Dinner" takes no time. I cook 1/2 lb. of ground beef in a frying pan and add it to a pot of KD along with 1 cup of stewed tomatoes and 1 tsp chili powder. The hotter the better! Try that new Kraft Cheese & Tomato flavour for extra tomato taste!

acceptance of the prize as awarded. This contest is only open to residents of Canada who are currently enrolled in a recognized Canadian university, college or other post-secondary educational institution. Employees of KGFC, its affiliated companies, advertising and promotional agencies, and the independent judging organization, and all persons residing in their respective households, are ineligible.

7. All decisions of the judges are final. The chances of winning will depend on the number of eligible entries and the quality of recipes received. This contest is subject to all applicable federal, provincial and municipal laws. Only one grand prize per person or group will be awarded.
8. All recorded entries become the property of KGFC, 95 Mountfield Drive, Don Mills, Ontario, M3B 3L6, and no correspondence will be entered into except with the selected finalists who will be notified by mail or telephone. By entering this contest, entrants consent to the use of photographs and/or recipes, without compensation, in future publicity and/or publication carried out by KGFC in connection with this contest.
9. KGFC, with the consent of the Régie des alcools des courses et des jeux (Québec), reserves the right to cancel or suspend this contest in the event of any printing or administrative error. Québec residents may submit any litigation respecting the conduct of this contest and the awarding of any prizes to the Régie des alcools, des courses et des jeux.

CALL and GET a recipe!
Listen to what other students are making with KRAFT DINNER!

1-800-26-KRAFT

*Registered Trade-mark of Kraft General Foods Canada Inc.

Fishbone: "You've got to feel the funk"

by Adam Seddon
Charlatan Staff

Fishbone
Porter Hall
March 5

Walter Kibby summed up the Fishbone experience perfectly.

When asked to compare life in the studio to life on the stage, Fishbone's trumpet player and vocalist remarked, "In the studio, there's nobody around to help with the hyping up."

This evening at Porter Hall, they had plenty of help.

With their uniquely Fishbone sound, mixing styles as diverse as ska and hardcore, they've amassed a loyal, cross-genre following.

Fishbone fans, notes Kibby, are "people into good vibes; people into losing their mind now and again. You know, it could be a grandma."

But has Kibby ever seen a grandma at a Fishbone show? He says that he has, but I don't know. There weren't any grandmothers at this show.

Fishbone funk'd, punked and thrashed with great enthusiasm and flair. Angelo Moore, lead vocalist and sax player, opened up their set with "The Warmth of Your Breath," a song about police, inciting the crowd to chant "Donuts, cigarettes, coffee."

Moore then got the crowd to hum the refrain from "Pressure."

"You in the back, I know you're not singing. . . I'm coming back there," he said and then leaped into the crowd, surfing all the way to the back.

The first half of their show was comprised mostly of older material. After the opening track, they played numerous songs from The Reality of My Surroundings, including the thrashy "Sunless Saturday." They also played some tracks from Truth and Soul and earlier albums. When they played "Ma and Pa," the crowd went ecstatic.

"Do you want to get funky? You have to experience the funk," Moore said as John Fisher, dressed in his one-piece red pyjamas and hat with stuffed horns, pumped out the funky bass line to "Nutt Megalomaniac" off their latest disc, Give A Monkey A Brain. . .

This album is notable for its general overall heavier sound. Of this change from their usual funky feel, Kibby says, "You know, the guys get big amps and you want to use them."

The performance of "Drunk Skitzo" from Give A Monkey A Brain. . . was the highlight of the show. Moore climbed around up in the rafters for about 10 minutes, suspending himself upside down and mumbling "d-d-d-drunken s-s-s-skitzo," while the band pumped out enormous amounts of feedback and wailed away on the drums.

One of the things that makes this band so good live is the dynamic stage presence and antics of frontman Moore. He has a unique way of bonding with the audience.

For their encore, Moore returned to the stage to recite some poetry he wrote about racism in the music industry. In his verbal assault, he accused the music industry of creating "token" black artists with nothing controversial to say. The band then came on-stage to perform "Subliminal Fascism." Unfortunately, this was the only song in their encore.

Kibby says there are probably fans who could listen to the music for years before ever reading the lyrics. That, though, he says, is fine. The music and the message are of equal importance according to him.

CHRIS NUTT/ALL SMITH

I'm just so fuckin' happy.

"Without the music, you probably wouldn't listen to the message. The message just helps the music become stronger." □

Value for your cash? $25'll get you two hours

by Kevin McKay
Charlatan Staff

A Tribe Called Quest, De La Soul, Souls of Mischief
Porter Hall
March 6

That's it?

Although both A Tribe Called Quest and De La Soul put on a good show, they only played for about an hour each: not exactly good value for your $25.

And if you're wondering why I didn't mention Souls of Mischief, it's because we spent their set in a very disorganized line as the bouncers conducted body searches on most individuals. They sounded good through the wall. Thankfully, I did get in time to see the rest of the show.

De La Soul quickly got the crowd moving with "Eye Patch," the first track on their current album Buhloone Mindstate.

They went through material off all their albums, although it looked like they preferred some songs over others.

Showing how tired they were with playing some of the tunes from their first album, 3 Feet High and Rising, they started their big hit "Me, Myself and I" by chanting, "I hate this fucking song, I hate this fucking song, I hate this fucking. . ." The crowd wasn't fazed; they yelled along with band all the way through the chorus.

Overall, De La Soul really seemed to be enjoying themselves, joking around and trying to make each other laugh or lose their place in the lyrics.

They slid easily from one song into the next, mixing the beats together well.

Although both Tribe and De La Soul had to work to get the crowd going, they had fun along the way. At one point, De La Soul went looking for the true hip-hopers in the audience. We were tested for lyrical knowledge as they got the crowd to sing along to Dr. Dre's "Dre Day" and Run-D.M.C.'s "Down with the King."

Their best song of the night, "Ego Trippin'," had the crowd screaming along. They finished up with their current single, "Breakadawn."

After De La Soul ended, there was almost no transition time between the two bands; probably because it would be hard to choose a headliner out of two excellent groups. Or maybe it was because they wanted to catch last call.

Tribe exploded on to the stage with "Steve Biko (Stir It Up)," the first track off their latest disc Midnight Marauders.

They used some older beats and samples from other bands to segue into new songs. It took a good ear to identify the scratching and samples that connected the songs.

Throughout the show, Q-Tip and Phife tried to get the crowd worked up, especially those boring "muthafuckers" who stood still, arms folded, at the back of the room.

"Scenario" finally got a great reaction out of the crowd near the end of the set, but Q-Tip ended up haranguing people to get them bouncing and yelling along. "Y'all gotta move cuz y'all paid a lotta loot to get in here." This got the crowd bouncing along to Midnight Marauders' "Award Tour."

Neither band did an encore. They left the audience standing around at the end, waiting to see if the lights would be coming up for another song.

The one gripe I had about the show, forgetting about the disorganization at the door, was with the volume and bass level. It just wasn't loud enough. You could hear the music, but you couldn't feel the bass at the back of your chest.

It should have been a show capable of pulverizing bones. Instead, it only tickled a little. □

This week: Pretension

"And then I got just plain lonely and just so fed up with all the badness in my life and in the world and I said to myself, 'Please, God, just make me a bird — that's all I ever really wanted — a white graceful bird free of shame and taint and fear of loneliness, and give me other white birds among which to fly, and give me a sky so big and wide that if I never wanted to land, I would never have to.' But instead God gave me these words, and I speak them here."

Douglas Coupland, Mr. Voice of His Generation, in Life After God, ripping off Jonathan Livingston Seagull.

Next week: Coupland wishes he was a whooping crane!

MARK LAMB

Tribe's Phife and Q-Tip: I'm gonna get you, and then I'm gonna get your friends in alphabetical order, so I'm gonna need some names!

Exploring Native women's issues on video

by Joanne Capuani
Charlatan Staff

Women in Films and Videos for International Women's Week
SAW Video Co-op
March 6

"People don't like coming to free events."

This was the reaction of International Women's Week film festival co-ordinator Diane Conrad, when only 23 people showed up for last Sunday's screening of documentaries dealing with the concerns of Native women.

Regardless, that's almost twice as many as showed up last year, according to Tanis Hill, a Mohawk Nation member of Ottawa's First Nations Association, who helped organize Sunday's event.

The agenda for this International Women's Week event was supposed to include speakers and a facilitated discussion that would follow the actual screening of three documentary films.

Unfortunately, the evening was cut short when Hill was unable to inspire the audience members to speak with her inquiry, "Does any one have anything to say about the movies?"

Perhaps this was because by the end of the night's third film, the original crowd had shrunk to half its original size and the few remaining audience members lacked any motivation to comment on the films.

Regardless of this dry outcome, the films themselves were informative in relaying the trials of women in their Native communities.

The main screening that evening — Mother of Many Children, an hour-long feature on the lives of various Native women — examined the roles of women from nations as diverse as the Métis and the Northern Cree.

In this documentary, writer/director/narrator Alanis Obomsawin describes a link that has long since been lost — a sense of community, of equal gender status within their Native communities.

One Ojibwa woman in the film says Ojibwa people once had to do things
WOMEN cont'd on p. 29

PONTIAC SUNBIRD LE SPORT COUPE

Fly the coupe!

PONTIAC SUNBIRD LE
SPORT COUPE

• Standard 4-wheel anti-lock brakes

• Air conditioning

• AM/FM stereo cassette

Plus much more • rear spoiler • power automatic door locks
• tinted glass • reclining front bucket seats • 24-hour Roadside Assistance††

With your choice of two ways to take off.

The Performance
you expect.
Priced Right!

SmartLease
$189
per month over 36 months*
THE FIRST PAYMENT'S ON US!
Or special offer for graduates
$750 bonus from your Pontiac Dealer

PONTIAC

Performance

TEAM

*Offers apply to the 1994 Pontiac Sunbird LE Coupe on a 36-month lease for $189 per month (equipment as described). A minimum down payment of $1,495 and $300 security deposit is required. Some mileage conditions apply. Freight $595, license, insurance and taxes not included. Offers apply to 1994 new or demonstrator models. Dealer order or trade may be necessary. Dealer may lease for less. Offers apply to qualified retail customers only. These offers may not be combined or used with any other offer. See Dealer for details. Available to any person who has proof that they graduated or will graduate from a recognized post-secondary institution during the period September 1, 1991 through August 31, 1994. Graduate program may not be combined or used with any other offer. †First month Smart Lease payment will be waived for qualified purchasers. Minimum down payment applies. ††Some charges may apply. See Dealer for details.

A & E INSIGHT

Trying to move beyond Mariah's and Whitney's

by Suzanne Andrew
Charlatan Staff

We tend to think music is a free avenue of expression, but like any other construct of our society, the music industry is a power-based hierarchy.

Looking backwards into the folds of history, male dominance in music is obvious.

From Beethoven to Bartok, all the "best" classical composers are men. Women of the past were denied access to music. They were ghettoized into the role of singers — parrots of male musicians and composers.

For awhile, during the Baroque period, men even tried to take this small piece of the pie away from women by introducing the castrati (men castrated before puberty to maintain soprano voices).

In the '90s, we would like to think that equality reigns supreme in the music kingdom — that women's artistic talents are no longer repressed by men. But peering into the big reality tableau, we see that colors of equality are muted in the background. Although shrouded in subtleties, men continue to stand in the forefront of music, even though music has drastically changed in the last century.

The stereotypical role of women in music is still that of a singer. Whitney Houston and Mariah Careys warble out banal ballads like women in the past and win Grammy awards. In bands, you usually have the stereotypical female singer or cute girl bass player.

Female drummers and guitarists are a rare breed. As such, women like Velvet Underground drummer Moe Tucker and Lush guitarist Miki Beryni are thought of as exceptions to the rule, despite being as good and as innovative as any male musician.

All-female bands valiantly treading water in the music scene are usually slapped with labels that often hamper their artistic pursuits. Labels like "Riot Grrrls," "Fox-core" and "Cute Girl Band" promote the idea that these bands are simply novelty acts.

Sexual objectification plays a big part in performance by female musicians. If a woman's body, her dancing or her clothes are valued as much as her music, her performance becomes a sexual marketing tool. This is pornography.

But beyond the physical and the visual, music itself tells its own story. Music affects us unconsciously in ways we cannot begin to fathom. It has the intrinsic power to influence our moods and infiltrate our consciousness.

Think about what a movie would be like without music. Movie soundtracks have a huge impact on audiences, using familiar signals. We know for an example, that the bad guy is plotting to do something nasty because the music tells us so.

If music has this power, could it not also be utilized as a sly tool to perpetuate male hegemony in the collective unconscious?

If you don't think so, start listening to song lyrics. Note how some musicians weave language solely around stereotypes and negative imagery.

Start watching any interpretive form of music from music videos to dance. Note how in most ballets the female dancers tend to dance to the soft, lyrical parts of the music, whereas the men are given athletic choreography to strong and powerful melodies.

Note how many music videos are centered around the stereotypical boy-meets-girl/girl-melts-with-desire/girl-needs-boy-to-be-happy narrative.

We don't want to rid music of everything offensive — it is important to note here that music should be an open forum. In other words, there's room for both Lush and a chicks and booze fellow like David Lee Roth in the big scheme of things. The key here is discernment.

Paying attention to music and discerning underlying messages is important. Don't you want to know what you're actually listening to? Awareness of the hidden nasties in music will help open up the music world to a whole new range of voices.

There are women in the music industry making a big difference in demolishing gender stereotypes; women like Sarah McLachlan, Annie Lennox, Jane Siberry, Sheila Chandra, and bands like the Breeders and 7 Year Bitch have proved the true voices of women can be heard in the music industry.

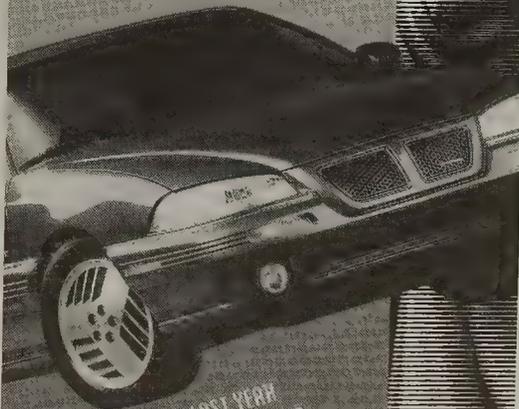

But are we listening? □

IN A CLASS BY ITSELF

1991 - 1994
GRADUATES
1994 GENERAL MOTORS GRADUATE PROGRAM

GET YOUR $750*
REBATE

ON THE PURCHASE OR LEASE OF ANY GM CAR,
LIGHT TRUCK
OR VAN

IF YOU'RE IN YOUR LAST YEAR
AT COLLEGE OR UNIVERSITY OR A
RECENT GRADUATE, CHECK OUT THIS
ONCE-IN-A-LIFETIME OPPORTUNITY
FROM GENERAL MOTORS

Or Call 1-800-GM-DRIVE

OFFER DOES NOT APPLY TO SATURN VEHICLES
DISTRIBUTED BY GENERAL MOTORS
THE $750 REBATE INCLUDES GST

"NOBODY PARTIES LIKE THE IRISH"

IRISH PUB & RESTAURANT

NO COVER 10¢ WINGS 15¢ SHRIMP

IMPORTED DRAFTS

LARGE PATIO DAILY SPECIALS

DART BOARDS SATELLITE TV

LIVE "IRISH" ENTERTAINMENT

EVERY WED., THURS., FRI. AND SAT. 9 P.M.

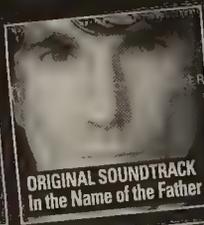

GOOD FUN GOOD FOOD GREAT BEER
67 CLARENCE STREET, BYWARD, MARKET, 562-0674

UNSAFE MUSIC

CHAKA DEMUS & PLIERS
All She Wrote

ORIGINAL SOUNDTRACK
In the Name of the Father

ACE OF BASE
The Sign

HADDAWAY
Haddaway

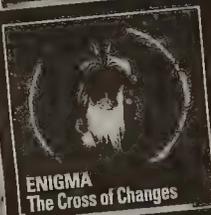

SMASHING PUMPKINS
Siamese Dream

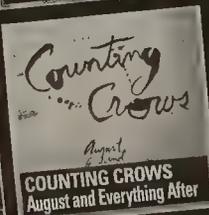

THE TEA PARTY
Splendor Solis

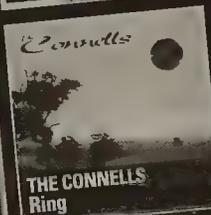

SASS JORDAN
Rats

ENIGMA
The Cross of Changes

COUNTING CROWS
August and Everything After

THE CONNELLS
Ring

NIRVANA
In Utero

THE BREEDERS
Last Splash

JAMES
Laid

LOST AND PROFOUND Memory Thief

SALT 'N PEPA
Very Necessary

CANDLEBOX
Candlebox

PAVEMENT
Crooked Rain

DANZIG
Thrall-Demonsweat Live

ME'SHELL
NdegeOcello

BJORK
Debut

$14⁹⁹
CD

SAFE PRICES

PRICES IN EFFECT UNTIL APRIL 10/94. HMV RESERVES THE RIGHT TO LIMIT QUANTITIES.

- Rideau Centre
- St. Laurent Shopping Centre
- Bank & Sparks
- Les Promenades de l'Outaouais, Gatineau

Hear HMV Here

Wild Strawberries serve up some tasty pop

by Mike Peters
Charlatan Staff

Wild Strawberries
Zaphod Beeblebrox
March 4

Pure pop with no excuses.

Toronto's Wild Strawberries breezed through town Friday as part of their Montreal-Ottawa mini-tour.

Husband and wife Ken Harrison and Roberta Carter-Harrison are the creative force behind this band, which ranges from four to eight pieces for touring and recording.

Since their first independent cassette, Carving Wooden Spectacles, was released in 1989, they have received heavy airplay and have garnered a devoted following in the Toronto area.

Their more recent EPs, grace and Life Sized, have pushed the couple into the spotlight with the success of singles "That's The Way It Goes" and "Life Sized Marilyn Monroe."

They are now celebrating completion of their first full-length album, Bet You Think I'm Lonely, which will probably be released this summer. It will include material from the previous two EPs and six new tracks. Thanks to a newly signed distribution deal with A&M Records, the CD will be the Strawberries' first real taste of national exposure.

"We just got frustrated lately when the songs were on the radio across the country and we just couldn't get it (their recordings) out," explains lead singer Roberta. "When you're only known in Toronto you can service the stores and keep up with it, but when you move beyond that, it gets ridiculous."

"But it's been a really good process," adds Ken, who handles keyboards and the group's songwriting duties. "We've put out a record ourselves before, so we know how to do the artwork, and how to arrange to get posters made or whatever."

Graduates of the University of Toronto, both Ken and Roberta have successful careers in medicine (he's a doctor, she's a physiotherapist), which are increasingly taking a back seat to their musical aspirations. "I'm down to two nights a week — sometimes three if we're hungry," says Ken.

"Even though we're still doing it," Roberta adds, "we have abandoned it cause we're not pursuing more degrees or courses. I'm not trying to climb any corporate ladders."

"It's not like a career," Ken agrees. "It's more like a waitering job. The music is definitely our focus."

Of course, they're probably pulling down a bit more than waiters.

Describing Wild Strawberries' sound is difficult. "The cop-out answer we've been using is pop," Roberta says, "but it has so many bad connotations that we're scared to use that word."

This pop sound translates itself into a mellow and very casual live performance. Roberta had a great rapport with the audience at Zaphod's, often going off on a tangent while telling the crowd what the songs were about.

The couple says their influences range from Booker T and the M.G.'s to Elvis Costello and Tori Amos. Their airplay ranges from alternative and university radio stations to the CBC.

"I just like a good song," says Ken. "That's what we're trying to do — just put together good songs. If they're good songs, then they should be able to be played anywhere. They should be able to transcend any one market or label."

Roberta's simple and passionate vocals perfectly complement Ken's finely crafted lyrics. At a time where popular music bleeds manufactured attitude and artificial angst, Wild Strawberries are a refreshing dose of honest, clever pop. □

Roberta of Wild Strawberries: We're so glad she chose music over medicine.

DEAN TOMLINSON

NOW HIRING FOR SUMMER '94 CARLETON UNIVERSITY STUDENTS' ASSOCIATION

AREA	HOURLY RATE	# OF POSITIONS
Security
Unicentre	$ 7.00	4
Building Operations
Cleaners	$ 6.70	4
Games Room
Attendants	$ 6.70	4
Unicentre Store
Cashiers	$ 6.70	3
Rooster's
Bartenders	$ 5.80	2
Bar Assistant	$ 7.00	1
Oliver's
Bartenders	$ 5.80	4
Security	$ 7.00	8
Buspersons	$ 5.80	2

GENERAL HIRING PROCESS INFORMATION

1. Positions to be filled for the period of May 1994 to August 1994 and are unionized.
2. Most positions will offer approximately 12 to 15 hours of work per week.
3. Applicants must present proof of registration for academic year 1993-94 and must have a valid Social Insurance Number. Canadian citizens, landed immigrants and international students may apply.
4. Job descriptions and copy of the CUSA Hiring Procedure will be available in the CUSA office, 401 Unicentre.
5. Completed applications must be returned to the Area Manager at the location listed on the application, in person, by 4:00 p.m. Tuesday, March 22, 1994.
6. Applicants will be pre-screened and the names of those selected for an interview will be posted outside the CUSA office by 4:00 P.M. Thursday, March 24, 1994.
7. Should your name appear on the list to be interviewed, make an appointment with the Front Office staff in 401 Unicentre by 4:00 p.m. Monday March 28th, 1994.
8. Interviews will occur from Tuesday, March 29th through Thursday, March 31st, 1994. It is the applicants responsibility to check whether an interview has been granted, to make an appointment for the interview, and to arrive punctually for it.
9. Final results will be posted outside the CUSA Office by 4:00 p.m. Thursday, April 7th, 1994.

Applications will be available from Thursday March 10 through Tuesday March 22/94 from 8:30 am to 4:30 pm outside the CUSA office, Rm. 401 Unicentre. Phone 788-6688

Portraits Now®

Bayshore The Official

Graduation Photographer for
Carleton University

Student Association, Inc. 1993/94

Why
PORTRAITS NOW?

- No Sitting Fee on Campus!
- Previews Back Next Day!
- Choice of Backgrounds!
- Satisfaction Guaranteed!

ATTENTION 1993/94 GRADUATES

Portraits Now - Bayshore has been chosen by CUSA Inc. as the Official Photographer for Carleton University 1993/1994 Graduates. DON'T MISS OUT! Make your appointment to get your Graduation Portraits from Portraits Now - Bayshore by calling 596-1501 or visit our studio across from Porter Hall.

2nd Semester Session now until
March 24, 1994 across from Porter Hall

Portraits Now Bayshore 596-1501
100 Bayshore Dr., Nepean Ont., K2B 8C1

ATTENTION:

UNIVERSITY GRADUATES

Make tracks to career opportunities

Put your diploma or degree to work for you

POST GRADUATE STUDIES AT GEORGIAN COLLEGE

Communicative Disorders Assistant

(Orillia Campus) - 12 months, 490 hour field practicum
Career possibilities for graduates include assistants to Speech-Language Pathologists and Audiologists in schools, daycare centres, hospitals, nursing homes and treatment centres. Courses include augmentative communication, amplification systems and management and intervention techniques.

Research Analyst

(Barrie Campus) - 8 months, field practicum
Courses include research methodology, survey design and analysis, statistics, computer data analysis, demography, legal and ethical issues and research communications. Graduates may consider careers in social policy and planning, education, opinion polling, marketing and media research.

Therapeutic Recreation

(Orillia Campus) - 12 months, 16 week internship
Career opportunities exist in areas working with seniors, law offenders, and persons with developmental, physical or psychiatric impairments. Supporting courses include leisure education, counselling, assessment, adapted programming and leadership.

I would like more information and an application for:

Therapeutic Recreation Research Analyst Communicative Disorders Assistant

Name: _____

Address: _____ (apt., street) _____ (city) _____ (prov)

Phone: () _____

(postal code) _____

Georgian College has an excellent track record in placing graduates in related employment. Call (705) 722-5166 or mail the coupon at right.

Mail to: Marketing & Communications
Georgian College
One Georgian Drive, Barrie, Ontario L4M 3X9
Georgian College

The CUSA General Elections held in February, 1994, have been declared null and void, including the Board of Governors and Senate seats. New General Elections have been set in the following Writ of Election.

Whereas, pursuant to section 4.2 of the CUSA Consolidated Electoral Code, the Chief Electoral Officer shall issue a Writ of Election; Be it hereby known that Elections Carleton Intends to hold elections for the positions below on CUSA Council on March 29, 30, 31 1994.

POSITIONS AVAILABLE ARE:

C.U.S.A.

- President (1)
- Engineering (3)
- Finance Commissioner (1)
- Industrial Design (1)
- Architecture (1)
- Journalism (1)

- Arts and Social Sciences (14)
- Science (3)
- Commerce (3)
- Special Students (3)
- Computer Science (1)

SENATE

- 2 Arts seats
- 2 Social Science seats

- 1 Architecture/Industrial Design seat
- 1 Engineering seat
- 2 Computer Science/Science seats

BOARD OF GOVERNORS

- Two (2) positions

POLLING STATIONS:

- Leob Tunnel Entrance
- Unicentre
- Mackenzie Building
- Tunnel Junction between Steacie and Herzberg Building

Referendum #1

Whereas: This year funding from the Carleton University Students' Association has allowed the University of Ottawa Community Legal Clinic, a student organization, to provide legal representation and advice to Carleton Students. Do you support the continuation of C.U.S.A. funding to continue these services?

- First meeting of the "Yes" Committee shall take place in Room 424 Unicentre on Thursday, March 17, 2:00 pm.
- First meeting of the "No" Committee shall take place in Room 424 Unicentre on Thursday, March 17, 1:00 pm.

- Tunnel Junction
- Residence Commons
- St. Patrick's Building

Referendum #2

Do you support paying a 1.00 levy (per student) towards subsidizing the creation and maintenance of a Carleton Hockey team which would join the College Hockey League?

- First meeting of the "Yes" Committee shall take place in Room 424 Unicentre on Thursday, March 17, 4:00 pm.
- First meeting of the "No" Committee shall take place in Room 424 Unicentre on Thursday, March 17 at 3:00 pm.

Schedule of Election

- Publication of Writ March 8
- Nominations Open March 11 (10:00 am)
- Nominations Close March 21 (10:00 am)
- Validation March 21
- Campaigning Begins March 22 (8:30 am)
- Polling Begins day 1 March 29 (11:10-9:10)
- Polling day 2 March 30 (11:10-9:10)
- Polling Closes day 3 March 31 (11:10-6:10)
- Tabulation March 31 (6:20-?)

Nomination Forms

Nomination forms are available at the CUSA office (401 Unicentre), and at the Elections Carleton Office 127D Unicentre.

CUSA

A tourist's guide to French culture

by Sarah Richards
Charlatan Staff

Ahhh, the French. Perhaps no other people have enchanted us more with their sophisticated, high-brow culture.

Yet at the same time, there are many aspects of the French that can distress and frankly bewilder the average North American tourist. Do not be alarmed at this. This short article could save you from some embarrassing reactions.

First, to deal with the French, it is important to put yourself in a certain mind-set. You simply must grasp — il faut comprendre — that if you're going to do something, you've got to do it the French way.

The French way means that whatever project you undertake — be it choosing your seat on the plane, or asking for a map of Paris — you do it right. Because if you don't do it right, then just what, pray tell, is the point of doing it all?

And if you do it wrong (and with the French, it is a conscious decision), chances are someone will just have to do it all over again, and they're not going to be too happy. And they will let you know.

I learned of the French way even before

I had touched down on French soil. There was some debate on the plane among the passengers, most of them French, over which row was Number 39. They couldn't decide which seats an overhead row indicator was placed over. Not that it really mattered, since the plane was half empty.

But after about 20 minutes of seat changes and arguing, in which just about everybody but the man who drops off the TV dinners got involved, people settled in for the six-hour flight. As the plane taxied away for take-off, I was lulled to sleep by the mutterings of a solitary Frenchman pointing at the row number, insisting to himself that everyone else was mistaken.

Upon arriving in Paris, perhaps the best city in France to learn very quickly about the French way, you will want to procure for yourself a map of this beautiful city. This can be done at one of the many subway stands.

Do not be alarmed if the sales clerk does not acknowledge your existence for at least two minutes. As I learned, you must be firm. And make sure to ask for a plan of Paris, not a carte. If you do the latter, she will undoubtedly look at you as if you're some kind of space alien. Or worse, she'll think you're American.

To understand this last point, it's helpful to realize that France has always had a negative reaction to foreigners and their cultural baggage.

Don't forget that France is a country that has succumbed to several invasions. This century, there was the German invasion led by Hitler. Then there was the British invasion led by the Beatles. Now, there's the American invasion led by Tori Spelling. If you think Canadians feel that Beverly Hills 90210 is nauseating, just imagine what it's doing to the French.

The French way extends to their working habits. While in Paris, for free, you can watch not one, but two grounds workers mow grass in the famous Jardin des Tuileries. One man holds the electric lawn mower's cord off the ground, while the other man mows. It's no wonder France's unemployment rate remains one of the lowest in Europe.

As for you female travellers, there's an added thing you should know about the French way. Don't forget to check you liberté, égalité et fraternité at the airport. Actually, keep the fraternité bit. Apparently, there's a lot of fraternité among men if you're a woman trying to break into any kind of career other than that of a cleaning woman or a nanny.

Female travellers may also be surprised at the number of Frenchmen who insist on holding doors open for you, even if they won't give you a job.

You only begin to appreciate the French way once you return to Ottawa soil, when the first open door you come across is unceremoniously slammed in your face.

Ah, it's nice to be home.

Back to the Canadian way. □

WOMEN cont'd from p. 24

together in order to survive. At the very top of their societal order were the elderly women who would make decisions for the community as a whole. As Obomsawin says in the film, "Women were more powerful than men."

The clan, or family structure, was headed by women. The grandmother would relay cultural tradition and herbal remedies: she was at once doctor, teacher and diplomat.

The balance between nurturing mother and highly respected professional is dealt with in Like the Trees. This 30-minute documentary is an intense account of a Métis mother's struggles in a non-Indian society.

After years of keeping her children in her parents' care on their reserve to go 700 miles away to work at tedious jobs, after accumulating the meagre fruits of her labor, tuberculosis and a $76 monthly welfare cheque while recovering, she discovers true happiness in her life as a Woodland Cree.

Joan Hutton, a musician and organizer of the Mariposa folk festival, shares her own personal experience with single parenthood in the 30-minute film Our Dear Sisters. In this documentary, Hutton denies that having adopted and raised a seven-day-old child as a single mother was a burden. Hutton was able to balance her tight travel and performance schedule while caring for her daughter.

According to Hutton, her native community provided such a loving environment that her role was made all the more easier. Unlike the other two films, Our Dear Sisters relays the image of a Native community in which the celebration, rather than oppression of women, is prevalent.

These films presented a varied, informative picture of Native culture. Too bad there weren't more people there to see them. □

Need Money?

Want to Save on Tuition Costs?
Want to Save on Travel and Phone Bills?
Want to Save on almost everything you buy?

And...would you like to be making money while you are doing this?

For more information call our Info. Line 24 hrs at 786-1300 and then get back to Richard at 682-7917.

THE NEW THEATRE OF OTTAWA PRESENTS

"A crazy quilt patchwork of hyperventilating language, erotic jokes, movie kitsch and medical nightmare."

The New York Times

the
BALTIMORE
Waltz

BY PAULA VOGEL
DIRECTED
BY MILES POTTER

MARCH 16
TO APRIL 2

CALL: 236-5196
GREAT CANADIAN THEATRE COMPANY
910 GLADSTONE AVE.

THINKING OF TEACHING?

The University of British Columbia invites applications to its teacher education programs for September 1994.

All programs lead to both
• the B.C. Professional Teaching Certificate
• the U.B.C. Bachelor of Education degree

All programs feature
• a full term of teaching practice
• effective communications skills
• classroom management strategies
• providing for students with special needs

Secondary teaching applicants with 4-year Bachelor's degrees and strength in one or two teaching subjects enter a 12-month program.

Middle school (Grades 6-8) teaching applicants with 4-year Bachelor's degrees and strength in English, social studies or science may enter a 12-month program.

Elementary teaching applicants with acceptable 4-year degrees may enter a 12-month program.

Elementary teaching applicants with three or more years of appropriate university credit may enter a 2-year program.

Information and applications now available from:

Teacher Education Office
Faculty of Education
The University of British Columbia
2125 Main Mall
Vancouver, B.C. V6T 1Z4
Phone: (604) 822-5242 or 4612 (messages 24 hours)
Fax: (604) 822-8227

The Charlatan is giving away tickets to see
THE BALTIMORE WALTZ

playing at The Great Canadian Theatre Company on March 14. The first 15 people up up to The Charlatan office will receive passes to attend.

Ask for Jill or Mo.

Telling a tale of the singer and the trains

by David Bartolf
Charlatan Staff

Stephen Fearing
The Penguin
March 12

Stephen Fearing's no stranger to Ottawa.

This Vancouver-based acoustic folk singer has played many shows in town, including gigs at Rasputin's, Zaphod's and the National Gallery. Usually he has a good time. But not at the Governor General's place.

"The one I remember being the worst was the Governor General's picnic," says Fearing. "I just kept breaking strings and the CBC was broadcasting live. I didn't have spare strings on stage. It was a total nightmare."

Fearing also remembers playing at the National Museum of Nature on Metcalfe, commenting, "Oh yeah, with the shrieking dinosaur in the lobby."

Fearing recorded his latest album, The Assassin's Apprentice, in July and August of last year. He didn't want it "lost amongst the Christmas kaffuffle," so he held off on its release and the tour until now. This album shows that Fearing continues to have an affinity for trains.

"The Station" has the sweet melodramatic refrain, "I've got a railway station where my heart should be;" "The Longest Road" recounts a Vancouver-to-Montreal train ride he took with his mother on his way to Ireland. He also covers a Hank Williams song, "(I Heard That) Lonesome Whistle."

"It is more of a memory thing," says Fearing. "I haven't taken a train in ages." He does, however, live near them. Despite moving twice in the past year, he has stayed within shouting distance of Vancouver train yards.

"It's the classic image for songwriters to use, and it is like if you could image how many times people have written about the moon," says Fearing. "And yet, it is such a strong image. There are still ways to write about the moon without it being clichéd."

One song off his previous album called The Blue Line came to him as he was travelling via train through Swift Current, Sask., an insignificant stop along one of his hectic tours. The rhythm of the train inspired the music.

The Assassin's Apprentice has the same bite and anger as past albums. The main idea for the title song came to Fearing in a Charlottetown hotel. He was opening for Sarah McLachlan, and he had arrived a night early.

"I have a hard time sleeping in hotels," he said. He wound up watching Robert de Niro in Cape Fear.

"Not a great movie, but there's some really disturbing stuff," is his assessment.

This mood found its way into "The Assassin's Apprentice" and picks up on the same themes Fearing covered in "Bells of Morning" off The Blue Line.

The song is a reaction to the massacre at the Ecole Polytechnique in Montreal, where Marc Lepine murdered 14 female engineering students in 1989.

Of that song, Fearing says, "I didn't go into any details as to why somebody like Marc Lepine would do that. And I wanted to write a song that looked at that a little bit more and maybe found some reason for compassion."

"They're just like the rest of us, it's just that they've been pushed by their circumstances and their demons to explode."

The title "The Assassin's Apprentice" came from some repartee between Fearing and Steve Berlin, Fearing's producer.

Greg Reely, Fearing's engineer, has a calm and well-oiled machine-like precision behind the sound board which has earned him the nickname the Assassin.

Fearing had been teasing Berlin about his comparative gracelessness on the sound board. One day, Berlin did a very Reely-like move, and Fearing quipped, "What are you trying to get — the Assassin's apprentice award?"

"That's the title for a song!" Berlin replied.

Fearing says it fit the song very well.

"That's what this is about. It's about somebody who's been through this — apprenticed like a lot of us have — within the society that creates people of great violence. Whether we like it or not, that's how we're brought up, that's our apprenticeship."

Wipe that smirk off your face.

John Candy remembered

by David Hodges
Charlatan Staff

On March 4, Canada tragically lost one of its greatest talents when John Candy suddenly passed away after suffering a heart attack.

The 43-year-old actor/comedian left behind a legacy which spanned over several decades.

Beginning his career as a member of the Second City comedy troupe, Candy worked in both the Chicago and Toronto chapters. This eventually led to his legendary, critically acclaimed work on SCTV.

With these impressive credentials, Candy made the transition from television star to movie star with the greatest of ease, using his comic genius to land supporting roles in such movies as The Blues Brothers, Stripes and Splash.

With the success of these movies, Candy was able to establish himself as a superstar, moving on to leading roles in the hits Planes, Trains and Automobiles and Uncle Buck.

Even with all his accomplishments and universal appeal, Candy always took pride in his Canadian background.

It's ironic to think that Candy only auditioned for Second City because his pal Dan Aykroyd tricked him into doing so. He had never really considered acting as a career until that point. Thankfully he did.

Thanks John. □

A ACCEPTABLE ALTERNATIVE MINI STORAGE
Hume Trading Company Limited
MINI STORAGE SPACE

Going home for the summer? Need safe, clean, secure storage for your desk, furniture and personal items? From $20.00 per month. 4863 Bank St. Call 822-7666. Lowest rates in the region since 1963.

Humber College Introduces the FAST TRACK
Post Graduate Program in Recreation Leadership

This exciting, intensive one year program is all you need for a rewarding career in recreation.

Our instructors are all top quality industry professionals and the extensive field practice component ensures you'll learn current skills right on the job.

Applications are now being accepted for September.

Humber College
For admission requirements or further information, please call Susan Goodman, (416) 675-3111 ext 4212.

Europe by rail

See 27 European countries and the former Soviet Union
DESIGN YOUR OWN VACATION

* Choose between 3 and 17 countries with

EUROPASS

3 COUNTRIES	$268
5 DAYS IN 2 MONTHS
4 COUNTRIES	$382
8 DAYS IN 2 MONTHS
5 COUNTRIES	$496
11 DAYS IN 2 MONTHS
EXTRA RAIL DAY	$52

UNLIMITED TRAVEL

1ST YTH
15 DAYS	672 538
1 MONTH	1078 780
2 MONTHS	1482 1038

UNLIMITED TRAVEL

1ST YTH
ANY 2 DAYS IN 2 MONTHS	470 344
ANY 10 DAYS IN 2 MONTHS	756 538
ANY 15 DAYS IN 2 MONTHS	1000 730

*OR TAKE TIME TO EXPLORE SPECIFIC AREAS INCLUDING

TRAVEL CUTS Benelux Eastern Europe Scandinavia
Britfrance Russia and beyond...

Tickets must be purchased in Canada! Countries must be adjoining. *Under 26 FIRST DAY OF TRAVEL.
TRAVEL CUTS OTTAWA 613 235 5411
TRAVEL CUTS OTTAWA 613 235 5411
TRAVEL CUTS OTTAWA 613 235 5411
TRAVEL CUTS OTTAWA 613 235 5411

LONG DAY IN THE UNIVERSE

THURSDAY, MARCH 10 TO THURSDAY, MARCH 17

Thursday, March 10

One dollar gets you in to see the Sonic Lounge Lizards at Zaphod's tonight. They describe themselves as loud and melodic, if you're interested. Opening for them are metal-boys Knocking Boots.

Finally! A chance to learn how to write a screenplay! At 12:30 p.m., Tom Shoeridge, author of the book Ten Best Canadian Screenplays, will be giving a talk on just that topic. It's all taking place in Room 435 St. Pat's. And it's free.

If you want to do some permanent damage to your eardrums, head on down to the Penguin. Montreal's Bliss, Bite, and Ottawa's Mystic Zealots and Spiny Anteaters are performing in support of CHUO's (that's the University of Ottawa's radio station) funding drive. Tickets cost $6 and are available at the door. Plus, there'll be a few all-ages tickets.

Friday, March 11

Carleton follows in the band September Child, with special guest Walter Can, play the Penguin this evening.

Local folks the Illegal Jazz Poets are hosting a CD release party at the newly christened Upstairs Club, formerly Creeque Alley. (Good name! -ed.) Opening band is Project 9.

Guitarist Stephen Rollins is the featured performer for today's free noon-time concert in Carleton's Alumni Theatre.

At the Pit this evening, it's Canadian songstress Sara Craig. Cover is $5.

Local cover band Byward Mayhem, helped out by our Almonte friends Generic, are playing a show in support of CHUO at the Nox. Three bucks gets you in and the show starts at 8 p.m.

Saturday, March 12

The National Gallery is presenting a series of Latin American concerts under the title Sabroso. Tonight's performance is by Brazilian jazz percussionist Nana Vasconcelos. Trust us, he sounds really cool. Tickets are $15 in advance at the gallery and $18 at the door. Show starts at 8 p.m. in the National Gallery's auditorium.

Canadian folk type Stephen Fearing plays the Penguin tonight. Cover is $12.50. Check out the article, page 30.

To kick off the One World Film Festival that starts tomorrow and runs until March 20, Susan Aglukark and Dario Dominguez are performing at the National Library auditorium at 8 p.m. Tickets are $20.

Performing at Zaphod's tonight are the ultracool Liquid Bone Dance from Winnipeg and Toronto's Killjoys. Cover's only $5.

More stuff for CHUO's funding drive: it's described as an "Ire Sunshine Reggae-Fest Jam." Performing at this event, being held at the Nox at the U of O, is Garnet Challenger and the Connection Band with Sligo and the Cut Diamond Band and DJ General Hi-Fi. And what's the cost to you, the listener? Only three dollars at the door. Show starts at 8 p.m.

Sunday, March 13

The Tanzanian film These Hands and the Zimbabwean flick Neria are showing tonight at Ottawa U's Alumni Auditorium at 7 p.m. Neria is about a woman who tries to regain control of her life after her husband dies, while These Hands is a documentary about women who make gravel for construction work.

Discussions with the directors will follow each film. It's all part of that One World Film Festival. Admission to this and other screenings is $5.

La Sarrasine, a film by Montreal creative type Paul Tana, is showing at the Bytowne at 3:30 p.m. today. He will be there after the film for a discussion period. Admission is $6.50.

As they do every Sunday evening, Triskle is playing their Celtic stuff at the Cock Robin Pub this evening.

Monday, March 14

More cult films at the Mayfair. Tonight it's A Clockwork Orange, followed by The Shining. The fun and games start at 7 p.m.

Tuesday, March 15

It's Tuesday. That can only mean that Charlatan production manager Kevin McKay has a reading tip for his loyal followers. This week, McKay recommends the classic novel The Maltese Falcon by Dashiell Hammet. Says McKay in defence of his choice, "The originator of hard-boiled detective fiction will have you guessing 'till the end." That is, unless you've seen the movie.

Wednesday, March 16

This One World Festival thing we've been telling you about today focuses on reproductive rights. The Indian film Something Like a War, which deals with India's family planning program, will be shown at 7 p.m., followed by a lecture and discussion group at 8 p.m. The Canadian flick Making Babies, showing at 9 p.m., deals with — you guessed it — reproductive technology.

Tonight at the Mayfair at 7 p.m., it's the ever-popular Rocky Horror Picture Show, followed by the cheesy action flick Highlander at 9:05 p.m. (When you think about it, Highlander is kind of a stupid movie, and now they're making a Highlander III. Why people like it, I'll never know. -ed.)

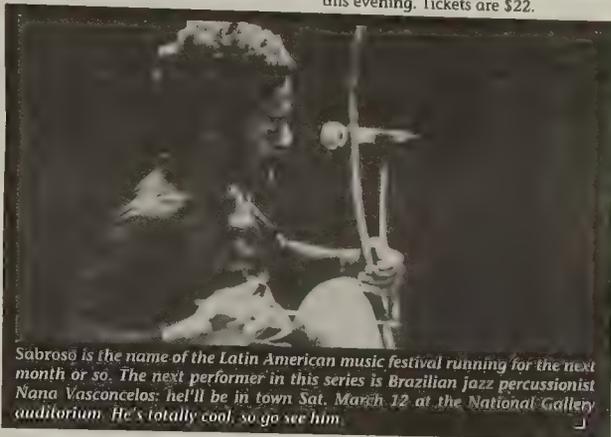

The Baltimore Waltz is the latest play showing at the Great Canadian Theatre Company. It's being presented by the New Theatre of Ottawa. According to the press release, this play's about the voyage of a brother and a sister as they travel to Vienna in search of a cure for the sister's terminal disease. It's a comedy.

It's running today until April 2 on Tuesdays through Thursdays and Sundays. Admission is $10. Starting times are 8 p.m. during the week and 2 p.m. on Sundays.

Thursday, March 17

Local favorites Jimmy George ring in St. Patrick's Day with some tunes at the Penguin. Should be fun.

Spirit of the West, Canada's favorite Celtic-rock band, plays Grand Central this evening. Tickets are $22.

Sabroso is the name of the Latin American music festival running for the next month or so. The next performer in this series is Brazilian jazz percussionist Nana Vasconcelos: he'll be in town Sat. March 12 at the National Gallery auditorium. He's totally cool, so go see him.

If you have a listing you would like to appear in this handy calendar, drop us a line at 531 Unicentre or fax us your listing at 788-4051. Listings must be in by the Friday before publication.

Monday - Wednesday
is
KEG PARTY NIGHT

$5.99 Pitchers

Thursday - Friday
is
BOTTLE BLADDER BUSTER NIGHT
$1.99 Bottled Beer

- ⊗ Pool Table
- ⊗ Darts
- ⊗ Satellite Dish

ALSO FEATURING:

- 20¢ Wings
- Mon. - Wed.
- 1/2 Price Pizza
- Thurs. - Fri.
- $2.50 Shooters
- Mon. - Fri. night

680 Brookfield Rd.
at Riverside
Ottawa, Ont.
521-9234

All Specials After 5 pm - Food Specials Eat In Only - Until March 31st

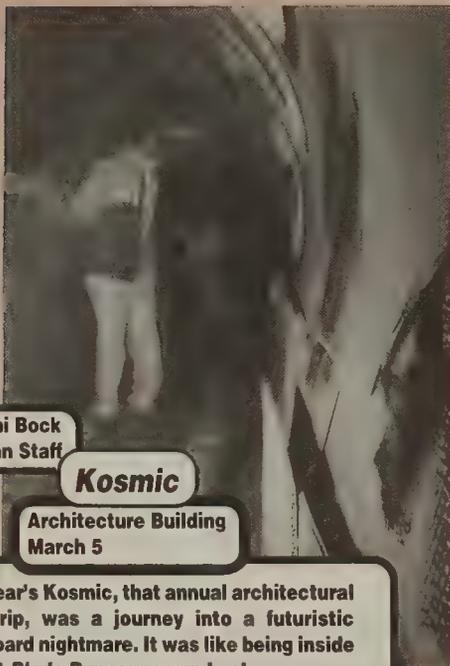

Kosmic

Are you having a bad hair night or are you just happy to see me?

The coolest cyborg on the block

by Naomi Bock
Charlatan Staff

Kosmic

Architecture Building
March 5

This year's Kosmic, that annual architectural acid trip, was a journey into a futuristic cardboard nightmare. It was like being inside a giant Blade Runner pop-up book.

Or maybe a little like being inside Bono's brain, what with the Zoo TV-ish "Channel K" theme: a television jungle with electronic images flashing on venetian blinds hanging in the central gallery.

Scrap metal and flashing lights created an atmosphere of harsh urban terror.

It was way too crowded to really enjoy it properly. Moving around was like trying to move on a futuristic city street.

Musically, it was as varied as the people who showed up. Khaki pants and latex catsuits grooved together to acid jazz in one room, while other rooms featured funk, techno and live music courtesy of bands like Rail T.E.C. and NC-17. There was even an ear-jarring karaoke in one room, which was decorated with the appropriate bamboo decor. It was a sight that gave one a shudder—here we were, a thousand years in the future, and we still have drunk people singing off-key renditions of "Sunglasses at Night." If you could avoid that room, Kosmic was a trip to the beyond.

The tunnel entrance effectively disoriented party goers as they moved through the sewer level of the event.

Will we still have Cyndi Lauper fans in the next millennia?

kosmic

kosmic
kosmic
kosmic

PHOTOS BY ANDRE BELLEFEUILLE AND TIM O'CONNOR

the
CHARLATAN

CARLETON'S INDEPENDENT STUDENT NEWSPAPER

VOLUME 23

ISSUE 26

MARCH 17

1994

3 FOR 1 OR
50% OFF

*Preston
Optical*

444 Preston St.
(2 BLOCKS FROM DOWS LAKE PAVILION)
230-0477

EYEWEAR SALE

Buy any pair of prescription glasses at regular price and receive a second pair of glasses of equal or lesser value plus a pair of daily wear soft contact lenses absolutely FREE!!!

Combination of 2 or 3 prescriptions. May be used with friends or family members for the 3 for 1 sale.

FRAMES AND LENSES

Buy one pair of prescription glasses and receive 50% OFF on both your frame and lenses

Bring in this ad
for an extra 10% OFF

SCHADILLAC
SALOON
Ottawa's Only
Authentic
Western Saloon

Beverage Specials from Monday to Wednesday

TONIGHT
March 17
St. Patrick's Day Bash
featuring Hickory Wind
from 5pm

Come see us down
in the Byward Market
105 Murray St.
241-2233

CSS

CANADIAN SELF STORAGE

SUMMER STORAGE FOR STUDENTS

- ★ FREE RESERVATIONS
- ★ INDIVIDUAL UNITS
- ★ SECURITY PATROLLED

FROM $45 PER MONTH

CALL 72-STORE

VISA

Cleopatra at Hunt Club
727-8673

OFF CAMPUS
Custom Clothing

Clearance Sale
NOW ON

Custom Printing, Embroidery & Applique on
T-Shirts, Caps, Sweats, Fleece & Jackets

Specializing in university & college styles including the "Greek Community"

Att. Res Students!
Take advantage of our clearance on white shirts and order your floor shirts now

371 Dalhousie St.
tel 562-4833 fax 562-4834

HOME OF THE SOUTH END BLUES

TUCSON
ROADHOUSE

Mar. 17/18/19
Tony D.

COMING UP
Mar. 25/26
Paul James

240 Bank Street (Bank at Huntclub) Ottawa
For Entertainment information call 738-7596

GRAND
CENTRAL

"The Mother of All Pizzas"
141 George St. 241-2727

SATURDAY & SUNDAY
Brunch 10AM to 3PM
Over 100 items to choose from
$8.99 + taxes

introducing
STEAK

Dinner
includes
baked potato or fries,
regular salad &
garlic bread
$5.99 - taxes

EVENTS
Wednesday, March 2nd: Trooper
Wednesday, March 16th: Colin James
Thursday, March 17th: Spirit of the West

ZAPHOD
BEEBLEBROX

2ND ANNIVERSARY
WED. MAR 16 (9PM) $5

CHUO fm
PRESENTS
KIF KIF
+ JOHN WARNER

THURS. MAR 17 (9PM) $1

BENDER WITH UNCOMMON
SOCIETY
WHAT THE FK IT'S ONLY A BUCK

FRI. MAR 18 (9PM) $6

BLACK BOOT
TRIO SLOWBURN

SAT. MAR 19 (9PM) $6

MELANIE DOANE
+ PARDON BEGGARS

COMING SOON
MAR. 23-1 MOTHER EARTH
MAR. 24- BILLY GOAT
MAR. 25- THE MAHONES
MAR. 26- TOM ROBINSON
MAR. 30- ALEJANDRO ESCOVEDO

MUSIC * BEVERAGES * ADVENTURE
27 YORK ST.

SCHADILLAC RANCH

BOULET

99 Clarence St.
562-1320

Tucson's
West

Mar. 18/19
Cold Shot
Tribute to Stevie Ray Vaughn

COMING UP
Mar. 25/26
Morgan Davis

1541 Merivale Road, Ottawa
For Entertainment Information call 228-6666

Strike rejected by CUPE 2323

TAs and RAs accept Admin's final offer

by Ryan Nakashima
Charlatan Staff

Empty juice bottles, a keg full of beer and wooden stakes with no signs attached litter the Bank Street strike headquarters rented over two weeks ago by the Canadian Union of Public Employees Local 2323.

A 455-373 union local vote March 10 to ratify a collective agreement between the local and the university ended the possibility of those headquarters being used.

"I cried," says local president Michel Roy, describing how he felt after the vote.

The local of teaching assistants, research assistants and sessional lecturers voted to accept five more hours of work in 1994-95 for graduate assistants, mid-term meetings with supervisors to assess workloads, and meetings for assistants to have a say in which course they assist teaching.

But the local did not receive a tuition freeze, one of its key negotiating demands, which was abandoned by the local in the final mediation round March 7. The local argued a tuition freeze would prevent a real wage rollback in the event of tuition hikes.

About 350 members showed up at the general membership meeting before the vote, and about 30 waited as the ballots were counted after 6 p.m.

"I personally found it very stressful," says Stephanie Ross, the local executive's treasurer.

Leona Crabb, a doctoral student in history, helped campaign in favor of a strike.

"Immediately after (the final results), we just saw each other, told each other we did our best, and said it's just time to go on." The new deal will increase graduate assistants' wages by giving them five more hours of paid work per year. The extra hours are earmarked for training sessions, which were in place before but assistants were only paid if they were asked to attend.

The new wages will cost the university $112,275 in extra wages, about a two-per-cent increase in salaries, says David Van Dine, head of the university's negotiating team.

"Since we felt we tabled a proposition that was reasonable and fair in the context of our current situation, we are quite pleased that it was accepted," he says.

Roy says the deal offered nothing to Michel Roy ponders future from his empty strike headquarters.

ANDRE BELLEFLEUR

undergraduates and did not significantly affect assistants' standard of living, adding the university "bought off" the membership with its proposal.

The local has been without a contract since September. It submitted a bargaining proposal to the university last July after surveying its members, says Ross.

After seven rounds of negotiation without progress, a conciliator from the Ontario Ministry of Labor was called in to facilitate discussion in January.

On Jan. 18, about 60 members at a union local general meeting voted unanimously to hold a strike vote. A strike committee then began looking for strike headquarters. Roy says the search was necessary beforehand in the event of a strike, because the university could change the locks on CUPE 2323's Unicentre office.

The local rented the headquarters at 1206 Bank Street for the month of March for $802.50.

Computer chips stolen from Carleton computers

by Derek DeCloe
Charlatan Staff

Carleton's computing and communications services department is hoping a new security system being installed on campus computers will prevent another rash of computer break-ins.

A number of computers — possibly as many as 90, according to Paul Attallah, associate director of the school of journalism and mass communication — were broken into during reading week.

From the computers in the Herzberg, Loeb, and St. Pat's buildings, thieves took memory chips, leaving the computers useless.

The thieves broke into the computers by prying them open — in some cases with a crowbar — at the front of the casing. The thieves then reached back into the computer and plucked out the chips.

"It had to be somebody who knew how a computer was made," says Attallah.

The new system, installed by computer services the week after reading week, alerts security when someone tries to open up a computer, says Attallah.

No one will say exactly how the new system does that, though, because "we don't want to spread around what we've done," says Bruce Winer, assistant dean (computing) of the faculty of social sciences.

Bill Ferguson, manager of telecommunications for computer services, says the newer computers on campus were the main targets, probably because they have a newer type of memory chip that is easier to sell.

The value of a memory chip with one megabyte of memory is about $55. Most of the computers in St. Pat's have two of those chips, but others — such as the ones in the Loeb Building — may have had up to four times that, says Ferguson.

The cost of replacing the chips will be paid for by the faculties that use the computers.

"It's an unfortunate waste of money," says Ferguson, though he could not say exactly how much it cost to replace all the memory chips. The losses are not covered by insurance, he says, because they do not total more than $50,000.

While computers at Carleton have been broken into before, such as in the Herzberg Building in January, it's the first time there have been substantial losses, says Winer.

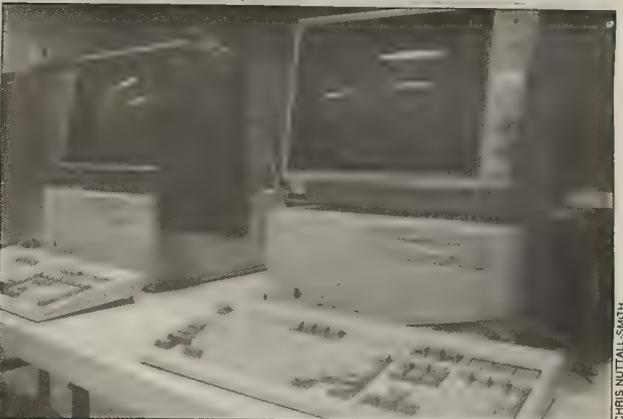

The break-ins forced the night-time closure of several computer rooms during reading week.

"It really inconveniences the students," says Ferguson, adding it's not practical to have people monitoring the computer rooms at night.

The department of university safety says it has no witnesses and has turned the matter over to the Ottawa Police.

But Const. Tim Merriman of the Ottawa Police says without any suspects, it's unlikely they will investigate the matter.

(With files from Tanya Workman and Brandie Weikie, Charlatan Staff)

Computers in the St. Patrick's Building have seen better days.

CHRIS NUTTALL-SMITH

on the cover

*Everybody Sing:
"It's a wonderful week for a bike ride . . ."*

arts 21

feature 14

national 7

news 3

opinion 11

sports 17

unclassifieds 16

index

Cover Photo By TIM O'CONNOR
(With files from Tanya Workman and Brandie Weikie, Charlatan Staff)

CUSA campaign to start March 22

by David Hodges
Charlatan Staff

Campaigning will begin once again on March 22 for the Carleton University Students' Association general elections.

February's election was overturned by the CUSA constitutional board due to constitutional violations and upheld by council in March.

In most CUSA elections, the campus is wallpapered with posters, but changes to the rules brought in for the new election are designed to reduce the amount of campaign materials used and ensure legitimate balloting.

The rules were recommended by CUSA council to the chief electoral officer at a council meeting March 8.

Colleen Felstead, the new chief electoral officer, agreed to the suggestions made at the March 8 council meeting. She moved up from deputy electoral officer when former chief electoral officer James Rilett resigned at the March 8 meeting. Council decided to appoint Felstead because there wasn't enough time to go through the hiring process, says Rob Jamieson, CUSA vice-president internal.

Felstead says she is hoping to avoid any problems with the second election.

"There have been a lot of changes I've approved of, in that there is not going to be a million posters all over the place," she says. "Unfortunately, we have to be a lot more strict because the last CEO was so lenient. If anyone breaks the rules, they're gone," says Felstead.

Infractions in the last election included poll clerks who supposedly did not initial ballots before they were given to voters, gave ballots to students who couldn't vote or didn't give ballots to those who could.

In the upcoming election, polling clerks will be given written instructions instead of having to memorize them like they did before, says Jamieson.

"Elections Carleton has to overcompensate for things that screwed up the first time," he says.

Jamieson says another problem with the poll clerks in the last election is that they were rushing people when line-ups got too long. "To hell with that. Take it slow, take it easy," says Jamieson.

"The poll clerks will be given instructions specifically on who is allowed to vote for what to avoid confusion," says CUSA journalism councillor James Heath.

Also, spending limits have been cut by two-thirds. Candidates for president or finance commissioner will be allowed to spend $50 campaigning, and all other positions will be allowed to spend $25.

In February's election, president and finance commissioner candidates were permitted to spend $50 on posters, $50 on pamphlets, and $50 on other materials. Councillor candidates were permitted to spend $25 for each type of material.

Posters are given a set value as determined by the chief electoral officer on factors such as size and number of colors. However, the actual design and printing costs for various candidates' posters may be much different.

Jamieson says there will be 25 designated poster areas in which each candidate can place one poster. Each candidate will be allowed one banner for each position they are running for.

"That'll be really cool," says Jamieson.

He also says presidential and finance commissioner candidates will be allowed a maximum of 300 8 1/2" by 11" pages for pamphlets, while all other candidates will be allowed half this amount.

After council upheld the constitutional board's decision at a meeting March 6 and again on March 8, they discussed and made recommendations to the new chief electoral officer on how to improve the election system.

But Heath says several councillors didn't stay to discuss the changes.

"Everyone left when elections were overturned. Nobody was there to give any feedback — positive or negative. All decisions made were almost unanimous," says Heath.

Despite the fact CUSA did not have quorum, the CEO was allowed to accept recommendations from the remaining councillors.

"They give me suggestions. Now even if they're passed, I don't have to follow them," says Felstead. "They suggested it so obviously people want it that way." □

Beware: campus theft rising

By Ryan Ward
Charlatan Staff

This winter has seen a rise in theft on campus, says the assistant director of Carleton's department of university safety.

Len Boudreault says students can be in for a surprise if they leave personal belongings unattended.

"This time of year we see a lot of theft," he says, although he couldn't give any statistics.

"Things are going missing from lockers and in the library people leave their personal belongings on their desk while they go get a book," says Boudreault. "It is like inviting people to steal from you."

Gaston Taylor, the department's crime prevention and support services officer, says students don't take extra precautions because they think of campus as an extension of their home.

"What we experience here is real life," says Taylor. "There is a false sense of security on campus and it could get students into trouble."

Jack Gaboury, a first-year Canadian studies student, says he didn't think he could be a victim of theft. He was mistaken. His wallet was stolen from his bag in the library when he left his desk for two minutes.

"I believed that on a university campus people were above (theft)," says Gaboury. "Thefts could take place but it never entered my mind that it would happen to me."

But Nancy Adamson, co-ordinator for Carleton's status of women office, says students aren't naive when it comes to theft.

"Things disappear but many are as careful not to leave things lying around here as they would be anywhere (else)," she says.

Brenda Kennedy, co-ordinator of Carleton's Foot Patrol, says she has seen very little theft on campus, but says it does exist.

"I have heard of theft which occurred in athletics and in the library," says Kennedy. "Those are probably the big spots."

Michael Carroll, vice-president of the Rideau River Residence Association, says theft in residence is common.

"Within residence, some (theft) has occurred in the past," says Carroll. "People underestimate the amount of theft on campus. . . I know I do."

Taylor says students should be more aware of theft on campus.

"You have to take responsibility to protect your belongings," he says. "People will watch where things are being left and when they get a chance, they will strike."

Boudreault says there have been more problems with thieves and vandals around cars because there are more people parking on campus, starting around Winterlude in February and continuing into the spring.

"There have been a few instances of people finding their tires slashed or flattened," says Boudreault.

He says incidents involving cars in Lot 5 near the athletics building have been as recently as within the last week. □

With files from Brande Wakie, Charlatan Staff

The Ceremonial Guard

This summer, participate in the colourful Changing the Guard Ceremony on Parliament Hill. You will be paid from May 11 to August 30, 1994, while learning basic military techniques with a group of dynamic young men and women.

Join the Reserve and enjoy summer employment with a difference.

For more information, contact:

The Governor General's Foot Guards
Cartier Square Drill Hall
Ottawa, Ontario
K1A 0K2 (613) 995-4020 (Collect)

The Reserve: Rewarding part-time employment

Ian, full-time student and member of the Ceremonial Guard during the summer months.

APOLOGY

We apologize to any readers who may have been inconvenienced by the "Wet and Wild Spas" ad in last weeks Charlatan. The ad should have read: "Tanning Special $30.00". We are sorry.

OC Transpo proposes changes to Route #19

TIM O'CONNOR

The Number 4: still not coming to a campus near you.

by Christine Gough
Charlatan Staff

Bus service may increase next year, but it is unlikely that the Route 4 bus will return to campus, according to Helen Gault, OC Transpo's director of systems planning.

Instead, she suggested possible improvements to Route 19 as a way of reducing overcrowding on Routes 118 and 7 at a meeting of the Carleton Advisory Committee on March 8.

The committee advises Capital Ward councillor Jim Watson on issues such as public transportation and housing. Watson's ward includes Carleton.

Route 19 is a peak-period bus, running from about 7:30 a.m. to 9 a.m. and from about 4 p.m. to 6 p.m. The Route 19 bus runs from Riverside Drive to campus, down Bronson Avenue and then to Lebreton Station every 15 minutes.

Gault said that OC Transpo may be considering one of three possible changes to Route 19 in May for the coming school year, which would make the route shorter and easier for Carleton students to take.

"In the Bronson corridor, both north and south of the Queensway, there are students who are having difficulty getting to campus," said Gault at the meeting.

is to run Route 19 from Lebreton Station, down Bronson to Somerset Street and along to Bank Street, where it would follow the Route 7 path to Carleton.

The second proposed route change would see Route 19 run from Riverside Drive to Carleton, up Bronson and along Albert Street to the Rideau Centre and back to Bronson along Slater Street.

Another suggestion is to have Route 19 follow the same route as Route 4.

OC Transpo may also change the hours of operation for Route 19 to 8 a.m. to 10 a.m. and 3 p.m. to 6:30 p.m. to better reflect peak student hours, Gault told the meeting.

Proposals to increase Carleton service on Route 19 came after Watson and Kristine Haselsteiner, vice-president external of the Carleton University Students' Association, made a proposal to the OC Transpo commission in early fall to bring Route 4 back on to campus.

Route 4 was removed from campus in 1989 when the university built the Stormont-Dundas residence. The loop used by Route 4 to turn back towards Bronson Avenue after coming on campus was destroyed and the Route 4 has never returned since.

Gault said there were two reasons for

One option suggested by OC Transpo OC Transpo cont'd on pg. 6

Begin your training in OCCUPATIONAL HEALTH AND SAFETY at Algonquin this Fall...

Algonquin College offers you high level hands-on training to prepare you for a career as an Occupational Health and Safety professional.

This new two-year diploma program has been developed to satisfy the growing need for well-qualified personnel who can manage all aspects of Health and Safety in the workplace. In the second year, field placement includes a Health and Safety Audit within an organization.

As a graduate, you may pursue employment in business, labour organizations, boards of education, universities and colleges, private health and safety consulting firms, health care institutions, and all levels of government.

To find out more about this and many other Science and Technology training programs starting this Fall at Algonquin College, join us for a Free Information Evening. Explore options in Environmental Technology, Chemical Technology, Bioengineering, Medical Laboratory, Electronics Engineering Technology, Computer Engineering Technology, and much more!

TECHNOLOGY AND SCIENCE INFORMATION EVENING
Algonquin College
Rideau Campus Gymnasium
200 Lees Avenue, Ottawa
5:30 pm to 8:00 pm

This event and parking are free!

Don't miss this opportunity to discover your new career in science or technology. And... you could also win one of three exciting prizes.

For more information contact Admissions at 727-0002.

ALGONQUIN

Graduate Students' Association

EMPLOYMENT OPPORTUNITIES

Office Assistant

Duties commence May 1 1994 for one full year, and fill between 3 and 5 hours per day. Candidates should have basic office skills including word-processing abilities and some past experience. Specific duties and remuneration are under review.

Orientation Co-ordinator

Duties include the design, promotion and production of Orientation activities for September 1994, although specific preparations are necessary by early summer. This is a contract position, and its successful culmination may lead to further event contracts.

Academic Issues Co-ordinator

Duties include facilitating the graduate N.U.G. Caucus, and keeping abreast of graduate student academic issues on campus. Majority of responsibility occurs beginning September 1994, although several issues need to be attended to over the summer months. Remuneration is under review.

Please submit resume by 30 March 1994 to the USA office, 111A Unicentre, attention VP Internal. Candidates must be graduate students at Carleton.

The USA is an equal opportunity employer with a commitment to diversity in hiring policy.

APPLE SADDLERY
The Largest Western Boot Store in Canada.
INNES ROAD JUST EAST OF THE 417 (NEAR THE PRICE CLUB)

OC Transpo cont'd from pg. 5.

rejecting the proposal to bring Route 4 onto campus.

"We would have to add seven to nine minutes to the journey time of 1,600 passengers per day," Gault said. "The second reason was the (operating) cost. In a whole year it would cost $300,000 (more)."

She said about 500 people board the bus at the Bronson stops across from Carleton per day. She said most passengers are probably students, but said she didn't know the precise numbers.

Watson said he's pleased with the new proposals for increasing the frequency of Route 19 and changing its route.

"I'm optimistic that we're going to see a higher level of service this September."

Haselsteiner also said she's pleased that OC Transpo is proposing to increase service to Route 19.

She said she's still concerned about people having to walk to Bronson Avenue to catch Route 4 at night and dangerous overcrowding on buses which come on campus.

"For the direct safety concerns we brought up, the proposal doesn't address them as much as we'd like them to. There's the issue that a lot of students using the Bronson corridor would use the bus during the evening rather than during the day."

Watson said he's disappointed that Route 4 will not likely be brought back on campus.

"I think that my preference has always been to bring back the Number 4. I've lost that battle and I think that the proposals on Route 19 are a compromise in the right direction.."

OC Transpo will be holding an open house meeting on Tuesday, March 29 at 2 p.m. to 4 p.m. in Baker Lounge. □

Fun Farquhar Fact

Farquhar St.

by Arn Keeling and Karolína Srutek
Charlatans/dials

Sometimes, love makes you do crazy things. So does alcohol.

On a recent trip to the wild, southern Ontario city of Guelph (Guelph?), these reporters were startled to find that our beloved Sparky had a street named after him in the fair city of Sleeman's.

Robert Cripps, a Guelph retiree who is researching old area street names for a book, says Farquhar Street is a venerable old thoroughfare.

The Farquhar clan may have been a family of local lawyers in the 1800s, according to Cripps. Hmm. Could this account for the snappy fashions sported by the Sparkster these days? Those can be nothing but the spiffin' threads of a legal eagle.

Talli Dickson of the Guelph Civic Museum says Farquhar Street can be found on an 1862 map of the area, when it was a mere laneway.

Nowadays, Farquhar Street has grown into a busy, modern street featuring about six houses and several telephone poles. Oh, yeah, and the cop shop.

Well, if that ain't one heck of an analogy to our own little Sparkydom here at Carleton. We've grown from tiny Carleton College to the busy, modern university we all know, featuring about three bus routes and several stop signs.

Oh, yeah, and four certified special constables.

So, there we stood on this awesome boulevard with some of our gracious Guelphian hosts, admiring the sign proclaiming the city's Farquhar lineage. And dammit, we wanted that sign.

We pushed. We pulled. We climbed up and down. We were kinda loaded, so it was difficult. Oh yeah, the cop shop was about 100 metres behind us.

After retreating to a nearby house party for a breather, we set out once more for that holiest of holy grails. This time, we had tools. Hammers, a saw, pliers, the works.

We scampered yet again up the signpost with dreams of presenting the prized sign to our fellow Charlahacks and the university community, who would all appreciate a good steal.

It's nights like this we wished we had packed those metal cutters. Our palms were sweating as the clock struck 4 a.m.: the hour of the cops' shift change. Still no damn sign.

Defeated and dispirited, we packed it in and took a final look at the gleaming sign in the starry Guelph (Guelph?) sky.

And as the bard said in All's Well That Ends Well: "That I should love a bright particular star/And think to wed it, he is so above me."

(Can you tell me how to get, how to get to... Farquhar Street?) □

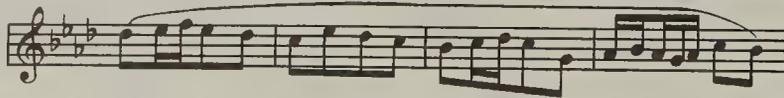

Lifestyles

Looking for a summer job?

How about starting your own business that will continue to generate revenue while you're back in class next fall?

Start-up costs are small and include a proven business plan, training and complete support to help get your business off the ground anywhere you may live.

Call Brian at 230-1362 to arrange a meeting.

Tired of the Same Old Crowd?

Like to try a different scene ... but on a student's budget?

For the same price as a few beers, The National Arts Centre Orchestra offers a lot of great bars for your buck. Now save 50% off the regular adult price of prime orchestra-level seats when you purchase student tickets using one of these coupons. You can plan on some great nights out this year, for only $14.44 a seat. And there's no minimum purchase required.

Get your tickets now and enjoy some nights out you'll remember.

March 16-17

Franz-Paul Decker, conductor
Walter Prystawski, violin

Coulthard The Bard of Dawning Singeth
All Night Long
Brahms Serenade No. 2 in A major
Bernstein Serenade for violin and orchestra

NAC Opera 20:00

Per person GST included. Valid for students with ID only. Seats in Orchestra row D-5.

$14.44

March 23-24

Franz-Paul Decker, conductor
Ida Haendel, violin
Kathleen Brett, soprano
Norine Burgess, mezzo-soprano
Women of the Ottawa Choral Society

Britten Violin concerto No. 1
Mendelssohn A Midsummer Night's Dream

NAC Opera 20:00

Per person GST included. Valid for students with ID only. Seats in Orchestra row D-5.

$14.44

April 20-21

Trevor Pinnock, conductor
Cho-Liang Lin, violin

Bizet Symphony in C major
Gougeon World premiere of Primus Tempus (NAC/CBC co-commission)
Beethoven Violin Concerto in D major

NAC Opera 20:00

Per person GST included. Valid for students with ID only. Seats in Orchestra row D-5.

$14.44

May 12-13

Trevor Pinnock, conductor
Grigory Sokolov, piano
Joanna Grofner, flute
Jane Logan, viola

Satie Gymnopédie No. 1
Chopin Piano Concerto No. 2 in F minor
Boucharid Exquisite Fires
Mendelssohn Symphony No. 4 in A major. "Italian"

NAC Opera 20:00

Per person GST included. Valid for students with ID only. Seats in Orchestra row D-5.

$14.44

Place your order in person at the NAC Box Office, with your valid student ID. The office is open Monday to Saturday, 12:00 to 21:00, and accepts all major credit cards, cash and debit cards.

NATIONAL ARTS CENTRE

CENTRE NATIONAL DES ARTS

Ottawa's Meanest wings

only 25¢ each.
at

McGinnis
LANDING
Restaurant

every night after 9:00pm.

Monday: 2 for 1 beef fajitas
Tuesday: 20¢ wings
1896 Prince of Wales Dr.
723-2096
bus route 175

NATIONAL AFFAIRS

Young people underemployed: report

by Am Keeling
Charlatan Staff

A new Statistics Canada survey on youth employment says the decline of employment among young people during the recent recession is "unprecedented."

And the employment outlook for young people — over 50 per cent of them unemployed — is grim, despite the economic recovery, say both the report and some observers.

The report, written by Deborah Sunter of the household surveys division of Statistics Canada and released this month, lists the labor participation of young people aged 15 to 24 each November from 1989 to 1993.

Titled "Youths — Waiting It Out," the report focuses on how youths have fared in the job force during those years of recession. The news is not good, concludes Sunter.

Since the peak of youth employment in 1989 (when 62.3 per cent of youths were employed), "youths have borne a disproportionate share of job losses." By November 1993, only 49.8 per cent of youths, both students and non-students, were employed.

Employment among students specifically has also dropped during the recession.

Full-time students unemployed and seeking work jumped 7.3 per cent, to 16.9 per cent from 9.6 per cent, from 1989 to 1993. Part-timers fared worse during the recession, moving to 16.5 per cent unemployed from 6.8 per cent. Unemployment for non-students increased 5.3 per cent over the same period, to 18 per cent.

MP Chris Axworthy, the NDP critic for training and youth, says the employment statistics for youth have traditionally been grim and that "none of the things we've done seems to have improved this."

"We haven't, as a country, done enough," says Axworthy.

Carl Gillis, chair of the Canadian Federation of Students, calls the problem of youth unemployment "a social catastrophe" in a statement addressing the report. He says the government should take "immediate action" to curb the problem.

Lucy Watson, president of Carleton University Students' Association, says the youth unemployment rate has a huge impact for students.

"People assume we're in school all year," she says, which means "student unemployment is not seen as important cent in the last two years.

Sunter writes in her report that for students, the difficulty in finding part-time or summer-time employment may have dire consequences.

"... these students will tend to lack valuable job exposure when they complete their education, and many will have to borrow heavily to stay in school, emerging later with a significant debt load."

Despite recent hopes that the recession is ending, the report says "if the pattern of the 1980s is repeated, youths will not regain their pre-recession rate of employment for many years to come."

The federal Liberal government has promised initiatives to help get youth back to work, including a Youth Service Corps. This program, slated to begin this year, hopes to put 10,000 participants from 18- to 24-year olds to work on community-based projects within three years.

Axworthy says this program is "a good first step," but the feds haven't shown themselves to be serious about long-term solutions to chronic joblessness.

He says the federal budget released Feb. 22 cut more jobs than it created and showed the Liberals' priorities are wrong.

"The right thing to do is to put job creation first," he says.

Axworthy says the solution is to hold forums with unemployed people and clients of social programs like unemployment insurance to find out how they are affected by the recession.

He also says he will continue to "badger" the government on the issue of youth unemployment.

"Whether they will listen is another matter."

With files from Brandie Weikie

Sunter writes, "... these students will tend to lack valuable job exposure when they complete their education, and many will have to borrow heavily to stay in school, emerging later with a significant debt load."

as 'adult' unemployment."

The problem of yearly unemployment averages among young people is compounded by summer-time student unemployment, which has reached 20 per

Youth unemployed: Lowest of the low

Here are the November labor force characteristics of youths aged 15 to 24, from the Statistics Canada survey released this month.

The unemployment rate describes those people who were unemployed and looking for work in the years below.

The employment rate is the ratio of young people employed part- or full-time to the entire youth population.

Of course, not all youths are participating in the labor force, that is, employed or actively seeking employment. The first figure, the participation rate, is the combined percentages of the population of youths who are employed or actively seeking work.

Participation rate (%)

	1989	1993
Overall	66.8	60.3
Full-time students	45.7	40.6
Part-time students	89.8	85.1
Non-students	87.3	85.6

Unemployment rate (%)

	1989	1993
Overall	11.4	17.5
Full-time students	9.6	16.9
Part-time students	6.8	16.5
Non-students	12.7	18.0

Employment rate (%)

	1989	1993
Overall	59.2	49.8
Full-time students	41.3	33.7
Part-time students	83.7	71.1
Non-students	76.1	70.2

Teaching support staff at SFU vote to strike

by Am Keeling
Charlatan Staff

On the same day that a strike by teaching and research assistants was rejected at Carleton, teaching support staff at Simon Fraser University in Burnaby, B.C., voted overwhelmingly to take job action.

After 10 months without a contract, members of the Teaching and Support Staff Union of SFU voted 84 per cent in favor of job action March 9 and 10.

"It allows the membership to decide what job action to take," says Paul Reniers, the union's organizer and chief negotiator.

Reniers says the membership will meet this week to discuss the vote and the possibility of mediation with the university.

The mediation process could delay strike action for up to 48 hours if the union should decide to withdraw from negotiations and serve a strike notice.

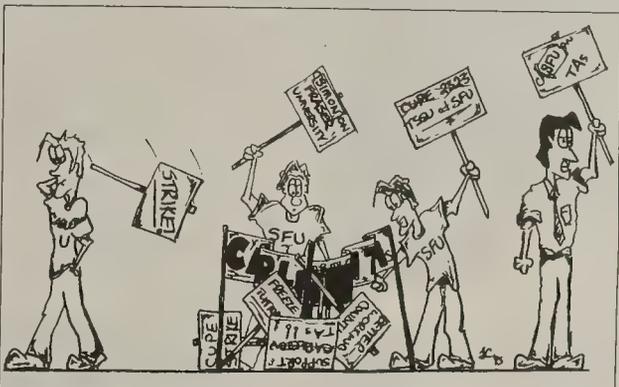

The union represents about 800 teaching and research assistants and sessional lecturers at SFU.

The sort of job action the membership could take includes an information picket, withholding grades from classes, or working to rule, which means doing only the most basic jobs required of them.

"It could mean an all-out strike, but that doesn't seem likely to happen at this point," says Reniers.

At the latest bargaining session between the union and the university on March 11, Reniers says the university refused to budge on key issues and recommended the appointment of a mediator from the B.C. Labor Relations Board.

Tom King, the chair of the university's negotiating committee, says the university will apply to the board for mediation

this week.

The union's three-year contract with the university ended in April 1993. Since then, negotiations for a new contract have stuck on job security issues, wages and compensation for increasing workloads.

"We've made a series of concessions... basically reducing our proposals," says Reniers. "The university presented lots of proposals and no details."

But King says it was the union who refused to revise their demands at the last session.

"They did not modify their position," says King. "(We're) a world apart regarding monetary issues."

In negotiations, the union dropped its demands for a wage increase to 10 per cent over two years from 20 per cent over two years.

The university's latest counter-proposal offered a 1.5-per-cent wage increase in the first year of the contract and zero per cent the next. King says the university is adamant that wages can't go up any further.

"On an hourly rate, we compare very well (to other universities)," he says. Doctoral students who are teaching staff in the union receive $24 per hour and master's students get $21 per hour.

He says because the union is demanding a five-per-cent pay increase each year and a seven-per-cent reduction in workload, that equals a 12-per-cent pay hike, which the university can't handle.

"We're being told to look at a zero-per-cent funding increase (from the province) for the next year," King says.

Reniers says the union is also demanding compensation for the degenerating working conditions and guarantees of job security for TAs who are having their workloads decreased or their jobs eliminated.

Some of their grievances are:

- Growing class sizes and workloads for TAs and sessional lecturers.
- The university has been phasing out many TA tutorial groups, replacing them with in-class lab work.
- In some departments, TAs are being offered only partial contracts, amounting to three-fifths of their previous workload and pay.
- The university has proposed limiting the rehiring of TAs to a determination of excellence in job performance without giving specific guidelines as to how this would be determined.

Reniers says working conditions have degenerated over the last few years and things aren't likely to improve.

"The university has indicated things will continue to go the same direction."

King, however, suggests the union's demands to redress these problems are not appropriate for short-term employees like TAs and sessional lecturers.

"We have not made any proposals about job security issues," he says. But he says the university periodically reviews TAs' and sessional lecturers' workloads to make sure they are not excessive.

Reniers says there has been little student reaction to the possibility of the strike so far.

"Basically, people have been uninformed. Up to now, we've been working on informing the membership."

The next week of bargaining with a mediator will be crucial to averting job action.

"We'll have to see how much pressure we put on administration to get a reasonable contract... I think we'll get one," Reniers says. "And if the university won't be reasonable about it, we might not have classes this summer." □

Cooke says framework not a threat to schools

by G. Bruce Rolston
The Varsity, University of Toronto

TORONTO (CUP) — Ontario's education minister says he never meant universities to feel threatened by the ministry's "zero tolerance" policy.

But David Cooke, minister of education and training, says he resents being left to defend the issue of ending harassment on campuses by himself.

Cooke is particularly critical of Ontario's student groups, who he says allowed the debate over the ministry's guidelines for university harassment policies to become an academic freedom issue, rather than an issue of accessibility for disadvantaged students.

"What has disappointed me is that those who have advocated this type of policy have been almost entirely silent," he says. "It's baffled me why students who have supported the move have been quite quiet."

Last October, the ministry released its "Framework Regarding Prevention of Harassment and Discrimination in Ontario Colleges and Universities." The document asks universities to submit their current policies to prevent harassment to the Ontario Council of University Affairs by March 1.

The policy framework also states that universities should adopt a policy of "zero tolerance" towards acts of harassment.

Karen Wheeler, a senior policy advisor in the ministry, says information on when and which universities submitted their revised policies has not yet been released.

Wheeler says the council is going through preliminary analysis of all the information on harassment policies they've received from universities thus far.

If implemented by a university, the policy framework would forbid speech and conduct which harasses or discriminates against a group or individual, or creates a "negative environment" on campus.

People or groups would be protected on grounds that include race, ethnic origin, citizenship, sexual orientation, disability, family status and receipt of public assistance.

The policy framework would apply to all academic and non-academic staff, students, committee members and visitors. Penalties would range from misconduct a verbal apology to dismissal or expulsion.

Professors at some universities, including Trent and Carleton, condemned the framework as imposing on freedom of speech on university campuses.

Carleton President Robin Farquhar rejected the provincial government policy Feb. 8, saying there "is a fear that the government is somehow going to require universities to comply with regulations that will deprive us of our academic freedom and... I have no intention of doing such a thing."

But Cooke says he never had any intention of forcing universities to comply with its guidelines. Every university had to come up with its own form of self-regulation, he says.

"I don't think that people have fully understood that this does not interfere with academic freedom," he says.

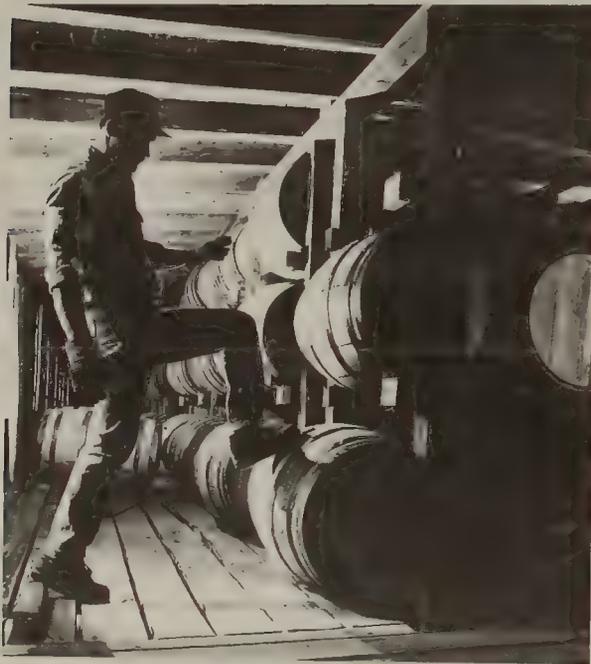

Ministry officials say they will not interfere in university harassment policies.

Cooke is critical of groups like the Canadian Federation of Students for not effectively supporting the idea behind "zero tolerance."

But Jason Hunt, chair of the Canadian Federation of Students' Ontario wing, says his group is strongly in favor of the ministry's position.

"First of all, the minister is wrong. We're very much in favor of the direction the minister has taken," he says. "There is a need for students to be free from harassment or discrimination on campus."

With files from Karolina Srupek, Charlantan Staff

If you'd like a booklet about Jack Daniel's Whiskey, write us here in Lynchburg, Tennessee 37352, U.S.A.

KICK A BARREL of Jack Daniel's the wrong way and no one will ever see the rewards.

If it rolls to a stop with the bung down, it'll leak whiskey by the gallon. But our barrelman knows how many turns and partial turns each barrel will make as he fills up a rick. So he'll turn the bung to just the right position before he kicks a barrel. And it'll stop with the bung straight up. After a sip of our Tennessee Whiskey, you'll be glad we didn't spill a drop.

JACK DANIEL'S TENNESSEE WHISKEY

U Vic committee says hike fees

by Shawn Hall
The Mailist, University of Victoria

VICTORIA (CUP) — Students at the University of Victoria will probably have to pay almost $200 more in tuition and other fees next year.

A unanimous recommendation March 7 from a board of governors committee would raise tuition by 9.65 per cent and athletic and recreation fees by $2 per semester next year.

The board of governors will vote March 21 on the committee's recommendation to raise fees.

"We're looking at 10 per cent annually until they (the government) take time to restructure the way universities get money or the way they spend it," says Beth Hardy, one of two student representatives on the board of governors and member of the provincial executive for the Canadian Federation of Students. Hardy was not on the committee.

"The impact is that student fees are constantly going up while our student loans remain the same," says Hardy. "The amount we're talking about is a month's worth of food for a student."

"The board showed no recognition of the injustice of asking students to pay the difference to balance their budget."

The B.C. NDP government is only adjusting grants to universities for the increased number of full-time students, but is not increasing grants for inflation.

"As long as this (NDP) administration's been here, the budget for education institutions has been at a zero-per cent increase," says Alan Strickland, communications manager with the provincial Ministry of Skills, Labor and Training.

Federal transfer payments for post-secondary education in B.C. have been frozen since 1989. The result has been fewer dollars provided by the province to universities, who have been forced to cut programs and raise fees.

Hardy says the government is only interested in short-term solutions, like job-training programs run through colleges.

"It's very clear to me that the job-training programs are not giving people the skills they need to get jobs," she says.

Government-appointed U Vic board member David Philip agrees. "Dan Miller, (minister of labor, skills and training), doesn't appear to think universities are as high a priority as colleges," he says.

Philip says the university is in a tough spot, caught between reduced government funding and increasing costs.

"We are actually going backwards," he said, adding if U Vic had enough money, it wouldn't cut programs. But it doesn't.

"This is unfortunately a trend," Philip says. "In the short haul you guys (students) are the meat in the sandwich. I'm sympathetic."

A ACCEPTABLE ALTERNATIVE MINI STORAGE
Hume Trading Company Limited
MINI STORAGE SPACE

Going home for the summer? Need safe, clean, secure storage for your desk, furniture and personal items? From $20.00 per month. 4863 Bank St. Call 822-7666. Lowest rates in the region since 1963.

INTERNATIONAL AFFAIRS

Raising voices and awareness

Women speak out "in the name of love"

by Josée Bellemare
Charlatan Staff

"In the name of love, stop violence against women," Margot Franssen told a gathering of about 350 women at the National Library on International Women's Day March 8. She received a standing ovation.

The conference, to celebrate women around the world, focused on the problem of violence against women.

It was sponsored by the federal department Status of Women Canada, the Canadian International Development Agency and the Body Shop.

Franssen, the president of the Body Shop Canada, emphasized our need "to recognize and understand that women's rights are important to everybody."

"We are all very concerned about the issues of women, and violence against women," said Christine Stewart, Canada's secretary of state for Latin America and Africa. "There are three billion women around the world who do not know (this day is taking place). (Violence against women is) far more widespread than women realize."

The symbol of the event was a daisy which, Franssen said, represents strength, fortitude and love.

Half of the petals are plucked to represent the 51 per cent of Canadian women reported to have suffered from violence at least once since they were 16, according to a report released by Statistics Canada in November 1993.

Sheila Finestone, secretary of state for the status of women, introduced "The Community Kit," which provides information and ideas on how targeted communities across Canada can take action against violence against women.

"Many of these communities have not had access in the past to a resource of this type and that was one criterion for the project," said Finestone in a press release. "These diverse communities were also carefully selected to ensure regional representation and to put emphasis on reaching rural, isolated and northern women, immigrant and visible minority women, women with disabilities, and women living in poverty."

Franssen said Body Shop stores across Canada provide "a harassment-free place," with staff meetings to watch videos about stopping violence against women. They also hold public forums with their campaign partners.

"We wanted to provide information for our customers to empower women to take control over our lives and achieve zero tolerance for violence against women," she said. "We have the commitment to make it happen. We will not be silenced."

Nicaraguan women struggle for rights

by Brandie Weikle
Charlatan Staff

Iracema Calero grew up in Nicaragua where she knew guerilla women who fought in the 1979 revolution.

She was raised in a family that helped hide the brave, young women who were involved in overthrowing the oppressive military government.

As part of International Women's Week, Calero, who is now living in Ottawa, told her story to a group of intent listeners at Carleton's Women's Centre on March 7.

The women Calero spoke of were involved with the Sandinistas, who fought and overthrew the dictator Anastacio Somoza and his military regime.

She said women saw Somoza's government as a violent and repressive leadership that provided no relief for their impoverished families.

They wanted access to education and health care.

"For women, (the revolution) represented freedom and change for the future, for woman-kind," said Calero.

Prior to the revolution, women would be denied a divorce if their husband did not grant it. There were also few laws to prevent violence against women.

"Before the war, a man could hit a woman to death," said Calero.

Now, Nicaraguan women can get a divorce in six months and violence against women is recognized as a crime.

Calero told the stories of young women like 17-year-old Gladys Baés, who she said was the first woman to stand up against the military regime. Baés went into the mountains and lead 60 other women on a 300-kilometre walk to the capital of Managua. By the time the group reached its destination, she was leading 200 women.

Baés was also involved in the first guerrilla attack on the government. She was one of only three survivors.

Later, while jailed and tortured, Baés was hung from her fingers for hours until she became mentally ill. She spent two years in a psychiatric hospital.

Another woman, Gladys Tijerino, came from a rich family, which she left to join the guerrillas. She led a movement at the university she attended.

She was jailed and raped by members of the Somoza military. She then became pregnant and was given a forced and violent abortion.

But women like Tijerino and Baés who fought did make a difference for other women in their country after the Sandinistas triumphed.

After the revolution, a women's group that lobbied for women's rights was able to change the laws concerning divorce and violence against women.

Diverse views about International Women's Week

What is the meaning and importance of an international women's week?

by Angie Gallop
Charlatan Staff

Debate surrounds the whole concept of how to define International Women's Week, held this year March 7-11, and whether or not it should even exist. The Charlatan asked women the following question:

What does International Women's Week mean to you?

"I feel International Women's Week is an important way to recognize the role women play in today's society. However, much of the attention has been focused on past negative attitudes, which are, in many instances, outdated. It would be nice to draw attention to the positive achievements of today as well."

Rumela Kabir
Engineering III

"I liked the fact that women from all different backgrounds got together on the same issues. The importance of unity among women was emphasized."

Natasha Parriag
Economics III

"It's very important during this week and every week of the year to remember the importance of women in all societies. Their contributions and knowledge are essential for human survival."

Megan Dodds
Geography/Anthropology III

"I still believe that International Women's Week has a long way to go. There still are women who have been left out of the whole week. Many women don't want to be used as tokens for a concept that seems predominantly white. The image of what an international woman is needs to be revamped to be more inclusive."

Janice Anderson
English II

It's a time for women to get together, discuss their differences and perspectives and celebrate in their diversity. It's a time for women and men to educate themselves about women's real history and current roles in society. It's a time to set strategies to solving problems that affect women, children and men. But this work, discussion and celebration should go on every month week and day — so that an International Women's Week is not set aside as a special occasion. Everyday would be a woman's day."

Reneé Twaddle
Philosophy/Religion III
Women's Centre Co-ordinator

Photos by Bill Cooper

Correction

In the March 10 feature, "China in Contrast," China's gross national product was cited as growing 12 per cent over the last four years. It has actually grown by 12 per cent every year for the last four years.

The editors of International Affairs would like to thank all those who contributed to the section this year. While some pieces were not used due to space limitations, all the volunteer effort poured into this section was greatly appreciated. International Affairs will be running once every month starting next autumn. Catch ya then!

Portraits Now

Bayshore The Official

Graduation Photographer for
Carleton University

Student Association, Inc. 1993/94

Why
PORTRAITS NOW?

- No Sitting Fee on Campus!
- Previews Back Next Day!
- Choice of Backgrounds!
- Satisfaction Guaranteed!

ATTENTION 1993/94 GRADUATES

Portraits Now - Bayshore has been chosen by CUSA Inc. as the Official Photographer for Carleton University 1993/1994 Graduates. DON'T MISS OUT! Make your appointment to get your Graduation Portraits from Portraits Now - Bayshore by calling 596-1501 or visit our studio across from Porter Hall.

2nd Semester Session now until
March 24, 1994 across from Porter Hall

Portraits Now Bayshore 596-1501
100 Bayshore Dr., Nepean Ont., K2B 8C1

DRIVERS

TAKE OR OFFER
A RIDE!

PASSENGERS

MONTREAL $10*

QUEBEC $29

TORONTO $24

SHERBROOKE $25

VANCOUVER, FLORIDA & OTHERS...

- *PRICES PER PASSENGER
- $6 FOR MEMBERSHIP
- 15 OFFICES
- I.D. REQUIRED

ALLO STOP

238 DALHOUSIE
562-8248

TORONTO 531-7668 — MONTREAL 985-3032

Meadowlands Family Health Centre

Hog's Back Plaza
888 Meadowlands Drive East
corner of Prince of Wales Dr. and Meadowlands Dr.
(behind McDonald's)

Ottawa, Ontario K2C3R2

228-2882

Family Medicine Pediatrics
Adolescent Medicine Minor Surgery
Obstetrics and Maternity Care Counselling Services

Nous Parlons Français

Open 7 days a week

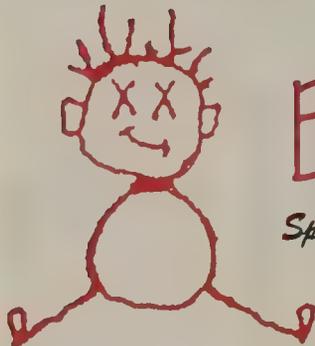

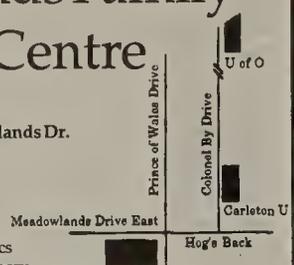

With or without appointment

Weekdays

8AM to 8PM

Weekends / Holidays

10AM to 6PM

JOE
BLOZE

Sports BAR & GRILL

WE'RE BACK AND

HOTTER

THAN EVER

NTN POOL TABLES, AIR HOCKEY, MINIATURE GOLF
BIGGEST DANCE FLOOR IN THE MARKET

SUDS IT UP WEDNESDAY FOR $1.50
You won't find Itty-Bitty Draft or Juicy-Juicy Shooters here!
A $1.50 gets you a whole lot more!

CHECK IT OUT

THURSDAY - SATURDAY $2.50
$2.00 SUNDAYS

409 DALHOUSIE BETWEEN RIDEAU & BESSERER

Now we're screwing ourselves

I could have cried on Thursday night. Some others looked like they were going to. In the silence of Porter Hall, where a thousand angry students should have been demanding justice at the top of their lungs, a few dedicated members of CUPE Local 2323 accepted a frustrating defeat.

The union local of teaching and research assistants magically averted a strike by voting 455-373 in favor of accepting the university's final offer on March 10, against the recommendation of the local's executive.

The so-called "deal" the local members accepted: guaranteed mid-term meetings between them and their supervisors to discuss work loads, meetings for them to have a say in which course they're assigned to and five extra hours of paid work a year for graduate assistants. Scraps.

The five extra hours of pay will go towards a training session which was in place already but will now be mandatory. The meetings will help ensure teaching assistants get to voice their concerns about being overworked and have some sort of say in who they work with. These "benefits" are so basic, the local shouldn't have had to ask for them in the first place.

One of the many sacrifices the local had to make in negotiations was its demand for a tuition freeze for its members. The demand was made mainly so that the university couldn't jack up tuition like it did after the last collective agreement. A 78-per-cent increase in post-secondary tuition fees did away with any gain made from a 3-per-cent wage increase for 1992-93.

And so, with this agreement, members of CUPE Local 2323 took the scraps thrown to them from the dining table over in administration. Just as many students take their scraps, dress up for job interviews for careers in window washing, treplant their way through a university degree and convince themselves they're lucky.

Watching all this makes you wonder — why do we voluntarily throw ourselves down and make like doornats?

Because students are powerless. And the only ones responsible for that is ourselves. Think of the thousands of students who are scaring the merde out of Paris, violently protesting in the streets against a plan to make young people work for less than minimum wage. Their problems are the same as many of ours. They are scared about the future. Their chances of getting a decent job are a joke. They are expendable because they are young. They are tired of being shit on. The only difference is that we deny ourselves the power by not showing it en masse.

Why? Because many students can't see beyond themselves. And who can really blame them? Who wants to strike when you're worried about a paycheck, when you don't have the time because you're overworked, when you're afraid that if your prof sees you in the picket line you can't have a good job reference? By worrying only about right here, right now, we cannot see that we are screwing ourselves over for tomorrow and every day after.

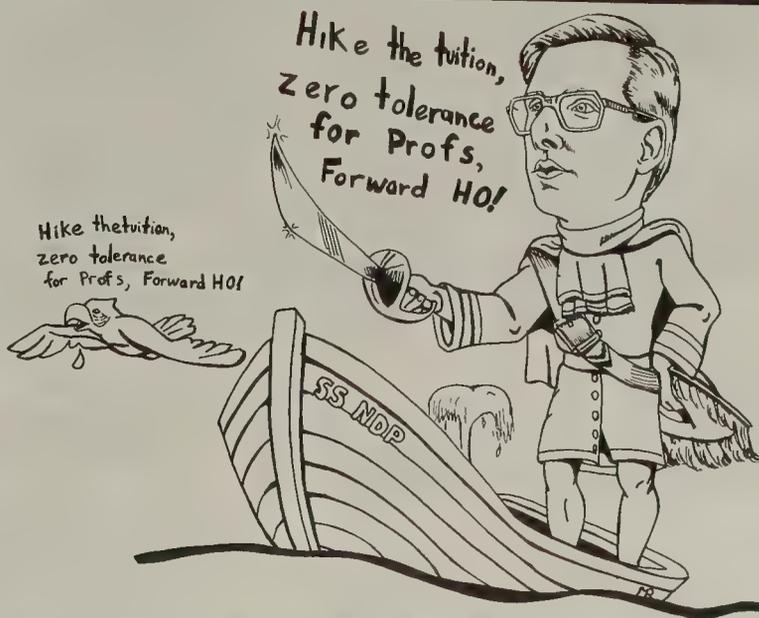

Why? Because some students are ignorant. And you really can blame them for that. It's easy to criticize or laugh at people who are questioning the status quo and fighting for change. It's much harder to do it yourself. Shame on the few of you who drove through a crowd of your fellow students at the local's information picket. Shame on those of you who tried to belittle some very sincere efforts to make changes for everyone's benefit. Shame on those of you who don't care because it doesn't affect you. You're the reason we have to slowly give what we have away and then go begging for more. You're the reason things stay the way they are.

Why? Because it takes a whole lot of courage and sweat and stamina and tears to fight all of this and still face some people's disdain. And that's why many CUPE 2323 members deserve the hugest amount of respect for what they did. This time, their efforts were not enough.

And so we give in. A little here. A little there. No time to wonder. There are other things to worry about. It could be worse.

Yeah, but it could be better.

MG

OPINION

Justice stalled for B.C. inmate

by Tim Ashby

Tim Ashby is a third-year criminology student at Carleton.

Patrick Kelly is a student working on his master's degree in kinesiology. He is finishing his thesis on how to cure nicotine addiction.

Not such an unusual pastime, except Kelly does his research in the library at William Head Institution, a federal penitentiary in Victoria, B.C. where he has spent the last six years of his life serving a life sentence with no hope of parole for 25 years.

But Kelly is innocent. He was wrongfully convicted of first degree murder in a trial that relied heavily on eye witness testimony only recently exposed as questionable.

Kelly threw his wife from the balcony of their 17th-storey Toronto condominium in 1982. At least, that's what the cops told him. That's what the headlines kept screaming. And that's what alleged eyewitness Dawn Taber told the judge in her testimony at Kelly's 1984 trial. She was a friend of the family and was at the home around the time of the death.

On Dec. 17, 1993, Dawn Taber recanted her testimony fingering Kelly as having killed his wife. Now she says she left before seeing how Kelly's wife died. Even more startling is her accusation that the original testimony was coerced because the Metropolitan Toronto Police investigators threatened her with charges of accessory to murder unless she implicated Kelly on the stand. Without this testimony, the case against Kelly was mostly circumstantial evidence.

Having exhausted all chances to appeal the conviction, Kelly's legal counsel, Toronto lawyer Clayton Ruby, has just now played out their final option. Section 690 of the Criminal Code allows for an application for mercy to be made to the federal Justice Minister Allan Rock, who may either order a new trial or refer the case to an appeals court for review. This same section was used to free Donald Marshall and David Millgaard, who both served lengthy sentences after questionable evidence was used at their trials.

Kelly has already been fighting for 10 years. Ten years of fighting the correctional service for a change of identity for his own protection, of begging for a transfer out of the Kingston penitentiary, where as a former narcotics police officer he was considered the lowest form of life. And 10 years of repeating to those who would listen that he was innocent.

Set aside the many applications and appeals Kelly has filed under the Privacy Act requesting access to what he contends are roughly 7,000 pages of interview transcripts and investigators' notes taken before the trial that should have been released by the Crown as part of the disclosure process.

Ignore the 17 rebuttals Kelly has collected from specialists denouncing the scientific evidence entered as testimony by Crown witnesses, rebuttals that strongly contradict the circumstantial evidence used to convict Kelly.

Focus instead on what hasn't happened. Following the release of Donald Marshall in 1983, a Royal Commission of Inquiry was directed to investigate the case. It reported in 1989. Its primary recommendation was for "the establishment of an independent review mechanism to facilitate the reinvestigation of alleged cases of wrongful conviction." To date, the response of the federal and provincial justice ministers has been to ignore the recommendation.

Rock stood in the House of Commons on Feb. 4 this year and stated that "in the fullness of time," an investigative brief on Kelly would be prepared for him to review. This seems a vague and frightening choice of words when one recalls the lengthy delays associated with the release of Millgaard.

But then, Rock is a busy man these days, hastily reforming the Young Offenders Act to double prison sentences for kids who kill. In fact, he'll be meeting with his provincial ministers on March 23 and 24 to discuss these reforms in person.

That is exactly why now is the time to remind him of Kelly, who sits in his cell and waits for the bureaucratic wheels to turn. It is time to ask Rock if he intends to ignore the recommendations of the Marshall Commission as his predecessor has done. Kelly deserves an investigative review of his case, by a group that is independent of the government and has full access to all case materials and transcripts.

Because, you see, Kelly has nearly finished his thesis. Never before has a federal inmate earned a master's degree while incarcerated. The examination of his wrongful conviction should not be delayed. To ask an innocent man to accept his degree behind bars is an injustice we must not ignore.

LETTERS

the CHARLATAN

CARLETON'S INDEPENDENT STUDENT NEWSPAPER

March 17, 1994

VOLUME 23 NUMBER 26

Editor-in-Chief Mo Gannon
 Production Manager Kevin McKay
 Business Manager Jill Perry

NEWS

Editor: Mario Carlucci
 Brent Dowdall
 Contributors: Derek DeCloeet, Christine Gough, David Hodges, Arn Keeling, Ryan Nakashima, Karolina Srutek, Ryan Ward, Brandie Weikle, Tanya Workman
 Volunteer Co-ordinator: Johanna Ciszewski

NATIONAL AFFAIRS

Editor: Arn Keeling
 Contributors: Karolina Srutek, Brandie Weikle
 International Affairs Editors: Angie Gallop, Ryan Nakashima, Josée Bellemare, Brandie Weikle

FEATURES

Editor: Andrea Smith
 Contributor: Michael Mainville

SPORTS

Editor: Steven Vesely
 Contributors: Derek DeCloeet, Mo Gannon, Bill Labonte

ARTS

Editor: Blayne Haggart
 Contributors: Suzanne Andrew, Christopher Bell, Johanna Ciszewski, Roy Fu, Neil Herland, Arn Keeling, Kaleem Khan, Mike Peters, Andrea Smith, Jason Unrau, Sid Younis

OP/ED

Editor: Sheila Keenan
 Contributors: Tim Ashby, Mo Gannon

VISUALS

Photo Editor: Tim O'Connor
 Photo Assistant: Andre Bellefeuille, Bill Cooper
 Contributors: Mark Lamb, Chris Nuttall-Smith, Dean Tomlinson, Sid Younis

Graphics Co-ordinators: David Hodges, Mike Rappaport
 Graphics Assistant: Joel Kenneth Grant, Sarah Abernethy, Frank Campbell, Sid Younis

Cover: Tim O'Connor

The Charlatan's photos are produced using the Carleton University Students' Association Photo Service

PRODUCTION

Production Assistant: Kim Alf, Clady's Bichat
 Contributors: Dave Sali, Richard G.D. Scott, Audrey Simtob, Ryan Ward

CIRCULATION 14,000

Circulation: Dave Carpenter, Joellen Walshe

ADVERTISING 788-3580

Ad Manager: Karen Richardson

The Charlatan, Carleton University's weekly student newspaper, is an editorially and financially autonomous journal, published weekly during the fall and winter terms and monthly during the summer. Charlatan Publications Incorporated, Ottawa, Ontario, a non-profit corporation registered under the Canadian Corporations Act, is the publisher of The Charlatan. Editorial content is the sole responsibility of editorial staff members, but may not reflect the beliefs of its members. Contents are copyright © 1994. Nothing may be duplicated in any way without the prior written permission of the Editor-in-Chief. All Rights Reserved. ISSN 0315-1859. Subscriptions are available at a cost of $40 for individuals and $52 for institutions. Includes GST. National advertising for The Charlatan is handled through Canadian University Press Media Services (Campus Plus), 73 Richmond St. W., 4th Floor, Ontario, M5H 1Z4, phone: (416) 481-7283. The Board of Directors of Charlatan Publications Inc. is: Chairperson Ken Drever, Treasurer Mark Lafreniere, Secretary Yvonne Potter, Directors: Warren Kinsella, Anna Gibbons, Dave Hodges, Fouad Kanan, Adam Mann and Mo Gannon. The Charlatan Room 531 Unkles Centre Carleton University Ottawa, Ontario K1S 5S6 Telephone: (613) 788-6680 E-mail: charlatan@carleton.ca

One for sanity....

Editor:

Sanity prevailed last week when CUPE 2323 members voted to accept the university's final offer to TAs, RAs and student sessional lecturers.

Actually, it's not too surprising really, when you consider those who endorsed a strike vote. When you combine considerable glad-handing by union president Michel Roy, parroted avidly by a variety of other union hacks, all-too-anxious to tell us where we could pick up our picket signs, and a Charlatan editorial, ("Admin. screws us all in labor dispute," March 10, 1994) critical of the university's final offer to the union, you can't help but be suspicious.

However, perhaps the most compelling reason that resulted in accepting the deal can be articulated in a single thought, as said by one TA to the Ottawa Citizen.

"We're trying to rekindle some of that sixties feeling that not all of us are powerless."

Need I say more?

Dawn K. Walton
 Journalism IV
 CUPE Local 2323 Member

... zero for social responsibility

Editor:

It was a scene that astonished us. We wish the entire student body could have been with us in Porter Hall on March 10 for an historic afternoon of the democratic process.

It was on that dreary Thursday that some of Canada's best and brightest graduate students rejected an opportunity to redirect the priorities of Corporation Carleton. The teaching assistants and research assistants could have demanded respect as educators and researchers whose work serves the greater good of Canadian society. But they did not.

It was on that dreary Thursday that the majority of Carleton's TAs and RAs decided that this month's paycheque was more important than making a statement against educational elitism. They could have taken this entire campus on a crusade against tuition increases. They could have opposed this system which deems its most important prerequisite to be access to credit. But they did not.

It was on that dreary Thursday that the fine volunteer leadership of CUPE 2323 deserved applause and respect for months of hard work. Instead, they received rude heckling. Instead of expecting the union leadership to have all the answers, the entire membership of CUPE 2323 could have worked to become involved and informed. But they did not.

It was on that dreary Thursday that every Carleton student should have lost more than a few weeks of university. We should have lost our apathy. But we did not.

You should have been there. It was democracy in action. It was also a spectacular combination of short-sighted vision and lack of social responsibility. That dreary, dreary Thursday.

Celeste Wincapaw — MA Geography I
 Kim Winnicky — MA Geography II
 Simon Pinnegar — MA Geography I

More mindless movie debate

Editor:

Re: "Mindless movie," The Charlatan, March 10, 1994.

I realize that this rebuttal of the previous rebuttal is giving the movie Ace Ventura more academic consideration than necessary, but it is not the movie that I really wish to dish.

It is very unfortunate that the Ace Ventura fan who wrote the rebuttal to the review has demonstrated such poor reading comprehension ability.

Maybe she should take a break from watching all those slapstick films and examine the more deprecatory humor involved in writing a critical review. Maybe she should think about what opinions were actually being communicated in the review.

I don't believe that the subtlety of slapstick is lost on the author of the review. He does not suggest anywhere in the review that one should not see the film — he liked it himself.

He obviously has seen In Living Color, heard of Jim Carrey and his "hilarious antics" and should be free to comment about whether or not Carrey should find himself a new comedy vehicle. He does not suggest that "gunfire and blood splattered on the screen" is the only form of enlightened entertainment.

My advice is... read and think about what was the point of the review and what opinions were really expressed before jumping to conclusions. It's all there in black and white.

Janice Bishop
 Geology II

Naughty Bits all over Ottawa

Editor:

Regarding the review of What Is This Thing Called Sex? — Cartoons by Women (The Charlatan, March 3, 1994).

Karin Jordan states, "Don't expect to find works by Gregory or Doucet in Ottawa." (That is, the comic books Naughty Bits by Roberta Gregory and Dirty Plotte by Julie Doucet.)

I don't know if Jordan ever ventured past Bank Street, but there is an excellent comic shop specializing in so-called alternative comics called Crosstown Traffic in Westboro. I just bought a couple of Gregory's comics there a couple of weeks ago.

It would have been a good idea if you could have taken the time to research your topic, even with such a light book review. Making such a gross generalization on something you are not really sure of made the article seem amateurish. Although, that pretty much is the norm for your arts department.

Craig Moser
 Arts, Part-Time

Oxymorons at CUSA

Editor:

Re: "CUSA throws intelligence out with election," The Charlatan, March 10, 1994.

I wish to express my concern with the headline of that article. The headline could have given your readers the impression that CUSA had intelligence. I can assure you and your readers that this has, unfortunately, not been the case, at least not this year.

John Edwards
 CUSA Arts/Social Science Councillor
 Poli Sci/Law III

STUDENT FARES within CANADA

TO:	RETURN from
Vancouver	$359
Victoria	$469
Calgary	$349
Saskatoon	$329
Winnipeg	$269
Toronto	$139
Montreal	$139
St. John(NB)	$239
Fredericton	$229
Halifax	$239
Charlottetown	$289
St. John's(NF)	$269

For Full-Time Students With ISIC. Some Restrictions Apply. See Us For Details.

DREAMING?

TRAVEL CUTS OTTAWA 613 238 5493
 1st Level University
 Carleton University
 Ottawa, Ontario K1S 5S6

TRAVEL CUTS OTTAWA 613-238-8222
 One Step out Street
 Suite 203
 Ottawa, Ontario K1H 617

Other Cities Available

TRAVEL CUTS

THE TRAVEL COMPANY OF THE CANADIAN FEDERATION OF STUDENTS

The Charlatan in Co-operation with these local merchants

PRESENTS

9 FABULOUS VACATION GETAWAYS

YOU PICK YOUR DESTINATION

ATLANTIC BEACH

Sheraton Atlantic Beach Resort
4 Days / 3 Nights

LAKE PLACID

Lake Placid Hilton
3 Days / 2 Nights

HILTON HEAD ISLAND

Holiday Inn
4 Days / 3 Nights

Atlantis Beauty Spa

"The place for honouring the self"

Acrylic Nails
by Tracey
10% off 1st set

• Esthetics • Ear & Nose Piercing • Waxing • Tanning
• Hair Extensions & Braiding • Gift Certificates For All Services
• HAIR STYLING

730-8500

1183 Bank St. (at Grove Ave.) Ample Free Parking

Bring in this ad &
receive 10% off
any service
over $25

Dance Floor
D.J. Every Night

3 Big Screens
4 TVs & Satellite

MONDAYS

Men's Nite

GREAT SPECIALS

Trip for 2 Giveaway!!

FREE POOL Noon 'till nine

THURSDAYS

Ladies' Nite

GREAT SPECIALS

Trip for 2 Giveaway!!

FREE POOL Noon 'till ten

96 George St. 562-0433

Today, I'm gonna tell her I love her a dozen times

567-2600

Glebe

831 Bank St.
5th Ave. Court

729-7878

Hampton Park Plaza
Carling and Kirkwood

Bring in this coupon and receive a 10% discount

*Wet & Wild
Spas*

Hot Tubbing • Tanning • Massage Therapy

Hot Tubbing Special

1 Hr. Session - $20.00 (with this coupon)

Valid until March 24, 1994

417 Rideau Street
Ottawa, Ontario

(613) 789-4114

Call For Reservations

GRAND CENTRAL

Tonight

Spirit of the West

Thursday, March 17

141 George St. 241-2727

FREE SUNSHINE

ESCAPE THE COLD

A TOUCH OF SUN

Tanning Studios

2 Free Sessions

(an $18.00 value) with the purchase of 2 suntan sessions at regular prices. 1 per customer. Offer expires March 20, 1994.

A TOUCH OF SUN
729-0555
888 Meadowlands Dr.

A TOUCH OF SUN
236-0222
300 Slater St.

CALL US. IT'S A WARM IDEA.

Oliver's

Thursday Nights

Party Nights

Pitcher Specials

Promo-Prize

Giveaways Weekly

Thursday March 17

St. Patrick's Day Party

Ravens 'R' Us

PITCHER SPECIALS

Saturday March 26

Bourbon Tabernaacle Choir

Western & Aviation
Coats and Jackets.

Complete Indian Line Available

Western & Motorcycle
Boots. Boot Repair.

244 Elgin Street • Ottawa • K2P 1L9 • (613) 238-BOOT (2668)

Bring in this ad and receive a 10% discount on any purchase.

MYERS

Take a Test Drive at MYERS and be eligible to WIN one of two Vacation Packages!

SINCE 1943

Bring in This Ad and Enter to WIN!

CHECK OUT
GM'S
$750.00
CASH BACK
GRAD
PROGRAM!

Ask Mike or any one of our
Sales Consultants about our
Low Monthly Lease Payments
on CAVALIERS or GEOs!

Mike Smith
Class of 91
Sales Consultant

Draw to take place March 19/94

225-1260

MYERS CHEV • OLDS • CADILLAC 1200 Baseline at Merivale

EACH BUSINESS ON THIS PAGE WILL BE GIVING AWAY A FREE TRIP.

Trip packages include deluxe accommodations for two adults, complimentary first morning breakfast and daily green fees for two adults when in season. Children occupying the same room as their parents stay free. Transportation is not included. All trips are fully transferable but must be used on or before February 28, 1995. To be eligible fill out an entry ballot at one of the participating merchants on or before Tuesday March 22, 1994. The winning entries will have their names published in the Thursday March 24, 1994 edition of The Charlatan. Staff members and contributors to The Charlatan for the 1993/1994 publishing year are not eligible for this promotion.

The Men's Movement?

by Michael Mainville

Mr. "I'm so totally secure in my masculinity" Charlatan Staff

There's a new breed of men out there. Real men. Men with drums. Men with balls.

A new movement has emerged in the '90s, devoted to men and the search for an identity. The men's movement.

Across North America, business men mingle with construction workers on weekend retreats or at weekly meetings where they search for what they believe they have lost — the so-called "Wild Man."

"Wild Man" is a term coined by poet Robert Bly, and refers to a man who is the embodiment of emotional strength and spontaneity. Bly is the unofficial spiritual leader of the movement, and his book Iron John is its bible.

"The Wild Man," writes Bly in Iron John, "encourages a trust of the lower half of our body, our genitals, our legs and ankles, our inadequacies, the "soles" of our feet, the animal ancestors, the earth itself . . ."

Bly titled his book, released in 1990, after a fairy tale written by the Grimm brothers around 1820. "Iron John" is the story of a young prince who is aided by a Wild Man or Hairy Man in his quest to win a princess as his bride.

"Every modern male has, lying at the bottom of his psyche, a large primitive being covered with hair down to his feet. Making contact with this Wild Man is the step the eighties or nineties male has yet to make," writes Bly in Iron John.

As a result, men across the United States and Canada are taking off their three-piece suits, picking up their hand drums, and following group leaders into the forest in hopes of discovering the Wild Man that hides within.

The movement was brought to public attention with the 1990 PBS documentary on Bly called "A Gathering of Men." Since then most major newspapers and magazines have covered the issue. Maclean's devoted an issue to the cause, The Globe and Mail has devoted more than one "Fifth Column" to the men's movement, and in January the Ottawa Citizen ran "The Burden of Being Male," a story from the Montreal Gazette written by David Johnston.

Media attention like this has led to the publication of numerous books and newsletters about the men's movement. In Ottawa Fathercraft Publishing publishes a newsletter, Father!, and is currently working on books about fathering.

Men from this organization were also among the organizers and supporters of International Men's Day, which was held Feb. 12 at the Dow's Lake Pavilion. About seven or eight men turned up with their kids for the event and handed out balloons.

Glen Cheriton, an editor at Fathercraft Publishing and an organizer of International Men's Day, says it is "a day to recognize the positive aspects of being a man and what men have contributed to Ottawa and community, and perhaps also a day to make men feel a little better about being a man."

Cheriton says he attended a "men's conference" in Kansas city two years ago and saw an announcement for International Men's Day. When he returned to Ottawa he wrote to Mayor Jacquelin Holzman and asked that she proclaim the same in Ottawa. She did.

Cheriton says making men feel better about themselves is what the movement is all about. He says new types of therapy are necessary to accomplish this because "normal therapy just doesn't work for men."

But why do men need therapy? Cheriton says it's because "being a man is not viewed as being OK these days. Sometimes men feel that way . . . and if there's other men to tell them: 'You're doing OK as a father, OK as a man.' That's what's needed." He says moral and emotional support is at the core of the men's movement.

"At the basic level it's simply men getting together with other men. . . . When men have problems they should have some place to go and talk, they should have a friend, a buddy, an organization," says Cheriton. He added that men need to go "out into the country, underneath the trees, (where) they can beat drums, take off their shirts and tell stories," on what he calls a "Wild Man Weekend."

Psychiatrist Barry Dollin, who has formed a therapy group for men only, says getting men alone together is the solution to the problems men have communicating. He says men have been conditioned to hide their feelings and not be honest with themselves or other men.

Dollin says he saw the need for a group consisting solely of men after privately running numerous mixed therapy groups in the Ottawa area.

"I realized in my mixed groups, it was always the woman who took certain roles (emotional or vulnerable). A man would be telling a horribly sad story and laughing about it," says Dollin. Dollin says he thinks this is unhealthy because men aren't being honest about their feelings and being honest with each other can "bring about emotional and spiritual well-being."

He says this realization led him to form the men's therapy group, where they would have "an opportunity to explore the issues that affect men."

Dollin says men need to confront issues like male identity, sexuality, aggression, competition, stress, depression and the stereotypical roles of men in society. He says "regular" forms of therapy don't work for many men, and that a men's group is the only practical option.

"When you put men in this type of environment, the usual social structures of ordinary social intercourse are gone," he says.

And when these structures are gone, Dollin says, men are given the opportunity to be open and honest with each other.

Dollin's group consists of a half-dozen men who meet weekly in Res Commons. "A Group For Men" is offered jointly by Health Services and Counselling and Student Life Services.

Aggression and stress were the group's focus issues when I attended one of Dollin's weekly meetings:

Seven men sit in a half-circle staring at the man addressing them with an assortment of drums at his feet. They look excited. The leader is explaining how they can relieve stress and take out aggression by drumming. The drums, he says, will also help them to bond with each other as they share in a spiritual experience.

He goes on to explain the "Gun Godo PaTa," a West-African method of drumming, an ancient tradition where the men drum to bond.

After the explanation he goes from man to man, handing out the drums, from the small hand-held "djembe" to a large steel bass drum. One man looks disappointed because he only gets a cow-bell, but the men with the bigger drums look pretty happy.

The group leader starts beating on his drum with bare hands. A slow rhythm quickens as he sways back and forth. The group joins in, slowly at first, but then with enthusiasm. Soon, the room resounds with the sound of a dozen hands beating on stretched leather.

It's not music, but it sure is loud.

VOTERS LIST FOR CHARLATAN ELECTION 1994/95

It's that time of year again — time to pass on the torch to a fresh bunch of editors. Anyone can run. Anyone who has 4 credits in the masthead this year can vote for editor-in-chief, op/ed editor and board of directors staff reps. Anyone with 4 credits who has contributed once to a section can vote for that editor.

Voting for the editor-in-chief will take place Monday, March 21 and Tuesday, March 22 in Ombuds Services, Room 511 Unicentre, between 9 a.m. and 4:30 p.m. (closed 12-1 p.m.). Voting for the section editors and board reps will take place Monday, March 28 and Tuesday, March 29, same place, same times.

Candidates for editor-in-chief will be speaking at the staff meeting on Thursday, March 17 at 5:30 p.m. Candidates for section editors will do the same on Thursday, March 24, at 5:30 p.m. If you have any questions about your eligibility to vote, or want to run for a position, don't hesitate to call Mo Gannon at 788-6680.

AS OF MARCH 10, 1994	Grant, Joel Kenneth Haggart, Blayne Haley, Susie Herland, Neil Hodges, David Jafri, Ali James, Colin Jordan, Karin Keeling, Arn Keenan, Sheila Khan, Kaleem Labonte, Bill Lamb, Mark Levine, Sara-Lynne Mahoney, Jill Mainville, Michael Mealiffe, Derrick McCroste, James McKay, Kevin McKenzie, Jodi McLeod, Ian Nakashima, Ryan Nuttall-Smith, Chris O'Connor, Tim Oza, Prema Pangalos, Anthony Pateron, Pamela Perry, Jill Peters, Mike Poots, Trina Power, Gavin Pryor, Tim Rappaport, Mike Restivo, Kevin Richards, Sarah Richardson, Karen Scallen, Shawn Scott, Richard G.D. Shigetomi, Cindy Shurrie, Matt Silcoff, Sean Simtob, Audrey Skinner, Matt	Smith, Andrea Srutek, Karolina Steinbachs, John Tattersall, Jane Tharayil, Jay Tomlinson, Dean Vesely, Steven Ward, Ryan Watt, Caron Weikle, Brandie Wiebe, Andrea Willbond, Rob Wood, Clayton Workman, Tanya Zelinsky, Tonya	Peters, Mike Silcoff, Sean Skinner, Matt Smith, Andrea Srutek, Karolina Steinbachs, John Tattersall, Jane Vesely, Steven Ward, Ryan Watt, Caron Weikle, Brandie Wiebe, Andrea Wood, Clayton Workman, Tanya Zelinsky, Tonya	Pangalos, Anthony Pryor, Tim Scott, Richard G.D. Skinner, Matt Smith, Andrea Srutek, Karolina Steinbachs, John Vesely, Steven Ward, Ryan Watt, Caron Weikle, Brandie Wood, Clayton Workman, Tanya Zelinsky, Tonya	Ward, Ryan	Forieri, Susanna Gannon, Mo Garrison, Stephanie Haggart, Blayne Haley, Susie Herland, Neil Hodges, David Jafri, Ali Jordan, Karin Keeling, Arn Keenan, Sheila Khan, Kaleem Mahoney, Jill McKay, Kevin McLeod, Ian Nuttall-Smith, Chris O'Connor, Tim Oza, Prema Pangalos, Anthony Peters, Mike Power, Gavin Pryor, Tim Seddon, Adam Silcoff, Sean Smith, Andrea Srutek, Karolina Steinbachs, John Tattersall, Jane Vesely, Steven Ward, Ryan Watt, Caron Weikle, Brandie Wood, Clayton Workman, Tanya Zelinsky, Tonya	Dobrenski, Steve Dowdall, Brent Duncan, Todd Follett, Amanda Gallop, Angie Gannon, Mo Haggart, Blayne Keeling, Arn Keenan, Sheila Lamb, Mark McCroste, James Nakashima, Ryan Nuttall-Smith, Chris Scallen, Shawn Scott, Richard G.D. Smith, Andrea Steinbachs, John Tomlinson, Dean Vesely, Steven
EDITOR-IN-CHIEF,
OP/ED EDITOR,
BOARD OF DIRECTORS REPS
Aaron, Bram
Abernethy, Sarah
Aif, Kim
Andrew, Suzanne
Bartoff, David
Bellefeuille, Andre
Bellemare, José
Bernard, Joe
Bichal, Glady
Bock, Naomi
Bodnar, Alex
Brethour, Pat
Brzozowski, Anna
Bustos, Alex
Caffrey, Rori
Campbell, Frank
Capuani, Joanne
Carlucci, Mario
Carpenter, Dave
Ciszewski, Johanna
Comino, M.G.
Cooper, Bill
Currie, Lisa
Davies, Jennifer
DeCloet, Derek
Dobrenski, Steve
D'Orazio, Franco
Dowdall, Brent
Drever, Ken
Duncan, Todd
Edwards, Drew
Follett, Amanda
Forieri, Susanna
Fraser, Shannon
Gallop, Angie
Gannon, Mo
Garrison, Stephanie
NEWS
Bartoff, David
Bellemare, José
Bock, Naomi
Bustos, Alex
Carlucci, Mario
Dobrenski, Steve
D'Orazio, Franco
Dowdall, Brent
Edwards, Drew
Gallop, Angie
Gannon, Mo
Haggart, Blayne
Haley, Susie
Hodges, David
Jordan, Karin
Keeling, Arn
Keenan, Sheila
Mahoney, Jill
Mainville, Michael
McLeod, Ian
Nakashima, Ryan
Nuttall-Smith, Chris
O'Connor, Tim
Oza, Prema
Pangalos, Anthony
NATIONAL
Aaron, Bram
Bartoff, David
Bellemare, José
Bernard, Joe
Brethour, Pat
Bustos, Alex
Carlucci, Mario
DeCloet, Derek
Dobrenski, Steve
D'Orazio, Franco
Dowdall, Brent
Edwards, Drew
Gallop, Angie
Gannon, Mo
Haggart, Blayne
Haley, Susie
Hodges, David
Jordan, Karin
Keeling, Arn
Keenan, Sheila
Mahoney, Jill
Mainville, Michael
McLeod, Ian
Nakashima, Ryan
O'Connor, Tim
Oza, Prema
Pangalos, Anthony
FEATURES
Bellemare, José
Bock, Naomi
Caffrey, Rori
Carlucci, Mario
DeCloet, Derek
Dobrenski, Steve
D'Orazio, Franco
Dowdall, Brent
Gallop, Angie
Gannon, Mo
Garrison, Stephanie
Haggart, Blayne
Hodges, David
James, Colin
Jordan, Karin
Keeling, Arn
Keenan, Sheila
Mahoney, Jill
Mainville, Michael
McLeod, Ian
O'Connor, Tim
Power, Gavin
Pryor, Tim
Rappaport, Mike
Seddon, Adam
Silcoff, Sean
Smith, Andrea
Vesely, Steven
SPORTS
Aaron, Bram
Bellemare, José
Carlucci, Mario
DeCloet, Derek
Dowdall, Brent
Fraser, Shannon
Gannon, Mo
Haggart, Blayne
Keeling, Arn
Keenan, Sheila
Labonte, Bill
O'Connor, Tim
Restivo, Kevin
Richards, Sarah
Scott, Richard G.D.
Shurrie, Matt
Smith, Andrea
Tharayil, Jay
Vesely, Steven
Ward, Ryan
ARTS AND ENTERTAINMENT
Aaron, Bram
Andrew, Suzanne
Bartoff, David
Bellemare, José
Bernard, Joe
Bock, Naomi
Bustos, Alex
Caffrey, Rori
Capuani, Joanne
Carlucci, Mario
Carpenter, Dave
Ciszewski, Johanna
Comino, M.G.
DeCloet, Derek
D'Orazio, Franco
Dowdall, Brent
Edwards, Drew
ONE CONTRIBUTION
LEFT TO VOTE
Clements, Rob
Craft, Christina
Crosbie, Vanessa
Docking, David
Goodman, Sarah
Harp, Rick
Izzard, Suzanne
Janvier, Dean
Johnson, Doug
Kirincich, Stephanka
Kirkham, John
Klaus, Alex
Manchak, Renata
McLennan, Rob
Orel, Ron
Onions, Greg
Price, John
Reid, Chris
Richardson, Michael
Sane, Ean
Stansfield, James
PHOTO
Bellefeuille, Andre
Bodnar, Alex
Brethour, Pat
Brzozowski, Anna
Capuani, Joanne
Carlucci, Mario
Ciszewski, Johanna
Cooper, Bill
Currie, Lisa
Davies, Jennifer

The Un Classifieds
Realies In. SENSITIVE, VOCAL, NY, PICHI, FINE, SSS, please come to 531 Unicentre for responses.

FOR SALE/RENT
 Bachelor 1 bedroom available May 1 on bus route 118 Carleton. $439 or less. All inclusive. Call 829-7450.
 Beautiful 6 bedroom GLEBE home. Hardwood floors, sunroom, balcony, fireplace. Available May 1. Close to Carleton. Ideal for Carleton students. Call 567-9512.
 1 bedroom, Downs Lake area, summer sublet. Lease optional. $580. Available May 1. Laundry & parking available. Call Richard 728-1300.
 Rm for rent - $265 (heat incl) plus 2/3 - all Florence and Kent. 3 bdrm. Available immed. 236-2173.
 For sale: Panasonic Discman, virtually new, output jack for stereo hook-up, extended bass sound, great headphones. Asking $140.00. Call Gord 738-0463.

LOST, FOUND, STOLEN
 HELPI! I'm the Yankees hat that was abandoned from Oliver's before the Spring Break by that nasty low-life. Please rescue me by replying to box NY.
 Found - scarf in Southern Theatre A on Wed., March 2. To claim reply Box Scarf.
 Political Science 47,420 notebook found in the library. Pick up at the Charlatan, 531 Unicentre.

WANTED/JOBS
Summer Jobs in The Sun! - Marketing and painting positions now available for student painting company. Experience an asset, but not necessary. For information call Andrew or Bruce at 737-4039.

Looking for a running club at Carleton. Anyone interested in a mid-long distance club (10k - 1/2) please contact me! Keith Allen 247-9637.
FEMALE VOCALIST sought by guitarist/songwriter to rehearse and eventually record original songs. Influences might include Maria

Nationals a competitive swim

Erica Kotler leads team with two consolation final wins

by Steven Vesely
Charlatan Staff

Two of three Raven swimmers posted personal-best results at the Canadian Interuniversity Athletic Union swim championships in Victoria, B.C., March 11-13, while the third posted Carleton's best finish.

Andrew Smith swam a personal best in the 100-metre butterfly. Brigitte Davidson posted a personal-best time in the 400-metre individual medley. Erica Kotler placed ninth overall in the 100- and 200-metre breast-stroke to lead the team.

"I didn't make any finals, but I did make some best times, so I can't be disappointed with any of my results," said Smith, who posted top-30 finishes in the 50- and 100-metre freestyle races and 50- and 100-metre butterfly events.

Smith said he was particularly pleased with his 100-metre butterfly result because his strength is in the longer events. "That was my crowning moment," he said. "It was a different experience because I wasn't swimming my best events."

Davidson was also pleased with her top-25 finishes in the 200- and 400-metre individual medley and the 200- and 50-metre backstroke, especially because she had a sore shoulder caused by tendinitis. "It just didn't feel very good stroke-wise," she said. "It didn't come together."

Besides her two ninth-place finishes, Kotler also placed 10th in the 50-metre breast-stroke.

"It was basically what she was expecting," said her coach and mother Jitka

Brigitte Davidson and Andrew Smith (inset) swam personal bests at the CIAU's.

Kotler. "She was quite pleased with her results especially since she concentrated more on school this year and still managed to place well."

In total overall points, Carleton earned 25 points to place 24th out of 25 schools at the meet. The University of Toronto won the meet with 843.5 points. Both athletes and coaches say their relatively poor showing is misleading.

"The people who win go to swimming universities," said Smith, pointing to schools like Calgary, Montreal and Laval.

"They swim twice a day. They have excellent coaches and facilities. They don't work. They're training 12 months a year. They have a humungous advantage over people like myself and Erica."

"The training camps in Calgary are legendary. They would do 40 kilometres in practice. We do five or six. You can't compete with that," he added.

Coch Coach Kotler summed it up best.

"They did the best they could under the circumstances," she said. □

PHOTOS BY DEAN TOMLINSON AND CHRIS NUTTALL-SMITH

RANT 'N' RAVEN

Referendum hockey buck stops here

by Mo Gannon
Charlatan Staff

Think again.

Should the Carleton hockey club get a $1 levy per full-time student so it can join the Ontario College Athletic Association's hockey league?

The 897 who voted against the levy in last month's referendum didn't think so. Unfortunately, the 1,905 who voted in favor did.

Now that the referendum has been overturned along with the rest of CU-SA's contentious election results, hopefully the small number of students who actually do vote might think twice before they return to the polls March 29-31.

Why? Because the buck's gotta stop somewhere.

Okay, so it's a lousy dollar. And hockey's our national sport. And maybe the hockey club could win more games if it had more money. And maybe it deserves varsity status. And so on.

But full-time students already pay $131.52 to the department of athletics for the use of the gym, pool and weight room, not to mention extra charges for squash courts or athletic programs.

This money, more than $2.6 million claims from the student fee alone, also funds a healthy amount of not-so-healthy sports teams.

For many students who don't go near athletics, that's an awful lot of clams to pay for the good of others. Even if they use the place occasionally, it's doubtful they're getting enough bang for their buck.

Many students breathed a sigh of relief when the athletics board scrapped its plan in January to raise next year's athletic fees by two per cent next year. Why? Because they didn't want to pay any more. Not even a couple of dollars.

Now the hockey club is asking students to fork over another $19,000 on top of and separate from the athletics fee, just because athletics won't.

Don't forget that even if the fee is approved again, athletics might not support the club's entrance into the league, mainly because of the extra administrative costs involved.

At a time when everyone's talking cutbacks, when students are worried about paying tuition, is hockey a necessity? Sadly, no. Could the $19,000 be put towards a better cause? Hell, yes.

Athletics director Keith Harris might say his budget is stretched to the limit, but what about that $112,000 that's going towards athletics' special reserve fund next year? I don't see any students socking that kind of money away for a rainy day.

Hockey fans should find another way to make money for the club. Keep pressuring athletics into funding it. Make it chop other areas in its budget. Hey, ask them to take the money out of its prized special reserve fund. Raise some funds from those who care.

So let them play hockey. Just not at students' expense. □

French sailing dream is now a reality

by Steven Vesely
Charlatan Staff

The Carleton sailing club is setting sail for France this spring.

The club's application to race in the prestigious International Whirlpool Challenge in Les Sables d'Olonne this April was accepted by the regatta's selection committee on March 13.

The club was also selected to receive a full sponsorship worth about $12,000, to cover their boat costs, entry fee, room and board while their six-person crew is in France.

"We're completely ecstatic," says club president Cressida Robson. "It's a huge sense of relief and accomplishment. I was starting to tell people that we're probably not going."

The Whirlpool Challenge is the big finale to a week-long racing regatta hosted by the Course Croisiere d'Edhec in Northern France, April 15-24.

D'Edhec, a graduate business university in Northern France, has hosted the CCE since 1968 and watched it evolve into Europe's largest student sailing regatta, attracting sailors from around the world.

On top of the $12,000 sponsorship, the club has also raised another $2,000 in funds from sources like the university, the department of athletics and the Carleton University Students' Association.

The club still needs to raise another $8,000 to cover the transportation costs of their $22,000 budget, says Robson. Along with continued fund-raising efforts, the club has to start training, says Robson.

"We have to train. We've put the actual athletic part of it on hold while we've been fund-raising," she says. "Most of us haven't sailed since November." □

Hockey committee stuck in neutral

by Bill Labonte
Charlatan Staff

An impasse was reached by an athletics board subcommittee at its first meeting March 10.

The subcommittee is looking at the issues involved in the department of athletics taking over the administration of the hockey club.

Last month, students voted in favor of a $1 levy per full-time student towards supporting the hockey club's entry into the Ontario Colleges Athletic Association's hockey league.

Even though the Carleton University Students' Association overturned the referendum with the rest of its election results last week, the subcommittee decided to meet anyway.

The referendum question will be posed again in the new election March 29-31.

The budget remains a major stumbling block, with coach George Brown of the hockey club still convinced it could operate on a shoestring budget of under $20,000.

Director of athletics Keith Harris budgeted from an earlier estimate of about $36,000, but still said a first-year budget of about $30,000 is a more accurate reflection of the cost involved.

Gender-parity concerns were pacified with Brown's suggestion that should hockey be granted varsity status, the next team in line for varsity status would be a women's team.

Administration is still a sore point with Harris, who says his staff is stretched to the limit and can't handle the administration of another sport. Brown said Carleton's hockey alumni would volunteer to handle administration just like they already do.

The university's reputation in joining a college league was also discussed.

"Frankly, I would be more inclined and supportive of this idea if we were discussing the joining of a university league," said graduate student representative Ron Boyd on the subcommittee. "It's a no-win situation. If we do well and win, people will say you're a university. If we lose, we're bums."

The subcommittee must make a recommendation to the athletics board before the OCAA meets in May, if the club is to join the league. □

Women's basketball: What happened?

Lack of experience and scoring among reasons why Ravens were winless this year

by Derek DeCloet
Charlatan Staff

One step forward, two steps back.

You could say that's the synopsis of the direction the Carleton women's basketball Ravens took during its failed 1993-94 campaign.

At the end of the 1992-93 season, the Ravens appeared to finally be stepping up the first rungs on the Ontario Women's Intercollegiate Athletic Association east division ladder.

They won two of their last five games — a mild accomplishment to be sure, but a vast improvement over 1991-92, when the Ravens lost all 12 league games by an average of 73 points.

Last year's group was a young, quick team that played an exciting up-tempo brand of basketball. The offence was led by a scoring machine guard named Tracey Carey and a lightning-fast point guard named Mary Barbieri.

Most of all, they had a bright future. Most of their key players — including Carey, Barbieri, co-MVP Nancy Forget and forward Dana Nicholas were expected to come back. But they didn't.

One winless year later, the Ravens appear to be right back where they started. What happened? Here's a look:

Roster Surprises

Carey and Forget, who together accounted for 59 per cent of the team's scoring last year, weren't eligible to play varsity sports this year. (Forget is part-time student and Carey is not even attending Carleton.) Then Barbieri, who had back surgery last spring, decided even before the season started, not to play.

Those losses drove a stake through the heart of the team's rebuilding efforts.

"The thing I'm most disappointed about is that people (who) made a big difference didn't come back," says forward Heather McAlpine. "It discourages you in a way."

"You need veterans returning if you're going to improve at all," says co-captain Helen Collins.

To top it all off, Nicholas tore the anterior cruciate ligament in her knee during a pre-season game, and watched from the sidelines for the rest of the year.

It was a crucial blow, that blow to the cruciate. Nicholas was co-captain and one of the players coach Marg Jones was relying on to provide leadership. Overall, five veteran leaders on a team of 10 didn't return for one reason or another.

Fortunately, next year's flock of players leaving the Ravens' Nest probably won't be as big. The team's top four scorers — guard Gillian Roseway, guard Erin O'Grady, McAlpine, and forward Valerie Gates — all say they'll be back. And Nicholas's knee should be rehabilitated in time for next season.

The Ravens might lose Collins next year, partly because the guard wants to concentrate on her studies, but also because she's frustrated.

"It's no fun being on a losing team," she says. "It's good being on a team, but then... when you look at (it), what's the point, really, if we're just getting killed every game?"

Leadership

With most of the starting cast from 1992-93 gone, the team was left without an on-court leader — a situation that continued as the Ravens' frustrations mounted.

Veterans who should have stepped up to fill the void simply didn't, says guard Cindy Krenosky.

Offensive woes

Jones's philosophy has always been to beat teams with quickness and accurate

Raven coach Marg Jones was often at the centre of frequent team huddles during this past season's winless drought.

shooting. It has to be that way — the Ravens are consistently outsized by other teams. How else can you beat Laurentian when their starting lineup is four inches taller than yours?

But any advantage the Ravens had in quickness was negated by their dreadful shooting — 33 per cent from two-point range and 20 per cent from three-point range. The Ravens threw enough bricks to give the athletics department a healthy start on a much-needed new gymnasium. They averaged 39.1 points per game — a 10-point drop over the year before.

"We didn't have one of those people (who) just scores all the time, that can score 25 to 30 points a game," says McAlpine.

Even if they had, without Barbieri to feed the team's top scorers, there was no one to drive the offence. The frightening result was a torrent of turnovers: 34 per game — one every 70 seconds. Roseway, a rookie guard, led the team with 102 giveaways, one quarter of the team total.

Rookies

It's hard to fault the rookies, and in particular Roseway, for the Ravens' woes. She was the team leader in points (10 per game), rebounds (6.7 per game), assists (11 for the year), free throws (2.5 per game) ... she was the offence.

As it turns out, she even surprised herself. "I came in and I just thought I'd be another player but I guess I ended up with a pretty good season," she says.

Guards Tina Marietti and Kaeli Yuzefowich made largely undistinguished appearances on the floor, but must be regarded as a part of the team's future plans.

Getting over the hump

Like a bus stuck in a mud hole, the harder the Ravens pressed the gas pedal, the more they got stuck. So even though they improved as the season went on, they couldn't make it show on the scoreboard — or in the win column.

"I think what we needed was just one win to show that we can do something out there," says Roseway. "But that never happened."

"It was really frustrating," says O'Grady. "We put just as much work into everything as all the other teams."

Coaching

Jones has proven she can find some good players. Now she has to figure out how to keep them, then mold the team into a winner.

Despite the fact that Jones was starting virtually from scratch when she took over the team in 1989 — it had won just one game the previous season — one has to wonder how much longer the athletics department will stick with her. Her regular season record in five years is three wins and 57 losses.

Gail Blake, the women's athletic coordinator, says Jones will be back for 1994-95.

Jones would not give an interview. □

OWIAA BASKETBALL

East Division Final Standings

	W	L	T	PF	PA	PTS
Laurent	12	0	0	929	576	24
Toronto	10	2	0	856	596	20
Ottawa	7	5	0	803	720	14
Queen's	6	6	0	788	769	12
York	5	7	0	696	752	10
Ryerson	2	10	0	606	803	4
Carleton 0	12	0	0	469	931	0

Game by Game

Jan. 11.	Ottawa 81	Carleton 42
Jan. 14.	Queen's 60	Carleton 39
Jan. 15.	Toronto 94	Carleton 41
Jan. 21.	Ryerson 61	Carleton 44
Jan. 22.	York 77	Carleton 46
Jan. 28.	Laurent 93	Carleton 29
Feb. 1.	Ottawa 77	Carleton 41
Feb. 5.	Laurent 82	Carleton 28
Feb. 11.	Toronto 81	Carleton 44
Feb. 12.	Queen's 82	Carleton 40
Feb. 18.	York 64	Carleton 30
Feb. 19.	Ryerson 79	Carleton 45

Guard Erin O'Grady (#10) and forward Valerie Gates (#12) will be returning.

Charlatan Hockey Pool

Here are the point leaders in the Charlatan Hockey Pool. Points were tabulated as of Tue. Mar. 15, 1994. Regular season leaders can only win the dinner prize once. (Italicized names are former winners.)

BAXTER'S

1344 Bank Street
(at Riverside)
738 - 3323

Congratulations to Blair Sanderson and Steven Lief who win this week's dinner prize. Come and pick up your $25 dinner certificates for Baxter's restaurant at The Charlatan.

1	Patrick Soden	754
2	R. De Vecchi	735
3	Anjali Varma	734
4	Vicki Mavraganis	733
5	Jeff Parker	725
6	Sujoy Bhattacharyya	724
7	R. Daggupaty	723
8	Tyler Vaillant	723
9	Jason Beifuss	721
10	Blair Sanderson	720
11	Paul Donovan	719
12	Joseph Kurikose	716
13	Alex Varki	716
14	Steven Lief	716
15	Jason Ling	716

Charlatan Sports Trivia

Answer the following question correctly and become eligible to win a $25 dinner for two at Schadillac's Saloon.

In what year did Foster Hewitt coin the famous phrase 'He shoots! He scores!?'

Congratulations to Pankaj Gopal who knew Brian Trottier was the last NY Islander to win the Hart trophy.

- Place your answer, name and phone number on a piece of paper and submit it to The Charlatan sports editor, room 531 Unicentre. The recipient of the prize will be determined by a supervised draw of all correct answers.
- All answers must be received by Tuesday, March 22, 1994. The winner should come up to the office for the prize on any Monday or Tuesday.
- Contestants may submit only one entry per week.
- Charlatan staff members and their families are not eligible to participate.

Answer:

Name:

Phone:

Attention Candidates To Be:

- General information packages are now available in the Unicentre Room 127D - The Electoral Office. They must be signed for.
- Supplement and poster photos will be taken on Thursday, March 17, 1994 and Friday, March 18, 1994. Sign-up at the Electoral Office.
- If you want CUSA Publications to help you lay-out your posters take it to Unicentre room 326 as soon as possible. If you leave it to the last minute he will not be able to do it for you.
- Bring in your nomination forms as soon as possible.
- It is in your best interest to check the door and wall outside of room 127D for information. If not daily, at least every couple of days.
It is our ONLY lifeline to you!

CUSA

The CUSA General Elections held in February, 1994, have been declared null and void, including the Board of Governors and Senate seats. New General Elections have been set in the following Writ of Election.

Whereas, pursuant to section 4.2 of the CUSA Consolidated Electoral Code, the Chief Electoral Officer shall issue a Writ of Election; Be it hereby known that Elections Carleton Intends to hold elections for the positions below on CUSA Council on March 29, 30, 31 1994.

POSITIONS AVAILABLE ARE:

C.U.S.A.

- President (1)
- Engineering (3)
- Finance Commissioner (1)
- Industrial Design (1)
- Architecture (1)
- Journalism (1)

- Arts and Social Sciences (14)
- Science (3)
- Commerce (3)
- Special Students (3)
- Computer Science (1)

SENATE

- 2 Arts seats
- 2 Social Science seats

- 1 Architecture/Industrial Design seat
- 1 Engineering seat
- 2 Computer Science/Science seats

BOARD OF GOVERNORS

- Two (2) positions

Schedule of Election

Publication of Writ March 8
Nominations Open March 11 (10:00 am)
Nominations Close March 21 (10:00 am)
Validation March 21
Campaigning Begins March 22 (6:30 am)
Polling Begins day 1 March 29 (11:10-9:10)
Polling day 2 March 30 (11:10-9:10)
Polling Closes day 3 March 31 (11:10-6:10)
Tabulation March 31 (6:20-?)

Nomination Forms

Nomination forms are available at the CUSA office (401 Unicentre), and at the Elections Carleton Office 127D Unicentre.

POLLING STATIONS:

- Leob Tunnel Entrance
- Unicentre
- Mackenzie Building
- Tunnel Junction between Steacie and Herzberg Building

Referendum #1

Whereas: This year funding from the Carleton University Students' Association has allowed the University of Ottawa Community Legal Clinic, a student organization, to provide legal representation and advice to Carleton Students. Do you support the continuation of C.U.S.A. funding to continue these services?

- First meeting of the "Yes" Committee shall take place in Room 424 Unicentre on Thursday, March 17, 2:00 pm.
- First meeting of the "No" Committee shall take place in Room 424 Unicentre on Thursday, March 17, 1:00 pm.

Referendum #2

Do you support paying a 1.00 levy (per student) towards subsidizing the creation and maintenance of a Carleton Hockey team which would join the College Hockey League?

- First meeting of the "Yes" Committee shall take place in Room 424 Unicentre on Thursday, March 17, 4:00 pm.
- First meeting of the "No" Committee shall take place in Room 424 Unicentre on Thursday, March 17 at 3:00 pm.

CUSA

PLACEMENT & Career Services

Check the posting boards at
the Placement Centre for
more job listings.

Programs and services of interest to undergraduates, graduating students, as well as alumni.

508 Unicentre • 788-6611
March 17, 1994

ON-CAMPUS RECRUITING

Permanent full-time positions are directed towards graduating students (available May '94). Dates, unless specified, refer to deadlines.

To find out the types of positions, how to apply and where to find more information on the companies, please contact the office.

DVS Communications Inc.
Mar. 18, 12 noon
Electrical Eng., Comp. Syst. Eng.,
Comp. Sci., Commerce-MIS
Positions: Author/Programmer

Dominion Automobile Association
Mar. 18, 12 noon
All Disciplines
Position: Management Trainee

Mead Johnson
Mar. 18, 12 noon
Commerce - Marketing
Position: Product Manager

Andyne Computing Ltd.
Mar. 21, Mail Direct
Electrical Eng., Comp. Syst. Eng.,
Computer Science
Position: Server Specialist

Lincoln Electric Company
Mar. 25, 12 noon
Electrical Eng., Mechanical Eng.
Positions: Sales Engineers

EASEL Corp.
Mar. 28, 12 noon
Electrical Eng., Comp. Syst. Eng.,
Computer Science
Positions: Applications Consultant, Technical Support Consultant, QA Engineer, Software Engineer

MPR Teltech Ltd.
Mar. 30, 12 noon
Electrical Eng., Comp. Syst. Eng.,
Computer Science
Positions: Various

Household Financial Corp.
Mar. 31, 5 pm
All Disciplines
Positions: Accelerated Training Program

Communications Security Establishment
May 1, Mail Direct
All Disciplines
Positions: Languages Related

Solidarity Eastern Europe
May 27, Mail Direct
English, Linguistics
Position: Overseas Language Teacher

FULL TIME EMPLOYMENT

Please visit Placement & Career Services for more full and part time employment opportunities.

National Research Council/
Carleton University
ASAP, Mail Direct
Engineering
Position: Engineer

SUMMER EMPLOYMENT

For more information on the types of positions and application procedures consult the summer job board.

Banff Lifts Ltd.
Sulphur Mountain Alberta
Mar. 18, Mail Direct
All Disciplines
Positions: Various

Consumer Impact
Mar. 18, 12 noon
All Disciplines
Positions: Promotional Reps, Field Supervisors

Hunt Club Riverside Community
Centre
Mar. 18, Mail Direct
All Disciplines
Positions: Various

Hamilton YWCA East End Sports
School
Mar. 18, Mail Direct
All Disciplines
*Positions: Instructor/Counsellor
Please note this position is in Hamilton Ontario.*

Marsaryk Fellowship Program
Mar. 18, Mail Direct
Eastern European, Political Science,
NPSIA, EASL
Positions: Teaching English in Czech Republic

Club de Golf Rivermead
Mar. 25, Mail Direct
All Disciplines
Positions: Starter

The Governor General's Foot Guards
Mar. 31, Mail Direct
All Disciplines
Positions: Ceremonial Guards

Pepsi-Cola Canada Beverages
ASAP, Mail Direct
All Disciplines
Positions: Delivery Drivers

Student Venture Loans
June 10, Mail Direct
All Disciplines
Venture Capital Loans

Environmental Youth Corps
ASAP, Mail Direct
All Disciplines
Positions: Various

Canadian Museum of Civilization
ASAP, Mail Direct
Canadian History, Native Studies,
Social Sciences
Positions: Animator

Student BBQ Services
ASAP, Mail Direct
All Disciplines
Position: Manager

The District Municipality of Muskoka
Water Quality Monitoring Program
ASAP, Mail Direct
Environmental Engineering,
Biology
Positions: Technical Assistant I

Support Services Mississauga
ASAP, Mail Direct
All Disciplines
Positions: Various

Totten Sims Hubicki Associates
ASAP, Mail Direct
Civil Engineering
Position: Inspection Team

PAINTERS/HOME CARE

The following home care companies are accepting applications to be mailed direct. Please consult the summer job board for positions and deadline dates.

Abracadabra Landscapers
Action Window Cleaning
Creative Outdoor Lighting
Metropo
Student Sprinkler Services
Student Works Painting
Varsity Painters
White Shark Window Cleaning

TREE PLANTING

The following tree planting companies are accepting applications to be mailed direct. Please consult the summer job board for deadline dates and for more information.

TAWA Enterprises Ltd.
Evergreen Forestry Services
Outland/New Forest
Tree Line Reforestation
Broland Enterprises Inc.

SUMMER CAMPS

The following camps are accepting applications ASAP to be mailed direct.

Camp Awakening
Camp Brebufo
Camp MaroMac
Bark Lake
Exer-Clean Launderers Ltd.
J.P. Brothers Food Management
Lundy's Canadian Wilderness
Camp
Pripstein's Camp
Ontario Camping Association
Sagitawa Christian Camps
Camp Tamakwa
Camp Walden
YMCA-YWCA of Ottawa-
Carleton
YMCA Camp Pinecrest

LODGES/RESORTS

Viamede Resort (Peterborough)
Apr. 1, Mail Direct
Positions: Various

Waterton-Glacier International
Peace Park/Prince of Wales Hotel
Apr. 29, Mail Direct
Positions: Various

Aspen Village Inn (Alberta)
ASAP, Mail Direct
Positions: Various

River Run (Beachburg)
ASAP, Mail Direct
Positions: Various

Will You Be Graduating?

Join the Alumni/ae Referral Service

Throughout the year, employers contact us seeking qualified candidates for immediate job openings. All positions are posted in full time job binders and then selectively file searched. A file search involves contacting qualified Carleton alumni/ae registered with the service and referring them to employers.

Alumni/ae may continue to register with us up to 3 years after graduation. You do not have to be unemployed to be eligible for the service, but you must be sincerely and actively looking for a job.

Students may register one month prior to completing their degree requirements. Come to Placement & Career Services, 508 UC, to pick up your registration form.

Sounding like Soundgarden, but who the hell cares?

by Andrea Smith
Charlatan Staff

Liquid Bone Dance
Zaphod Beeblebrox
March 12

There's a sound I grew up with in Winnipeg. It came out from the West Coast in the form of bands like Faith No More and Soundgarden.

Before these bands signed with major labels, they were considered good. Their influence ran up the coast to Vancouver, across the Rockies into Calgary, and trickled east across the prairies.

Now it seems this trickle hits a steep incline, running the wrong way just outside of Toronto.

Judging by some of the responses I overheard, more sophisticated Ottawa sensibilities are offended by its "Pearl Jamminess" and mistake it for something called "Grunge Music."

By association it becomes dated, corporate, and every band's worst nightmare... cheezy.

By now, Winnipeg's Liquid Bone Dance should be painfully aware of this musical regionalism. Saturday night at Zaphod's, singer Geoff Green couldn't have expressed it better when in between songs he looked out at the sparse audience and almost sighed: "Jesus Christ, it's quiet in here."

The audience, for the most part, kept their butts glued to their bar stools. Two or three brave souls hovered on the fringes of the dance floor during the song "Four Mona Lisas," which has the loud, happy guitars of emocore.

Make no mistake — the band is polished, their playing tight and their performance impressive. Green's vocals and Marty Chapman's drumming are exceptional.

As the audience stubbornly kept to the sidelines, I found my western-bred hackles rising. Sure they have long hair. Yeah, they sound a little like Soundgarden, maybe they even want to. But after a couple of songs, I didn't really care who they sounded like, to me they just sounded like five guys who were making a noise I once enjoyed, and they were doing it so well.

As for being dated, corporate or cheezy... their music is no more dated than punk or emocore, and they're as independent as they come. Their self-titled EP is out on Winnipeg's indie record label, Oh Yah! Records, and costs five bucks. Admittedly, they're not as overtly anti-corporate as some punk bands, but to quote from "Four Mona Lisas:"

"Finally the paint must dry and Elvis ain't the only guy, Coca Cola's turning green, the magic no one's ever seen."

They're no more or less original than any other band who plays within a genre like ska, industrial, or punk.

So screw the labels, I like it. If you harbor any hidden fondness or nostalgia for the same bands, you'll probably like it too. Everybody else can be losers and sit on their barstools and rot.

He's from Winnipeg, you know.

DEAN TONILNSON

Modern dance without all the pretension

by Suzanne Andrew
Charlatan Staff

Diquis Tiquis
National Arts Centre Atelier
March 9 — March 12

The dance theatre style of Diquis Tiquis is engaging in its simplicity.

Unlike many dance theatre companies, this Costa Rican company doesn't go out of its way to be weird. Instead, Diquis Tiquis's expression and choreography are profound in their clarity.

In essence, the company's two members, Alejandro Tosatti and Sandra Trejos, are storytellers. With slow, controlled movements, perfectly executed, their technical wizardry is not obscured by flashy technical wizardry.

While most North American dancers conform to the classical standard of frozen faces, Tosatti and Trejos have the riveting ability to portray the whole gamut of emotions using only facial expressions.

In La doaldo (Side by Side), the two dancers, seated in chairs, moved in perfect unison, rocking slowly back and forth to subtle, repetitive music. The dancers broke all sorts of conventional rules in this piece: they used a very small portion of the performance space, failed to acknowledge each other and focused more on portraying emotion than actual dance movements. Yet with their creative facial expression, the dancers were successful in telling the story of a man exhibiting both male and female characteristics.

In Duelo (The Duel), the two dancers emerged, silhouetted, on to the stage. A narrative about the first man and woman on Earth, this piece was effective in its austerity through sparse costuming, simple staging and subtle choreography.

It was unfortunate, however, that the dancers chose to mime some of the vocals of this work's music. This was distracting and caused a break in the choreography's narration.

The most engaging work in Diquis Tiquis's performance was La Virgen Del Banquito (The Virgin of the Stool), a solo by Trejos and a story of one woman's life. Trejos was technically excellent, demonstrating her knowledge of Martha Graham technique with strong lines, body isolations and flowing arm movements. Her use of the stool prop is clever — as her character evolves, so does the prop — transforming from a child's hiding place to an old woman's rocking chair.

The last piece of the performance, Los Gemelos (The Twins), explores traditional South American concepts of duality. The dancers' use of large burlap masks at the beginning of this piece was excellent, as were their interpretation of jungle animals.

Unfortunately, the piece ended with intense lift work and difficult choreography, making the duo appear technically mismatched. Trejos sustained her movements with a remarkable flow of energy that her male counterpart was unable to parallel.

Both the lighting and music used by this company are subtle — working as they should to emphasize the dancers and not drawing attention to themselves.

The Latin American music was quiet but rhythmically interesting.

The use of expression, dramatic effects and themes found in Diquis Tiquis's performance was refreshingly original and sublime. This company has successfully escaped the current thematic trends of the morbid and bizarre that are currently rife in the dance world.

This week: Our Favorite Infomercials

1. Stop the Insanity!
2. Soloflex 2000
3. Time Life's Rolling Stone Collection
4. Awake the Giant Within with Tony Robbins
5. The Ginsu Knives series
6. Amazing Discoveries
7. Rush Limbaugh
8. Dr. Gene Scott
9. Prime Time News
10. Playboy's Secrets of Making Love

"Where the hell are the dancing cats?"

Come and take your mind off your essays

by Roy Fu
Charlatan Staff

China in Contrast
MacOdrum Library
March 1 — March 21

To me, China signifies home, a place of early childhood memories, a fluid language of a thousand streams, resonating a familiarity of home.

I would imagine for others — either those who have never been or those visiting for the first time — China means different things, and evokes different images.

Bill Cooper, a Carleton student who spent a year in China, presents his impression of the country in a series of photographs and short essays. He depicts his experience with familiar black and white images and lyrical prose.

Individually, Cooper's photos are familiar in subject — a panorama of the Great Wall, a closeup of an old Chinese peasant, a picture of Chairman Mao overlooking Tiananmen Square; collectively, the images reiterate the familiar, in a cliché narrative of the country.

These images and the accompanying narrative are reminiscent of ones found in back issues of National Geographic. The narrative describes a fading, romantic China-past: simple, yet exotic.

A man propels his junk up a silted river; a portrait of a rudimentary diesel truck. We're not shown a turbulent China-present, one which is being overrun by capitalism, giant Pepsi billboards and Benetton boutiques.

The accompanying short essays shed more light on to Cooper's encounters and experiences. They captivate with vivid images, often stronger than the ones in the photos. This vivid imagery and lyrical style make the essays read like poems. Unlike the photos, the prose reflects an acquired sensibility about the people and the place:

"A young woman spends a week sculpting a carpet with scissors only to be handed another one and another one . . . Stamina . . . stamina to overcome hardship and the hardship to build character."

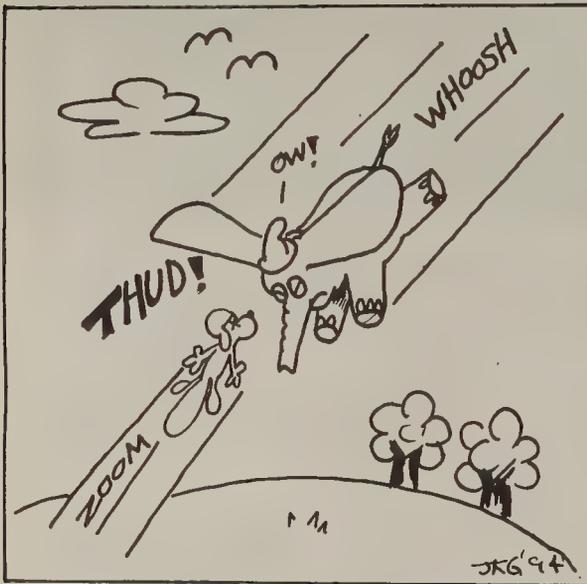

Both Cooper's photographs and prose put a real distance between him and the subject, revealed by the sense of personal detachment in the writing and physical distance in the photographs.

The exhibit claims to be an account of Cooper's "experiences," yet the story it tells is far from personal. It is objectified; Cooper assumes the voice of a detached colonial anthropologist. I suppose this relates back to the familiar narrative that Cooper finds himself in; perhaps caught in the traditional narrative of the foreigner in China.

Irrespective of that, Cooper's emotive images in both media suggest an intense interaction with the country and its people. Somewhere behind Cooper's exhibit lies the real story, his story, of a foreigner in China, one that has yet to be told.

The exhibit is definitely worth checking out. If nothing else, it offers a break from the mundane researching of essay season, leaving one with a taste of the exotique. □

IN HARM'S WAY

ROCKY THE FLYING SQUIRREL MEETS HIS END IN A FREAK COLLISION WITH DUMBO.

DISGRAPHIA

1752:

THE ELECTRIC GUITAR IS DISCOVERED

Catalogue shopping for incredibly tacky artifacts

by Andrea Smith
Charlatan Staff

Fluffs and Feathers: An Exhibition On the Symbols of Indianness was originally presented in 1988, and was curated by Deborah Doxtator at the Woodland Cultural Centre in Brantford, Ont. The centre serves six reserve communities from two distinct cultural groups: Algonquian and Iroquoian. A revised edition of the exhibit is now on display at the Museum of Civilization in Hull until May 23.

"Teepees, headdresses, totem poles, birch bark canoes, face paint, fringes, buckskin and tomahawks — when anyone sees images, drawings or paintings of these things they immediately think of 'Indians.' They are symbols of Indianness." — Fluffs and Feathers catalogue

The affordable, disposable, buyable Indian: take it home, wear it, or wind it up and let your kids play with it in the backyard. Package it, polish it and put it in a cellophane wrapper. Use it to sell stuff. Made of 100-per-cent hollow plastic, for your enjoyment.

This is what non-Native people have been doing for years with images of Native peoples. A Chicago Blackhawks jersey, the Land O' Lakes margarine logo, or a Pontiac car — they all use and reinforce the same stereotypes of Indianness; a construction generated by a project of racism and colonization, manifest in a myriad of tacky souvenirs, children's toys and cheap re-presentations.

"It is not right that anyone should define someone else, tell them who they are and where they 'fit in.' You cannot do this to someone if you think of them as your equal."

"They are so pervasive," says Woodland Cultural Centre museum director Tom Hill, of the cardboard stereotypes on display at Fluffs and Feathers. Hill uses a term coined by Carleton art history professor Ruth Phillips, who describes the dissemination of racist stereotypes as "white noise." White noise is an expression for a droning in the background; like the stereotypes of Native peoples it's ever present, cancelling out some sounds and letting others through.

"You can't really see it but it's there," says Hill.

It's distortion, and in the case of the symbols of Indianness, it's white because it's a tool and a product of a colonial power.

Hill says to overcome the pervasive effect of this misrepresentation, the stereotypes are put on display, to point out that they have been created by non-Native persons and "are totally fabricated. We wanted people to think about that right at the very beginning. Then you start your journey."

Through a procession of photos of Hollywood ideas of Indianness, tourist-park ideas of Indianness, Wild West show ideas of Indianness, comic books, engravings and "fine art" — amongst the disparate bric-a-brac, the exhibit invites the viewer to discern the nature of these images. To ask questions like: Who produced these images? Whose interests do they serve? What do all these images/objects have in common?

"To get them to start thinking about them when they see them, to engage debate," says Hill.

"By the seventeenth century, Europeans had certain fixed ideas about what an Indian was supposed to look like. The 'official costume' of Indians in European art was a feather skirt and upright headdress occasionally with some feathers at the wrists and ankles. The physical remoteness of Indians to Europeans made it possible to create representations of abstract Indians that bore no resemblance to reality. . . . These abstract depictions of Indians created a visual and symbolic language that was immediately recognizable as 'Indianness'; nudity, feathers, headdresses, bows and arrows."

What's wrong with this picture?

Hill says by merely assembling T-shirts, tacky souvenirs, and common commercial fare in as unlikely a setting as the glass display cases of a museum, is to provoke questions.

Traditionally, he says, museums have been the showcase for Native peoples' cultural artifacts, but usually as products of some time in the past, as if Native peoples belong in the past.

"We have always been looked at in the past, and yet we have been denied a history," says Hill.

"To the museum and exhibition visitor of the nineteenth century, Indians were a fascinating curiosity best appreciated as a living yet safe historical 're-enactment' in a Wild West show, or as a category with a safely inferior place in a neatly organized exhibit of the hierarchy of the races of mankind. . . . In need of control and of study, and as earlier 'less-developed' peoples whose domination seemed not only desirable but necessary."

The exhibit ends with a mirror. "(The display) invites the viewer to experience this exhibit from a First Nations perspective," says the placard accompanying the exhibit. But Hill says the real question is "How do you see yourself?" in relation to the image presented.

"We don't want to force a conclusion," says Hill. "The viewer is invited to come to their own conclusion. Some people will discover it, some others won't."

"It's really quite dangerous," says Hill.

Algonquin College invites you to a...

TECHNOLOGY AND SCIENCE INFORMATION EVENING

Wednesday, March 23, 1994 5:30 - 8:00 pm
RIDEAU Campus Gym
200 Lees Avenue

Don't miss this exceptional opportunity to:

- ☆ explore a variety of 2 and 3 year FULL-TIME PROGRAMS offered during the day this Fall
- ☆ discuss your career goals and employment opportunities with trained staff
- ☆ obtain information on how to apply and on financial assistance
- ☆ meet with qualified faculty who will advise you on academic studies

And... win one of three prizes to be drawn during the evening!

Find out what Algonquin College can do for your career this fall...plan to attend today!

This event and parking are free!

If you are interested in any of the full-time programs listed but are unable to attend this Special Information Evening, fill out the coupon below and mail it to:

Algonquin College, 1385 Woodroffe Avenue
Room C427, Nepean, Ontario K2G 1V8
Attention: Full-time Day Programs

Please send me information on:

1. _____
2. _____
3. _____
Name _____
Address _____
City _____ Postal Code _____

CHARLATAN MAR/94

Algonquin WORKS

You can explore the following Technology and Science career training options offered at our Rideau Campus:

Technology Programs

Architectural Technician/Technology
Computer Systems Technician
Construction Engineering Technician/Technology
Electro-Mechanical Engineering - Drafting
Fire Protection and Safety Technician
Geographic Information Systems - Technician/Technology
Industrial Engineering Technology
Manufacturing Engineering Technology
Mechanical Engineering Technology
Survey Technician
Precision Electronic Assembler

Programs with Co-op Options

Computer Engineering Technology
Computer Technology - Computing Science
Electronics Engineering Technician
Electronics Engineering Technician - Digital
Electronics Engineering Technology

Science Programs

Occupational Health and Safety
Environmental Technology
Chemical Technology - Bioengineering
Chemical Technology - Biochemical
Respiratory Therapy
Medical Laboratory Technology
Ambulance and Emergency Care

ALGONQUIN

CRUISE JOBS

Students Needed!

Earn up to $2,000+ per month working for Cruise Ships or Land-Tour Companies. World Travel (Hawaii, Mexico, the Caribbean, etc.). Summer and Full-Time employment available. No exper. necessary. For more information call:

Cruise Employment Services
(206) 634-0468 ext. C4006

Good acting can't save horrid script

by Neil Herland
Charlatan Staff

Still Alive
NAC Studio
March 8 — March 19

In what had to be the most disgusting moment in Ottawa theatre this year, a nearly naked Andy Jones attached a massive dildo to his fat, hairy body, during the second act of his new play Still Alive.

Jones was a member of the CODCO comedy collective, who also appeared on the CODCO CBC-TV series until he resigned because the network refused to let him air a comedy sketch involving priests molesting boys.

Now a writer for The Kids in the Hall, Jones's sexual fetishes are inseparable from his humor.

Still Alive is a one-man show he wrote with a grant from the Canada Council. Like many plays in Canada these days, Still Alive exemplifies the style of "therapy theatre," where actors write plays about their emotional and sexual problems.

Still Alive is a canvas on which Jones paints his emotional baggage. The actor tells of his fear of failing, the pain of his mother's death and the tormenting guilt of his youthful homosexual experiences.

At the beginning of the show, Jones jokingly explains to us that his play is actually a Royal Commission report. Soon we're promised either 200 laughs during the performance, one genuine feeling, or our money back.

He starts to ridicule famous philosophers and the Catholic Church, and then there's the dildo finale.

The play is so unfocused that even during the final 20 minutes, Jones cannot successfully deliver a central statement or thesis for his play. The play simply tries to do too many things at once. Director Gil Osborne should have demanding a rewrite of the script.

Much of the play's humor is geared to older adults. Not that the humor is too sophisticated for a young crowd; rather, young people wouldn't tolerate the type of corny middle-aged humor that characterizes Jones's style.

His use of Newfoundland humor, like when he confesses his guilt for never having caught a fish in his life, is one of the show's strengths. The play's weakness is found in his unfunny attempts at philosophizing on life; for instance, by using a piece of chalk, he covers the floor with symbolic logic to explain life's quirks.

Jones does, however, deliver a comfortable performance that he sustains throughout the show. The quality of his acting is consistent. The script certainly doesn't allow Jones to demonstrate his range, which is unfortunate considering his acting ability.

The set is barely noticeable, as designer Arthur Penson opts for a simple set (more likely a reflection of the NAC's budget than any artistic choices). The set includes three blackboards and a science lab desk. Along with various prop pieces and a suspended projection screen, which is used to show slides related to his script, the set acts more as a backdrop than a component to the play.

One of the main elements of the show is a useless written quiz that Jones administers to the audience in the second half of the show, using ballots from the program. Asking questions about the audience members' ages, genders and occupations, the quiz seems more like a survey for the NAC's marketing department than a legitimate part of the performance.

Jones maintains throughout the play that we humans are all in the same boat. He tries desperately to prove this throughout the show, but ultimately alienates the audience with dildos and his almost naked body. After enduring two hours worth, it's some miracle that his audience is still alive.

NOW HIRING POLL CLERKS

($6.75/HR)

Poll Clerks are needed from the opening of polls on March 29, 1994 until the close on March 31, 1994.

Applications can be picked up at the CUSA office, 401 Unicentre, or the Elections Carleton office at 127D Unicentre.

APPLICATION DEADLINE: Wednesday March 23, 1994 NOON.

NOTE: Names of persons hired will be posted outside 127D Unicentre by noon Thursday March 24. If your name is on the list, you must attend a training session. (Times will be announced on the list).

For more information please contact DEO Jane Suh, 127D Unicentre, 788-2600 ext. 1648.

EUSA

THERE ARE SOME THINGS WORTH REMEMBERING

LIKE THE TIMES OF YOUR LIFE.

JOSTENS
CANADA LTD.

THE GRADUATION RING FOR A TIME TOO GOOD TO FORGET.

Order and Get Your Ring by Graduation.

March 17, 18

PLACE: The Bookstore

TIME: 10 am to 5 pm

MOVIE PASS GIVE AWAY

NORSTAR
ENTERTAINMENT INC.

presents

"BITTER MOON"

A ROMAN POLANSKI FILM

OPENING FRIDAY
MARCH 25, 1994
THRU FAMOUS PLAYERS

The first 20 people up to The Charlatan office on Fri., March 18, after 10 A.M. will receive passes for the advance screening being held Thurs., March 24 at Capitol Square.

Give-away applies to people who have never won passes before.

The happy Carleton band

by Johanna Ciszewski
Charlatan Staff

Felast Cowboys
The Pit
March 19

Spring is in the air, the snow is melting, everyone seems to be smiling.

Especially the Belfast Cowboys. These local talents and Carleton students are ready to launch their first self-titled cassette this weekend at the Pit. (If it drops to 30 below this week, just take our word for it, the Belfast Cowboys are happy.)

The Cowboys, a popular draw among Carleton students, have performed numerous times on campus and around local clubs since their debut in the fall of 1991.

Greg Brayford, Mike Peterson (both on guitar and vocals), Andrew G. Long (bass) and Mathew Young (drums) have been lucky enough to have the assistance of their friends, who helped with posterizing and even the recording of their cassette.

"A lot of people who are already involved in the music scene have helped out a lot with the release of this cassette," Young explains. To record the cassette, the band took over Oliver's for an evening, Brayford says. "We went in at four o'clock Sunday afternoon and out about five in the morning. We recorded eight songs, but we're releasing six."

As you could probably guess from the venue where they recorded it, the tape has a very live feel to it. The result is that what you hear on the tape is what you'll see live.

Their folk-influenced songs combine both electric and acoustic guitars. As for influences, they say they're not beholden to any one source. "We are doing exactly what we want to do. There's no influence conforming us to any standards. We are playing the music we want to play," says Young.

Although they may not see any influences in their music, they come from the same local talent pool that has spawned such bands as Jimmy George and September Child, who form a support network for each other.

They have also had a taste of life on the road, playing in Toronto and Halifax. Unfortunately, money problems will mean they will miss this summer's Canadian Music Conference in Halifax which they were hoping to attend.

Instead, they hope to expose their musical energy to Ontario university campuses in the future.

Oh well. Halifax's loss is our gain. □

King Apparatus: Serious ska?

by Am Keeling
Charlatan Staff

King Apparatus
The Penguin
March 23

The "Canuck party band of the decade" seems to be growing up.

Toronto-based ska outfit King Apparatus has built a reputation as a wacky, danceable band playing off-beat tunes like "Non-Stop Drinking" and "Made for TV" in their high-energy live shows.

But with their latest album, Marbles, released in late 1993, some of their lyrics and tunes have made forays into more "serious music" territory.

King Apparatus co-founder and bassist Mitch Giro says despite this new direction, they are still focused on showing their fans a good time.

"I don't know if we're trying to shed the party band image," he says. That's because, he continues, it was one they were stuck with by people who wrote about them.

Indeed, now the band's lyrics tackle the problems of crime, urban violence and homelessness while only rarely deviating from their driving ska sound that has made them the darlings of many in the Canadian alternative scene.

"There's still some fun tunes, but it's a bit more serious," says Giro. "There's less songs about girls."

King Apparatus return to Ottawa March 23 with their quirky brand of ska — the frenetic, pulsing brand of reggae played by such bands as Montreal's Me Mom and Morgentaler and England's the Special Beat.

"We try not to be too, too wacky, but definitely high-energy," says Giro of their live shows.

He says the band still tries hard to get the crowd skanking, even on their more topical tunes.

"We try to get people on their feet," says Giro. And if a serious song does come up, he says, "we won't tell people to sit down."

Sitting down isn't often a big problem when a ska band is playing. And King Apparatus — Giro, singer and main songwriter Chris Murray and guitarist Sam Tallo — have made playing and experimenting with ska their focus.

Giro says when the band formed in 1987 in London, Ont., they did some covers and played around with other kinds of music, but found their ska calling early on.

"To me, it seems we're doing a better job playing ska," he says.

Giro says the band has diversified its sound on the latest album by tinkering with the traditional, "roots-style" rhythms of reggae and ska. But they're not immune to other influences.

It's those wacky, wacky ska guys!

"We do some poppy stuff," he says.

Business is another area in which King Apparatus is getting serious. Late last year, the band moved from the Raw Energy record label to Cargo Records because Giro says they felt like they weren't getting good exposure on the smaller independent label.

"It was a business thing," Giro says of the move. "We wanted to make a definite step forward."

Giro sounds like he's in touch with the marketing end of running a band as well as he is with the job of pounding out ska grooves on the bass.

The results of the move have been good, according to Giro, with more exposure south of the border and better sales of Marbles in Canada.

Giro himself has kept busy outside the band, teaming up with Guelph funk-rockers King Cobb Steele for some shows — including an Ottawa gig in January — while King Apparatus was on hiatus.

Over the band's break, Giro says Murray spent some time in California with some ska bands, recruiting a drummer, organ player and guitarist to back them on the current tour, which began in the western United States.

The immediate future of King Apparatus seems to lie on the road. Giro says the band will be continuing on from Ottawa to Eastern Canada, the Eastern and Southern United States and finally back to California.

While on the road, they'll be shooting a video for "You're Not My Type," one of the less-ska, more-eclectic songs on Marbles. Giro says a new album is not in the offing for a while, although they recorded a show at the Commodore Ballroom in Vancouver and may release a live album if the tracks sound good.

Now in their mid-20s, the band members seem ready to take what they do — writing songs, doing business and playing ska — more seriously than ever. □

Food Services, CUSA and the Status of Women Office are proud to announce the winners of

The Peppermill Poster Contest

Naomi Lazar
David Pritchard
Wiz Long

We thank the many participants. Each entrant can pick up a complimentary mug in Baker Lounge

Monday, March 21 1PM - 3PM

OR

Friday, March 25 1PM - 3PM

Contact Jane Keeler for any further information at 788-3576

Winning lists will be posted in The Peppermill

THE NEW THEATRE OF OTTAWA PRESENTS

"A crazy quilt patchwork of hyperventilating language, erotic jokes, movie kitsch and medical nightmare."

The New York Times

the
BALTIMORE

BY PAULA VOGEL
DIRECTED

BY MILES POTTER

Waltz

UNTIL APRIL 2

CALL: 236-5196
GREAT CANADIAN THEATRE COMPANY
910 GLADSTONE AVE.

DISCOGRAPHY

Mark Lanegan
Whiskey For the Holy Ghost
Geffen/Sub Pop

If you're looking for the Screaming Trees, don't look here.

Though Lanegan is the Trees' lead singer, this solo effort is unlike the distorted guitar music that typifies the Trees and their contribution to the Seattle scene.

Lanegan opts for a stripped-down, mellow sound on most tracks, using acoustic and electric guitars, violin, piano and organ.

The acoustic sound and Lanegan's deep, whiskey-and-smoke voice are well suited to the 13 tunes that encompass feelings of melancholy, paranoia and desperation.

A couple of bluesy-country songs are thrown in for good measure. All of these songs simmer below the surface and echo with his disillusionment with the world.

This is an album for those who like their music with a dark thread running through it.

Kaleem W. Khan

Shonen Knife
Rock Animals
Virgin

This album bites.

Shonen Knife is a trio of young Japanese women who attempt to play infectious yet charming rock 'n' roll. Naming themselves after a popular Japanese pocket knife only adds to their cheesiness.

There are moments on Rock Animals where I found myself quite aware that this trio has talent, however limited it may be. Perhaps this would explain their obvious popularity with bands like Sonic Youth and Nirvana.

But can Shonen Knife cut it? I don't think so. This band was gruelingly painful to listen to. It felt as if I was listening to a dying animal screaming to be put out of its misery.

Even the help of producer Don Fleming, who has worked with Screaming Trees, Teenage Fanclub and the Posies, could not resuscitate these unfortunately named femmes.

Christopher Bell

Slowdive
Sowlaki
Creation/EMI

The best time to listen to Slowdive is when you're about to drift into dreamland.

The wispy vocals and chiming guitars are best taken in when moving from a conscious to an unconscious state.

It isn't surprising that the guru of ambient music, Brian Eno, is credited with "treatments and keyboards" on tracks four and five. Arguably, he should be credited with influencing Slowdive's sound too.

As for Sowlaki, it sounds very similar to Slowdive's previous album, Just for a Day. Bass and drums are almost buried in the mix by the swelling melodies that land somewhere between whale sounds and white noise.

On some tracks, the vocals rise above the swirling chaos, while on others they struggle to be heard over the relentless swell. After all this, the last song (before the bonus tracks) is an acoustic number entitled "Dagger." This change of pace is a pleasant one.

So when Sowlaki continues to play, long after I've fallen asleep, I'll know my subconscious is in good hands because Slowdive makes beautiful pop music.

Jason Unrau

Th' Faith Healers UK
Imaginary Friend
Too Pure/Elektra

Once guitarist Tom Cullinan gets hold of a hook, he just plugs away and never looks back.

It's these churning guitar renderings, wrapped around Roxanne Stephen's vocals, that give England's Th' Faith Healers UK their trademark sound.

This is the band's second full-length release and perhaps the only thing missing from this effort is one or two searing numbers reminiscent of their earlier tunes like "Jesus Freak" or "Hippy Hole."

This is not to suggest that the seven-song, 72-minute Imaginary Friend lacks the intensity of Th' Healers previous work, but this time around they are more subtle in their approach.

In the opening track, "Sparkingly Chime," Cullinan sets the pace with some groovy licks and the momentum builds from there. Each song is almost an extension of the previous track and just when you think mayhem is going to break out, the melodic "Curly Lips" comes up, followed by a 39-minute exercise in repetition called "Everything, All At Once Forever."

Once the epic is over, it may leave you feeling a bit exhausted, but don't worry. Just take a break and dive back in.

Jason Unrau

Ripcordz
Canadian as Fuck
En Guard Records

Montreal punk four-piece the Ripcordz have scored big with their fourth offering in their illustrious 10-year career.

Canadian as Fuck is 14 songs worth of fuzzy guitar, fuzzy vocals and Canadian content that would make Stompin' Tom proud.

As is often the case with punk bands, the energy and full-blown distortion can almost obscure the clever and sensitive songwriting. A careful listen reveals an abundance of punchy rhythms and inventive lyrics.

Almost as entertaining as the songs are the band's descriptions of them. Check out "17:" ("Dedicated to Tiffany, somewhere near Crow's Nest Pass, B.C.") and "Generation X:" ("Because the only thing worse than grunge was the aging sociologists who tried to make it some sort of movement.") Oh yes, there's also "(I Don't Give A Fuck About The) Montreal Jazz Fest."

The most memorable track is the acoustic punk ballad, "The All Canadian," with the accompanying comment, "Because Don Cherry is GOD!"

Considering the time and money that Canadians spend listening to shitty American punk music, it's amazing that more people haven't picked up on this high-quality, high-intensity, home-grown band.

Mike Peters

DEBATES

The debates for the upcoming elections will be held as follows:

MARCH 1994

	Tuesday 22	Wednesday 23	Thursday 24	Friday 25
President and Finance Commissioner	11:00 am Baker Lounge	7:00 pm Fenn Lounge	11:00 am Rooster's	11:00 am Baker Lounge
All Candidates	3:00 pm Baker Lounge	12 Noon Rooster's	7:00 pm Fenn Lounge	2:00 pm Baker Lounge

EUSA

LONG DAY IN THE UNIVERSE

THURSDAY, MARCH 17 TO THURSDAY, MARCH 24

Thursday, March 17

Scrapper, Illegal Jazz Poets and Seventh Fire.

Melaine Doane and Pardon Beggars play Zaphod's tonight. Cover's six bucks.

Sunday, March 20

Stay home and write that essay that's due tomorrow. Or write a poem for the English Department's George Johnston Poetry contest. There's $100 in it for you. Call Prof. Christopher Levenson at 788-2600, ext. 2325 for more info. Deadline's March 25.

Monday, March 21

The Bill Jupp Big Band does the swing thing at the Stone Angel tonight at 8:30 p.m. Admission is $4 for non-members and $2 for members.

Tuesday, March 22

We just love Julia Roberts! We love her so much we're all going down to the Mayfair at 7 p.m. to watch her "performance" in The Pelican Brief. We'll be staying for The Fugitive, which starts at 9:40 p.m.

Or, heaven forbid, if you're not in the mood for Julia, you may want to stay home and read a book. Sitting in for Charlatan production manager Kevin McKay, who didn't sleep at all last week, is Charlatan Op-Ed Editor Sheila Keenan, who didn't sleep at all last week either, but still had time to read a good book. She recommends Mama Day by Gloria Naylor. Says Keenan, "It's a tale of magic, love and common sense set in modern-day American South." Sounds lovely.

Montreal's Grim Skunk, a band that fuses punk with insane keyboards, plays the Penguin tonight.

Wednesday, March 23

Platoon, the film that inflicted Oliver Stone on the world, is playing at the Mayfair at 9:45 p.m. tonight.

Skank the night away with King Aparatus at the Penguin! See the story, page 25!

Thursday, March 24

Amnesty International and OPIRG-Carleton are presenting Manufacturing Consent: Noam Chomsky and the Media in Room 360 Tory at 7 p.m. It's free!

After watching a challenging movie like Manufacturing Consent, chances are you'll be hungry. Lucky for you, the Charlatan has another handy Snack Tip ready for you. This week's tip is the world famous Mo's Menagerie™. All you need is a hot dog bun, some peanut butter and one strip of bacon (ultra-crispy). Smear the peanut butter generously inside the bun. Add the bacon strip, making sure it's drowned in the peanut butter. And for you vegetarians out there, substitute five thin banana slices for the bacon. Have a glass of milk handy. Serves one.

If you have an event you want to appear in this calendar, you can drop your announcement off at The Charlatan, Room 531 Unicentre during regular business hours or you can fax us at 788-4051. Announcements must be in by the Friday before publication.

Spirit of the West. Grand Central. $22. What a way to celebrate St. Paddy's Day!

Orangeville's Bender, described in the press release as "bubble-grunge" (Oh no. -ed.), and Ottawa's emo-kids Unccommon Society play Zaphod's this evening. Cover is a measly loonie.

Jimmy George. The Penguin. $6. What a way to celebrate St. Paddy's Day!

Montreal artist Sophie Jodoin will be in town at 8 p.m. at Gallery 101 to discuss her exhibit Natures Mortes. This exhibit, which is showing at the gallery today until April 15, deals with "her preoccupation with the passing of time and the traces which time leaves imprinted behind." You can ask her about that one tonight. It's free.

Friday, March 18

If you're like us, you can never get enough cello. Well, today you can get your fill in Carleton's Alumni Theatre at noon. Cellist Julian Armour and pianist Jean Marchand are playing as part of the Friday lunch-time concert series.

Andrew Cash and opening band the Nothingheads play the Penguin tonight.

Mother Tongue, a very cool Canadian world music band, plays the Upstairs Club this very eve.

Zaphod's is celebrating its second anniversary tonight and tomorrow evening. This evening, six bucks gets you in to see Ottawa's Black Boot Trio and Vancouver up-and-comer Slowburn, a band that plays cool loud guitar stuff.

The Bourbon Tabernacle Choir's lead singer Dave Wall performs at the Pit tonight. Enjoy!

Saturday, March 19

Carleton political science professor V. (The "V" stands for Versatility! -ed.) Subramaniam is having a book launch at 7 p.m. in the chamber of Nepean's Civic Square. While most people would be content with just releasing one book, Subramaniam will be releasing four books about politics and sociology and a "book of dance dramas." He'll also be performing a "dance drama." It's free and refreshments will be served.

The Parsons Dance Company performs in the NAC Opera at 8 p.m. tonight. Tickets cost between $20 and $30.

The Old Sod Folk Music Society presents Utah Phillips, described glowingly in the press release as "a master at the theatre of folk music." They're playing tonight at the Glebe Community Centre at 8:30 p.m. Tickets are $12 for Old Sod members and $14 for the rest of us.

The Upstairs Club is hosting a Rock Against Racism benefit tonight. Show up and check out Kut Diamond, Resin

by Sid Younis
Charlatan Staff

Nana Vasconcelos, billed as one of the world's greatest percussionists, entertained a full house at the luxurious National Gallery auditorium on Saturday evening.

And no wonder. Vasconcelos's use of berimbau, tabla, gourds and other percussion instruments, combined with audio reverb-delay, evoked such strong emotional states in the audience that you could say that he plays audiences as well.

His ambient style and skilful vocals consumed listeners while his modest attitude made them feel close to him. Vasconcelos's music was so good, leaving the auditorium after the gig wasn't easy, despite the encore.

From his native Brazil, Vasconcelos brought the songs of the rainforest and asked the idle hands of the audience to spring up and clap to his elfin beckonings. It felt good.

7th

the charlatan's annual short story & poetry contest

1st, 2nd and 3rd place winners of the short story and poetry contest will receive their choice of books and cds (from a big pile) courtesy of The Charlatan.*

The 1st place winner will also receive 5 double passes to a special screening of Major League II, on March 28, courtesy of Warner Bros.

* and whatever else our advertisers donate to us

JUDGES

Short Story:

Kevin Gildea; English instructor at Carleton University

Barbara Leckie; English instructor at Carleton University

Poetry:

Bob Hogg; English instructor at Carleton University.

Professor Hogg is the author of five books of poetry.

TIRED?
DEPRESSED?
ANGST-RIDDEN?
MID-WEEK BOREDOM?
THEN SAVE YOURSELF AT

TUESDAYS TRAGEDY

featuring the musical shapes of CHUO-FM's Scott (DJ Bungle) Kennedy

BILLIARDS

$5 / hour per table

neat door prizes
weird happenings

$2.75

Tuesdays
all night long

"DJ BUNGLE"

from CHUO-FM's "MUSIC AT NOON" Fridays

CACHET CLUB

96 GEORGE STREET, BYWARD MARKET (NEXT TO SWISS CHALET)

ACCEPT NO SUBSTITUTES!

110 YORK ST., BYWARD 241-5455

HOULIHAN'S

"LADIES' NIGHT"

NO COVER CHARGE FOR WOMEN

Every Tuesday Night

15¢ WINGS TUES. & WED.
4:00 - 11:00

GOOD FOOD CHEAP! * POOL TABLES * VIDEO GAMES
AIR HOCKEY * HUGE DANCE FLOOR

TWO FLOORS OF FUN * PARTY NIGHTS
Sun, Mon, Tues, & Thurs

the CHARLATAN

CARLETON'S INDEPENDENT STUDENT NEWSPAPER

 Underwood

VOLUME 23

ISSUE 27

MARCH 24

1994

3 FOR 1 OR
50 % OFF

*Preston
Optical*

444 Preston St.
(2 BLOCKS FROM DOWS LAKE PAVILION)
230-0477

EYEWEAR SALE

Buy any pair of prescription glasses at regular price and receive a second pair of glasses of equal or lesser value plus a pair of daily wear soft contact lenses absolutely FREE!!!

Combination of 2 or 3 prescriptions. May be used with friends or family members for the 3 for 1 sale.

FRAMES AND LENSES

Buy one pair of prescription glasses and receive 50% OFF on both your frame and lenses

Bring in this ad
for an extra 10% OFF

SCHADILLAC
SALOON
Ottawa's Only
Authentic
Western Saloon

NCAA March Madness
Catch all the Games by the Big Screen

April 4
Championship Game Bash
Prizes
Beverage Specials

Come see us down
in the Byward Market
105 Murray St.
241-2233

99 Clarence St.
562-1320

CSS
CANADIAN SELF STORAGE
SUMMER STORAGE FOR STUDENTS

- * FREE RESERVATIONS
- * INDIVIDUAL UNITS
- * SECURITY PATROLLED

FROM $45 PER MONTH

CALL 72-STORE
VISA
Cleopatra at Hunt Club
727-8673

Est. 1977
DARLENE SCOLARIDES
Hair Shops...
SHAMPOO CUT & STYLE $12 SPECIAL (Requests pay extra)
PERMS $45 SPECIAL (Requests pay extra)
...For men and women
• 232-1763 •
248 Bank Street
BETWEEN LISGAR & COOPER • PARKING ON COOPER

TUCSON
ROADHOUSE

Mar. 24
Suicide Kings

Mar. 25, 26
Paul James

COMING UP
Mar. 31
The Boogiemani

Apr. 1, 2
Carlos Deljunco
(World Champion Harmonica Player)

2448 Bank Street (Bank at Huntclub) Ottawa
For Entertainment information call 738-7596

Tucson's
West

Mar. 24
Blues Jam with the Bird

Mar. 25, 26
Morgan Davis

COMING UP
Apr. 1, 2
In City Dreams

Apr. 8, 9
Rita Chiarelli

1541 Merivale Road, Ottawa
For Entertainment information call 228-6666

GRAND
CENTRAL
"The Mother of All Pizzas"
141 George St. 241-2727

SATURDAY & SUNDAY
Brunch 10AM to 3PM
Over 100 items to choose from
$8.99 -taxes

introducing
STEAK

Dinner
Includes
baked potato or fries,
regular salad &
garlic bread
$5.99 -taxes

EVENTS
Wednesday, March 2nd: Trooper
Wednesday, March 16th: Co. in James
Thursday, March 17th: Spirit of the West

ZAPHOD
BEEBLEBROX
THE WORLD IS TURNING ON
WED. MAR 23 (9PM) $8
I MOTHER FURK

THURS. MAR 24 (9PM) $1
BILLY GOAT (USA)
WITH CHUCKLEHEAD
WHAT THE FK IT'S ONLY A BUCK

FRI. MAR 25 (9PM) $7
THE MAHONES
+ THE INBREDS

SAT. MAR 26 (9PM) $10
FROM ENGLAND
TOM ROBINSON

WED. MAR 30 (9PM) $8
ALEJANDRO ESCOVEDO
(FRANK & ALBERTA'S REGULARS)
+ SOLUBLE FISH
MUSIC • BEVERAGES • ADVENTURE
27 YORK ST.

NDP declares war on students

by Derek DeCloe
Charlatan Staff

Ontario university students will be paying up to 20 per cent more in tuition fees over the next two years, Ontario Minister of Education and Training Dave Cooke announced March 23.

Cooke announced that the provincial government will allow universities to increase tuition by up to 10 per cent for each of the next two years.

The tuition ceiling increase means full-time undergraduate students in most programs at Carleton will pay $202 more next year, and $223 more in 1995-96.

Full-time undergraduate students in arts and social sciences at Carleton paid $2,026 in base tuition this year, plus over $340 in student fees.

"At these levels, Ontario students will continue to have tuition fees that are among the lowest in Canada," said Cooke in a statement in the provincial legislature.

In 1992-93, Carleton's tuition levels were lower than those at most Maritime universities, but higher than tuition at universities like McGill, Brandon and the University of Victoria.

"I think it sucks. We're paying enough as it is," said Mark Young, a first-year psychology student. "I think I'll still be able to go, but I'm getting by on Kraft Dinner and bologna right now."

The announcement ended months of speculation about the size of this year's tuition hike. Student leaders had feared an increase of up to 50 per cent, as the Council of Ontario Universities had called for in a proposal last August.

Spruce Riordon, Carleton's vice-president of finance and administration, said the government's decision was a "balance" between maintaining accessible universities and being able to pay for them.

"I think the government has made a fairly good decision," he said. "Ten per cent a year) is in the vicinity of what we had been expecting."

The university's board of governors must vote on the tuition increase before it comes into effect. The increase will likely be set at a board meeting in April.

The board will most likely take the government's lead and impose the 20 per cent hike over two years.

"That's been the history of tuition fees," said Charles Watt, secretary of the board.

Lucy Watson, president of the Carleton University Students' Association, said the government waited until late March, when students are very busy with assignments, to lessen the resistance to the increase. "It is a 'get them while they're weakest' attitude," she said.

Rather than organize a rally, CUSA asked students to sign petitions and letters of protest to President Robin Farquhar and other members of Carleton's administration.

Senate committee favors open doors

by Christine Gough
Charlatan Staff

A university senate committee rejected a faculty of social sciences proposal to increase the entrance mark requirements for first-year students in the faculty at a March 21 meeting.

Members of the senate committee on admissions and policy study said accepting the proposal would mean hundreds of potential students would not be able to enter Carleton.

The committee will recommend that the senate not pass the policy. The senate is the highest academic decision-making body at the university.

On Dec. 6, Carleton's social sciences faculty board voted to increase the admission requirements to 70 per cent from 60 per cent for pass programs and to 75 per cent from 65 per cent in honors programs in the faculty. The current average requirements in arts and social science programs, are often referred to as the "open door policy."

At the time of the faculty board proposal, some professors complained they were being overworked with too many students in their classes.

Committee member Juliette Kealey, secretary of the arts faculty board and a French professor, said the suggested social science policy was unfair to other departments at the university.

"I think it is contrary to what I understand to be current Carleton University policy, accepting fewer students despite financial constraints," Kealey said. "It would certainly have that effect."

Kealey said her second objection was that the arts faculty would become "a dumping ground" for students with lower averages.

Committee chair Robert Lovejoy, an English professor, said during the meeting that the proposal would not be a good idea because the link between the grades of incoming students with averages between 60 and 70 per cent and failure at university are not direct and proven.

"Some people with a 60-per-cent average come in and do very well," said Lovejoy. But he said that students entering Carleton with high-school averages over 70 per cent tend to achieve similarly high marks in university.

But political science professor Radha Jhappan says the university is accepting more students than it can handle. Seventy per cent of first-year social science students fail to meet the grade point average of 4, or C-, required to enter second year, she said.

This loss of students results in a tremendous waste of finances and a significant strain on the teaching staff and facilities, said Jhappan.

She said it meant the government and the university was spending money on students who were failing.

Jhappan cited statistics present in "The Final Report of the President's Commission on the Second Half-Century," released in December.

According to the report, between 1980 and 1990, total undergraduate course enrolment at Carleton increased by about 6,000 students. During the same period of time, the faculty of engineering has developed a student to professor ratio that is 2.5 times smaller than the ratio for the faculty of social sciences, says Jhappan.

She said the result is that professors in social science have to work much harder for the same amount of pay as their colleagues in engineering and science.

Jhappan said the social science faculty has become "a place for mediocre students to enter university."

Poli Sci prof monitored about comments

by Ryan Nakashima
Charlatan Staff

A Carleton professor's lectures are being monitored by another professor after complaints to the political science department that he made racist and sexist comments in class.

Professor Charles Schuetz's second-year international politics class has been monitored by political science professor Peter Emberley since March 11, anonymous sources in the class say.

When asked whether Emberley was monitoring the lectures, Schuetz says, "Well, you know he was. You were told that he was."

Emberley had no comment.

Schuetz made statements about black people in a Feb. 11 political science class that caused several students to leave class and subsequently file complaints with the department, say sources who refused to let their names be published for fear of the consequences.

They say Schuetz said there are very few black millionaires in North America because African cultures have been too sharing and generous. One source says she filed a complaint with the department during the week of Feb. 22.

Schuetz says he was describing in class that African village communities share a great deal. He says that is why socialist ideologies have been more attractive to people in Africa.

But Schuetz says he doesn't recall mentioning there are very few black millionaires in North America.

"Students hear all sorts of things and interpret all sorts of things and those kinds of things can happen."

Shirley Mills, the president of the Carleton University Academic Staff Association which represents professors and some administrators, says it is normal procedure for classes to be observed after valid complaints are made, "making sure the rights and responsibilities of the professor are taken into consideration."

Mills says she would not comment on specific cases.

"When things are still under investigation, you have to respect confidentiality," Mills said.

In a separate lecture on March 11, Schuetz allegedly told his second-year international politics class that former U.S. president George Bush ordered his troops to intervene in the Persian Gulf War because he was asked to do so by a woman, former British prime minister Margaret Thatcher.

When asked on March 22 if any complaints were brought to his attention, Schuetz had no comment.

When asked about the alleged instance of sexual insensitivity on March 11, Schuetz said, "No, that's a distorted aspect of what I said." He would not explain his remarks in class further.

"It wasn't necessarily that [Thatcher] asked [Bush]," says an anonymous source. "It was that women have an influence on men."

In an interview, Schuetz defended comments he may have made in class by highlighting his right to free speech.

"Do you believe in freedom of speech?" he asked. "If I have freedom of speech, I have freedom to say what I want, to say it without being investigated afterwards."

Miriam Smith, the assistant chair of the department of political science, says complaints about professors in the department are directed to her, but refused to comment on the matter.

Political science chair Jon Pammett and dean of social sciences Marilyn Marshall also had no comment.

Schuetz says he has been teaching at Carleton for 29 years and is tenured. A professor earns tenure after four or five years, after which he or she can only be fired if the university declares bankruptcy or for "just cause."

Just cause can include plagiarism, falsifying a résumé, failing to show up for classes or incompetence.

on the cover

Ah, the Underwood. It's a typewriter. And they don't make 'em anymore. William S. Burroughs used one. See the literary supplement on pg. 13

Cover Photo By TIM O'CONNOR

arts	27
literary supplement	13
national	9
news	3
opinion	11
sports	23
unclassifieds	21

index

Election debates interest few students

by Josée Bellemare
Charlatan Staff

Most Carleton students weren't around for the first Carleton University Students' Association debate for president and finance commissioner in Baker Lounge on March 22.

It was the first day of the new election campaign. A CUSA constitutional board ruled in March that the February election was unconstitutional and would have to be redone.

The moderator of the 15-minute presidential debate didn't seem pleased with the turn out of about 30 students, most of whom were candidates or campaign workers.

"It's important to ask questions and obviously we aren't getting any," said Theresa Cowan, CUSA's director of services.

"Please come out to the debates," said CUSA vice-president internal Rob Jamieson, who's running for finance commissioner. "It's pretty damn important."

"Students have to speak for what they want, so please get out and vote," said finance commissioner candidate Wendy Stewart.

Two new presidential candidates, who weren't in the running in February's election, made their debuts at the debate. Ben Wong, a first-year student without a major, is a new competitor.

Wong said he will lobby against any increase in student tuition if he is elected as president.

"I think we have to set an example by cutting (CUSA) administrative costs," Wong said. "I will take a $5,000 pay cut."

Wong said he will save money by cutting the CUSA executive from four positions to two.

Tim Porter, a second-year political sci-

CUSA elections: As fun as the Oscars with half the glitter. L-R: Kennedy, Wong ence and psychology student, said he is running for president because he wants to make CUSA more responsible to Carleton students.

"I feel we are not getting full value for our money, and I'd like to change this," he said. "I would like to cut the waste in CUSA — a big business (rather) than a shoddy kid shop."

Porter said if he were elected president, he would lobby to have student loans available to all students for the tuition increase which will occur during the 1994-95 year.

Richard Stanton, who was elected president in the first election and is running again, said he would like to achieve alternative funding from corporate sponsorship to construct more buildings with more classrooms.

"We need to foster a better community at Carleton," said Stanton. "I started a job. I want to finish it."

Foot Patrol co-ordinator Brenda Kennedy reiterated her presidential platform from the last election when she said she would like to lobby for food banks on campus and get a housing co-op at Carleton.

"I have lots of initiatives, and I would like to put forth these initiatives," said Kennedy.

She said later that if the Unicentre is expanded, she wants to create an office for student council representatives and office space for clubs and societies, not just businesses.

Another new presidential candidate, fourth-year architecture student Magnus Clarke, didn't take part in the debate because he said he wanted to observe the first debate and see what happens. In an interview, he said he would like to use his experience as the current vice-president of the school of architecture's students' association for the job of CUSA president.

He said he would like to increase funding for the Foot Patrol to improve safety for women on campus. He also said he wants to improve lighting on campus, such as in the tunnels and in the parking lots.

Mark Ovenden, a second-year engineering student, is running for president as well. He didn't take part in the debate either. Ovenden said he would like to cut the "bullshit" that goes on in CUSA, but didn't give specifics as to how to do it.

New candidates for finance commissioner in this election are Terry Weststrate, a third-year bachelor of commerce student, and Mark Keliar, a fourth-year architecture student.

Trevor Mulzer, Jamieson and Stewart are running again for finance commissioner.

Stewart said during the debate she would like to get corporate sponsorship fees to fund a grocery store on campus without any funds coming out of CUSA budget.

Jamieson said he wants to have more services available to students.

"You expand services . . . to do better for students," he said.

Voting begins March 29 and ends on March 31. □

Clarification

In the March 10 issue of The Charlatan, we reported that Wendy Stewart's final campaign budget "showed she spent $151.30, over the $150 limit." This might give the impression that she spent $151.30 over the allowable $150 limit. In fact, her budget showed she spent $1.30 over the limit, due to a miscalculation. □

BAXTER'S
SECOND FLOOR
BAR & GRILL

MONDAYS & SATURDAYS
PARTY NITES
$2.50

- WINGS
- ZUCCHINI
- NACHOS
- CAESAR SALAD
- ESCARGOT
- ONION RINGS

5 PM - CLOSE

TUESDAY NIGHTS
SENATORS

Hockey Ticket GIVE AWAY
Chicken Wing .19¢ ea.

WEDNESDAYS
1/2 PRICE FOOD
5 P.M. - 11 P.M.

THURSDAY NIGHT
"A Carleton Tradition"

Chicken Wings 19¢ ea.

1344 Bank Street
(at Riverside)
738-3323

The Ceremonial Guard

This summer, participate in the colourful Changing the Guard Ceremony on Parliament Hill. You will be paid from May 11 to August 30, 1994, while learning basic military techniques with a group of dynamic young men and women.

Join the Reserve and enjoy summer employment with a difference.

For more information, contact:
The Governor General's Foot Guards
Cartier Square Drill Hall
Ottawa, Ontario
K1A 0K2 (613) 995-4020 (Collect)

The Reserve:
Rewarding
part-time
employment

lan, full-time student and member of the Ceremonial Guard during the summer months.

Canada

CANADIAN ARMED FORCES
REGULAR AND RESERVE

More complaints against CKCU programming

by Michael Mainville
Charlatan Staff

Another complaint has been filed with the Canadian Radio-television and Telecommunications Commission concerning programming on CKCU, Carleton's campus radio station.

A complaint was filed last January, accusing some of CKCU's programming of being anti-Catholic. This month another complaint has been filed by REAL Women of Canada, a conservative women's lobby group.

The CRTC is a federal agency responsible for regulating Canadian broadcasting. It has the power to regulate the content of programs, issue broadcasting licences and revoke them.

The subject of the recent complaint was Kevin Gibbs, host of Defiant Voices, CKCU's gay, lesbian and bisexual issues

program.

In her March 7 letter to the CRTC, REAL Women of Canada's national vice-president C. Gwendolyn Landolt said statements by Gibbs were inappropriate for public airwaves.

On the March 2 program Gibbs criticized a press release issued that day by REAL Women. He primarily criticized a section of the press release dealing with REAL Women's statement that legislation on sexual orientation proposed by the Ontario government would likely be opposed by the majority of Canadians.

"A May 1992 Gallup poll has shown that 61 per cent of Canadians oppose legalizing homosexual relationships," quotes Landolt in her letter to the CRTC.

In the press release, REAL Women was criticizing provincial legislation which would, among other things, end housing discrimination against gays and lesbians.

In her letter, Landolt said Gibbs associated her organization with racism and anti-Semitism, thereby damaging the reputation of REAL Women.

Landolt's letter includes a transcript of some of the episode where Gibbs refers to the principles in the REAL Women press release, saying: "What is this crap? This is the same racist bullshit these people have been peddling forever, and it isn't any more valid now than it was 10 or 15 years ago, or in any other struggle."

In her letter to the CRTC, Landolt said describing REAL Women in this manner is "completely unacceptable" and recommended "that immediate action be taken on this matter."

While CKCU has suspended Gibbs, station manager Max Wallace says it is for a different reason than his criticism of REAL Women policies. Wallace says he was suspended from broadcasting for two weeks because he used the word "bullshit" on air.

"CKCU has a policy against the use of gratuitous obscenity on the air," says Wallace.

Both Gibbs and Wallace say Gibbs was not suspended because of the content of his editorial.

Wallace says Gibbs being suspended following the complaint is "just a coinci-

CKCU cont'd on pg. 6.

Foot patrollers attacked in tunnels

by Charlatan Staff

A female member of the Foot Patrol was assaulted by an intoxicated male who was being assisting on Wednesday, March 9 at about 11 p.m.

The two patrollers encountered the man in the tunnels near the Stormont-Dundas residence building.

"They saved him from about seven or eight scraps; he was itching for a fight," says Foot Patrol coordinator Brenda Kennedy.

Kennedy says the man was grabbing the female patroller around the torso area.

The man was pushed away by both patrollers and was last seen at the Sunnyside bus shelter.

The man is described as male, 24 to 25, five foot, nine inches tall and weighing 150 pounds.

He has short, dark, wavy hair and was wearing blue jeans and a purple high-gloss ski jacket.

The department of university safety issued a safety poster about the incident March 14.

Len Boudreault, the assistant director of university safety, says the department doesn't have any more information than is already on the safety poster.

Boudreault says the poster was put up to let people know that the incident occurred. □

Kevin Gibbs is gaining the respect of radical lefties everywhere.

PROSPECTOR

Guaranteed
for as long as you own the feet
you bought them for.

Our Spring/Summer collection continues the Prospector tradition of creating the finest outdoor footwear in the world. We know of no other manufacturer that spends more time, devotes more care, or uses finer materials in the construction of their footwear. In fact, we believe in the superior quality of our footwear so much, we'll replace your soles free of charge if they ever wear out or break down.

H.H. BROWN Serious footwear since before you were born. Way before.

Take $5 on us.

To receive your $5 along with postage reimbursement, send this coupon with your original receipt and the completed guarantee card to:

H.H. Brown, P.O. Box 950, Richmond, Quebec J0B 2H0. Footwear must have been purchased after March 1st, 1994. Limit one coupon per customer. Offer expires June 30, 1994.

Prospector footwear is available at: Mark's Work Wearhouse, Footlocker, Eaton's, Brown Shoes, The Boot Shop, Calderone, Work World, Next Step, Sporting Life, Apples Saddlery, Urban Trails, Arlies Sport Shop, Winnipeg Fur Exchange, Pavane, R & R, Kountry Kickers, Nero Bianco and other fine stores.

PROSPECTOR

Gibbs gets suspended for gratuitous swearing

CKCU cont'd from pg. 5.

dence." He says the only way the REAL Women complaint is linked to the suspension is "in the sense that they brought it to our attention that he used the word 'bullshit.'" Just as he said in January with Eady's complaint, Wallace says he supports Gibbs's right to express himself freely.

Eady, a member of an organization called the Catholic Civil Rights League, has not had a response from the CRTC. Eady claimed Gibbs and co-host Kerry

Durant attacked both himself and the Catholic Church during Dec. 1 and Dec. 8 broadcasts, by making "a deliberate attempt to offend me and as many people of the Catholic faith as possible," wrote Eady in his letter of complaint to the CRTC.

The CRTC has yet to rule on Eady's complaint, following audio difficulties with CKCU recordings of the Dec. 1 and Dec. 8 broadcasts, which were blank. Following the CRTC's request for the recordings of these broadcasts, CKCU discovered that its equipment was faulty and the episodes were not taped.

Wallace says these complaints are starting to make him suspicious that CKCU is being monitored by a variety of right-wing organizations.

"The fact that REAL Women transcribed the entire passage word for word is obvious evidence that someone is monitoring us. I don't think it's in the habit of your average listener to tape record shows off the radio," says Wallace.

Marie Bender, an information director with the CRTC, says a decision concerning Eady's complaint will "come as soon as possible."

Bender says complaints such as these are filed and reviewed when stations' licences come up for renewal. CKCU's licence was last renewed in 1989 and if this year's renewal is a success, it will be extended until 1999.

But Wallace says he doesn't think the complaints will have any effect on CKCU's upcoming licence renewal.

"CKCU has a very good reputation in the community and with the CRTC. We've proven that we are responsible over the years." □

PONTIAC SUNBIRD LE SPORT COUPE

Fly the coupe!

PONTIAC SUNBIRD LE SPORT COUPE

- Standard 4-wheel anti-lock brakes

- Air conditioning

- AM/FM stereo cassette

Plus much more • rear spoiler • power automatic door locks • tinted glass • reclining front bucket seats • 24-hour Roadside Assistance††

With your choice of two ways to take off.

The Performance you expect. Priced Right!

SmartLease

$189

per month over 36 months*
THE FIRST PAYMENT'S ON US!
Or special offer for graduates

$750

bonus from your Pontiac Dealer

PONTIAC
Performance
TEAM

*Offers apply to the 1994 Pontiac Sunbird LE Coupe on a 36 month lease for $189 per month equipped as described. A minimum down payment of $1,493 and $300 security deposit is required. Some mileage conditions apply. Fee $911 $525, license, insurance and taxes not included. Offers apply to 1994 new or demonstrator models. Dealer order or trade may be necessary. Dealer may lease for less. Offers apply to qual feed retail customers only. These offers may not be combined or used with any other offer. See Dealer for details. Available to any person who has proof that they graduated or will graduate from a recognized post secondary institution during the period September 1, 1991 through August 31, 1994. Graduate program may not be combined or used with any other offer. First month Smart Lease payment will be waived for qualified purchasers. Minimum down payment applies. †Some charges may apply. See Dealer for details.

Have you been harassed in residence?

We are looking for cases of harassment and violence in residence; what happened, who were the perpetrators and how did housing and RRRRA respond if they were informed?

Were the incidents sexual, in response to your race, gender, sexual orientation, disability or religion? Anonymity is guaranteed.

Leave information in Charlatan box REZ...

The Committee Combating Violence and Harassment in Residence

IN A CLASS BY ITSELF

1991 - 1994
GRADUATES
1994 GENERAL MOTORS GRADUATE PROGRAM

GET YOUR $750*
REBATE

ON THE PURCHASE OR LEASE OF ANY GM CAR,
LIGHT TRUCK
OR VAN

IF YOU'RE IN YOUR LAST YEAR
AT COLLEGE OR UNIVERSITY OR A
RECENT GRADUATE, CHECK OUT THIS
ONCE-IN-A-LIFETIME OPPORTUNITY
FROM GENERAL MOTORS

Or Call 1-800-GM-DRIVE

*OFFER DOES NOT APPLY TO SIBSON VEHICLES
DISTRIBUTED BY GENERAL MOTORS
THE $750 REBATE INCLUDES GST.

RESIDENCE ACCOMMODATION

Residence rooms are currently available for men in their first year of studies!

If you are a full time student and would like the convenience of living on campus, please visit or call the Department of Housing and Food Services, 261 Stormont House,
788-5612.

Graduate Students' Association

EMPLOYMENT OPPORTUNITIES

Office Assistant

Duties commence May 1, 1994 for one full year, and fill between 3 and 5 hours per day. Candidates should have basic office skills including word-processing abilities, and some past experience. Specific duties and remuneration are under review.

Orientation Co-ordinator

Duties include the design, promotion, and production of Orientation activities for September 1994, although specific preparations are necessary by early summer. This is a contract position, and its successful culmination may lead to further event contracts.

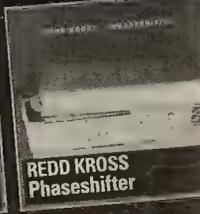

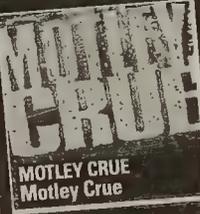

Academic Issues Co-ordinator

Duties include facilitating the graduate N.U.G. Caucus, and keeping abreast of graduate student academic issues on campus. Majority of responsibility occurs beginning September 1994, although several issues need to be attended to over the summer months. Remuneration is under review.

Please submit resumé by 8 April 1994 to the GSA office - 511A Unicentre, attention VP Internal. Preference will be given to graduate students at Carleton.

The GSA is an equal-opportunity employer, with a qualified affirmative action hiring policy.

UNSAFE MUSIC

 SOUNDGARDEN Superunknown	 GIN BLOSSOMS New Miserable Experience	 LOWEST OF THE LOW Hallucigenia	 ORIGINAL SOUNDTRACK Reality Bites	 VARIOUS ARTISTS Club Cutz Vol. 5
 US3 Hand On The Torch	 eternal Always & Forever	 CRACKER Kerosene Hat	 CELL Living Room	 CHAINSAW KITTENS Pop Heiress
 MERLIN A Noise Supreme	 MARK LANEGAN Whiskey For The Holy Ghost	 COCTEAU TWINS Four-Calendar Cafe	 THE CHARLATANS Up To Our Hips	 REDD KROSS Phaseshifter
 GREEN DAY Dookie	 ELVIS COSTELLO Brutal Youth	 MOTLEY CRUE Motley Crue	 THE SCREAMIN' CHEETAH WHEELIES The Screamin' Cheetah Wheelies	 NINE INCH NAILS The Downward Spiral

$14⁹⁹
CD

SAFE PRICES

PRICES IN EFFECT UNTIL APRIL 10/94. HMV RESERVES THE RIGHT TO LIMIT QUANTITIES.

- Rideau Centre
- St. Laurent Shopping Centre
- Bank & Sparks
- Les Promenades de l'Outaouais, Gatineau

Hear HMV
Here

Alberta profs and admin face rollback

by Ryan Nakashima
Charlatan Staff

Facing an 11-per-cent cutback in provincial funding for education next year, Alberta's two major universities are negotiating with faculty and staff to roll back their wages.

Alberta's Tory government announced in February it would cut education funding by 11 per cent in 1994-95, seven per cent in 1995-96 and three per cent in 1996-97, eliminating roughly $300 million from its education budget over three years.

The University of Calgary, to satisfy next year's $18-million reduction in its funding, has raised tuition by 12 per cent — the maximum allowable amount — and is looking to cut employee salaries.

Administrators at the university have been negotiating "quite intensively" to reduce the salaries and benefits of 4,300 professors, staff and other employees since February, says Don Detomasi, the university's associate vice-president of planning.

Between 50 and 60 senior administrators at the university have already agreed to a five-per-cent pay cut starting April 1. The move will save about $260,000 next year, says Detomasi.

Detomasi says the university is attempting to get its professors, support staff and some administrators to accept a five-per-cent pay cut as well.

He says the rollback, along with roughly six per cent of the university's operating budget trimmed through cuts to programs to be announced later this spring, should meet the grant reduction from the province this year.

Chima Nkemdirim, the vice-president external of the U of C's student union, says the cuts to post-secondary education are unprecedented.

"I don't think any post-secondary institution has ever faced these kinds of cutbacks before. It's just stunning."

"We're dealing with a government that doesn't see much value in post-secondary education," says Nkemdirim.

Nkemdirim says he fears the university will trim teaching assistant jobs from first- and second-year classes in which 200 to 300 students are often enrolled.

"Students are going to have a tougher time getting through the first two years of university," he says.

At the University of Alberta, the administration's four vice-presidents have also agreed to a five-per-cent wage cut, starting July 1.

But talks about salary reductions with the bargaining unit representing professors, librarians and departmental administrators have yet to be concluded.

The university's funding grant from the province for 1994-95 has been slashed by $29.7 million. Last month, the university also announced a proposal to cut and merge programs to compensate for the nearly 20 per cent in lost funding over the next three years.

In salary rollback talks with academic staff, the U of A negotiating team originally proposed to cut 10 per cent from the salaries of 2,000 members of the academic staff association, but this position has changed, says Gordon Unger, the association's executive secretary.

Unger says the amount the university will save depends on how much of a rollback the association accepts, but he says the university's savings will probably fall short of the cuts from the province.

"We're well away from opening positions, but still far away from closing positions," says Unger, adding he expects the negotiations with the association to conclude by the end of April.

Over the last 15 years, the average salary of staff at the University of Alberta has slipped when compared to other Canadian universities, says Unger.

The average salary of academic staff at the university — faculty, administrators and some academic managers — is about $70,000, says Unger.

Meanwhile at Carleton, the average salary of academic staff is $78,937, according to Brian Edgecombe, the business agent at the Canadian Union of Public Employees Local 2323, which represents Carleton's teaching assistants, research assistants and sessional lecturers.

Edgecombe quoted figures from administration's 1993-94 budget plan and from figures released by administration during last year's social contract negotiations.

Professors' salaries at Ontario universities have grown faster than salaries in Alberta over the last 15 years.

For example, in 1981 full-time professors at Carleton were paid at least $31,420 per year, according to Statistics Canada. This was $5,000 less than professors at the University of Alberta.

But by 1993, Carleton professors earned more than their Alberta counterparts. Carleton professors made at least $63,840, and University of Alberta professors made at least $61,593.

While Alberta universities are negotiating to cut salaries of staff and professors, about 730 members of Carleton University's Academic Staff Association have had their salaries frozen until 1996, says David Van Dine, the assistant director of academic staff relations at Carleton. Both professors and departmental administrators will be affected by the salary freeze.

Under Ontario's social contract, members of the association, which includes professors and some administrators, also have to take about seven or eight unpaid days off per year, says Van Dine. □

Student loans program under review by gov't

by G. Bruce Rolston
The Varsity, University of Toronto

TORONTO (CUP) — The federal and provincial governments are in confidential negotiations over the future of the Canada Student Loan program.

The Liberal government says it wants to carry out an election promise made by defeated Prime Minister Kim Campbell and hike the weekly loan maximum on Canada Student Loans for the first time in 10 years.

Under the federal proposal from Human Resources Development, the weekly loan maximum on Canada Student Loans would increase by $60 a week, to $165 a week from $105 a week. Ottawa says the increased maximum loan amounts will improve accessibility to university education.

But Richard Jackson, who is heading up negotiations for Ontario, says Human Resources Development is planning to do this without increasing the amount it actually spends by getting the provinces to foot the bill.

Jackson says the new formula may shift more of the burden of supporting student assistance programs on to the provinces.

Both the provinces and Ottawa run student loan programs. The federal government suggests increasing the annual Canada Student Loan limit for a 34-week school year to $5,600 from $3,500.

Currently, all Canada Student Loans under $3,500 are covered solely by the federal loan program. Provincial loans on top of Canada Student Loans only kick in for students needing larger amounts.

Jackson says Ottawa's new proposal would make the provinces cover 40 per cent of all Canada Student Loans, regardless of their size. Thus, even loans under $3,500 would require the provincial government to pay for a portion of the loan.

The result would be that the cost of the increased loan limit offered to students by the feds would be paid for by the provinces. And since the increased loan limit would only apply to the 60 per cent of the loan covered by the federal government, only students who receive very large loans — over $6,000 — would benefit from the increased loan limit.

Most students receive less than $3,500 per year in loans from the federal government.

"From zero to $6,000, the federal government is saving money," Jackson says.

The negotiations are expected to conclude sometime in April. It is unsure whether any changes will take place for this fall.

Carol Fleck, Carleton's students awards director, says changing the system now would be impossible.

"Applications (for next year) have already been sent out to students," she said. "It's too late."

The discussions come at a time when provincial education ministries across Canada are attempting to find solutions to the high cost of their student aid programs.

Carl Gillis, chair of the Canadian Federation of Students, says the proposed changes are little more than a public relations ploy.

"If that's what they're pulling, it is a public relations exercise rather than any substantial reform."

The federal government also wants to change the way students' needs assessment formulas are calculated.

Many provinces calculate students' financial needs based on their family's income. The provinces are resisting federal government plans to adopt a uniform national type of assessment that includes fixed assets such as land or vehicles as well as income.

Several provinces, along with student lobby groups, say including assets in the calculation would be inequitable. The governments of B.C., Alberta and Saskatchewan have opposed using assets in assessments because it discriminates against students whose have little monetary income but only fixed assets.

But Gerry Godsoe, student aid policy chief for Human Resources Development, says a uniform system is necessary.

"We're trying to get a system that's totally equal across the country."

Godsoe pointed out that some provinces, including Alberta and Nova Scotia, already include some form of assets in their assessments.

Godsoe says he could not comment on the loan structure negotiations, as they are still ongoing.

"There has been no announcement by the minister (Human Resources Development Minister Lloyd Axworthy). Until there's an announcement, I can't tell you anything." □

Carleton students take on the environment

by Christine Gough
Charlatan Staff

An environmental fair was held in Baker Lounge on March 16. Some of the environmental groups present included Friends of the Earth, Friends of the Wolf and other groups promoting awareness of environmental issues.

The participants, both students and non-students, answered questions, sold cookies and handed out information pamphlets.

Chloe Sage, a Carleton student and a representative of the Ottawa Coalition to Save Clayoquot Sound, says it's difficult to raise environmental awareness among students.

"A lot of Canadians believe someone else will do it. They think that as long as the environmentalists are there they can just say thanks. They don't have to do anything." □

MARK LAMB

OUSA loses important referendum at U of T

New student lobby group suffers setback in bid to challenge CFS in Ontario

by Michael Mainville
Charlatan Staff

In a referendum held at the University of Toronto March 17, students voted solidly against joining the Ontario Undergraduate Student Alliance.

Throughout this year, some universities in Ontario have been holding referendums about joining the new student lobby group, whose policies include higher tuition fees and automatic loans for all university students.

The alliance was formed last year, and its membership has grown to include student groups at Wilfrid Laurier University, Waterloo University, Queen's University and the University of Western Ontario.

The Arts and Science Students' Union, which represents over 13,000 full-time undergraduate students at the University of Toronto's St. George College, decided in September to delay its OUSA referendum until spring to coincide with their student council elections. St. George's is the university's largest college.

When the college's referendum was finally held, students voted 1,548 to 977 against joining OUSA. The part-time students association at U of T remains a member of OUSA.

Last year, before considering membership in OUSA, the Arts and Science Students' Union left the Canadian Federation of Students, the national student lobby group, and its Ontario wing. At that time, the union said it was unhappy with the CFS's representation of students and unrealistic aim of wiping out tuition.

Uma Sarkar, president of the Arts and Science Students' Union, says U of T students voted against OUSA membership for a number of reasons, but primarily because they did not agree with OUSA policies.

"Their policies just couldn't stand above scrutiny," Sarkar says.

Sarkar says OUSA's proposal to raise tuition and compensate for the increased cost with an improved student loan program did not gain support from any U of T student groups because the proposal wasn't practical.

"The government has reached its limit in OSAP. If that's the case, tuition hikes just don't make sense," she says.

She says OUSA's proposals would decrease accessibility to university, and would mean increased student debt following graduation.

However, Katherine Philips, president of Queen's student council, says "they (U of T students) didn't understand what OUSA is all about."

Queen's Alma Mater Society is a member of OUSA and Philips represented OUSA during the campaign to gain support at U of T.

"They have been misinformed about what OUSA could do for them," she says.

She says U of T's student council is misguided in thinking students don't need an organization to lobby the provincial government.

"They overestimate their ability to lobby Queen's Park as an individual institution," she says.

Philips says U of T's refusal to join OUSA won't hurt the organization.

"We have enjoyed support from different groups across Ontario. Even without U of T we still have almost half of Ontario students."

If the membership proposal at U of T would have passed, Philips says OUSA would have overtaken the Ontario branch of CFS as the leading student lobby group in Ontario because it would represent more students. □

CFS gets split decision in votes at Laurentian, Ottawa

by Caron Watt
Charlatan Staff

Two recent referendums in Ontario on membership fee increases for the Canadian Federation of Students have resulted in one acceptance and one rejection of a $4-per-student fee increase.

The Laurentian University General Students' Association held a referendum March 16 and 17. Students voted 439 to 170 in favor of a fee increase to $11 per student from $7. By accepting the fee increase, they also voted to remain members in the CFS, says the association's vice-president external and acting president Heather Bishop.

Voter turnout was low, at only 15.3 per cent of the 3,900 students the association represents, she says.

The University of Ottawa also held a fee increase referendum from March 15 to 17. U of O students rejected the fee increase 1,955 to 1,403.

"I don't feel very good (about losing at U of O) but I'm not deeply disappointed," says CFS deputy chair Jamie McEvoy.

The loss at U of O was by no means a landslide, says McEvoy. "The fact we're doing as well as we are is heartening."

McEvoy says member schools who don't agree to the fee increase will not lose out on any of CFS's services, he says.

The CFS lobbies governments on behalf of Canadian students and provides such services as Travel Cuts and a national student health plan.

"We're going to decide what to do in a year and a half to two years," he says. "We'll most likely try again (to get the fee increase)."

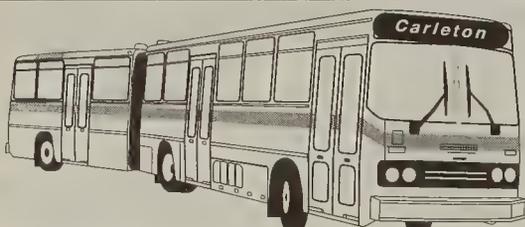

A series of referendums on CFS fee increases and membership over the past year have resulted in the loss of several members, but the association has also gained two new members.

With the loss at U of O, two universities have now rejected CFS fee increases. Five universities have now accepted fee increases, including Laurentian University.

A Carleton referendum in October accepting a $4 fee increase was overturned by the student association's constitutional board in December because a No committee was prevented from campaigning.

Several more referendums are planned over the next month at University of Moncton in New Brunswick, University of Western Ontario in London, Dalhousie University in Halifax and the University of Guelph.

McEvoy says the CFS will review the referendum results from the past year and "evaluate where we are at and decide where we're going to go from there" at its annual general meeting May 14. □

OPEN HOUSE Tuesday March 29

Baker Lounge, Unicentre
1:30 p.m to 4 p.m.

YOUR COMMENTS PLEASE!

After consultation with your student association, faculty and administrative representatives, we have come up with three new options to improve bus service to and from the campus. Route 19 is central to each option. They were designed to keep route 19 on campus but to have it serve more of Bronson Avenue between the campus and Rideau Street. Please review these and let us have your comments.

Option A: Route 19 would take Bronson and Slater to Rideau Street.

Option B: Route 19 would take Bronson, Somerset and Bank to Rideau Street.

Option C: Route 19 would use the same streets as route 4 between Sunnyside/Bronson and Rideau.

- The new proposal also includes increased hours of service which would run weekdays between 8 a.m. and 10 a.m. and afternoons between 3 p.m. and 6:30 p.m.
- OC Transpo will have a large lighted shelter similar to those on Albert and Slater and we're looking for your ideas on where to place it on campus.

Come by and discuss these and other transit issues with our planners. If you can't make the open house you can call in your preferred option to our special answering machine at: 741-4050, or fax your comments to: 741-7359. The deadline is Tuesday, April 5. You can also drop off your written comments to Christine Haselsteiner at the CUSA office.

A report will go to the OC Transpo Commission in May and the approved option will go into effect in September.

RecruitingEdge

For the edge in today's job market

CAREER OPPORTUNITIES

These days there are limited career opportunities to go around, so give yourself the edge over the competition by using our services. RecruitingEdge will develop a targeted resumé for a specific company or industry.

ADVANTAGES

- We will meet you at home/campus
- Guarantee your satisfaction
- 48 hour turn around time
- Deliver your resumé upon completion
- Prices starting from $59.99

Don't Wait Call RecruitingEdge at
(613) 825-4487

CRUISE JOBS

Students Needed!

Earn up to $2,000+ per month working for Cruise Ships or Land-Tour Companies. World Travel (Hawaii, Mexico, the Caribbean, etc.). Summer and Full-Time employment available. No experience necessary. For more information call:

Cruise Employment Services
(206)634-0468 ext.C4006

A ACCEPTABLE ALTERNATIVE MINI STORAGE

Hume Trading Company Limited
MINI STORAGE SPACE

Going home for the summer? Need safe, clean, secure storage for your desk, furniture and personal items? From $20.00 per month. 4863 Bank St. Call 822-7666. Lowest rates in the region since 1963.

We are not amused

Students, don't be fooled into believing you're getting a break with the latest tuition hikes.

On March 23, the provincial Minister of Education and Training Dave Cooke announced there would be a tuition increase of 20 per cent over the next two years. This means an extra $425 out of students' pockets, on top of the average basic tuition cost of $2,026 in Ontario.

But, if Cooke thinks students can handle another increase, he should think again.

Any increase is robbery. Consider that between 1985-86 and 1992-93, tuition rose a phenomenal 55.8 per cent at Carleton, according to Statistics Canada. With 20 per cent more in hikes, this will mean a 75.8 per cent increase in tuition.

Consider that job opportunities, both during school and after graduation, are dwindling. Statistics Canada recently reported that the unemployment rate for 15- to 24-year-olds in November 1993 was 17.5 per cent, as compared to 11.3 per cent in November 1989. Consider that wages have not risen sufficiently to cover the everyday cost of living, much less this tuition hike.

What's doubly unreasonable is the way students were kept in the dark for so long about the hikes by Cooke and the Ontario government.

The rumor mill started churning in August with the Council of Ontario Universities' proposal to raise tuition by 30 to 50 per cent over two years.

Cooke did nothing to stop the speculation. Way back in November he told us to expect a "substantial increase," and that he did not consider seven per cent — the maximum allowed in the last three years — substantial.

After a year of speculation about tuition increases of 30 to 50 per cent over two years, are we supposed to feel grateful now that it's only 20 per cent over two years? NO!

Cooke made us live in fear for a year. He made it very difficult for protests to be organized because no one knew exactly what we were protesting against. Last year, the tuition hike ceiling was announced in November and there's no reason why it couldn't have been announced in November this year.

Many students have ignored the impact of tuition hikes over the last few years because they have been fed various arguments to rationalize the increases. But if you think about it, these arguments are full of the same stuff Cooke is:

1. Students should bear more of the burden of education.
Currently in Ontario, student tuition accounts for just over 20 per cent of the operating budget of a university. Some people say it's unreasonable for tax dollars to be spent on giving people an education that will give them a higher salary in the future.

But who pays those tax dollars? By and large, it is the upper middle class and businesses who pay the most taxes. These are people who have university degrees or who benefit from the highly skilled workforce provided by Canadian universities.

2. Tuition hikes won't be so bad because I'm only in university for a few years.

In fact, students are taking more time than ever to complete even the most basic degrees, and each year tuition goes up it gets harder to make up the cost. As well, students entering the workforce need higher qualifications than ever and may need to stay in school longer to get more degrees.

3. The government can't afford to pay more for education.
This is full of shit. The government needs to change its priorities and direct more funding to education if it has any hope of digging this country out of the sorry mess it's in. Students become workers and business people, and thus become taxpayers, part of the solution to the debt and funding problem.

This degradation of the quality of our lives and education has been forced upon us at legislative gunpoint. It's time to turn the gun around, get organized and realized that this is a watershed moment for students.

For all the students out there reading this: don't let the government lull you into thinking you got off easy. It's not just a 10-per-cent increase each year for the next two years, but the steady decline in the quality and affordability of education.

Ten per cent per year is too much, Mr. Cooke. It's obvious your government doesn't care a bit about students.

You don't care one damn bit. AK, SK, RW

OPINION

Vote for peace in El Salvador

by Tony Rogge

Tony Rogge is newsletter editor for SalvAide. SalvAide is a non-profit organization that raises funds for projects like road construction in El Salvador. It distributes the funds to non-profit organizations working in El Salvador. Four Carleton students are in El Salvador as election observers through SalvAide.

On March 20, Salvadorans went to the polls after 12 years of civil war. The war left 75,000 dead, 1.6 million displaced and countless thousands tortured or wounded. The scars are everywhere — on buildings, on the land and in the memories of the people.

Just as they did in Vietnam, the U.S. supported scorched earth campaigns that literally burned El Salvador to the ground in the '80s. At the height of the civil war El Salvador received some 1 billion in U.S. aid every day, most of it going to the military, which suppressed the popular will of the people.

Paramilitary death squads aided and abetted by the armed forces, the treasury police and "respectable" political forces like the ARENA party assassinated labor leaders, campesino (peasant) leaders and students. Anyone who dared to organize themselves against the repressive elements of the regime in San Salvador risked ending up in a gutter somewhere with their eyes gouged out and their genitalia mutilated or stuffed into their mouths. By the mid-'80s, political killings numbered over 1,000 per month.

Throughout all this the Salvadoran government denied the abuses ever existed while its backers in Washington categorically rejected any report from church groups and Amnesty International that attempted to tell it like it was.

To many in El Salvador the March 20 election represents a significant break from the past and an opportunity for Salvadorans to reconcile and move towards a better tomorrow. The cynic however will point out that this isn't the first election Salvadorans have had in the last decade. In fact there were a series of elections in El Salvador right up until 1990, all of which were tainted by massive irregularities, violence, intimidation and of course, completely devoid of any opposition candidates from the left.

The March 20 election, however, is different. And though it was conducted amidst a climate of fear, confusion and intimidation, it truly is a departure from the cruel jokes of the past. Violence continues to be perpetrated against members of popular political organizations on the left and many FMLN (the main opposition party to ARENA) candidates in rural El Salvador could not campaign in the open.

Nonetheless, Salvadorans finally got the chance to express a vision of El Salvador's future through a general election that not only includes opposition from popular forces and the left, but perhaps more importantly is being conducted in an era where a spirit of reconciliation and reconstruction are tangible alternatives to ongoing bloodshed and a return to civil war.

But without continued and increasing international pressure, this election and the hope that it represents may be for naught. Efforts to create new institutions, the type that would help build a strong, tolerant and dynamic civil society in El Salvador, are being met with increasing resistance by the ARENA party and its allies. The ARENA party's presidential candidate, Armando Calderon Sol, has already indicated that a victory for his party will be construed as a mandate to ditch the peace accords signed by the current El Salvadoran president Alfredo Cristiani of the ARENA party and insurgent groups two years ago.

Reneging on the accords would mean scrapping the new civilian police force program, delaying reform in the courts, appropriating land that has already been transferred to ex-combatants or people returning to their homes after being displaced by the war and the continuation of an ARENA-sponsored amnesty bill that has granted immunity to identified human rights abusers. Ultimately, these actions would undermine the peace process.

It is clear that Canadians could and should be doing more to support the ongoing peace process in El Salvador. Way back in 1988, the House of Commons special committee on the peace process in Central America proposed a plan that would make Central America a special priority in Canadian foreign policy. Unfortunately, it seems that commitment has gone out the window.

It is time that Canadians realized that our traditional views on peacekeeping and international aid just don't cut it any more and El Salvador is a case in point. Canada must move beyond the old models and responses.

Canadians can help create the conditions for peace in El Salvador by promoting civil society and working with grassroots organizations instead of just working with the polarized factions. We must urge our government to become more active in this regard.

LETTERS

the CHARLATAN
CARLETON'S INDEPENDENT STUDENT NEWSPAPER

March 24, 1994
VOLUME 23 NUMBER 27

Editor-in-Chief Mo Gannon
Production Manager Kevin McKay
Business Manager Jill Perry

NEWS
Editors Mario Carlucci, Brent Dowdall
Contributors Josée Bellemare, Derek DeCloet, Christine Gough, Michael Mainville, Ryan Nakashima
Volunteer Co-ordinator Johanna Ciszewski

NATIONAL AFFAIRS
Editor Am Keeling
Contributors Ryan Nakashima, Michael Mainville, Caron Watt

FEATURES
Editor Andrea Smith
Supplement Co-ordinator Mario Carlucci
Contributors Am Keeling, Mo Gannon, Kira Vermond, Rob McLennan, Contest winners & judges

SPORTS
Editor Steven Vesely
Contributors Shannon Fraser, Richard G.D. Scott

ARTS
Editor Blayne Haggart
Contributors Christopher Bell, M.G. Comino, Stephanie Garrison, Ron Orul, Sarah Richards, Olu Saul, Charmead Schella, Jason Unrau, a duck

OP/ED
Editor Sheila Keenan
Contributors Am Keeling, Tony Rogge, Ryan Ward

VISUALS
Photo Editor Tim O'Connor
Photo Assistant Andre Bellefeuille
Contributors Arend Baayen, Gregor Madden, Sid Younis, Dean Tomlinson

Graphics Co-ordinators David Hodges
Graphics Assistant Mike Rappaport
Contributors Joel Kenneth Grant, Frank Campbell, Sid Younis

Cover Tim O'Connor
Happy Guy Shawn Dearn

The Charlatan's photos are produced using the Carleton University Students' Association Photo Service

PRODUCTION
Production Assistant Kim Alf
Contributors Frank Campbell, Christine Gough, Ali Jafri, David Sali, Richard G.D. Scott, Tanya Workman

CIRCULATION 14,000
Circulation Dave Carpenter, Joellen Walshe

ADVERTISING 788-3580
Ad Manager Karen Richardson

The Charlatan, Carleton University's weekly student newspaper, is an editorially and financially autonomous journal, published weekly during the fall and winter term and monthly during the summer. Charlatan Publications Incorporated, Ottawa, Ontario, a non-profit corporation registered under the Canadian Corporations Act, is the publisher of The Charlatan. Editorial content is the sole responsibility of editorial staff members, but may not reflect the beliefs of its members. Contents are copyright © 1994. Nothing may be duplicated in any way without the prior written permission of the Editor-in-Chief. All Rights Reserved. ISSN 0315-1859. Subscriptions are available at a cost of $40 for individuals and $52 for institutions. Includes GST. National advertising for The Charlatan is handled through Canadian University Press Media Services (Campus Plus), 73 Richmond St. W., 4th floor, Ontario, M5H 1Z4; phone (416) 481-7283. The Board of Directors of Charlatan Publications Inc. is: Chairperson Ken Drever, Treasurer Mark Lafreniere, Secretary Yvonne Potter, Directors: Warren Kinsella, Anna Gibbons, Dave Hodges, Fouad Kanaan, Adam Mann and Mo Gannon.
The Charlatan Room 531 Unicef Centre Carleton University
Ottawa, Ontario K1S 5B6 Telephone: (613) 788-6680
E-mail charlatan@carleton.ca

A CUSA tragedy

Editor:
CUSA council and the constitutional board recently overturned the entire CUSA, senate and board of governors elections. This is a tragic decision for several reasons:

- 1) The election had a better voter turnout than in years past.
- 2) After a campaign full of "CUSA spends too much" it seems hilarious that CUSA is willing to blow another $6,500 (minimum) on another election.
- 3) The subsequent election will not represent the democratic voice of students. Voter apathy will be high enough because of CUSA's lack of effectiveness, representativeness and common sense. The election results will be indicative of little more than which candidates could convince their friends to vote again.
- 4) CUSA is funded by student money and is supposed to operate in our best interests. Is ignoring the voice of over 2,700 people who voted in good confidence and over 1,500 who signed a petition asking CUSA to let the election stand really representing the views of the constituents? Not even close. CUSA slapped us all in the face and said your vote and signature mean nothing.
- 5) The CUSA executive will have to be hired during exam time. Executive candidates have to write an essay-size position paper. Who will have time to give it the attention it warrants? The CUSA executive have to get to work even before their term begins. Essentially, this year's CUSA has stunted the growth of next year's council.
- 6) It is also an insult to ex-chief electoral officer James Rilet, who ran as good an election as possible in a world of constitutional guessing and interpretation.

Perry Simpson — Political Science III
Sandy Wakeling — Psychology III
Pierre Leduc — Mass Communications II
Heather Jenkins — Political Science III
Colin Betts — Political Science III

Overturn them all

Editor:
I am writing this letter out of concern and frustration about the events which have transpired over the past few weeks concerning the CUSA elections.

My concern is that CUSA's constitutional board has overturned an election on the basis of some flaws in the constitution and possibly its interpretation and now it's going to cost the students another $8,000 or so.

What I want to know is, are the challenges which were upheld really worth this expense? For example, Elaine Silver challenged that there was only one polling clerk at a polling place. Under the constitution, no voting may take place in such an instance, but it doesn't say polling clerks can't be alone if no voting is allowed. Does the board have unbiased proof that voting took place when the clerk was alone?

Second, I was under the impression that the candidates voted to have less all-candidates debates than the constitution specifies. If so, what is the challenge based on? And I'm sorry to inform the candidates of this, but few students listen to these anyway.

Ge, I wonder why, perhaps it's because the students are fed up with CUSA and recognize our election process for the waste of paper and popularity contest that it is.

In addition, it seems as though the strongest voice in challenging the election is Elaine Silver. After three losses, doesn't she get it? Does she think that challenging the election and thus costing the students more money will win her votes?

I realize that I may be criticized for these views because the elections, on the basis of principle, should be overturned if they were run unfairly. My response to this is that if every CUSA election was judged on the basis of flaws in the constitution, mistakes made by polling clerks or whining by losing candidates about fairness, all of them would be overturned.

Christine Brockway
Sociology IV

Tories are terrific (Ha, ha, ha)

Editor:
If I had to say one nice thing about the previous Tory government it would be that they have made life simpler for us students. You see, spring is here and that means two things: exams and taxes.

With exams being the basis on which our futures are built, most students hardly have time to begin deciphering the bafflebag that is a tax return form. For the uninitiated, the tax return is a process whereby you determine what proportion of your previous year's income (if that exists), you owe to the government.

To aid you in this, the government is supposed to supply you with helpful instructions. These don't exist.

How many times have you finished your tax return sheet only to find that you owe $16,294.09? Of course you know that can't be right because your taxable income is only $12,496.27.

So, you go back over every number and deduction to find out where you went wrong. Aha, you find the problem. It turns out that before you enter anything on line 223.51 you are supposed to square the average temperature of you dog's left nostril and subtract that from your total body weight. Then you take the inverse backflip of line . . .

This, getting back to my original point, is how the Tories have made life easy for a lot of students. Knowing that we are already under enough strain at this time of year, they took great pains to ensure we would have nothing to worry about.

Namely, we didn't have jobs, therefore we are free right now to study, instead of doing taxes.

Well, some of us are. Unfortunately I was gainfully employed last year so I'm off to wrestle with my financial demons. Now, if I could just find that thermometer. Here Rover! Come on boy!

Eben Watt
Psychology II

Ricky responds

Editor:
Re: "Look out Ricky," The Charlatan, March 10, 1994.

I would like to answer some of the questions raised in Katie Strzalka's letter commenting on my election platform.

The concept of rapid transit in Ottawa is not something I whipped up to "win votes," or "gloss my campaign over." The fact of the matter is this is a real issue being promoted by a community task force called Transport 2000 Canada.

Kristine Haselsteiner, CUSA's current vice-president external, has made some initial contact with this group and I was planning to expand CUSA's participation in this group to make sure student needs were addressed in the group's agenda.

In conclusion, Strzalka stated that "The candidates with the most hair and not brains won." The only part of this statement I agree with is that I do have big hair, just as many students at Carleton have, but if it makes Strzalka feel any better, I am losing this hair rapidly. The second part of her statement outlines her opinion of my mental ability. This is her opinion and I can respect that. I only hope she can respect the fact that as is outlined above, I do know what I am talking about when it comes to commuter trains or any of the other issues I raised during the election.

Richard Stanton
Social Science III
BA '93

Feel the passion
More letters on page 21

CUSA

Advertising Sales Position
(contract position - unionized)

Carleton University Students' Association, Inc.

Terms of employment: April 20, 1994 - April 20, 1995. Base salary and commission structure in the $13,000 range for the above term. Hours - flexible - to be arranged. Reporting to Administrative Director, CUSA Inc.

Responsibilities include: solicitation of all advertising for CUSA Inc.'s Student handbook, plus other publications as approved.

Qualifications: former sales experience an asset but not required; neat appearance, excellent communication and organizational skills.

Letters of application, resumes should be addressed to: Linda Stewart, Administrative Director, Carleton University Students' Association Inc., 401 University Centre, 1125 Colonel By Drive, Ottawa, Ontario K1S 5B6.

No telephone inquiries please. Selected applicants will be contacted and interviews will take place the week of April 4, 1994. Closing date for receipt of applications: Tuesday, March 29, 1994 at 4:00 p.m. Carleton University is an equal opportunity employer.

wordshine

the charlatan's literary supplement

Inside

Coming Through Charles
by Kira Vermond

The Vonnegut Button
by Edward Pond

Baku: the journey
Dawolu Akintola Saul

5 Ottawa Poets

books

Life After God
by Douglas Coupland
Pocket Books (Simon and Schuster) $20

by Mo Gannon
Charlatan Staff

Douglas Coupland is not my Dalai Lama. Nor is he my "generation's spokesperson." But he's trying very, very hard. Life After God, the most successful literary experiment in pseudo-intellectualism I've ever read, is part of his attempt. I once admired this author's work, back when Generation X was just a book and Coupland was just a writer. Back before the media made him Generation God. Back when Coupland had some things to say. Not any more. "Coupland unplugs from his previous style . . ." it reads on the cover jacket. How true. There's none of his past electricity here — just flaccid platitudes in eight short stories about the meaning of life, love and loneliness, much like the pubescent material you'd hear read aloud in your creative writing class in high school. Like a teenage boy who wants everyone to see him brooding over his journal in the cafeteria, Coupland asks a lot of "deep" questions you've heard a thousand times before: Why are we here? What makes us human? Why am I so alone? Will anyone ever love me?

The warning bells sound when you read his first story "Little Creatures," where he ponders the meaning of existence: "We drove away and we were both quiet, digesting the appearances of these animals in our lives, and their meanings. What is a deer? What is a bighorn sheep? Why are certain creatures attractive to some of us, and some not? What are creatures?"

(Possible answer: A deer is a deer. A bighorn sheep is a sheep with big horns. Creatures are creatures. It's that simple.) In his shallow spiritual search for a deeper meaning, Coupland's revelations sound like something straight out of Jack Handey's Deep Thoughts:

"... birds are a miracle because they prove to us there is a finer, simpler state of being which we may strive to attain."

When he's not sounding like a mushy greeting card, Coupland is posing as your typical lonely, angst-ridden genius: "I felt as though the world lived inside a warm house at night and I was outside, and I couldn't be seen — because I was out there in the night."

Like always, Coupland's text is littered with Vidal Sassoon shampoo bottles, Mazda Miatas, Petro-Can stations, Ritz crackers and Glad garbage bags. Only in this book, he uses brand names where they are jarringly out of place — like footsteps in the desert that sound "faintly crunchy like the sound of Cocoa Pebbles being chewed across a table."

Perhaps he shifts into overkill on the brand names to prove his reputation as some sort of pop-culture expert — not like he's in any danger of losing it, judging by the media worship.

There's the occasional classic Coupland simile that makes reading this book bearable — rotting maple leaves that smell like dead pancakes, a nuclear blast that rips his skin off like strips of chicken fajita, or a wet tent that smells like a fridge full of time-expired yogurt.

The book also has its occasional moments of truth, like his observation that experiences become less exciting with age:

"I could be shooting heroin with the Princess of Wales, naked in a crashing jet, and the experience still couldn't compare to the time the cops chased us after we threw the Taylors' patio furniture into their pool in eleventh grade."

This is obviously the case for Coupland. He seems to be suffering some heavy mid-life crisis at the age of 32 and is now reverting back to high school. And looking for God. And writing bad books about it. And that's fine.

But don't mistake his juvenile musings and intellectual party tricks for a philosophy. Life After God is about as spiritual as Coupland's new state of grace in the church of St. Celebrity.

Contributors

Short Story Judges:

Kevin Gildea, Barbara Leckie

Book Reviews:

Mo Gannon, Arn Keeling, Kira Vermond

Five Ottawa Poets:

Rob McLennan

People of Colour Contest winners:

1st Dawolu Akintola Saul

2nd Fonkeng E. J.

3rd Lula Adam

Charlatan Short Story Contest winners:

1st place: Edward Pond, Kira Vermond

Honorable Mention:

Zenya Serant, Ron Schaftrick

Production:

Naomi Bock, Michael Mainville

Art work:

Sid Younis

Editors:

Mario Carlucci, Andrea Smith

books books books books books books books books books books

by Arn Keeling
Charlatan Staff

Much of the so-called literature by young North American writers, from J.D. Salinger to Douglas Coupland, is predicated on the theme of "finding an identity" in a world they don't understand or can't control. But their tales of angst and confusion seem pale beside the semi-autobiographical story of growing up in Communist Czechoslovakia in the 1980s, told by 31-year-old Iva Pekarkova. Her character Fialka's search for personal and sexual identity is frustrated by a closed social and political world. Real freedom — the freedom to speak her mind, go where she wants and explore her possibilities — is smothered by bureaucracy and fear. The question for Fialka is not "What should I do with my life?" but rather "What kind of a life do I have?"

In the absence of freedom, Fialka and her friend Patrik search for "rainbows" against the omnipresent dull greyness of communism:

"The rainbow is the quintessence of unpossessible beauty. We searched for it all over parking lots in puddles covered with motor oil, in the foul-smelling froth of chemical waste, in dangerously sharp shards of broken glass, in the sperm that shoots skyward in passion and arcs back to the earth to die . . ."

Fialka and her embittered friend spend their free time chronicling the environmental chaos wrought by the government as a legacy for the next generation, a generation they hope will be free.

But most of all, the story is of Fialka's search for her identity as a woman. She doesn't relate well to other women; her best friend Patrik is a man whose voracious desire leads him on to emotionless sexual conquest and eventually, cold remorse.

Fialka finds solace in her hitchhiking adventures, where she takes pictures of environmental destruction and sleeps with lonely Czech truck drivers.

But Fialka's personal search becomes tragic when Patrik is diagnosed with multiple sclerosis and needs an expensive wheelchair. She begins to market her only freedom, sexual freedom, to Western truckers who pass through the country offering money and consumer goods in an attempt to raise money for Patrik. The novel's second half is a painful discovery of the limits of personal sacrifice and the anguish of lost identity.

"The vulgarity of it, the vulgarity still made my head spin. It dumbfounded me. It was killing me. The seeds of mistrust and contempt, the seeds of spite and scorn, were sowed between my thighs together with the men's semen — denser, stickier, but essentially, just as devastating."

Pekarkova's first-person narrative, compared on the book jacket to fellow Czech author Milan Kundera (The Unbearable Lightness of Being), is raw and unsophisticated. Her prose, conversational and light, moves easily from hip expressions about sexuality to a deeper penetration of the characters' thoughts and emotions.

Though the superficial theme of the novel is of a struggle for personal identity in a repressive world, the more powerful subtext — what makes this novel excellent — is the intense personal turmoil of a woman searching for, losing, and finally rediscovering her womanhood. ☞

by Kira Vermond
Charlatan Staff

"Where do I come from?"

It's a question children start asking when they first discover they are alive and not merely living. But the question demands an answer more intricate than spewing out an explanation of genetics and biology. Where a person comes from also revolves around relationships, life experience, or life experiences not yet carried out. The quest to discover where you come from is all encompassing.

Carole Giangrande, author of Missing Persons, her first book of short stories, skilfully weaves her characters into 10 dense tales, pushing them towards their pursuit for identity.

The background for most of the stories is war; how it changes people, how it destroys them. Sometimes the war is personal, a wrestling with morality. At other times the war is fought with weapons; although the stories often combine both.

The first story, "Missing Persons," deals with a photographer who tries to come to grips with her husband's death, her alienated daughter and the disappearance of her best friend. Her friend moved to B.C. and has not bothered to write. The photographer explains the shift in their friendship:

"I figured my camera had gone and touched the empty part of her once too often; somehow it was my fault she'd found out she was human: beautiful except for one missing piece. Maybe it was too much for her to feel me carrying Allen's death like a stillborn baby in my gut."

In the second story a farming couple, having lost their farm, rents a room from a Beirut refugee in Toronto who teaches them how the loss of a way of life can bring people together. In "In Hard News," a radio-journalist is confronted with death and violence for the first time.

Two other stories are linked: "Love and the Gentle Art of Flying" and "Moonwalkers." In the first, a man must deal with the breakup of his two-year relationship with his girlfriend after she leaves him. She was unable to trust him after he almost killed them both in a plane crash. The second story is told from the girlfriend's point of view a while later.

The remaining stories revolve around the emotional fallout of the Vietnam War.

"This is For Mandy" is about the narrator's daughter and the young woman's questions about how her parents dodged the draft.

In "What History Teaches," a girl who excels at sharp-shooting discovers why her parents have a fascination with guns. They killed a banker during the '60s as part of the anti-war terrorist movement. A Vietnam veteran tells a television reporter why he took an axe to his TV and pasted newspaper clippings of violence up on his wall in "The Memory Wall":

"Too much Gulf War; I lost it," he says.

A pair of twins try to make sense of Vietnam in the final two stories, "Into the Fire," and "How, If Ever, the Story Ends."

In one gut-wrenching scene, David, who left his suburban home to fight in the war, tells his twin sister how he destroyed a village and raped the one remaining Vietnamese survivor before killing her.

At the site of his suicide only weeks after his confession, he leaves a note that says, "God does not forgive everything."

Giangrande writes with a skilled hand and with an emotional wallop. The reader can't help but gasp at some of the purest poetry written by a Canadian author in years. At times the words seem to braid themselves, twisting to give several meanings.

Missing Persons is a collection of short stories with staying-power. ☞

The Vonnegut Button

by Edward Pond

Edward Pond is a fourth-year journalism student.

Until Jan. 1, 1997, there was a standard procedure the president of the United States of America had to follow in order to launch his country's nuclear missiles at its enemies.

The procedure involved having a secret service agent accompany the president everywhere he went. The agent was always young, healthy and trustworthy — with American eyes and an American smile. The agent carried with him an attaché case containing coded documents and "the button" necessary for the president to annihilate the planet. This is what the attaché case looked like:

If, at any time, the president decided the time was right for the eagles to fly, he would have turned to the secret service agent and given him the appropriate coded sentence. Then, the attaché case would have been opened for him. The coded sentence might have been something like this:

"Echo nixer foxtrot alpha breadbasket eagle."

With that, the president would go on to seal the fate of billions of souls. Miraculously, the procedure was never executed.

"executed"

Executed is an interesting word. It means to carry out an act, to perform, to administer, or to make something happen. It can also mean killing somebody.

On Jan. 1, 1997, the new, current procedure was instated. Through it, the president of the United States still has the power to annihilate the world. He is still accompanied by a secret service agent everywhere he goes. The agent is still always young, healthy and trustworthy — even more so, now — with his American eyes and American smile. And the agent still carries with him the secret codes and "the button" necessary to launch the missiles at the enemy.

If and when the president deems the time to be right to fly the eagles, he turns to the secret service agent and gives him the appropriate coded sentence. The sentences are now in basic English. One might be something like this:

"Well Frank, it's time for everyone to die."

With that, the president is given a very large sharp butcher's knife. Using the knife, he must look into the young, healthy and trustworthy agent's American eyes and smile, and kill him. Then he must slice him wide open to retrieve the special codes and "the button" which are contained within the slaughtered agent's sternum.

Then the president can proceed to annihilate the world.

This is what the knife might look like:

Some people don't like this new procedure. They say the president will never launch the missile now.

Comments:

Edward Pond weaves Vonnegut's work into his own story in a clever, tightly controlled and innovative manner.

By relocating the place of the button, this story serves as a powerful reminder that the consequences of nuclear escalation are not as abstract as political rhetoric would have us believe.

— Barbara Leckie, assistant professor of English at Colleton University. Professor Leckie teaches a fourth-year English course called Studies in Culture and the Text.

coming

by Kira Vermond

Kira Vermond is a third-year journalism student at Carleton, and a snappy dresser.

Charles is pregnant again.

He sits before the balcony window in the tattered burgundy arm chair, slowly rocking, rubbing his abdomen back and forth. He is waiting for the first indication of movement from within. Charles is waiting for summer to come.

Shawleen opens the door on him, gingerly treads over to him and places her hand on his shoulder. Her stomach juts from her nightshirt and her hair hovers over dark brows. The buttons on her striped shirt are ready to burst into shrapnel. She has just woken up and rubs her eyes. The midnight light coming through the window from outside is too bright.

"Time to sleep. Come to bed," she yawns as she pats the baby inside of her.

Charles and Shawleen have so much in common.

When Shawleen found out she was pregnant she stayed in her apartment and cried for two days. She watered her plants and watched them die. She tried to phone Charles a few times to let him know, but whenever he answered she hung up. Shawleen did not answer her telephone when it rang.

Comments:

Kira has a powerful command of language. Her gritty style leaves the reader feeling the emptiness the story subtly conveys. By dismantling our unidimensional notions of gender, she forces one to re-evaluate not only notions of the body, but the subject as well.

— Kevin Gildea is an English instructor at Carleton University. Professor Gildea teaches second-year Canadian literature.

Finally, when Charles went to her house to see what was wrong, he found Shawleen in the chair near the window. Her face was dry. Her hair was washed and wet off her face. She wrapped herself up into her body and smiled at him.

"I have something to tell you," she said.

Charles is pregnant for the second time.

This time he will not abort the baby, or give it up for adoption. He will not will it away. He will feel the baby in him. He will wait for his breasts to fill. He will sleep on his back and on his side. This time Charles will take responsibility. He will be Shawleen. They will be pregnant together.

When Shawleen first told Charles she wanted to exchange the experience of pregnancy he sat and rocked on his hands. It was enough that she expected him to father the child. He was used to the idea. They had already been through this once before (and why hadn't they used protection and how could this happen to the same people twice?). Shawleen explained calmly that the pregnancy was not just her problem/gift. She told him she could not do it alone. She wanted him to be part of it. Not a half, but a whole.

Last year, Shawleen aborted a baby. She entered the brown seven-storey building and walked to the big steel door with the room number, 17, painted on it. Shawleen stood before the camera, told the receptionist her name and was buzzed in. At the desk she showed her ID to a woman wearing three shades of navy. She was led to a corner where there was a tray full of little cups of mineral water. She took one and sat down. For an hour, she waited in a white painted room with posters that said, "You are a Woman, You have a Right!" She watched another woman across from her read Cosmopolitan with a model on the front who had her breasts taped to her nose. The only comfort Shawleen could find was that she had already been here before to get herself on the pill before the place had been bombed. That time, the nurse took her blood pressure and asked her if she smoked (she didn't — not then) and gave her a box with a three-month supply of Ortho 777 and a prescription. Shawleen left the examination room and walked past the women who were waiting for counselling.

It seems to Shawleen that all the women, that time, were reading Cosmopolitan and tapping their feet to digital music softly playing over invisible speakers. All models on the magazines' covers had bodies unhindered by childbirth — or seemed to — with tight stomachs and malleable limbs. Shawleen wanted to look like the women on the cover. She wanted to have that body. Now, it is her turn to tap her feet, listen to "Beat It" on violin and read articles on "How To Please Your Man." Finally she was asked to come into the counselling room. She relaxed in a deep bucket chair and was asked if she knew of other options and if she was comfortable with the one she chose. She said yes both times and was led to a room where she could undress with three other women. The room looked like the change room she used in Grade 9 gym class. No one looked at each other's bodies. No one looked up from their socks.

The surgery was quick and painful. Three women stood around her, holding her hand and asking her about school. She declined to take a pill and the woman gasped, as they hurried around in their whiteness. Blurring as they said: "Are you sure?"

"I'll be fine," Shawleen said as she cursed the loud classical music playing in the room. For a moment she was afraid she would voice her opinions, offending the other women's musical tastes. She reminded herself that she was their guest.

Afterwards, she stood away from the table, rested in the "resting room," drank her apple juice, changed and went home. This time she accepted the three painkillers they gave her. Shawleen left the building feeling full.

Charles knew where she was that day. He offered to be there in the building with her and offered to sit in the room with the women who would look at him.

They would think, "You are a part of this." He offered to sit in the white room and think about what Shawleen was doing in the next one. Shawleen told him she did not want him to be there. He could think about her from his own apartment as he went over other people's manuscripts. He could look out from his window for her.

That was last year. Now, as Charles sits before their shared apartment's window, looking out at the frost and slitted moon, he remembers how he first saw Shawleen. She was his sister's friend, one of the many she was always bringing home from school. It was two weeks before he moved out of their mother's house and he was staying in, packing boxes of old records and clothes. His books were always the last to go and were cast around the room.

His sister, Tara, has long, light brown hair. When Charles passed her door on the way to the bathroom he stood painted in his own shadow and stared.

"Holy Shit!"

Shawleen turned herself around on Tara's bed to face his obscenity, throwing her long black hair behind her.

"Oh God, I'm sorry," Charles stammered, "I thought you were my sister . . . that she had dyed her hair."

After that, it was only a matter of time.

"I want to see your books," Shawleen told Charles as she stretched out on his new wooden floor two months after their first encounter.

"Mmm . . . I've read this one," she said, holding up an old copy of Lord of The Flies.

write a story about men and birth. He needs to get all angles and he can tell the readers that Shawleen urged him to become pregnant with her. She had given him the idea. He knows it will sell.

When their water broke it was almost like a small balloon had popped in their stomachs. Shawleen was leaning over picking up the TV Guide when they felt it. They had expected a lot of pain but there was almost none. Shortly after, however, the cramping became stronger and they sat straight up on the couch unable to speak. Charles called the hospital hunched over the couch so he would be more comfortable.

Charles and Shawleen thought that by the time they were in their car driving to North York General all the water had come through. But when they pulled up to the maternity door, they were soaked.

Charles is too exhausted to push any more. Someone puts her hands in his and he can't even squeeze it. He is too tired. He hadn't slept the night before because he had spent almost five hours in the bath. They hadn't eaten in so long. Charles finally realizes that the doctors are getting tired of them holding back on the baby so they push — hard. Again. Again. The head is out. Once more. Quickly, the body follows. It is placed on their crinkled and creased stomach and all Charles can sob is "What is it?"

"It's a baby," the doctor replies and she laughs at her joke.

Charles is a parent. One. One of the two. One of many. Charles sits in front of the balcony window and rocks the baby while Shawleen sleeps beside him on the couch. Their Christmas tree is missing a few branches and no one has bothered to turn them to the wall. Charles's computer collects dust but in the dark it doesn't matter. Charles yawns, shifts the bundle to the other arm and closes his eyes.

When he was 12 he read the book and cried painfully when Piggy was killed. He remembers the jutting rocks and the lathered waves even still.

Shawleen looked up at Charles from the well-worn copy in her hands.

"I cried so hard when Piggy died. God, I won't ever forget that. I'm still afraid of water," she said.

Charles is about to give birth. He thinks of nothing but the pain at first and digs his nails into the bed. He doesn't know he is tearing the sheets until the nurse tells him to stop. He knows that Shawleen is beside him in bed, breathing hard and swearing but he hardly hears her. He is trying so hard to be with her in this. He wants to come out of it to say to her, "We can talk about our pregnancy — all the way to the birth because I did it too. I understand you so well." Charles wants to write about it. He wants to

5 Ottawa Poets

I DON'T KNOW HOW ANYONE

MANAGES TO WRITE TRAVEL POEMS

So much love it damn near killed me.
Even now,
more than a year since the light first hit the film,
the photos are like patient screws.
A sore spot of tenderness still trapped in my chest.
Flash so bright I'll be blinking for years.

Amnesia has been my best friend in all this.
The way everything blurs and fades.
Until some inherent masochism drags me back to the pictures — chemical reactions stowed away in envelopes and boxes.
Some compulsion to claim order,
to dig graves,
pulls out the albums purchased for this purpose.
And I cower in the corner of memory's darkroom.
I had forgotten.
How he'd throw me over his shoulder and spin me around.
How I felt strong boy\woman with him
— you can see it in the way I stand, how my leather hangs off my backpack shoulders.
How close we would stand to each other, in front of the ruins.
How beautiful everything was, how bright, how green and wet.

Grief can be an aphrodisiac.
Memory is more potent than seafood or erotica.
The kind of lust that lives in my cunt and tries to swallow them hole.
I seem to like relieving the longing, being caught in the jaws of these impractical emotions,
this impossible position.
I am never so much in love as when I am trying to stay out of loss.

And I was lost then.
He was my map-maker, my navigator
— scruffy in the passenger seat, too tired to make love.
I thought the mist would suffocate me,
the roads unwinding me,
and he couldn't hold my hand.
It was as brutal as it was beautiful.
Too like me — too strange.
I was overexposed.
By KATHRYN PAYNE

Tongues of Stone

And we are one body, one voice in the dark, the hair in your eyes dancing thin as spiders' legs allowing me this intimacy,
the warmth of almond blossoms cloistering your breath, and can't I ask you to close your mouth leaving you to drift nights into days like some latter-day Arcite, or slip back into the garden where we once lay two sinners caught with quiet grace, nor the sound of the rain bearing down against my skull denies me this, moment
so we recall this empty street slick with the stench of half-drowned worms, light words falling free from tongues of stone . . .
By VICTORIA VERNELL

VICTORIA VERNELL attempting to complete her BA in English literature at the University of Ottawa

KATHRYN PAYNE
BA in women's studies and English from Carleton University obnoxious bisexual activist and radical romantic poems have appeared in the Carleton Arts Review and Artsflux
23 years old

Her work has appeared in Bywords, the Carleton Arts Review, and Chasing Sundogs
She is the managing editor of Hook and Ladder
21 years old flight

"Look out Cornelius your parachute has failed;
and I am not at liberty to catch a falling star;"

— Ronn Silverstein

skies burning bright to your emissions dropping far, into the wind
Cornelius, this world is a nightmare / slowly, and from the acid tipped clouds as a lover's eyes, into sleep the pages of a Stephen King novel or me on a good day, flipping out poem after poem after poem, tho that rarely happens.

Cornelius, your parachute has failed.
all the poetry in the world couldn't save you
World War Two was never good to you, soldiers hanging like stray apples from the necks of trees, their faulty parachutes

thru the air and touching briefly on the earth / an army of dandelion fluff as blown by my daughter's lips turning slowly, in the space of flight, searching for a place to land,
take root.

By Rob McLennan

Chantel Lavoie
Winner of 1993's Books in Canada student writing a w a r d s first prize for poetry
currently attending the University of
O t t a w a
23 years old

Rob McLennan
author of four chapbooks of poems, editor of STANZAS, co-editor of the Carleton Arts
R e v i e w

Joseph A. Dandurand
BA in theatre arts from the University of Ottawa, diplomas in performing arts from Algonquin College his poems have been published in the En'Owkin Journal of First North American People, the WINO Anthol- ogy, the New Canadian Review,
Bywords, etc.
new book — Voices From Home his plays: Crackers and Soup, Where
Two Rivers Meet
29 years old

freelance contributor to The Charis- tan, Hook and Ladder, and o t h e r s
24 years old

my net bobbed
in the cold Fraser river

no eagles came to watch
my daily task
only a big raven and his friend the coyote

they sat on the shore and traded stories about past love

the raven gently rested on a dead log his black wings folded in front of his fat belly

the coote gracefully combed back his gray hair as he tapped his right front paw his nails were neatly groomed

my net began to jingle as fish swam their last stroke of the day

i whistled like the wind and the sound carried to the mountains above

the raven and the coyote looked at me and my catch of fish

they turned to the other and smiled

you see they knew where i lived

By Joseph A. Dandurand

Windeby

I want to dance in the last twisted footsteps of the bog people who survived their deaths

to tell us
we are not dust
but leather
and we will live beyond our own cruelty.

Redemption is a word covered with clay and those who preceded the book are saved by the hook pinned to the racial memory through empty eye sockets with lasers

As the berries in their stomachs turned to stone
they left each year another ring another ripple in the earth.

By Chantel Lavoie

Compiled by Rob
McLennan
Charlatan Staff

prize

People of Colour
Short Fiction
Contest

Baku:

the journey

by Dawolu Akintola Saul

Dawolu Akintola Saul (a.k.a. Olu) is a third-year arts student with the French department at Carleton.

The day was hot and although the air was heavy with moisture, the rain still had not come. The wind blew little dust devils among the now-dying brush.

Baku stood alone on the plain staring relentlessly up at the sun. He had worshipped Gorro the sun god ever since he was a young boy. Baku had looked to him for protection, guidance and his everyday needs. Not once had he been disappointed.

The ebony giant turned and strode back towards his village, leaving only his footprints behind. He was Baku, the second son of Kano and the most skilled and respected hunter in the tribe, without mention an awesome warrior. There was nothing unusual about his physique. All the men and women were muscular from the life they led on the plains; but Baku, because of his immense size, commanded attention.

He was a very calm and studious man for one of his tribe. When taking lessons from the elders as a boy, he would always ask the most questions, irritating the other boys and even the teachers.

Baku had just entered the gates of the village. From his facial expression one could tell he was deep in thought. He settled down in his hut to watch Gorro make his final stride across the sky. Baku had watched Gorro's descent intensely, always wondering where the great god made his resting place.

Baku was planning the journey of his life. The time had come. Tomorrow he would start on his pilgrimage. As he lay down upon his sleeping mat, all he could think of were the tales of his journey that would be told.

The next morning before Gorro rose to make his sweep of the sky, Baku was already gathering his things. By the time Gorro reached his peak, the village was behind Baku and only the unknown lay ahead.

Baku knew his course, and with Gorro leading the way he was sure he would come to his resting place before the moon rose. Baku walked on and on, the dust stinging his eyes and Gorro's mighty heat beating upon his back. This endless self-torture continued for a moon and a half, but Baku had no intention of turning back. He would journey until he found his god or he would die trying.

Two moons went by, and Baku, wind-burnt, suffering with sunstroke, and delirious, was screaming obscenities at the sky. His eyes pointed upward and his arms waving wildly, he did not see the scorpion until it had bitten him on the heel. Obscenities pouring from his mouth, he stumbled onward.

Under a great tree, Baku watched in agony as Gorro again descended from the sky. The scorpion bite was causing him great pain, his body felt like it was on fire and his veins ran not with blood, but with liquid heat. Water he had so painstakingly reserved was now being sweated out on to the parched ground. He tossed and turned, talking in the tongue of his forefathers. As the night cooled, his fever abated. He slept an untroubled sleep.

Baku lay under the tree for days, fed by the great owls of the plains. Once again, Gorro was providing for him. He would soon resume his journey.

Baku set out again the next day, and there was something in the air he had never sensed before. It was the smell of the great Atlantic Ocean. By the end of that day he had reached its shore. He gazed in awe and knew he had arrived. As he watched, Gorro slipped beneath the waves to once again rest his great head. Baku took out his sacred rock, said a prayer of thanks, and walked forward to meet his creator. Baku had lived all his life on the plain. He had never learned the art of swimming. Without hesitation he went into the water. He bent to drink, but spat out the salty brine. Thinking nothing of it, he ventured forward. The water was at his chest and rising, but he was a man of faith, and did not doubt that his god would protect him. The ground dropped away without warning and, caught by surprise, Baku called out silently to his god but was not answered. The weight of the pouch secured at his waist pulled him under. His lungs screamed for air, and his temples throbbed. His life ebbed from his body, and his mind went back to his village.

The sea became calm and he was once again in his hut looking up at the sky, but Gorro was nowhere to be found. He eased himself on to his sleeping mat, laid back, and took a deep breath. He breathed in the blackness which enveloped him. Baku had fulfilled his dream by meeting his creator, but he could never enter the realm of the mighty Gorro.

August 28, 1963, a hush falls over a sea of swaying bodies. A man steps to the podium, unknown to everyone. He bears a striking resemblance to a warrior long since dead. Baku's seed has reached the far shore and once again, the ebony giant stands among his people, but now a different journey has been started. He raises his hand in recognition. Upon commanding their attention he exclaims:

"I HAVE A DREAM . . ."

A bargain for your buck

Editor:
I would like to take a moment not to question Mo Gannon's opinion, but rather her evidence. Several statements in her editorial, "The buck stops here," The Charlatan, March 17, 1994 disturbed me and I cannot in good conscience accept them without expressing concern.

The dollar figure presented is $131.52 per student. That money goes to the athletics department for spending as it sees fit for basic services and maintenance.

You can use a weight room with a fully trained staff, a pool with three lifeguards, and a gym for pick-up games or organized competition in an array of activities seven days a week with few time constraints. Show me another fitness club like that.

This is clearly a bargain — staff are not cheap to hire and train. Maintenance and cleaning keeps the place running with very little down time and a hot tub and sauna are perks that some places make you pay extra for.

Very little of the money from the basic student fees go towards the varsity program. Yes, some does, but not a "healthy amount." And where do you propose we find extra money for the hockey program? Many of our most successful teams are on shoestring budgets as it is.

The hockey club has a strong alumni, a dedicated staff and great potential. But if students bail out on the hockey club now, then we may be throwing away a potentially great program.

I voted yes in the last referendum vote and I will vote yes again in the vote on March 29.

Brad Ellis
Geography III

Poetic problems

Editor:

I was very disappointed two weeks ago to discover that The Charlatan did not intend to publicize a new prize for student poetry set up by the English department. I was hardly less disappointed last Thursday to find that my announcement, hidden away in the events section, had been shrunk to a mere five lines. I suspect the cause for this indifference lay in the large, very prominent ad for The Charlatan's own literary competition in the adjoining columns.

But provided they are well-organized and well-judged, I see no problem in having two such competitions. After all, although named for George Johnston, a respected founding member of Carleton's English department and more important in this context, a highly regarded and widely published poet, the main purpose of this prize is to raise the visibility and status of student poetry. I find it depressing and disturbing that I would encounter competitiveness rather than co-operation from The Charlatan in an area where the main beneficiaries are the students themselves.

So, let me use this opportunity to state that the $100 prize will be awarded to the best poem in any form. Up to five poems with a total length of not more than 250 lines may be submitted to me care of the English department, Dunton Tower 1812, by full- or part-time students currently enrolled at Carleton. Poems should be submitted anonymously in a large envelope, typed and accompanied by a smaller sealed envelope containing the student's name, student number, local address and telephone number. The deadline for submissions has been extended to Monday, April 4.

Christopher Levenson
English Professor

Note: Giving away free advertising space, no matter how worthy the cause, would not benefit Carleton students, because they own The Charlatan. Half of our revenue comes from a student levy, the other half from advertising, and without this money we could not put out a paper. — ed.

Travel with an open mind

Editor:

Are all French as bad as described in the previous Charlatan, ("A tourist's guide to French culture," March 10, 1994)?

How can someone judge a whole country by visiting it for two weeks? As a tourist, going to a foreign country may be frustrating in some ways. If you cannot speak the same language you will always have difficulties understanding another. In this case you will see the French culture from your point of view instead of their point of view. This creates two completely different perceptions.

Usually unskilled workers do not speak other languages than their native one.

So, it is not surprising that if you ask them a question, they look at you with an interrogative face. Don't you think they have difficulties in understanding you?

This is not a French characteristic but a human one. I will even say that the French speak more languages than North Americans do.

In addition, you can meet kind and unkind people everywhere. But the day you understand that wherever you go you have to do it "the right way," "the local way," is when you will feel most comfortable with and enjoy your travelling. It's obvious. It shows your capability of integration, your level of respect of the foreign culture.

France has a nice culture and history. However, each country in the world has a "Je ne sais quoi," of difference which makes the world as diversified as it is wonderful.

Take time to travel, it is the way to be open-minded.

Marie-Sophie Saffré
Master's of Management Studies I

The Charlatan welcomes all letters and opinion pieces. Letters should not be more than 250 words and opinion pieces not more than 700 words. Pieces may be edited for length or clarity. The deadline is Tuesday at noon. Include your name, signature, faculty, year and PHONE NUMBER or your letter won't be published. Phone numbers are for verification only and won't be published. Send to: The Charlatan, Room 531 Unicentre, Carleton University, 1125 Colonel By Drive, Ottawa, Ont. K1S 5B6.

The Un Classifieds

Replies in N.Y. PICH, FIND, XXX, PLATO please come to 531 Unicentre for responses.

FOR SALE/RENT

Sunnyside & Bank. 2 rooms in beautiful, spacious apartments. $310 + hydro. Available May 1. Phone 730-4797.

2 rooms available May 1-Aug 31 in townhouse on Dunes Rd. Pool/sauna use incl $300/w/mth. $350+ for big basement room with private bathroom. Female students preferred. 727-0925.

Bachelor or 1 bedroom available May 1 on bus route 118 Carleton. $439 or less. All inclusive. Call 829-7450

LOST, FOUND, STOLEN?

Personal photo of Lu Xian Dan dated 03 17, 1994 found Mar 19 outside Loeb bldg. Call 567-7607 after 10pm.

LOST: THE WILL to stand up for students on issues such as cafeteria price hikes, campus safety and a more relevant curriculum. Help find it again. Vote Brenda Kennedy for Board of Governors

Political Science 47.420 notebook found in the library. Pick up at the Charlatan, 531 Unicentre

WANTED/JOBS

Summer JOBS: Full time or part time all over Canada. Must be eager to earn cash. Rush self-addressed stamped envelope for full details to: KD Enterprises, 475 Bank St. B-81, Ottawa, Ont. K2P 1Z2

Women's Rugby The Nomads Rugby Club of Toronto is seeking players for its women's side for this summer. For more information, please contact the Nomads Hotline at (416) 468-3061

Looking for a president who cares about student issues, not padding her resume? A President who will fight to make the university more accountable to CUSA and CUSA more accountable to students. Vote Brenda Kennedy

SUMMER JOBS IN THE SUN! Marketing and painting positions now available for student painting company. Experience an asset, but not necessary. For information call Andrew or Bruce at 737-4039.

Looking for a running club at Carleton. Anyone interested in a mid-long distance club (10k +) please contact me! Keith Allen 247-9637

Can't see the forest because there are no trees? Greenpeace is looking for activists to educate & fundraise on environmental & peace issues. Mon-Fri 2-10pm. $220/wk + bonus. Call Lise 562-1004

Earn up to $700 weekly from home! Rush SASE to Clasin, 2407A-515 St. Laurent Blvd, Ott. Ont. K1K 3X5

SERVICES/AVAILABLE

Earn up to $1000 weekly from home! Rush SASE to CLASIN, Dept. C, P.O. Box 53035, Ottawa, On., K1N 1C5

Tired of typing? Pressured for time? Will do up your term papers, essays, etc on my computer. Reasonable rates. Fast and efficient. 5 minutes from university. Call 526-3771.

French, all levels, one on one, personalized lessons (conversation, written). Jacques 234-0238

VANCOUVER - $200 each. One way by recognized airline - 256-0717.

INCREASE ENERGY/BURN FAT - What if there was a product that does all this plus reduces cravings, reshapes your body, promotes the growth of muscle tissue. For free info call 235-1542

If you are "Law School Bound" call 1-800-BOUND4LAW (1-800-268-6345)

HUNGRY FOR GOD Experience unique pilgrimage of prayer & miraculous healing (always) through Our Lady of Marmora Apparition Site, located Greensides Farm, Hwy#7, 2 miles east of Marmora, Ont. (Radio Tower), Saturday, March 26, starting 1:00pm. Info 613-472-2580

Serious Money for Serious people! Will teach you to build an explosive home-based business now! Kiss student loans goodbye! Earn substantial income all year! Send resume PO Box 537, STN B Ott., K1P 5P6

Writing/Editing - Resumes/Letters/Etc. At prices students can afford. Half-hour free consultation. Laser printing. Tel/Fax. (613) 726-9565

Guidage Legal Consulting. Affordable Paralegal Representation in Small Claims, Summary and Provincial

Offences, Landlord and Tenant, Regulatory Matters, phone 24 hours, 786-6384.

Word processing. Accurate, professional, prompt, economical. Reports, essays, term papers, transcripts, theses. Reasonable editing provided and grammar corrected free. 731-9534

Legal problems? Landlord-tenant matters, small claims court, provincial offences (traffic court) & summary convictions. Call Jacquard Legal Services 247-1915

Essays and Theses - laser printed - $1.60 per page. Also available - resume writing, editing, writing tutoring, charts, graphics & tables. Fax & pick-up service can be arranged. Please call 721-8770.

Word Processing Accuracy and Deadlines Guaranteed. Central Location. 233-8874.

MESSAGES/MISCELLANEOUS

March 24th. MIKE - Happy 21st Birthday!!! All the best, Kristen

March 31st Ann-Mare - Happy 21st Birthday! Knstlen

Thursday nite, Alumni Theatre 7-9pm, Speaker Cooper Thompson "White Men + Diversity"

Voters Unite I made a decision to run once. After a Constitutional Board decision overturned the election, I vowed to run again. Re-elect Unconstitutional Arts/Science Rep Ryan Ward

To that gorgeous long-haired guy in 19 100A (you know who you are), meet us Monday 8am in the restaurant of the stars. Love, the Chpts Rafferty Fan Club

Attention Commerce Students - The Commerce Society is holding its year-end pub on Thurs., Mar. 24 from 8pm-close at Oliver's. Prizes! But waf, the fun doesn't stop there! The Commerce Society proudly presents comedians Jeff Tanguay & Co at the graduation party on Fri. Mar. 25. Tickets & seat reservations at 225PA CREATIVE WRITING GROUP - Thursdays 4:30-6pm GLB Centre, 127A Unicentre, 788-2600 ext 1860. Everyone welcome.

Carleton Ultimate Club - is hosting a coed Intramural Ultimate Frisbee tournament on March 26 at 11am. Everyone is welcome. Come out & try the latest growing sport in the world! Call 230-1961 for more info.

MAN TO WOMAN

Dear Vena, Did it take just the graduating class or the entire faculty to create those infantile and dysfunctional names? Have a nice day.

Tall, athletic 20 yr. old looking for someone interesting who enjoys active living. If you like an occasional game of hoops in the park or just shooting some pool, maybe we can have some fun. Box Mr. Fun

Too busy for investment in a deep relationship, yet sometimes want companionship? PRESTO-MAN is here! If you value equality, freedom, a caring special friendship could be yours. Box PRESTO

Attached, mid-30s, sensitive, caring man mated for life, is curious about a discreet intimate relationship. Have you these feelings too? Let's explore. Box Curious

Good-natured inebriate-playing dude seeks passionate woman for casual sex, witty conversation, eggs and bacon and fights in the morning (you know who you are), Box Bill

To the intriguingly attractive woman in my 3rd year psychology class. Are shared glances enough? Not for me! I would like to meet you but I'm a little shy at first. Is that "abnormal"? What about meeting for a drink sometime? Box Interested If You Are

WOMAN TO MAN

Wanted: The voluptuous male with brown hair who was waiting for 49 250 week #8 in the ITV room a few days prior to the exam. On the day of the exam, you told me you didn't get a copy of that lecture. You have an amazing smile. It's a little late, but if you're interested, I'd love to take you out for a drink sometime. Box Christina

To the short, goateed guy in my Constitutional class. This SWF would like to engage you in "stimulating" political conversation. Interested? Box POLITICS

Brian, Feb. 17, Cooper, Emerson & King. You shared your peanut butter cookie with me and I'd like to return the favor. If I've peaked your interest and not just your sweet tooth, reply to Box Rach

The Charlatan assumes no liability for the content of reply to any undelivered advertisement. The advertiser assumes complete liability for the content of, and all replies to, any advertisement and for any claims made against the Charlatan as a result thereof. The advertiser agrees to indemnify and hold the Charlatan, Carleton Publications and its employees harmless for all costs, expenses, liabilities and damages resulting from the publication placed by the advertiser, its agents or any reply to such advertisement. The Charlatan reserves the right to censor, restrict or exclude any advertisement or change the category in which the ad is placed.

The Un Classifieds

Message (30 or words or less)

Looking to buy or sell something? Need to make an announcement? Or maybe you're intrigued at the thought of having your own personal ad. The Charlatan Unclassifieds are a great way to reach over 20,000 people every week. Just fill out the form and bring in into the Charlatan office, 531 Unicentre.

Name

Student No.

Box No.

Unclassified Rates
Student Rates $3.21
Non Student $6.42
Personal Ads Free

These are per issue prices and GST has been included. To get the student rate you must have your student card.

Is Time Flying ?

Would You Like To Have Professional Looking

Maps or Diagrams In Your

Thesis, Report or Research Paper

But Don't Have The Time.

Give Us A Call

Custom Cartographics
We Make A World Of Difference

791-0873

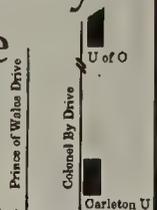

Students Pay No GST

Meadowlands Family Health Centre

Hog's Back Plaza
888 Meadowlands Drive East
corner of Prince of Wales Dr. and Meadowlands Dr.
(behind McDonald's)
Ottawa, Ontario K2C3R2
228-2882

Family Medicine Pediatrics
Adolescent Medicine Minor Surgery
Obstetrics and Maternity Care Counselling Services
Nous Parlons Français
Meadowlands Family Health Center

Open 7 days a week With or without appointment
Weekdays 8AM to 8PM
Weekends / Holidays 10AM to 6PM

"NOBODY PARTIES LIKE THE IRISH"

IRISH PUB & RESTAURANT

NO COVER 10¢ WINGS 15¢ SHRIMP
IMPORTED DRAFTS

LARGE PATIO DAILY SPECIALS
DART BOARDS SATELLITE TV

LIVE "IRISH" ENTERTAINMENT
EVERY WED., THURS., FRI. AND SAT. 9 P.M.

GOOD FUN GOOD FOOD GREAT BEER
67 CLARENCE STREET, BYWARD, MARKET, 562-0674

CLOTHING SALE 25 % OFF

CARLETON UNIVERSITY

BOOK STORE

Southam Hall

788-3832

9:00 am-9:00 pm

Athletics Building

788-2149

9:00 am-7:00 pm

MARCH 28-31

POLLING STATIONS

Polling will be taking place on:

Tuesday, March 29 from 11:10am-9:10pm
Wednesday, March 30 from 11:10am-9:10pm
Thursday, March 31 from 11:10am-9:10pm

at the following locations:

- Baker Lounge, Unicentre
- Tunnel junction between Library, Southam & Paterson
- Tunnel junction between Herzberg and Steacie
- MacKenzie and Minto Link
- Architecture outside the Hub
- Residence Commons main floor
- St. Pat's tunnel entrance
- Loeb tunnel entrance

Low spirits mean small crowds

by Shannon Fraser
Charlatan Staff

At many universities, school spirit and attendance rise and fall with the relative progress and setbacks of different sports. But not at Carleton.

Here, many students say a growing lack of school spirit is one problem contributing to declining attendances at most athletic events over the past few years.

Carleton's department of athletics collects very few attendance figures because it only charges for football, basketball and some major events in other sports. Attendance for football and basketball has remained small but steady, says special projects co-ordinator Mark Moroz.

This year for example, an average crowd of 350 people came out to watch football games. Over at the University of Ottawa, an average of 1,100 students came out to watch the Gee-Gees team.

Raven mascot Brad Ellis, who has probably gone to more athletic events than any other student in the past three years, says attendance has definitely declined over the last three years.

"Three years ago when I started, I'd walk in and there would be standing room only at the (basketball) game. Now, at the men's games, the bleachers are filled, but you can see various pockets... whereas before it was jammed."

Ellis also says there has been a change in the attitude of those fans who do show up for games.

"The people who are showing up... are not as rambunctious or as enthusiastic about what is going on."

What's the problem then?
"That's a tough one to answer," says basketball forward Jamie Marquardt. "Maybe some universities have it and others don't. It's just really hard to say. It's hard to pinpoint a direct reason."

Part of the problem is that there's no one defining cause. Instead, students say there are many reasons why there's a lack of school spirit at Carleton. Reasons like attitude, reputation and tradition.

Can anyone remember a crowd this size at a Carleton game in recent memory?

"It starts with the attitudes of the students at school. No one is willing to step forward and participate in anything," says fullback Toni Calabrese of the football team. "As a school, in general, everyone goes their own way, does their thing and minds their own business."

First-year journalism student Kristen Copeland says the school's poor reputation is a reason why Carleton students don't have much school spirit.

"(Carleton has) a bad reputation for (being) Last Chance U, and because of that, people tend not to have pride. They're embarrassed. They don't care," she says.

A lack of good old-fashioned sense of community is another problem, says defensive line Garrett Moulard of the football club.

"There has to be something here to bring people together. It's hard to get such a community sense with such a large enrolment. But you would think there would be more support from a university with such a large enrolment," he says.

But what's even worse than the lack of home crowd spirit, says Moulard, is when other schools are more appreciative of Carleton's accomplishments.

"I think as a football team we get more respect from other schools than we do from our own," he says. "This year was a big year for us with two wins, but it seemed other schools were more proud of us than our own students." □

Equal funding decided at Toronto

by Jim Bridges
The Varsity, University of Toronto

TORONTO (CUP) — The University of Toronto's department of athletics and recreation took an important step towards gender equity by deciding to provide equal funding for men's and women's teams last month.

The decision was reached by the department's athletic council on Feb. 28.

Marg McGregor, executive director of the Canadian Association for the Advancement of Women in Sport, says U of T's endorsement of equal funding is an important first at a Canadian university that will help set a tone for athletic departments at other universities.

"It's a tremendously progressive step," she says. "It really sends a clear message, by translating best intentions into concrete actions."

The 21 women's programs at U of T now receive $142,377, more than $65,000 less per year than the 22 men's programs.

Once fully implemented, both the men's and women's programs will receive equal funding "envelopes," from which each can divide among its teams.

This way, said Bruce Kidd, director of the school of physical and health education, both men and women can decide how to structure their own programs.

"If women decide they want to support 10 programs and the men decide they want to support five programs, as long as they use some reasonable process, that would be equitable and fair," he said.

Department of athletics director Ian McGregor said the department must implement equal funding by increasing the level for women, rather than decreasing funding for men.

"I think we should look at enhancing programs," Ian McGregor said. "Both (the department of athletics) council and university affairs board sent a clear message last year not to cut programs."

Gender equity at Carleton

Carleton's department of athletics ratified its own gender equity policy back in November of 1988 when the athletics board approved four gender equity proposals:

— to maintain the existing number of eight men's and nine women's sports teams unless there is a dramatic shift in ratio of men and women among Carleton's student population.

— to encourage women's participation in Carleton sports — to provide equal funding for men's and women's teams of 'like' sports and to provide good, quality equipment for all teams regardless of gender — to favor female coaches for women's teams when they are available and qualified and to encourage male coaches of women's teams to have female assistant coaches

Gail Blake, the women's inter-collegiate co-ordinator for athletics, says the policy is aimed at increasing the profile of women's varsity sports.

"I think we're always striving to look towards making some changes and always looking towards gaining opportunities for women and providing these opportunities," she says.

According to its 1993-94 budget, athletics spent $114,513 on its five men's teams, $97,446 on its six women's teams and $43,275 on its three shared men's and women's teams. □

RANT 'N' RAVEN

Playoffs the next goal

by Richard G.D. Scott
Charlatan Staff

Here's some advice for those of you who have been watching The Great One's chase to eclipse the National Hockey League's goal record of Mr. Hockey himself: don't adjust your sets.

On March 20, Wayne Gretzky scored a goal with 49 seconds left to lift the Los Angeles Kings into a 6-6 tie with the San Jose Sharks — the team they're chasing for the last playoff spot in the NHL's Western Conference. It was Gretzky's 801st NHL goal and it tied him with his boyhood idol Gordie Howe for first on the league's all-time scoring list.

One more goal and the record will be his.

But for those who think that Gretzky and the Kings will be dead and gone once Howe's record is out of the way, think again.

The best of Gretzky is yet to come and the Kings are far from dead in their race for the playoffs.

With 12 games left and the Kings trailing San Jose by five points, the hockey world is about to witness why the Great One should still be considered the world's greatest player.

While Gretzky may no longer be in his peak — many would say that at 33 he's in the twilight of his career — he still has mounds of hockey talent, experience and drive.

Who can forget how he nearly single-handedly led the underdog Kings into last year's Stanley Cup finals? Who can ignore the fact he's homing in on his 10th NHL scoring title? Can the Kings backed by Gretzky still make the playoffs? Absolutely.

Consider this: Twelve games remain for each of the three teams fighting for that last playoff berth in the Western Division. But of the Sharks (64 points), the Kings (59 points) and the first-year Mighty Ducks of Anaheim (59 points), the Kings have the easiest schedule among the three.

In both their remaining games against the Sharks and Ducks, they have home-ice advantage. In five of their other 10 games, they face off against teams with fewer points than themselves, including four against last-place Edmonton. Their toughest game left will likely be against the division-leading Calgary Flames, who haven't played well on the road all season.

On the other hand, San Jose and Anaheim each have eight games left against teams with much better records. San Jose's schedule includes games against Calgary, Pittsburgh and two against Toronto. Anaheim's schedule includes games against Boston, Toronto and two against Calgary.

And then there is the Gretzky factor.

In this past weekend's home-and-home series against the Sharks, he was a force both on and off the ice, tallying two points in Saturday's 2-1 win and two goals in Sunday's 6-6 tie.

So for those who think that No. 99 and the Kings are dead and gone now that Howe's record is out of the news, think again. The Kings are on their way to the playoffs.

Gretzky will be the reason why. □

Driving hard, fast and furious

Rookie racer Brendan Kerin is gearing up for Formula 1600 success

by Steven Vesely
Charlatan Staff

Dr. Noel Kerin remembers very clearly the first time his son Brendan got behind the wheel of a car. An inquisitive four-year-old Brendan decided to take the family Lincoln for a spin.

"He started the car, put it in gear, and drove it through the fence at the front of the house," he remembers. "I heard the crash and ran out. I said 'What did you do that for,' and he said, 'I thought I'd take the car out for a drive.'"

That was almost 20 years ago and Brendan Kerin is a much better driver these days.

In fact, after a successful rookie season in the Bridgestone Formula 2000 racing series last year, it could be said the third-year political science student at Carleton is one of the fastest-rising stars on the formula racing circuit.

It all started in April of '92, when the Bel-Ray Driver Search came to Shannonville, Ont., near Kerin's hometown of Baltimore.

The six-foot-one, 180-pound Kerin threw caution to the wind and paid the non-refundable $2,500 entry fee.

Among over 350 hopeful drivers racing timed laps around a track, Kerin finished among the top 30.

It was a very respectable finish for someone who had never before strapped himself behind the wheel of a race car. Not good enough for the winner's prize of sponsorship money for a summer's worth of racing in the Formula 2000 series, but certainly impressive enough to catch the eye of a local racing school instructor who was judging the event.

"It was obvious that here was a young driver who might have what it takes," says racing director Brett Goodman, remembering the first time he saw Kerin in a race car. "You have to have the talent sprinkled with the ability to learn. He had that diamond in the rough quality."

Goodman urged Kerin to enrol in his racing school despite the fact there's an over 50 per cent failure rate among racing students.

Kerin needed no encouragement.

"I knew I was hooked by the first gear shift," he says. "To go from 0 to 60 miles per hour in four seconds just blew me away. It was a mind-blowing experience."

He passed easily. "Initially he was too emotional and aggressive," says Goodman, "but he's developed a much better understanding of what racing's all about."

After training through the

As a rookie on the Formula 2000 series circuit last year, Kerin placed third overall and won Rookie of the Year honors.

winter, and finishing 12th among 400 drivers in the following spring's 1993 Driver Search, Kerin jumped straight into the cut-throat racing world with family money and support behind him.

Ignoring the traditional route of Karts to Formula 1200 and so on, he entered the 1993 Bridgestone Formula 2000 series held every summer at the Shannonville Motorsport Park.

In his first-ever race, Kerin finished third among a veteran field of 18.

"It was just this great sense of relief to finish the race," he recalls. "To make the podium was a bonus and a dream come true. It was like I'd arrived, set a tone and proved myself to other people."

In the 10-race series last summer, Kerin finished on the podium five times, with steadily improving results culminating in a first-place victory in the seventh race.

"It was a great duel," Kerin remembers. "(Another racer) and I both kept passing each other and sharing the lead. With four laps remaining I was leading and those last four laps were probably the longest 10 minutes of my life. You keep saying to yourself, 'When is this going to end?' When it finally did, I had tears falling from my eyes and I felt like I was on top of the world. To win a race as a rookie is an amazing achievement. With a win like that, you earn respect from your peers, the other drivers and scouts. You make a name for yourself."

In overall points, Kerin placed third in the series championship among over 30 drivers, behind two three-year veterans. He was also named Rookie of the Year.

"It was certainly a very well-deserved and worthwhile achievement to finish in the top-three," says five-year race veteran Rod Davis, who drove against Kerin that summer. "He deserved what he got. For a first-year driver in the 2000 against some stiff competition, he's done well."

Make no mistake, Kerin's rise on the Formula 2000 circuit hasn't been just beginner's luck. It takes certain qualities to be a race car driver, says Goodman. Tenacity. Quick reflexes. Desire. These are qualities his peers say Kerin has in abundance.

"He's intuitive and uses his head on the track," says Davis. "A lot of young drivers tend to have a macho sense of attitude and that gets them into trouble. They drive with their balls instead of their brains. Brendan has the wherewithal to remain calm and analyze a strategy before and during a race. That's his edge."

Most of all, he's a fierce competitor. Back in high school as a member of the Trinity College School football team, Kerin was one of those never-say-die athletes, says former coach Mac Campbell.

"He never quit," recalls Campbell. "You couldn't tear him off the field even when he was playing injured. He was just a serious competitor who hated to lose."

Racing, then, was a natural outlet for Kerin because of its sheer intensity. "I love the competitiveness and I'm ultra-competitive," says Kerin. "I've had the opportunity to play lots of sports and knowing that, I can say racing is the most challenging sport I've ever done."

It also requires talent. Kerin's got it. "He has a different way of looking at racing," says his dad. "There's a whole new dimension to his thinking when he drives a car."

Kerin is more modest about it. "You have to have a good feeling for the machine in a car," he says. "Some people have it and others have to develop it. I've always just had a bit of a natural feel for driving."

"He wasn't the greatest talent in the world but he worked harder than anyone else on the team."
— Mac Campbell

Looking ahead, after just one season of Formula 2000 racing, Kerin is moving on to this summer's Esso Protec Formula 1600 professional series.

The 1600 series, he says, is a natural route towards greater exposure because the 12-race, cross-country series is a more popular, highly publicized event that attracts high-calibre drivers from across North America.

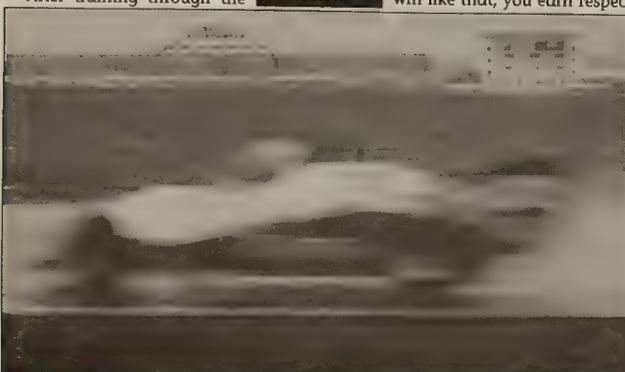

"It's the only route to go," he stresses. "Every top driver has done it. It's a highly, competitive training ground with lots of media exposure. If you can master a car here and win a 1600 series race, you can make a name for yourself."

Simply put, if you do well here, it bodes well for a driver's future. Many companies look to sponsor drivers at the 1600 level. For them, it's a cost-effective investment. They get to market their company and product through high-media exposure races while drivers get the funds they need to continue their racing careers.

"Anyone who has made it anywhere in racing," says Kerin, "has gone through this series."

That's a telling phrase. Because one day, soon, Kerin expects to join the ranks of those star drivers who have succeeded on the Formula 1600 series — and moved on to better things. □

"You have to be able to feel the car. In your hands. In your seat. The car has to become an extension of yourself. I know that sounds corny, but you just have to be in tune with the car."
— Brendan Kerin

Hey, it's hard to get a clear picture when you're racing at a 150 miles per hour.

Jockeying for position while training.

ALL PHOTOS BY ARREND BAAVEN

Grocery stores can satisfy your card hunger

Four food companies provide the cheapest and latest craze for hockey card collectors

by Richard G.D. Scott
Charlatan Staff

You're poor. You love hockey cards. You can't afford them.

If that adequately describes your situation, you need look no further than your local grocery store or fast food joint.

Food sets, series of sports cards put out by restaurants or food companies in their food packaging, are just another example of how the hockey card market reaches out and touches everyone.

The idea of food sets has grown over the last five years. This year alone, four different food sets are available to the everyday grocer or serious collector: through McDonald's Canada, High Liner fish foods, Durivage/Diana bread and Kraft General Foods.

The quickest and most readily available food set this season once again is the McDonald's All-Star set produced by the Upper Deck Company. For the third straight year, McDonald's Canada issued a 34-card set available in 4-card packs for 49 cents with the purchase of a medium or large drink. Also inserted in the McDonald's packs are instant-win cards for prizes like trips for two to the All-Star Game, one-on-one sessions with goaltender Patrick Roy of the Canadians or one of 150,000 large Roy cards.

High Liner produced a 15-card Goaltender's Great set for the 1993-94 year. One card is found in each specially marked box of High Liner foods with the option to order the complete factory set in a special binder for $5.95 with five proofs of purchase labels. The set's top cards are Roy and Toronto Maple Leaf goaltender Felix Potvin. Last season, High Liner produced a 28-card Stanley Cup Champions set.

Diana/Durivage are also in their second year on the food card market. With the help of the Score cards company, Diana/Durivage bakeries in Quebec issued a 50-card set of Quebec's greatest hockey players available in their 23 brands of bread. The popular set includes rookies such as the Ottawa Senators' forward Alexandre Daigle and the Quebec Nordiques' goaltender Jocelyn Thibeault. Also inserted are 1,000 personally autographed cards of Roy and Thibeault.

Finally, there is the grand daddy of food issues: Kraft. Kraft General Foods of Canada produced hockey cards for the fifth consecutive year in 1994. This year's set includes 26 cards on the back of different Kraft Dinner boxes; six cards available in cases of Kraft Dinner; 23 disc-shaped cards under caps of Kraft Companies like McDonald's, Kraft Foods, High Liner and Durivage/Diana bakeries are issuing hockey cards like these.

Peanut Butter and 16 cards with Kraft Jell-O.

A special collector's album is also available by mail order. Top cards on the dinner boxes are Daigle and Philadelphia's Eric Lindros. This season's discs also include 5,000 personally autographed Mario Lemieux cards.

The novelty of food sets is that they're not mass manufactured like regular sports card sets. Food sets are one-of-a-kind items ideal for serious collectors. Another advantage of food sets is that they're small in number and not expensive to collect.

The greatest disadvantage is that once they're gone from shelves, it's difficult to finish an incomplete set. Another problem is improperly cut cards off the back of Kraft Dinner boxes. And there is always the problem of there being only so much food one can eat.

So if you are a serious collector looking for something to spice up your collection, or just a casual grocer having some fun, taking a bite into hockey food cards can prove tasteful. □

Living & learning French in Quebec city (Canada)

Please send me more information on the L'AVAIL UNIVERSITY INTENSIVE FRENCH LANGUAGE PROGRAM

Intensive French Courses in North America's French Capital

- Small classes • All levels • Common core approach • Integration into the French speaking milieu
- Exceptional sports facilities • Campus housing or accommodations with francophones • Age 18 or older

				Tuition Fees (approx.)
Fall	September-December	15 weeks	16 credits	CDN $ 1 215
Winter	January-April	15 weeks	16 credits	CDN $ 1 215
Spring	May-June	6 weeks	7 credits	CDN $ 640
Summer	July-August	6 weeks	7 credits	CDN $ 640

Information
Ecole de langues vivantes
Pavillon Charles De Koninck (2305)
Université Laval, Québec, Canada G1K 7P4
Tel (418) 656 2321 Fax (418) 656 7018

Name _____ Fall session
Address _____ Winter session
Country _____ Spring session
Postal Code _____ Summer session

Charlatan Hockey Pool

Here are the point leaders in the Charlatan Hockey Pool. Points were tabulated as of Tue. Mar. 22, 1994. Regular season leaders can only win the dinner prize once. (Italicized names are former winners.)

BAXTER'S

1344 Bank Street
(at Riverside)
738-3323

Congratulations to Marc Arsenault who wins this week's dinner prize. Arsenault and last week's winner Blair Sanderson can come pick up their $25 dinner certificates for Baxter's restaurant at The Charlatan.

1 Patrick Soden	787
2 R. De Vecchi	769
3 Anjali Varma	765
4 Vicki Mavraganis	764
5 Jeff Parker	760
6 Jason Beifuss	760
7 Sujoy Bhattacharyya	758
8 R. Daggupati	755
9 Tyler Vaillant	754
10 Marc Arsenault	750
11 Paul Donovan	748
12 Joseph Kurikose	747
13 Alex Varki	747
14 Steven Lief	747
15 Blair Sanderson	747

Charlatan Sports Trivia

SALOON

1. Place your answer, name and phone number on a piece of paper and submit it to The Charlatan sports editor, room 531 Unicentre. The recipient of the prize will be determined by a supervised draw of all correct answers.
2. All answers must be received by Tuesday, March 29, 1994. The winner should come up to the office for the prize on any Monday or Tuesday.
3. Contestants may submit only one entry per week.
4. Charlatan staff members and their families are not eligible to participate.

Answer: _____

Name: _____

Phone: _____

Answer the following question correctly and become eligible to win a $25 dinner for two at Schadillac's Saloon.

How many Montreal Expos who played first base last year? Bonus dinner prize if you can name them.

No one guessed correctly that Foster Hewitt coined his famous 'He shoots! He scores!' line in 1934.

Stayed tuned for the next issue of The Charlatan. On March 31 we will be announcing the winners of the Fabulous Vacation Getaways. Good luck to those who entered.

TEACHING ENGLISH IN POLAND

IF YOU HAVE TEFU/ TESL TRAINING and EXPERIENCE

we have teaching positions for you

MONTHLY LOCAL SALARY
FREE ACCOMMODATION and MEALS
MEDICAL INSURANCE
VOLUNTEERS PAY THEIR OWN
AIR FARES

For details and application forms contact:

Education and Training Programs for Poland

425 Adelaide St. W., 5th Floor
Toronto, Ontario M5V 3C1
Tel: (416) 392-0503
Fax: (416) 392-1085

This program is financially supported by the Bureau of Assistance for Central and Eastern Europe Foreign Affairs, Ottawa

ARE YOU A COLLEGE OR UNIVERSITY GRADUATE?

Algonquin College, Pembroke Campus is now accepting applications for the new Environmental Studies Program scheduled to start on August 29, 1994.

This one-year program is for graduates of post-secondary college or university programs in natural sciences, resources management, engineering, business, public relations or communications.

The Environmental Studies Program is designed to give students an increased understanding of the dynamics of natural environments; management strategies to minimize detrimental impact on natural and human environments; and biological, physical, social, and economical implications of environmental management decisions.

For more information on the Environmental Studies Program, please contact:

Dr. Kim Clark - Co-ordinator
613-735-4704/735-4700

ALGONQUIN

315 Pembroke Street East
Pembroke, Ontario, K8A 3K2

"THE PAPER" DELIVERS!

Ron Howard draws zesty performances from the cast and nails the mad-dog anarchy of the newsroom!

Peter Travers, ROLLING STONE MAGAZINE

"ONE OF THE MOST ENTERTAINING MOVIES TO COME OUT OF HOLLYWOOD IN YEARS!"

Julianne Garey, USA MAGAZINE

A NEW COMEDY FROM THE DIRECTOR OF "BACKDRAFT" AND "PARENTHOOD!"

MICHAEL KEATON GLENN CLOSE MARISA TOMEI RANDY QUAIID ROBERT DUVAL

A behind-the-lines look at work, marriage and other forms of combat.

THE PAPER

IMAGINE ENTERTAINMENT PRESENTS A BRUCE GRAZIER PRODUCTION "THE PAPER" WITH RANDY QUAIID AND ROBERT DUVAL WRITTEN BY RANDY QUAIID AND RANDY NEWMAN DIRECTED BY RON HOWARD CASTING BY JUDITH ROSENBLATT COSTUME DESIGNER RANDY NEWMAN MUSIC BY JAMES NEWTON HOWARD EXECUTIVE PRODUCERS TODD HOLLOWELL AND DYLAN SELLERS PRODUCED BY DAVID ADEPP AND BRUCE GRAZIER AND FREDERICK ZOLLO WRITTEN BY DAVID KOSEFF AND STEPHEN KOPPEL

Starts Friday March 25th
At a Theatre Near You

VOTERS LIST FOR CHARLATAN ELECTION 1994/95

It's that time of year again — time to pass on the torch to a fresh buncha editors. Anyone can run. Anyone who has 4 credits in the masthead this year can vote for editor-in-chief, op/ed editor and board of directors staff reps. Anyone with 4 credits who has contributed once to a section can vote for that editor.

Voting for the section editors and board reps will take place Monday, March 28 and Tuesday, March 29, in Ombuds Services, Room 511 Unice Centre, between 9 a.m. and 4:30 p.m. (closed 12-1 p.m.). Candidates for section editors will be speaking at the staff meeting on Thursday, March 24, at 5:30 p.m. If you have any questions about your eligibility to vote, don't hesitate to call Mo Gannon at 788-6680.

AS OF MARCH 17, 1994

OP/ED EDITOR,
BOARD REPS
Aaron, Bram
Abemethy, Sarah
Ali, Kim
Andrew, Suzanne
Bartolf, David
Bellefeuille, Andre
Bellemare, Josée
Bernard, Joe
Bichat, Gladys
Bock, Naomi
Bodnar, Alex
Brethour, Pat
Brzozowski, Anna
Bustos, Alex
Caffrey, Rori
Campbell, Frank
Capuani, Joanne
Carlucci, Mario
Carpenter, Dave
Ciszewski, Johanna
Comino, M.G.
Cooper, Bill
Currie, Lisa
Davies, Jennifer
DeCloet, Derek
Dobrenski, Steve
D'Orazio, Franco
Dowdall, Brent
Drever, Ken
Duncan, Todd
Edwards, Drew
Follett, Amanda
Forieri, Sussana
Fraser, Shannon
Gallop, Angie
Gannon, Mo
Garrison, Stephanie
Grant, Joel Kenneth
Haggart, Blayne
Haley, Susie

Herland, Neil
Hodges, David
Jafri, Ali
James, Colin
Jordan, Karin
Keeling, Arn
Keenan, Sheila
Khan, Kaleem
Labonte, Bill
Lamb, Mark
Levine, Sara-Lynne
Mahoney, Jill
Mainville, Michael
McAiffie, Derrick
McCrosbie, James
McKay, Kevin
McKenzie, Jodi
McLeod, Ian
Nakashima, Ryan
Nuttall-Smith, Chris
O'Connor, Tim
Oza, Prema
Pangalos, Anthony
Paterson, Pamela
Perry, Jill
Peters, Mike
Poots, Trina
Power, Gavin
Pryor, Tim
Rappaport, Mike
Restivo, Kevin
Richards, Sarah
Richardson, Karen
Scallen, Shawn
Scott, Richard G.D.
Seddon, Adam
Shigetomi, Cindy
Shurrie, Matt
Silcoff, Sean
Simtob, Audrey
Skinner, Matt
Smith, Andrea
Srutek, Karolina

Steinbachs, John
Tattersall, Jane
Tharayil, Jay
Tomlinson, Dean
Vesely, Steven
Ward, Ryan
Watt, Caron
Weikle, Brandie
Wiebe, Andrea
Willbond, Rob
Wood, Clayton
Workman, Tanya
Zelinsky, Tonya

NEWS

Bartolf, David
Bellemare, Josée
Bock, Naomi
Bustos, Alex
Carlucci, Mario
DeCloet, Derek
D'Orazio, Franco
Dowdall, Brent
Edwards, Drew
Gallop, Angie
Gannon, Mo
Haggart, Blayne
Haley, Susie
Hodges, David
Jordan, Karin
Keeling, Arn
Keenan, Sheila
Mahoney, Jill
Mainville, Michael
McKenzie, Jodi
McLeod, Ian
Nakashima, Ryan
Nuttall-Smith, Chris
O'Connor, Tim
Oza, Prema
Pangalos, Anthony
Perry, Jill
Peters, Mike

NATIONAL

Aaron, Bram
Bartolf, David
Bellemare, Josée
Bernard, Joe
Brethour, Pat
Bustos, Alex
Carlucci, Mario
DeCloet, Derek
Dobrenski, Steve
D'Orazio, Franco
Dowdall, Brent
Gallop, Angie
Gannon, Mo
Haggart, Blayne
Haley, Susie
Jordan, Karin
Keeling, Arn
Keenan, Sheila
Mahoney, Jill
Mainville, Michael
McKenzie, Jodi
McLeod, Ian
Nakashima, Ryan
O'Connor, Tim
Oza, Prema
Pangalos, Anthony

Pryor, Tim
Scott, Richard G.D.
Skinner, Matt
Smith, Andrea
Srutek, Karolina
Steinbachs, John
Vesely, Steven
Ward, Ryan
Weikle, Brandie
Wood, Clayton
Workman, Tanya
Zelinsky, Tonya

FEATURES

Bellemare, Josée
Bock, Naomi
Caffrey, Rori
Carlucci, Mario
DeCloet, Derek
Dobrenski, Steve
D'Orazio, Franco
Dowdall, Brent
Gallop, Angie
Gannon, Mo
Garrison, Stephanie
Haggart, Blayne
Hodges, David
James, Colin
Jordan, Karin
Keeling, Arn
Keenan, Sheila
Mahoney, Jill
Mainville, Michael
McLeod, Ian
O'Connor, Tim
Power, Gavin
Pryor, Tim
Rappaport, Mike
Seddon, Adam
Silcoff, Sean
Smith, Andrea
Vesely, Steven
Ward, Ryan

SPORTS

Aaron, Bram
Bellemare, Josée
Carlucci, Mario
DeCloet, Derek
Dowdall, Brent
Fraser, Shannon
Gannon, Mo
Haggart, Blayne
Keeling, Arn
Keenan, Sheila
Labonte, Bill
O'Connor, Tim
Restivo, Kevin
Richards, Sarah
Scott, Richard G.D.
Shurrie, Matt
Smith, Andrea
Tharayil, Jay
Vesely, Steven
Ward, Ryan

ARTS

Aaron, Bram
Andrew, Suzanne
Bartolf, David
Bellemare, Josée
Bernard, Joe
Bock, Naomi
Bustos, Alex
Caffrey, Rori
Capuani, Joanne
Carlucci, Mario
Carpenter, Dave
Ciszewski, Johanna
Comino, M.G.
DeCloet, Derek
D'Orazio, Franco
Dowdall, Brent
Edwards, Drew
Forieri, Sussana
Gannon, Mo

Garrison, Stephanie

Haggart, Blayne
Haley, Susie
Herland, Neil
Hodges, David
Jafri, Ali
Jordan, Karin
Keeling, Arn
Keenan, Sheila
Lamb, Mark
McCrosbie, James
Nakashima, Ryan
Nuttall-Smith, Chris
Scallen, Shawn
Scott, Richard G.D.
Smith, Andrea
Steinbachs, John
Tomlinson, Dean
Vesely, Steven

ONE CREDIT LEFT TO VOTE

Bell, Christopher
Clements, Rob
Craft, Christina
Crosbie, Vanessa
Docking, David
Goodman, Sarah
Harp, Rick
Izzard, Suzanne
Janvier, Dean
Johnson, Doug
Kirincich, Stephanka
Kirkham, John
Klaus, Alex
Manchak, Renata
McLennan, Rob
Orol, Ron
Owens, Greg
Price, John
Reid, Chris
Richardson, Michael
Sali, Evan
Sane, Dane
Stansfield, James

The Beat goes on

by Charmead Schella
Charlatan Staff

Allen Ginsberg
Sir George William College,
Concordia, Montreal
March 17

After years of drug experimentation, after radical religious shifts, after years of hitchhiking across the United States and Mexico, after years of sexual confusion, Allen Ginsberg can still captivate an audience.

It's as if he was still 30 years old and travelling from American university to American university in an orange Volkswagen mini-van, reciting politically incorrect poetry to beatniks.

In the late 1940s, Ginsberg, along with Jack Kerouac and William Burroughs, forged the road away from the long-trudged path of romantic and modern literature. This new road would later be called the Beat Generation, which, as Ginsberg's poetry reading proved, is still a much-travelled path.

Ginsberg was in Montreal last week as a guest lecturer for a creative writing and poetry class at Concordia. The lecture was about 70-per-cent reading and 30-per-cent teaching of poetic device and style.

Ginsberg, though 68 years old, was riveting, entertaining and informative throughout the entire lecture. I didn't see one yawn, one nodding head, or one blurry eye trying to stay open.

Ginsberg powered through 2 1/2 hours worth of poetry, covering his work from 1947 right up to the present, with a 1993 piece about Bosnia. Reading some works, singing others and chanting the remaining few, Ginsberg intrigued all 750 people in attendance for the full allotment of time, despite microphone feedback, crying babies and late arrivals.

Though Ginsberg didn't read "Howl," the poem which has become synonymous with the Beat name, he did speak briefly about its creation in 1955. The writing of "Howl," over a few years time, took "a little bit of morphine, a little bit of LSD, a little bit of caffeine and a little bit of nicotine."

All of Ginsberg's inspiration has not been drug-induced, as some would immediately think when reading the writings of the Beat movement. He was not the addict that Burroughs was, though he did experiment on occasion, as is evident from the creation of "Howl." Other works like "Sunflower Sutra" are dream-inspired pieces. Being already influenced by Blake's romantic poem, "Sunflower," one night in 1955, Ginsberg had a dream in which Blake spoke to him.

"Sunflower Sutra" is the end result of the conversation he carried with him, Ginsberg said at the lecture. This piece was Ginsberg's best read this evening, because he maintained vocal and emotional control that seemed to fluctuate with his other discussed works.

Despite the obvious personal content of each poem, Ginsberg read all of them with a passion that would suggest he had written each only days before.

Ginsberg spoke briefly of his past social circle, in which travelled the likes of Burroughs, Kerouac, Bob Dylan and Neal Cassidy. These people were each very close to him or his work at invaluable periods of his illustrious career. Each can be seen repeatedly throughout his poetry either under their real names or under guises.

In "Sunflower Sutra," Ginsberg writes, "Jack Kerouac sat beside me on a busted rusty iron pole, companion, / we thought the same thoughts of the soul, bleak and blue / and sad-eyed, surrounded by the gnarled steel roots of trees / of machinery."

Kerouac died in 1969, leaving Burroughs and Ginsberg to their own devices.

Among other recurring themes, Ginsberg writes at length of homosexuality, of which he experienced much emotional confusion for several years, before meeting up with the other Beats. He had a rather long and drawn-out love affair with Cassidy beginning in the late 1940s, lasting about 20 years.

Much of Ginsberg's poetry is about the spiritual conflicts stemming from the relationship between him and Cassidy. In 1948, Ginsberg wrote his first song, "A Western Ball," which was about a particularly bad breakup he and Cassidy endured. This song was performed Thursday to the accompaniment of a hand-held harmonium, played by Ginsberg.

The homosexual theme still seems rather important to Ginsberg today. In 1986 he wrote a piece which began with the line, "I hope my good old asshole holds out." He read this after relating how he was in Europe last fall. Seeing all the young Italian men made him wish he wasn't the age that he is.

All in all, Ginsberg gave a riveting talk on poetry which would have inspired even the most dead-beat of writers to get back to their Macs and plug away.

Ginsberg closed with the joking remark that, "If we don't show anyone (our writing), then we're free to write anything."

It's that very beatnik attitude that started the Beat ball rolling in the first place, only the writing was eventually shown to the world.

And it's a good thing, too. Otherwise we'd still be reading Swift and Spenser and Coleridge and Wordsworth and. . . □

The Charlatan Education Corner

Canadian Currency Museum: Money made fun!

by Sarah Richards
Charlatan Staff

Flash Trivia Question: What animal is on the back of a $1,000 Canadian bill?

To find out, you'll have to visit the Canadian Currency Museum.

Located in the heart of the nation's capital, this museum follows the history of money from the world's first ancient coins to the most modern currencies.

Beautiful gilded-edge coins from Hong Kong greet you upon entering the maze-like museum. Coins from all nations, of all different shapes and sizes reflect the glow of the museum's subtle mood lighting.

If you reminisce over that beat-up one dollar bill that you tried to save as an heirloom, but caved in and bought beer instead, there's the Collector's Corner. It's a room full of pull-out display racks containing samples of national currencies.

There, you can see Canadian bills from our country's beginning to the present, including the last dollar bill that was made before the loonie appeared on the scene. Rack after rack holds bills. Some, like one from the Austro-Hungarian Bank, are the size of small dogs.

Unfortunately, the museum is so full of coins that by the end of the tour, you'll be as bored as the kids who are running around and hanging off the display cases.

But it's pretty impressive, especially when you find out that 92 per cent of the coin display is out of sight in the curator's back office. Besides being used for research, what does that part of the display do there?

"It just sits there," says one of the friendly staff.

Glad to see the public's tax dollars at work.

There's also an interesting display geared right at you Generation X-ers out there. It's on "near currency," the term given to substitute forms of "money" the government issued during the Depression. A variety of cheques and coupons are on display, tacked up against a black and white photo of unemployed men. One is a little ticket which reads, "Supply bearer with one bed." Expect them to be available soon at a bank near you.

While the display on counterfeiting methods is rather disappointing — the staff said the display is kept vague on purpose for some strange reason — the collection of coins from the 1976 Montreal Olympics is exquisite. The silver coins depict various Olympic sports like diving and soccer, and range in value from $5 to $100. Too bad they couldn't use them to pay off the debt Montrealers are still paying for staging the event!

And for all of you wanting to pay off that student loan, don't even think about it. The museum has an array of security devices, although the staff don't like to talk too much about them.

"There's cameras, a security guard . . . there's a sensitivity system on each of the display cases which, if pushed too hard, an alarm goes off downstairs and the guards go up and tell you not to push on it," says Martin-Denis Morais, who works at the front desk.

Of course, enquiring minds want to know just how hard do you have to push for the alarm to go off?

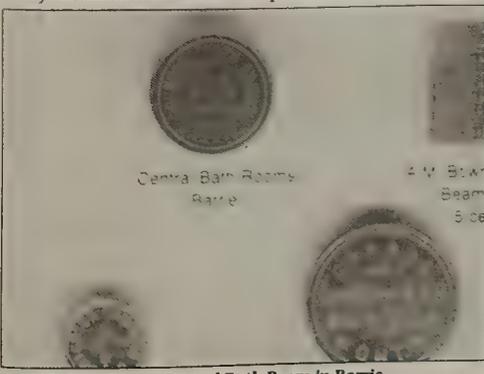

"I don't know," says Morais, "it depends. Most of them you can push pretty hard," he says.

But if you do take your chances, go for the rusty 1911 $1 Canadian coin near the exit of the museum. It's one of only two in the world, estimated at $1 million Canadian: a nice amount to pay off that OSAP loan while spending the winter in Tahiti. □

The answer to the trivia question, the pine grosbeak. For all you people from outside of Manitoba. It's a bird.

This week:
Words We Can't Stand

1. Guelph
2. nosh
3. pancreas
4. sheep
5. broad
6. zipper
7. penchant
8. Dowling, Ont.
9. acetate
10. Coupland

God bless us for the Central Bath Room in Barrie.

Who would've guessed he's from Aylmer?

by Olu Saul
Charlatan Staff

There is a new voice in Canadian hip hop and it's shouting out of Aylmer.

Merlin's his name and if this surprises you, then remain seated when you hear what he has to say, because he is about to challenge the way you think.

The 24-year-old, who was born in New York but now resides in Aylmer, Que. (No, I'm not kidding), has just released A Noise Supreme, a solo album that he recorded and produced in his parents' basement.

Although his music has traces of hip hop, he doesn't think this term accurately reflects his music.

"I'm trying to create a space that hasn't been used before," he says.

There is a strong element of cynicism in Merlin's music. "(The music) has to do with people taking things for granted," he says. The album is an expression of doubt and reflects his tendency to challenge the things we take for granted.

"Ideas are cool to have and embrace for a little while, but you always have to challenge them," says Merlin.

This approach is evident in songs like "Preacher," which deals with his views on religion and the Bible. As Merlin says in the song, "I want to be pure, but why should I read a book that's 2,000 years old?"

As this song shows, Merlin is quite philosophical. It may come as a bit of a surprise to learn that he considers himself a Christian, despite his doubts about the fundamental beliefs underlying Christianity.

It appears that he is quite aware of the power of the mainstream media and this CD, done as it was without any corporate involvement, is an attempt to speak out against that power. "I wanted it to get to the public unfiltered," he says.

According to Merlin, people have been very receptive to his music. His record

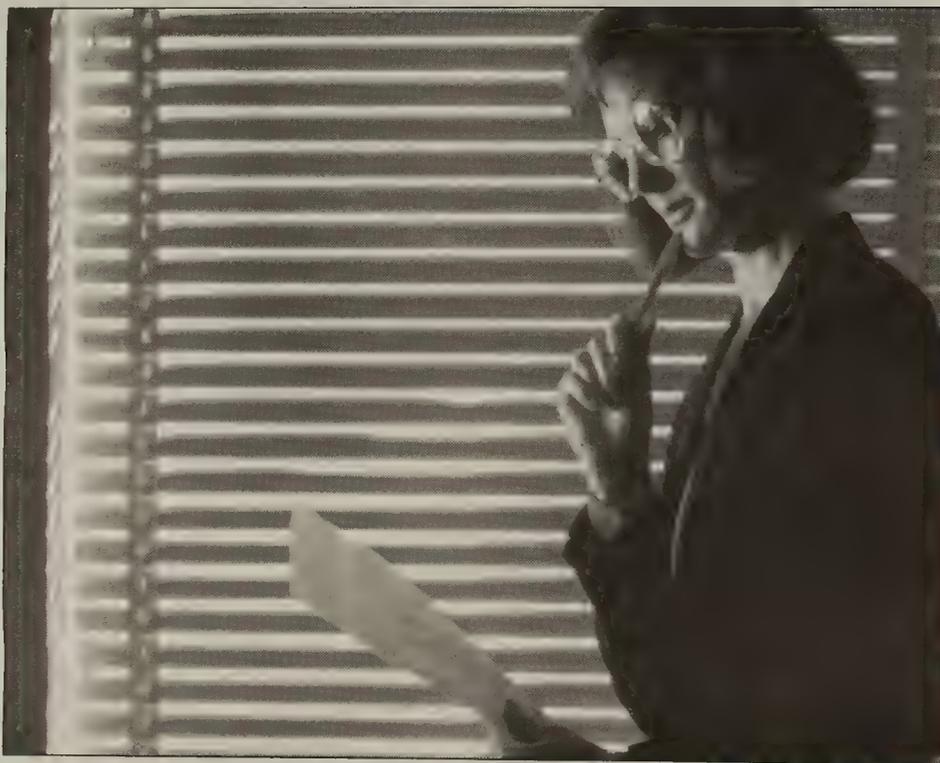

"Preacher" deals with Merlin's views on religion and the Bible. As he says in the song, "I want to be pure, but why should I read a book that's 2000 years old?"

company, MCA Records, is doing its best to let the world know about him. Merlin says all this attention hasn't phased him, because for him the music must come before the benefits of the industry.

This CD brings out quite a few sides to Merlin's personality, something he says the industry tries to pigeon-hole. According to him, if your music and your personality get pigeon-holed, your expression is in a sense limited, and the industry will control everything you produce.

The music contained within A Noise Supreme cannot be labelled as any style and therefore in a sense creates a style of its own. A Noise Supreme hits you in such a way that you are forced to listen. Brash, blunt and straight to the point, the lyrics proclaim Merlin's doubt but also gives us an idea of the frustration that he feels about people's attitudes and the way they think. Easy listening it's not.

If you're interested in music that you can relate to and that actually says something important, pick up A Noise Supreme and enjoy the noise. Once in a while you have to challenge some ideas. □

Some of this country's most creative minds are in Canada's insurance industry.

They're the kinds of minds that know creativity goes far beyond art, literature or making movies. If you're like that, why not consider a career with Canada's property/casualty, or general insurance industry? The industry offers a wide variety of career choices for creative minds. Accountants yes, but also systems analysts, lawyers, managers, loss prevention engineers, investment specialists, investigators, marine underwriters, aviation adjusters and many more. The choice is yours.

General insurance is also an industry that encourages you to acquire its own levels of professionalism. As a Fellow or Associate of The Insurance Institute of Canada, you would join an educated, experienced and ethical group of professionals equipped to pursue successful careers at the local, provincial, national or even international level.

Choice, challenge, satisfaction and security. They are just some of the rewards you'll enjoy through a creative career in the property/casualty insurance industry.

For more information, look for your local Insurance Institute in the white pages or, contact Les Dandridge, B.A., A.I.I.C., at The Insurance Institute of Canada, 18 King Street East, 6th Floor, Toronto, Ontario, M5C 1C4 (416) 362-8586 FAX (416) 362-1126.

Canada's Insurance Professionals
The Graduates of The Insurance Institute of Canada.

It's funny AND it features stuffed bunny rabbits

by M.G. Comino
Charlatan Staff

The Baltimore Waltz
New Theatre of Ottawa
Great Canadian Theatre Company
March 16 — April 2

Playwright Paula Vogel wrote The Baltimore Waltz in memory of her brother, Carl, who died of AIDS in 1988.

In 1986, Carl invited Paula on a joint excursion to Europe. She declined, not knowing that he was HIV positive.

Vogel considers The Baltimore Waltz as "a way for everyone to celebrate people they've lost."

The play is a simple but charming 90-minute comedy-drama about a woman named Anna and her brother Carl. Anna and Carl leave New York for Europe in hopes of finding a miraculous cure for Anna's disease, ATD (Acquired Toilet Disease), which can only be caught by single schoolteachers that use their students' washroom stalls.

Confronted with her own mortality, Anna decides to spend the time in Europe sleeping with as many men as possible.

The Baltimore Waltz uses only three actors: Catherine Mackenzie as the sexually liberated Anna, Robert Bockstael as Carl, and John Koensgen, who plays everyone else.

Even though this is a play that deals with a lethal disease, the tone of the play is kept light, with several strange happenings throughout.

One of the more bizarre happenings in this comedy is the fact that Carl brings a stuffed bunny everywhere, even sleeping with it. Koensgen, as a sinister character, follows them with a stuffed bunny of his own, hoping to make a bunny exchange. Anna suspects the bunnies are being used to hide drugs.

Perhaps the funniest scene occurs when both Koensgen's character and Carl approach each other and flash their bunnies. In the end, we never do find out what was going on with the bunnies.

In addition to the humor, the acting was believable; the play proceeded at a quick pace, the plot moving as quickly as a typical Simpsons episode.

Koensgen proved his versatility, transforming into over 10 different characters throughout the play. He plays a French waiter, a virgin in Munich, a little Dutch boy and a cool German man: all of whom Anna sleeps with, all of whom want sex with no strings attached.

He also plays different doctors, including one in Vienna that drinks urine in order to examine the interior condition of the patient's body.

The love between Anna and Carl is very apparent through what they say to

But it's just a bunny!

each other as adults, through their childhood memories which they share with the audience and because they sleep together, nesting innocently in each other's arms.

The staging was excellent, with three panels representing different locations, including interiors for night clubs, doctors' offices and hotels, among others.

One particularly effective scene is when Carl and Anna show the audience slides of their travels in Germany. This slide show was another great technique that added to the overall "abroad" atmosphere.

The stage effects are creative and impressive, probably out of necessity. Using only one stage set, The Baltimore Waltz presents illusions of night-time (lights being lowered, shadows of vertical blinds upon the bed) and daytime (sound of clock ticking, then its alarm sounding off).

The evening I saw the play, the audience numbered only 25, which was unfortunate. Oh well, that just meant more leg room and choice in seating.

The Baltimore Waltz is a good play, with good stage effects that allowed one to truly feel they are watching scenes from different European countries. The acting is professional and convincing.

My only complaint was with Mackenzie's slightly too-loud voice. I understand that enthusiasm is part of her character, but I sat in the upper half of the audience seating, and her voice was still overpowering.

The Baltimore Waltz is a touching play about a loving sister-brother relationship. Vogel seems to be encouraging members of the audience to make the most of any valued relationship, since tragedy can unexpectedly rob anyone of a loved one. □

Tired of the Same Old Crowd?

Like to try a different scene ... but on a student's budget? For the same price as a few beers, The National Arts Centre Orchestra offers a lot of great bars for your buck. Now save 50% off the regular adult price of prime orchestra-level seats when you purchase student tickets using one of these coupons. You can plan on some great nights out this year, for only $14.44 a seat. And there's no minimum purchase required.

Get your tickets now and enjoy some nights out you'll remember.

March 23-24 Franz-Paul Decker, conductor Ida Haendel, violin Kathleen Brett, soprano Norine Burgess, mezzo-soprano Women of the Ottawa Choral Society Britten Violin concerto No. 1 Mendelssohn A Midsummer Night's Dream	Per person GST included. Valid for students with ID only. Seats in Orchestra rows D-S. $14.44
April 20-21 Trevor Pinnock, conductor Cho-Liang Lin, violin Bizet Symphony in C major Gougeon World premiere of Primus Tempus (NAC/CBC co-commission) Beethoven Violin Concerto in D major	Per person GST included. Valid for students with ID only. Seats in Orchestra rows D-S. $14.44
May 12-13 Trevor Pinnock, conductor Grigory Sokolov, piano Joanna Grofnerer, flute Jane Logan, viola Satie Gymnopédie No. 1 Chopin Piano Concerto No. 2 in F minor Bouchardeau Exquisite Fines Mendelssohn Symphony No. 4 in A major, "Italian"	Per person GST included. Valid for students with ID only. Seats in Orchestra rows D-S. $14.44

Place your order in person at the NAC Box Office, with your valid student ID. The office is open Monday to Saturday, 12:00 to 21:00, and accepts all major credit cards, cash and debit cards.

NATIONAL ARTS CENTRE  CENTRE NATIONAL DES ARTS

Portraits Now

Bayshore The Official Graduation Photographer for Carleton University Student Association, Inc. 1993/94

Why PORTRAITS NOW?

- No Sitting Fee on Campus!
- Previews Back Next Day!
- Choice of Backgrounds!
- Satisfaction Guaranteed!

ATTENTION 1993/94 GRADUATES

Portraits Now - Bayshore has been chosen by CUSA Inc. as the Official Photographer for Carleton University 1993/1994 Graduates. DON'T MISS OUT! Make your appointment to get your Graduation Portraits from Portraits Now - Bayshore by calling 596-1501 or visit our studio across from Porter Hall.

2nd Semester Session extended to March 31, 1994 across from Porter Hall

Portraits Now - Bayshore 596-1501
100 Bayshore Dr., Nepean Ont., K2B 8C1

How to be a dance innovator (Hint: it involves dogs)

by Stephanie Garrison
Charlatan Staff

The Parsons Dance Company
NAC Opera
March 19

Anyone who has ever had enough courage to strike out on their own can identify with the experience choreographer David Parsons once had with Robert Fripp.

In 1982, Parsons created Caught, a dance piece that used music by Fripp as its score. This created a bit of a legal problem. The obscure number was mentioned in a newspaper, and Fripp's people in New York informed Parsons he'd have to pay royalties each time he used it.

"So I got in touch with Fripp personally, and said 'Let me show you the piece.' I had absolutely no money at all," Parsons remembers. "Fripp came to look at it... and he loved it so much he wrote me a new score. Very backwards."

Backwards and a bit lucky. Since then, Parsons has collaborated with several other big name musicians to create works for his troupe. Only now he makes sure to ask first.

Parsons founded his company in 1987. Since then it has grown to encompass a repertoire of 28 works (eight with commissioned scores) and an international touring schedule.

Parsons uses different composers for variety, because he says he feels stagnation in dance is preventable with a large repertoire.

"A lot of times in dance — especially Western world dance — I have this feeling of a formula being found by the choreographer," Parsons says. "I think that there's a lot of young choreographers who are realizing that right now, and definitely my company is one of them."

His dancers enjoy mixing a diversity of dance vocabularies and cultures. By consciously deconstructing the creative process each time it's in use, Parsons keeps dance in his company fresh.

"The object is to keep in a situation where you don't really know where you are," says Parsons. "It's a big risk; it takes a lot of energy. You get tired faster when you're in a place where you're not quite sure where you are."

Parsons was a member of the world-renowned Paul Taylor Dance Company in New York from 1978 until his departure to form the Parsons Dance Company in 1987. Leaving an internationally acclaimed company to concentrate on his own work was a risk Parsons faced head on, albeit prepared. The beginning was difficult.

"You're looking at a period of time where you're very vulnerable to failure," Parsons says, "because you have to take care of the business aspect... the choreography, you have to dance, you have to be a daddy... a lot of people never get over that hump." His reputation as a choreographer was cemented before he left Paul Taylor, and Parsons credits this as being the deciding factor in his own company's success.

The Parsons Dance Company, flying.

"People think I just got out of bed one day and said, 'Yeah, I'm going to open my own touring company,'" Parsons laughs. In fact, he spent his summer breaks from Paul Taylor performing and working with other dancers, creating the foundation for his dance company. He finds the interaction with other dancers a significant benefit of his work.

"One of the joys I have of being a creator, of having a company, is to employ artists," Parsons says. "Just watching their faces as they discover something and try it out."

This year the company will premiere Step Into My Dream, which incorporates improvisational dance with a live jazz trio on stage.

"The dancers are actually not choreographed at all during a situation, but they have to move in terms of the music." Plus, while the dancers are interpreting the music, the musicians are reacting to the dancers, says Parsons. Two years were spent in preparation for this concept.

"The structure is very precise in where the beginning and end of the improvisation is, but beyond that, that's it," Parsons says.

"Improvisation really hasn't been used with dancing all that often. I mean, I've been dancing with dogs on stage," Parsons says.

During one performance in Colorado, Parsons danced with a friend's black Lab.

"I came on and started dancing. Pretty soon, he decided to walk out and play with me a bit," Parsons recalls. "I picked him up and... we just stood there for about 30 seconds, with a big dog in my arms." The performance was spontaneous and playful. It is this stretching of dance's definition of who and what is on stage that Parsons thinks is healthy.

The company has a small turnover rate, for good reason. They're salaried and have free medical coverage, which is unheard of for dance companies in the United States.

"They (the dancers) understand, (it's) just like a firm offers stock to its employees. You are a part of it, and that means your conduct, the way you carry yourself, the way you work," Parsons says. "In the creative process, they understand they have a stake in it. And I think it's a wonderful thing because the dancers become more well-rounded artists."

To speak with Parsons exclusively about choreography is impossible; he is still too involved with all aspects of his company. This leads to his ultimate goal: to have his company go on without him.

"That's my next goal — to have this company tour without me. And why not?" Parsons asks. "I am part of an arts economy... there's no reason why that should stop later on." □

DISCOGRAPH

Love Jones
Here's to the Losers
Zoo/BMG

These sly hipsters aren't fooling anyone — their matching velvet jackets give it all away.

This is a hardcore crew of lounge lizards and they're coming to a Ramada Room near you. As they croon their way into the hearts of down-and-outers at hotels everywhere, their spiralling melodies and lyrical genius are guaranteed to wash any troubles away (with the help of a few Gin Fizzes).

Lines like, "I look at you across the pool and wonder how you're feeling/The water's warm, the night air's cool/Your swimsuit is appealing," make one wonder if these guys should be sentenced to spend eternity in a K-Mart bargain bin.

But don't condemn these poor fellas before hearing "Custom Van," their ode to carnal relations on wheels.

So if you're going to take a chance on Here's to the Losers, put on your best pair of slacks, slip on your white loafers and crack out your bolo tie because Love Jones is in the house.

Beck
Mellow Gold
DGC

Today's plain white rapper.

Every once in a while there is a new sound that everybody just seizes upon. It can be heard emanating from the Walkman beside you on the bus or while you're in the dentist's chair.

Hail Beck. The folk-influenced, down-home rhythm machine is within earshot. This is what American folk is becoming: listenable music with relevant lyrics for the fan of the '90s.

If you haven't heard his single, "Loser," you've probably been in a cryogenic sleep chamber or visiting the North Pole. On any given day, the video can be seen on MuchMusic.

I personally enjoyed the tape, listening to it without the assaulting music video imagery that caused me to associate Beck with beer and Betty-scoping. Here's to Beck.

Christopher Bell

Alice In Chains
Jar of Flies
Columbia/Sony

Look out Alice In Chain fans... are you ready for a jar full of ZZZ's? That's what you're getting in this new, mostly acoustic album.

The album's first single, "Rotten Apple" had a bit of zing to it, but in general this album takes Alice In Chains in a whole new direction, one's that much more mellow.

Layne Stanley has reduced his distinctive, powerful vocals in favor of a kinder, gentler voice. Jar of Flies also uses violas and violins. Most Alice In Chains listeners, used to their heavier rock, will probably not enjoy this change.

However, if you're not expecting this new album to be like the others, then maybe it will be an enjoyable experience.

Ron Rol

Jason Unrau

STUDENT FARES within CANADA

FROM OTTAWA

To:	Return from*
Vancouver	359
Victoria	469
Calgary	349
Saskatoon	329
Winnipeg	269
Toronto	139
St. John(NB)	239
Fredricton	229
Halifax	239
Charlottetown	289
St. John's(NF)	269

TRAVEL CUTS
The Travel Company of the Canadian Federation of Students

Travel Cuts Ottawa
613-238-8222
613-238-5493
4100 St. Patrick Street
Suite 203
Ottawa, Ontario K1N 6H7

Travel Cuts Ottawa
613-238-5493
131 Levee University
Carleton University
Ottawa, Ontario K1S 5B6

*Certain Restrictions Apply See us for details.

For full time students with ISIC Card, other destinations available

LONG DAY IN THE UNIVERSE

THURSDAY, MARCH 24 TO THURSDAY, MARCH 31

Thursday, March 24

As part of the Women and the Arts lecture series, Carleton English Prof. Barbara Leckie will be giving a talk entitled, "Rich, Rare and Racy Books: Censorship, the Classic and Literary Modernism." It's happening in Room 2017 Dunton Tower at 3:30 p.m. Admission is free.

Amnesty International and OPIRG-Carleton are presenting a free showing of Manufacturing Consent: Noam Chomsky and the Media at 7 p.m. in Room 360 Tory.

Billy Goat, described as "tribal funk," whatever that may be, and local band Chucklehead, are playing Zaphod's tonight. Cover is only a buck.

Friday, March 25

Here's some jazz for you. The Brian Tansley Jazz Quartet is playing a free show in Carleton's Alumni Theatre at 12:30 p.m.

Want to watch some free music? Not doing anything at noon? Then head on down to Oliver's to watch the Gandharvas, an alternative-type band from London, Ont.

In the mood for some all-original one act plays? You're in luck, because tonight in the Alumni Theatre, Sock 'N' Buskin is presenting two one act plays with original scripts, music and choreography by Carleton students. First, there's To The Walls, a drama about St. Anne, the patron saint of housewives. Then there's the Ta Da Girls, a comedy about those women who present the awards at the Oscars. Admission is $3. The fun starts at 8 p.m. and there's a reception afterwards (Free food!).

The Carleton Arts Review is launching its ninth anniversary issue at the Stone Angel tonight at 8 p.m. There'll be a reading featuring local poet Michael Dennis.

Check out some cool loud music at the Pit this evening, courtesy of Mushroom Explosion, Buffle Head and Floater. They're putting on an all-ages show from 7 until 9 p.m. After that you have to be 19 (or have some good fake ID) to get in.

Kingston-based Celtic folks the Mahones are holding a CD release party at Zaphod's tonight. Cover is $7.

Fun For Malakai, one of the best band's Ottawa has ever produced, is playing the Upstairs Club this evening. Go see.

Argentinean accordion player Raul Barobza plays the National Gallery amphitheatre at 8 p.m. tonight. It's all part of the Sabroso series of Latin American music. Tickets are $12 in advance, $14 at the door.

The Lowest of the Low begin a two-night stand at the Penguin this evening.

The critically acclaimed Thirty Two Short Films About Glenn Gould premieres tonight at 7 p.m. at the Bytowne. It'll be showing every day until April 7.

Saturday, March 26

Ottawa's very own Angstones play the Pit this evening. At home in the clubs as much as at a jazz festival, these guys must be experienced.

England's Tom Robinson, formerly of the aptly titled Tom Robinson Band, plays Zaphod's this evening. Cover's $10.

A band called Going Harold is playing at the Sunnyside Sports Bar this evening. There's no cover.

The stunning Baraka, a film without dialogue or a plot, is playing at 4:30 p.m. at the Bytowne. It's also showing tomorrow at 9 p.m.

Relive St. Patrick's Day tonight at 8:30 p.m. at the Glebe Community Centre. The Old Sod Society is presenting Irish singer Maggie Boyle and guitarist Steve Tilston. Cover is $14, or $12 for Old Sod members.

(Speaking of St. Patrick's day, anyone who was at Grand Central last Thursday will agree with me when I say that Spirit of the West is the best live band this country has ever produced. And for those of you who thought $22 was too much to pay to see them, I say, nay! Pay any price, travel any distance to see them. -ed.)

Sunday, March 27

The Panama Deception, the Oscar-winning documentary about the real reasons the United States invaded Panama in December 1989, is showing at the Mayfair at 2 p.m. this afternoon.

More music at the Pit this evening, courtesy of Trailer Dixon and Ben Herd.

Well, this certainly looks like fun. Pipe organist (And we all love a good pipe organist. -ed.) Robert Palmi, soprano Shannon Mercer, classical guitarist Daniel Bolshoy and others are playing at 8 p.m. this evening at Emmanuel United Church, 691 Smyth Rd. Admission is a donation to the Organ Fund, whatever that may be.

Monday, March 28

To give you the energy to get through the week, we have a suggestion for something you may wish to consume. This week's Charlatan Snack Tip is the tasty Swollen, Nuclear Marshmallow™. To make your own radioactive treat, take three marshmallows and place them in a smallish microwaveable dish. Place the dish in the microwave. Nuke for 30 seconds on high. Spin the taffy-like substance around a fork (don't put the fork in the microwave, kids!). Consume quickly, as the nuked marshmallows harden quickly. Next week, we'll tell you how to clean the dish.

Tuesday, March 29

As he has been doing for the past 20 years (save for last week's brief relapse) Charlatan production manager Kevin McKay has a book tip for his loyal followers. This week he recommends The Rocket, the Flower, the Hammer and Me by Doug Bearisley. Says McKay, "This book is a collection of 23 hockey stories by Canadian writers, including Kinsella, Callaghan, MacLennan and MacGregor."

Wednesday, March 30

Texas folk-type Alejandro Escovedo plays Zaphod's this evening. Cover is $8.

On your radio tonight at 9 p.m., In A Mellow Tone (CKCÚ 93.1 FM) sifts through the best new jazz and blues releases.

Thursday, March 31

This should make a lot of people very happy. Sarah McLachlan plays yet again in Ottawa, this time at Centrepointe Theatre at 8 p.m. Opening for her is the Devlins. Tickets are $25.50.

If you have an event you want to appear in this calendar, you can drop your announcement off at The Charlatan, Room 531 Unicentre during regular business hours or you can fax us at 788-4051. Announcements must be in by the Friday before publication.

CHARLIE SHEEN TOM BERENGER CORBIN BERNSEN

Major League II

America's favorite team is back!

MOVIE PASS GIVEAWAY

The Charlatan is giving away 20 double passes to the first 20 people up to our office in Rm. 531 Unicentre, after 10 a.m. Ask for Jill.

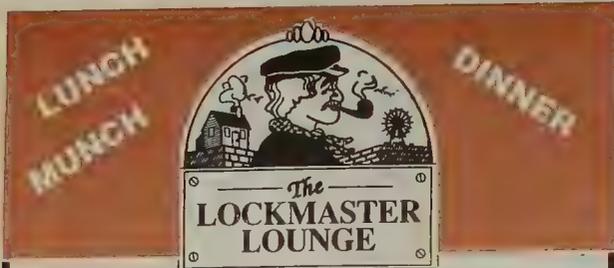

Sarah McLachlan

Amoroso

THE DEVLINS

ON SALE NOW

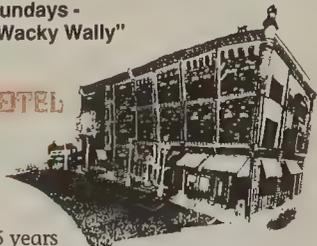

WED MARCH 30TH & THUR MARCH 31ST 8PM CENTREPOINTE THEATRE

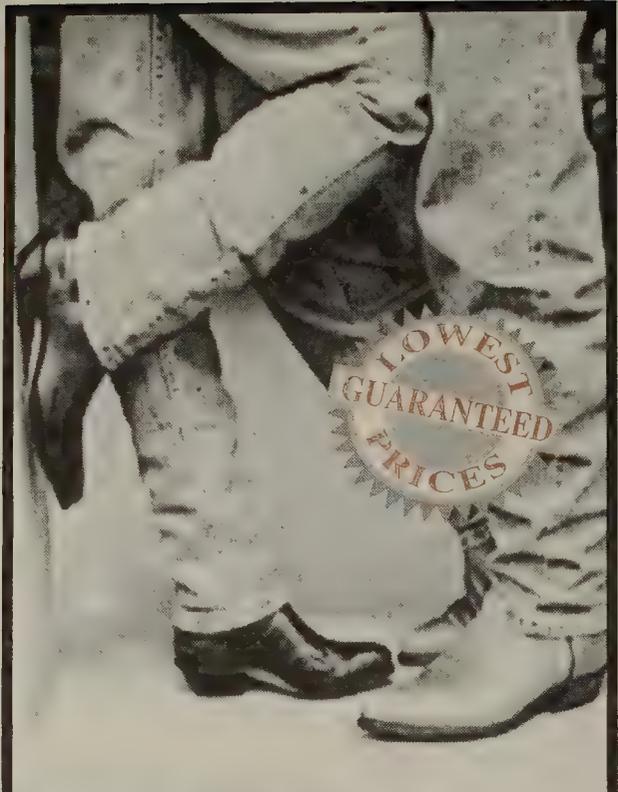

Join us for Great Food, Refreshment and Entertainment
 4 Large Screen TV's
 TSN and Satellite Dish for the best in sports
 Breakfast Menu served Saturday and Sunday til 4 pm
 Saturday and Tuesday - Wing Nights
 Live Entertainment Friday, Saturday and Sundays
 No Cover

The Mustards	Mar. 25, 26
White Wyne	Apr. 1, 2
Sweet Taboo	Apr. 8, 9
Wednesdays and Sundays - Karaoke with "Wacky Wally"

SOMERSET HOUSE HOTEL

In the heart of the city for 95 years
 A great, inexpensive spot for visiting friends
 352 Somerset St. W., at Bank
 Telephone 233-7762

APPLE SADDLERY
 The Largest Western Boot Store in Canada.
 INNES ROAD JUST EAST OF THE 417 (NEAR THE PRICE CLUB)

JOE
 BLOZE

Sports BAR & GRILL

WE'RE BACK AND HOTTER
 THAN EVER

NTN, POOL TABLES, AIR HOCKEY, MINIATURE GOLF
 BIGGEST DANCE FLOOR IN THE MARKET

SUDS IT UP WEDNESDAY FOR $1.50
You won't find Itty-Bitty Draft or Juicy-Juicy Shooters here!
A $1.50 gets you a whole lot more!

CHECK IT OUT

MONDAY and TUESDAY NITES $11.75 gets you a plate of Nachos and a 60oz. Pitcher
THURSDAY $2.50 plus $1.75 for a Quickie -
FRIDAY - SATURDAY $2.50 - SUNDAYS $2.00

409 DALHOUSIE BETWEEN RIDEAU & BESSERER

WHY?

During the 1993-1994 February General Elections it was alleged that there were a number of violations of CUSA's Electoral by-laws. These allegations became challenges which were presented to the Constitutional Board (CUSA's judicial body). After consultation and investigation the Board ruled that the elections could not be deemed valid and should be overturned in the interests of upholding CUSA's by-laws.

CUSA Council voted to uphold the Constitution Board's ruling and new elections were called for March 1994.

It is vital that people vote in this new election. The candidates elected will be your representatives for the academic year 1994-1995, voicing your concerns and opinions. It is important that the individuals elected be given a mandate by us, the student body. Don't let other students make this decision for you, make your representatives accountable... Exercise your right your vote!

ELECTION SUPPLEMENT '94 - PART II

INFO-

W5 - on Carleton Elections (again?)

What - vote again (did I vote the first time?)

Where - locations YOU can do this;

- 1) Tunnel junction
- 2) LOEB tunnel entrance
- 3) Unicentre
- 4) Mackenzie bldg.
- 5) Tunnel junction- between Steacie and Herzberg
- 6) St. Patrick
- 7) Residence Commons
- 8) Architecture bldg. in front of "The Hub"

When - dates and times

Tues. March 28th	11:10am - 9:10pm
Wed. March 29th	11:10am - 9:10pm
Thurs. March 30th	11:10am - 6:10pm

Who - YOU!!!

Why - CUSA spends $2.2 million next year on your behalf.
- if you are a full-time student, that equals $100 of your money.

PRESIDENT 1 seat to be elected

PG. 2

MAGNUS

President

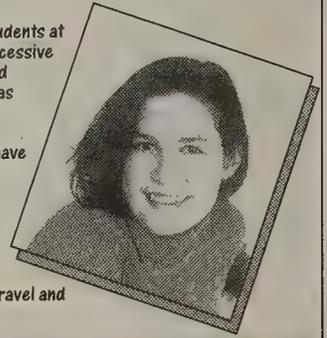

BRENDA KENNEDY PRESIDENT

Over the years, the rights of students at Carleton have taken a back seat as successive student associations have preoccupied themselves with petty politics. CUSA has become irrelevant to many.

While CUSA waffles, cutbacks have decimated the quality of education and students have had little say in the process.

Teaching assistants, library acquisitions and lab equipment are cut instead of Administration conference travel and expense accounts.

On important issues such as curriculum, safety, cafeteria price increases and tuition hikes, the university has paid little more than lip service to students because CUSA has been unwilling to stand up to the administration.

Brenda Kennedy will take a stand on issues which concern you.

Stand UP For Your Rights

MARK OVENDON

CUT THE CRAP

TIM

PORTER

for

PRESIDENT

PRESIDENT 1 seat to be elected
PG. 3

When you're hiring your next president, know your candidates qualifications...

- Orientation Commissioner
- RRRR President
- Bree's Manager
- Carleton Student Advisory Committee
- Foot Patrol Steering Committee
- Economics Graduate
- Alumni Committee
- Prep Week Committee
- Co-Chair of the PARTY Committee
- First Year Experience Committee
- Date Rape Prevention Committee
- Health Services Advisory Board
- Panda Staff
- Brewer Park Co-ordinator
- Wilderness Tours Co-ordinator
- Concert Crew
- CUSA Rep for RRRR
- Homecoming Committee
- Presidential Advisory Committee on Personal Safety
- Residence & University Management & Policy Board
- Hallowe'en Superpub volunteer
- Charity Ball volunteer

Richard

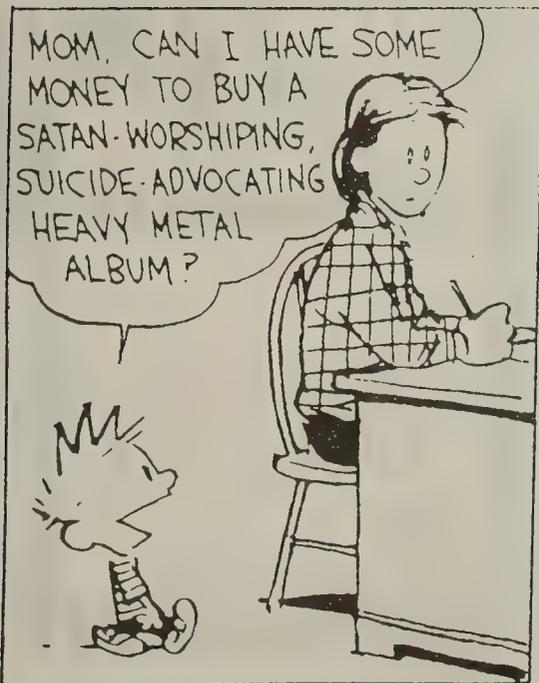

Stanton

President

Experience
LET IT WORK FOR YOU

BEN VUONG

FINANCE COMMISSIONER 1 seat to be elected

It is time to re-organize CUSA.

WE MUST:

- recognize that our current centres must be expanded to meet the needs of a growing student population.
- challenge Administration to commit further support for joint projects such as Placement & Career Services.
- utilize our current Unicentre space for optimum efficiency.
- increase services to include low cost tenant, travel & auto insurance plans.

VOTE
ROB
JAMIESON
COMMISSIONER

Solid PRINCIPLES.
Proven DETERMINATION.
Let my EXPERIENCE work for you next year!

FINANCE COMMISSIONER

1 seat to be elected

PG. 4

marko keljar

things are gonna change

FINANCE COMMISSIONER

FINANCE COMMISSIONER

My objective, is to remain visible, approachable and responsive to students.

My motto, is to make a difference, and make things move.

My strategy, is to cause improvements to take place.

Our CUSA is sick and needs an injection of new life and a fresh perspective. The petty politics and wasted time on issues students don't care about must stop.

The only way to guarantee change is to let your voice be heard.
Vote March 29, 30, 31.

SEND THE MESSAGE!

TREVOR MULZER

S
T
E
W
A
R
T

WENDY

EXPERIENCE:

- * ELECTED 2 TERMS AS CUSA FINANCIAL COMMITTEE CHAIR
- * PRIVATE SECTOR FINANCIAL CONSULTANT
- * FORMER MANAGER OF 2 BARS
- * NUG REPRESENTATIVE
- * 3RD YEAR ECONOMICS STUDENT

FINANCE COMMISSIONER

VOTE

WESTSTRATE

TERRY WESTSTRATE

WESTSTRATE

- Supervision of construction projects involving millions of dollars
- Commerce Major
- Complete theoretical background
- VOTE WISELY, let practical knowledge manage your future

FINANCE COMMISSIONER

EXPERIENCE

ARTS/SOCIAL SCIENCES REP

14 seats to be elected

PG. 5

ANTHONY

ASTURI

ARTS & SOCIAL SCIENCE REP.

COLIN Betts

Elect (Again) to
Arts and Social Science

The
SUPER SLATE

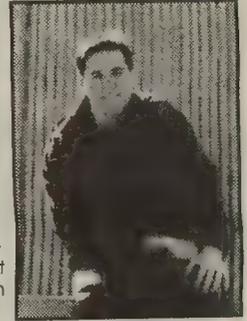

Because Dammit We Care!

For the Love of Carleton

RE-ELECT
RYAN BUTT
ARTS AND SOCIAL SCI.
REPRESENTATIVE EXPERIENCED
UNDERSTANDING
HARD WORKING
VOTE
RYAN BUTT

Christian Dallaire

Before anything can be accomplished we need to know what YOU the voter wants and needs. This can only be achieved by hard work, dedication and a constant relational communication. This is imparative and I realize that there's a lot of work to be done and I'm willing to DO IT!

JOHN EDWARDS

GO WITH GOLEMI

ARTS/SOCIAL SCIENCE REP.

*Your money,
Your future.*

It's time to leave Kindergarten!

PAT GORDON

ARTS & SOCIAL SCIENCE REP.

JENKINS Heather

Elect (Again) to
Arts and Social Science

The
SUPER SLATE

Because Dammit We Care!

For the Love of Carleton

ARTS/SOCIAL SCIENCES REP

14 seats to be elected

PG. 6

Ryan Lam

Arts/Social Sciences Rep.

LEDUC Pierre

Elect (Again) to
Arts and Social Science

The
SUPER SLATE
Because Dammit We Care!

For the Love of Carleton

ELECT SOMEONE WHO:

- will ensure the Finance Commissioner acts responsibly and does not raise fees.
- will push to change the electoral code so this election blunder will not occur again.
- will see to it council gets down to the core issues, rather than 5 hour meetings of nothing.
- will move to re-structure Clubs/Societies funding so it is more easily accessed for "valid" events

ARTS & SOCIAL SCIENCES

Travis
Lindgren

COREY MULVIHILL

ELECT SCOTT
PAIRE

FOR YOUR ARTS & SOCIAL SCIENCE REP

This AD space not paid for by

Jonathan POSTNER

Better CUSA-R.R.R.A. Communication
Fix the C.F.S
N.U.G.

Change Lower Tuition
Improved Academics

✓ REAY, Ian

Remember your
2 R's Reay & Reid

Safety
Sports Funding
Residence
Frosh

0% Student Fee Increases
Better Awareness of Student Services
Change for Progress

✓ REID, Wendy

Safety
Sports Funding
Residence
Frosh

0% Student Fee Increases
Better Awareness of Student Services
Change for Progress

✓ REID, Wendy

Remember your
2 R's Reay & Reid

Better CUSA-R.R.R.A. Communication
Fix the C.F.S
N.U.G.

Change Lower Tuition
Improved Academics

✓ REAY, Ian

ARTS/SOCIAL SCIENCES REP

14 seats to be elected

PG. 7

X SIMPSON
Perry

Elect (Again) to
Arts and Social Science

The
SUPER SLATE
Because Dammit We Care!

For the Love of Carleton

PETER SOUW

HEIDY
VAN DYK

COMMITTED TO:

- 0% tuition increase
- open door admissions
- safety on campus
- better CUSA/RRRA relations
- NO USER FEES FOR CUSA SERVICES
- fair, equal representation for ALL

ARTS & SOCIAL SCIENCE REPRESENTATIVE

Shaun Vardon

Hi, I'd like to make a few changes; 1. the way elections are run at Carleton. 2. get council to talk about what concerns students instead of last week's episode of Seinfeld. 3. keep you informed about CUSA all year round, not just during elections. 4. establish a Labour Relations Committee to deal with the new CUSA Union. 5. a better working relationship between executive and council. 6. no cuts to CUSA services. 7. no user fees for those services.

Please take the time to make a difference VOTE Shaun Vardon
Arts/Social Science Rep

RYAN
WARD

RE-ELECT

ARTS/SOCIAL SCIENCE REP

UNCONSTITUTIONAL

Well, I had two weeks council experience!!!

X WAKELING
Sandy

Elect (Again) to
Arts and Social Science

The
SUPER SLATE
Because Dammit We Care!

For the Love of Carleton

Does anyone care that Mötley Crüe
has a new album out?

In earlier days,
the Romans believed that if a bat touched a stork egg, the egg would become sterile.

DO

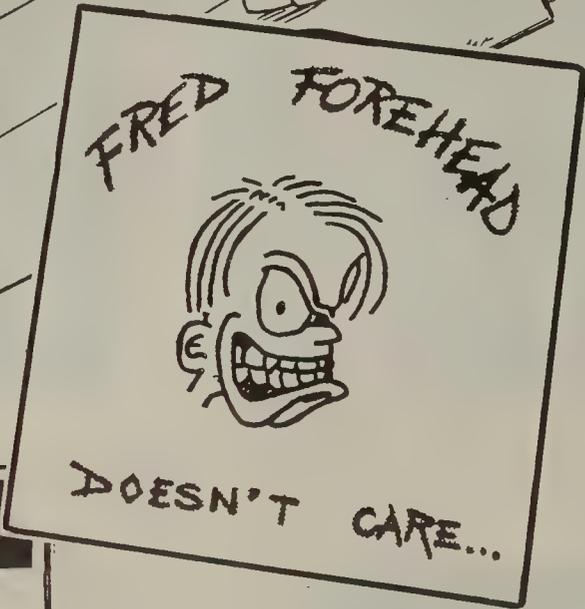

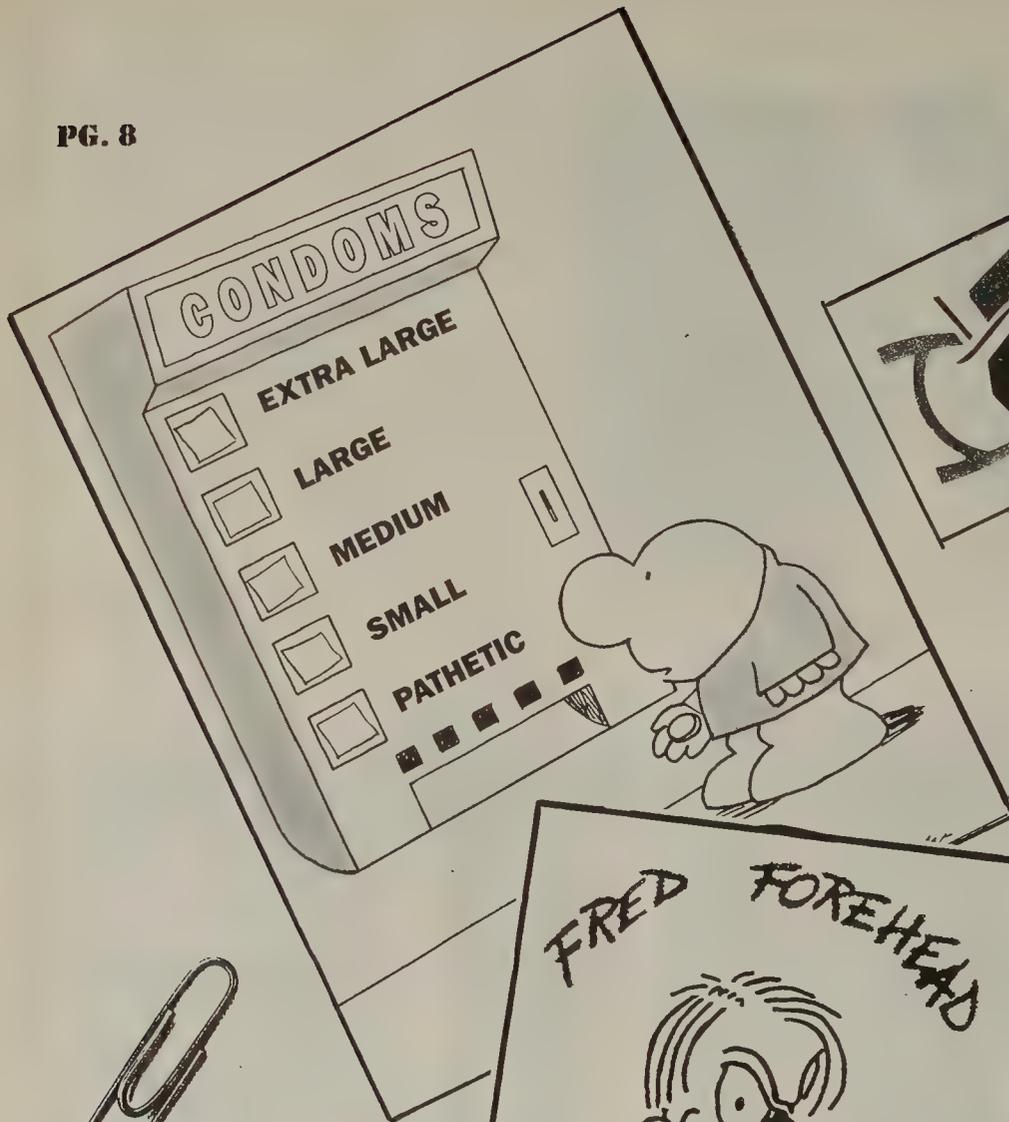

FORG

VO

N/T

ET TO

TE

9 THINGS YOU WOULDN'T WANT TO HEAR DURING SURGERY

"Eeewh! Yuk! That's gross!"

"Wow! This is great! We can use a good kidney!"

"Does anyone have a bottle opener?"

"Keep your head steady...elbow slightly bent...firm grip..."

"Doctor! What are you doing here? Are you out on parole?"

"Go ahead, lick it! I dare ya!"

"Check your oil, mister?"

"I say we take him home, cook him and eat him!"

"Gallbladder? Funny, it was here a minute ago."

BOARD OF GOVERNORS

2 seats to be elected

PG. 9

JOHN EDWARDS

VOTE ROB JAMIESON BOARD OF GOVERNORS

IT'S TIME TO GET BOG'S PRIORITIES RIGHT.
THEREFORE WE MUST:

- ensure a safe and accessible campus
- increase resources for the library
- initiate and put in place affordable co-op residences
- challenge Administration to put a freeze on ancillary fees (extra user fees for current services)

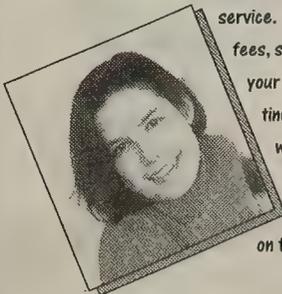

This year I specifically fought for and won:

- a one year freeze of the Athletics fee in '94-'95 while creating a balanced Athletics Budget.
- a one year freeze of all Carleton parking fees for '94-'95.

BRENDA KENNEDY BOARD OF GOVERNORS

BRENDA KENNEDY's experience on the Presidential Advisory Committee on Personal Safety has proven she knows how to effectively deal with the University Administration. She successfully fought to maintain the Safety Van last summer after the University proposed to discontinue this important service. On issues like cafeteria prices, tuition fees, safety, sports funding, and the quality of your education. BRENDA KENNEDY will continue to STAND UP FOR YOUR RIGHTS. Only with a representative who has a proven record in effectively lobbying Administration can students have a strong voice on the Board of Governors.

BRENDA KENNEDY will be that representative.

Stand UP For Your Rights

RIGHT NOW

an overworked and underpaid Data Entry clerk is hitting the wrong keystroke that months or years from now could either land you in Prison...or do nothing at all

BOARD OF GOVERNORS

PG. 10

2 seats to be elected

TODD
McALLISTER

- Corporate Sponsorship
- Fiscal responsibility

BOARD OF GOVERNORS

Maime Silver

The Board of Governors is the highest governing body on campus. The Board has authority on setting the University budget, setting the level of tuition and deciding on new construction projects.

There are only two undergraduate students on the Board.

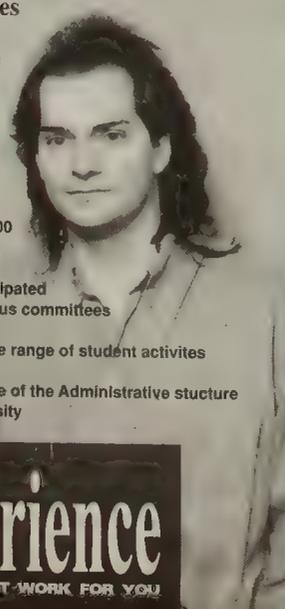

RE-ELECT

BOARD OF GOVERNORS

To be an effective representative on the Board of Governors, you need a candidate with an awareness of student issues and hands on administrative experience...

- Directly lobbied the Minister of Colleges and Universities
- supervised $200,000 Orientation budget
- productively participated in numerous campus committees
- co-ordinated a wide range of student activities
- In-depth knowledge of the Administrative structure of Carleton University

Richard Stanton

Board of Governors

Experience
LET IT WORK FOR YOU

STEWART

WENDY

EXPERIENCE:

- * ELECTED 2 TERMS AS CUSA FINANCIAL COMMITTEE CHAIR
- * PRIVATE SECTOR FINANCIAL CONSULTANT
- * FORMER MANAGER OF 2 BARS
- * NUG REPRESENTATIVE
- * 3RD YEAR ECONOMICS STUDENT

BOARD OF GOVERNORS

ARCHITECTURE REP 1 seat to be elected
PG. 11

VOTE EXPERIENCE, VOTE

SHELDON BAKER

CUSA ARCHITECTURE REP

DAVID EDGERTON

SCIENCE REP 3 seats to be elected

CRAIG GILLGRASS

FOR

CUSA SCIENCE
REPRESENTATIVE

JOHN HUBERT

PAUL KUMAR

FRANK LABONTE

ANDREW SPRINGETT

Dean STEPTOE

What concerns you, Science student?
Is it...

- Lack of Laser Printing services?
- Botched Elections?
- CUSA problems/funding/actions?
- Defaced Student Cards?
- Tuition Hikes and more?

I will represent YOU and YOUR concerns on the CUSA council! So get out and VOTE!

SOCIAL SCIENCE SENATE

2 seats to be elected

PG. 12

ELECT
 RYAN BUTT
 SENATE-S.S
 A STRONG VOICE FOR STUDENTS
 IN THE FIGHT FOR A BETTER EDUCATION
 FOR ALL

RE-ELECT
Travis
Lindgren
 SOCIAL SCIENCES SENATE

RE-ELECT
TODD McALLISTER
SENATE
 Social Sciences

SENATE: Social Science

✓ REAY, Ian

- ITV
- Accountability & Communication
- NO Academic Cutbacks!

Make your voice count!!

Carleton University

STUDENT

WELLS, JOHN W. SENATE - SOCIAL SCIENCE

ACCLAIMED

RE-ELECT BRIAN CORMIER

I believe in and support:

- a student-owned Unicentre
- the idea of corporate sponsorship
- improved lighting and security on campus

DANIEL MALOLEY
 ACCLAIMED
 COMMERCE REP.

ACCLAIMED

TODD THOMPSON
ACCLAIMED
COMMERCE REP.

Theresa Monsma
acclaimed
Journalism Rep.

CARL HENTSCHEL
ACCLAIMED
ENGINEERING REP.

BILL ZYMIAK
ACCLAIMED
ENGINEERING REP.

SCOTT HALL
ACCLAIMED
ENGINEERING REP.

ANNA GAULT
ACCLAIMED
COMPUTER SCIENCE REP.

COREY MULVIHILL
ACCLAIMED
ARTS SENATE

DAVID KRIZAN
ACCLAIMED
ENGINEERING SENATE

WANT ADS

GRADUATE STUDIES RESEARCH
one seat available in SENATE

GRADUATE STUDIES RESEARCH
another seat available in SENATE

SPECIAL STUDENT REP.
one seat available

COMPUTER SCIENCE REP.
one seat available

ARCHITECTURE SENATE
one seat available

ARTS SENATE
one seat available

When things go wrong as they usually will,
and your daily road seems all uphill.
When funds are low and debts are high.
When you try to smile but can only cry,
and you really feel you'd like to quit.
Don't run to me, I DON'T GIVE A SHIT!

HAVE A NICE DAY, thank.

INDUSTRIAL DESIGN REP.
one seat available

^{t h e}
CHARLATAN

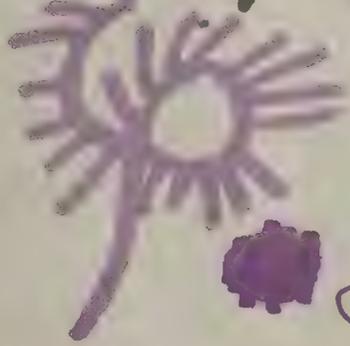

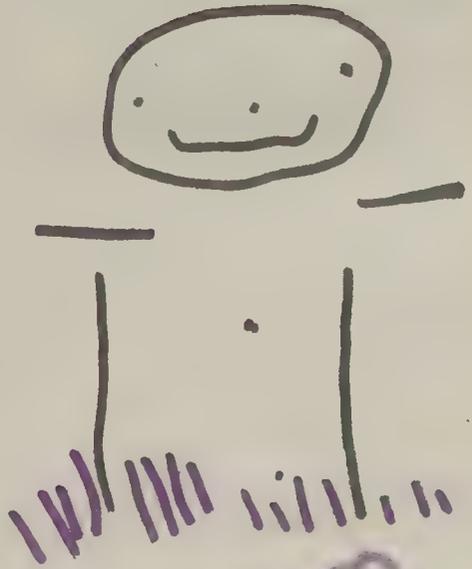

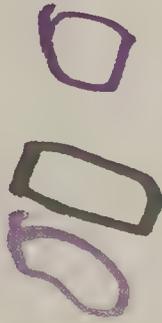

CARLETON'S INDEPENDENT STUDENT NEWSPAPER

VOLUME 23

ISSUE 28

MARCH 31

1994

CONTACT LENSES
Starting at
$59.00 A PAIR
LIMITED TIME OFFER WITH COUPON

Now Specializing In GAS PERMEABLE
and BIFOCAL CONTACT LENSES
Call Now for a
FREE TRIAL

FILION OPTICIAN

HOLLAND CROSS PLAZA
1620 SCOTT ST
798-1397

BEACONHILL SHOPPING CENTRE
2339 OGILVIE RD.
741-0827

ASK ABOUT OUR FREE
CONTACT LENS TRIALS

EYEWEAR SALE
Buy any pair of prescription glasses at regular price and receive a second pair of glasses of equal or lesser value plus a pair of daily wear soft contact lenses absolutely FREE!!!
LIMITED TIME OFFER WITH COUPON

50% OFF OR Buy one pair of prescription glasses and receive 50% off on both your frame and lenses
LIMITED TIME OFFER WITH COUPON

SCHADILLAC

SALOON
Ottawa's Only
Authentic
Western Saloon

the CHARLATAN
CARLETON'S INDEPENDENT STUDENT NEWSPAPER

This is the last issue of The Charlatan for this year. The next issue will appear near the end of May.

CHEERS!

OFF CAMPUS
Custom Clothing
Clearance Sale NOW ON
Custom Printing, Embroidery & Applique on
T-Shirts, Caps, Sweats, Fleece & Jackets
Specializing in university & college styles including the "Greek Community"
Att. Res Students!
Take advantage of our clearance on white shirts and order your floor shirts now 371 Dalhousie St.
tel 562-4833 fax 562-4834

NCAA March Madness
Catch all the Games by the Big Screen
April 4
Championship Game Bash
Prizes
Beverage Specials
Come see us down in the Byward Market
105 Murray St.
241-2233

HOME OF THE SOUTH END BLUES

TUCSON ROADHOUSE
Mar. 31
The Boogiemans
Apr. 1, 2
Carlos Deljunco
(World Champion Harmonica Player)
COMING UP
Apr. 7
Evolutions
Apr. 8, 9
Danny Brooks
MCA Recording Artist
2440 Bank Street (Bank at Huntclub) Ottawa
For Entertainment information call 739-7536

Tucson's West
Every Thursday
Blues Jam with the Bird
Apr. 1, 2
In City Dreams
Apr. 8, 9
Rita Chiarelli
COMING UP
Apr. 15, 16
Downchild Blues Band
1541 Merivale Road, Ottawa
For Entertainment information call 228-6666

 GRAND CENTRAL
"The Mother of All Pizzas"
141 George St. 241-2727

SATURDAY & SUNDAY
Brunch 10AM to 3PM
Over 100 items to choose from
$8.99 + taxes

introducing
STEAK

Dinner
Includes baked potato or fries, regular salad & garlic bread
$5.99 + taxes

Coming in April
—Mumbo Jumbo
—Voodoo Combo
—The Paperboys
—7th Fire

ZAPHOD BEEBLEBROX
THE WORLD IS TURNING ON
WED. MAR 30 (9PM) $8
 ALEJANDRO ESCOVEDO
(BANK & FILETROTIE BELIEVERS)
+ SOLUBLE FISH

THURS. MAR 31 (9PM) $1
 deadbeat DADS
WITH COWPINT
WHAT THE FK IT'S ONLY A BUCK

FRI APR 1 (9PM) $5
UNIVERSAL HONEY

SAT. APR 2 (9PM) $12
AFGHAN WHIGS

COMING SOON
APR. 6- ADRIAN LEUQ/TERRY TUFTS
APR. 8- OYSTER BAND
APR. 13- MOIST/NC17
APR. 15- YO LA TENGO
APR. 16- GREGG GINN
APR. 20- ROSE CHRONICLES

MUSIC * BEVERAGES * ADVENTURE
27 YORK ST.

SCHADILLAC RANCH

BOULET

99 Clarence St.
562-1320

Board to choose tuition hikes

by Jill Mahoney
Charlatan Staff

Two days before the end of final exams, Carleton's board of directors will decide how much to increase tuition.

When it meets on April 27, the board can make the decision now that the Ontario government has announced that universities can increase tuition by up to ten per cent for each of the next two years.

The 32-member board of governors is the highest decision-making body at Carleton. It's made up of students, faculty, administrators and community representatives.

If the board votes to increase tuition at Carleton by the maximum amount allowed, full-time undergraduate students will pay $202 more in most programs next year, and $223 more in 1995-96.

But universities do not have to increase tuition by the amount set out by the provincial government's Ministry of Education and Training last week, or even at all.

Board secretary Charles Watt says there has been a tradition of tuition increases to the maximum amount allowed at Carleton.

"The history of it is that universities, almost without exception, every year do what the ministry says."

For each of the last three years, the province has allowed Ontario universities to increase tuition by seven per cent and Carleton has done just that.

Watt says tuition makes up about 25 per cent of the university's revenue. He says universities usually increase tuition as much as they can.

"When the government announces an increase of X, they (universities) take X," he says. "The universities don't take less because the universities need the money."

Maureen O'Neil, chair of the board of governors and a community representative, agrees that universities have financial problems.

"I think that all universities are in extremely difficult positions and very few are going to avoid increasing tuition," says O'Neil.

She says she will vote in favor of this year's tuition increase. But O'Neil says it is important that access to education be maintained through a changed system of student loans.

Marion Dewar, a board member and former mayor of Ottawa, says she has concerns about increasing tuition because it prevents some students from going to university.

Dewar, who voted against the tuition increase last year, says she doesn't see why universities have to raise tuition by the maximum amount every year. She says she will try to persuade the board into reaching a compromise about the increase.

"My initial proposal would be for it to be at the level of inflation — one or two per cent."

Dewar says a student presence at the board meeting is important.

"I hope the students will be there giving a good presentation and talking about their own difficult experiences."

Marion Dewar

"I hope the students will be there giving a good presentation and talking about their own difficult experiences."

Elaine Silver, an undergraduate student representative on the board, says she hopes the board will recognize tuition increases are becoming "yearly events."

"Tuition was supposed to go up periodically and that's not what's happening."

She says there are other ways the university can raise money, like corporate sponsorship.

"I imagine that I won't be voting in favor of a tuition increase. I'm pretty darn sure."

Ivan Fellegi, the board's vice-chair and chief statistician at Statistics Canada, voted for the tuition increase last year, but says he doesn't know how he will vote this year.

"I will have to see the whole financial picture and what the trade-offs are in academics, the student-teacher ratio," he says.

Kate Thorne, the board's support staff representative, who also voted to increase tuition last year, says she is waiting until a financial committee meeting on April 20 where it will review the budget.

"At that point, I'm sure the students will be making a presentation," says Thorne.

The committee, which will review the budget and make a recommendation on a tuition increase to the board, is composed of 20 board members. These include O'Neil, Thorne, university president Robin Farquhar, undergraduate student representatives Lucy Watson and Elaine Silver and graduate student representative Vlad Zhivov.

But she says the board is in a tough position.

"I think that they're terribly aware of how short funds are and how the university needs the money. On the other hand, they're very concerned about student welfare."

Stuart Adam, dean of arts and a new member on the board, says he will be supporting the increase.

"It's driven as far as I can see by necessity," he says. □

Admin not saving as much as it can

by Caron Watt
Charlatan Staff

Carleton University's administration could be doing more to save money, says the business agent of the Canadian Union of Public Employees Local 2323.

Brian Edgcombe says he's concerned about administration's spending when he sees figures like $9.3 million being spent on salaries for 130 senior administrators.

"It doesn't include benefits, it doesn't include pensions, it doesn't include anything else. It just includes the flat number for salaries," he says.

The figures Edgcombe cited were submitted to the provincial government by Carleton's administration last July because of social contract legislation and they were made available to campus union locals.

The Ontario government's social contract is a money-saving initiative forcing public institutions like universities to cut budget costs. The group of 130 senior administrators includes deans, vice-presidents, president, and senior people in administrative offices.

Edgcombe says 30 senior academic administrators such as deans and school directors make an average of $91,900 each a year. Another 100 senior staff in administrative departments such as the business and personnel offices make an average of $65,265.

The university employs about 1,800 full-time and 1,200 part-time employees, says Spruce Riordon, the university's vice president of finance and administration. Riordon refused to release any salary figures to The Charlatan.

Admin building, er, Robertson Hall: decisions, decisions.

Edgcombe says Carleton President Robin Farquhar agreed to go over job descriptions with him, but did not agree to reveal salary figures.

But administration has advertised on campus and in a publication called University Affairs for the new position of associate vice-president of finance and administration. The deadline for applications is April 15. The salary range for the position is listed at between $91,117 to $122,230.

The responsibilities listed include overseeing day-to-day operation of departments including physical plant, the department of university safety and athletics and recreation.

Riordon says the position is a new one, but there has been an overall net reduction in administrative positions.

Bill Pickett, director of the office of budget planning, says there has been a reduction of about 12 administrative positions, out of about 1,000 total administrators.

"All over the rest of the university when someone retires or leaves, the position isn't filled at all," says Larry Black, a history professor at Carleton.

Black says he questions whether there is a need for the new position, and whether administration is using its resources in the best possible way. But administrators say they're making the necessary cuts.

"The social contract required an expenditure reduction of about $4.8 million," says Pickett. "And that is being made through unpaid leave and reductions in the pension contributions."

Unpaid leave and pension reductions amount to about a five per cent decrease in salaries, says Riordon.

Overall, the university has cut close to $10 million dollars from last year's budget of $160 million, with the implementation of an expenditure control plan this year, says Pickett.

"Basically, people are just having to do things smarter," says Pickett. "We're having to do more with less resources."

He says the university is unable to hire

SPENDING cont'd on page 8.

on the cover

"Springtime at Carleton" was brought to you by the kids at the COLONEL BY DAYCARE on campus:

- Lee Van Adel
- Rebecca Borquez
- Noah Darville-Jennings
- Jeffrey Lefebure
- Stephanie Mayer
- George McPherson
- Isaac Naponse
- Colin James Ross

arts	27
feature	18
national	9
news	3
opinion	15
sports	23
unclassifieds	22

index

Groups monitoring CKCU, says manager

by Michael Mainville
Charlatan Staff

In light of recent complaints, CKCU's station manager says he believes certain broadcasts are being monitored by right-wing organizations.

"More than one right-wing organization has been monitoring the show," says Max Wallace.

In the last few months, three formal complaints have been filed with the Canadian Radio-television and Telecommunication Commission against Defiant Voices, CKCU's gay and lesbian issues program. The CRTC is Canada's national broadcast regulator and has the power to grant and revoke stations' licences.

The Catholic Civil Rights League filed two complaints in January alleging that music and comments made by co-hosts of Defiant Voices were offensive to Catholics.

On the Dec. 1 show, Gibbs and Durant said "perhaps when the Catholic Church learns to stop persecuting people, we can learn to stop persecuting it." After Eady broadcast an editorial response on the Dec. 8 show, Gibbs and Durant played the songs "B-B-Q Pope" by the Butthole Surfers and "Will the Fetus Be Aborted" by Jello Biafra and Mojo Nixon.

Another lobby group, REAL Women, complained this month over comments made by Gibbs on the March 2 show.

Gibbs criticized a section of a press release dealing with REAL Women's statement that legislation on sexual orientation proposed by the Ontario government would likely be opposed by the majority of Canadians.

The complaint alleges that Gibbs damaged REAL Women's reputation by equating the organization with racist views.

Gibbs denies that he called REAL Women a racist organization.

Wallace says information included in the groups' letters to the CRTC are what prompted him to believe CKCU is being monitored.

"REAL Women, one of Canada's most notorious right-wing organizations made a complaint about the show and they had whole passages transcribed."

But Gwen Landolt, national president of REAL Women, says while group members sometimes tape the show, she denies they periodically monitor it.

"We don't monitor (the station), but some broadcasts we do tape."

She says the broadcast, which caused the organization to complain to the CRTC, happened to be heard by one of their members and was subsequently taped.

But Wallace says that's ridiculous. "Obviously she's not going to admit that they were consciously monitoring it."

But what is one woman from REAL Women doing taping (Defiant Voices)?"

Gibbs says he is also suspicious that the station is being monitored because both complaints to the CRTC included transcripts of the Defiant Voices broadcasts.

"Huge sections of the show were quoted in the letter so it was taped," says Gibbs.

But Gibbs says he will not be intimidated by these organizations.

"I'm quite aware that they're listening, so I'll just have a good time with it," says Gibbs.

Wallace says he is proud the station is being monitored.

"It shows that we're making a difference. Our mandate is to be controversial." □

Dunton Tower: It's a smokin'

by Ryan Ward
Charlatan Staff

Dunton Tower was smoking after a fire around 10:25 a.m. on March 30.

Capt. John Wortley, fire chief of the Ottawa Fire Department, says the fire started by the steps of Dunton Tower on the west side of the building, facing the Unicentre.

Wortley says someone threw a cigarette butt beside the steps, causing some newsprint and leaves to catch fire. He says there was no damage to the building.

Some students saw the smoke and were wondering what was going on.

"I was getting off the bus and heading towards the tunnels when my friend told me to look (at Dunton Tower)," says witness Josiah Cook. "I looked over and saw a bike, a bike rack and a whole lot of smoke."

Ron Campbell, a Carleton fire prevention officer for the department of university safety, says he will personally oversee the area to prevent another fire.

"I'm going to keep a better eye on it myself and I'll call buildings and grounds so they won't have to worry about checking on it all the time."

He says a witness called the department of university safety to report the fire. Department of university safety officer Murray Thomas was called at 10:26 a.m. to the tower and pulled the fire alarm, he says. □

TIM O'CONNOR

Max Wallace: Facing complaints.

PROSPECTOR

Guaranteed for as long as you own the feet you bought them for.

Our Spring/Summer collection continues the Prospector tradition of creating the finest outdoor footwear in the world. We know of no other manufacturer that spends more time, devotes more care, or uses finer materials in the construction of their footwear. In fact, we believe in the superior quality of our footwear so much, we'll replace your soles free of charge if they ever wear out or break down.

Take $5 on us.

To receive your $5 along with postage reimbursement, send this coupon with your original receipt and the completed guarantee card to:

H.H. Brown, P.O. Box 950, Richmond, Quebec J0B 2H0.

Footwear must have been purchased after March 1st, 1994. Limit one coupon per customer. Offer expires June 30, 1994.

Prospector footwear is available at: Mark's Work Wearhouse, Footlocker, Eaton's, Brown Shoes, The Boot Shop, Calderone, Work World, Next Step, Sporting Life, Apples Saddlery, Urban Trails, Arlies Sport Shop, Winnipeg Fur Exchange, Pavane, R & R, Kountry Kickers, Nero Bianco and other fine stores.

PROSPECTOR

H.H. BROWN Serious footwear since before you were born. Way before.

Volunteer bureau a wonderful place to be

by Josée Bellemare
Charlatan Staff

In the last of a series about services this year, The Charlatan profiles the Carleton Volunteer Bureau.

Carleton's student services and their co-ordinators are funded out of the $80-95 annual fee each undergraduate student pays to the Carleton University Students' Association. Carleton's Volunteer Bureau is one of these services.

The co-ordinator of Carleton's Volunteer Bureau says she likes to help students find out what volunteer opportunities are available on and off campus.

"I feel volunteer experience is important to give direction for students in deciding on their major, or for career possibilities," says Julie Nelson.

The Volunteer Centre of Ottawa-Carleton provides Carleton's Volunteer Bureau, now in its fourth year of operation, with a database to guide students to organizations which need volunteers. The database has about 800 volunteer jobs available to students.

Nelson says about eight students come in every week looking for volunteer work in their field of study to gain career-related experience.

"By volunteering, (students) can help an organization and help themselves," she says.

She says September and January were the busiest months — about 12 to 15 students each week came to look for volunteer placements.

Practical experience helps students decide on career choices when they look for a paying job.

Nelson says 95 per cent of the volunteer jobs are off campus. She says most students ask for positions in hospitals, or at the Ottawa Board of Education as volunteer teaching assistants.

In the first week of February, Nelson says the Volunteer Bureau offered 50 free T-shirts for students who registered at the bureau. During the first week, she says about 25 to 30 students wanted to volunteer, including 12 students the first day. The Carleton University Students' Association pays for the service, with a total budget of about $27,000 for the 1993-94.

Nelson says the Volunteer Bureau had spent up to $18,000 on rent, office supplies, publicity, and other expenses by the end of February.

Bureau co-ordinator Julie Nelson: looking for volunteers.

MARK LAMB

New and improved CUSA election? Not really

by Mike Peters
Charlatan Staff

If the first-day of the Carleton University Students' Association election is any indication, voter turnout for this year's second election might be down a bit from the original one in February.

About 750 presidential ballots were cast March 29 on the first day of voting, says Jason Giroux, Elections Carleton's assistant electoral officer.

At that pace, about 2,250 ballots will be cast when the polls close at 6:10 p.m. March 31 — down from 2,825 in February's election.

In the 1993 presidential election, 2,389 ballots were cast, including about 1,000 on the first day.

This year's entire CUSA election in February was overturned because CUSA's constitutional board ruled that the electoral code was violated during the campaign and polling periods.

Some students say they are concerned that the recall of the first election has increased apathy among students.

Ryan Henderson, a first-year arts student, says he has voted but doesn't blame students for being apathetic.

"It's (CUSA's) own fault — they should have been responsible enough to get it right the first time. It's a waste of money."

"It's too bad," says Kevin Lacey, a first-year political science student and arts and social sciences candidate in the February election.

"People feel that they don't have to contribute a second time, but it's important."

Ballot counting begins immediately after the polls close March 31. The results will be posted by April 4 in the CUSA office window.

Students anxious to exercise their right to vote.

ANGUS SMIRLING

Portraits Now

Bayshore The Official
Graduation Photographer for
Carleton University
Student Association, Inc. 1993/94

Why
PORTRAITS NOW?

- No Sitting Fee on Campus!
- Previews Back Next Day!
- Choice of Backgrounds!
- Satisfaction Guaranteed!

ATTENTION 1993/94 GRADUATES

Portraits Now - Bayshore has been chosen by CUSA Inc. as the Official Photographer for Carleton University 1993/1994 Graduates.

DON'T MISS OUT!

Make your appointment to get your graduation Portraits Now! Portraits Now - Bayshore by calling 596-5011 or visit our studio across from Porter Hall.

2nd Semester Session ends April 8, 1994
across from Porter Hall

Bayshore 596-1501
100 Bayshore Dr., Nepean Ont., K2B 8C1

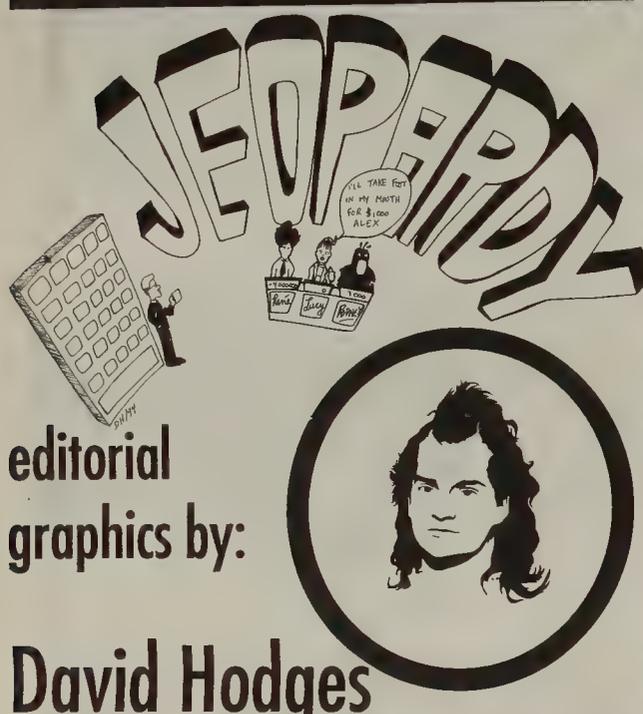

LOWEST
GUARANTEED
PRICES

APPLE SADDLERY

The Largest Western Boot Store in Canada.

INNES ROAD JUST EAST OF THE 417 (NEAR THE PRICE CLUB)

The school year in graphics . . .

editorial graphics by:

David Hodges

WITH HONORS ?

What an honor to be on the Honor Role, and we would like to honor you further by helping to get your nose out of the books and sending you to see the movie WITH HONORS.

For those of you who fit the bill come up to The Charlatan office, to pick up your passes on these honorary dates April 13, 14, 15.

Passes are limited, and honorable only at the special screening.

. . . and headlines

Compiled by Mario Carlucci, Brent Dowdall and Ryan Nakashima

September 23, 1993
"Carleton drops out of Maclean's survey"

After being ranked 44th in the 1991 survey and spending $100,000 to collect data for the 1992 survey, President Robin Farquhar chose not to send any data to Maclean's for 1993.

Farquhar said compiling the data for the survey would cost the university too much money.

Maclean's went ahead and used Carleton's data from last year's survey, in which Carleton finished sixth in the "comprehensive universities" category.

Based on the old data (and with the penalty system used by Maclean's for non-participants), Carleton finished ninth out of 12 schools in 1993.

October 21, 1993

"Watson a no-show at BOG"

In October, it was revealed that CUSA President Lucy Watson hadn't been to her board of governors meetings, a position to which she had been elected to fill. The board is the highest decision-making body at the university, with only two undergraduate student representatives.

November 4, 1993

"Board rules in labor dispute"

CUSA Incorporated received a jolt in November when all its 160 employees were unionized by the Ontario Labor Relations Board.

The board automatically unionized CUSA employees because it ruled that CUSA had interfered with attempts to organize a union in the summer.

Negotiations with the union for a collective agreement are scheduled to begin in April.

November 4, 1993

"Local business seeks space at Carleton"

Bruce Firestone, founder of the National Hockey League's Ottawa Senators and new owner of the Canadian Football League's Ottawa Rough Riders, wanted to put a summer entertainment park in the field called the North 40, in the northeast corner of campus.

The Carleton University Development Corporation, a university-owned corporation which deals with development on campus, rejected the proposal later in November.

Incidentally, The Ottawa Citizen reported March 25 that Firestone was just hired to teach real estate development as a sessional lecturer in the schools of business and architecture.

February 10, 1994

"Memos question out-of-class conduct"

A memo to departmental chairs and directors by CUSA director of services Theresa Cowan sparked debate over whether professors should socialize with students after class.

The memo warned professors against socializing with students because it might lead to an unfair advantage for some students over others.

As is customary, the mainstream media saw the issue as an opportunity to criticize "political correctness" rather than address issues like harassment and favoritism.

February 10, 1994

"Farquhar slams zero tolerance policy"

Academic freedom versus freedom from discrimination. That was the argument over the provincial government's policy framework to forbid speech that harasses an individual or group on university campuses.

Carleton professors signed a petition opposing it because they said it would interfere with academic freedom.

In early February, Farquhar refused to review Carleton's anti-discrimination policy as requested by the government. He said Carleton already has policies in place to prevent discrimination.

March 10, 1994

"CUSA election tossed: here we go again"

CUSA council didn't have enough votes to overturn a constitutional board ruling which said the previous election would have to be re-done because of polling flaws.

René Faucher, the outgoing finance commissioner, said he was upset CUSA council upheld the board ruling and said council was seeing "red skies and unicorns." Presumably, he meant they were too idealistic for hoping a CUSA election could be handled properly.

Earlier, in December, a CUSA referendum to increase fees to the student lobby group Canadian Federation of Students was thrown out because a "No" committee was not allowed to campaign.

March 17, 1994

"Strike rejected by CUPE 2323: TAs and RAs accept Admin's final offer"

After almost a year of back and forth negotiation with the university, CUPE

HEADLINE cont'd on page 8.

THANK YOU

We would like to add a big THANK YOU to all of our advertisers for helping us make 93/94 a success at The Charlatan.

Schadillac Saloon: for sponsoring our sports Trivia Contest
Baxter's: for sponsoring our weekly hockey pool
Grand Central: for all the great concert tickets
Cachet and countless others for the many goodies they've given throughout the year.

See y'all in September!

SETTLING DOWN IS SOMETHING THAT HAPPENS.
TYPICALLY AROUND
3:00 A.M.

EARN IT. SPEND IT. ENJOY IT.

Don't expect to be home early driving a new Volkswagen Golf. The optional 10-year/160,000 km powertrain warranty and starting price of $12,295* will give you other ideas. With its MacPherson strut independent front suspension, you'll want to take the long way, the highway, and perhaps a road with lots of sharp curves. But make sure there's a passing lane so you can fully appreciate the low-end torque of the motronic-tuned engine and track-correcting rear axle. Maybe you shouldn't go home. Go visit friends in another province. And when you finally park yourself in bed just as the sun's coming up, the anti-theft alarm system will ensure that your Golf gets a good day's sleep. Actually, it only settles down because you have to. Or do you?

GOLF
ENGINEERED FOR LIFE.

Price is based on MSRP for 2-door CL model with a 1.8 litre engine and 5-speed manual transmission. Options, freight, dealer prep and taxes extra. Dealer may sell for less. GTI model shown priced at $16,795.

SPENDING cont'd from page 3.

more people to handle the increasing student population. This year, the overall increase in undergraduate students was five per cent, says Pickett. He says next year's increase is expected to be between two and three per cent.

Each year, administration must submit its budget to the board of governors. The board's finance committee has the power to veto and make amendments to the budget.

The board is made up of 32 members, including three students, members of the community, Carleton President Robin

Farquhar, and other faculty and non-academic staff.

Students can exercise some power on how administration spends its money, says Lucy Watson, finance committee member and Carleton University Students' Association president.

Students can lobby the board of governors and ask questions, she says.

As a student board member, Watson says it's often hard for her to balance student concerns with the interests of the university, because the board's main interest is that of the university as a whole, not just the students and staff. □

HEADLINE cont'd from page 6.

2323's teaching assistants, research assistants and sessional lecturers decided to accept five more hours of work per year for its graduates.

After a Feb. 17 vote to strike, and a final mediation round March 7, the union local finally agreed to the university's final offer. The evening of March 10, after a few tense hours of ballot-counting, those members who had voted to strike in February swung back to accept the university's offer. About 55 per cent of those who voted chose to accept the work increase. Michel Roy, president of CUPE 2323, cried.

March 24, 1994

"NDP declares war on students"

The provincial NDP government announced a staggering 10 per cent tuition hike each year for the next two years, waiting until the last minute before Ontario universities start planning their budgets for next year.

The Council of Ontario Universities, an organization of senior university administrators, made a proposal in August to raise tuition by about 50 per cent each year for the next two years. Ten per cent still amounted to an extra $425 over the next two years. □

PONTIAC SUNBIRD LE SPORT COUPE

Fly the coupe!

PONTIAC SUNBIRD LE SPORT COUPE

• Standard 4-wheel anti-lock brakes

• Air conditioning

• AM/FM stereo cassette

Plus much more • rear spoiler • power automatic door locks • tinted glass • reclining front bucket seats • 24-hour Roadside Assistance

With your choice of two ways to take off.

The Performance you expect. Priced Right!

SmartLease
$189
per month over 36 months*
THE FIRST PAYMENT'S ON US!
Or special offer for graduates
$750 bonus from your Pontiac Dealer

PONTIAC
Performance
TEAM

*Offers apply to the 1994 Pontiac Sunbird LE Coupe on a 36-month lease for $189 per month equipped as described. A minimum down payment of $1,493 and $300 security deposit is required. Some lease conditions apply. Freight $525. Lease, insurance and taxes not included. Offers apply to 1994 new or demonstrator models. Dealer order or title may be necessary. Dealer may lease for less. Offers apply to qualified retail customers only. These offers may not be combined or used with any other offer. See Dealer for details. Available to any person who has proof that they graduated or will graduate from a recognized post-secondary institution during the period September 1, 1991 through August 31, 1994. Graduate program may not be combined or used with any other offer. First month Smart Lease payment will be waived for qualified purchasers. Maximum down payment applies. Some charges may apply. See Dealer for details.

NATIONAL AFFAIRS

Tuition hikes have a national appeal

by Michael Mainville
Charlatan Staff

Carleton students will face one of the highest tuition increases in Canada for next year if the university's board of governors votes to hike tuition the maximum amount allowed by the province.

On March 23, Ontario Minister of Education and Training Dave Cooke announced that the provincial NDP government would allow universities to increase tuition by up to 10 per cent each year for the next two years.

Compared to other tuition increases in Canada, which range from zero to 12 per cent, Ontario's hike is one of the highest. With the increase, Carleton arts students will pay about $2,450 in tuition by 1995-96, which places it in the middle of the pack for tuition among Canadian universities.

Reaction to the hike

Carl Gillis, chair of the Canadian Federation of Students, says the latest tuition increase means "more barriers in terms of people going to school."

Gillis says students are frustrated with the NDP government's decision.

"A lot of students were betrayed and lied to by the government," says Gillis.

He says members of the NDP government have betrayed students because their 1990 election campaign included promises to freeze and eventually eliminate tuition for Ontario post-secondary institutions.

However, the Ontario government has blamed tuition increases on the freeze in federal transfer payments to the provinces for education and welfare. The federal budget, released Feb. 22, removed $2 billion from projected transfers of funds to the provinces.

Kathy Chapeskie, communications officer for the Council of Ontario Universities, says the tuition hike "is a step in the right direction." The council is an advisory body to the government composed of Ontario's university presidents.

Last August, the council published a report to the province recommending tuition increases of 30 to 50 per cent.

Chapeskie says she hopes other provinces across the country adopt the same sort of increases.

Gillis disagrees. He says Ontario's tuition increases set a bad example for other provinces.

"It's a bad precedent for the rest of the president, says students were appalled with the board's decision.

In Alberta, the Tory government has announced it would cut education funding by $300 million dollars, 21 per cent over the next three years.

To compensate for the lack of provincial funding, the University of Calgary raised tuition by 12 per cent for next year, the maximum allowable amount.

"We're dealing with a government that doesn't see much value in post-secondary education," says Chima Nkemdirim, the vice-president external of U of C's student union.

But while some western schools are seeing sharp increases in tuition for next year, the Liberal government in Quebec announced a surprisingly low tuition hike.

On Dec. 15, Lucienne Robillard, Quebec's minister of education and science, announced a tuition-increase ceiling of 1.9 per cent for all post-secondary students. Quebec students already pay the lowest tuition in the country.

Commenting on the announcement, Marc Luz, president of the Student's Society of McGill, says the decision not to increase tuition this year was influenced by Quebec's upcoming election.

Luz says he thinks the Quebec government will compensate for the lower tuition by cutting funding to universities, a less noticeable cost-saving measure.

In the Maritime provinces, students have been paying substantially higher tuition fees than in other provinces for the last few years.

Students in New Brunswick, P.E.I. and Nova Scotia are paying up to $800 more per year in tuition than most Ontario students. The Liberal government of New Brunswick has frozen tuition fees at their current level for 1994-95.

A ripple effect?

With the highest tuition costs in Canada centred in the Maritimes, students there do not fear massive tuition increases in the wake of Ontario's decision, says Mark Ansems, vice-president of finance for the Student's Administrative Council at Mount Allison University in Sackville, N.B.

"If (the provincial government) did set higher tuitions in the near future, it would be somewhat of a politically suicidal move," he says.

But Gillis says it is inevitable that other provincial governments will follow the trend set by Ontario's NDP government.

"I'm sure there will be some ministers of education provincially, and some premiers looking at what's taking place here with some level of glee, because it gives them, at least in some perverse way, justification (to raise tuition) in their own provinces."

At U Vic, Ozard says she also fears the large Ontario hike will set a precedent for future tuition increases in B.C.

"We find that things happen in Central or Eastern Canada and it moves its way back. It worries us because often administrations tend to legitimize their increases by universities from other provinces," says Ozard.

However, some students outside of Ontario feel the hike here is justified because Ontario students continue to have tuition fees that are among the lowest in Canada.

Ansems says the increase in Ontario "is a kind of catch-up. It will help Ontario schools to come in line with us and other eastern schools." □

Going up? The cost of Canadian university education
Here are some tuition fee statistics for full-time arts students at selected universities across the country in 1993-94, based on Statistics Canada information.
As well, the percentage of increase expected for 1994-95 is listed.
	1993-94	% increase for 1994-95
U of Victoria	$2,224	9.65
Mount Allison	$2,890	0
McGill	$1,632	1.9
Carleton	$2,026	10

country, to the extent that everyone looks to someone who justifies the position they want to take," says Gillis.

The cost of education

Most other provinces have already set tuition levels for next year. In B.C., the NDP also promised a freeze on tuition when it came to power in 1991.

Since there is no government regulation of tuition fees in B.C., individual universities' governing bodies set tuition increases. However, the increases must be approved by the Ministry of Education.

The B.C. government refused to approve any tuition increases for 1992-93, but recommended a maximum tuition hike of 9.65 per cent for 1993-94.

In March, the University of Victoria board of governors unanimously recommended a 9.65 per cent increase in tuition for next year.

Janetta Ozard, U Vic's student union

Carleton community talks back to Rae gov't

by Karolina Srotek
Charlatan Staff

On March 23, Dave Cooke, the Ontario minister of education and training, announced a tuition increase ceiling of 10 per cent each year over the next two years.

If Ontario universities decide to raise tuition by the maximum amount allowable, students could be paying at least $425 more in tuition by 1995-96.

With this in mind, The Charlatan hit the hallways of Carleton to get reaction to this question:

What are your feelings on the 20 per cent tuition increase planned for students in the next two years?

I'm not so happy about it of course, but I don't know if we have much of a choice right now... it's kind of unfair.

Aliasha Green
Commerce III

Yes, I think it's a good thing, because whenever you provide a good to people at less than the true cost of producing the good, people over-use it. So charging a good price would ensure that the people who most value a university would come to (university).

Professor Nicholas Rowe
Department of Economics

Basically what the government is doing is making education only for the elites. What is education going to become? Is it wrong for it to be a right or is it just going to be a privilege? I think what I'm really upset about is no students having (the) initiative to get together and make a real racket about it.

Patricia Sentongo (below, right)
Law III

My parents let me live at home for free and I pay my school, but I know if I had to live on my own and pay for my school it would be absolutely ridiculous. I wouldn't come.

Jason Rendell
Psychology /
Anthropology II

I get OSAP, so unless I get more OSAP money then I will find it hard to meet the tuition fees.

Asif Chowdhury
Electrical Engineering II

PHOTOS BY CHRIS NUTTALL-SMITH

Basic economics

$9.99

Cotton 'Basic T' in 11 colours.

S., M., L., XL. (175) 9.99

'Alabama Cotton' pull-on shorts in 5 colours. S., M., L. (168) 14.99

$14.99

EATON'S

30 Day or Money Refunded

Campus cops may use spray eyes and skin, nausea and, some say, may trigger death.

According to some reports, over 15 people have died after being shot with the spray in the United States.

Dr. Barry Blakey, a veterinarian toxicologist at the University of Saskatchewan, says the use of pepper spray on people is relatively safe, provided it is used correctly. He says the product has no long-term effects, but irritation of the eyes and lungs can last for up to two hours and lead to minor health problems such as coughing and other infections of the eyes and lungs.

"I know of no cases where a person has died from the pepper spray, but if a person does have heart problems or is very agitated death maybe a slim possibility," says Blakey.

According to Eric Turner, City of Winnipeg Police spokesperson, the department tested the product for a three-month period with no problems. Turner also says the number of public complaints filed against the department went down during the test period because of the decrease in physical confrontations.

When asked about the deaths in the United States, Turner cites a report from the Association of Police Chiefs who hired an independent coroner in Dallas to investigate the deaths. The report found the deaths were not a result of the pepper spray, but other, pre-existing conditions.

"No one died from the pepper spray. In most of the cases the suspects were on drugs or alcohol and in poor health. In one case a person had a heart attack, but the person was very agitated and had a heart condition," says Turner.

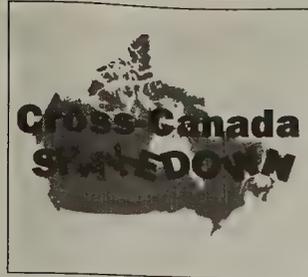

Despite the risks, campus police chief

Don Peters says issuing canisters of pepper spray to officers will help his department serve the university community with more confidence. In the past, when faced with potentially life-threatening situations, officers had no alternative but to use physical force.

"I feel it is important to equip the officers as best we can," says Peters.

Arming the campus police force with pepper spray would cost the department $880 plus tax for one regular can of pepper spray, a training can and a holster for each officer. Training costs for the force will be extra and Peters feels the department will likely adopt the city's training program.

Peters says any decision to use pepper spray will be made later this year, after the city police release their final report on the product's effectiveness. □

by Michelle Maruk
The Manitoban, University of Manitoba

University of Manitoba's campus police may soon join several other law enforcement agencies currently using a controversial weapon — pepper spray.

Pepper spray will give officers an alternative to using other weapons. When sprayed in the face of suspects or assailants, it causes a burning sensation in

Windsor names first female engineering dean

by Teena Ward
The Lance, University of Windsor

WINDSOR (CUP) — The University of Windsor has appointed the first female dean of engineering in Canada.

Hada ElMaraghy will make history as the first woman dean of engineering in Canada, upon beginning the job in July.

ElMaraghy, a former engineering professor at McMaster University in Hamilton, has been cited as an excellent role model for both women and men in engineering.

According to the university, she is "eminently qualified" in flexible manufacturing and a leader in automation and robotics. She has also headed up research projects on a national and international level.

ElMaraghy says she will start an "outreach program to schools in the area to encourage young women to consider engineering."

A powerful woman in engineering may "bring greater respect for females — it won't be so foreign for women to be there," says first-year engineering student Esperansita Macchiavello.

ElMaraghy says she aims to create a comfortable atmosphere for men, too.

"Male students, when they graduate, have to get used to working with women. They may be supervised by women."

Brian Zima, a second-year engineering student, says he's hoping ElMaraghy "will attract more women to engineering."

As recently as 1992, the Canadian Committee on Women and Engineering has called for "immediate action to change attitudes that discourage women in engineering." The small number of women in engineering, both students and faculty, has long been an issue of concern for many in the field.

Some students aren't happy with the way the university informed the public about the event. ElMaraghy's official appointment was announced during the March break, when many students were off campus. □

Yes, you do have to pay those student fees: B.C. court

by Kris Karlsson
The Peak, Simon Fraser University

BURNABY, B.C. (CUP) — Compulsory membership in student organizations is not a violation of the Charter of Rights and Freedoms, nor is it against the public interest, according to a precedent-setting decision by the British Columbia Court of Appeals.

The March 14 ruling by B.C. Chief Justice Alan MacEachern upholds the right of universities to require that students be members of student councils and pay compulsory membership fees.

The ruling overturns an earlier decision by the province's commercial appeals commission, which found that compulsory membership in the Simon Fraser Student Society was unconstitutional and contrary to the public interest.

The original challenge to compulsory membership was launched in 1992 by Simon Fraser undergraduate student David Feldhaus, a member of a club at SFU called Students Advocating for Freedom of Association. Feldhaus argued compulsory membership in the student society was unconstitutional.

The commission ruled in Feldhaus's favor, even though the student society argued that it had not been properly informed about the challenge.

The student society appealed the commission's ruling to the B.C. Court of Appeals. The commission's decision could have threatened the guaranteed funding of almost all the university and college student organizations in Canada.

In his decision, Chief Justice MacEachern ruled that the commission "vastly transcended its jurisdiction," and made decisions it was in no position to make.

The court ruled that the Charter does not apply because universities are not considered a level of government.

Chief Justice MacEachern pointed out to Feldhaus that he could withdraw his membership in the student society by writing a letter to them. However, under the province's University Act, the university still has a right to require that he pay the society's membership fee. □

Student Pro Movers Inc.

Don't move without us

(a division of Weston and Grant Inc.)

YEAR END STUDENT SPECIAL

- Van and A Man Special
- Storage Space (April - Sept)
- U-Haul Truck and Trailer Rental (Local and One Way Rentals)

MOVING?

Catering to all Areas Including Greater Toronto and Montreal

CALL NOW

233-4345/238-1956

Fax 233-1613

140 - 880 Wellington St.
1 Block West of Preston and Scott

THE DOMINION-CHALMERS LECTURES

Dominion-Chalmers United Church
355 Cooper Street at O'Connor
(613) 235-5143 or 235-5144

Guest Lecturer:

Professor Wolfhart Pannenberg
Professor of Systematic Theology, University of Munich

Theme: THE PROBLEM OF FAITH TODAY

Friday, April 29, 7:30 p.m.
"Christianity and Secularism"

Saturday, April 30
10:00 a.m. Seminar for professors, clergy & students
2:30 p.m. "Revelation and History"

Sunday, May 1, 7:30 p.m.
"The Trinity: Its Reality and Relevance"
ALL ARE WELCOME

CSIS deems Palestinian student a security risk

by Nicholas Davis
excalibur, York University

TORONTO (CUP) — Canada's top-secret intelligence agency wants a York University student expelled from the country.

Issam Ahmed Alyamani, a fourth-year political science student, faces a deportation order after the Canadian Security Intelligence Service deemed him a security risk.

Alyamani is a Palestinian refugee, born in Lebanon. A hearing with Immigration Canada is scheduled on April 15 to determine where to send him.

The deportation order from Immigration Canada also includes his wife and two children, who are both Canadian citizens.

Alyamani, 38, has been in Canada since 1985 as a landed immigrant. In 1988 he applied for Canadian citizenship. After not hearing from the citizenship board for over a year, he phoned them only to find out his application had been denied and that he was being investigated by CSIS.

"I didn't understand what was going on," says Alyamani. "They said I didn't pass security clearance, but I have clearance from when I first came to Canada."

Alyamani's lawyer obtained documents about the Palestinian's case from a review hearing conducted last year by the Security Intelligence Review Committee of CSIS's investigation of Alyamani. The committee is an independent public body that watches over CSIS.

According to CSIS, Alyamani is considered a "potential threat to Canadian security." CSIS believes Alyamani has ties to the Popular Front for the Liberation of Palestine. The PFLP is one of seven groups that belong to the Palestinian Liberation Organization, which CSIS considers a terrorist organization.

He has openly supported the Palestinian nationalist movement, but says he has never engaged in terrorist acts. He says he feels his beliefs have become an

issue.

"I don't have any involvement in any terrorist activities," says Alyamani. "CSIS has even admitted that I have not engaged in illegal or subversive activities in Canada."

York political science professor Reg Whitaker, who says he didn't know Alyamani when he testified at the review hearing last year as an expert witness, says the hearings were unfair.

"It's not fair that he is being convicted of associating with the PFLP," says Whitaker. "This is guilt by association, which is against the Charter of Rights."

CSIS cont'd on page 13.

ClarisWorks for Windows Report

General		Simple to use, fully integrated, award winning software. Packed with powerful word processing, database, spreadsheet, colourful charting and graphics capabilities. Ideal for primary, secondary and further education, plus administration.
Word Processor		Full featured word processor. Create worksheets and hand-outs, plus letters and assessment forms. Eliminate spelling errors with a 100,000 word customisable dictionary and find synonyms quickly with a 660,000 word thesaurus. (International spelling dictionaries are available separately.)
Spreadsheet & Charting		Powerful spreadsheet and charting features 100 built-in mathematical, statistical, financial, date, time, logic and text functions. Use it for statistical analysis in science, geography and maths or for balancing school budgets.
Database		Flexible database management and reporting. Stores and retrieves information at a keystroke; from student records and test results to ecological surveys and historical time lines. Features mail merge facility with the word processor.
Graphics		Fast, accessible graphics tools. Design and brighten up hand-outs, posters, maps and technical illustrations in full colour. Comprehensive graphics palette includes tools for lines, rectangles, ovals, polygons and more.

Integrated software for the better educated.

ClarisWorks for Windows passes every test in education with flying colours, especially cost. It's available now from Claris, one of the 10 largest personal computer applications companies in the world, for special education pricing by license, 5-pack, or single copy. And when you enquire about ClarisWorks for Windows, the following are absolutely FREE:

- ClarisWorks for Windows demonstration disk.
- Send for your FREE copies of ClarisWorks for Windows demonstration disk and the Claris Education Catalogue, which includes pricing and product descriptions for all Claris software.

To receive these free offers, plus more information about how ClarisWorks for Windows works for education, please call 1-800-361-6075 Ext. 326. Please see ClarisWorks for Windows on display at The Book Store.

Yes, I want to know more about ClarisWorks for Windows in education.

Please send my FREE demonstration disk and the following information:
Claris Education catalogue ClarisWorks for Windows datasheet

(Please print)

First Name

Last Name

Institution

Address

CityProvince

Postal CodeDaytime tel. no.

Please complete and send this coupon to

Claris

P.O. Box 3077

Markham, Ontario L3R 6G4

Attn: Charlatan ClarisWorks Windows ad

CLARIS

Feds promise heaps o' summer student jobs

by Brandie Weikle
Charlatan Staff

The federal government thinks it has the solution to student unemployment.

Human Resources Development Canada announced March 22 that it is increasing its funding to the Summer Employment/Experience Development program by $20 million this year. As a result, the government expects 10,000 more young Canadians will find employment this summer.

The program is designed to provide wage subsidies to employers to create summer jobs for students. It sponsors employers from both the private and public sectors as well as non-profit organizations to create projects which give students work experience.

The additional jobs are desperately needed by increasing numbers of unemployed youth.

A Statistics Canada survey released in February shows lower-than-ever student employment rates. Overall, student unemployment was up five per cent from 1989 to 1993. Last year, 17.5 per cent of students were out of a job.

The report says during the recent recession, "youths have borne a disproportionate share of job losses."

The government hopes increased funding will turn this trend around.

"The money will permit the federal government to fund more jobs," says Guy Morin, program and service officer at Canadian Job Strategy, which handles programs like this one.

Yvan Clermont, project manager for communications of the Human Resource Development youth directorate, says applications from employers for the program are presently being considered by Canada Employment Centre counsellors and Members of Parliament.

Clermont says the government is interested in sponsoring community-based projects in areas like the environment.

The program has two streams of jobs: one that provides some jobs geared at university students which start at the beginning of May and one geared at high-school students, with jobs starting at the beginning of July.

Morin says students can find the jobs either through the Canada Employment Centre for Students or through job postings by private businesses involved in the program.

The government will also continue to poke away at student unemployment by sponsoring the Canada Employment Centres for Students, Student Business Loans, the Native Internship Program, and the Business Drive for Jobs.

The government spends $8.6 million a year to fund 420 student placement centres across the country. The centres, open during the summer months, offer free liaison services between employers and students.

As well, there are $1.14 million in federal government business loans available to students. These interest-free loans, up to $3,000, are supposed to help students employ themselves by managing their own business. Last year, 1,106 student loans were approved. The program is administered and delivered by the Federal Business Development Bank in association with the Royal Bank of Canada and the National Bank of Canada.

The Native Internship Program provides employment opportunities within Human Resources Development Canada offices. The program is designed to "meet the career and vocational interests of Aboriginal students... and to expose them to the public service as a career option," according to a press release. The government spends $2.41 million funding this program.

The government provides $800,000 to the Business Drive for Jobs. The drive is a collaborative effort of business organizations and firms which challenges the private sector to create summer jobs for students without government subsidies. □

Red Cross donor questions labelled homophobic

The Martlet, University of Victoria

VICTORIA (CUP) — A questionnaire used by the Canadian Red Cross to screen potential blood donors has stirred up controversy at some universities across the country including the University of Victoria.

The questionnaire, given to all potential blood donors, has been called discriminatory and homophobic by students at Montreal's McGill and Concordia universities, where students have tried to boycott the blood drive.

The questionnaire states: "If (you are) male, having sex with another male even once, or accepting money or drugs in exchange for sex puts you at risk for AIDS."

You can also be barred from giving blood if "you were born in or emigrated from Africa... or other countries where AIDS is a common disease," or if you "share needles or take street drugs by a needle."

Critics at U Vic say the questionnaire discriminates against groups of people, rather than pinpointing the actual activities which spread HIV, the virus which causes AIDS.

"It targets groups of people on the basis of their sexual orientation or place of origin," says Robb Stewart, a member of U Vic's lesbian and gay student club.

Stewart says he and other Victoria students are considering launching a human rights complaint against the Red Cross.

He says the questionnaire isn't "targeting high-risk activities, which we now know is how HIV is transmitted."

"Even the Canadian government and human rights organizations recognize that when we are talking about HIV transmission, we have to target actions, not groups of people," says Stewart.

He also says the questions the Red Cross uses do not take into account recent information on the transmission of HIV and AIDS.

In response to complaints by students, Janetta Ozard, chair of the U Vic student council, wrote a letter to the Red Cross criticizing the questionnaire.

"The question does not address or define high-risk behavior, and the term 'sex' is vague," Ozard wrote.

But the Red Cross defended the wording in its written response to Ozard.

"It has been and still is recognized and proven that homosexual activity (i.e. male/male) carries the highest risk," wrote L.D. Wadsworth, the medical director of the Red Cross.

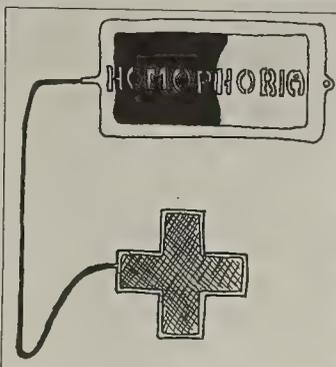

Stewart says the questionnaire needs to be more explicit about sexual activities. "They keep talking about 'homosexual activity,' but they don't define it," he says.

"If the words they're afraid to say are 'anal sex,' it's common knowledge many (heterosexual) couples engage in it and many gay couples don't."

According to Wadsworth, the Red Cross can't take into consideration use of condoms between males, because "no one can depend absolutely on condoms to protect the safety of the blood supply, nor do we have any control on how condoms are used by the general population."

Stewart doesn't disagree with that statement, but wonders why the Red Cross doesn't screen out heterosexuals who may also be using condoms as a form of protection.

"There shouldn't be that double stand-

CSIS cont'd from page 12.

Whitaker says he is also leery of how CSIS obtains its information.

"Canada doesn't have its own external intelligence agency. Information comes from interested third parties and Canada doesn't have the means to verify the information."

CSIS refuses to comment on how it obtains and verifies its information.

"It could be a possible security risk to divulge that information," says CSIS communications officer Marc Boyer. "All we do is collect the information and provide it to the immigration board. Then it's up to immigration to make the decision on whether the person is deported or not."

But Immigration Canada officials say this isn't true.

"When we have to determine whether someone is entitled to citizenship, we rely on CSIS for security clearance," says Norm Fabourin, chief of program management of Citizenship Registration, part of Immigration Canada.

"The Citizenship Act does not allow us to give citizenship if a party is deemed a security risk by CSIS," says Fabourin.

And Alyamani's friends say he has been falsely labelled by CSIS.

"All he is doing is being loyal to a humanitarian cause," says Muhammad Salaamed, a chemistry student who knows Alyamani. "It is unfair that Alyamani has to leave just for speaking for what he believes in." □

STEADY WORK: RAPID ADVANCEMENT

Due to increasing demand, several positions open IMMEDIATELY with large TELECOMMUNICATIONS FIRM

- Highly MOTIVATED individuals
- Attractive COMPENSATION plus bonuses!
- COMPREHENSIVE training provided
- Direct access to educated clientele!
- Flexible Hours

CALL NOW (613) 237-7079

The Ministry's Framework Regarding the Prevention of Harassment and Discrimination in Ontario Universities

Academic Institutions, Civility and 'The Life of the Mind'

DISCUSSION AND FORUM

for members of faculty, staff and students
Led by Marilyn Marshall,
Dean of Social Sciences and Stuart Adam,
Dean of Arts

Chaired by Robn Farquhar, President

Concluding commentaries by a member of faculty, a member of the administrative staff and by a student

Bell Theatre
Wednesday, April 6, 1994
3 - 5 p.m.

Sponsored by the Senate of
Carleton University

We love you all (50 per cent of the time)

It's the end of the year as we know it, and we feel fine. In fact, we feel so fine, we wanted to pass on our goodwill and heartfelt thanks to those who made us feel warm and fuzzy inside over the course of this year.

Oh, yeah, we also feel awful smug and cynical about a whole lot of folks who crossed us, pissed us off or otherwise were silly over the course of the year.

Yah, this whole exercise is a little self-indulgent. But what the hell, as our Charla-motto goes, we're only trying to please 100 per cent of the people, 50 per cent of the time. So...

To the drum-beaters of the men's movement: get real, guys. Now you've moved to comparing who has the biggest drum. Wow. What progress.

To CUPE 2323 and Michel Roy, cute union leader: we'd throw bricks with you any day.

To Bob Rae and Dave Cooke: you will live on in infamy.

To Kristine Haselsteiner, CUSA vice-president external: good job. Too bad no one else in your office will acknowledge your efforts.

To Carl Gillis, chair of the Canadian Federation of Students: why don't you lobby for something other than your own political career?

To Jim Watson, professional source and city councillor: good luck in the election this year, big guy. Thanks for giving a shit. And for the nifty fridge magnets.

To Lowell Green, who's for free speech as long as it's his, here's a news flash: racism is a bad thing, that's why we report it.

To the staff of Mike's Place: so long and thanks for all the naan.

To our media buddies at Statistics Canada: you guys are a rockin' resource.

To CUSA President Lucy Watson: thanks for always being there. Ha ha ha ha ha ha ha.

To Warren Kinsella, Charla-alumnus: thanks for taking the time to worry about us while trying to run the country and rid the world of evil scum.

To the Heritage Front: go fuck yourselves.

To Klaus Pohle and Centretown News: thanks for the last-minute rescue when our computers went down.

To all you wonderful j-school students who slag The Charlatan and then say you're a Charlatan reporter when you're trying to get in to a press conference or interview a source: get some ethics. You make us sick.

To women's centre co-ordinator Renée Twaddle: remember the golden rule. Be nice to others, others will be nice to you.

To CUSA's front office staff: you guys are the coolest. And keep it down, will ya?

To John Edwards, CUSA arts and social sciences representative: thanks for all the good copy. By the way, your banned "Lucy hates me" election poster is our all-time favorite.

To Fiona and the staff of Rooster's: mmmmm, coffee.

To Alex Trebek, host of Jeopardy!: we'll take "Student council presidents you've humiliated" for $200, please.

To Zaphod Beeblebrox: thanks for commercializing our copy. You could have at least asked to use it.

To Joe Reilly, rock 'n' roll publicist: you've made the arts editor so happy he weeps.

To U of O's professor Paul Lamy: teach what you know, not what you think.

To Mark Lamb, photo god and all around sensitive guy: thanks for the cookies.

To X Press: thanks for the rave review, but get some copy editors and stop leaving editing remarks in your articles, will ya? (DO YOU THINK DEREK WILL BE MAD WHEN HE READS THIS? -ED.)

To CUSA Publications: why do you fire your only competent people? P.S. Tabloids come in four-page blocks, guys.

To our lawyer Lynn Campbell: thanks for being our sober second-opinion. Good thing we didn't print ~~that~~. That was a close one.

To Clarence, Ed, Roxanne and Performance Printing's camera room crew: thanks for your patience, consideration and the late-night calls.

And finally, to the mixed-up, fun-lovin' students of Carleton who read The Charlatan faithfully, whether you like it or not: tattoos and beer for everybody!!!

OPINION

Normal to be not normal

by Bram Aaron
Charlatan staff

At some point in our lives, we all feel sad or blue. Usually it is a temporary mood or feeling which goes away with time.

Clinical depression, however, is a term describing a serious mental illness, which, left untreated, can last for months or even years.

Depressed people may not seek treatment for their depression for a long time. Often, they may not even realize they are depressed.

Sadly, though, the reason that most depressed people do not seek help for their sickness is the general bias which exists towards mental illness and depression in particular.

People are not ashamed to admit they are being treated for high blood pressure, asthma, arthritis or diabetes. Conversely, depressed people are ashamed to admit they have a psychiatric disorder.

Think about it. The last time someone you know told you he or she had been sick what did you imagine was wrong? The flu? A bad cold? Perhaps a broken bone? Chances are you assumed it was some sort of physical ailment.

Unfortunately, for a society which prides itself in being "advanced," it is still taboo to admit having or even to discuss mental illness.

Images of mentally ill people being a bunch of hysterical crazies in strait-jackets locked up at the local loony bin are outdated for the '90s. It is estimated by the Ontario Ministry of Health that, at some point in their lives, at least one-quarter of Canadians will be affected by at least one episode of clinical depression.

Causes of depression can be external or internal. Some external causes may include pressure from school, work, family or financial troubles. Other causes can include some type of major loss or change, like moving to a new city or new school, graduation, separation from friends and family, divorce, or death of a loved one. Growing up or living with a depressed relative or roommate can also contribute to one's own depression.

Internal or biological factors are less obvious. Depressed people may lack one or more neurotransmitters, chemical messengers which carry messages between different parts of the human brain. If the neurotransmitters necessary for mental well-being are lacking, the chemical balance necessary for a person to function properly is thrown out of whack.

Depression is a whole body experience and can interfere with every aspect of an affected person's daily life. Everything seems a complicated ordeal to a depressed person. Symptoms may include sleep difficulties, loss of appetite, pessimism, hostility, irritability, social withdrawal, difficulty concentrating, lack of energy, numerous bouts of crying and suicidal thoughts or attempts.

What can one do to help a depressed person? Refer him or her to a doctor immediately. Be available to listen. Supportive friends and family are extremely important and very much needed in times of distress.

A combination of psychotherapy and medication has been known to be effective treatment for depressive symptoms in over 75 per cent of depressed patients in Canada. Unfortunately, 15 per cent of depressed people eventually commit suicide, according to an Ontario Ministry of Health pamphlet. Why such a high number if effective treatment is available?

Upon discovering this statistic recently while seeking treatment for severe depression myself, I immediately realized the answer. Ignorance or denial of the problem by depressed people, their friends or their family complicates mental illness. Awareness of psychiatric disorders is instrumental to recovery.

Depressed people may look or act completely normal. But they are in constant and severe emotional pain and need help to cope with their lives. The other large problem depressed people are faced with is the unavailability of immediate help. Almost all psychiatrists, who are covered by OHIP, and psychologists and social workers, who are not, have waiting lists of three to six months for just an assessment. Even if a person is feeling suicidal and makes a trip to the hospital emergency room, this will only result in more red tape and waiting for help.

Courtesy of Premier Bob Rae and his government's budget cutbacks to health care, beds are severely lacking and quick, effective emergency care is not available.

Despite these problems, I am alive and am finally beginning the long road to recovery, thanks to medication and a very strong will to survive that I never knew I had. Others may not be as lucky.

With increased support and awareness from family, friends and society in general, there will be less of a stigma attached to mental illness and depression. Then it will be more acceptable for those with mental illnesses to seek out the help they need.

LETTERS

the CHARLATAN

CARLETON'S INDEPENDENT STUDENT NEWSPAPER

March 31, 1994

VOLUME 23 NUMBER 28

Editor-in-Chief Mo Gannon

Production Manager Kevin McKay

Business Manager Jill Perry

NEWS

Editors Mario Carlucci
Brent Dowdall

Contributors Josée Bellmare
Jill Mahoney

Alex Bustos
Mike Mainville
Mike Peters
Caron Watt

Volunteer Co-ordinator Johanna Ciszewski

NATIONAL AFFAIRS

Editor Arn Keeling

Contributors Michael Mainville
Karolina Srutek
Brandie Weikle

FEATURES

Editor Andrea Smith

Contributors Aundrea Marie Malloni
Rocco Paoletti
Sid Younis
Zenya Sirant

SPORTS

Editor Steven Vesely

Contributors Sarah Richards

ARTS

Editor Blayne Haggart

Contributors Naomi Bock
Joanne Capuani
Susie Haley
David Rainmaker
Dymn Saxhead
Rob Willbond

OP/ED

Editor Sheila Keenan

Contributors Bram Aaron
Charlakind

VISUALS

Photo Editor Tim O'Connor

Photo Assistant Andre Bellefeuille

Contributors Mark Lamb
Chris Nuttall-Smith
Jason Unrau
David Hodges

Graphics Co-ordinators Mike Rappaport
Joel Kenneth Grant
Ali Jafri
Frank Campbell
Sid Younis

COVER

The Colonel By Daycare:
Lee Van Adel (4 years old), Rebecca Borquez (3 years old), Noah Darville-Jennings (4 years old), Jeffrey Lefebvre (4 years old), Stephanie Mayer (5 years old), George McPherson (4 years old), Isaac Naponse (4 years old), Colin James Ross (4 years old).

PRODUCTION

Production Assistant Kim Alf

Contributors Kaleem Khan
Richard G.D. Scott
Karolina Srutek
Caron Watt
Ryan Ward

CIRCULATION

14,000

ADVERTISING 788-3580

Ad Manager Karen Richardson

The Charlatan, Carleton University's weekly student newspaper, is an editorially and financially autonomous journal, published weekly during the fall and winter term and monthly during the summer. Charlatan Publications Incorporated, Ottawa, Ontario, a non-profit corporation registered under the Canadian Corporations Act, is the publisher of The Charlatan. Editorial content is the sole responsibility of editorial staff members, but may not reflect the beliefs of its members. Contents are copyright © 1994. Nothing may be duplicated in any way without the prior written permission of the Editor-in-Chief. All Rights Reserved. ISSN 0315-1859.

Subscriptions are available at a cost of $40 for individuals and $52 for institutions. Includes GST. National advertising for The Charlatan is handled through Canadian University Press Media Services (Campus Plus), 73 Richmond St. W., 4th Floor, Ontario; MSH 124, phone: (416) 481-7283.

The Board of Directors of Charlatan Publications Inc. is: Chairperson Ken Drever, Treasurer Mark Lafontaine, Secretary Yvonne Potter, Directors: Warren Kaszula, Anna Gibbons, Dave Hodges, Fouad Kannan, Adam Mann and Mo Gannon.

The Charlatan Room 531 Uncentre Carleton University
Ottawa, Ontario K1S 5B6 Telephone: (613) 788-6680
Email charlatan@carleton.ca

Election unfair

Editor:

It seems to me that in recent weeks a number of people have attempted to discredit me and impugn my character. I am taking this opportunity to respond.

Yes, I played a role in overturning the CUSA election held in February. I wrote a brief outlining constitutional infractions and discrepancies that occurred in the elections held in February.

The CUSA constitutional board bore the onus of responsibility for responding to these challenges. It conducted an investigation into the administration and results of the election. Its members unanimously agreed that based on the infraction, the elections had to be overturned. CUSA council subsequently had voted on this issue on two separate occasions. It upheld the ruling of the constitutional board. The elections were overturned because they were unfair, not because of me.

To those who question whether or not I care about this university, I say this: I revived a comatose Debating Society which is now flourishing. As a member of the board of governors, I organized a forum with the senior administrators. This was the first such attempt by a student member of the board. I believe I have served the university well.

I may have lost the presidential race three times, but I retain my dignity for conducting my campaigns with honesty and integrity.

Elaine Silver
Political Science III

Laughing and crying at the NDP

Editor:

Once again the provincial government has turned its back on the hundreds of thousands of students, faculty and staff of Ontario's universities and colleges.

Despite a long history of promising to freeze and eventually eliminate tuition fees, the NDP government has just announced a 10 per cent tuition increase this year and a further 10 per cent next year.

The minister, Dave Cooke, added salt to the students' wounds by stating, and I quote from his March 23 press release, that, "Tuition increases (are) aimed at encouraging more student space at colleges and universities."

I didn't know whether to laugh or cry at that logic and explanation.

I also hope that people won't be fooled by the initial threat of a 50 per cent increase and feel a sense of relief with "just" a 10 per cent hike.

When inflation is running at less than two per cent, then why should those attending university or college be asked to pay 20 per cent more over two years?

At the rate the provincial government is going, only the very rich will be able to attain a post-secondary education in this province.

That would be a shame.

I urge those who support post-secondary education to write to Evelyn Gigantes, the cabinet minister for Eastern Ontario, at 407 Queen St., Ottawa, Ont. K1R 5A6, or call her at 237-0212.

Jim Watson
Member
Carleton board of governors

Quit this nonsense

Editor:

After reading the article, "Poli sci prof monitored about comments," The Charlatan, March 24, 1994, I was left profoundly disturbed and disappointed.

I believe it is time that students and professors take a serious look at political correctness and recognize it for what it is: pure, unadulterated nonsense. Although this last statement will surely work certain extremists into a blind, foaming frenzy, those with a firmer grip on reality should read on.

Professor Charles Schuetz made two allegedly racist and sexist comments to his political science class. First, that there are few black millionaires since African cultures tend to be more generous and sharing and second, that George Bush intervened in the Gulf War because Margaret Thatcher asked him to. (This offends because it implies that women have an influence on men.)

Indeed these are statements of opinion, but to consider them inflammatory is ridiculous.

Political correctness obscures the facts as well as warping opinions. Suppose that the above statements were true. How else would they be communicated? I, for one, refuse to give up the democratic right to free speech because certain "realistically challenged" individuals say it makes them uncomfortable.

Jason Edwards
Biology II

Tuition not the only problem

Editor:

Re: "NDP declares war on students," and "We are not amused," The Charlatan, March 24, 1994.

Fact: As students, tuition represents only 20 per cent of the cost of our university education if we are Canadian.

Think: Does the government ever ask us to pay back the other $32,000 (Four years at $8,000 per year)?

Fact: The majority of tax revenue is derived from taxes paid by individuals. Not all of these individuals are "upper middle class."

Think: How many people do you and your family and friends know who can afford to pay more taxes in this era of wage freezes and high unemployment?

Question (try to think about this one): What percentage of the money that you spend in eight months at university is for tuition? 25 per cent? 35 per cent?

Think: Maybe we overprivileged (in many ways) Canadian students should stop whining at the government about tuition and look at ways to get more for the other 65 per cent of the money we spend during the year.

Are you living in a crummy place and paying $400 month? (That's about $150/month more than tuition.) Get involved and lobby in the community for more non-profit housing. Support food co-op/food bank efforts for students.

Why don't we look at taking some responsibility for the real inequities of life as students? Look at the big picture — it's not just about tuition.

Pat Rowan
Interdisciplinary Studies III

Cigarette story goes up in smoke

Editor:

You missed the boat on your university smoking ban story ("New smoking ban may affect universities," The Charlatan, March 10, 1994.)

I wrote on the same topic for one of my classes. I found out that there's no story and if Karolina Srutek had checked with MPP Larry O'Connor's office, she would have too.

The Ontario government had no intention of banning smoking from residences or any other place that's not part of the "learning areas" of campus. The whole point of the colleges and universities thing is to allow students who can't tolerate smoke the opportunity to pursue their post-secondary education in a smoke-free environment. It's probably not going to affect Carleton University at all, because we already have municipal by-laws that cover this stuff.

MPP Dalton McGuinty sent memos to all of the universities and campuses warning them of the potential inclusion of areas such as the great outdoors before committee consultations took place. In those consultations it was made clear that these wide-sweeping interpretations were a wording glitch. They were amended in clause-by-clause examination.

If your reporter had not based her story on an opposition MPP's complaints and had taken the time to verify the government's position from the horse's mouth, she would have uncovered a whole different story — namely that there isn't one.

But then, gross injustice is so much sexier, isn't it?

Tamsen Tillson
Masters of Journalism II

Hiding behind free speech

Editor:

An article in the March 24 Charlatan entitled "Poli Sci prof monitored about comments," demonstrated the dangers of political correctness.

The article states that Professor Schuetz's classes are being monitored by another professor because of racial and sexual remarks which caused some students to leave the class.

One remark the professor made was that "There are few black millionaires in North America," which is relatively true when compared to the amount of, let's say, white millionaires. However, he does contribute a true statement to somewhat flaky evidence because not all black people are sharing or generous.

Though, if we do accept the evidence he uses to validate his statements, we find there is nothing wrong with what he is saying, at least nothing that would constitute a racist remark.

Schuetz says that because most black people are sharing and generous they are not usually millionaires. Being black myself, I would not consider Schuetz to be a racist because what he says about blacks infers something which is quite the opposite of those who are millionaires.

Use the same syllogism, but change the variable from black to white and it would read — European cultures are not sharing and generous, therefore there are many white millionaires. The professor is actually saying something about the type of people who are millionaires and if so, is actually saying something good about people of African descent.

Although Schuetz should not make such broad generalizations about anybody, good or bad, he should not have a shadow casted over his 29 years at Carleton.

The only thing I would criticize Schuetz for is claiming his right to free speech. The KKK has the right to freedom of speech, but I don't think they would be allowed to continue teaching at Carleton, even if they did have tenure.

My advice to Schuetz is that if he is going to make a statement which some people do not accept, defend what you say, instead of hiding behind the Charter, like so many racists do.

Michael Congress
English IV

Just want some help, not the brush-off

Editor:

What do you do when certain profs set things up to make you look like you're suffering from a severe case of the STUPIDS (Severe Traumatic Uncontrollable Profuse Intelligence Deficiency Syndrome)?

Like, take for example, a certain poor, innocent, unsuspecting student (me). I go to a certain TA's office to get some information regarding the methodology of composing a "Microelectronic circuits and devices" lab report and notice this particular TA is simply sitting on his keester reading the funnies and watching an infinite amount of numbers pointlessly running across a computer screen.

Then I pose my question, "Excuse me, can you please tell me the specifications of writing this particular lab report...?"

Well, the reply was as follows. "I'm really sorry, I'm kinda busy right now. I really would appreciate it if you would just leave."

So, the next day I thought, "Hmm... why don't I just go and see the prof." So, first thing next morning I went. He said that it was really easy stuff and told me that if I couldn't do it I should go and see a psychiatrist or a cognitive counsellor.

Then I went the chairman, who after having a talk with the prof, dittoed his remark.

So, I spent the next four days and three nights pulling my hair out over this silly report and handed it in. Well, the result was a big, beautiful 26 out of 100. Then to add insult to injury, the lab prof comes to inform that he wanted to speak to me and told me to drop the course.

I was not too impressed with having to drop the course, because of their method of handling certain students when they have a question. It took quite a lot out of me to not spontaneously combust in his office.

Myriam Baes
Biology II

The Charlatan will be on hiatus until the end of May which will give you lots of time to write us. We welcome all letters and opinion pieces. Letters should not be more than 250 words and opinion pieces not more than 700 words. Pieces may be edited for length or clarity. Include your name, signature, faculty, year and PHONE NUMBER or your letter won't be published. Phone numbers are for verification only and won't be published. Send to: The Charlatan, Room 531 Unicentre, Carleton University, 1125 Colonel By Drive, Ottawa, Ont. K1S 5B6.

DON'T BE SUSPICIOUS

WE'RE HAVING OUR YEAR END CHARLA-PARTY

OPEN TO ALL STAFF MEMBERS,
VOLUNTEERS AND FRIENDS

For more information come up to
The Charlatan or call Mo at 788-6680

featuring the music of CONSENTING ANIMALS

CITY OF OTTAWA LEAF AND YARD WASTE COLLECTION

Abhh...Spring! It's back by popular demand! And so is the Leaf and Yard Waste Collection Program!

Starting in April, leaf and yard waste will be collected every second week on your regularly scheduled Blue Box collection day. The program will run between April and November. Check your "Use your Blue Every Two" calendar and brochure for dates.

When doing your "spring cleaning" please remember:

- Leaf and yard waste placed out for collection must be placed in REUSABLE GARBAGE CONTAINERS or COMPOSTABLE PAPER BAGS. (leaf and yard waste in plastic bags will NOT be collected)
- Leaf and yard waste set out on non-collection weeks will NOT be collected.

Questions? Call us anytime at 564-1111.

Leaf and yard waste includes leaves, branches, hedge trimmings and uprooted plants. All organic waste will be composted at a central facility and later returned to the City for use as top dressing on our sports fields.

COLLECTE DE FEUILLES ET DE DECHETS DE JARDIN DE LA VILLE D'OTTAWA

Abhh...le printemps!!! De retour à la demande générale! Tout comme le Programme de collecte de feuilles et de déchets de jardin!

À partir d'avril, les feuilles et les déchets de jardin seront ramassés toutes les deux semaines le jour prévu pour la collecte des boîtes bleues. Le Programme sera en vigueur d'avril à novembre. Consultez votre calendrier et la brochure "Sortez votre bleue une fois sur deux" pour connaître les dates.

Lorsque vous ferez votre nettoyage de printemps, rappelez-vous que :

- Les feuilles et les déchets de jardin doivent être placés dans des POUBELLES RÉUTILISABLES ou dans des SACS EN PLASTIQUE. (les feuilles et déchets de jardin entassés dans des sacs en plastique ne seront pas ramassés)
- Les feuilles et déchets de jardin déposés sur le trottoir la mauvaise semaine ne seront pas ramassés.

Questions? Téléphonnez-nous n'importe quand au 564-1111.

Les déchets de jardin comprennent feuilles, branches, cognes de boies et plantes déracinées. Les déchets organiques seront compostés à une installation centrale et ensuite retournés à la Ville pour être utilisés comme terre de surface sur nos terrains de sport.

Information

Senior's Activities for Spring and Summer

Fun filled moments for memorable times!

Join a bridge club, go to the woodworking shop, learn to arrange dry flowers, get involved in a line dancing group, get fit, cycle, walk and hike, develop your creative talents through a painting class...and discover new destinations with a bus trip.

For all the details on these and other activities for seniors, consult your copy of the Spring and Summer Recreation and Culture Guide or call 564-1017.

Les programmes printemps / été pour les aînés

Des programmes divertissants pour des moments éblouissants!

Rédaction de récits, artisanat, menuiserie, danse en ligne, clubs de marche, peinture, Tai Chi, sans oublier les merveilleuses destinations que nos excursions en autobus vous feront découvrir!

Pour tous les détails au sujet de ces activités, consultez votre copie de Guide des programmes printemps / été du Service des loisirs et de la culture ou communiquez avec nous en composant le 564-1017.

Ride

by Zenya Sirant

right arm burning from the sun
through the window
my crossed leg touches his from the motion of the train just briefly
then back to an inch of space
The train stops and a breeze blows in helping to evaporate my sweat little shocks each time we touch hitting in a rhythm of some crazy symphony
A scent of sweat and dust
brush past my nose
I hum a little song and a dark haired girl looks back at me
Another hour before
St. Raphael
His eyes squint reading
He forgot his glasses
I take off my ring
and look at the white skin untouched by the sun
Strange plants outside that look plastic
Colored umbrellas sticking out from the blue
A man with a yellow shirt stood talking to himself
A blonde looked away
I try to sleep and lean on my pack with my eyes closed
I feel the wind blowing down my nose and everywhere

it's noisier without sight
a french mother speaks to her children they are still wearing their swimsuits
the yellow shirted man sits next to the blonde
He knows She's scared
A young girl in a polka dot dress walks by my window and stares
I smile
but she doesn't my leg is outstretched and my anklet
is the color of the sea outside
I try and catch
His eye because
I want him to know but
He looks past at the moving world
He smiled at someone
I wished it was me pink flowers zoomed by somehow
I remembered
the beautiful concierge at my past hotel
she looked like a 50 year old black haired
Bardot
I kept imagining what her youth must have been the way She carried herself was magic
I wanted to be like that when I grew there
the sun moved from me and I was comfortable
He said
His dreams were shattered
He was playing portable scrabble.

Critique:

This poem showed more sophistication than any of the other submissions. Its greatest strength was its candor, and its ability to convey a strong sense of emotion through the almost commonplace description of a train ride and a casual encounter, just a touch and a glance really, with a fellow traveller. The simple, first person narration is unaffected yet effectual, and lends a feeling of immediacy and poignancy to the experience.

Contest

3rd To Betty Rubble In Judy Jetson's Universe

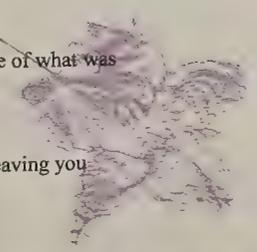

by Aundrea Marie Malloni

The first had poverty, a suitcase and a Ticket across the sea
The second had movements, revolutionary sex
And men on the moon
She, the third
Part of a generation not worthy of a name
Caustic of her advantages
Inherited with grace,
Therapists and micro-wave popcorn
Televised, video taped wars
Clean, safe, open, laundered sex
Ambition diluted with diet coke
Individualism suffocated by waffle shirts
Attaining no equilibrium of Crawford and Curie
She has searched
32/26/36 tattooed nowhere on her body
Nowhere on the small town birth certificated
Verification that she lives
Put your fingers in your ears
Put your fingers in your ears
Put your fingers in your ears
But the nymph puts them instead
Down her tender bleeding throat
And I weep for her
Because she knows not what she does
Because she does not understand her Submission
To the cream bleach, aspartame,
Glamour junkie gods
And I weep for her
As she sips her instant breakfast
By the luminescent video glow
Because girls like her these days
They live next door
Because they are a dime two dozen
Because they pillaged her soul

Road Signs

by Paoletti

too busy to wait for a er silence of still crickets.
more attention to t you — through you as e car fly by us.
se lives which I've rehearsed for like those: gone.
bearing into thin air, ed metaphors.
constructions of painted lines op dragged through the middle of what was our green space.
ittle left to do,
ed up my tools
d until I fell off the horizon, leaving you g for the crickets to quit.

ique:
poem puzzles, and gains strength through ambiguity. On the band it is an elegy for lost nature written in the form of a lyric ost love; on the other, it really is a love poem, couched in the eit of environmental damage. This is a cunning device and ks well. . . . There is a nice metaphysical feel to this poem, though not quite as satisfying in its completion as "Ride."

Critique:

While I don't know anything about Judy Jetson's universe, outside of what I discover in this poem, there is a small zany universe created in the writing at hand. . . . The author gently satirizes this victim of pop culture who is trying desperately not to hear the deeper messages and is caught in a whirlwind of contemporaneity which includes "laundered sex," "aspartame," and a penchant for anorexia. However, there is a little too much self-consciousness in the narrator, whose intelligence and good fortune allow him or her to weep for the victim "Because she does not know what she does/Because she does not understand her/Submission." . . . But there is a good energy in the writing, lots of verve in the attack against this new age of vanity, which is the real villain in the poem.

PLACEMENT & Career Services

Check the posting boards at
the Placement Centre for
more job listings.

Programs and services of interest to undergraduates, graduating students, as well as alumni.

508 Unicentre - 788-6611
March 31, 1994

ON-CAMPUS RECRUITING

Permanent full-time positions are directed towards graduating students (available May '94). Dates, unless specified, refer to deadlines.

To find out the types of positions, how to apply and where to find more information on the companies, please contact the office.

Household Financial Corp.

Mar. 31, 5 pm
All Disciplines
Positions: Accelerated Training Program

Gandalf Mobile

April 4, 12 Noon
Electrical Engineering, Computer Systems Engineering
Positions: Jr. Software Engineer

CIBC - Toronto

April 8, 12 Noon
Computer Science
Positions: Systems Developer

Techform Products

April 11, 12 Noon
Mechanical Engineering
Positions: Product Engineer, Product Engineering Assistant

Communications Security Establishment

May 1, Mail Direct
All Disciplines
Positions: Languages Related

Solidarity Eastern Europe

May 27, Mail Direct
English, Linguistics
Position: Overseas Language Teacher

FULL TIME EMPLOYMENT

Please visit Placement & Career Services for more full and part time employment opportunities.

Family Services Centre

Sault Ste. Marie
April 5, Mail Direct
MSW, MA or BSW
Position: Therapist

National Research Council/Carleton University

ASAP, Mail Direct
Engineering
Position: Engineer

SUMMER EMPLOYMENT

For more information on the types of positions and application procedures consult the summer job board.

Schlumberger Industries

April 4, 12 Noon
Engineering, Commerce, All
Positions: Water Meter Installers, Administrative Assistant, Fire Hydrant Testers, Supervisor

Central Experimental Farm

April 5, Mail Direct
Sciences, History
Position: Farm Interpreter, Interpreter-Actor

Niva Publishing

ASAP, Mail Direct
Journalism, English
Positions: Research/Writer

CIBC Aboriginal Internship Program

ASAP, Mail Direct
All disciplines
Positions: Summer Interns

Natural Resources

ASAP, Phone first
Chemistry
Positions: Lab Technician

TREE PLANTING

The following tree planting companies are accepting applications to be mailed direct. Please consult the summer job board for deadline dates and for more information.

TAWA Enterprises Ltd.
Evergreen Forestry Services
Outland/New Forest
Tree Line Reforestation
Broland Enterprises Inc.
Taiga Reforestation
Hotchkiss Forestry Enterprises

EMPLOYER INFORMATION SESSION

FOR SUMMER EMPLOYMENT

Home Phone Club
April 8, 12 Noon
417 Southam Hall
Positions: Registration

GROUP SESSIONS

Students may sign up for the Workshops at the front desk.

The Resume/Covering Letter

This session discusses self assessment, the purpose of a resume, how to prepare a resume, skill identification, components of a resume, resume styles, as well as the covering letter. Samples are reviewed to determine how to maximize effectiveness.

Networking/Job Search

This session focuses on networking, researching the labour market, the visible and hidden job market, various job hunting approaches, developing a job search system and common pit falls.

Interview Techniques

This session reviews the purpose of the interview, the employer's and the candidate's goal, the stages of an interview, commonly asked questions and preparation tips.

Do you need help finding summer employment?

The Placement & Career Services Centre on campus will continue to provide summer employment information until April 30, 1994. The Canada Employment Centre for Students is also open and we encourage you to visit their office for assistance with your summer job search.

The Naroni Building
360 Laurier Avenue West
3rd Floor
Ottawa

Hours of Operation:

Until May 2: Monday to Friday 8:00 a.m. - 4:00 p.m.
From May 2: Monday to Friday 8:30 a.m. - 4:30 p.m.

Are you graduating? Have you graduated?

Do you need help finding full-time employment?

The Placement & Career Services Centre on Campus may be able to help!

ALUMNI REFERRAL SERVICE

Register with us by submitting an ACCIS application, a resume, and a transcript.

Good luck with your exams and have a good summer!

We would like to take this opportunity to thank those people within the university community who have assisted in the delivery of our service during the past academic year.

A BIG THANK YOU TO ALL OUR VOLUNTEERS

To each and every one of the people who dedicated their time between classes (or even their time in classes) to The Charlatan this year — you make this much more than a paper. Thanks is not enough to commemorate your work here. Our staff's respect will always be yours.

To everyone on staff this year — Kevin, Jill, Mario, Karin, Brent, Arn, Andrea, Sheila, Steven, Blayne, Tim, Andre, Dave, Mike, Joel, Kim, Dave, Joellen and Karen — without you The Charlatan would not even be a paper. You have worked hard, worked long, worked late, worked tons. You have worked beyond the limits I thought human beings could tolerate. You have worked wonders. My respect and admiration will always be yours.

— Mo Gannon, editor-in-chief

Bram Aaron
Sarah Abernethy
Elisabeth Adefarakan
Carla Agnesi
Hana Ahmad
Andrew Alexander
Susanne Andrew
Doron Aronson
Tim Ashby
David Bartolf
Jodi Batori
Arrend Bayen
Christopher Bell
Josée Bellemare
Selwyn Benois
Nika Bendichevskaya
Joe Bernard
Gwladys Bichat
Naomi Bock
Sharon Boddy
Alex Bodnar
Shane Book
Jennifer Boyle
Pat Brethour
Peter Brewer
Matt Bruce
Anna Brzozowski
Alex Bustos
Rori Caffrey
Sarah Cairns
Frank Campbell
Joanne Capuani
Pam Chynn
Johanna Ciszewski
Elizabeth Clark
Rob Clements
M.G. Comino
Bill Cooper
Mark Cotgrave
Christina Craft
Vanessa Crosbie
Lisa Currie
Joseph Dandurand
Martin J. David
Jennifer Davies
Glen Dawes
Derek DeCloet
Tracey Dewar
Steve Dobrenski
David Docking

Franco D'Orazio
Ken Drever
Paula du Hamel
Michael Dufresne
Todd Duncan
David Dunn
Julie Dyer
Malcolm Earle
Drew Edwards
Charlie Elderkin
Alexis English
Heather Farrow
Kelly Fines
Kevin Finn
Max Fishman
Amanda Follett
Rebecca Ford
Sussana Forieri
Maurice Fortier
Shannon Fox
Shannon Fraser
Roy Fu
Angie Gallop
Stephanie Garrison
Janice Giavedoni
Anna Gibbons
Noel Germundson
Sarah Goodman
Christine Gough
Joel Kenneth Grant
Eric Grice
Doris Gutenkunst
Gifty Gyimah
Susie Haley
Adrian Harewood
Rick Harp
Neil Herland
Tracey Hitchcock
David Hodges
Jama Ibrahim
Suzanne Izzard
Kate Jacobs
Ali Jafri
Colin James
Dean Janvier
Doug Johnson
Karin Jordan
Fouad Kanaan
Shamir Kanji
Michael Kearns

Greg Kerr
Kaleem Khan
Warren Kinsella
Michael Kirby
Stephanka Kirincich
John Kirkham
Yonnie Kim
Robert K. Kisielewski
Boryslav Kit
Alex Klaus
Bill Labonte
Mark LaFreniere
Eric Lagenbacher
Mark Lamb
Bob Lawson
C.D. LeBlanc
Sara-Lynne Levine
James Lewis
Billie Danika Littlechild
Eric Long
Graeme Lowthian
Mark Lukac
Janine Macdonald
Alec Maclaren
Gregor Madden
Jill Mahoney
Michael Mainville
Renata Manchak
Dave Manor
Lisa Marshall
Mayma Massicot
Derrick Mealiffe
Shirley Mills
Aleksandar Mitik
Dave Moodie
Sarah Morris
Sarah Mullin
Janet Murphy
Carolyn McBain
Christine McConnell
James McCrostie
Jodi McKenzie
Rob McLennan
Ian McLeod
Ryan Nakashima
Fraser Needham
Joe Norminton
Chris Nuttall-Smith
Jon Nzakamulilo
Ron Orol

Greg Owens
Prema Oza
A.J. Pace
Sandeep Panesar
Anthony Pangalos
Kishma Paquette
Thom Pardoe
Grace Park
Mona Park
Pam Paterson
Doug Pen
Mike Peters
Paula Peter-Dennis
N.A. Pierre
Nicole Plata
Jacques Poitras
Debbie Poon
Trina Poots
Yvonne Potter
Sophie Pottinger
Gavin Power
John Price
Steve Pruner
Tim Pryor
Mike Ramanauskas
Jason T. Ramsay
Dave Randall
Natasha Rapchuk
Mike Rappaport
Chris Reid
Kevin Restivo
Sarah Richards
Michael Richardson
Tim Riordan
Graham Robertson
Tony Rogge
Nicholas Rowe
Dave Sali
Richard Sanders
Ean Sane
Nadini Sankarsingh
Dawolu Akintola Saul
Shawn Scallen
Charmead Schella
Richard G.D. Scott
Adam Seddon
Neil Seto
Cindy Shigetomi
Angus Shirling
Ann Showalter

Matt Shurrie
Sean Silcoff
Audrey Simtob
Matt Skinner
Andrew Smales
Vishnu Som
Karolina Srutek
James Q. Stansfield
John Steinbachs
Roberta Stout
Carl Sunstrum
Jason Tamo
Dahlia Tanasiou
Jane Tattersall
Jay Tharayil
Cristin Tierney
Dean Tomlinson
Jason Unrau
Murielle Varhelyi
Ray Verbyla
Kira Vermond
Tricia Volpe
Ryan Ward
Caron Watt
Michelle Watt
Brandie Weikle
Don Weixl
Patrick White
Andrea Wiebe
Jennifer Clarke Wilkes
Rob Willbond
Allan Wille
Margaret Wilson
Christina Wolaniuk
Clayton Wood
Tanya Workman
Lisa Young
Sid Younis
Tonya Zelinsky

All of you are invited to the end-of-the-year
Charlabash on Saturday,
April 9. Please call
Mo at 788-6680
for more details.

T H A N K Y O U
COME TO THE PARTY

STUDY SKILLS
Weekend Workshops offered by the School of Continuing Education
788-3500

Workshop I

NOTE-TAKING/EXAMINATIONS AND ESSAY WRITING

This one-day workshop will provide you with tips and techniques to develop effective listening and note-taking skills, textbook reading skills, and systems of study. You will learn to reduce exam anxiety and improve concentration and memory building. As well, the workshop provides an exploration of all aspects of the writing process. You will have an opportunity to analyze an assignment; research and organize a topic; and write and revise a draft.

Date: Saturday, June 11, 1994, 9:00 a.m. -- 4:00 p.m.
Fee: $40.00 (includes lunch)
 $35.00 (without lunch)

Workshop II

ESSAY WRITING

This intensive, full-day workshop is designed to help you produce more effective essays. All aspects of the writing process will be explored -- from the planning stages through to final draft.

Date: Sunday, June 12, 1994, 9:00 a.m. -- 4:00 p.m.
Fee: $50.00 (includes lunch)
 $45.00 (without lunch)

10% discount if you register by May 31!!!

Registration Form

STUDY SKILLS
School of Continuing Education

NAME _____ STUDENT NO. _____

ADDRESS _____

CITY/PROVINCE _____ POSTAL CODE _____

PHONE (H) _____ (B) _____

WORKSHOP _____ LUNCH YES _____ NO _____

Payment may be made in cash (if registering in person) or by cheque or money order (payable to Carleton University). Return this registration form and payment to the School of Continuing Education, Room 302, Robertson Hall, Carleton University, 1125 Colonel by Drive, Ottawa, Ontario, K1S 5B6.
 Please Note: Fees are non refundable.

Tired of the Same Old Crowd?

Like to try a different scene ... but on a student's budget? For the same price as a few beers, The National Arts Centre Orchestra offers a lot of great bars for your buck. Now save 50% off the regular adult price of prime orchestra-level seats when you purchase student tickets using one of these coupons. You can plan on some great nights out this year, for only $14.44 a seat. And there's no minimum purchase required.

Get your tickets now and enjoy some nights out you'll remember.

April 20-21

Trevor Pinnock, conductor
Cho-Liang Lin, violin

Bizet Symphony in C major
Gaouzeon World premiere of Primus Tempus (NAC/CBC co-commission)
Beethoven Violin Concerto in D major

NAC Opera 20:00

Per person, GST included, valid for students with ID only. Seating in Orchestra row D 5

$14.44

May 12-13

Trevor Pinnock, conductor
Grigory Sokolov, piano
Joanna Groferrer, flute
Jane Logan, viola

Satie Gymnopedie No. 1
Chopin Piano Concerto No. 2 in F minor
Bouchar Exquisite Fines
Mendelssohn Symphony No. 4 in A major, "Italian"

NAC Opera 20:00

Per person, GST included, valid for students with ID only. Seating in Orchestra row D 5

$14.44

Place your order in person at the NAC Box Office, with your valid student ID.

The office is open Monday to Saturday, 12:00 to 21:00, and accepts all major credit cards, cash and debit cards.

NATIONAL ARTS CENTRE

CENTRE NATIONAL DES ARTS

The UnClassifieds

Replies in NY, PICH, XXX, BIFF please come to 531 Unicentre for responses.

FOR SALE/RENT

One way tickets to Frankfurt, Germany. Leave Ottawa April 10 and May 2. Call 738-9468 or leave message.

House sold, downsizing. An assortment of household items and encyclopedias for sale. Call 226-5849

Motorcycle for sale - Yamaha F650D, 1984. Good condition. $1900, call Dave 730-0680

3 bedroom loft apartment for sublet, option to renew. Asking $295/mo., utilities included. Phone 730-0680

Big, beautiful 1 bedroom apartment to sublet. Hardwood floors, large windows, excellent location on Elgin St., furnished or unfurnished, your choice. 587-5421.

Sublet Room - Share with 4 cool guys, laundry, 3 washrooms, parking, modern, lots of space + privacy, at Percy + James. Best offer, call 230-5712.

Beautiful House to share - large airy room, renovated Victorian house. Centretown, quiet street, Carleton bus. Clean roommates. High ceiling, stained glass, hardwood floors, good kitchen, laundry $375/mo. including utilities. David 230-8688.

Sunnyside & Bank 2 rooms in beautiful, spacious apt, hardwood floors, parking, close to bus routes #1, 7, 5, 3310 + hydro. Available May 1 for summer or full year. Phone 730-4797.

2 rooms available May 1-Aug 31 in townhouse on Dynes Rd. Pool/sauna use incl. $300+/mth, $350+ for big basement room with private bathroom. Female students preferred. 727-0925.

LOST + FOUND

Personal photo of Lu Xian Dan dated 03.17.1994 found Mar.19 outside Loeb bldg. Call 567-7607 after 10pm.

Political Science 47 420 notebook found in the library. Pick up at the Charlatan, 531 Unicentre.

WANTED/JOBS

I NEED AN APT. One bedroom or large bachelor for May 1. Must have a parking space. Would prefer if in the Glebe, Centretown or Elgin area. Willing to spend approx. $600. Call Jill @ 253-4271 or 788-2600 ext 8029. (no summer sublets)

ROOMMATE NEEDED! For June 1st. Large, furnished, two-bedroom (unfurnished bedroom). Near grocery + beer store! (Baseline/Navaho) $361.00/mo. inclusive. Call 224-2698.

Birth Mother searching for daughter born April 30, 1988.

Wellesley Hospital, Toronto. Call 905-686-4861 - Rochefle.

ALASKA JOBS: seam up to $30,000 in 3 months lashing salmon, halibut and herring. Also, construction, cannery, oil fields plus more. Call 1-504-641-1114 ext. A1377, 24 hours.

Seeking 2 bedroom apartment in Glebe to sublet. Moving June 1. Malcolm 567-3805.

FAST CASH: I need to photoboo legible 2nd term notes for History 24 233. If you can help me, you will have a lot of my gratitude and some of my money. Rebecca 731-7283

Are you unhappy or feeling down? A study is being conducted at U of O. If you are a married woman, between 26 and 45, and have a child, 8 to 12, living at home with you, we would appreciate talking to you. Participation compensated. For further information, call Dr. Whiffen or Ms. Kallos, 564-9461.

Distributors needed, all major cities in Canada, U.S., as well as UK and France. Unlimited potential. Products supplied by O.E.M. Manufacturing of Coleco, IBM, Texas Instruments, etc. Call 828-3150 for further information. Ask for E. O'Hara.

Residence students wanted for participation in a market research project. Qualified students who complete the 15 minute interview will be paid $10. Please call Joan at 226-1389 on April 5

SUMMER JOB OPPORTUNITIES across Ontario. Send your resume today. Call Student Networking @ 519-885-5077 to receive your free registration kit

Have you been harassed in residence? We are looking for cases of harassment and violence in rez - what happened, who were the perpetrators, how did housing and RRRA respond if they were informed. Were the incidents sexual, in response to your race, gender, sexual orientation, disability or religion? Anonymity is guaranteed. Leave information in Charlatan box REZ... Committee Combating Violence and Harassment.

Photographer needed for a Marketing Company during the 1994 Orientation week, Sept 6-10. Excellent pay, fun and good experience. Call Anton (519) 439-2900.

Summer JOBS: Full time or part time all over Canada. Must be eager to earn cash. Rush self-addressed stamped envelope for full details to: KD Enterprises, 475 Bank St B-81, Ottawa, Ont., K2P 1Z2.

Women's Rugby: The Nomads Rugby Club of Toronto is seeking players for its women's side for this summer. For more information, please contact the Nomads Hotline at (416) 466-3061.

SUMMER JOBS IN THE SUN! Marketing and printing positions now available for student printing company. Experience an asset, but not necessary. For information call Andrew or Bruce at 737-4039.

Can't see the forest because there are no trees? Greenpeace is looking for activists to educate & fundraise on environmental & peace issues. Mon-Fri 2-10pm. $220/wk + bonus. Call Lisa 582-1004

SERVICES/AVAILABLE

New! COLLEGE FINANCIAL AID services plus awesome income opportunities! 238-7544.

Tutor - Experienced tutoring in essay writing, study skills and exam preparation. Learn a fast, efficient approach to essay writing. Will do all forms of editing. Call Elaine at 233-5423.

Word Processing - fast, accurate laser printed student papers, resumes, letters etc... Metcal at Frank Rush jobs, call Christine 235-8973 (235-TYPE).

Earn up to $1000 weekly from home! Rush SASE to CLASIN, Dept. C, P.O. Box 53035, Ottawa, On., K1N 1C5.

French, all levels, one on one, personalized lessons (conversation, written). Jacques 234-0235

VANCOUVER - $200 each. One way by recognized airline - 256-0717.

INCREASE ENERGY/BURN FAT - What if there was a product that... does all this plus, reduces cravings, reshapes your body, promotes the growth of muscle tissue. For free info call 235-1542.

If you are "Law School Bound" call 1-800-BOUNDAWAY (1-800-266-6345).

Serious Money for Serious people! Will teach you to build an explosive home-based business now! Kiss student loans goodbye! Earn substantial income all year! Send resume PO Box 537, STN B OIL, K1P 5P6

Writing/Editing - Resumes/Letters/Etc. At prices students can afford. Half-hour free consultation. Laser printing. Tel/Fax: (813) 728-9565.

Guides Legal Consulting Affordable Paralegal Representation in Small Claims, Summary and Provincial Offences, Landlord and Tenant, Regulatory Matters, phone 24 hours, 786-6384.

Word processing. Accurate, professional, prompt, economical. Reports, essays, term papers, transcripts, theses. Reasonable editing provided and grammar corrected free 731-9534.

Legal problems? Landlord-tenant matters, small claims court, provincial offences (traffic court) & summary convictions. Call Jacquard Legal Services 247-1915.

Essays and Theses - laser printed - $1.60 per page. Also available - resume writing, editing, writing tutoring, charts, graphics & tables. Fax & pick-up service can be arranged. Please call 721-8770.

Word Processing, Accuracy and Deadlines Guaranteed Central Location. 233-8874.

MESSAGES/MISCELLANEOUS

J.E.M. my sincere apologies for not being able to meet on Wednesday. Didn't receive notice until Thursday. Please contact Sean, 723-5874.

Congratulations to Stephanie Leach, Kim Craig, Dawn Boess, Jill Deziel and Mandy Chaplin on their initiation in AOL! on Mon., March 21. The AOL's held their annual Rosa Ball on Mar. 26 (everyone looked great!) The President's Award went to Karen Anderson and Stephanie Aspler. The Founding Mother's Award went to Annahle Smith. The Big Sister/Little Sister Award went to Shana Farquhar-Fanth and the Yellow Rose Award went to Vanessa Kooter. All well-deserved - Congrats! To that gorgeous long-haired guy in 19.100A [you know who you are], meet us Monday Bam in the restaurant of the stars. Love, the Chips Raftery Fan Club.

MAN TO WOMAN

You are that cute red-headed girl who borrowed my pen at the library last Tuesday and who's been stuck in my head ever since. I wore jeans, a denim shirt, a brown leather jacket and needed a haircut. I didn't say much to you, but I wish I had. Box Longshot.

I showed you how to dive near the boards while your two friends joked around. I'll be at the pool, same time next week. I'm interested, would you like to go for dinner? Reply Box Dive Instructor

Hi, I'm a 3rd-yr law student who wishes to find a female for a casual relationship. If you're looking for an attractive, humorous and well-mannered date, then I'm perfect. Box LAW.

To the stunning woman with a pretty smile who was on the main fl. of the library Sat. 26. I watched your books, I'd like to get better acquainted. Can I interest you in a drink and conversation? Box Library Woman.

Too busy for investment in a deep relationship, yet sometimes want companionship? PRESTO-MAN is here! If you value equality, freedom, a caring special friendship could be yours. Box PRESTO.

Attached, mid-'30s, sensitive, caring man mated for life, is curious about a discreet intimate relationship. Have you these feelings too? Let's explore. Box Curious.

To the intriguingly attractive woman in my 3rd year psychology class. Are shared glasses enough? Not for me! I would like to meet you but I'm a little shy at first. Is that "abnormal"? What about meeting for a drink sometime? Box Interested If You Are.

WOMAN TO MAN

Pink bunny owner seeks blue bunny owner for fun and frolicking through the flowers. Blue dog owners need not apply. Reply box RABBIT.

To the short, goateed guy in my Constitutional class. This SWF would like to engage you in "stimulating" political conversation. Interested? Box POLITICS.

The Charlatan assumes no liability for the content or reply to any unclassified advertisement. The advertiser assumes complete liability for the content of, and all replies to, any advertisement and for any claims made against the Charlatan as a result thereof. The advertiser agrees to indemnify and hold this publication, Charlatan Publication Inc. and its employees harmless for all costs, expenses, liabilities and damages resulting from the publication placed by the advertiser, its agents, or any reply to such advertisement. The Charlatan reserves the right to revise, restrict or delete any advertisement or change the category in which the ad is placed.

Athletes of the year honored

Dustin and Kotler top athletes, Keegan and Charles best graduates

by Sarah Richards
Charlatan Staff

Ditch the smelly cleats. Toss the sweat-soaked jersey. Don a swank suit or glitzy dress, and prepare to play a game of a different kind.

Carleton's varsity athletes wined, dined and played the casino at the annual Varsity Athletics Banquet on March 24 at St. Anthony's Soccer Hall.

Athletes ate cannelloni and a tossed salad while awards like Most Valuable Player were handed out to individual teams. The night culminated in the awarding of the four top prizes: the male and female Athletes of the Year and the male and female Graduating Athletes of the Year.

Erica Kotler, a second-year student taking a combined honors in geology and physical geography, won the Ruth Coe Memorial Award as the female Athlete of the Year for her swimming performance at the Canadian Interuniversity Athletic Union national championships. Kotler beat her personal best in the 100- and 200-metre breast-stroke. Making the Olympic team is not out of sight, especially with the special coaching she receives, she says.

"I have a coach who has previously been in the position I'm in, on the verge of making an international team, and the other coach is my mother," Kotler said. "She's been there since I began swimming at nine years old. She knows me, she knows everything I need."

Wayne Dustin, who struck gold in all but one regional race he entered this year, was named the male Athlete of the Year. Duty called though, and Dustin was unable to attend the banquet. He was busy competing in the Canadian Cross-Country Ski Championships in Mont St. Anne, Quebec.

Kathy Keegan was named the female Graduating Athlete of the Year for her role in the women's soccer team 5-3-2 regular season record. Keegan's versatility in playing both striker and fullback led to her being named to the Ontario Women's Interuniversity Athletic Association eastern division All-Star team as co-captain. Keegan said she was shocked when she heard her name called out for the award.

"I was sort of talking to somebody,

Skier Wayne Dustin, basketball guard Taffe Charles and soccer player Kathy Keegan were three of the four big winners at the Varsity banquet.

then I heard 'two positions.' That was the word, because (soccer head coach Dave Kent) always said 'and she played two positions this year,'" said Keegan. "Then everybody around me was going 'Oh my God, Keegan, that's you.' And then they said my name."

Taffe Charles, basketballer extraordinaire, walked away with male Graduating Athlete of the Year award.

Charles led his team in offensive records, averaging 28 points and 10.4 rebounds per game. His talent earned him a spot on the Ontario University Athletic Association all-star team for the second year in a row.

"It's pretty gratifying," Charles said after the ceremony. "But at the same time, I like concentrating more on team goals than individual awards." □

It was definitely a quotable year

by Charlatan Staff

Another year of Carleton sports has come and gone. It hasn't always been pretty to watch, but there sure were a few memorable moments.

"We will win some games this year. I have no doubt of that. How many I can't predict, but we certainly won't go 0-7."

— Football head coach Donn Smith in May 1994 proved himself a prophet as the men's football team won two games this year and started on the road back to respectability.

"I've been coaching at U of T for 13 years, and this is the most talented team I've seen Carleton have. They have all the ingredients there. They just need a little seasoning to make them better."

— With comments like that, Toronto women's basketball coach Michelle Belanger is kinder than most critics. But then again, one can afford to be gracious when your team's just won 81-44...

"It's no fun being on a losing team. It's good being on a team, but then... when you look at it, what's the point really, if we're just getting killed every game."

— The losses kept piling up for the women's basketball team. They began to affect players on the team like co-captain Helen Collins, who made this comment after the 0-12 season was over.

"Their egos were inflated and they thought they could go out and win without playing the system that (coach) Sandie (Mackie) taught them. They wanted to play tippy-tappy football."

— Hey, when you're ranked among the top five in the country, you tend to get a little cocky sometimes. The Ravens men's soccer team did and paid the price, tying last-place Trent 1-1 in October. Assistant coach Hugh Campbell wasn't pleased.

"It's sometimes good when a team like Toronto gives us a good whipping. It brings them (the veterans) back down to earth."

Field hockey coach Suzanne Nicholson wasn't too upset when her team was trounced 16-0 by Toronto earlier this year.

"This is the best feeling in the world. We knew from the beginning of the season that if we played hard, we could get the job done."

— Rugby kicker Mike Rys put it best after the Ravens won the division two title in October. □

RANT 'N' RAVEN

Thanks for the memories

by Steven Vesely
Charlatan Staff

There have been times this past school year when those of us writing sports in The Charlatan have ranted on about the performances of various varsity teams here at Carleton.

We've bitched. We've whined. We've criticized. We've cried.

You get the picture.

But for this last issue, we just want to congratulate all those students, coaches and people involved in athletics at Carleton.

In particular, congratulations are in order for the following athletes who won awards at the 1994 awards banquet on March 24 at St. Anthony's Soccer Club:

Athlete of the Year

Female — Erica Kotler
Male — Wayne Dustin

Graduating Athlete of the Year

Female — Kathy Keegan
Male — Taffe Charles

Most Valuable Players

Men's Basketball
Taffe Charles
Women's Basketball
Heather McAlpine
Women's Field Hockey
Vicki Wilcox
Men's Football
Steve Szumlinski
Men's Rugby
Mike Rys
Women's Soccer
Corrine Van Ryckde Groot
Men's Soccer
Marty Lauter
Women's Volleyball
Sylvie Coutu
Women's Waterpolo
Anne Stacey
Men's Waterpolo
Allemander Pereira

Most Dedicated Player

Men's Basketball
Andrew Smith
Women's Basketball
Helen Collins
Women's Field Hockey
Suzanne Lachapelle
Men's Football
Harry Van Hofwegen
Men's Rugby
Mark Morrison
Women's Soccer
Kathy Keegan
Men's Soccer
Stephen Ball
Women's Volleyball
Laurie Malone
Women's Waterpolo
Jennifer Goldhar
Men's Waterpolo
Brian Young

It takes a special something to be a student athlete. Congratulations to all those who try. □

RAVEN YEAR END REVIEW:

OCAA BASKETBALL East Division Final Standings

	W	L	T	F	A	PTS
Laurent	10	2	0	024	950	20
Ryerson	9	3	0	023	923	18
Toronto	8	4	0	902	880	16
York	6	6	0	923	948	12
Ottawa	4	8	0	927	959	8
Queen's	3	9	0	904	969	6
Carleton	2	10	0	912	986	4

OCAA WATERPOLO East Division Final Standings

	W	L	T	F	A	PTS
Toronto	12	0	0	158	64	24
Western	8	4	0	148	102	16
Carleton	7	4	1	105	84	15
McMaster	7	4	1	133	88	15
Queen's	5	7	0	83	121	10
Ottawa	2	10	0	91	155	4
York	0	12	0	70	174	0

OCAA SOCCER East Division Final Standings

	W	L	T	F	A	PTS
Carleton	8	1	3	31	11	19
Toronto	8	1	3	24	8	19
Laurent	7	3	2	27	9	16
Queen's	6	4	2	29	15	14
Ryerson	2	8	2	9	27	6
Trent	2	9	1	9	37	5
York	2	9	1	9	31	5

OCAA RUGBY East Division II Final Standings

	W	L	T	F	A	PTS
Carleton	6	1	0	170	43	12
Laurier	6	1	0	164	44	12
RMC	5	2	0	98	73	10
Toronto	3	4	0	130	99	6
Trent	1	6	0	130	99	2
Brck	0	7	0	52	219	0

OCAA BASKETBALL East Division Final Standings

	W	L	T	F	A	PTS
Laurentn	10	2	0	024	950	20
Ryerson	9	3	0	023	923	18
Toronto	8	4	0	902	880	16
York	6	6	0	923	948	12
Ottawa	4	8	0	927	959	8
Queen's	3	9	0	904	969	6
Carleton	2	10	0	912	986	4

CIU FOOTBALL O-QIFC Final Standings

	W	L	T	F	A	PTS
Bishop's	6	1	0	176	91	12
Concord	4	3	0	148	142	8
McGill	4	3	0	158	136	8
Ottawa	3	4	0	114	109	6
Queen's	2	5	0	122	168	4
Carleton	2	5	0	94	166	4

MEN'S FOOTBALL

TIED FOR FIFTH OUT OF SIX TEAMS IN THE O-QIFC — MISSED PLAYOFFS
Record: 2-5 .400

Highs: Athletics hired former Ottawa Rough Rider Donn Smith hoping he would turn around an inept, moribund team and he did just that.

Despite a roster full of rookies, the Ravens showed they really could be competitive with other teams in the conference. The offence almost doubled its output from 94 from 44 and the defence allowed 71 fewer points in comparison to last year — a sure sign of improvement.

Lows: Hmmm, let's see. Despite the positives, the Ravens still tied for last in their conference and need work. A fumble in their own end zone with under two minutes left to play in a game against Concordia in October seriously jeopardized their playoff chances and highlighted their inexperience.

Quote: "We had a nice opportunity to win this game, but we let it slip away." — Coach Donn Smith after the Ravens collapsed in the fourth quarter of October's Panda Game, allowing three touchdowns to lose 21-3.

Synopsis: If it's true it's supposed to be darkest before the dawn, then the Ravens are finally seeing daylight. Sure, there were plenty of rookie mistakes made this season, but the Ravens are finally improving.

Grade: B-

FIELD HOCKEY

NINTH OUT OF 10 TEAMS IN THE OWIAA FIELD HOCKEY LEAGUE — MISSED PLAYOFFS

Record: 2-11-3 .219

Highs: Key members on the team were midfielders Suzanne Bird, who scored eight goals (over half of the team's 13), and team MVP Suzanne LaChappelle. The Ravens also tied York 0-0 on Oct. 25, for their first-ever point against the Yeowomen.

Lows: A lack of offence was evident this year, as the Ravens lost six games by one goal and missed the playoffs. A little internal team strife between rookies, veterans and the coach didn't help matters either.

Quote: "There must be more team unity and we have to get rid of the undercurrents of our problems this year." — Coach Suzanne Nicholson, commenting on the rift between some of her players.

Synopsis: This team is better than its record. Bird, midfielder Krista Wilson and link Vicki Wilcox all have provincial team experience and this year's rookies have a year under their belt.

If that nucleus comes back next year, a playoff berth ain't out of the question.

Grade: C-

MEN'S SOCCER

FIRST OUT OF SEVEN TEAMS IN THE OWIAA EAST DIVISION — LOST DIVISION SEMI-FINAL

Record: 8-1-3 .792

Highs: The Ravens avenged last season's division final loss to Laurentian with a 1-0 win over the Voyageurs in September's season opener. They never looked back after that, finishing first in the regular season for a second consecutive year.

Lows: The Ravens suffered a heart-breaking 3-2 shootout loss to the Queen's Golden Gaels in their semi-final playoff game in November. It was a shocker that brought tears to the eyes of many players and fans.

Quote: "We were a little overconfident, because we heard they weren't a strong team, and they had given up a lot of goals. Before the game players were saying they would score certain goals." — Forward Marty McCaffrey after the Ravens tied the last-place Trent Excalibur early in the year.

Synopsis: So they weren't perfect. They were still the team of the year at Carleton. They had talent, experience and desire. Whether that nucleus will stick around next year remains to be seen. Either way, the team will be hard-pressed to maintain its position as a division powerhouse.

Grade: A

WOMEN'S SOCCER

TIED FOR THIRD OUT OF SIX TEAMS IN THE OWIAA EAST DIVISION — LOST DIVISION SEMI-FINAL

Record: 5-3-2 .600

Highs: At 5-3-2, the Ravens posted their best regular season finish in their six-year history. Goaltender Kristina Bacchi, who had three shutouts, and rookie midfielder Nicole Maynard, who scored five of the team's 16 goals, were leaders on the team.

Lows: Despite the statistical improvement, the Ravens also lost their sixth straight division semi-final game 3-0 to the Laurier Golden Hawks.

Quote: "We were really pumped for this game and we really wanted to win as a team. York is a team known to have an attitude, to be a very cocky team and we wanted to show them." — Goaltender Kristina Bacchi after the Ravens humbled the first-place Yeowomen.

Synopsis: The Ravens need to aim higher. Six straight playoff appearances is good. Six straight playoff losses is bad. It's time coach Dave Kent stops rattling on about statistical improvements and leads his team to playoff success.

Grade: B-

MEN'S RUGBY

FIRST OUT OF SIX TEAMS IN THE OWIAA DIVISION TWO — LOST SEMI-FINAL

Record: 6-1 .857

Highs: The rugby team demolished the Trent Excalibur 33-0 in October to clinch the OWIAA second division for the first time since 1987. Seven members of team were deservedly named to the OWIAA all-star team.

Lows: Gee, they lost one game. Life's rough.

Quote: "We knew from the beginning of the season that if we played hard, we could get the job done." — Kicker Mike Rys after the Ravens clinched their division.

Synopsis: The Ravens have always been a competitive team in the second division, but now they'll have to play with the big boys. They probably won't have as much fun.

Grade: A

WOMEN'S VOLLEYBALL

LAST OUT OF SIX TEAMS IN THE OWIAA EAST DIVISION — MISSED PLAYOFFS

Record: 1-9 .100

Highs: The Ravens beat the Ryerson Lady Rams 3-1 in February for their first and only win this season. Middle Sylvie Coutu led the rookie team with 54 kills and 56 digs.

Lows: The Ravens tumbled from a best-ever, fourth-place finish at the provincial finals last year to missing the playoffs this year. Why? Mainly because only two members returned from last year's team. The loss of all-star setter Marilyn Johnson didn't help matters.

Quote: "With first-year players, your confidence can really take a beating at a tournament like this when you keep getting shelled." — Coach Peter Bionase after the rookie Ravens placed last at the Winnipeg Invitational in November.

Synopsis: This year's team was starting at square one so it'd be unfair to judge them until they've gained a little more experience. But next year, we'll be watching!

Grade: C

MEN'S WATERPOLO

THIRD OUT OF SEVEN TEAMS IN THE OWIAA EAST DIVISION — FOURTH IN THE PROVINCIAL FINALS

Record: 7-4-1 .625

Highs: The team allowed an average of seven goals per game — second best in

REMEMBER THE HIGHS AND LOWS

their high-scoring league. Drivers Corry Burke and Dave Bason paced the offence and were named to the OUAA all-star team.

Lows: The Ravens came out on the wrong end of a 12-11 double-overtime battle with the University of Western Mustangs in their semi-final playoff game and then lost 14-9 to Toronto in the bronze medal match in November. End result: no medal.

Quote: "There was nothing to be ashamed of." — Driver Dave Bason after a dramatic overtime loss dropped the Ravens into the bronze medal match.

Synopsis: Medal or not, the men's water polo team did well and with a strong core of rookies and veterans, should remain good for a while yet.

Grade: B+

WOMEN'S WATERPOLO

FIRST OUT OF FIVE TEAMS IN THE OWIAA — WON BRONZE MEDAL AT THE PROVINCIAL FINALS

Record: 7-1-1 .833

Highs: The Ravens won a medal for a seventh straight year at the provincial finals in February, persevering 16-14 in a triple-overtime bronze medal match against the McMaster Marauders in February. Driver Anne Stacey led the team with 22 goals and was named to the OWIAA all-star team along with teammates Stephanie Burgess and Jen Hampton.

Lows: The women's team was upset in the round-robin finals by third-place Queen's and fourth-place McMaster, ending any hopes they had of playing for the gold.

Quote: "It was an awfully long struggle." — Coach Steve Baird after the triple-overtime win against McMaster.

Synopsis: This is a team that consistently posts top-notch results. There's no reason to believe that will change next year.

Grade: A-

MEN'S BASKETBALL

LAST OUT OF SEVEN TEAMS IN THE OUAA EAST DIVISION -- MISSED PLAYOFFS

Record: 2-10 .166

Highs: The Ravens started their season right with road victories against Ottawa and Queen's. Forward Taffe Charles was second in the nation with a 28.0 points-per-game average. Rookies Reagh Vidito and Andrew Smith personified the scrappy work-ethic of the team on most nights.

Lows: Great start, poor finish. The men's basketball team lost 10 straight to end the season in March on a low note.

Quote: "I hate to say it, but the teams we beat weren't that great, but we'll take the wins anyway." — Guard Curtis Houlden after the Ravens won two pre-season games.

Synopsis: Offensive team leader Charles has one year of eligibility left and is expected to come back next year. With a little help from a more seasoned squad, the Ravens might stand a better chance at snagging a playoff berth — but don't bet on it.

Grade: C+

WOMEN'S BASKETBALL

LAST OUT OF SEVEN TEAMS IN THE OWIAA EAST DIVISION — MISSED PLAYOFFS

Record: 0-12 .000

Highs: Rookie forward Gillian Roseway was the biggest, if not the only, bright spot the team, leading the Ravens in six of seven offensive categories. The Ravens did get marginally better over the season, but not enough to even come close to winning a game.

Lows: The Ravens averaged 39.1 points per game, a 10-point drop from last year. Turnovers were another problem, with the team averaging one every 70 seconds. A lack of experience was also a cause for concern as four veteran starters didn't come back.

Quote: "I think what we needed was just one win to show that we can do something out there. But that never happened." — Rookie guard Gillian Roseway on the effort the team showed.

Synopsis: It's hard to believe the Ravens can get any worse. Or can they? Stay tuned.

Grade: D

NORDIC SKIING

MEN AND WOMEN WON SILVER AT THE ONTARIO CHAMPIONSHIPS

Highs: The medals just keep coming for both the men's and women's nordic ski teams. The Ravens extended their streak of finishing among the top three at the provincial championships for a seventh straight year. Newcomer Wayne Dustin placed first in five of six races and was named Carleton's male Athlete of the Year. The women's team, led by all-stars Kirsten Davis and Erin Long, surprised onlookers with an unexpected medal at the OWIAA finals.

Lows: Hmmm. Dustin placed second in the one race he didn't win.

Quote: "We've won silver every year since I came to Carleton. It's frustrating, but it could be a lot worse." — Veteran skier Frank Ferrari bemoaning the men's fifth straight silver medal result.

Grade: A+

FENCING

WOMEN'S FOIL TEAM WON BRONZE AT OWIAA CHAMPIONSHIPS, MEN DIDN'T QUALIFY

Highs: The women's third-place finish was their best in six years. Men's fencer Simon Pianarosa qualified in the individual sabre event at the provincial finals in March, placing 10th.

Lows: No men's team's qualified for the OUAA finals.

Quote: "I pulled a Browning." — Men's sabre fencer Simon Pianarosa after placing 10th at the OUAA east division finals.

More Quotes: "It was a really lousy weekend. It was a weekend they want to forget. It was the worst men's result in six years." — Fencing coach James Ireland after no men's teams qualified for the OUAA finals.

Grade: C+

SWIMMING

MEN 10TH OUT OF 15 TEAMS IN OUAA FINALS, WOMEN 12TH OUT OF 15 TEAMS IN OWIAA FINALS

Highs: Women's swimmer Erica Kotler won silver in the 200-metre breast-stroke and bronze in the 100-metre breast-stroke at the OWIAA finals. Kotler qualified for the CIAU nationals along with teammates Brigitte Davidson and Andrew Smith.

Lows: The water was cold.

Quote: "The training camps in 40 kilometres are legendary. They would do 40 kilometres in practice. We do five or six. You can't compete with that." — Swimmer Andrew Smith on the difference between Carleton's swim program and that of the University of Calgary's.

Synopsis: The Raven program consistently sends a team to the national finals on a small budget. Not bad.

Grade: B

ROWING

MEN SEVENTH OUT OF NINE AT THE OUAA FINALS, WOMEN EIGHTH OUT OF NINE AT THE OWIAA FINALS

Highs: The men's and women's teams placed six crews in the finals at the provincial championships in October. Their previous best had been one entry last year. The lightweight double crew of Rob Bennett and Trevor MacKay finished second in their final. The top women's result was a sixth place finish by both the lightweight and heavyweight four crews.

Quote: You've got to remember they were rowing against some pretty stiff competition. Some of those students out there are national team members. It's not like they were rowing somewhere in the Prairies." — Rowing coach John Ossowski explaining the relative progress Carleton made at the provincial finals.

Synopsis: With a new coach and renewed interest in the sport, rowing is making somewhat of a resurgence at Carleton. Let's hope the results keep improving.

Grade: B+

Raven Rumblings

OWIAA BASKETBALL East Division Final Standings

	W	L	T	F	A	PTS
Laurent	12	0	0	929	576	24
Toronto	10	2	0	856	596	20
Ottawa	7	5	0	803	720	14
Queen's	6	6	0	788	769	12
York	5	7	0	696	752	10
Ryerson	2	10	0	606	803	4
Carleton	0	12	0	469	931	0

OWIAA WATERPOLO East Division Final Standings

	W	L	T	F	A	PTS
Carleton	7	1	1	68	31	14
Toronto	7	1	1	72	28	14
Queen's	3	5	0	58	42	6
McMaster	2	6	0	42	70	4
Brock	1	7	0	30	99	2

OWIAA SOCCER East Division Final Standings

	W	L	T	F	A	PTS
Queen's	8	1	1	32	7	17
York	7	2	1	23	10	15
Toronto	5	3	2	22	7	12
Carleton	5	3	2	16	9	12
Trent	0	8	2	5	33	2
Ryerson	0	8	2	3	35	2

OWIAA FIELD HOCKEY East Division Final Standings

	W	L	T	F	A	PTS
Toronto	16	0	0	91	1	32
York	12	2	2	43	11	26
Guelph	9	5	2	28	16	20
Western	5	5	6	22	17	16
Queen's	6	6	4	20	24	16
Waterloo	6	7	3	23	24	15
McGill	4	8	4	16	27	12
Carleton	2	11	3	13	40	7
Trent	0	16	0	1	97	0

OWIAA VOLLEYBALL East Division Final Standings

	W	L	T	F	A	PTS
York	9	1	0	28	5	18
Toronto	8	2	0	28	8	16
Ottawa	6	4	0	20	15	12
Queen's	5	5	0	16	17	10
Ryerson	1	9	0	4	27	2
Carleton	1	9	0	4	28	2

Charlatan Hockey Pool

Here are the final point leaders in the Charlatan Hockey Pool. Points were tabulated as of Tue. Mar. 29, 1994. Regular season leaders can only win the dinner prize once. (Italicized names are former winners.)

BAXTER'S

1344 Bank Street
(at Riverside)
738-3323

Congratulations to Jason Ling, the final issue winner of the dinner prize. Jason can come pick up his $25 dinner certificates for Baxter's restaurant at The Charlatan.

Our final winner of the year is Patrick Soden. Come on up Patrick and see what we've got in store for you!

1	Patrick Soden	827
2	R. De Vecchi	813
3	Anjali Varma	806
4	Jason Beifuss	802
5	Vicki Mavraganis	800
6	Sujoy Bhattacharyya	796
7	Jeff Parker	796
8	Tyler Vaillant	788
9	Marc Aresenault	786
10	Jason Ling	786
11	R. Daggupati	786
12	Mike Whitton	785
13	Blair Sanderson	785
14	Joseph Kurikose	783
15	Alex Varki	783

Charlatan Sports Trivia

For those of you wondering who did play first base for the Expos last year, here are the answers.

1. Greg Colbrunn
2. Frank Bolick
3. John VanderWal
4. Oreste Marrero
5. Derrick White
6. Randy Ready
7. Archi Cianfrocco
8. Cliff Floyd
9. Lou Frazier
10. Larry Walker
11. Joe Siddall

How many Montreal Expos who played first base last year? Bonus dinner prize if you can name them.

We had 14 responses to last week's question of which five were correct on both questions. Our final dinner prize winner this year is Todd Butler. Come on up Todd for your two certificates.

Thanks to all of you who participated in the Charlatan Sports Trivia this year. This was the last question of the year. Hopefully, we'll be back next year.

Some of this country's most creative minds are in Canada's insurance industry.

They're the kinds of minds that know creativity goes far beyond art, literature or making movies. If you're like that, why not consider a career with Canada's property/casualty, or general insurance industry? The industry offers a wide variety of career choices for creative minds. Accountants yes, but also systems analysts, lawyers, managers, loss prevention engineers, investment specialists, investigators, marine underwriters, aviation adjusters and many more. The choice is yours.

General insurance is also an industry that encourages you to acquire its own levels of professionalism. As a Fellow or Associate of The Insurance Institute of Canada, you would join an educated, experienced and ethical group of professionals equipped to pursue successful careers at the local, provincial, national or even international level.

Choice, challenge, satisfaction and security. They are just some of the rewards you'll enjoy through a creative career in the property/casualty insurance industry.

For more information, look for your local Insurance Institute in the white pages or, contact Les Dandridge, B.A., A.I.I.C., at The Insurance Institute of Canada, 18 King Street East, 6th Floor, Toronto, Ontario, M5C 1C4 (416) 362-8586 FAX (416) 362-1126.

Canada's Insurance Professionals

The Graduates of The Insurance Institute of Canada.

Signing to a major can be hazardous to your health

by Rob Willbond
Charlatan Staff

Green Day
Foufounes Electriques, Montreal
March 23

They're young, they're cute, and they've just released their newest album, Dookie, on the Warner Reprise label.

With a full tour happening, appearances on Conan O'Brien, MTV, Much Music and Musique Plus, one might think Green Day was on top of the world.

Oddly enough, they're not.

The Charlatan went to Montreal to catch the California band's performance at Foufounes Electriques. Before the show, bassist Mike Dirnst was more than happy to share a few words about how the band is doing.

"Well it's been hard," said a tired-looking Dirnst. "To tell you the truth, we haven't been getting too much sleep this tour at all."

He pointed out their tour bus, an old bookmobile that drummer Tre Cool's father was driving them around North America in. "That's our home right now."

It seems odd that a band signed to a label as prestigious — and as rich — as Warner should be driving and sleeping in a bookmobile.

"So many people think we've just become a bunch of spoiled rich fools. In truth, we've lost more money than anything this tour. Warner wanted us to have high ticket prices, but that would have been too big a step for our fans. We managed to keep our prices as low as possible, but as a result we are losing thousands of dollars." That's the price Green Day is paying to stay loyal to their fans. (Cover for the Foufounes show was only $10.)

Before they signed to Warner, they were on the California-based Lookout

Records. Through their happy, guitar-driven sound and teen angst lyrics, they built an impressive fan base that was more than a bit surprised when they made the jump to the majors.

Dirnst is a compassionate person, very stricken by the way some fans have been reacting to their signing to Warner. "In one place, some losers were throwing beer bottles at us, calling us sell-outs. Selling out is compromising your musical intentions: we don't know how to do that."

"Look at them," he said of the abusive fans. "They all look the same: they want to own us or something. We're just being ourselves, doing our own thing."

The past little while has been rough on Green Day — close-minded fans giving them a hard time, financial troubles and little sleep. When asked why they put themselves through all the trouble, Dirnst replied differently than many fans would expect.

"Well, for one thing, we were getting too big for a label like Lookout to handle. Another thing was distribution. To get our records into Europe, we would have to sneak them in during tours. That was really bad because we were constantly at risk of being caught. (Signing to Warner) had nothing to do with Lookout; they are great people."

Recording for Warner was a change for Green Day. "We had more time and more money for Dookie, but it was still less produced."

Being on Warner is nice, said Dirnst, "because we'll be able to release things quicker. It's strange to do it this way."

To some, the angst-ridden lyrics present on Dookie and even their previous album Kerplunk seem out of place when one listens to the happy melodies of their songs. Compared to their old material on 39/Smooth, their lyrics seems to have gotten darker.

"Our perceptions have really changed. When this all began we were just 16-year-olds in a rock band singing about girls," said Dirnst, now 21. "Now I've seen so much. Friends have grown up and changed. Some have even died."

JASON UNRAU

Jump!

This realization has only added to the depression Dirnst has been coping with on the tour.

"The other night, after Conan's show, I was ready to get on a plane back to California. When we played his show we hadn't slept for two days. Then we had to play "Welcome to Paradise" over eight times because his crew kept messing up. "I love the band and the fans so much."

What we've been doing lately has really been testing that. I guess it's the feeling we get each night — from the people that really do care — that keeps us going."

It's too bad that many Green Day fans have turned their backs on them for signing to a major label, even though many major-label bands are just two-dimensional images for sale.

Fortunately, Green Day is not one of those faceless products. While many bands can't resist the trappings of the corporate bandwagon, Dirnst, Cool and guitarist/vocalist Billy Joe have maintained themselves quite well.

Providing low T-shirt and ticket prices isn't even a consideration for many major-label bands. Perhaps the close-minded underground should admire Green Day for dealing with a tough situation as best as they can. After all, they do care. □

Green Day bassist Mike Dirnst narrowly avoids getting his head crushed.

JASON UNRAU

This week:

We're Not Proud: Jobs We'll Probably End Up Holding This Summer

1. OC Transpo public relations assistant
2. Ottawa Citizen intern
3. Personal barber for Richard Stanton
4. Brow wiper for Lowell Green
5. Robin Farquhar groupie
6. Personal assistant to Dave Cooke
7. Executive assistant in charge of NDP re-election campaign
8. Corporate lackey
9. Director of french fry operations, McDonald's on Rideau Street
10. Lucy Watson impersonator for Balloon-O-Grams International

Thanks:

To everyone who wrote, drew, took photos, copy edited, etc. for the Arts section this year. You know who you are. You folks are the greatest. See ya.

NOW
14 DAYS!
TourPass
$169

There's probably an intercity bus going where you're going this Summer, and TourPass makes sure your ride is great value! Just $169 (plus tax) gets you 14 consecutive days of unlimited travel in Québec and Ontario between May 1st and October 27th.

INFORMATION — CONDITIONS
Montréal (514) 842-2281
Ottawa (613) 238-5900
Kingston (613) 547-4916
Toronto (416) 393-7911
 or call your bus Agency.

Voyageur

1994-95 RESIDENCE ACCOMMODATION

Residence applications for returning students for the 1994-95 academic year are now being accepted by the Department of Housing and Food Services. Returning students are those currently registered in full time studies at Carleton. To be eligible, students must achieve a passing grade on at least four full credits during the 1993-94 academic year. Further, a minimum Grade Point Average of 6.25 must be achieved over four credits.

Applications are available in the Housing Office, 261 Stormont House or at the Residence Desk in the Commons Building foyer. The deadline for applications is Friday, April 29, 1994.

ELECTIONS INFORMATION

The Election's Carleton staff would like to apologize to Parul Kumar for the misspelling of her name that occurred in the Election's Supplement on March 24, 1994. Her name was spelled Paul Kumar and should have read Parul Kumar. She is running for the position of CUSA Council Science representative.

We would also like to apologize to Bill Zrymiak for the misspelling of his name. The correct spelling is Zrymiak not Zymiak. He has been acclaimed for CUSA Council Engineering representative.

The want ads on the last page are incorrect and some of those positions have been filled. We apologize for any inconvenience this may have caused anyone.

We also apologize to Ernie Gibbs and Gerald Rao for not publishing their names in the supplement. They were both acclaimed for positions as CUSA Council Special Student representatives.

The voting days that were published in the supplement were incorrect and should have read Tuesday March 29, Wednesday March 30, and Thursday March 31. We apologize for any inconvenience that this may have caused.

The Election's Carleton staff apologizes to all students for having to punch holes in their student cards, but that is the only way we can verify that every student only votes once. If anyone has any suggestions as to how to avoid defacing student cards, we would like to hear them.

A special apology goes out to Peter Souw for the misspelling of his name on the ballots. We attempted to have the printer redo the ballots but they said that they could not have them done before the closing of polls on Thursday. Peter is receiving a letter from us to this regard. Again the staff at Election's Carleton apologizes.

LUNCH
MUNCH

DINNER

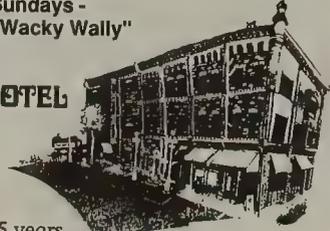

The LOCKMASTER LOUNGE

Join us for Great Food, Refreshment and Entertainment
 4 Large Screen TV's
 TSN and Satellite Dish for the best in sports
 Breakfast Menu served Saturday and Sunday til 4 pm
 Saturday and Tuesday - Wing Nights
 Live Entertainment Friday, Saturday and Sundays
 No Cover

White Wyne	Apr. 1, 2
Sweet Taboo	Apr. 8, 9
Conflict of Interest	Apr. 15, 16

Wednesdays and Sundays -
 Karaoke with "Wacky Wally"

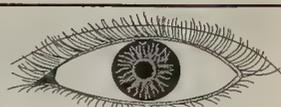

SOMERSET HOUSE HOTEL

In the heart of the city for 95 years
 A great, inexpensive spot for visiting friends
 352 Somerset St. W., at Bank
 Telephone 233-7762

A & E INSIGHT

Take your Generation X crap and shove it

by Susie Haley
Charlatan Staff

Well, those Baby Boomer bastards have done it again!

People like Saturday Night editor John Fraser are continuing to try and tell me that I am part of what they call "Generation X" — the voiceless generation, the nothing generation, the aimless, soulless, and ultimately goalless generation, with Douglas Coupland as our fearless leader. Well, thank you very much.

Last month, a movie called Reality Bites appeared on the scene. I saw it and I liked it (except for the last scene — kind of a cop out).

Then I started to doubt what I had just seen. Those paragons of virtue, the aging, balding Baby Boomers told me in reviews that the whole thing has been done already. "What's wrong with The Graduate, When Harry Met Sally, The Big Chill," they wrote.

I'll tell them what's wrong: "Those movies were your voice, not ours."

We are voiceless only because the Baby Boomers, who control the economy, the movie industry, the publishing industry, the newspaper industry, etc., etc., insist on denying the relevance of what our generation produces.

Every fantasy novel currently written is compared to Tolkien's; every travel/self discovery novel is compared to Kerouac's; protests are compared to '60s riots; songs are compared to Dylan's, Young's, the Dead's, Lennon's and the list goes on.

In short, everything They did was superlative, and we've been told since Day One that we'll never be as great.

"It's not like the '60s, by God, those were the days, eh," rant the Boomers. "We stopped a war, don't you know? We made those self-serving corporations crawl on their knees and beg for forgiveness, and so on, and so on."

Our generation has seen the enemy, which has evolved since the '60s. There is not only one war, there are dozens. Frogs are dying out there, folks, and with them the environment. The sexual revolution did more than liberate us, it turned us into the hop-in-the-sack-toss-out-the-phone-number-and-go-for-the-AIDS-test generation.

Their generation may have started to say something, but they got cut off in mid-sentence. "Damn the corporations! Stop the war! Equality! Justice! Peace! . . . and, yes, I'll take the blue BMW on the right, thank you — and shut those kids up, will you?!"

It's not that I'm blaming Them for our problems. I'm just asking Them not to be so damn judgmental and comparison-oriented. Don't name us before we've had a chance to make one for ourselves.

So what the hell is wrong with Reality Bites anyways?

They say the movie's inundated with references to material things. Vickie carries a Charlie's Angels lunch box, they all drink Big Gulps from the 7-11, they make references to '70s sitcoms like The Brady Bunch, and They seem to be disgusted and amazed by this. My friend kept pointing out to me that she had a lunch box just like Vickie's, and I still have my Charlie's Angels bubblegum cards — and my Star Wars ones, of course.

In the movie, there's Sammy, the gay guy; Lelaina, the idealist; Troy, the cynic;

Vickie, the sell-out; the McJobs; getting fired from a convenience store; dropping out of school 20 units short of a degree; being overeducated and underemployed; and questioning the ethics of our superiors. To some of us, this all sounds way too familiar. This IS how it is for some of us.

Not everyone in my generation will appreciate this film, but it says a hell of a lot more than Douglas Coupland, the so-called guru spokesman of our generation. As a friend of mine recently said in reference to the fact that Coupland's Generation X characters are having their identity crises in Japan, "If I could afford to get to Japan to have my crisis, it might not seem so bad!"

Helen Childress, writer of Reality Bites, is 23 or 24, and I trust her to describe my generation more than someone who's 32 and could have graduated from university when I was only 12! But, hey, the Baby Boomers have already appointed Coupland our representative.

In conclusion, I reject the mewling cries of the Baby Boomers; Their attempts to stifle us before we've had a chance to speak.

I leave you to ponder this, the latest voiceless polemic against the ruling generation, with a quote from the song Ethan Hawke sings on the Reality Bites soundtrack: "I ain't left, I ain't right/ People say I'm wrong/ Before I was born/ It was all gone/ Don't even make sense/ That I wrote this song/ Cause me you see/ I'm nuthin' / I'm nuthin'." □

Tim Pro.

By now, you've probably realized there's more to life than school. And that a job is only as good as the career it builds. We can help. We can give you the skills and financial knowledge to become an accounting professional: a Certified General Accountant. Our CGA program of studies can lead to better opportunities in business, government and public practice. If you're ready to make even more of yourself, call (613) 232-5363, or write to us at 222 Queen Street, Suite 302, Ottawa K1P 5V9.

We're accounting for the future in Ontario

CGA Certified General Accountants Association of Ontario

Ottawa's Meanest wings

only 25¢ each.
at

McGinnis
LANDING
Restaurant

every night after 9:00pm.

Monday: 2 for 1 beef fajitas
Tuesday: 20¢ wings
1896 Prince of Wales Dr.
723-2096
bus route 175

What evil lurks on the set of Sesame Street?

by Naomi Bock
Charlatan Staff

When I was four, I spent six months in Europe, and the only thing I remember clearly was the terrifying shock of Big Bird appearing red on German TV.

I ran screaming to my mother, who must have thought, "What did I do wrong — I thought if I only let her watch kids' shows, she'd be well-adjusted!"

Not so. If you think children's programs are wholesome, it's time to look a little closer. Rife with hidden messages, they've corrupted our generation.

I'm not talking about the old violent-deaths-of-Wile-E.-Coyote debate — at least that teaches kids to never give up, as well as the lesson that mail order products are rip-offs.

I'm talking about all those sweet, innocuous shows with calm, smiling hosts that look like they've been sniffing the arts and crafts glue.

Let's start with Mr. Rogers. A kind, trustworthy man, you think? Wrong. I mean, the first thing he does is take off his sweater. Yeah, sure, it's hot in here. Then he's all smiles and, "Let's take a train ride to a mysterious place, my little friend." I'd rather if you weren't my neighbor, thanks.

Moving on to Polka Dot Door, it's surprising our parents never voiced an objection to what we were watching. If that dotted door was on the house next door, they certainly would've asked, "What is going on in that house — different couples every week, all making use of a large kangaroo suit — smells like a sex cult!"

You can't get any more wholesome than a bunch of kids trying to be Just Like Mom, right? Not when it's a lesson in foul play. If you want to win, kids, you've got to cheat. This is manifested during the "Bake-off" segment of the game show. While the rest are blithely dumping everything into the cookie batter, one kid, with a look of studied dullness, is pouring only ketchup into hers. Later, her mom is smiling (that's suspicious already considering what she's just eaten) and saying, "My Katie just loves ketchup," as the bells and lights go off. C'mon, with a trip to Disney World up for grabs, did

If that dotted door was on the house next door, they certainly would've asked, "What is going on in that house — different couples every week, all making use of a large kangaroo suit — smells like a sex cult!"

you think they wouldn't have a plan?

If you're a Sesame Street purist and you think your beloved show is immune to all this corruption, you're wrong. Think of the ongoing torture of Big Bird never being able to prove Snuffalupagus to the rest of the gang. They might as well have been saying "Heh heh little kid, no one's going to believe you."

Then there's Today's Special: an attempt to recruit young boys into the men's movement. Boys, you'll never be free from the chains of women! All day, you must be a stony emotionless mannequin. Only with the magic cap (drums to follow) can you dance, sing, be anything. It also leads to bitter disillusionment for girls. Later in life, Sally will come home confused after her first date. "Mom, I don't know what to do about Chad. I took off his cap, but he still kept going on about how life is like a football game." And you thought finding out Santa's not real was a disappointment?

Oh well. There's always Fables of the Green Forest, with which I can find no fault. It shows we all began as little Clayoquoters, so maybe there's hope for our world yet.

It all makes you not want to know what's at the bottom of the tickle trunk, eh, boys and girls? □

SMALL BUSINESS ONTARIO

START A VENTURE
CREATE YOUR OWN JOB

BE YOUR OWN BOSS

As a student you'll probably be looking for a job next summer. You might be thinking about starting your own business but don't know how to get it off the ground.

The Ontario government has a program that can help you. It's called "Student Venture". And it offers Ontario students wishing to own and operate summer businesses a start-up loan of up to $3,000 interest free.

Applications and brochures can be picked up at your local Chambers of Commerce, Boards of Trade, Business Self-help Offices and at your guidance or placement office.

Or you can call us on our Youth Hotline at

1-800-387-0777

We can give you all of the details.

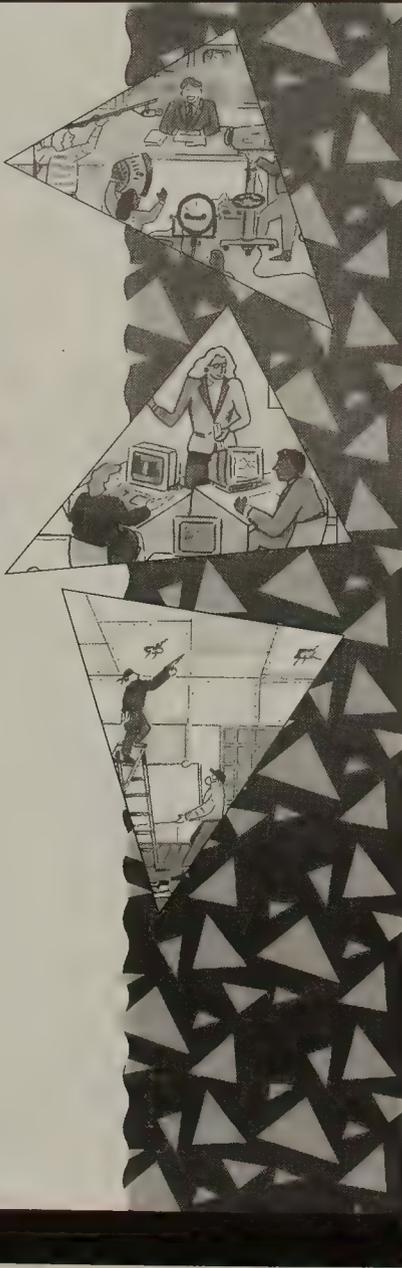

STUDENT VENTURE

Contributing to future successes by building business skills today.

Student Venture is a program sponsored by the Government of Ontario, in cooperation with the Royal Bank of Canada, the Ontario Chamber of Commerce and local participating Chambers of Commerce and Boards of Trade.

Information disponible en français.

The Ottawa Schitizen...
Thursday March 31st, 1994

Music I really like a lot

Thanks to all the people who wrote in expressing sympathy for my loss of hearing, which happened about two weeks before I started this job. I thought I had kept it a secret, but somehow you all knew.

Fumacehead is one unknown local band you'll be hearing a lot of. This local band mixes heavy metal and reggae in a unique and alternative way. Lead horn player John Steward is very recognizable, since he has done something really strange to his hair. He says the local scene has really grown as of late, no thanks to the Schitizen. (YOU IDIOT, TAKE THIS PART OUT -ED.)

They will be playing at Zaphod Beeblebrox this Thursday. I won't be there.

I'll be listening to the NAC Orchestra.

COMMENT

Sound Chunks

Dymm
Saxhead

There's a new sound out there that will be hitting town this weekend. Rage Against the Machine combine insightful punk rock lyrics with a mellow, almost folk sound. These guys are notorious in the music industry for doing things their own way and not selling out, no matter how much money record companies offer them. They're playing Friday night at Denim and Diamonds.

"I need some drugs. I need some drugs." After saying this, it didn't look like Fugazi's Ian MacKaye would be up for a coherent interview. All I wanted was some quotes describing his influences and what his band sounds like.

"Well," he said after I offered him a hit from my bong. "We're kind of a mix of jazz, hardcore, hip hop, doo wop, bebop and ska. But we're totally original."

They're also very alternative and I hear that they're big with the kids. They're playing this Saturday at Yucatan Liquor Stand. Tickets cost $25, but you have to be 19 to get in. They'll also have some cool T-shirts for sale at the door.

Ratings don't bode well for local station

OTTAWA FUZZ

BY DAVID RAINMAKER

You know, some people say there isn't enough arts happenings in this pathetic government town to fill a gossip column, and they're right. Even if there were, you wouldn't hear about it here. I just print whatever people fax me. Hey, it's a living.

The springtime radio ratings are in and the big news concerns CHEEZ 106. This FM station, rated number one only a few years ago, has slipped to number 106 in a 17 station market. CHEEEZ finished behind all AM, FM, overseas shortwave stations and this guy who stands at the corner of Dalhousie and Rideau every morning and yells, "Duck!"

Station head Chuck Armadillo blames the drop on the station's recent format change.

Says Armadillo, "We were doing okay with classic rock, but I guess deciding only to play Queen's 'Another One Bites The Dust' was a bit too much. But we still like that classic rock."

In the television ratings game, NBC has fired late night talk show host Conan ("I used to write for The Simpsons") O'Barbarian. NBC execs say his ratings were so bad that rats mating in a cage could have done better.

In an effort to replace the hapless O'Barbarian, NBC has decided to give everyone who lives in North America and can read at a Grade 2 level a shot at hosting the show.

"Conan really bit," one executive was quoted as saying. "We can't imagine that Joe Punchclock or Sally Lunchpail could do any worse."

Zaphod Beeblebrox, that wacky club with the wacky name, has announced a slight format change. In order to accommodate people like Ottawa Schitizen columnist Floosie Riledup, the club has decided to start live bands at 2 p.m., with dancing to follow at 3 p.m. The club will also be booking only Top 40 bands from now on. Local rock diva Alanis will kick off the changes on April 1. Says one of the co-owners, "We're doing it for the fans."

Zaphod's will ring out the old format March 31 with an interesting-sounding non-musical event. It's being dubbed as Ottawa's answer to the WWF and it will feature Lowest of the Low and some bad-assed bouncers. Be sure to wear red.

In an attempt to sound like I can relate to today's alternative music scene, here's a cool singer to check out. I'm told that Anne Murray is a singer from the East Coast who sounds a bit like Sloan. She's coming to town soon, so check her out.

Chalk it up to cough syrup, several vodka shooters and way too many Doritos. Despite what I reported in last week's Ottawa Fuzz column, Beethoven is not opening up for Fugazi next week. It turns out that the German composer has been dead for about 350 years.

The Bytowne Cinema has just announced the Steven Spielberg Comedy Festival. According to the fax, it features all the great director's comedies, from The Color Purple to Schindler's List. Should be fun.

Wednesday, March 31, 1994 the Ottawa Y BOTHER

Presenting the Charlatan's three-column Parody Pak!

More fun stuff on page 34!

over my Oh, by the way: DEAD!
Cracker is the official band of
The Charlatan. BODY! -mp

Study on the French Riviera

Earn up to one full year transferable Canadian university credits on a Canadian-campus near Nice.

The Université canadienne en France offers courses in English or French. No French language skills necessary. Three semesters: Fall (September to December); Winter (January to April); Spring (May to June, six weeks.) Federal and Provincial student aid available. In Ontario phone 1-800-461-4030 Outside Ontario collect (705) 673-6513

Oui! Please send more information!

Name _____

Address _____

City _____

Province _____

Postal Code _____

Telephone _____

For more information contact the Université canadienne en France, Laurentian University Sudbury, Ontario P3E 2C6

An exhibit that shouldn't be missed

by Joanne Capuani
Charlatan Staff

Natures Mortes
Gallery 101
March 17 — April 15

The dissecting room of Concordia University was the perfect place for her to begin her artistic career.

Sophie Jodoin, Montreal-based artist and a former fine arts and medical student at Concordia University, leaves her mark in her first Ottawa exhibition.

Looking at the works on display, one can't help but recognize remnants of her past training at work. Jodoin admits that the year she spent studying anatomy and pathology is reflected in her art.

"I'm always working with the body, the play of death and sleep," she says.

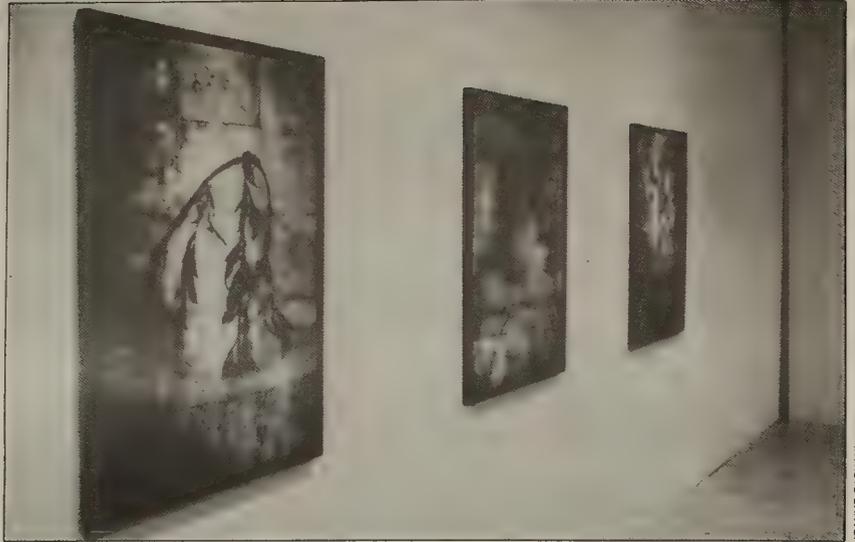

From the jaundiced faces of her subjects to the dangling feet of a lifeless Christ-figure, Jodoin's preoccupation with death and the passage of time are evident.

Weathered black and white photographs and washes of earth-toned oil paint allow her work to resemble authentic 19th century sepia-colored photos. Jodoin's grid method — projecting a slide on a mural grid pattern, taking photos of the individual sections, and reassembling them into the final product — also provokes images of Western European cathedrals' lavish mosaics.

But in Natures Mortes it is not flickering gold tiles that grab your attention. Rather, it's the warm image of women contrasted with a disturbing image of an unconscious man.

It's the photo of a voluptuous woman hidden behind dry ivy branches (which resemble barbed wire): angelic yet provocative. It's the mystery looming behind the Creature of Darkness, a withdrawn beauty with blackened hair and lips, chalk-white flesh and a dark rosary weighing down her neck.

Some of Jodoin's Art.

Jodoin's 11 pieces have a distinct aesthetic beauty to them. Sometimes, though, the realistic, high photographic quality of her work can bring on the nauseous feeling one gets when standing over a cold corpse in a funeral home.

There is also an eternal feeling that surrounds Natures Mortes. As one turns and faces the photos on every side of the room, the viewer becomes part of the timeless nature of Jodoin's work; although the photos look like they're deteriorating and the leaf stems that are the subject of some photos look like they're withering away, they are all preserved under the layers of oil paint.

Jodoin also draws a close link between time, humankind and nature. Jodoin says, "I think I started to use nature or plants as a fragment because I would like to convey with the plant itself the same emotions that you could put through a person."

Sometimes the withered leaf says more about a resigned woman than the fact that she wears no clothing. This is what Jodoin means when she says, "I could portray through a plant as much sadness, voluptuousness, because I see it as a living thing. It has its sexuality. For me, it's like a human being."

True enough. Human beings do wither away and fall apart like any old plant.

Like the family album photographs that we pass on from generations, Natures Mortes is an awe-inspiring piece of work. □

CANADIAN SELF STORAGE

SUMMER STORAGE FOR STUDENTS

- ★ FREE RESERVATIONS
- ★ INDIVIDUAL UNITS
- ★ SECURITY PATROLLED

FROM $45 PER MONTH

CALL 72-STORE

VISA

Cleopatra at Hunt Club
727-8673

FARES TO EUROPE

dublin $769

london $499

frankfurt $589

zurich $649

vienna $659

madrid $729

barcelona $729

amsterdam $559

brussels $559

paris $398

stuttgart $619 from Toronto

lyon $499

nice $589

rome $809

More Cities Available!

Flights are from Montreal, Ottawa Available

Taxes not included. Prices are for low season and subject to availability. See us for details.

TRAVEL CUTS 1st level Unicentre, Carleton U. 238-5493
1 Stewart St. Ottawa, 238-8222

The Travel Company of the Canadian Federation of Students

Northwestern College of Chiropractic

is now accepting applications for its next three entering classes.
(September 1994, January 1995, April 1995)

General requirements at time of entry include:

- Approx. 2-3 years of college in a life or health science degree program.
- A minimum G.P.A. of 2.5. A more competitive G.P.A. is favored.
- A personal interest in a career as a primary care physician.

Northwestern offers:

- A professional school of 500 students with student faculty ratio of 12:1.
- A well-rounded education in Basic and Clinical Sciences, Diagnosis, X-ray, and Chiropractic.
- Full accreditation by North Central Association of Colleges and Schools and the Council on Chiropractic Education.

Call: 1-800-888-4777 or

Write: Director of Admissions

2501 West 84th Street, Minneapolis, MN 55431

DISCOGRAPHY

Crow
My Kind Of Pain
 Half A Cow/Cargo

Believe it or don't, but this isn't another heavy metal band.

The title My Kind Of Pain, in conjunction with the album's cover, may give one the impression that this is very evil music, but that's not the case.

What you'll get upon listening to this CD is something that sounds like Evan Dando's Lemonheads on a bad hair day: their outlook on the world is just slightly darker than Dando's.

That's not a bad thing. Peter Fenton's gloomy voice and the band's jangly guitars mix perfectly together.

Rating: pretty cool.

Blayne Haggart

That Dog
That Dog
 DGC/Cargo

Cute band alert!

Sorry, but it's true. You'll have to look long and hard to find a band that looks so damn normal and happy and still manages to play a mean guitar and viola.

Lest the listener be scared off by the thought that this may be just another cheesy band that throws snippets of classical string instruments into an otherwise electric soup, rest assured this is not the case.

Some songs like the lead-off track "Old Timer" are the usual female vocals and loud guitar à la Velocity Girl. Other songs like "She Looks at Me" put the aforementioned string instruments front and centre, while the electric guitars stay in the background.

As for the subject matter . . . love, music, MTV. They're not exactly deep, but who cares? They sound good and that's all that counts.

Happy, fun and safe.

Blayne Haggart

Marillion brave
 EMI

For fans of Marillion, the departure of lead singer Fish is akin to the birth of Christ for Christians. Both sects describe their religion in terms of before and after.

Marillion's 1988 upheaval evoked panic from longtime followers, who questioned whether a new singer could work.

Fish's undeniable gift of poetry and his unique voice blended perfectly with the progressive musical aspirations of the musicians. As his successor, Steve Hogarth deserves credit for knowingly treading such sacred ground.

After Fish's departure, Marillion abandoned their "concept" album approach in favor of a mix of commercially viable intelligent rock. Needless to say, the next two albums bombed. Even hardcore fans were loath to buy them — not only was their genius gone, but the acid of their songs was now pabium.

Marillion has sought the safety of a concept work for this, their seventh album. A few years ago, a woman was found walking naked with amnesia on a London bridge. brave is the band's speculation as to what events took place for her to be in this position.

brave is Hogarth's attempt at 1985's Misplaced Childhood, but comparisons to Fish are defeatist. Nonetheless, Hogarth's simpler lyrics occasionally contain truths that strike a chord. When revisiting the traumas of childhood in "Living With the Big Lie," Hogarth's evaluation is astute: "I was terrified most of the time/I never got over it/I got used to it."

Musically, days of untamed experimentation are gone, but lush movements creep in the umbrars between songs. The unfortunately titled "Living With the Big Lie" moves just as pleurably as "Alone Again in the Lap of Luxury." Those looking for a song of betrayal will relish "The Last of You" is powerful despondency.

Maximum enjoyment of brave requires a great deal of familiarity with the lyrics, a comfortable bed, nightfall and solitude.

brave is not the Messiah, but it's exquisite in its own way.

Stephanie Garrison

Beastie Boys
Some Old Bullshit
 Grand Royal/Capitol

At least they got the name right. Despite having the Beastie Boys' name attached to this album, there's nothing worth listening to on this cassette.

Some Old Bullshit was recorded circa 1981 when the Beastie Boys were a shitty New York, one-chord-no-waiting punk rock outfit. Listening to this album, you would never guess that the Beasties would become the musical innovators they are today.

The history in the liner notes is interesting, but hey, you can photocopy those off a friend. If you must own this album because it has the Beastie Boys' name on it, do so. Just don't play it.

Blayne Haggart

The Connells
Ring
 Cargo/MCA

The Connells bring you feel-good guitar chords and head-nodding melodies from North Carolina.

Brothers David and Mike Connell are the backbone to the group, playing bass and guitar/vocals respectively as well as contributing to the production of the album. George Huntley, Doug MacMillan, Peele Wimberley and Steve Potak make up the rest of the band.

Songs like "Slackjawed," "74-75" and "Doing You" are the epitome of the '70s guitar revival with a '90s kick.

This album will bring together Steve Miller Band lovers and Crowded House fanatics. Warning: the songs appear to be light at first, with bubbly guitar chords, but the lyrics are chock-full of dark ideas.

Ron Orlo

Course of Empire
Initiation
 Zoo/BMG

After listening to Initiation, you can almost imagine how this album came to be.

Picture this: The Seattle sound has just hit the airwaves and the guys in Course of Empire are sitting around trying to plot the musical direction of their band.

At this point, these guys are a wild hair band on a quest to become the next Poison or Whitesnake. But now the plaid-shirt invasion has hit and all the record executives are ignoring Course of Empire's powerballads, special effects-driven concerts and bad make-up.

"We need to change our image; our sound!" cries disgruntled vocalist Vaughn Stevenson.

So the band goes through this transition period and releases Initiation; an exploration of the pseudo-grunge sound. Some songs have a Soundgardenesque quality and there are hints of Rage Against the Machine thrown in. Now the labelling connoisseur will say that Rage isn't grunge, but aren't they popular with the kids now too?

So beware of Course of Empire, because underneath the web of distorted guitar, throbbing bass and moaning vocals lies the subdued beast of heavy metal shit.

Jason Unrau

Charlatan year-end Top Ten This is what you should be listening to this summer:

1. Cracker
Kerosene Hat
2. Bjork
Debut
3. Luscious Jackson
In Search of Manny EP
4. Me Mom and Morgentaler
Shiva Space Machine
5. A Tribe Called Quest
Midnight Marauders
6. Black Boot Trio
PonyRide
7. Spirit of the West
Faithlift
8. James
Laid
9. Mushroom Explosion
Who Cares?
10. Breeders
Last Splash

I Love You
 All of Us
 Geffen

It was a dark and stormy night, three years ago, when a smoky Toronto club first felt the sonic raid of I Love You.

The innocent moniker belied the band's penchant for blowing stacks while playing some of their louder songs. Live, they ruled.

Impressed with the show, a pal picked up their first tape a few days later. It sucked.

All of Us, their second release, isn't any better.

Impossibly enough, there is a band musically more annoying than Blind Melon, and twice as radio-friendly.

Those of you who've done acid and like '70s sitcoms, stay clear of this album. By the second track, it induces melting flashbacks of the Partridge Family and guys with grungy hair doing that sixties dance where they point their fingers and gyrate spastically.

Derivative is too gentle a term for All of Us. Run away screaming.

Stephanie Garrison

ARE YOU A COLLEGE OR UNIVERSITY GRADUATE?

Algonquin College, Pembroke Campus is now accepting applications for the new Environmental Studies Program scheduled to start on August 29, 1994.

This one-year program is for graduates of post-secondary college or university programs in natural sciences, resources management, engineering, business, public relations or communications.

The Environmental Studies Program is designed to give students an increased understanding of the dynamics of natural environments; management strategies to minimize detrimental impact on natural and human environments; and biological, physical, social, and economical implications of environmental management decisions.

For more information on the Environmental Studies Program, please contact:

Dr. Kim Clark - Co-ordinator
 613-735-4704/735-4700

ALGONQUIN

315 Pembroke Street East
 Pembroke, Ontario, K8A 3K2

Charlatan Parody Pak cont'd.

Hey Kids!

It's the Charlatan-O-Matic!

Ever read The Charlatan and figure, "A trained monkey could write these stories?" Well, here's your chance. As a public service, The Charlatan presents the Charlatan-O-Matic™ (patent pending). With this handy guide, even the most literarily challenged engineering student can write for The Charlatan.

Bad and nasty things happen on campus

by Brent Dowdall
Charlatan Staff

- Another complaint has been filed with
- a. CUSA
 - b. the Pepperswill
 - c. the Gay, Lesbian and Bisexual Centre
 - d. Zaphod Beeblebrox

because an excessive amount of

- a. hair care products
- b. wild beagles
- c. cash
- d. spit
- e. Swedes

was (were) discovered in

- a. René Faux Chez's hair.
- b. the salad bowl.
- c. the bag of pot in the Charlatan production manager's desk.
- d. Oliver's.

Cartoon Women's Centre coordinator Renée Waddle said,

- a. "This is an affront to all women."
- b. "You can't safely walk around campus at night."
- c. "It's all the fault of white men."
- d. "Whaddya think of my hair?"

The

- a. hair care products
- b. wild beagles
- c. cash
- d. spit
- e. Swedes

caused several people to

- a. have delusions of godhead.
- b. almost enjoy the bus ride home.
- c. fantasize they were Loopy Watson's riding crop.
- d. think they were actually Birch Riordon, wine connoisseur.

The issue was raised at CUSA council, where

- a. John Onwards dropped his pants and showed his manhood to all.
- b. everyone was well behaved and civilized.
- c. nothing much was accomplished.

Because of the sensitive nature of the discussion, the matter was taken in camera, where sources say

- a. there was a "rutfest."
- b. the executive got pissed on tequila shooters on the CUSA balcony.
- c. John Onwards was sentenced to receive a "Wet Willie."
- d. bad things were discussed.

Loopy Watson could not be reached for comment because she was

- a. wintering in the Caymen Islands.
- b. on a two-week all-grrrl road trip to Florida.
- c. out of the office until Wednesday.
- d. trapped under something heavy.
- e. in the bathroom, on the phone with René Faux Chez.

When she was finally reached for comment, Watson said,

- a. "Huh?"
- b. "I can't comment on that because of the ongoing court case."
- c. "I don't care. I'm not having a good day. Go away."
- d. Nothing, because she was on the phone with René.

The Institutional Socialists responded to this anti-proletarian action by saying,

- a. "Smash the state!"
- b. "Smash the state!"
- c. "Smash the state!"
- d. "I hope my welfare cheque shows up today."

As usual, The Charlatan condemns this atrocity because

- a. it's not politically correct.
- b. our sense of humor was surgically removed.
- c. we just want to be loved. Is that so wrong?
- d. it's Wednesday. We've been up all night and we really, really need to fill space.

Section

C

Ottawa Schitzzen Thursday, March 31, 1994

Don't bother reading this

COMMENT

Floosie Riledup

Dear God, has it finally come to this? I just couldn't come up with a topic for my column today.

It's not like it was back in the sixties. Back then I was full of ideas, spluttering with rage and disrespecting my elders.

And I was good at it. Look where I ended up: writing for the Schitzzen, one of the best Southam papers in town.

And I'm making a difference. I'm exposing all my loyal readers to challenging ideas about feminism, the military-industrial complex, how the world has too many numbers for me to remember and how hard it is for me to get up in the morning since Ottawa's nightlife starts too damn late.

But enough about my ideas. Let's talk a little more about me.

You know, people often come up to me at church socials and ask me, "Floosie, how do you manage to write columns week after week about nothing at all? And why do you rarely use secondary sources?"

To answer the second question first, well, going out to interview people is a task and a half, so I usually just use quotes that come to me, like the one above.

The answer to the first question is simple. If you're incredibly self-involved, all you really care about is yourself. And what happens to me may not concern anyone else, but who cares? I get paid to write this column, so there.

Apart from myself, my other greatest concern is how come these noisy little snots that we're raising today are so much worse than kids were when I was growing up. In the sixties we knew how to act. We rebelled against society and smoked lots of good pot.

Today, all the kids whine about is how the environment is being destroyed and how they can't afford an education even if they work 30 hours a week at Wal Mart, which is a great organization.

And they also complain about how Boomers like myself are basically deadwood blocking up jobs and using up precious oxygen. I wish they'd all just shut up. Why can't they accept that things were better back in the sixties?

And they were too. The air was better. The drugs were better. The music was better.

I can't believe the crap that kids listen to today. I mean, I think I like the concept of a band like Jane's Addiction more than the music itself.

Okay, only a few more inches to go. What can I talk about? Maybe I could list off all the bands I don't like. Yeah, that should do it.

Here goes: Nirvana, Tragically Hip, Cracker, Lemonheads, Counting Crows (although that "Mr. Jones" song is kinda catchy). These bands are nothing compared to real music like the Rolling Stones and Dylan.

Almost done. Maybe I'll just reiterate how great the sixties were and what a great person I am.

And there you go. I've done it. I've filled up another column with mindless, pointless drivel. Sometimes I amaze myself.

Oh look, it's payday. Yessiree. Gonna jump in my car. Mama's got a date with Rideau Carleton Raceway.

Oh God, I love this job.

A ACCEPTABLE ALTERNATIVE MINI STORAGE

Hume Trading Company Limited
MINI STORAGE SPACE

Going home for the summer? Need safe, clean, secure storage for your desk, furniture and personal items? From $20.00 per month. 4863 Bank St. Call 822-7666. Lowest rates in the region since 1963.

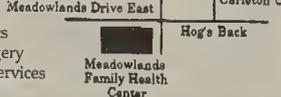

Meadowlands Family Health Centre

Hog's Back Plaza
888 Meadowlands Drive East
corner of Prince of Wales Dr. and Meadowlands Dr.
(behind McDonald's)
Ottawa, Ontario K2C3R2
228-2882

Family Medicine Pediatrics
Adolescent Medicine Minor Surgery
Obstetrics and Maternity Care Counselling Services

Nous Parlons Français

Open 7 days a week With or without appointment
Weekdays 8AM to 8PM
Weekends / Holidays 10AM to 6PM

DRIVERS

TAKE OR OFFER
A RIDE!

PASSENGERS

MONTREAL $10*

QUEBEC $29

TORONTO $24

SHERBROOKE $25

VANCOUVER, FLORIDA & OTHERS...

- *PRICES PER PASSENGER
- $6 FOR MEMBERSHIP
- 15 OFFICES
- I.D. REQUIRED

238 DALHOUSIE
562-8248

ALLO STOP

TORONTO 531-7668 — MONTREAL 985-3032

LONG DAY IN THE UNIVERSE

THURSDAY, MARCH 31 THROUGH SUMMER, 1994

Thursday, March 31

Cha Cha's Playpen at Zaphod's features the loud musical stylings of local bands Deadbeatdads and Cowpint. Cover, as always, is only a dollar.

Friday, April 1

Relive the magic! Sister Act 2: Back in the Habit (Geddit? -ed.) plays at the Mayfair tonight at 7 p.m.

Come on down to the Penguin tonight for Jimmy George's CD release party. Cover is $6.

Local folks Rebo, Schneider and Zykotic K9 are putting on two shows tonight at the Pit. They're playing an all-ages show at 7 p.m. and a licensed one at 9 p.m. Be prepared for loudness.

Saturday, April 2

Cincinnati's Afghan Whigs land at Zaphod's this evening. These guys are amazing. Don't miss this show. Tickets are $12 at the door.

Opera Lyra Ottawa presents Puccini's Tosca. It's playing at the National Arts Centre Opera today, Monday and Wednesday at 8 p.m. Students get a special discount with a student card. Bring yourself and your card to the Arts Court and pick up a ticket for $15. You must be over 19 and you must pick up your tickets in advance.

Ottawa's Wooden Stars, who regularly wow them in Toronto, play the Pit tonight, with opening band Head Travellers.

Sunday, April 3

Study, you fools, study! After you've gone to church and eaten your chocolate, that is.

Monday, April 4

If you're in Toronto, head on down to the El Mocambo and check out Liz Phair. Tickets are $12.

Tuesday, April 5

It's a pay-what-you-can benefit for Amnesty International tonight at 8 p.m. at Rooster's. Look forward to folk and world music courtesy of Marlene MacDonald, Voodoo Angelfish, Raja and Sylvia, Ember Swift and "Flip" Wilson. There will also be an open stage.

Usually Charlatan production manager Kevin McKay would fill this space with a handy book tip. Unfortunately he has informed us that he is really tired and old, so in his place, outgoing editor-in-chief Mo Gannon is filling in. Minutes before she walked off into the sunset, Gannon yelled out, "Read anything by that Douglas Coupland guy! He's a master!"

Wednesday, April 6

It's the comedy event of the decade! The Kids In the Hall are at Centrepointe Theatre this evening. There are two shows, at 7 p.m. and 10 p.m. Tickets, if there are any left, are a staggering $26.50.

Paris, France, a Canadian film that raised eyebrows at Cannes for its, um, sexuality, is showing at the Mayfair tonight and tomorrow. Today's showing starts at 7:05, tomorrow's gets underway at 7 p.m.

Thursday, April 7

Before you all head out to write your exams, here's a Charlatan snack tip to keep you well fed. Hodges's Midnight Snack™ will keep you going long after the caffeine stops working. Take one can of condensed tomato soup. Open the can and dig in with a spoon, although, come to think of it, a fork would work well too. It is recommended that you add a few drops of lukewarm water to get rid of the soup's waxy flavor.

Friday, April 15

It's an arena concert out in Carleton Place. Playing the luxurious Carleton Place Arena are Almonte rockers Generic with pals Bufflehead and Seventh Child. Tickets are $6 at the door. It's an all-ages event and the show starts at 8 p.m.

Summer, 1994

Here's a quick list of things to do: Lollapalooza., drunken Canada Day celebrations, the Jazz Festival, relaxing in your bath tub.

The Kids In The Hall, live and in person at Centrepointe Theatre April 6.

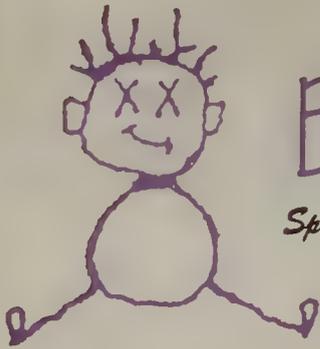

FABULOUS VACATION GETAWAY WINNERS

- Atlantis Beauty Spa: Sharon Hurdman
 - Select Roses: Serge Mainville
 - A Touch of Sun: Leeann Russell
Marcia Wright
John Baird
 - Myers: Doug Hum
 - Cachet: Doug Hum
 - Wet & Wild Spas: Nick Hasbani
Tracey Bedard
 - Grand Central: Kay Lee
 - Oliver's: Lisa Dagenais
 - Mustang Sally's: Brenda Hines
- Congratulations to all winners
Look for The Charlatan's next trip give-away in September

That's it for another year, kids. I'm going back to the family business. You'll all have to fend for yourselves this summer

P.S. MO IS THE BEST, MOST SMART AND CAREING EDITOR-IN-CHIEF I HAVE EVER HAD THE OPPORTUNITY TO WORK WITH. BYE

JOE
BLOZE
Sports BAR & GRILL

WE'RE BACK AND HOTTER
THAN EVER

NTN, POOL TABLES, AIR HOCKEY, MINIATURE GOLF
BIGGEST DANCE FLOOR IN THE MARKET

SUDS IT UP WEDNESDAY FOR $1.50
You won't find Itty-Bitty Draft or Juicy-Juicy Shooters here!
A $1.50 gets you a whole lot more!

CHECK IT OUT

MONDAY and TUESDAY NITES $11.75 gets you a plate of Nachos and a 60oz. Pitcher
THURSDAY $2.50 plus $1.75 for a Quickie -
FRIDAY - SATURDAY $2.50 - SUNDAYS $2.00
409 DALHOUSIE BETWEEN RIDEAU & BESSERER

Do you suffer from any of these strange symptoms?

then we have the cure...

take two tabs of BILLIARDS
for only $5 / hour per table

and mix vigorously
$2.75

Tuesdays
NO COVER

throw in some neat door prizes &
weird happenings

and coat liberally with the musical stylings of
"DJ BUNGLE"
mix all the ingredients together and bake all night at room temperature and you have...

featuring the musical shapes of CHUO-FM's Scott (DJ Bungle) Kennedy

AT
CACHET CLUB

96 GEORGE STREET, BYWARD MARKET (NEXT TO SWISS CHALET)
ACCEPT NO SUBSTITUTES!

